3. We hence may perceive the infinite goodneſs of God unto us, and our obligation to love, and anſwerable thankfulneſs toward him. God commendeth his love toward us, ſaith St. Paul, in that while we were yet ſinners Chriſt died for us: Rom. 5. 8. In this (ſaith St. John) was manifeſted the love of God toward us, becauſe God ſent his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him. 1 Joh. 4. 8. In this is love (love indeed, admirable, and inconceivable) not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and ſent his only begotten Son to be a propitiation for our ſins. Can there be imagined any equal, any like expreſſion of kindneſs, of mercy, of condeſcenſion, of goodneſs, as for a Prince (himſelf perfectly glorious and happy) freely to deliver up his own only, moſt dearly beloved Son (out from his boſom of glory and bliſs) to ſuffer moſt baſe contumelies, moſt grievous torments for the welfare of his declared enemies, traitours, and rebels? Such hath been God's goodneſs to us, ſuitable thereto ſhould our gratitude be toward him.

4. This conſideration fitly ſerves to beget in us hope in God upon all occaſions of our need or diſtreſs; as alſo comfort in all our afflictions. He hath ſo loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son for its ſalvation Joh. 3. 16. and happineſs; how can he be ſuppoſed unwilling to beſtow whatever elſe ſhall appear needfull or beneficial for us? He that parted with a jewel ſo ineſtimable in charity and pity toward us, to him no other thing can ſeem much to give us: 'tis St. Paul's conſolatory diſcourſe: Rom. 8. 32. He that did not ſpare his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how ſhall he not with him freely give us all things? [All things that we need, that we can reaſonably deſire, that will be good and fit for us.]

5. I might add the uſe, which St. John (1. 4, 12.) makes of this conſideration: Beloved (ſaith he) if God ſo loved us, we alſo ought to love one another: If God ſo lovingly gave up his only Son for us; what (in reſpect, in gratitude, in imitation of him;) what expreſſions, I ſay, of charity and good-will ought we to yield toward our brethren? what endeavours, what goods, what life of ours ſhould be too dear for us to impart for their good? So much for this point. It follows,

Our Lord.

AS the name of God is by a myſterious kind of peculiarity attributed to the father, ſo is the name of Lord to the ſon; who is ſometimes called abſolutely the Lord (or the Lord Jeſus) ſometimes our Lord; to acknowledge and call him ſo being the ſpecial duty and character of a Chriſtian: There be (ſaith St. Paul; there be according to popular or worldly uſe) Gods many, and Lords many, but to us there is one God the 1 Cor. 8. 5. father, and one Lord Jeſus Chriſt. And One Lord, one faith, one baptiſm; Eph. 4. 5, 6. 1 Cor. 12. 3. One God, and father of all things (are by us Chriſtians profeſſed) and: No Phil. 2. 11. man can call Jeſus Lord (that is cordially embrace Chriſtianity) but by the Holy Ghoſt. The reaſon of which peculiar appellation may be, becauſe beſide that natural dominion over us appertaining to Chriſt as our God and Maker, that title is in ſeveral other reſpects, and upon other grounds due to him. In what notion ſoever we take Lord, as a Governour over ſubjects, as a Maſter over ſervants, as an Owner of Goods, as a Maſter of Diſciples, as a Leader of Followers, he is according to all ſuch notions our Lord: conſider him in whatever reſpect or capacity, as God, as Man, as Θεάνθρωπος (God and Man united; as Jeſus, as Chriſt) he is our Lord:

Examine all foundations imaginable of juſt dominion: Eminence of nature; of power; derivation of being, with the preſervation and maintenance thereof; donation, acquiſition, deſert, purchaſe, redemption, conqueſt, compact and reſignation of our ſelves; upon them all his right of Lordſhip over us is juſtly grounded. As God he is our Lord; endued with ſupreme authority and irreſiſtible power, alſo hath made all things, and upholds all things; and therefore all things are ſubject to his diſpoſal (to be governed, and poſſeſſed, and uſed according to his pleaſure) hence that moſt peculiar and auguſt name of God Jehovah (denoting either independency and indefectibility in ſubſiſtence; or uncontrollable and infallible efficacy in action; both together; and therefore fitly rendred κύριος by the Seventy interpreters, and Lord by our tranſlatours*) is attributed to him, This is his name (ſaith the prophet) whereby he ſhall be called, Jehovah Jer. 23. 6. our Righteouſneſs; and what is in the Old Teſtament ſpoken of Jehovah, is in the New Teſtament by infallible expoſition applied to him: as, for Mal. 3. 1. inſtance, what Malachy did foretell concerning Elias, that he ſhould pre- Matt. 3. 3. pare the way of Jehovah, was verified in St. John Baptiſt's preparing the Luk. 1. 76. way to our Saviour. As man alſo God did conferr upon him Lordſhip;
Joh. 5. 27. a power and authority of ruling and judging; of remitting offences; and puniſhing and rewarding: The father hath given him authority even to execute judgment, ὅτι υἱὸς ἀνθρώπου ἐστὶν, becauſe (or whereas) he is the Act. 2. 36. ſon of man; and, Let all the houſe of Iſrael (ſaith St. Peter) know aſſuredly, Matt. 16. 27. that God hath made him Lord and Chriſt, (even) this Jeſus, whom you did crucify: And, The ſon of man ſhall come in the glory of his father with his angels, and reward every man according to his works. And, Being found in Phil. 2. 8. ſhape as a man, he humbled himſelf (ſaith St. Paul) becoming obedient unto Vid. Matt. 9. 2, 6. death, the death of the croſs; therefore alſo did God exalt him----that at the
Vid. Act. 10. 42. name of Jeſus every knee ſhould bend---and that every tongue ſhould confeſs
Rom. 14. 9. that Jeſus is the Lord: And again: To this end Chriſt both died, roſe, and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living; And, God rai- Joh. 17. 2. ſed him from the dead, and ſet him at his right hand in the heavenly places, far above all principality and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but alſo in that which is to come; and hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be head over all Eph. 1. 20. things to the Church. Thou haſt given him power over all fleſh. Thus hath God in him performed more ſignally and eminently, what the Pſalmiſt
Pſal. 8. 7. thankfully acknowledges, and praiſes him for in regard to man. Thou
Heb. 2. 7, 8. crownedſt him with glory and honour; and didſt ſet him over the works of thy hands; thou haſt put all things in ſubjection under his feet: As God-man he is alſo Lord, and Lord of Lords; what-ever naturally did belong to God; what-ever freely was conferr'd on man (by way of gift, or reward) did accrue to the perſon, and was conſequent upon the union hypoſtatical; ſo that in this reſpect Chriſt is eternally Lord: Lord indeed of all (as Act. 10. 36. St. Peter ſtyles him) having all things (excepting God himſelf, as St. Paul
1 Cor. 15. 27. teaches us) put under his feet; but particularly (which moſt concerns us to acknowledge and conſider) our Lord; and that upon ſeveral grounds, which it will be convenient briefly to touch. An entire power over us, and a perfect ability to govern us he hath; in which reſpects it is both neceſſary to ſubmit to him, and reaſonable willingly to admit him as our Lord:

---

* For κύρειν doth ſignify to ſubſiſt; and κῦρος efficacy, ratification, power or authority.

Lord : (perſons ſo qualified, Ariſtotle himſelf in his Politicks tells us, have a natural title to dominion ; as on the contrary perſons weak, or unwiſe; unable to protect themſelves, and unfit to manage things to their own good, are naturally ſubjects and ſervants :) Alſo; He hath made us; and he preſerves us; all we are or have is wholly derived from and depends upon him; whence he hath an abſolute right to diſpoſe of and uſe us, according to his diſcretion and pleaſure. He is the Son of God, is heir apparent, and natural Lord of all things ; and ſo our Lord, by birth and privilege of nature. But farther : He hath alſo acquired us to himſelf adding a legal to a natural right,) we are called περιποίησις (an acquiſt made by him) and λαὸς εἰς περιποίησιν (a people appertaining to (or by) acquiſition.) Eph. 1. 14.
Divers ways hath Chriſt acquired us : by donation from God ;
Whom thou haſt given me, ſaith he to his father, I have kept : and, This is Joh. 17. 12.
the will of the father that ſent me, that of all which he hath given me, I ſhould Joh. 6. 39. 17. 6.
loſe nothing. So we fall under by conqueſt ; conqueſt over his enemies; Eph. 2. 2, 3, &c. conqueſt over us our ſelves, being his enemies : We were (partly by violence, partly by conſent) enſlaved to his enemies; and lived in obedience Col. 2. 15.
to them : them hath Chriſt quite vanquiſhed and ſubdued, (having * ſpoiled * ἀπεκδυσάμενος.
thoſe principalities and powers, and made a ſhew of them, openly triumphing over them,) and ſo we rightfully fall under ſubjection to him ; as acceſſions to his victory, and formerly belonging to his enemies : Yea our ſelves, being (as St. Paul ſpeaks) ἐχθροὶ τῇ διανοίᾳ, enemies in our mind Col. 1. 21.
and diſcourſe (diſcovering our enmity by wicked, diſobedient and rebellious practices) did he ſubdue by the power of his word and ſpirit :
whence (as 'tis in the Benedictus) being delivered out of the hand of our enemies Luk. 1. 74.
(his enemies, and ours in truth and effect,) we may, we ſhould ſerve him without fear : being ſervati, we become ſervi; being ſubacti, we are ſubditi. He might have juſtly deſtroyed us, deprived us of liberty and life as dependents upon and partizans of his enemies; as our ſelves being in actual hoſtility againſt him; but ſeeing he hath ſaved us, we thereby become his vaſſals. But farther he hath purchaſed us; he hath delivered Act. 20. 28. 1 Pet. 1. 18.
up himſelf a ranſom and a price for us; and ſo hath acquired us, hath redeemed 1 Cor. 6. 20.
us, hath bought us with his own bloud : we having forfeited our lives to God's law, and being ſentenced to a miſerable death; he procured our redemption by himſelf, undergoing equivalent puniſhment, diſcharging our debt, and ſatisfying the divine juſtice for us : Whence (as St. Paul 1 Cor. 6. 20. argues) we are not our own; for we were bought with a price; we are his, who ſaved our lives, freed us from captivity, drew us out of extreme and endleſs miſery; ἵνα οἱ ζῶντες, that we (now) living ſhould not henceforth live to our 2 Cor. 5. 15.
ſelves, but to him that died for us, and roſe again : In requital for mercies and favours ſo unexpreſſibly great, we cannot (not in gratitude only, but in juſtice) owe leſs than our ſelves; our ſelves to be rendred wholly into his dominion and diſpoſal. He hath alſo acquired Lordſhip over us, by deſert and as a reward agreeable to his performances, of obedience and patience highly ſatisfactory and acceptable to God ;---he humbled himſelf, Eph. 1. 20.
becoming obedient to the croſs : therefore alſo did God exalt him, and gave Philip. 2. 8. him a name above every name. To this end Chriſt both died, roſe and revived, Rom. 14. 9. ἵνα καὶ νεκρῶν καὶ ζώντων κυριεύσῃ; that he might exerciſe Lordſhip over Vid. Joh. 10. 17.
both the dead and living. He drank of the brook in the way, therefore he Pſal. 110. 7.
hath lift up his head : therefore did God divide him a portion with the great, Eſ. 53. 12.
and he did divide the ſpoil with the ſtrong, becauſe he poured out his ſoul to death : and we ſee Jeſus (ſaith the Apoſtle to the Hebrews) for his Heb. 2. 9. ſufferance of death, crowned with glory and honour. I may add, that he hath acquired a right and title over us, as our continual benefactour by the benefits he beſtows, and the hire he pays us: He affords us ſure protection, liberal maintenance, ample wages; (great privileges under, rich Coloſ. 3. 24. rewards for) our ſervice: Knowing (ſaith St. Paul) that ye ſhall (in regard to your obedience) receive τ̀ ἀνταπόδοσιν κληρονομίας, (the recompence of an inheritance) for ye ſerve the Lord Chriſt. 'Tis no Egyptian bondage that, he detains us under; requiring hard labour, and yielding no comfort Job 1. 9. or recompence; but a moſt beneficial and fruitfull ſervice. Doth Job fear

Vid. 1 Cor. 3. 8. God for nought? the Devil could not but obſerve and envy the benefits and bleſſings, the pious man received in regard of his faithfull ſervice.
Pſal. 84. 11. Chriſt hath promiſed to with-hold no good thing from his ſervants; no-Matt. 6. 33. thing neceſſary for the ſupport or comfort even of this temporal life; but eſpecially moſt ineſtimably precious recompences he will beſtow in ſpiri-Rom. 2. 6. tual and eternal bleſſings: He will render to every man according to his Coloſ. 3. 24. works; To them who by patient continuance in well-doing ſeek glory and ho-
Rom. 6. 22, 23. nour and immortality, eternal life: And, Being freed from ſin, and made ſervants to God, ye have your fruit unto ſanctification; and in the end everlaſting life: [A fruit to ſanctification (all benefits conducing to our ſpiritual welfare here) and hereafter a life in perpetual joy and happineſs:]
To them who have been diligent and faithfull in performing their tasks, and improving the talents committed to them for his intereſt, he will Matt. 25. 21, &c. one day ſay, Euge bone ſerve, Well done good and faithfull ſervant, enter Μισθὸς τοῖς δούλοις σου. into thy Maſter's joy. Bleſſed are ye, when men ſhall revile you, and perſecute you, and ſpeak all manner of evil againſt you falſly for my ſake: Rejoyce, and Apoc. 11. 18. be exceeding glad; for great ſhall your reward be in heaven. And he that Matt. 5. 12. is at ſuch care and charges for us; who feeds and furniſhes us ſo plentifully; who rewards our ſmall pains, our poor works, our improfitable ſer-vices with ſo high and bountifull wages; him ſure moſt juſtly we ſhould eſteem, moſt willingly call our good Lord and Maſter.

But yet farther, he is not only our Lord by nature, by acquiſition, by manifold deſerts and performances of his; but by our deeds alſo; by moſt formal and ſolemn; moſt free and voluntary; and therefore moſt obligatory acts of ours: He is our Lord and King by election; finding our ſelves oppreſſed by our cruel enemies; (groaning under intolerable ſlaveries to Sin and Satan) we had recourſe to him, upon his gracious invitation; offering us eaſe and refreſhment under his moſt gentle and equal Matt. 11. 28. government: Come unto me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you reſt: Take my yoke upon you----for my yoke is eaſie, and my burthen light. So he inviteth us; and ſo we did (or did at leaſt pretend to) undergo his yoke, and freely ſubmit to his government: We vowed allegiance and fealty to him as our lawfull Prince; promiſed ſubjection to his will, and obedience to his laws; engaged (forſaking all things) to follow him, and fight under his banners againſt the common enemies of his * Συμφωνήσας μετὰ τῶν ἐργατῶν. glory and our ſalvation: * We contracted with him upon certain conditions and conſiderations (moſt advantageous to our ſelves) to be his obe-Matt. 20. 2. dient and faithfull ſervants; not only renouncing all other Maſters, but reſigning up all pretence to liberty, or power over our ſelves; becoming abſolutely ſubject to his will and command: This we did at our baptiſm, in moſt expreſs and ſolemn manner; and in every religious performance we confirm our obligation; by acknowledging his right over us, and our duty toward him; by imploring his princely protection, and ſuccour, and mercy upon us; and by promiſing our humble reſpect and obedience toward him. Upon ſo many grounds is Jeſus Chriſt the Son of God our Lord. The general influence of which doctrine, upon our practice, is very obvious and palpable.

1. If we do truly believe Chriſt our Lord, we muſt conceive our ſelves obliged to obſerve and ſubmit to his will; to attend unto and obey his law, Why call you me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I ſay? 'Tis Luk. 6. 46.
a vain and abſurd profeſſion (an irrational and illuſive pretence) we make when we confeſs and invoke him as our Lord, and diſavow his authority in our practice. Not every one that ſaith, Lord, Lord, ſhall enter into the Matt. 7. 21.
Kingdom of heaven (ſhall obtain the reward aſſigned to a faithfull ſervant; but he that really performs the duty of one; that does the will of God.)
Do ye not know (ſaith St. Paul) that to whom you yield your ſelves ſervants Rom. 6. 16. to obey, his ſervants ye are, whom ye obey? We forfeit all pretence to the very name (as well as to the rewards and privileges) of Chriſt's ſervants, if we diſobey his commands; being really ſervants to the luſts which ſway us; to the devil, whoſe ſuggeſtions and pleaſure we comply with. We do but uſurp the name of Chriſtians, if our practice be not conformable to the laws of Chriſt.

2. If Chriſt be our Lord, then are we not our own Lords, not our own men: and therefore muſt not think to have our own will, and do our own buſineſs; pleaſe our own appetites, or gratify our deſires: except in ſubordination and reference to his ſervice. We are not our own, ſaith St. Paul; 1 Cor. 6. 19, 20.
for we are bought with a price: (We are by nature, by manifold acquiſition, by free choice and compact his:) For this end Chriſt died (and 1 Cor. 5. 15. performed all for us) that they which live, may not henceforth live to themſelves, but to him that died and roſe again for them; whether we live or whether we die (whatever actions we undertake relating either to life or death) we are the Lords, and ſhould direct all to his glory, his profit, his Rom. 14. 8.
ſervice.

3. If Chriſt be our Lord, (abſolutely our Lord) then can we have no Vid. Joh. 13.
other Lords; none in oppoſition to; none in competition with him; none 13.
but in ſubſerviency and reſpect to him: No man (our Saviour tells us) Matt. 6. 26. can ſerve two Lords (with collateral, and equal obſervance.) Serving riches, or honours, or pleaſures is inconſiſtent with our duty to Chriſt.
He that doth not forſake all that he hath, cannot be his diſciple, or ſervant, (Luk. 14. 33.) Nor can we therefore pleaſe and humour men; obeying any command or complying with any deſire, or following any cuſtom of theirs, contrary to Chriſt's will and precept, If I did yet pleaſe (or Gal. 1. 10. ſooth men) ſaith St. Paul, I were not the ſervant of Chriſt. Ye are bought 1 Cor. 7. 23.
with a price; be not (or you are not) the ſervants of men. That is do not (or ye ought not to) perform ſervice, with ultimate relation to men, but out of conſcience to Chriſt, as his ſervants. We may, we are bound to obey men humbly and willingly, and diligently, and faithfully, in our ſtations, and according to our conditions, as ſubjects, or ſervants; but this in ſubordination to our ſupreme and principal Lord: Servants (ſaith St. Paul) obey your Maſters according to the fleſh with fear and trembling, Eph. 6. 5, 6.
(that is humbly and reſpectfully) in ſingleneſs of heart, as to Chriſt: Not Vid. 1 Pet. 2.
in eye-ſervice, as men-pleaſers, but as the ſervants of Chriſt, doing the will 16.
of God from the ſoul; ſerving with Good-will as to the Lord, and not to men--- Yea, whatſoever (ſaith the ſame wiſe inſtructor) ye do, do it heartily as to Col. 3. 23, 24.
the Lord, and not to men; knowing that of the Lord ye ſhall receive back the recompence of inheritance; for ye ſerve the Lord Chriſt.

4. It is we ſee (which may be another uſe of this point) not only an engagement, but an encouragement to the performance of all duty, particularly to thoſe hard duties of cheerful obedience and ſubmiſſion to men (who are ſometimes as St. Peter intimates to us, σκολιοὶ, ſomewhat untoward, 1 Pet. 2. 18. and harſh in their dealings with their ſervants) that therein do Vid. 16.

we ſerve a moſt equal and gentle Maſter, who will graciouſly accept our ſervice,and abundantly requite it; a Lord that will not ſuffer his ſervants to want any needfull ſuſtenance, any fit encouragement, any juſt protection or aſſiſtance; who will not only faithfully pay them their promiſed allowance, but raiſe them to the higheſt preferment imaginable. 'Tis a great comfort alſo for a Chriſtian (how mean ſoever he be in this world) to conſider this relation of his; how great, how good a Maſter he doth ſerve; that the greateſt Princes, that the higheſt Angels are his fellow-ſervants; yet that his gracious Lord will not deſpiſe, or neglect him.
Rom. 14. 4. St. Paul alſo makes uſe of this conſideration to preſs upon ſuperiours their duties toward their inferiours; their duties of equity, meekneſs, kindneſs, Col. 4. 1. mercy, pity, and all humanity. Maſters, (ſaith he) yield unto your ſer-
Eph. 6. 9. vants that which is juſt and equal, knowing that you alſo have a Maſter in heaven:
And ye maſters do the ſame things to them (to your ſervants) forbearing threatning, knowing that your Maſter alſo is in heaven,and there Pſal. 135. 14. is no reſpect of perſons with him: Thou haſt not deſpiſed the lowlineſs of thy
5. 4. handmaid. And we ſee how our Saviour, as he doth commend and bleſs
Luk. 6. thoſe faithfull and wiſe ſervants, who being appointed over his houſhold
Mat. 24. 45. (placed in any ſuperiour rank and office) do behave themſelves juſtly and Matt. 18. 28, kindly to their fellow-ſervants, diſpenſing them their food in due ſeaſon; &c. ſo thoſe which beat and abuſe their fellow-ſervants; that are rigorous,and unmercifull in their exactions of debt, or other dealing toward their fellow-ſervants he denounces ſevere puniſhment and vengeance upon.

The farther conſideration of this point our Saviour improves as an engagement to imitate him; eſpecially in charity, in humility, in patience: it is proper for a ſervant to follow, to attend upon in all places and performances, to compoſe himſelf to the example, to conform to the garb and condition of his maſter. Were it not abſurd that the ſervant ſhould be more ſtately, or more delicate than his maſter: that he ſhould deſpiſe thoſe, whom his maſter vouchſafes to regard; that he ſhould refuſe to undertake thoſe employments, ſhould diſdain to undergo thoſe hardſhips his maſter doth condeſcend to? To ſuch purpoſe our Saviour diſcourſes:
Joh. 13. 13. Ye call me Maſter and Lord: and ye ſay well, for ſo I am: If I then your Lord and Maſter have waſhed your feet, ye alſo ought to waſh one anothers feet: for I have given you an example that ye ſhould do as I have done to you. And having directed his diſciples to the patient enduring of reproaches, affronts and injuries put upon them, he enforces his precept by ſubjoining, Matt. 10. 24. The diſciple is not above his Maſter, nor the ſervant is not above his
Luk. 6. 40. Lord: 'tis enough for the diſciple to be as his Maſter, and the ſervant as his
Joh. 15. 20. Lord: (He ought in reaſon to be very well content, if he find ſuch uſage, as his Lord hath willingly and patiently undergone.)

Full of many ſuch practical uſes is this excellent doctrine; the which I leave to be deduced by your private meditation.

Conceived by the Holy Ghoſt, born of the Virgin Mary.

THE proper name, ſpecial title, principal relations of Jeſus Chriſt, the only Son of God our Lord (the peculiar grand object of our Chriſtian faith, wherein was included or implied what did eſpecially reſpect his divinity, ſo far as it is revealed unto, or may be comprehended by us) being hitherto expreſſed and in ſome manner explained and applied by us: We proceed to that which follows; thoſe illuſtrious accidents, or paſſages and circumſtances, chiefly agreeing to his humanity (what he undertook and underwent, performed and enjoyed in our nature and in our behalf) being here orderly ſet down, partly for the full and clear deſcription or determination of his perſon; partly upon deſign to inſinuate thoſe principal doctrines (depending upon or involved in thoſe paſſages) wherein the myſtery of our Religion doth conſiſt; which we are chiefly obliged to believe, and which have great influence upon our practiſe. In the firſt place (as good order did require) is delivered the manner of his Nativity (that is, of his incarnation, or aſſuming humane nature) which in the ancient Creeds (as we ſee in the texts of ancient Expoſitors) was expreſſed more ſimply thus: Qui natus eſt de Spiritu ſancto ex Maria virgine; who was born by the Holy Ghoſt of the Virgin Mary. The alteration ſeems to have been made more diſtinctly to expreſs the operation of the Holy Ghoſt in the generation of our Saviour, and what the Bleſſed Virgin his Mother did conferr thereto. We know in ordinary procreation the influence of the father doth not extend beyond the quickning of the mothers womb (whatever that influence be; (for 'tis a deep and inſcrutable myſtery of nature, (exceeding perhaps the reach of all humane philoſophy) whether it contain an imparting of ſomewhat material, or be only the inſerting an active vital principle) the effect of which influence is called conception; the word agreeing in ſome propriety both to the mother which is ſaid to conceive; and to the child which is conceived: the father perfecting the work of generation (by forming the fœtus from its initial rudiments into a due integrity and fit diſpoſition of parts, nouriſhing, encreaſing, and excluding thereof) no farther immediately depending upon the father, but being carried on by the concurrence of what was firſt imparted by him and what is thenceforth communicated by the mother. In regard to which performances, the mother is ſaid τίκτειν; that is, both gignere, and parere; to conceive, bear, and to bring forth: (For τίκτειν doth import as much as γεννᾷν, all that a parent doth conferr to generation; whence both parents are called τοκεῖς; and τέκνον a child, is uſed indifferently as relating to both.) Now to expreſs that influence or efficacy the divine ſpirit had in the generation of our Saviour as man, by which God himſelf did in a manner ſupply the place of a father, it was ſet down conceived by the Holy Ghoſt; and when 'tis ſaid born of the Virgin Mary, what the Bleſſed Virgin, as Mother, did conferr thereto, is to be underſtood; and the occaſion perhaps of thus expreſſing the thing was that ſaying of the Angel to the Virgin (in the 1ſt. of St. Luke.) Behold thou ſhalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth (συλλήψῃ ἐν γαστρὶ, καὶ τέξῃ) a ſon, and ſhalt call his name Jeſus. But whatever was the reaſon or occaſion of this expreſſion, 'tis evident, that the propoſition and aſſertion of theſe truths was intended. 1. That our Saviour was conceived and born. 2ly. That his conception was effected without any influence of man, only by the power of God and operation of the Holy Ghoſt. 3ly. That the Bleſſed Virgin Mary, did by the Holy Ghoſt, conceive, and bear, and bring him forth. Let us reflect and obſerve ſomewhat upon each of theſe propoſitions.

Luk. 1. 31.
Matt. 1. 20.
Τὸ γεννηθὲν is tranſlated conceived.

1. Our Saviour was conceived and born: He, (the perſon before mentioned) Jeſus Chriſt, the only Son of God, our Lord; the ſame who was in the beginning; and did from all eternity exiſt with God; the eternal Son of God, by whom all things were made; was in the fulneſs of time conceived and born; that is, had a production agreeable to the nature of man, and became thereby truly and entirely man; which wonderfull myſtery is in Scripture variouſly expreſſed or implied by, The Word's being made, or becoming fleſh; God being manifeſted in the fleſh; taking the form of a ſervant, being made in the likeneſs of men, and being found

Joh. 1. 14.
1 Tim. 3. 16.
Phil. 2. 7, 8.

Heb. 2. 16.
Heb. 2. 14.
Rom. 8. 3.
Joh. 13. 13, 31.
6. 33, 38, 50, 51, 58.
Joh. 3. 17.
10. 36.
17. 18.
1 Joh. 4. 9.
1 Joh. 4. 2, 3.
Heb. 2. 17.
4. 15.
Matt. 27. 2.
Luk. 22. 64.
Matt. 26. 67.
Matt. 27. 26.
Joh. 19. 1.
Luk. 22. 42.
Joh. 5. 30.
Mar. 3. 5.

in faſhion as man; aſſuming the ſeed of Abraham; partaking of fleſh and blood; deſcending from heaven: God ſending his Son into the world, in likeneſs of ſinfull fleſh, coming in the fleſh. The reſult of what is ſignified by theſe and the like expreſſions, being this, that, He which before, from all eternity did ſubſiſt in the form or nature of God; being the Son of God; did by a temporal generation truly become man; aſſuming humane nature into the unity of his perſon, by a conjunction and union thereof with the divine nature incomprehenſible and ineffable: He truly became man, I ſay, like unto us in all things, ſin only excepted; conſiſting of body and ſoul; endued with all faculties, and ſubject to all paſſions, infirmities, neceſſities conſequent upon or incident to our nature. He did not only ſeem in ſhape and outward appearance, (as a ſpectre, deluding men's ſight and fancy) but was in perfect truth a man; having a real body; circumſcribed and figured like ours, compacted of fleſh and bloud; that might be ſeen and felt; that was nouriſhed and grew; that needed and received ſuſtenance; that was frail and tender; paſſible and ſenſible; was bruiſed with blows; torn with ſcourges; pricked with thorns; pierced with nails; transfixed with an injurious ſpear. He had a ſoul too, endued with ſuitable faculties; an underſtanding capable of improvement (for he grew in wiſdom, in ſtature) a will ſubject and ſubmiſſive; he was ignorant (as man) of ſomething he might know; to the divine will; (Let this cup paſs from me, if it be thy will: but however, not my will, but thine be done; and, I ſeek not my own will, but the will of the father, which hath ſent me.) Appetites of meat, drink, ſleep and reſt: Several paſſions and affections, φυσικὰ καὶ ἀδιάβλητα πάθη, natural, irreprehenſible paſſions, and thoſe of the moſt troubleſome and afflictive ſort, anger, grief, and pity; and theſe ſometimes expreſſed by moſt pathetical ſignifications, in groans and tears.

* Ἡ ψυχή μου τετάρακται.
Joh. 12. 27.
Joh. 11. 33.
Luk. 22. 44.
Matt. 26. 37.
Matt. 26. 38.
Mar. 14. 33.
† συμπαθῆσαι.
Luk. 22. 28.

Upon occaſion of his friend Lazarus his death, 'tis ſaid, * He groaned in ſpirit, and was troubled and wept; and ye know what heavineſs, agonies, exceſſes of ſorrow, diſturbances, and amazements (they are terms uſed by the Evangeliſts) he underwent before his paſſion: ſo that as the Apoſtle to the Hebrews ſpeaketh; We have not an High-prieſt that could not ſo † compaſſionate, or ſympathize with, our infirmities, but who was in all points tempted (or proved and exerciſed) as we are; (yet without ſin.)

Thus did the Son of God (co-eternal and co-eſſential to his Father) become the Son of man (truly and entirely of the nature and ſubſtance of man; deficient in no eſſential part; devoid of no humane property; exempt from no imperfection or inconvenience conſequent upon our nature, (except only ſin.)

Cujuſmodi ſit hæc communicatio, quâ natura humana communicatur verbo, non eſt hominis definire. Alenſis.

If you demand the manner how, and the reaſon why God thus became man; as to the firſt (the manner) we muſt anſwer, that we can hardly otherwiſe than by negation determine, not otherwiſe than by compariſon explain it: No words perhaps we uſe to ſignify our conceptions about theſe lower things can perfectly and adequately ſuit to a myſtery ſo far different from common objects of our knowledge, ſo far tranſcending our capacity; yet we muſt affirm that whatever manner of conceiving or expreſſing it doth derogate from the divine perfections; or is repugnant to the nature of things; diſagrees from the tenour of divine truths (connected unto or depending upon this myſtery) or contradicts (directly or obliquely; immediately or by plain conſequence) the language and doctrine of the Scriptures, is to be rejected by us; we may therefore ſay with the Council of Chalcedon, That in this incarnation of our Lord the divine and humane nature were in his perſon united ἀσυγχύτως, ἀτρέπτως, ἀδιαιρέτως, ἀχωρίστως.

Ἀσυγχύτως, without commixtion or confuſion, (for that would induce a third nature different from both) ſuch as reſults from the compoſition or contemperation of the elements into a mixed body ; ſo that he ſhould be neither God nor Man ; but I know not what other kind of being, without any ground or authority to be ſuppoſed, that would deſtroy, diminiſh, or alter the properties belonging to each ; neither can we conceive the divine nature capable of any ſuch diminution or alteration.

Ἀτρέπτως ; without converſion, or tranſmutation of one nature into the other, not of the divinity into humanity ; for how could God, as God, be changed, or made ; become infirm, and paſſible, conſiſt of body and ſoul ; ſuffer and die ? Not of the humanity into divinity ; for how could that before it did exiſt at all, be turned into another thing ? why ſhould our Saviour be called Man, when his humanity was tranſmuted into the divinity ? why is it ſaid the word was made fleſh, if the fleſh was changed into the word ? To omit how unimaginable it is that one ſubſtance ſhould be turned into another, eſpecially that a finite ſubſtance ſhould be turned into an infinite one ; alſo to omit many dangerous conſequences of this opinion ; and its inconſiſtency with many great and plain doctrines of our Religion.

Ἀδιαιρέτως, undividedly : So that the two natures have not diſtinct ſubſiſtences, nor do conſtitute two Perſons ; for there is but one Chriſt ; one Perſon, to whom, being God and Man, are truly and properly attributed.

Ἀχωρίστως, inſeparably ; the natures being never ſeparated ; the union never diſſolved ; the ſame perſon never ceaſing to be both God and Man ; no not, when as Man he ſuffered and died ; for he raiſed himſelf from the dead ; he reared the temple of his own body, being fallen : As continuing God, he was able to raiſe himſelf as Man : as being Man, he was capable of being raiſed by himſelf as God ; the union between God and Man perſiſting, when the union between the humane body and ſoul were diſſolved. Joh. 2. 19.

I might add farther excluſively, that this union of the two natures was not made κατὰ παράστασιν, (by aſſiſtance or cloſe preſence) only ; nor κατ' ἐνοίκησιν (by way of inhabitation,) nor κατὰ σχέσιν (by relation,) κατ' ἀξίαν (by dignity or eſteem,) κατὰ ταυτοβουλίαν, or κατ' ἁρμονίαν, (by conſent or conformity of will and counſel,) as Neſtorius and ſuch ancient heterodox dogmatiſts, in oppoſition to the Catholick expoſitions of this myſtery, did conceit : but it is ſcarce worth mentioning thoſe antiquated opinions : I cannot longer dwell here ; I ſhall only ſubjoin (omitting others more wide and improper ; as thoſe of Bellarmine, the union of a man's arm to his body ; the inſition of a bough into a tree, and ſuch like) that nature doth afford us one compariſon fit to explain or illuſtrate the manner of this myſterious union ; which is the union of man's ſoul and body, by which he becomes one perſon : the ſoul and body are two ſubſtances, very different in kind, properties and dignity, (the one material, extended, diviſible, corruptible, paſſive, lifeleſs and ſenſleſs ; the other immaterial, indiviſible, incorruptible, ſelf-moving, indued with life, knowledge, paſſion) capable alſo both of ſeparate exiſtence and ſubſiſtence by themſelves ; yet are theſe (though in a manner difficult for us to imagine or comprehend) united together and concurr to the conſtitution of a man, (and that ſo as to remain ſtill in ſubſtance diſtinct, retaining each its natural properties, without any confuſion, or converſion of one into the other ; ſo alſo that a man is truly from them denominated both corporeal and ſpiritual, mortal and immortal ;) in like manner (though more admirably rably and incomprehenſibly) are the divine and humane nature united in the Son of God: for (as we read in Athanaſius his Creed)---As the reaſonable ſoul and fleſh is one Man, ſo God and Man is one Chriſt.

Vid. Salmeron. apud Gerard. in exeg. loc. pag. 441.

So much for the manner how; as for the reaſon why the Son of God did thus condeſcend to aſſume our nature, if we inquire the impulſive cauſe that moved him thereto, it was only God's infinite goodneſs, mercy and Joh. 3. 16. pity towards us: (So God loved the world, that he thus ſent his only be- 1 Joh. 4. 9. gotten Son:) it was the χρηστότης and φιλανθρωπία; the beneficence and Tit. 3. 4. philanthropy (if I may ſo ſpeak) of God, that induced him by ſuch a debaſement, as it were, and an exinanition of himſelf to ſave us. If we deſire to contemplate the wiſdom of God in this admirable proceeding, and to know why God among other means and method (alike perhaps for all we can know poſſible to him) did chooſe by this to procure our redemption and ſalvation: I anſwer (though it becomes us rather to adore the depth of his counſels, than to ſearch or hope to ſound it, yet) ſome congruities of this method to the wiſdom of God and the reaſon of the thing are intimated to us, and in ſome manner are apparent. It became God, as his goodneſs toward us was infinite, ſo that the demonſtrations thereof to his glory, and our good, ſhould be anſwerably ſo, which perhaps could not otherwiſe be than by ſuch a condeſcenſion; as a Prince could not make any other ſo great atteſtation of his favour to his vaſſal, than by deſcending from his throne, laying aſide his majeſty, and putting himſelf in a like condition, converſing with him freely, ſubjecting himſelf to the ſame laws and duties; enduring the like hardſhips and inconveniencies with him: It was expedient our Redeemer ſhould be God, that he might be able by his power to ſave us; to remove ſuch great obſtacles, to ſubdue ſo potent enemies, (to command and contravene nature; to vanquiſh hell; to aboliſh death in our behalf,) that by the nearneſs of his relation, the dignity of his perſon, and the value of his merit, he might fully appeaſe God's wrath, and perfectly ſatisfie his juſtice for us: that his doctrine might carry with it the higheſt certainty and ſtrongeſt efficacy; his example might challenge greateſt regard and imitation; his laws might have ſupreme authority, and perfectly oblige: the redemption and ſalvation of man was an honour too high for any creature to ariſe to; a work too hard for any but God himſelf to perform: It was not fit that any creature ſhould intercede or intermeddle in an affair of ſuch importance and eminency: It was alſo requiſite he ſhould be man; that he might procure favour toward man, by perfectly obeying God's commands, and ſubmitting patiently to God's will, as man; that as man had deeply offended and wronged God, ſo man ſhould highly pleaſe and Rom. 5.19, &c. content him; that (in St. Paul's language) as by one man's diſobedience many were made ſinners, (condemned and expoſed to death; God being diſpleaſed with mankind for that man's tranſgreſſion,) ſo by the obedience of one man many ſhould be made righteous, (abſolved from guilt, and exempted from puniſhment; God being well-pleaſed with and reconciled to mankind in regard to that man's dutifull obſervance.) 'Twas decent, that as man Rom. 8. 3. did approve, ſo man ſhould condemn ſin in the fleſh: as man by wilfull ſelf-pleaſing was brought to miſery; ſo by voluntary ſuffering he ſhould Heb. 2. 10. be reſtored to happineſs; ἔπρεπε, it became him (ſaith the Apoſtle) for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many ſons unto glory, to make the captain of their ſalvation perfect through ſuffering: It was alſo fit, that he who was deſigned to intercede for our welfare, and pro- Heb. 4. 15. pitiate for our faults, to ſuccour and relieve us in our diſtreſſes, ſhould be 5. 2. tender of our good, and ſenſible of our needs; (ſhould by nature and experience be diſpoſed συμπαθεῖν, to compaſſionate our infirmities, and μετριοπαθεῖν, to be gently affected towards us in reſpect of our ignorances and errours:) Whence (ſaith the ſame divine Apoſtle) it behoved him (ὤφειλε, he ought according to the deſign appointed and undertaken by him) to be in all things made like unto his brethren, that he might be a mercifull and faithfull High-prieſt toward God, in things pertaining to God, that he might propitiate for the ſins of the people: for in that he hath himſelf ſuffered, being tempted, he is able to ſuccour thoſe that are tempted. I might add, that by appearing in humane ſhape (viſible and audible; familiar and agreeable to us;) he was qualified for that great deſign of declaring God's will and intention toward us, in a leſs amazing and a more obliging way, than could otherwiſe have been, that thus with more advantage he could deſcribe an exact copy of righteonſneſs for us to follow; ſhewing us how we ſhould as men behave our ſelves, how moderate our appetites, how govern our paſſions; how uſe and order all the powers of our ſoul and members of our body: neither was it poſſible otherwiſe that ſo lively a pattern of tranſcendent charity, meekneſs, patience, and humility could have been exhibited. Heb. 2.17.

In fine, it was moſt congruous, that he who was intended to recapitulate and reconcile (ἀνακεφαλαιώσασθαι, and ἀποκαταλλάξαι) all things in heaven and earth; ſhould be the great mediatour and peace-maker between God and Man; ſhould repair God's honour, and diſpenſe his grace; purchaſe man's peace and procure his ſalvation; that he ſhould be the moſt nearly related to both parties; even if poſſible (and what is to God impoſſible?) be himſelf both God and man; the Son of God, and our brother; the ſame in nature with God, in kind with us. ἀνακεφαλαιώσασθαι. Eph. 1. 10. Col. 1. 20.

The proper uſe and influence of which great doctrine upon our ſouls ſhould be to cauſe us with higheſt degrees of love and thankfulneſs to adore the infinite goodneſs of that God, who hath been pleaſed himſelf to ſtoop ſo low, that he might raiſe us up from the loweſt depth of meanneſs and wretchedneſs to the higheſt pitch of honour and happineſs we are capable of. What words can expreſs, what thought can reach a favour ſo ineffable and inconceivable. Well might St. Paul call it ὑπερβάλλουσαν τῆς γνώσεως ἀγάπην, love tranſcending all knowledge. Well may heaven and earth be aſtoniſhed, and hell tremble at ſuch a miracle of mercy. The ſoveraign Majeſty of heaven; the Lord of glory; the World's Maker; the only Son of God and heir of all things, to become a poor, ſmall, weak, and frail man; to dwell in a tabernacle of fleſh; to converſe with vile, ſilly, wretched mortals; to be ſubject to want, reproach, and pain: ὢ βάθος! O depth of love and goodneſs unſearchable! if this will not, what conſideration can raiſe us? what benefit affect or oblige us? what prodigious ingratitude will it be to be inſenſible or neglectfull of ſuch kindneſs? Eph. 3. 19. Vid. Lu. 1. 78. 1 Joh. 14.

Another great uſe of this doctrine is, to engage us as to univerſal obedience and ſubmiſſion to God's will, ſo particularly to humility, and patience, and charity. Did God thus ſubmit, thus abaſe himſelf; and ſhall we be refractary, ſhall we exalt our ſelves, ſhall we repine at any diſpenſation or proceeding of God? To theſe purpoſes St. Paul applies it: Let the ſame mind be in you, which was in Chriſt Jeſus---who being in the form of God, emptied himſelf, and took upon him the form of a ſervant, and was made in the likeneſs of men: and being found in the faſhion of man, humbled himſelf, and became obedient unto death---And know (or conſider) the grace (or graciouſneſs) of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; that for your ſake (ἐπτώχευσε) he became poor (a beggar) being himſelf rich; that ye by his poverty might become rich: ('Tis a conſideration by which he incites them to charity.) Phil. 2. 2 Cor. 8. 9.

Thus

Luk. 3. 23.
Vid. Epiſcopium de Joſephilis.

Thus and to ſuch purpoſe are we to believe our Saviour's conception and nativity. Of which, ſecondly, it is affirmed, and we are to conſider that he was conceived by the Holy Ghoſt; that is, by the vertue and operation of the Holy Ghoſt the Bleſſed Virgin became impregnated, and did conceive him, without intervention of any man or father: Joſeph was (ὡς ἐνομίζετο) in outward eſteem and carriage, but God only was in truth his father; which is ſo perſpicuouſly and fully aſſerted in the Goſpels, that thoſe who dare (upon weak pretences of diſcourſe) to contradict it, deſerve not to be conſidered otherwiſe, than as perverters of the Scripture and ſubverters of its authority and uſe: nothing can be certainly known thence, if this truth be not.

Luk. 1. 35.

* Valentinus and his Sect of old. Menno, Servetus, &c. Smalcius, &c. Socinus, his followers.
Damaſc. III. 2.
Juſt. Mart. Apol. 2.
Aug. 9. ſerm. de tempore, 53. Iſa.

The manner of this operation as by St. Luke expreſſed, is by the ſupervention of the Holy Ghoſt, and the divine power's overſhading the bleſſed Virgin: words of ſo general ſignification, and ſo little, as to their full extent, intelligible by us, that they well ſerve to bound our curioſity and forbid farther inquiry. Some indeed have been ſo bold as to determine, that the Holy Ghoſt did bring from heaven and inſtill a body into the Virgin *; that our Saviour's fleſh was made of a divine ſeed; and of the ſubſtance of God; that the Holy Ghoſt did in his conception create and impart ſomewhat of matter; 'tis enough to ſay that theſe are raſh and groundleſs conceits: the fathers more ſoberly (to prevent dangerous and unbecoming thoughts and ſpeeches in this matter) ſay, that our Saviour was conceived by the Holy Ghoſt, not σπερματικῶς (ſeminally,) but δημιουργικῶς (operatively) οὐ διὰ συνουσίας, ἀλλὰ διὰ δυνάμεως; not by copulation, but by power; Non de ſubſtantia Spiritûs Sancti, ſed de potentia; Not out of the ſubſtance, but by the vertue of the Holy Ghoſt. Farther than ſo, Generationem ejus quis enarrabit? Who can declare the τὸ πῶς, the perfect manner of a generation ſo ſublime and wonderfull? The reaſons of his being thus conceived are more obvious: Conceived by the Holy Ghoſt.

In my endeavour to ſhew the reaſons why our Saviour was thus conceived, I was interrupted the laſt time: I ſhall therefore, reſuming a little what was ſaid, proceed.

1. It was the moſt fit way of effecting that ſo neceſſary conjunction of the divine and humane nature; a work of ſuch glory and grandeur; of ſuch grace and goodneſs was not to be atchieved by any other agent than him, who is the ſubſtantial virtue and love of God; by whom we ſee all extraordinary and moſt eminent works managed and attributed to him. In the creation of the World he moved upon the waters, forming and actuating the World; by him thoſe ſignal works of providence, revelation of divine truth, prediction of future events, performance of miracles, renovation of men's minds, and reformation of their manners, are in a particular manner aſcribed; and ſo to him this moſt high and glorious performance was proper and due.

Jer. 1. 5.
Gal. 1. 15.
Luk. 1. 15.

2dly. It being neceſſary that our Saviour ſhould be conſecrated to his great offices, and perfectly ſanctified in his perſon; and thoſe performances being appropriated to the Holy Ghoſt, (the natural ſpring and author of all derived Sanctity) his efficacy therefore muſt needs intervene, if Jeremy, St. Paul, St. John Baptiſt (perſons deſigned to offices and employments, in dignity and importance ſo far inferiour) were ſanctified, and ſeparated, and filled with the Holy Ghoſt from their mother's womb; in how more excellent a kind and degree was it requiſite that he ſhould be ſanctified, who was ſent to redeem and purifie the world from all filth and fault? It was neceſſary that his humane nature, which God vouchſafed ſo highly to advance (to aſſume into ſo near a conjunction and union with himſelf) ſhould be free from all ſtain and pollution, (ſuch as adheres Rom. 8. 3. to our ſinfull fleſh and corrupt nature in ordinary propagation,) that he whom God ſhould ſo dearly love and be ſo entirely pleaſed with, ſhould be void of the leaſt inclination to iniquity or impurity; for God, as the Pſal. 5. 4.

Pſalmiſt tells us, is not a God that hath pleaſure in wickedneſs; neither ſhall Heb. 1. 13.
evil dwell with him : He is of purer eyes than (ſo much as) to behold evil, and cannot look upon iniquity, much leſs would he receive any defiled thing into ſo near an union, ſo dear a reſpect and complacence with himſelf. It was alſo neceſſary, that he who was appointed to appeaſe God's diſpleaſure, and reconcile him fully toward us; to redeem mankind from the guilt and power of ſin; to ſatisfie and expiate for all our offences; with full authority to teach, command and exemplifie all righteouſneſs; ſhould himſelf know no ſin : Such a High-prieſt became us, who was holy, harmleſs, 2 Cor. 5. 21.
undefiled, ſeparate from ſinners---Who had no need firſt to offer up ſacrifices Heb. 2. 26,27.
for his own ſins : The ſacrifice expiatory of our ſins was and ought to be a lamb (ἄμωμος καὶ ἄσπιλος) without blemiſh and without ſpot; therefore 1 Pet. 1. 19.
was he fully ſanctified, and became τὸ ἅγιον, that holy thing, as he is called by the Angel; (therefore that holy thing, which ſhall be born of thee, Luk. 1: 35.
ſhall be called the Son of God; therefore from the fountain of holineſs, the Holy Ghoſt (whoſe proper name doth import holineſs, whoſe proper work it is to ſanctifie) did he derive a perfect ſanctity and purity in his ſacred conception.

3. I might add as obſervable, the analogy (or reſemblance) that is be- Gal. 4. 19.
tween the conception of our Saviour for us, and his formation in us; his generation and our regeneration; his becoming our brother in the fleſh; our becoming his brethren in the ſpirit; both being performed by the ſame agent; as Chriſt was made true man, and partaker of our nature, ſo we become true Chriſtians and (θείας φύσεως κοινωνοὶ) partakers of the divine 2 Pet. 1. 14.
nature by the operation of the ſame divine ſpirit : As he by nature, ſo we by grace are born not by bloud, nor of the will of the fleſh, nor of the will Joh. 1. 13.
of man, but of God : Hence accrues a new relation, and we become his brethren, not only as he was made like us, but as we become like him; 1 Pet. 1. 23.
and are begot of God, by the ſame heavenly vertue, by the ſame incor- 1 Joh. 3. 9.
ruptible ſeed.

The proper uſe of this doctrine is to cauſe us farther ſtill to adore the goodneſs and wiſdom of God ſo fully, ſo fitly carrying on that infinitely mercifull and gracious work of our redemption; all the divine perſons, in a particular manner conſpiring as in the deſign, ſo in the execution thereof : The Father ſending his Son; the Son condeſcending to come; the Holy Ghoſt bringing him into the world : To which Bleſſed Trinity therefore rendring all praiſe and thanks; We proceed to that which is farther contained in theſe words : Born of the Virgin Mary.

Born of her. Being born, doth not barely denote his nativity, but includes his whole humane generation, (with the parts and progreſs thereof;) implying all that ſhe, as a Mother, did conferr thereto; and comprehending, 1. His conception of her ſubſtance; whence he is called the fruit Luk. 1. 41. 31.
of her womb, rod (or branch) ſprouting from the ſtem of Jeſſe; and behold Iſa. 10. 1.
(ſaith the Angel) συλλήψῃ ἐν γαστρὶ, thou ſhalt conceive in thy womb. 2. The Luk. 11. 27.
nutrition, augmentation, and entire conformation of his body, alſo of her 2. 5. blood and ſubſtance; whence her womb is ſaid to bear him, (Bleſſed is the womb that bare thee,) that ſhe was ἔγκυος (gravidated, or) great with child of him; and εὑρέθη, ſhe was found (ſhe was obſerved by apparent Matt. 1. 18.
ſigns) ἐν γαστρὶ ἔχουσα, to be of child with him. 3. His nativity it ſelf; thus Luk. 2. expreſſed by the Evangeliſt : The days were accompliſhed that ſhe ſhould be delivered, and ſhe brought forth her firſt-born Son. Whatever therefore any Mother doth conferr to the entire production of a child, is attributed plainly to the Virgin; whence ſhe is truly and properly (and is accordingly Luk. 1. 43. frequently called in the Goſpels) the Mother of our Saviour; the Mother of our Lord; and hath been (may be in ſome propriety of ſpeech) ſtyled Θεοτόκος, Deipara; Dei genetrix & Dei mater; the Bearer and Mother of God, (that is, of him who is God; though not of him, as God.)

But let us farther obſerve what the words afford to us conſiderable: Born of the Virgin Mary: They imply our Saviour born of a Woman; born of a Virgin; born of Mary. Of a Woman that was neceſſary or requiſite to be; of a Virgin, that was convenient, decent and wonderfull; of Mary, that determines the Perſon, and involves many circumſtances of importance.

1. I ſay, born of a Woman, ἐκ σοῦ (as it is in the beſt copies of St. Luke, chap. 1. 35.) and ἐκ γυναικός (as it is in St. Paul, Gal. 4. 4.) not in a woman only (ἐν αὐτῇ γεννηθὲν, Matt. 1. 20.) or through a woman, but of a woman; that is, of the matter and ſubſtance of a woman; ſo as thereby to bear the relation of a kinſman, to become conſanguineous to all mankind, Act. 17. 26. (whom God did make of one bloud.) We may eaſily conceive that God could have immediately created (as he did our firſt parents) a nature in kind and properties like to ours, and aſſumed it; but that would not have ſo fitly ſerved his deſign of reconciling himſelf to us and redeeming us; to the effecting that, not only a reſemblance in nature, but a cognation and proximity of bloud was requiſite, or at leaſt more convenient and ſuitable. Our bloud being tainted, our whole ſtock degraded by the diſloyalty and rebellion of our common anceſtours, it was fit it ſhould be purged and reſtored by the ſatisfactory merit and fidelity of one, who was of our race and kindred. We being to be adopted and received into God's family, it was fit it ſhould be by intervention of a common relation: Such Gal. 4. 4, 5. is St. Paul's diſcourſe: God ſent forth his Son, born of a woman, born under the law, that he might redeem thoſe that were under the law; that by performing the obedience due to the law, he might redeem thoſe, who being obliged to obey the law, did yet tranſgreſs it, (ἵνα τὴν υἱοθεσίαν ἀπολάβωμεν; that we might be conſtituted ſons; receive the ſtate and quality of ſons to God.) It was congruous that the Devil, who by the weakneſs of a Woman, had ſeduced Man from his duty to God, (had overthrown and triumphed God's creature) ſhould, in juſt revenge, and for reparation of God's honour, by the ſtrength and conſtancy of one proceeding from a Woman, be him- Gen. 3. 15. ſelf defeated, and debaſed; according to the prophetical promiſe: The ſeed of the Woman ſhall break the Serpent's head: Of the woman; the man is not mentioned, for (that which is next to be conſidered) he was born of Eſ. 7. 14. the Virgin Mary. So it was of old pre-ſignified and propheſied: A Virgin Matt. 1. 23. ſhall conceive and bear a ſon: A Virgin: Alma, (ſo Aquila renders it) * Luk. 1. 34. ἀπόκρυφος, a recluſe; that perhaps ſeldom had ſeen, had never however known a man.

2. Born of a Virgin. So it was; and ſo it was fit it ſhould be: It was decent that the Tabernacle in which God himſelf would dwell ſhould be wholly proper, and encloſed; that the temple of the divinity ſhould be holy and ſeparate; that the ſoil whence holineſs it ſelf would germinate, ſhould be clear and free from all ſordid mixtures; that none ſhould touch Ex. 19. 11, &c. the border of that mountain, where God would manifeſt himſelf; nor the luſt of man approach that place, whence the glory of God ſhould ſo illuſtriouſly ſhine forth. It was alſo more than convenient to excite admiration; to beget faith, to procure reverence in us, that our Saviour ſhould be born in a manner ſo peculiar and miraculous; it could not otherwiſe appear plainly that he was the Son of God: Who that hears of ſuch a paſſage can forbear to wonder and conſider? who can doubt him to be the Son of God, whom by ſufficient and certain atteſtation he learns to have been conceived without any concurrence of man? who can do otherwiſe than adore him, that was born in a manner ſo glorious and ſupernatural? This, it ſeems, was that new thing (ſo ſtrange and admirable) which in the Prophet Jeremy God did foreſhew he would create in the earth, (than when he would reſtore Sion and make a new covenant with Iſrael) a woman ſhall compaſs a man? that is, a woman (in a manner extraordinary, without man's concourſe) ſhall conceive and contain a man: a man, who ſhall accompliſh thoſe great things there propheſied of and promiſed.

Jer. 31. 22.

But farther; born of Mary; of that particular perſon determined and deſcribed in the Goſpel; her that was eſpouſed to, and lived with Joſeph; (Joſeph the Carpenter, that was born in the Town of Bethlehem, lived in Nazareth; was deſcended in a direct lineage from King * David, (according to both a natural and legal deſcent,) and conſequently from Abraham; ſhe being alſo of the ſame ſtock and family (as may be collected from ſome circumſtances intimated in the ſtory, but more certainly deduced from the prophecies concerning our Saviour's ſtock, and the aſſertions implying their accompliſhment.) Mary (I ſay) a Princeſs by bloud and progeny; and extracted from the moſt illuſtrious ſtem upon earth, (not only famous among men, but (which is infinitely more) moſt dear to God; yet ſhe, ſuch as was very mean and poor in condition; humble and meek in ſpirit; religious and devout toward God; ſuch the paſſages occurring in the Goſpel concerning her do ſhew her; ſuch that moſt excellent hymn of hers in St. Luke (dictated by a ſpirit raviſhed with the moſt ſprightly devotion imaginable; devotion full of ardent love, paſſionate thankfulneſs, hearty joy tempered with ſubmiſs reverence) do demonſtrate her to have been. Of a mother ſo related and ſo qualified was our Saviour born. So related that was neceſſary, for the declaration of God's truth and fidelity, performing thoſe ancient predictions and promiſes made to the fathers; to * Abraham (that in his ſeed all the families of the earth ſhould be bleſſed) to † David; to whom God had ſworn (as || St. Peter tells us) that of the fruit of his loins, according to the fleſh, he would raiſe up Chriſt, to ſet upon his throne; who (as appears by many paſſages in the Goſpels) God's people did expect and believe that he ſhould be the rod out of the ſtem of Jeſſe, and a branch growing out of his roots; in whom the horn of David ſhould bud; who ſhould * raiſe the tabernacle of David that was fallen; and rule over the Kingdom of Jacob for ever. So was the Bleſſed Virgin related, and to ſuch purpoſe (that all God's predictions and promiſes concerning the circumſtances of our Saviour's birth might be verified) and ſo qualified; ſuch in outward condition; holy in diſpoſition of mind; homely in ſtate of life; to teach us, that God doth not ſo much regard the outward pomps and appearances of this world, as the inward frame and temper of ſpirit: 'Tis ſome diſparagement to thoſe vain glories, by men ſo greatly admired; and it may induce us but moderately to eſteem them, to conſider, that God did not chooſe for the Mother of his Son and Saviour of mankind any great Princeſs; any honourable or wealthy perſonage; but her that was eſpouſed to a mean artizan, rich only in grace, ſplendid in ſpiritual endowments; adorned with that hidden man of the heart in the incorruptibility of a meek and quiet ſpirit, which is in the ſight of God of great price. Such an one the Son of God choſe to bear himſelf, to

* Luk. 2. 4.
ἐξ οἴκου καὶ πατριᾶς Δαβίδ.
Vid. Luk. 2. 4.

* Gen. 26. 4.
12. 3.
18. 18.
22. 18.
Gal. 3. 8.
Act. 3. 25.
† Pſal. 132. 17.
|| Act. 2. 15.
Vid. Matt. 22. 42. 20. 30. 2.5.21. 15.23. 9. 15. 27.
Rom. 1. 3.
Eſ. 11. 1, 10.
Rom. 15. 12.
Apoc. 22. 16.
5. 5.
* Amos 9. 11.
Act. 15. 16.
Luk. 1. 32, 33.

1 Pet. 3. 4.

to bear duty unto; to conferr that great favour, that high honour upon (an honour among exteriour ones, the higheſt that ever was vouchſafed to any perſon, to any meer creature; for ſpiritual Bleſſings our Saviour Matt. 12. 50. himſelf doth preferr even above this great privilege: Whoſoever (ſaith he) ſhall do the will of my Father, which is in heaven, the ſame is my brother, and ſiſter, and mother: the ſame is ſo according to a more excellent kind of relation. By the way we may obſerve, that although the Bleſſed Virgin Luk. 1. 28. 48. 49. was in that reſpect κεχαριτωμένη, eſpecially favoured and bleſſed among women; though all nations muſt needs therefore eſteem and call her bleſſed, though ſhe juſtly acknowledged God had done μεγαλεῖα, (mighty and magnificent things for her,) yet in reality to have Chriſt born in our ſouls, to partake of his divine grace and preſence in our hearts is a higher honour, a truer happineſs than that: for when the good woman, raviſhed by our Luk. 11. 27. Saviour's diſcourſe, did cry out: Bleſſed is the womb that bare thee: yea rather, ſaid he, Bleſſed are they that hear the Word of God and keep it.

Οὐδὲ τὸ κυοφορῆσαι τὸν Χριστὸν καὶ τὸν θαυμαστὸν ἐκεῖνον τόκον τεκεῖν ἔχει τι κέρδος.

We muſt not alſo neglect to obſerve, that our Saviour choſe ſo mean a parentage, partly that he might taſt and undergo the hardſhips and inconveniences incident to our nature, (thereby more fully meriting and ſatisfying for us,) partly to give us example of the moſt difficult vertues and duties (of humility, meekneſs, and patience,) ſhewing us how we ſhould cheerfully endure wants, pains, diſgraces; contentedly want all the pleaſure, wealth, and ſplendour of the world.

The uſe of this point concerning our Saviour's birth of the Bleſſed Virgin is not to beget in us fond opinions, or to ground ſcandalous practices in reſpect to her; attributing to her (I cannot ſay leſs than ſacrilegiouſly and profanely) ſuch ſwelling, vain, falſe titles and elogies, Regina Cœli, ſalus Mundi, mater miſericordiarum, Domina noſtra, ſponſa Dei, and the like; aſcribing to her the moſt ſublime attributes and actions of God, Providence and protection over us, yea redemption it ſelf; performing acts of religious veneration, (and thoſe in a very high manner and ſtrain,) and all this without any good reaſon, any plauſible authority, or conſiderable example; I ſay from ſuch groundleſs conceits and dangerous practices we ſhould beware; which as they derogate from God's honour and prejudice his ſervice, ſo they do rather injure, abuſe and diſcredit the Bleſſed Virgin, than do any right or honour to her; whoſe greater honour indeed it was to be a meek and humble ſervant, than to be the mother of her Saviour, and Lord; the greateſt and trueſt honour we can do her is to imitate her grace, and to obey him, who vouchſafed to be her Son. But I will not proſecute that matter; nor farther inſiſt upon this point; ſome practical uſes thereof I have in the precedent diſcourſe inſinuated; the reſt I leave to your meditation.

Next our Saviour's incarnation (his conception and nativity) with the cauſes and manner thereof (partly expreſſed, partly implyed) doth ſucceed his paſſion. It might be inquired, why ſomething concerning his life interceding, is not mentioned; ſince we ſee the Apoſtles in their preachings declaratory concerning the principal matters of our faith take eſpecial notice of thoſe things: Ye know (ſaith St. Peter, in his catechetical diſ- Act. 10. 37, 38. courſe to Cornelius and his friends) the thing that was done throughout all Judæa, beginning from Galilee, after the baptiſm, which John preached; Jeſus of Nazareth, how God anointed him with the Holy Ghoſt and with power, who went about doing good and healing all that were oppreſſed of the devil, for God was with him. And the ſame Apoſtle in his ſpeech to the Jews: Ye men Act. 2. 22. of Iſrael (ſaith he) hear theſe words, Jeſus of Nazareth a man approved of God among you by miracles and wonders and ſigns, which God did by him in the midſt of you, as ye alſo know. Him being delivered, &c. Why therefore is not ſome ſuch mention made here concerning the manner of our Saviour's life, the quality of his works and actions? I anſwer; that it did ſuffice to deſcribe our Saviour (as the object of the faith we profeſs) by ſuch characters as did moſt notoriouſly determine and diſtinguiſh his per-ſon; and withal did involve and intimate the moſt ſignal myſteries of our faith, the moſt important doctrines of our religion the main deſign of his undertaking, the fit method in which he proſecuted it, and the moſt effectual means by which he accompliſhed it. The belief of which doth virtually contain (or conſequentially inferr) our belief of what ever be-ſide it is neceſſary or expedient for us to believe concerning him; there was nothing about our Saviour's perſon more conſpicuous and viſible than his trial, condemnation and execution in the time, under the preſidency of Pontius Pilate; nor was any paſſage of his life, any performance of his more conducible to the accompliſhment of that deſign, which God was pleaſed he ſhould undertake: It was therefore ſufficient and fit to deſcribe him by this and other ſuch paſſages; (well atteſted, important and influential) and if we believe in him, who ſo ſuffered, we conſequently believe all that he did or ſaid; all that is in the Goſpels (the moſt certain and authentical teſtimonies) delivered concerning him; and that he truly was whatever we ſee there he did pretend and teach himſelf to be; (the true Meſſias the only Son of God and Saviour of the world by this paſſage therefore (aſſuming his reſurrection) the Apoſtles do characterize him: for inſtance; Be it known to you all (ſaith St. Peter) that in the name of Act. 4. 10.

Jeſus Chriſt of Nazareth, whom you have crucified, whom God hath raiſed from the dead, in that doth this man ſtand before you whole: Neither to us only Apoc. 13. 8. is the Lamb ſlain, a periphraſis fully and clearly denoting his perſon, but the Jews themſelves (though out of hatred and in contempt) call him ordinarily Talui (Suſpenſus, him that was hanged) and ὁ ἀνασκολοπισθεὶς * Grot. de Ver. II. 2.
(you know) in the Pagan ſcoffers language doth ſignify him. But as to the thing it ſelf.

Suffered under Pontius Pilate, was crucified, dead----

THis part of our Saviour's humiliation, is in the ancient Creeds expreſſed more conciſely by one word crucifixus: Crucifixus ſub Pontio Pilato & ſepultus: Crucified under Pontius Pilate and buried; ſo it goes in the text of Ruffinus, and agreeably in other ancient expoſitors. But this alteration (or acceſſion) it ſeems was made, (as for the expreſs diſclaiming of ſome heretical conceits that afterward ſprung up, denying the real truth of our Saviour's death, ſo) for the more full and clear repreſentation of the thing; by implying the manner, and main circumſtances, and complete effect thereof: for by ſuffering (I conceive) was intended to expreſs that what he underwent was in way of judicial proceſs, and ſentence of law, obtaining force and effect upon him, (that he was proſecuted, adjudged, and puniſhed as a malefactor;) (for the word πάσχειν, applied as in this caſe, did, I ſuppoſe (as to ſuffer doth now in common uſe with us*)* by an εὐφημισμὸς (a mild and modeſt kind of ſpeech) bear this emphaſis, importing to be puniſhed with death in a legal courſe;) then being crucified doth ſhew the kind and manner of that ſuffering, which was moſt painfull and diſgracefull; and being dead, was added to declare the full effect and extreme complement of all; (he ſo ſuffered, was ſo crucified, as thereby to loſe his life.) Let us ſomewhat ponder upon theſe particulars diſtinctly, then conſider all together.

Suffered under Pontius Pilate. Suffered : that is (I ſay in my apprehenſion) underwent judgment, and puniſhment as a malefactor. I deny not but the word may in ſignification extend to all the infirmities, inconveniencies,pains,and ſorrows that our Savicur did undergo both in the courſe of his miniſterial performances, and chiefly before his death ; but I think thoſe ſufferings of his rather conſiderable upon other accounts (as conſequents upon our nature aſſumed, adjuncts to his condition, and concomitants of his paſſion) than here directly intended ; for to interpret ἐπὶ Ποντίȣ Πιλάτȣ, in Pontius Pilate his time, ſo as to reſpect any time before our Saviour's being accuſed and arraigned before him, ſeems a ſtretch and a ſtrain. Suffered here, I therefore take for puniſhed, in way of ſeeming juſtice as a malefactour. That he ſhould thus ſuffer, God had determined,and it was foretold by the Prophet Iſaias ; that he ſhould be numbred among the tranſgreſſours : and St. Paul tells us, that God made him ſin for us; (that is, ordered that he ſhould be dealt with as a ſinfull or criminous perſon) who knew no ſin, (was perfectly innocent and free from the leaſt tendency to any fault :) And we ſee in the hiſtory that he was impeached of high crimes ; as a blaſphemer againſt God, (aſſuming to himſelf the title, power and properties and prerogatives of God) as a ſeditious and rebellious perſon, (perverting (or ſtirring up) the nation, and hindring to give tribute to Cæſar, and pretending that he was Chriſt a King) as a deluder and ſeducer of the people ; in general, as a κακοποιὸς, a criminal perſon and malefactour ; and that he was condemned (though by a ſentence extorted, againſt the conſcience of the judge, by malicious importunity of the accuſers) and ſuffered in pretence as ſuch, is clear, and confeſſed on all hands. And that we may the beter admire the wiſdom and goodneſs of God in this diſpenſation,let us meditate upon the reaſons why it was ſo ordered. To which purpoſe we may conſider :

See Mat. 16. 21.
Luk. 9. 22.
Luk. 22. 37.
Mar. 15. 28.
Iſa. 53. 12.
2 Cor. 5. 21.
Joh. 5. 18.
10. 30.
Matt. 26. 61, 65.
Luk. 23. 2.
Matt. 27. 63.
Joh. 7. 12.
Joh. 18. 30.

1. That as our Saviour did chooſe to live a life of greateſt meanneſs and hardſhip, ſo for the ſame reaſons he would die a death of all moſt bitter and uncomfortable : Such is to our nature the death of a malefactour ; there is nothing to man's nature (and eſpecially to honeſt, ingenious and well-diſpoſed nature,wherein natural modeſty is not extinguiſhed or decayed) more abominable. God hath put into us, for good purpoſes, a lively ſenſe of all diſgrace ; and of all diſgraces, that which proceeds from imputation of odious crimes is moſt diſguſtfull and pungent ; and being conſcious of innocence, doth increaſe the ſmart ; and to perceive our ſelves to die under it (to leave this world with ſuch an irreparable ſtain upon our reputation and memory) is ſtill more grievous : to languiſh by degrees, and endure the torments of a long and ſharp diſeaſe, all ingenuous perſons would much rather chooſe, than in this manner, being eſteemed and dealt with as a villain, to find a preſent and eaſie diſpatch : We ſee ſomewhat of this reſentment breaking forth in our Saviour ; and how man's nature diſcovered it ſelf in that queſtion : Be ye come out as againſt a thief with ſwords and ſtaves ? Yes ; he loathed to be ſo treated, yet choſe it as he did other the worſt inconveniencies incident to our nature and to that low condition,which he put himſelf into (to endure want and fare hardly ; to be contemned, envied, hated, ſcorned and reproached in all the courſe of his life ; he had not been ſo complete and extreme a ſufferer if he had died any other way. He was oftentimes in danger of death both from the ſecret machinations, and open violences of thoſe which envied and hated him ; but he induſtriouſly declined a death ſo eaſie, ſo honourable, (if I may ſo ſay : for it is not ſo great a diſgrace to periſh by private malice, or by ſudden rage, as by the ſolemn and deliberate

Luk. 22. 52.
Matt. 26. 55.
Joh. 5. 18.
10. 32, 38.
8. 40.
37. 7.
59.
19. 25.

liberate proceeding of men in publick place, credit and authority: He ſhewed his diſciples *(ſay the Goſpels)* that it was incumbent upon him *(ὅτι δεῖ αὐτὸν)* to ſuffer many things, to be rejected or reprobated *(ἀποδοκιμασθῆναι, ἐξουδενωθῆναι, to be vilified and made nothing of) by the chief* Matt. 20. 18.
prieſts, and elders, and ſcribes; to be condemned to death, and delivered to 16. 21.
the Gentiles, εἰς τὸ ἐμπαῖξαι, to be mocked and ſcourged and crucified. Thus Luk. 9. 22. Mar. 9. 12.
would our Saviour ſuffer not only in his body by bruiſes and wounds; in his ſoul by moſt bitter ſorrows; but in his name and reputation by the worſt of ignominies; undergoing as well all the infamy, as the infirmity that did belong to, or could befall us: thus by all means ſhewing his charity; and exerciſing his compaſſion, and advancing his merit for us.

2. Again, Death by publick judgment, as a malefactour, did agree to the nature of his undertaking, was congruous to his deſigns in dying; did aptly repreſent what he was doing, and ſignifie why he did it. We were guilty; we deſerved condemnation; extreme pain and ſhame were due to us for our ſins: he undertook to ſatisfie for us, and therefore underwent the like judgment and puniſhment; was reputed, was called, was dealt with as a malefactour in our ſtead. What we had really done, diſhonoured and uſurped upon God; diſordered and troubled the world; deceived and ſeduced our ſelves and others (by our negligent miſtakes and our wilfull miſcarriages; our evil practices and examples) that was imputed to him: All we like ſheep have gone aſtray; we have turned every one to his own way; Eſ. 53. 6.
and the Lord hath laid upon him the iniquities of us all: He not only bore an equivalent puniſhment, but in a manner an equal blame with us.

3. Add hereto: that ſince it was determined he ſhould die for us; and that not in a natural, but a violent manner; and that to ſatisfie divine juſtice; it was fit he ſhould do it in that way wherein God's right is moſt nearly concerned, and his providence moſt diſcernible; wherein it might moſt plainly appear that God did exact and take; Chriſt did yield unto and undergo puniſhment: All judgment is God's (as Moſes tells us) per- Deut. 1. 17.
formed by authority derived from him; All Magiſtrates are his officers; by them he orders and governs the world; what therefore is done in a way of formal judgment by perſons of authority, God himſelf may be ſaid in an eſpecial manner to do, (as being done by his commiſſion, in his ſtead, in his behalf.) It was therefore an act of ſubmiſſion to God's juſtice, becoming the perſon he ſuſtained (of our Surety and our Saviour) to undergo ſuch a judgment and ſuch a puniſhment. Seaſonably therefore did our Saviour anſwer Pilate, vouching his authority: Thou hadſt Joh. 19. 11.
*no power at all over (*or againſt me) except it were given thee from above: It was in regard to that ſupreme and original authority of God that our Saviour ſubjected himſelf to theſe inferiour and ſubordinate powers, as the proper inſtruments of God's juſtice. Had he ſuffered in any other way (by any private malice or paſſion of men) God's providence had been leſs viſible, Chriſt's obedience not ſo remarkable; and if he muſt die by publick hands, it muſt be as a criminal; upon pretence of guilt: there muſt be teſtimonies produced, however falſe; there muſt be a ſentence pronounced, though partial and unjuſt: no man is proſecuted or perſecuted by authority, without ſome colour of deſert.

4. Farther, in no other way perhaps could our Saviour diſplay (with ſuch advantage) all manner of vertue and goodneſs, to the honour of God, and our benefit: whether we conſider the occaſions to exerciſe his vertue, or the means of ſhewing it. The Judgment-hall (with all the ſtreets that lead him thither, and thence to execution, attended by guards of ſouldiers, and accompanied by clamours of the people) were ſo many theatres, whereupon he had opportunity (convenience and leiſure) publickly to act the parts of the higheſt and hardeſt vertues; to declare his courage and conſtancy in defence of truth, and maintenance of a good conſcience; his meekneſs and patience in bearing the greateſt affronts and reproaches; injuries and calumnies the worſt imaginable; his entire reſignation to God's will; his ſubmiſſion and obedience to man's law and authority; his admirable charity in pitying, in excuſing, in praying for, yea in ſuffering all this for the good of thoſe, who in a manner ſo deſpitefull, injurious, and cruel did perſecute him: all theſe graces and vertues, by the matter being thus ordered, were in a degree moſt high, in a manner moſt conſpicuous demonſtrated to the praiſe of God's name and the advancement of his truth; for the confirmation of our faith; an inſtruction, encouragement, and inducement of good practice to us.

Neither muſt we omit to conſider the farther emphaſis that lies in the word Suffer, which implies our Saviour not only to have been dealt with as a malefactour, but to have really endured what a man in that caſe might or ſhould do: that he was ſenſible and affected (according to the frame of humane nature) with the pain, diſgrace, and ſhame, and all evils whatever did appear to attend his paſſion: as his complexion was moſt pure and delicate; his ſpirit moſt vivid and apprehenſive, accordingly were the pains that he felt, both in body and ſoul moſt ſharp and afflictive: Some men may fondly pretend to, or falſely glory in a ſtupid apathy; or a ſtubborn contempt of all thoſe evils, to which our nature is ſubject: Our Saviour did not ſo, but with a quiet ſubmiſſion and ſweet compoſedneſs of mind reſented them; as God intended we ſhould do when he implanted ſenſe and paſſion in our natural conſtitution, and ordered objects to affect and afflict them, for our uſe and advantage.

Thus and for ſuch reaſons and to ſuch purpoſes (as I conceive) did our Saviour ſuffer, or undergo judgment and puniſhment: It is added, under Pontius Pilate, ἐπὶ Ποντίου Πιλάτου; where the prepoſition ἐπὶ may either denote the circumſtance of time, when our Saviour's paſſion did happen (in the time of Pontius Pilate his government or preſidency over Judæa; ſo ἐπὶ is very frequently uſed) or it may farther imply a reſpect to that perſon, as an inſtrument of our Saviour's paſſion (by, or under Pontius Pilate as preſident and judge; ſo the word is ſometimes uſed.) Neither of theſe ſenſes, I ſuppoſe, were diſtinctly, but both conjunctly intended here; in relation to the Goſpel-hiſtory; the which here (as to the main paſſages) we are ſuppoſed to know, and profeſs to believe: neither do I think any more of myſtery deſigned, beyond the full and clear determination of our Saviour's perſon, the declaration of whom we believe in, by circumſtances moſt apt and ſuitable to that purpoſe; the time when; the perſon under whom; and conſequently the place where, and ſomewhat of the manner how he ſuffered. However, all theſe circumſtances are in themſelves conſiderable, and afford ſome matter of edification to our faith, and practiſe: The time (in it ſelf moſt fit, and agreeable to divine predictions) doth illuſtrate the wiſdom of God in his providence, and confirm his veracity, conſtancy and fidelity: When the fulneſs of time was come; he grieved at preſent evils, even to a degree of exceſſive anguiſh, trouble and agony, (περίλυπος, ἀδημονεῖν γενόμενος ἐν ἀγωνίᾳ, ἡ ψυχή μου τετάρακται, are words uſed to expreſs his ſorrowful reſentment) he feared future evils, to a degree of horrour and an amazement (to an ἐκθαμβεῖσθαι; that is, to be affrighted and aſtoniſhed:) ſuch height of paſſion did the ſenſe of preſent pangs, the fore-ſight of impending evils, the apprehenſion of his own, the conſideration of our ſtate raiſe him to: ſuch a burthen, all the ſins of mankind to lie upon his ſhoulders, no wonder if he groaned under it: God's diſpleaſure flaming out againſt ſin, no wonder it did terrifie him: ſuch a father (whom he ſo dearly loved) frowning upon, and hiding his face from him, it might well trouble him: ſuch a pity, ſuch a love contemplating man's ſinfulneſs, feeling his miſery, 'tis not ſtrange that it ſhould affect him. But I muſt paſs over this moſt large and fruitfull ſubject of meditation. When the World was in the moſt general peace and deepeſt calm; and conſequently men's attention more ready, and their minds more capable of inſtruction; when the greateſt (or the moſt conſiderable) part of the World was united under one Empire; and ſo more fit to be incorporated into a ſpiritual Common-wealth; (to communicate in offices of piety; to impart and receive inſtruction;) when mankind generally was better civilized, inquiſitive after knowledge, and receptive of truth; when the ſcepter of legiſlation and ſupreme authority was juſt departed from Judah; while the Jewiſh Temple yet Dan. 9. 26. ſtood, but not long before its deſtruction; when the Seventy hebdomades (of years) were near expiring, (the time when the Meſſias ſhould be cut off;) in ſhort, when all things were duly prepared and ſuited for the great effects deſigned by God to proceed from our Saviour's paſſion and other performances, then did he ſuffer and do what God had in his wiſdom and goodneſs pre-determined, pre-ſignified and predicted.

I might add, the time was fit to be ſet down, as a character apt to confirm the truth of the hiſtory; for direction to a fair inquiry and trial concerning it; to exclude all confuſion and uncertainty about it. As for the perſon whom; if we conſider him as a Roman ſtranger, as a Governour and Judge, according to his perſonal qualities; or according to his deportment in this affair, ſomething in all theſe reſpects may offer it ſelf obſervable. He was an Alien from the Common-wealth of Iſrael; ſo Jews and Gentiles conſpired in violence and injury againſt their common Saviour; that ſo (in type and myſtery) every mouth might be ſtopped, and Rom. 3. 19. all the world might become guilty before God. Neither was it for nothing decreed by God, that the Jews ſhould deliver our Saviour up to the Gentiles (τοῖς ἔθνεσιν) to mock, and ſcourge, and crucifie him. The Jews out Matt. 20. 19. of envy and malice delivered up, accuſed, proſecuted, inſtigated and im- Matt. 27. 18. portuned againſt him: the Gentiles out of ignorance, profaneneſs, and unjuſt partiality condemned, and executed him: whereby the ingratitude, iniquity, and impiety of all mankind in ſome ſort did appear and was aptly Rom. 5. 6. repreſented, and in conſequence thereof his infinite goodneſs is demon- ἀσεβῶν. v. 8. ſtrated, who for ſo impious, unjuſt, flagitious a generation, for ſuch ma- ἁμαρτωλῶν. licious enemies, and cruel perſecutours, did willingly ſuffer: he ſuffered 1 Pet. 3. 18. ἀδίκων. for them, by whom he ſuffered. I might add, that a ſtranger was more Rom. 5. 10. likely to be a fair and indifferent judge; and to do what was deſigned Col. 1. 21. and fit to be done in our Saviour's trial. Conſider Pilate as a Governour and Judge, for ſo he was: Cæſar's Procurator, and Preſident of Judæa, Mat. 27. 2, &c. ἐπίτροπος and ἡγεμὼν,) and therein we may diſcern the wiſdom and ſpecial providence of God puniſhing our Saviour for us by his own Officer in a courſe of juſtice; the loyal obedience of our Saviour ſubmitting both to God and Man, (though in a caſe of plain outrage and higheſt injuſtice againſt himſelf,) the heinouſneſs of that wicked proceeding, wherein that ſacred power committed to him by God, and the venerable name of juſtice were ſo abuſed. So that if ever, then one might have ſaid with the Wiſe-man: I ſaw the place of judgment, that wickedneſs was Eccleſ. 3. 16. there; and the place of righteouſneſs, that iniquity was there. As for this Pilate his perſonal qualities; he is reported by the hiſtorians near thoſe Philo, Joſephus, &c.

times to have been a man of a harſh and rough temper; wilfull and haughty in ſpirit; rapacious, violent and cruel in his proceedings; and was therefore a proper inſtrument of providence for the execution of ſuch a buſineſs, ſo holy and gracious in God's purpoſe, ſo villainous and barbarous according to man's intention: Such an one deſerved to bear the guilt of a fact ſo baſe and execrable; was worthy to be employed; might be ready to undertake therein: It had not been ſo plauſible in it ſelf, that ſuch an act ſhould, nor ſo credible that it could proceed from any perſon of Joſeph. Antiq. 18. 5. good diſpoſition, or right intention. But of him it could not be improbable, who by his former violences (ſuch as upon their complaints did ſoon after remove him from his charge) had ſo incenſed the Jews, that Mar. 15. 15. he ſhould not ſtick to gratifie them in a matter, that they ſo earneſtly concerned themſelves in, and which in ſemblance (ſetting apart conſiderations of juſtice and honeſty ſo little material in ſuch a perſons regard) ſo little touched his own intereſt; in yielding up ſo poor and inconſiderable (in outward ſhew) a perſon, however in his own conſcience moſt innocent, as a boon or ſacrifice to their importunate rage. Such he was, and yet it is obſervable, that he behaved himſelf, in compariſon of the furious Jews, with ſome moderation and ingenuity. He was ſo fair in examination of the caſe, as notwithſtanding their eager and clamorous Joh. 19. 6. proſecution, to diſcern the right and declare our Saviour guiltleſs: He was ſo far conſtant and true to his conſcience, as to expoſtulate with the Luk,23.14,&c. Jews, and once, twice, a third time to challenge them, Why, what evil hath Act. 3. 13. he done? As often did he diſcover his inclination and readineſs (yea his will and intention) to free the innocent perſon: yet had he not the heart or the honeſty thoroughly to reſiſt their importunity; they were more obſtinate in their wicked, than he reſolute in his good purpoſe; ſo out of fear to offend them, and favour to oblige them (thoſe uſual corrupters of right judgment) he yielded to them, ſuffering himſelf baſely to be over-born by their wicked ſolicitations, ſacrificing acknowledged innocence to his own private intereſt, and their implacable malice. Thus did this heathen Judge behave himſelf, ſerving divine providence not only in the publick and formal condemnation of our Saviour to the puniſhment due to us, but in the ſolemn and ſerious abſolution of him from all blame in himſelf, in outward ſhew he condemned our Saviour; in truth he condemned himſelf (his corrupt judge) and the Jews (his malicious accuſers:) though he took away his life, yet he cleared his reputation, and afforded a teſtimony moſt valid and convincing of his innocence; ſuch as was requiſite to confute all the Jewiſh calumnies and aſperſions; and to confirm our faith.

Farthermore; the name of Pontius Pilate intimates the place of our Saviour's paſſion; he being well known to have been Governour of Judæa, and to have his Tribunal of juſtice at the mother-city thereof Hieruſalem; at Jeruſalem, that bloudy city, (as the Prophet calls it) whoſe cha- Ezek. 22, 2. racter it was to be the killer of the prophets and ſtoner of them that were 24. 6. ſent unto her; out of which it was (in a manner) impoſſible that a prophet Luk. 13. 33, ſhould periſh: yet the place of all the world moſt favoured and graced by 34. God by ſpecial benefits and privileges: his own proper ſeat (the city of Pſal. 48. 2. God; the city of the great King, ſo 'tis ſtyled) which he had choſen out of 87. 3. all the tribes of Iſrael (out of all the people upon earth) to put his name Deut. 12. 5. (to place his eſpecial preſence) there; the holy, the beloved city: there at Neh. 1. 9. 1 King. 11.30. his own doors, as it were, before his own ſacred palace, where moſt eſpe- Eſt. 6. 12. cial reſpect and veneration were due to him, was the King of heaven ad- Matt. 4. 5. 27. judged and executed; by procurement of his own ſervants, peculiarly 53, &c. Apoc. 20. 9. related to him, the chief Prieſts and Elders of his choſen people, perſons wholly devoted to his ſervice, and highly dignified by him (whoſe office and eſpecial duty it was to maintain truth and encourage righteouſneſs, to procure honour to God and obedience to his commandments) which as it greatly advances the goodneſs of him, who willingly ſuffered there and by ſuch, ſo it much aggravates man's ingratitude and iniquity.

It follows, Crucified; whereby is expreſſed the manner and kind of our Saviour's paſſion; which was by being affixed to a croſs, (that is, to a kind of gibbet or patibulum, mainly conſiſting of two beams (or pieces of wood) one erect, to which the length of his body was applied and faſtned by nails, the other tranſverſe, to which (his arms being ſtretched out) his hands were nailed; which kind of ſuffering we may briefly conſider as moſt bitter and painfull; as moſt ignominious and ſhamefull; as agreeable and advantageous to the deſigns of our Saviour's ſuffering; as ſignificant and emblematical; as completory of divine predictions and preſignifications; in fine, as inſtructive, admonitory of duty, and excitative of devotion, to us.

1. We may eaſily imagine what acerbity of pain muſt be endured in his limbs being ſtretched forth, racked and tentered: and continuing in that poſture; in the piercing his hands and his feet (parts moſt exquiſitely tender and ſenſible) with ſharp, hard iron nails; ſo that (as it is ſaid of Joſeph) the iron entred into his ſoul, or his ſoul entred into iron, in abiding expoſed to the injuries of Sun ſcorching, wind beating upon, weather ſearching his grievous ſores and wounds: ſuch a pain it was; and that no ſtupifying, no tranſient pain, but very acute and withall lingring: we ſee in the ſtory he and thoſe that ſuffered with him had both preſence of mind and time to diſcourſe; three long hours and more he continued under ſuch torment, ſuſtaining every minute beyond the pangs of an ordinary death. So that well may that in the Lamentations be applied to his ſuffering ſtate: Behold and ſee if there be any ſorrow like unto my ſorrow, which is done unto me, wherewith the Lord hath afflicted me in the day of his fierce anger. Such a kind of ſuffering did our Saviour chooſe to undergo, declaring the exceſs of his love (in being ready to endure the ſaddeſt afflictions and ſmarts for us) ſignifying the heinouſneſs of our ſins (deſerving ſo extreme puniſhment) exemplifying the hardeſt duties of obedience and patience to us.

Pſal. 105. 18. Heb. & Septuag.

Lam. 1. 12.

2. And as moſt ſharp and afflictive in pain, ſo moſt vile and ſhamefull was this kind of ſuffering. It was ſervile ſupplicium (quod etiam homine libero, quamvis nocente videatur indignum,) a puniſhment never by the Romans (under whom our Saviour ſuffered) legally inflicted upon freemen, but only upon ſlaves, (ſuch as were ſcarce regarded as men, or in life, having forfeited, as it were, made away, or quite loſt themſelves) and among the Jews that puniſhment which approached neareſt and in part agreed therewith (for they had no ſuch cruel or inhumane kind of puniſhment appointed by their law) hanging up the dead bodies of ſuch as had been executed, was accounted moſt infamous and abominable: Curſed is every one that hangeth upon a tree, upon a patibulum, ſays the law: Curſed, that is, addicted to reproach and malediction? Curſed of God (the Hebrew hath it) that is doth ſeem to be deſerted and rejected and afflicted of God. In the very nature of the thing to be raiſed on high, and for a good continuance of time offered to the view of all that paſs by, doth beget ill ſuſpicion and provoke cenſure; invites obloquy, ſcorn, and contempt; draws forth language of deriſion, deſpight and deteſtation (eſpecially from the rude and hard-hearted multitude, who think and ſpeak according to event and appearance; who---ſequitur fortunam

Lactant. IV. p. 435.

Deut. 21. 23. Gal. 3. 13.

Luk. 23. 35, 36. ſemper & odit Damnatos ---) ſo we ſee that the people did mock, and jeer, Matt. 27. 38. Vid. Pſal. 22. and revile (ἐξεμυκτήριζον, ἐνέπαιζον, ἐβλασφήμουν) drawing up their noſes, ſhooting out their lips, and ſhaking their heads, and letting looſe their tongues againſt him; in this condition (the ſame men perhaps who had formerly admired his glorious works, and had been affected with his ex-Luk. 14. 15. cellent diſcourſes; who had followed and favoured, and bleſſed, and glo-δοξαζόμενος ὑπὸ πάντων. rified him.) They look, and ſtare upon me, is a part of the deſcription of Matt. 21. 9. his ſuffering; (anſwering to that in St. Luke, εἱστήκει ὁ λαὸς θεωρῶν; the
9. 33. people ſtood gazing upon him; and θεατρίζεσθαι, to be made a gazing-ſtock Pſal. 22. 17. Luk. 23. 35. (or object of reproach) we ſee is reckon'd by the Apoſtle as an aggravation
Heb. 10. 33. of affliction. Hence became it ſuch a ſcandal, &c.

Heb. 12. 2. Thus did our Saviour endure the Croſs, deſpiſing the ſhame; (deſpi-ſing, that is, not ſimply eſteeming it as no evil, but not eſteeming it ſo great an evil, as for the avoiding it to neglect the accompliſhment of his great and glorious deſigns; there is in man's nature an averſation or abhor-Heb. 11. 36. rency of diſgrace; perhaps more ſtrong than that of pain: mockings and ſcourgings we find joined together; nor doth pain more grievouſly affect the animal ſenſe, than being inſulted over and deſpiſed goes againſt the grain of men's fancy and natural conſtitution of ſoul; and generally men will more contentedly endure one than the other. We need not therefore doubt but our Saviour was ſenſible of this natural evil, and that ſuch indignity did add ſome degree of bitterneſs and loathſomeneſs to his cup of affliction; yet in conſideration of the glory that would accrue to God, Gal. 3. 13. the benefit to us, the reward to himſelf, he willingly underwent it. He Heb. 12. 3. ἀντιλογία. became a curſe for us (was expoſed to all malediction and reviling from ſinfull men; (deſpiſed and rejected and diſeſteemed of men, in the Prophet's language) did alſo ſeem deſerted and rejected by God himſelf, (himſelf in a manner concurring in ſuch an opinion, as by his wofull out-cry Lama- Iſa. 53. 3, 4. ſabacthani doth appear.) [We did eſteem him ſtricken, ſmitten of God and afflicted.] So did he become a curſe for us, that we might be redeemed from the curſe of the law, (that is, from that exemplary puniſhment due to our tranſgreſſion of the law, with the diſgrace before men, and the diſpleaſure of God attending it;) He was contented to be dealt with as a ſlave Phil. 2. 7. (as a wretched miſcreant) making himſelf of no reputation, that we might be free not only from the pain, but from the ignominy we deſerved, and with our lives recover both our honour and liberty, which we had forfeited and loſt.

3. Farther, This kind of ſuffering had ſome advantages, and did conduce toward our Saviour's deſign in being notorious, and in continuing a competent time: If he had been privately made away, or ſuddenly diſ-patched, no ſuch great notice had been taken of it, nor could the matter of fact it ſelf have been ſo fully proved (for the confirmation of faith and conviction of infidelity,) nor had that excellent deportment of his under ſuch affliction (his moſt divine patience, meekneſs, and charity) ſo illuſtriouſly ſhone forth. God's providence therefore did order it ſo, (to prevent all exceptions and excuſes of unbelief) that as the courſe of his life, ſo the manner of his death ſhould be moſt open and conſpicuous:
Act. 26. 26. Theſe things (as St. Paul told King Agrippa) were not done in a corner; [nor preſently huſhed up; but were done leiſurely in the face of the Joh. 18. 20. world:] I ſpoke freely (ſaith our Saviour) to the world; I always taught in the ſynagogue and in the temple, where the Jews from all places reſort, and in ſecret have I done nothing: His proceedings were not cloſe or clancu-lary; but frank and open: and as he lived, ſo he died; publickly and vi-ſibly; the world being witneſs of his death, and ſo prepared to believe his his reſurrection, and to embrace his doctrine; according to what himſelf foretold: I being lifted up from the earth, ſhall draw all men unto me; (all Joh. 12. 32. men to take notice by the remarkableneſs of it, ſome to believe upon me by the wondrous conſequences of it:) and, As Moſes did exalt the Serpent in the Wilderneſs, ſo muſt the ſon of man be exalted; Joh. 13. 14, 15. (that as by beholding the Serpent elevated upon a pole, men were cured of thoſe mortiferous ſtings they had received; ſo by believing on him crucified men ſhould be ſaved from thoſe deſtructive and deadly ſins they had committed.)

4. This kind of ſuffering alſo ſeems in many reſpects ſignificant, and full of inſtructive emblems: His poſture repreſented that large and comprehenſive charity which he bare in his heart toward us, ſtretching forth his arms of kindneſs, pity and mercy; with them (as it were to embrace the whole world, and receive all mankind under the wings of his gracious protection; it ſhewed him earneſtly (as it were) wooing and intreating us to return to God, and embrace the reconciliation he had purchaſed, and did offer: I have ſpread out my hands all the day unto a rebellious people; God did ſo Iſa. 65. 2. of old by his Prophets mediately and figuratively; he did ſo in our Saviour immediately and properly by himſelf. The Croſs was as it were a Pulpit, from which our Saviour did exhort to repentance, and preach divine grace, and offer remiſſion of ſins unto us, with action moſt affecting and pathetical.

Vid. Lactant. IV. p. 437. Extendit in paſſione manus ſuas, orbemque dimenſus eſt, ut jam tunc oſtenderet ab ortu ſolis uſque ad occaſum, magnum populum ex omnibus linguis & tribubus congregatum, ſub alas ſuas eſſe venturum.

His being lifted up may ſignifie and mind us, that ſubmiſſion to God's will, ſuffering for truth and righteouſneſs (humility and patience) are conjoined with and do procure exaltation: that the lower we are in humility, the higher we riſe in favour, and the nearer approach to heaven: Who ſo humbleth himſelf, ſaith our Saviour, ſhall be exalted: And be you Luk. 18. 14. humbled before the Lord (under the mighty hand of God) and he ſhall ex- Matt. 23. 12. alt you (ſay with one voice St. James and St. Peter. And, becauſe our Sa- Jam. 4. 10. viour was obedient unto death, even the death of the croſs, therefore did God 1 Pet. 5. 5. ὑπερύψωσεν, ſuper-exalt him above all dignity and power in heaven and earth (as St. Paul teaches us.) The croſs was a throne, where humility ſate in high majeſty, whence patience ſate encircled with rays of glory. The ſame conſideration may alſo mind us how and whence our ſalvation comes; that our help comes from above, and by looking upward; that as in beholding our Saviour upon the croſs we muſt lift up our eyes, ſo in believing on him we muſt raiſe up our hearts to heaven. In that ſublimity alſo did our Saviour ſhew himſelf ſtanding erect, not only as a conſtant ſufferer, but as a glorious conquerour, having (as St. Paul tells us) ſpoiled Coloſſ. 2. 15. principalities and powers (all the principal powers of darkneſs, hell, ſin, Heb. 2. 14. and death) ἐδειγμάτισεν, he made a ſolemn ſhew triumphing over them upon his croſs. No conquerour loftily ſeated in his triumphant chariot did ever yield ſo illuſtrious a ſpectacle; no tree was ever cloathed and adorned with ſo glorious trophies. To the outward eye and carnal ſenſe our Saviour was expoſed to ſhame and ſcorn, but to ſpiritual diſcerning, all his and our enemies hung there, objects of contempt, undone and overthrown: The devil, ὁ ἰσχυρὸς, (that ſtrong and ſturdy one) hung there Matt. 12. 29. bound and fettered, ſpoiled and diſarmed, quite baffled and confounded: Luk. 11. 22. death it ſelf there hung gaſping with its ſting plucked out, and all its 1 Cor. 15. 54. terrours quelled. The world with its vain pomps, its counterfeit beauties, 2 Tim. 1. 10. its bewitching pleaſures its fondly admired excellencies did there hang all defaced and diſparaged; the world is thereby crucified to us, and Gal. 6. 14.

we unto the world; ſo that we cannot glory, or truly rejoice in any worldly thing. (For to be ſplendid in external ſtate can never henceforth be worthily deemed admirable; to be mean and low can never ſpeak a man miſerable, ſince the Lord of glory and fountain of happineſs did himſelf condeſcend to ſo low a condition, and became ſo deep a ſufferer: nor can pleaſure pretend to make men happy, nor ſorrow juſtly diſcourage us, ſince the Son of God by ſuch a ſtep of extreme grief hath aſcended into his throne of glory.) Our ſins (thoſe ſins which our Saviour did in his body ἀναφέρειν ἐπὶ τὸ ξύλον, carry up upon the Gibbet) hung there expoſed as trophies of his victories, objects of our hatred and horrour, by him condemned in the fleſh: Thoſe manifold enmities (between God and us; between man and himſelf; between one man and another,) did all there hang together, aboliſhed in his fleſh, and ſlain upon his croſs; by the bloud of which he made peace, and reconciled all things in heaven and earth; together with all thoſe yokes of bondage, thoſe enſigns and inſtruments of vexation to us: thoſe laws that burthened men ſo much, which ſet them at ſuch diſtance and variance, that ſubjected them to guilt and condemnation unavoidable: that hand-writing of ordinances, inducing our obligation to ſo grievous forfeitures and penalties, was there nailed to the croſs; our bonds thereby cancelled, our debts expunged.

1 Pet. 2. 24.
Rom. 8. 3.

Coloſſ. 1. 20.
Eph. 2. 15, 16. καταργήσας.

Coloſſ. 2. 14. ἐξαλείψας.

Mos eſt quibuſdam in locis clavis transfigendi edicta antiquata. Grot. ib.

Our Saviour's crucifixion furthermore did ſignifie how our fleſh ſhould be dealt with, how we ſhould mortifie the luſts and affections thereof. We muſt not only imitate and follow our Saviour in his life, but in ſome ſort endeavour to reſemble him in his death, συμμορφοῦσθαι τῷ θανάτῳ αὐτοῦ (as St. Paul ſpeaks) conformable to his death; become σύμφυτοι, planted together with him in the likeneſs of his death, συσταυροῦσθαι τῷ Χριστῷ, be crucified together with Chriſt; having our old man crucified together with him, that the body of ſin may be deſtroyed, ſo that we no farther ſerve ſin; mortifying our earthly members, and putting to death the deeds of the body; For they that are Chriſt's, have crucified the fleſh with its paſſions and luſts. His death may fitly repreſent our death to ſin; his croſs the thwarting our vitious deſires and inclinations; his grievous pain the bitterneſs of our repentance, (wherein our ſoul ſhould be pierced with ſharp compunction, as his ſacred fleſh was torn with nails) his diſgrace our ſhame and confuſion, with regard to our offences. In his perſon farther we may contemplate the ſtate of vertue and goodneſs in this world; expoſed to envy and hatred; to cenſure and obloquy; to contempt and ſcorn; to all kind of affliction and hardſhip: Every good man muſt hang upon ſome croſs or other; εἰς τοῦτο κείμεθα, 'tis our lot and portion aſſigned us by divine decree; to a conformity with this image and pattern of the Son of God we are predeſtinated; δεῖ ἡμᾶς, we muſt (it is both of neceſſity and duty incumbent on us) by many tribulations enter into God's Kingdom: All that will live godly in Chriſt Jeſus, ſhall (certainly in one way or other) ſuffer perſecution (and partake of the croſs.) Many ſuch analogies and reſemblances not unprofitable might a devout meditation (in imitation of the ſacred Writers) draw out, for exciting good affections, and quickning to duty. But farther, Philip. 3. 10.

Rom. 6. 5, 6, &c.
Gal. 2. 20.
5. 24.
Coloſſ. 3. 5.
Rom. 8. 13.

Et quanquam paſſio ipſa per ſe acerba & amara, ſpecimen nobis futurorum tormentorum dabat quam morantibus in hoc ſæculo virtutis ipſa proponit, &c. Lact. IV. p. 434.

1 Theſſ. 3. 3.
Act. 14. 22.
Rom. 8. 29.
2 Tim. 3. 12.

5. We may alſo (for the fuller confirmation of our faith, and begetting in us a due adoration of the divine wiſdom and providence) obſerve the correſpondency of this our Saviour's manner of ſuffering to the ancient prophecies fore-telling, and the typical repreſentations fore-ſhewing it. That moſt full and clear and famous prophecy concerning our Saviour's viour's paſſion (Iſa. 53.) doth expreſs him ſuffering as a malefactour or with malefactours: He was to be reckoned among tranſgreſſours; ſuffering in a manner very painfull, and very deſpicable, (He was to be wounded for our tranſgreſſions, and to be bruiſed for our iniquities; he was to be deſpiſed and rejected of men, as a man of ſorrows and acquainted with grief) which circumſtances could not ſo punctually agree to any other kind of ſuffering (or puniſhment) in uſe as to this. In the 22d Pſalm, the royal prophet deſcribes an afflicted and forlorn condition (ſuch as by no paſſages of his hiſtory, in the full extent and according to the literal ſignification of his words doth appear ſuitable to his own perſon, and therefore more properly is to be applyed to the Meſſias, whom he did repreſent) and in that deſcription among other paſſages ſuiting to our Saviour, theſe words occurr: Thou haſt brought me into the duſt of death; for dogs have compaſſed me, the aſſembly of the wicked have incloſed me, they pierced (or digged, ὤρυξαν) my hands and my feet; (which words do moſt patly and livelily ſet out our Saviour's being nailed to the croſs.) And in the Prophet Zachary God fore-tells, ſpeaking in his own name, They (that is the Jews, ſenſible of what they had done, and penitently affected) they ſhall look upon me, whom they have pierced: Which place needs no violence to extort the right meaning from it; no comment to explain, or adapt it to the crucifixion of God, our Saviour, to which it is ſo literally congruous. The ſame was alſo fitly pre-figured by appoſite types: Iſaac, the immediate ſon and heir of the promiſe (in whom the faithfull ſeed was called, or conveyed down by him) and ſo a moſt apt type of our Saviour, he being devoted and offered to God in ſacrifice, did himſelf bear the wood, by which he was to be offered: So did our Saviour (the promiſed ſeed in which all nations ſhould be bleſſed) himſelf bear the croſs, by which he was to ſuffer, and to be offered up a ſacrifice to God. Thoſe which were bitten (dangerouſly) by fiery Serpents, were by looking up upon a brazen Serpent ſet upon a pole preſerved in life, which (in our Saviour's moſt authentical interpretation) did repreſent the ſalvation which ſhould proceed from our beholding and believing on him lifted up upon the croſs, to us, who had been ſtung and mortally ſtruck with that old Serpent's poiſonous temptations. The Paſchal lamb (that moſt proper emblem of Chriſt our Paſſover, that moſt meek and innocent; moſt unblemiſhed and ſpotleſs lamb ſlain for the ſins of the world,) it was to be killed by the whole aſſembly of the congregation of Iſrael; its bloud was to be daſhed on the ſide-poſts and croſs-beams of every door; its body was not to be eat raw, nor ſodden at all with water, but roaſted whole, and dreſſed upon a ſpit; nor were any of its bones to be broken; which circumſtances (with ſuch caution and care preſcribed) how they ſuit, and fitly adumbrate the manner of our Saviour's paſſion, I need not farther than by the bare mention of them to declare.

Iſa. 53. 12.
5. 3.
Pſal. 22. 15, 16.
Zach. 10. 12.
Joh. 19. 37.
Gen. 22.
Rom. 9. 8.
Jam. 2. 21.
Heb. 11. 17.
Vid. Tertull. adv. Jud. c. 10.
Numb. 21.
Joh. 13. 14.
Exod. 12. 5, 6.
9. 46, &c.

Laſtly, The conſideration of our Saviour's thus ſuffering is apt to teach and affect us; to admoniſh us of our duty, and to excite devotion in us: No contemplation is more fruitfull, or efficacious toward the ſanctification of our hearts, and of our lives: The Goſpel it ſelf is, in St. Paul's language, ὁ λόγος τοῦ σταυροῦ (the word of the croſs;) and he calls both this and that the power of God to ſalvation.

1 Cor. 1. 18.
Rom. 1. 16.

1. What good affection therefore may not the meditation thereupon raiſe, what vertue not produce in us?

2. How can it otherwiſe than enflame our hearts with love, to think what acerbity of pain, what indignity of ſhame our Saviour there willingly undertook and endured for us? No imagination can deviſe a greater expreſſion of charity; and if love be productive of love, what effect ſhould the conſideration of ſuch a love have? Nor can we find a ſurer ground of truſt, and a greater encouragement to hope in God than this: He that ſpared not his own Son, but delivered him up to the ſuffering of ſuch pains and indignities for us: how can we diſtruſt his bounty, or deſpair of his mercy, in any caſe? What higher favour could he do, how ſhew greater condeſcenſion, how more ſurely teſtifie his willingneſs, his delight to do us good? how conſequently lay ſtronger grounds of hope and confidence in us, than by his own free undertaking and undergoing all this for us?

3. What deteſtation of our ſins muſt it alſo raiſe in us that brought ſuch torture, ſuch reproach upon him? Judas the wretch who betrayed him, the Jewiſh Prieſts who accuſed and proſecuted him, Pilate the Judge who condemned him, the wicked people that abuſed and inſulted over him, the cruel hands that ſmote him, the pitileſs hearts that mocked him, the blaſphemous tongues that railed upon him, thoſe who were inſtruments of his affliction, how do we deteſt them and curſe their memories? But our ſins, which were the firſt and main cauſes of that wofull tragedy, how
Rom. 4. 25. much more reaſon have we to abhorr and abominate them? He was delivered for our offences, (they were the traitours indeed which by Judas his hands did deliver him;) 'twas they that cried crucifie, (Crucifie him, crucifie him) with a clamour more loud and more effectual, than did the Jews, (it was they that did by their borrowed mouths accuſe and proſecute
2 Cor. 5. 21. him;) He that knew no ſin, was made ſin for us; (was condemned as a ſinner for us: 'twas we that by our ſins did adjudge and ſentence him;)
Gal. 3. 13. Pilate was but their agent and ſpokes-man in it, He became a curſe for us, (all the mockery, deriſion, and contumely he endured proceeded from us; the ſilly people were but properties, repreſenting and acting our parts,) He was wounded for our tranſgreſſions, he was bruiſed for our iniquities: 'twas they that by the fierce ſouldiers and rude rabble, as by ſenſleſs engines, did ſmite, and ſcourge him; by the nails and thorns did pierce his fleſh and rend his ſacred body.

4. What can in reaſon be more effectual to breed in us remorſe and penitent ſorrow, than reflection upon ſuch horrible effects proceeding from our ſins? how can we but vehemently grieve, when we remember our ſelves by them to have been the betrayers, the ſlanderers, the ſcorners, the murderers of God's dear Son, of ſo innocent and lovely a perſon, of our beſt friend, and moſt loving Saviour?

5. And if ingenuity will not work ſo much, and melt us into contrition hereby, yet ſure this thought muſt needs produce fear in us: Can we but tremble to think of the fierceneſs of God's diſpleaſure, the ſeverity of divine judgment, the heinous guilt of our ſins, all ſo plainly diſcovered, ſo livelily ſet out in this diſmal ſpectacle: If the view of an ordinary execution is apt to beget ſome apprehenſions of terrour, dread of the law, reverence to authority, what dreadfull impreſſions ſhould this extraordinary example of divine juſtice make upon us?

6. How can it alſo but deterr us from wilfull commiſſion of ſin, to conſider that by it we do ἀνασταυροῦν, re-crucifie (in a manner renew all that pain and ſhame; bring up again upon the ſtage all that direfull tragedy,)
Heb. 6. 6. Crucifie, I ſay, afreſh the Son of God, and again expoſe him to open ſhame:
10. 29. that by it we trample upon the Son of God, and prize the bloud of the covenant (that moſt precious bloud ſo freely, yet ſo ſadly ſhed for us) *as a common (a trivial and worthleſs) thing;* deſpiſing all his ſo kind and ſo painfull endeavours for our ſalvation, defeating his gracious purpoſe, rendring dring all his ſo bitter and loathſom ſufferings, as to their principal intent (our good and benefit) altogether, yea more than vain and fruitleſs?

7. What farther can be more operative in producing diſeſteem and diſregard of this world, with all its deceitfull vanities and miſchievous pleaſures; in reconciling us to the worſt condition it can bring us into; in comforting us under the heavieſt preſſures of affliction? Who can admire thoſe ſplendid trifles, which he never regarded in his life, which only ſerved to mock him at his death? Who can reliſh thoſe delights, which he never living vouchſafed to taſt of, and dying choſe to feel their contraries? Who will dare to vilifie a ſtate of ſorrow and diſgrace, which he by the voluntary ſuſception thereof (in ſuch extremity) hath ſo dignified and graced; by which we reſemble, become conformable unto, Apoc. 1. 9. partake with him, concurr with and (in a manner) complete his deſign? 1 Pet. 4. 13. Rom. 8. 17.
Who can much preferr, being admired, applauded, or made much of Phil. 3. 10.
by men before deriſion, reproach, or perſecution from them, (eſpecially Coloſ. 1. 24. for adherence to truth and righteouſneſs?) Who can be very ambitious of ἀνταναπληροῦν τὰ ὑστερήματα.
honour and repute, or covetous of wealth, or addicted to pleaſure, who obſerves him (the Son of God, the heir of all things, the Lord of glory) chooſing rather to aſcend a Croſs than a Throne; inviting the clamours of ſpite and ſcorn, inſtead of acclamations of praiſe; embracing the reputation of a malefactour and a ſlave before the dignity and reſpect of a Prince; that regards him hanging naked and forlorn upon a gibbet, beſmeared with his own bloud, groaning under extremity of pain, yielding, as the Prophet foretold of him, his back to the ſmiters, and his cheeks to Eſ. 50. 6.
them that plucked off the hair; (hiding not his face from ſhame and ſpitting,) will not the imagination of ſuch a ſight ſully the luſtre of all earthly pomps and beauties, damp the ſenſe of all carnal delights and ſatisfactions; quaſh all the content we can take in our wild and extravagant merriments?

8. If ſuch affliction and hardſhip were to him a ſchool of obedience (ἔμαθεν ἀφ᾽ ὧν ἔπαθε, he learnt from what he ſuffered, obedience,) a means Heb. 5. 8.
of perfection, (It became God, ſaith the Apoſtle, to perfect the captain of our 2. 10.
ſalvation by ſuffering,) a procurement of divine favour, (therefore, himſelf tells us, the father loveth me, becauſe I lay down my life, and the manner Joh. 10. 17.
ſure did encreaſe that love,) a ſtep to glory, (for, it is ſaid, was not Luk. 24. 26.
Chriſt to ſuffer theſe things, and (ſo) to enter into his glory? therefore God Phil. 2. 9. exalted him: We ſee Jeſus for the ſuffering of death crowned with glory and Heb. 2. 9. honour.) If it yielded ſuch advantages to him, and may by our conformity and compliance with him afford the like to us, what reaſon can there be that we ſhould be any wiſe diſcompoſed, diſcouraged or diſconſolate under it? Much more ſure there is, that we ſhould, with St. Paul, boaſt, Rom. 5. 3. rejoice, exult and skip (ἀγαλλιᾶσθαι and σκιρτᾷν) for joy in our tribulations. Coloſſ. 1. 24. Matt. 5. 12.
He that doth not carry his croſs, and go after me, cannot be my diſciple; and, Luk. 6. 23.
He that doth not take up his croſs, and follow me, is not worthy of me; ſaith Luk. 14. 27. 9. 23.
our Saviour: He that doth not take it up readily, when by providence Matt. 10. 38.
it is preſented; that doth not bear it contentedly when it is impoſed, can- 16. 24.
not be our Saviour's diſciple (ſhewing ſuch an incapacity to learn the leſſons of humility and patience read by him; to tranſcribe the copies of ſubmiſſion to divine will, ſelf-denial and ſelf-reſignation ſo fairly ſet him by Chriſt's inſtruction and example:) He is no wiſe worthy of him; (hath not the courage, the ſincerity, the conſtancy required of a Chriſtian; one pretending to ſuch benefits, privileges and rewards from Chriſt, his Lord and Saviour.) The willing ſuſception, the cheerfull ſuſtaining of the Croſs is the expreſs condition and character of our Chriſtianity (whence uſe hath been to ſign them who enter into it with the figure of the Croſs.) 'Tis the ſpecial enſign of our warfare under Chriſt againſt his and our common enemies; the diſtinct badge of our profeſſion; the chief object of our faith, our knowledge, our preaching (as St. Paul diſcourſes in the firſt and ſecond Chapter of his firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians) the main ground of our hope, the ſole matter of our glory, (ἐμοὶ μὴ γένοιτο καυχᾶσθαι,) Far be it from me to glory (ſaith St. Paul) ſave in the croſs of Chriſt. Let it be to the Jews a ſcandal (offenſive to their fancy, pre-poſſeſſed with expectations of a Meſſias flouriſhing in ſecular pomp and proſperity,) let it be folly to the Gentile Greeks, (ſeem abſurd to men imbued and puffed up with carnal conceits, and maxims of worldly wiſdom) that God ſhould put his own beloved Son into ſo ſad and deſpicable a condition; that ſalvation from death and miſery ſhould be procured by ſo miſerable a death; that eternal joy, happineſs and glory ſhould iſſue from ſuch ſprings of extreme ſorrow and ſhame; that a perſon in outward ſemblance ſo contemptible, expoſed to ſo infamous and ſlaviſh uſage, ſhould be the Son of God, the Lord and Redeemer of mankind, the King and Judge of all the world: Let this, I ſay, be ſcandalous and diſtaſtfull to ſome prejudiced perſons; let it ſeem ſtrange and incredible to other ſelf-conceited men, to us it muſt be gratefull and glorious; to us, who diſcern by a clearer light, who are endued with a purer ſenſe, derived from the divine ſpirit, whence we may, with a comfortable ſatisfaction of mind, perceive that God could not in a higher meaſure, in a fitter method illuſtrate his glorious attributes of goodneſs and juſtice (his infinite mercy toward his poor creatures, his heavy indignation, and ſevere juſtice againſt iniquity;) that vertue could not be taught, nor exemplified, nor commended and inculcated any other way with ſo great advantage. It were eaſie to alledge the ſuffrages of Plato, Seneca, and other ſuch men (wiſe only by improvement of natural reaſon) acknowledging that perfection of vertue can neither be wrought or ſhewed, otherwiſe than by ſuffering the bittereſt afflictions; that God (as a wiſe Father) therefore uſeth to exerciſe them whom he moſt loveth with them; nor hard were it to produce examples of men (even among the Pagans) moſt famous and honourable in the judgment of poſterity for their wiſdom and vertue, who have been tried in this furnace, and ſhone thereby more brightly, ſuffering by the iniquity, ingratitude, and envy of their times, both in their reputation, liberty and life, infamous puniſhments, ignominious deaths; though none of them of choice and upon deſign to advance the intereſt of goodneſs, but by an accidental force put upon them; none in a manner ſo ſignal, with circumſtances ſo rare, with an event ſo wonderfull; ſo that even according to the paſſable dictates of common wiſdom this diſpenſation was not ſo unaccountable, neither ought the Greeks in conſiſtency with themſelves and their own moſt admired Philoſophers, have deemed the doctrine of the croſs to be fooliſh, or unreaſonable; ſince thereby a charity and humanity ſo unparallel'd (far exceeding theirs, who have been celebrated for love to their Country, or a more prevalent love of praiſe devoting their lives) a meekneſs ſo incomparable, a reſolution ſo invincible, a patience ſo heroical were manifeſted for inſtruction and direction of men: Since never were the vices and vanities of the world (both ſo deſtructive to the quiet and welfare of mankind) ſo remarkably diſparaged and condemned: Since never vertue had ſo powerfull an effect (the expiation of the whole World's ſin and reconciliation of mankind to God, ſuch as no other performance, no ſacrifice could ever pretend to) nor ſo glorious a reward, ſoveraign dignity to him that exerciſed it, everlaſting happineſs to them that follow it:

1 Cor. 2. 2.

Gal. 6. 14.

1 Cor. 1. 23.

Vid. Orig. in Celſ. II. pag. 79, &c.

Plat 2. de rep. Sen. de Provid.

Socrates, Phocion, Ariſtides, Seneca, Thraſeas Pœtus, Helvidius Priſcus, &c.

Vicit amor patriam laudumque immenſa cupido.

it: Since (I ſay) there be ſuch excellent uſes, fruits, and conſequences of the Croſs undergone by our Saviour, we have no reaſon to be offended, nor to be aſhamed thereof; but rather heartily to approve and humbly to adore as well the wiſdom of God, as other his glorious attributes, ſo conſpicuouſly demonſtrated and diſplayed therein.

1 Cor. 1. 18, &c.

But I have not been able to contain my ſelf, and have dwelt too long upon this moſt rich and fruitfull argument.

Dead and buried, &c.

OUR Saviour's paſſion (as we did obſerve formerly) was in the firſt draughts of this Creed expreſſed by one ſingle word, Crucifixus: but afterwards (whether to diſcountenance ſome heretical devices contradicting the real truth of our Saviour's death, or for the more full and clear repreſentation of the thing it ſelf) its deſcription was dilated and expreſſed by three words; ſignifying the quality thereof, (he ſuffered, that is, was dealt with as a malefactour,) another ſhewing the manner of it, (he underwent that moſt painfull and diſgracefull puniſhment of Crucifixion,) a third denoting the final completion thereof, (he loſt his life thereby.) The two former we have largely diſcourſed upon; the laſt remains, being the conſummation of his grievous paſſion, the bottom of that bitter cup he willingly drank off for us; fore-ſeeing the approach of which, he pronounced the τετέλεσται; It is finiſhed. Concerning which, we may conſider, 1. The nature of it, (wherein it did conſiſt.) 2. Some peculiar adjuncts and reſpects thereof, (which commend it to our regard, and render it conſiderable.) 3. The cauſes and ends (whence moved, and why he died.) 4. The fruits and effects of it (what did eſpecially ſpring from, what conſequences there were of his dying.) Laſtly, the practical influences, the belief and conſideration thereof may or ſhould have upon us.

Joh. 19. 30.

I. As for the Nature of it; We muſt affirm and believe aſſuredly, that it was a true and proper death, not in kind different from that death, to which all we mortal men by the law and condition of our nature are ſubject, and muſt all ſometime undergo: (For what man is he that liveth, and ſhall not ſee death, that ſhall deliver his ſoul from the hand of the grave?) That death, which is ſignified by the ceſſation of vital operations (of all motion, natural or voluntary; of all ſenſe and knowledge; appetite and paſſion;) that death which is cauſed by the violent diſunion, or diſlocation; by diſtempering; by whatſoever indiſpoſing the parts, humours, ſpirits of the body, ſo that the ſoul can no longer in and by them exerciſe thoſe functions, for which its conjunction thereto was intended, and cannot therefore fitly reſide therein: that death which is ſuppoſed to conſiſt in the diſſolution of that vital band (whatever it be) whereby the ſoul is linked and united to the body; or in that, which is thereupon conſequent, the departure, ſeparation, and abſence of the ſoul from the body; each of that couple, upon their divorce, returning home, to their original principles, as it were, the body to the earth, whence it was taken; and the ſpirit unto God, who gave it, as it is in the Preacher. Such cauſes antecedent are ſpecified in the ſtory; ſuch ſigns following are plainly implied; ſuch a ſtate is expreſſed, in the ſame terms, whereby our death is commonly ſignified. The ſame extremity of anguiſh, the ſame dilaceration of parts, the ſame effuſion of bloud (which would deſtroy our vital temper, quench our natural heat, ſtop our animal motion, exhauſt our ſpirits, extrude our breath) did work upon, and neceſſarily produce the

Pſal. 89. 48.

—'Επεί κε πρῶτα λίπη λεῦκ' ὀςέα θυμὸς Ψυχὴ δ' ἠΰτ' ὄνειρος ἀποπταμένη πεπότηται, Hom. Od. λ.

Eccl. 12. 7.
Gen. 3. 19.
Pſal. 104. 29.

the like effects upon him (as having aſſumed the common infirmities and imperfections of our nature) in regard to which violences inflicted upon him, he is ſaid to be ſlain, to be diſpatched, to be cut off, to be taken away, to be deſtroyed, to be ſlaughtered, to be ſacrificed, (ἀποκτένεσθαι, διαχειρίζεσθαι, ἀναιρεῖσθαι, ἀπολέσθαι, σφάττεσθαι, θύεσθαι,) which words fully import a real and proper death to have enſued upon thoſe violent uſages toward him. And by the ordinary ſigns of death, apparent to ſenſe, the ſouldiers judged him dead, and therefore, ὡς εἶδον ἤδη τεθνηκότα, ſeeing him already dead, they forbare to break his legs; by the ſame all the world being ſatisfied thereof, both his ſpitefull enemies, that ſtood with delight waiting for this utmoſt ſucceſs of their malicious endeavours to deſtroy him, and his loving friends, that with compaſſionate reſpect attended upon him through the courſe of his ſuffering; and thoſe, who were ready to perform their laſt offices of kindneſs in procuring the decent burial of his body. His tranſition alſo into, and his abiding in this ſtate are expreſſed by terms declaring the propriety of his death, and its agreement with our death, ſuch as was before deſcribed: St. Mark tells us, that ἐξέπνευσε (animam efflavit, he breathed out his ſoul, or breathed out his laſt breath; he expired.) St. Matthew, ἀφῆκε τὸ πνεῦμα; (he let go his ſpirit, or gave up the ghoſt, animam egit.) St. John, παρέδωκε τὸ πνεῦμα (he delivered up his ſpirit into God's hands;) St. Luke mentions it done with a formal and expreſs reſignation; Father, into thy hands I commend (or depoſe, παρατίθεμαι) my ſpirit. Himſelf alſo frequently expreſſes his dying by laying down his life; by beſtowing his life a ranſome; which ſhews him really to have parted with it. His death likewiſe (as ours commonly by excedere è vivis; and like phraſes) is termed ἔξοδος, a going out of life, a leaving the ſociety of men, Luk. 9. 31. Moſes and Elias are ſaid to tell τὴν ἔξοδον αὐτοῦ, his deceaſe which he ſhould accompliſh at Jeruſalem; and μετάβασις, a paſſing over from this world: When (ſaith St. John) Jeſus knew, that his time was come, ἵνα μεταβῇ, that he ſhould depart from this world. His death alſo by himſelf is enigmatically deſcribed by the deſtruction (or demoliſhment of his bodily temple; anſwerable to thoſe circumlocutions concerning our common death, in St. Paul, the diſſolution of our earthly houſe or tabernacle (or tranſitory abode) in St. Peter, ἀπόθεσις τοῦ σκηνώματος, the laying down, or putting off our tabernacle.

Matt. 3. 15.
8. 33.
Dan. 9. 26.
Iſa. 53. 8.
Joh. 18. 14.
11. 50.
Apoc. 5. 9.
Joh. 19. 33.
Mar. 14. 41.
Luk. 23. 27.
Joh. 19. 25.
Mar. 15. 37.
Matt. 27. 50.
Joh. 19. 30.
Luk. 23. 46.
Joh. 15. 13.
10. 15, 18, &c.
13. 37.
1 Joh. 3. 16.
Μετ' ἐμὴν ἔξοδον.
2 Pet. 1. 15.
-ἄφιξιν.
Acts 20 29.
Joh. 13. 1.
2 Cor. 5. 1.
2 Pet. 1. 14.

It were alſo not hard to ſhew how all other phraſes and circumlocutions by which humane death is expreſſed either in the Scripture, or in uſual language, or indeed among Philoſophers and more accurate ſpeakers, are either expreſly applied or by conſequence from what is exptеſſed, appear applicable to our Saviour: Such for inſtance as theſe in Scripture; Ἀνάλυσις, being reſolved into our principles, or the returning of them thither, whence they came. Ἀπόλυσις, a being freed, licenſed, or diſmiſſed hence. Ἐκδημία ἐκ τοῦ σώματος, (a going abroad, or abiding abroad; a peregrination, or abſenting from the body;) an ἔκδυσις, putting off, or being deveſted of the body; an ἀφανισμός, diſappearing, ceaſing (in appearance) to be; going hence and not being ſeen: a falling on ſleep; reſting from labours; to ſleep with his fathers; a being added unto our fathers, gathered to our people; being taken or cut out of the land of the living: going down into the pit; lying down, reſting, ſleeping in the duſt, &c. making our bed in darkneſs.

These and ſuch like phraſes occurring in Scripture, (which might be parallelled out of common ſpeech and more learned diſcourſes) deſcribing either the entrance into, or the abiding in the ſtate of that death, to which all men are obnoxious, might eaſily be ſhewed applicable to the

1 Tim. 4. 6.
Phil. 1. 23.
Luk. 2. 29.
2 Cor. 5. 8.
2 Cor. 5. 4.
Act. 13. 36.
Gen. 25. 8.
49. 33, &c.
Pſ. 31. ult. &c.
Jer. 11. 19.
Pſal. 52. 5.
Pſal. 28. 1.
143. 7. 88. 4.
Iſa. 38. 18.
Ezek. 26. 20, &c.
Job 7. 21. 17.
16. 20. 11.
21. 26.
Dan. 12. 2.
Iſa. 26. 19.

the death of our Saviour: But I will not farther inſiſt upon confirmation of a point ſo clear, and never queſtioned but by the wild and preſumptuous fancies of ſome hereticks.

Our Saviour's death then was a true, real, and proper death, ſuitable to that frail, paſſible, mortal nature, which he vouchſafed to undertake for us; to the condition of ſinfull fleſh, in the likeneſs of which he did appear; ſeparating his ſoul and body, and remitting them to their original Sources. His Paſſion was indeed ultimum ſupplicium, an extreme capital puniſhment, the higheſt in the laſt reſult, which either the fierceſt injuſtice, or the ſevereſt juſtice could in this world inflict; for to kill the body is (as our Saviour teaches us) the extreme limit of all humane power, and malice; the moſt and worſt man can do; they have not περισσότερόν τι, any thing beyond that, which they can attempt upon us: and ſo far they proceeded with our Saviour: [The willing undergoing of which alſo is the higheſt expreſſion of kindneſs (if it be done upon that account) for greater love than this hath no man, than that one lay down his life for his friends: the greateſt atteſtation to the truth; the perfecteſt inſtance of obedience, ſubmiſſion, and patience reſpectively: To aſſert truth, to follow righteouſneſs, to adhere to conſcience, to reſiſt ſin, μέχρις αἵματος, as far as to bloud, (as it is in the 12th. to the Hebrews) not to love our life, ἄχρι θανάτου (unto the death, when death is threatned) is the utmoſt that man can do.] But,

Rom. 8. 3.
Matt. 10. 28.
Luk. 12. 4.
Joh. 15. 13.
Heb. 12. 4.
Rev. 12. 11.

II. We may conſider thoſe peculiar adjuncts and reſpects of our Saviour's death (annexing thereto hereafter in our diſcourſe, for avoiding repetition, his whole paſſion generally taken, whereof his death was the chief part and final completion;) thoſe adjuncts, I ſay, and thoſe reſpects, which commend it to our regard, and amplify the worth thereof; its being a reſult of God's eternal deliberation and decree; a matter of free conſent and compact between God the Father and his only Son; its being anciently prefigured and predicted; its being executed by God's hand and providence guiding; by man's action concurring: Its being the death of a perſon ſo holy and innocent; ſo high and excellent; of the Son of God, yea of God himſelf.

1. It was a reſult of God's eternal counſel and decree: No caſual event, no expedient ſuddenly deviſed; but a deſign from all eternity, contrived by divine wiſdom, reſolved upon by divine goodneſs: As God did then foreſee our lapſe and miſery, ſo he did as ſoon determine our remedy; as the whole of that myſterious diſpenſation concerning Chriſt, ſo did eſpecially this main part thereof, proceed κατὰ πρόθεσιν τῶν αἰώνων, according to an eternal purpoſe; For our Saviour was a lamb ſlain from the foundation of the world: We were redeemed by the precious bloud of Chriſt, as a lamb without blemiſh and without ſpot, προεγνωσμένου μὲν, fore-ordained indeed before the foundation of the world: Our Saviour went (he tells us) to ſuffer κατὰ τὸ ὡρισμένον, according to what was determined: it was by the determinate counſel, and fore-knowledge of God, that he was delivered up to thoſe wicked hands that ſlew him; Nor did the conſpiracy of Herod and Pilate with the nations and people of the Jews effect any thing therein, beyond ὅσα ἡ χείρ, καὶ ἡ βουλὴ Θεοῦ προώρισε γενέσθαι, whatever the hand and the counſel of God had predeſtinated to be performed. God's ſo great care and providence, ſo expreſſly commended to our obſervation, do argue the high worth and conſequence of this death.

Eph. 3. 11.
Apoc. 13. 8.
1 Pet. 1. 19.
Acts 2. 23.
4. 28.

2d. It was a matter of free conſent and compact between God and our Saviour. God freely proffered, if he would undertake to redeem his creature, a comfortable and honourable ſucceſs thereto; he willingly em-

Iſa. 53. 9, 10. braced the condition: When thou ſhalt make thy ſoul an offering, thou ſhalt ſee thy ſeed and prolong thy days, and the pleaſure of the Lord ſhall proſper
Heb. 10. 7, 8. in thy hand: thou ſhalt ſee of the travail of thy ſoul, and be ſatisfied: that
Luk. 22. 29. was God's propoſition: Lo, I come to do thy will, O God, was our Saviour's anſwer in correſpondence and conſent thereto. God in conſideration of his ſufferings, did διατίθεται βασιλείαν, covenant to him a Kingdom; commit to him a ſoveraign authority, aſſign him an univerſal dominion: in vertue of which tranſaction it was, that Jeſus for the ſuffering of death
Heb. 2. 9. was crowned with glory and honour; that he pouring out his ſoul unto death, Iſa. 53. 12. God divided him a portion with the great---that he being obedient to the death, God exalted him and gave him a name above all names. In this regard are God's elect and faithfull people ſaid to be given to him, as a retribution to him who gave himſelf for them; that we are ſaid to be Rom. 1. 4. Gal. 3. 13. bought by him, and the Church purchaſed by his bloud. There was therefore 1 Cor. 6. 20. a covenant between God and his Son concerning this affair; and of 1 Pet. 1. 19. great conſideration ſurely muſt that affair be, wherein ſuch perſons (if I Act. 20. 28. may ſo ſpeak) ſo intereſt themſelves, do traffick (as it were) and ſtand upon terms with each other.

3. Farther, that the excellency and efficacy of this death and paſſion might appear, it was by manifold types fore-ſhadowed, and in divers prophecies foretold. Indeed moſt famous paſſages of providence, (eſpecially the ſignal afflictions of eminent perſons repreſenting our Saviour) ſeem to have been preludes unto, and prefigurations of his paſſion: the bloud
Luk. 11. 51. of the righteous Proto-martyr Abel, ſhed by envy, for acceptable obedience
Gen. 4. 10. to God's will, and crying for vengeance, ſeems to have prefigured
Heb. 12. 24. that bloud, which cried alſo, though with another voice, and ſpake better
11. 4. things than the bloud of Abel; not complaints and ſuits for vengeance, but intreaties and interceſſions for mercy. Iſaac (the only Son, the Son of promiſe) his oblation in purpoſe, and death in parable, (as the Apoſtle Heb. 11. 17, 19. to the Hebrews ſpeaks) did plainly repreſent our Saviour, the promiſed ἐν παραβολῇ. ſeed, his being really offered, and afterward reſtored to life. Joſeph his being ſold and put into ſlavery by his envious brethren; being ſlanderouſly Pſal. 105. 18. accuſed and ſhut in priſon, (whoſe feet they hurt with fetters, the iron entred into his ſoul:) and this by God's diſpoſal, in order to his exaltation,
Gen. 45. 5. that he might be a means to preſerve life and prepare convenient habitation
Luk. 24. 26. for the children of Iſrael, doth reſemble him, who by ſuffering entred
Heb. 5. 9. into glory; who being thereby perfected, became author of ſalvation to his brethren, all true Iſraelites; who went to prepare manſions Joh. 14. 2. of reſt and light, a heavenly Goſhen for them. David's perſecutions preceding his royal dignity and proſperous ſtate, (which he expreſſes in no Pſal. 18. 4. lower ſtrain, than by ſaying: The ſorrows of death compaſſed me, and the floods of ungodly men made me afraid: the ſorrows of hell compaſſed me about; the ſnares of death prevented me;) how they may adumbrate the more real extremities of our Saviour's affliction, previous to his glorious exaltation, I leave you to conſider; as alſo the reſt of ſuch paſſages, of a like myſterious importance: However all the ſacrifices of old, inſtituted by God, we may more confidently affirm to have been chiefly preparatory unto, and prefigurative of this moſt true and perfect ſacrifice, by vertue
Heb. 9. 23. indeed of which thoſe ὑποδείγματα and σκιαὶ, thoſe umbratick repreſentations,
8. 5. obtained any validity or effect: if they did not ſignifie this in Heb. 9. 22. deſign, they could ſignifie nothing in effect: For as without ſhedding of bloud there was no remiſſion, (God's anger could not be appeaſed, his juſtice could not be ſatisfied without it; it being bloud that maketh atonement for the ſoul, God ſo requiring, as it is in the law, Levit. 17. 11.)
which

which the inſtitution of thoſe ſacrifices did ſpeak and ſignifie; ſo it was impoſſible that the bloud of bulls and goats ſhould take away ſin: that thoſe legal gifts and ſacrifices ſhould perfect the conſcience of him that did the ſervice; that is, entirely aſſure him of pardon and impunity. The ſouls of beaſts were not in value ſuitable, could not fitly be ſurrogated in the ſtead of men's ſouls, which had offended, and were therefore liable to death: the effuſion of their bloud could not reaſonably ſatisfie a man's conſcience, ſenſible of guilt, and fearfull of God's diſpleaſure, that by it God was fully appeaſed; they muſt therefore referr unto a better ſacrifice, more ſufficient in it ſelf, more acceptable to God, in vertue of, in reſpect to which ſin might be thoroughly expiated, God's vengeance removed, man's mind comforted and contented. The High Prieſts ſolemn entrance, once a year, into the Holy of holies, not without bloud, to atone for his own and the people's ignorances, did imply that our great High Prieſt, ſhould make a bloudy atonement for the ſins of mankind, and paſſing through the veil of mortal fleſh, ſhould enter into the true ſancta ſanctorum of heaven, there to appear in the preſence of God for us. The Paſchal lamb eſpecially, in its ſubſtance (as a lamb meek and gentle) in its quality, without blemiſh or ſpot (holy and innocent) in its manner of preparation and dreſſing, (being killed by all the aſſembly, having its bloud ſprinkled upon the doors of every houſe; being roaſted with fire; having bitter herbs for its ſauce,) with other obſervable circumſtances was a moſt apposite emblem of Chriſt our Paſſover, who not only by his death did ſignifie and mind us of, but really effect our deliverance from the myſtical Egypt, our ſtate of ſpiritual bondage. So did ancient types exhibit; and plain predictions alſo did expreſs the ſame death and ſuffering of our Saviour: Thoſe things (ſaith St. Peter) which God before had ſhewed by the mouth of all his prophets, that Chriſt ſhould ſuffer he hath ſo fulfilled: Not one Prophet only, but all, (either plainly, or covertly; either directly, or by conſequence) have ſhewed it: it is our negligence or ſtupidity if we do not diſcern it: O fools, and ſlow of heart (ſaith our Saviour) to believe all that the Prophets have ſpoken: Ought not Chriſt (according to their predictions) to have ſuffered theſe things, and ſo to enter into his glory? That David, an illuſtrious repreſentative of the Meſſias, doth often, as belonging to himſelf, deſcribe mortal agonies and ſuffering, not applicable κατὰ λέξιν, in direct hiſtorical meaning, to his own perſon, and therefore in reaſon, according to a higher and truer ſenſe to be underſtood of the Meſſias; that Daniel expreſly fore-tells both the thing and the time that and when the Meſſias ſhould be cut off; that Iſaias in ſeveral places doth inſinuate, and in the famous 53d Chapter of Iſaias doth clearly deſcribe the manner, and kind of our Saviour's paſſion, is ſo evident, that the Jews themſelves have acknowledged there muſt be one Meſſias to ſuffer, as another to triumph and reign in glory; being ſo groſs as not to apprehend the conſiſtency between antecedent ſuffering, and conſequent glory; (between a night of darkneſs, and ſorrow, and a day of light and joy breaking out from it;) not to diſtinguiſh between an external pomp in this, and an eternal majeſty in the future ſtate. But to us God's ſo forward care, by the Spirit of Chriſt in his Prophets, προμαρτυρόμενον (as St. Peter ſpeaks) to fore-witneſs (to teſtifie before-hand) the ſufferings of our Saviour, and the glories ſucceeding, doth imply with what attention we ſhould regard, with what firmneſs of faith embrace this article.

Heb. 10. 4.
9. 9, 15.
Heb. 9. 23.
Heb. 9. 7.
Heb. 10. 24.
Exod. 12.
Acts 3. 18.
Lu. 24. 25, 26.
Vid. Luk. 18. 31.
Act. 26. 22.
13. 27.
Vid. Pſal. 22.
109. &c. 72.
Luk. 22. 13.
1 Pet. 1. 11.

4. We may conſider alſo that this death was executed by God's eſpecial providence directing and diſpoſing it; though not without man's active concurrence. The treacherous diſpoſition and covetous appetite of

Acts 4. 28.
Iſa. 53. 6, 4.
Act. 13. 27.
1 Cor. 2. 8.
Act. 3. 17.
Luk. 23. 34.
Rom. 8. 32.
Act. 4. 27.

of Judas; the envious humour, and blind zeal of the Prieſts; the wanton fickleneſs, and wild rudeneſs of the people; the fearfull, and ſelfiſh temper of the Governour were but inſtruments, by which God's own hand did inflict this ſore chaſtiſement upon his own Son for us; 'twas the Lord that laid upon him the iniquities of us all; by God he was ſtricken, ſmitten and afflicted. The Jews with their Rulers proceeded raſhly and ignorantly, but God adviſedly did accompliſh it, (as St. Peter in the Acts:) He did not ſpare his own Son, but delivered him up for us: He ſuſpended his bowels of pity (as it were;) he withdrew his face of kindneſs from him, out of mercy and benignity to us; he uſed him ſeverely, that he might deal favourably with us. Yet did man alſo actively concurr herein; all mankind (by their repreſentatives as it were) was involved as in the guilt for which, ſo in the guilt by which he ſuffered: there was a general conſpiracy practiſed of Jew and Gentile againſt the life of their Saviour: Of a truth (ſaith St. Peter) againſt thy holy child, whom thou haſt anointed, were gathered together, both Herod and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and with the people of Iſrael. In the Jews man's horrid ingratitude, in the Gentiles his wretched infirmity did appear; which by their active efficacy did ſignifie the meritorious influence they had; that it was man's iniquity and infirmity which did cauſe our Saviour's death: which thus as a work of divine providence (the moſt admirable work ever done by providence) as an act of humane pravity (the moſt heinous act ever committed by man) is conſiderable.

Pſal. 116. 15.
72. 14.
1 Joh. 3. 5.
2 Cor. 5. 21.
1 Pet. 2. 22.
Heb. 7. 26.
2 Sam. 18. 3.
21. 17.
Acts 3. 15.
1 Cor. 2. 8.

5. But immediately the quality and condition of our Saviour's Perſon do moſt commend, and advance the worth of his death: If, as the Pſalmiſt ſings, precious in the ſight of the Lord is the death of his Saints: If the ſpotleſs candour, the unblemiſhed integrity of a lamb do make its bloud precious, render it a fit and acceptable ſacrifice; how valuable ſhall the death of a perſon ſo holy and innocent, who did not ſo much as know ſin, in whoſe mouth no guile was ever found; who was removed (at infinite diſtance) from ſinners? If the life of a King be (as David's people told him) worth ten thouſand lives; and it be high treaſon to imagine his death; how conſiderable muſt the death be of a perſon ſo tranſcendent in dignity, the Lord of glory, the Prince of life? Ye denied the Holy and the Juſt one: ye ſlew the Prince of life; they crucified the Lord of glory: So the Apoſtles aggravate the buſineſs: But an infinity of worth and efficacy muſt needs accrue to the death of our Saviour, from his being the Son of God, from his being God: that the immortal God ſhould die, the moſt High ſo debaſed, as it cannot be heard without wonder, ſo it could not be done without huge reaſon, and mighty effect: Well might one drop of that royal bloud of heaven ſuffice to purchaſe many Worlds, to ranſome innumerable lives of men, to expiate an infinity of ſins.

Iſa. 53. 10.
Pſal. 40. 7, 9.
Heb. 10.
Joh. 10. 18.
18. 11.
Joh. 10. 18.
6. 51.

III. But let us conſider the cauſes moving to it; and the ends deſigned thereby; together with the effects conſequent thereupon, (thoſe in nature being either the ſame, or joined with the ends thereof.) The determining it by God, the undertaking of it by our Saviour were acts moſt abſolutely free and voluntary: On the Father's part: It pleaſed the Lord to bruiſe him (ſaith the Prophet:) Behold I come to do thy will; (that is, to offer, not the bloud of beaſts in ſacrifice, but my own body, according to thy will, as it is expounded in the Epiſtle to the Hebrews.) This command (ſaith our Saviour) I received of my father, viz. to lay down my life: And, the cup which my father hath given me to drink, ſhall I not drink it? On our Saviour's part: None (ſaith he) taketh my life from me ('tis by no neceſſity or compulſion,) but I lay it down of my ſelf: I have power to lay it down, and have power to reſume it : And, the bloud which I ſhall give is my fleſh, which I will give for the life of the world : The ſon of man came to give his life a ranſome for many. The yielding of his fleſh to death was a gift abſolutely free; who gave himſelf for our ſins, according to the will of God and our Father.

Gal. 1. 4.
Matt. 21. 28.

Thus did this death proceed from the joint wills of God and his Son; yet as the volitions of every wiſe and underſtanding Agent are in a manner determined or directed by ſome cauſe, (and grounded upon ſome reaſon,) ſo the cauſes and reaſons of theſe voluntary acts in Scripture are declared to have been ſeveral. The main impulſive cauſes were two, (one internally diſpoſing; the other externally inviting,) God's goodneſs and man's diſtreſs. Mankind lying in a ſad and forlorn eſtate; enſlaved to ſin, oppreſſed by Satan, ſubject to a rigorous law, expoſed to the ſeverity of juſtice; tormented by the ſenſe of guilt; fearfull of divine wrath and vengeance; in ſhort, condemned by the ſentence of heaven, and by the ſuffrage of his own conſcience to puniſhment unavoidable, to miſery intolerable; He, I ſay, lying in ſo deſperately uncomfortable a condition, God's infinite goodneſs regarded his poor creature; his bowels of compaſſion yerned toward him; thence was he moved to provide ſuch a remedy ſufficient and ſuitable to his delivery, for the curing all thoſe diſtempers; the removing all thoſe miſchiefs : The main ſpring of all this wonderfull performance (as of all other providential diſpenſations and actions ad extra) was that moſt excellent perfection of God; which in reſpect to this matter is ſometimes termed χρηστότης, benignity, or bounty (implying the great benefit we receive thence,) ſometimes Favour or Grace (ſignifying the pure freeneſs in diſpenſing it, without any deſert on our part : By the grace of God, he taſted death for every man,) ſometimes love and philanthropy (intimating the regard God had to us as his creatures, and as capable of being benefited, and better'd by him : Herein God commends his love toward us; in that we being yet ſinners, Chriſt died for us : Chriſt loved us, and delivered up himſelf an offering and ſacrifice to God.) Sometimes mercy (connoting our bad deſerts, our obnoxiouſneſs to juſtice and puniſhment ;) ſometimes pity (ſignifying the need we had thereof, our miſery and diſtreſs.) Such were the impulſive cauſes diſpoſing and occaſioning; to which we may add our ſins as the meritorious cauſe: He died for our ſins : He was wounded for our tranſgreſſions, bruiſed for our iniquities, the chaſtiſement of our peace was upon him : He died for us, not as men only, not as miſerable, but as ſinners : Had we been guiltleſs, there had wanted ſufficient cauſe, and juſt reaſon of his death : God would not have been angry, juſtice could have had no pretence or hold; we ſhould not have ſuffered our ſelves, nor could he have ſuffered for us : Death is the debt (the wages) due to ſin, which he therefore payed, becauſe we owed and could not diſcharge it : All we like ſheep have gone aſtray; we have turned every one to his own way, and (therefore) the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all.

Tit. 3. 4.
Rom. 3. 24.
2 Cor. 8. 9.
Hebr. 2. 9.
Joh. 3. 16.
Rom. 5. 8.
Tit. 3. 4, 5, &c.
Eph. 5. 2.
1 Cor. 15. 3.
1 Pet. 3. 18.
Heb. 10. 12.
Iſa. 53. 5, 6.
Rom. 5. 8, 9, &c.
Rom. 6. 23.
Iſa. 53.

As for the ends aimed at, and the effects produced hereby; they are in the Scripture-accompt and expreſſion reckoned various; principally theſe.

1. The illuſtrations of God's glory (by demonſtrating and diſplaying his moſt excellent attributes and perfections : Whom God, ſaith St. Paul, hath ſet forth a propitiation, εἰς ἔνδειξιν τῆς δικαιοσύνης αὐτοῦ; for a demonſtraſtration of his righteouſneſs; that is, of his goodneſs, his juſtice, his ſincerity, his conſtancy, and all ſuch laudable perfections which may be uſed in dealing with others, for ſo I take righteouſneſs to ſignifie.)

Rom. 3. 25.

2. The dignifying and exaltation of our Saviour himſelf; by acquiring unto him (as it were) a new right unto, and enſtating him in an univerſal dominion, in a tranſcendent glory, joy, and happineſs, accruing to him by deſert and reward: For to this end (St. Paul tells us) Chriſt died, ἵνα νεκρῶν ϗ ζώντων κυριεύσῃ: that he might be Lord of the dead and living: for the ſuffering of death he was crowned with glory and honour: the Prince of our Salvation was perfected by ſuffering; For the joy that was ſet before him he endured the Croſs: He was obedient unto death; therefore God exalted him: it was agreed and deſigned, that he ſhould ſee the travail of his ſoul and be ſatisfied.

Rom. 14. 9.
Heb. 2. 9, 10.
Heb. 12. 2.
Phil. 2. 8, 9.
Iſa. 53. 11.

3. The Salvation of mankind (thereby redeeming us (as St. Paul ſpeaks) (or buying us out) from the curſe of the law, (procuring indemnity and impunity for us,) juſtifying us in God's ſight, and reconciling us to God's favour: Being juſtified (ſaith the ſame Apoſtle) by his bloud we ſhall be ſaved by him from wrath: For if, being enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son: bearing, taking away, expiating, aboliſhing, procuring pardon for, purging the conſcience from, cleanſing us from the ſtain, and freeing us from the power of ſin, and dead works: But now (ſaith the Author to the Hebrews) once in the end of the world hath he appeared, εἰς ἀθέτησιν ἁμαρτίας, to the putting away (or abolition) of ſin by the ſacrifice of himſelf: and, The bloud of Chriſt (ſaith St. John) cleanſeth us from all ſin: And, who loved us, and waſhed us from our ſins in his own bloud: And, who gave himſelf for our ſins, that he might deliver us from this preſent evil world: Who gave himſelf for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purifie unto himſelf a peculiar people, zealous of good works. Who ſhall lay any thing to the charge of (who ſhall criminate, τίς ἐγκαλέσει) God's elect? who ſhall condemn? 'Tis Chriſt that died. In ſubordination unto, co-incidence or concurrence with theſe ends, our Saviour alſo died; for the reparation of God's honour, recovery of his right, and ſatisfaction of his juſtice: for the ratifying the new Covenant between God and us; (whence his bloud is called the bloud of the Covenant, or New Teſtament;) for the reconciling and pacifying all things in heaven and earth; removing all cauſes of diſſention, inducing obligations of concord and charity: For pulling out the ſting and removing the terrour of death; ſuppreſſing and triumphing over the powers of hell; deſtroying (or defeating) him that had the power of death, the devil; and delivering them, who through fear of death were all their life-time ſubject to death: For engaging us to all righteouſneſs and obedience, (eſpecially to the moſt excellent and moſt difficult parts thereof, charity, meekneſs, patience, ſelf-denial, utmoſt conſtancy and perſeverance) both from our obligation for what he did, and in imitation of his example; Laſtly, for atteſtation unto, and confirmation of divine truth; ſealing his heavenly doctrine by his bloud, and witneſſing before Pontius Pilate a good confeſſion. Such ends did the death and paſſion of our Saviour aim at, ſuch fruits did grow from it; which the time hath permitted me ſcarce curſorily to mention.

Gal. 3. 13.
ἐξηγόρασεν.
Rom. 5. 9.
1 Pet. 2. 24.
Heb. 9. 27.
Joh. 1. 29.
Heb. 10. 4.
1 Joh. 1. 7.
Apoc. 1. 5.
Gal. 1. 4.
Tit. 2. 14.
1 Pet. 1. 18.
Rom. 8. 34.
Coloſſ. 2. 15.
Heb. 2. 14.
καταργήσας.
1 Tim. 6. 13.
Joh. 18. 37.

As for the practical influences, the belief and conſideration thereof ſhould have upon us, they are many and great.

It ſhould oblige us to the higheſt degree of love, and thankfulneſs, in regard to this higheſt expreſſion of love to us. It ſhould beget in us the greateſt faith and hope in God; for that, He which did not ſpare his own Son, but delivered him up (to death) for us all, how ſhall he not with him alſo freely give us all things? It ſhould work contrition and repentance in us for thoſe ſins, which murdered our ſo good friend and loving Saviour: It ſhould deterr and make us carefully to avoid them, as thoſe which in a manner exact another death from him and crucifie him a-freſh, and vilifie the precious bloud of the covenant: It ſhould diſcover to us their heinouſneſs, and produce in us a vehement deteſtation and dread of them; as having provoked God to ſuch a degree of diſpleaſure; cauſing him to deal ſo ſeverely with his own moſt dear Son; for if thoſe things were done (ſuch puniſhments were inflicted) upon a green tree (upon a perſon ſo innocent, ſo precious, ſo little liable to the fire of vengeance) what ſhall be done to the dry (to us, that are ſo guilty, ſo combuſtible) if we preſume to diſpleaſe God? It ſhould engage us to a patient ſubmiſſion and reſignation of our ſelves to God's will and providence: Foraſmuch as Chriſt hath ſuffered for us in the fleſh, we ſhould arm our ſelves likewiſe with the ſame mind, as St. Peter adviſes; and prepare for the deepeſt mortification, in conformity to his death, dying after him to the luſts and affections of the fleſh, to the faſhions and delights of the world; to the fulleſt meaſure of charity; for if God ſo loved us (ſo as to die for us) then ought we (as St. John tells us) to love one another, in a degree anſwerable; for, he adds; If he laid down his life for us, then ought we alſo to lay down our lives for our brethren: In fine, we are hereby obliged to yield up our ſelves wholly to the ſervice of our Saviour; to the promoting of his intereſt and glory; ſince, as St. Paul teaches us, we are not our own, being bought with a price; and therefore muſt glorifie God in our body and in our ſpirits, which are God's, (by a purchaſe ſo dear and precious,) ſince (as he again tells us) Chriſt died for all, that they which live might not live to themſelves, but to him that died for them: Since (as St. Peter urges) we know that we are not redeemed by things corruptible, by ſilver and gold, but by the precious bloud of Chriſt, as a lamb without blemiſh or ſpot, from our vain converſation.

Joh. 15. 13.
Rom. 8. 32.

Heb. 6. 6.
10. 29.
Luk. 23. 31.
Phil. 2. 5.
1 Pet. 4. 1.
1 Joh. 4. 11.
3. 16.
Phil. 3. 10.
1 Pet. 4. 2.
Rom. 6. 5, 6, &c.
Gal. 2. 20.
5. 24.
1 Cor. 6. ult.
2 Cor. 15. 5.
1 Pet. 1. 18.

Buried. He deſcended into Hell.

THeſe two particulars (which in the ancient Roman Creed, and in all the Oriental Forms, as alſo in other more ancient ſummaries of Chriſtian doctrine) do appear either to have been conjoined and comprehended in the former of them (Buried) or at leaſt the latter to have been wholly omitted; it being afterwards inſerted here out of the Aquileian Form, (which in a manner had it, in the room of the former, that ſaying inſtead of ſepultus eſt, deſcendit in inferna) or from elſewhere (the latter ages mentioning both, either for more fulneſs and ſecurity, that nothing any wiſe material, touched in Scripture, concerning our Saviour's perſon, or performances, eſpecially done in that great ſeaſon of action preceding his laſt farewell to this world, might ſeem neglected) or perchance upon occaſion of (in favour to, or complyance with) ſome opinions about our Saviour's doings in the interval between his death and reſurrection, current and paſſable in thoſe times: theſe particulars however, I ſay, may ſeem added in reſpect chiefly (for the clearer illuſtration, and ſurer confirmation of) thoſe great Articles precedent and ſubſequent concerning our Saviour's death and reſurrection. For (as to the firſt) our Saviour's body being committed to the grave, the common repoſitory of bodies, it plainly demonſtrates the truth of his death, the reality and wonderfulneſs of his reſurrection. No life could continue in a body ſhut up under-ground till the third day; (ſequeſtred from that air, which ventilates and keeps from ſmothering our vital flame, from that comfortable light which excites and cheriſhes our natural heat; from that food, which ſuſtains and repairs our decaying parts;) therefore he muſt, being thus lodged in the chambers of death, be really dead; and to raiſe him thence, to rear the temple of his body, from that utmoſt ſtate of dejection, muſt be a work of divine and moſt wonderfull power. And to this purpoſe I ſuppoſe St. Paul mentions our Saviour's burial as a point, which among other great Articles of our Religion he did uſe to preach and inculcate as a matter of faith: I delivered unto you firſt of all (ſaith he to the Corinthians) that which I alſo received, that Chriſt died for our ſins; and that he was buried, and that he roſe again, according to the Scriptures. His burial interceding, gave light and confirmation to his death foregoing, and his reſurrection following it: according to the Scriptures, St. Paul adds; for it had ſeemed good to God both by typical repreſentation to fore-ſhew, and expreſly to fore-tell our Saviour's interment. As Jonas (ſaith he himſelf, the beſt expoſitor of God's meaning in ſuch myſtical adumbrations) was three days, and three nights in the Whale's belly, ſo ſhall the ſon of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth; the Whale's belly Jonas himſelf terms the belly of Hell, (Out of the belly of Hell cried I, and thou heardeſt my voice: the belly of Hell, or of the Grave.) And my fleſh (ſaith David, as repreſenting our Saviour) ſhall reſt in hope; for thou wilt not leave my ſoul in Hell, nor ſuffer thine holy one to ſee corruption: The Grave was the bed wherein our Saviour's fleſh did reſt in expectation ſoon to riſe again before any corruption ſhould ſeize thereon: And the Prophet Eſay treating upon his Paſſion, with the cauſes, the manner, the conſequences thereof, doth not omit the mention of this point: For, ſays he, He made his Grave with the wicked, and with the rich in his death. So God pre-ordained, and ſo predicted concerning our Saviour's burial for the confirmation of our faith, though perhaps other ends might fall in therewith, and other not inconſiderable uſes may be made thereof. He did thereby yield a farther inſtance of condeſcenſion, a final ſubmiſſion to the law of humane nature, in being brought to the duſt, and returning to the ground, according to the general doom pronounced once upon mankind: Duſt thou art, and to duſt thou ſhalt return. He repreſented thereby, as the firſt fruits from the dead, and the pattern of his followers, the common manner how, and whence we ſhall ariſe, when the time comes, that all which are in the Graves ſhall hear his voice and go forth, as it is in the Goſpel: how all men being as it were ſown in the ground, ſhall ſpring up again to another life. He did alſo thereby ſignifie that myſtical Sepulture, which we undergo in baptiſm, being therein buried with him (as St. Paul ſpeaks) being ſecluded from the pleaſures of ſin, and having the vanities of the world removed from our eyes: the immerſion in baptiſm was a kind of burial, and its being done thrice (according to primitive uſe) correſponded (as the Ancients ſuppoſe) to our Saviour's lying three days in the Grave: Τὸ γὰρ καταδῦσαι τὸ παιδίον ἐν τῇ κολυμβήθρᾳ τρίτον, καὶ ἀναστῆσαι, τοῦτο δηλοῖ τὸν θάνατον, καὶ τὴν τριήμερον ἀνάστασιν τοῦ Χριστοῦ: that the child doth enter thrice into the Font, and riſes up again; this repreſents the death and reſurrection after three days of Chriſt, ſaith Athanaſius: and,---Illa tertiò repetita demerſio typum dominicæ exprimit ſepulturæ, per quam Chriſto conſepulti eſtis in baptiſmo: that demerſion thrice repeated expreſſes a type of our Lord's burial, as by which we are together buried with Chriſt, in baptiſm, ſaith St. Auguſtine. It alſo doth countenance and commend unto us thoſe ſeemly reſpects (thoſe offices of humanity) which all civil people have conſented to perform towards the bodies of our brethren departed from us; in decently laying up their remainders; ſecuring them from offence and diſgrace; ſhewing by our beſt regard to what is left of them, the good-will we bare them living, the good hope we have of them dead; as expecting to recover that depoſitum ſo carefully laid up by us. We ſee our

1 Cor. 15. 4.

Matt. 12. 24.

Jon. 2. 2.

Pſal. 16. 9.

Iſa. 53. 9.

Διδώσω τοὺς πονηροὺς ἀντὶ τῆς ταφῆς αὐτοῦ. LXX. δώσει Heb.

Gen. 3. 19.

1 Cor. 15. 20.

Joh. 5. 28.

Col. 1. 12.
Rom. 6. 4.

γέρας θανόντων.
----Corpora terræ mandemus, qui ſolus honos Acheronte ſub imo eſt. Hom. Od. ω.

our Saviour was not unconcerned herein; and did commend to the everlaſting eſteem of poſterity the pious reſpect of that good Woman, who ſpent the precious ointment upon him, as having reſerved it for his burial. As for the manner of our Saviour's burial, that his body was by Pilate's grant, upon the petition of an honourable Counſellour reſcued from the Croſs, (where, according to the rigour of the Roman Law, it was to abide till its conſumption) that no farther ignominy, or injury ſhould be offered unto him, after he had fully ſatisfied the will and juſtice of God, in undergoing ſuch extremities of pain and diſgrace for our redemption: that another good ruler, well-affected to his perſon and doctrine, had prepared, and did bring a plentifull and precious mixture of Spices, wherewith (according to the manner of the Jews towards perſons of wealth and reſpect) for decency and convenience (to preſerve the dead bodies from noiſom ſavour and to prevent ſudden corruption) to anoint his Body: That his body was wrapped up in fine linen cloaths and laid in a new fair tomb, hewed out of a rock (or ſtony-ground) was therein encloſed, a great ſtone being rolled upon the entrance thereof (God thus ordering it, that all befitting honour ſhould be done to that ſacred body, which had born ſo much for us, and ſerved God ſo well; that the glorious temple of the divinity ſhould not be profaned or polluted, in any manner unſeemly; that the grand miracle of raiſing our Saviour to life ſhould come off with moſt advantage.) Theſe things plainly deſcribed in the Goſpel, might afford matter of profitable obſervation and diſcourſe; but I cannot well inſiſt upon them; but proceed.

Joh. 12. 7. Matt. 26. 10, &c.

He deſcended into Hell, κατελθόντα εἰς ἅδȣ. This article (or point of doctrine) as was before noted, is of a later ſtanding in the Creed; and doth not appear to have had place in any of the moſt ancient ones, publick or private (excepting that of Aquileia, into which alſo perhaps it might have come not long before Ruffinus his time) and the meaning thereof hath always (both in more ancient times among the Fathers, and in the middle times afterwards among the Schoolmen, and lately among modern Writers) been much debated, having given occaſion to many prolix and accurate diſcourſes: to recite the different opinions and explications thereof, with the reaſons produced to maintain, or diſprove them, were a matter of greater pain and time than I can afford, and to decide the controverſies about it a matter of greater difficulty, than I could hope to atchieve. I could therefore (both upon theſe accounts, as alſo becauſe I choſe to inſiſt rather upon matters more clear in their nature, and practical in conſequence;) I could therefore, I ſay, willingly wave this obſcure and perplexed ſubject; yet however, to comply ſomewhat with expectation, I ſhall touch briefly upon ſome things ſeeming conducible to the clearing or ending of the controverſies hereabout.

Now, whereas there may be a threefold inquiry, either concerning the meaning of the words (here ſet down) intended by thoſe who inſerted them; or concerning the moſt proper ſignification of the words themſelves; or concerning the meaning they are with truth capable of in the caſe, to which they here are applied.

1. The firſt I reſolve (or rather remove) by ſaying; that it ſeems needleſs and endleſs to diſpute, what meaning they (which placed theſe words here) did intend; Since, 1. it is poſſible (and might be declared ſo by many like inſtances) and perhaps not unlikely, that they might both themſelves upon probable grounds believe, and for plauſible ends propound to the belief of others this propoſition, without apprehending any diſtinct ſenſe thereof; as we believe all the Scriptures, and commend them to the faith of others, without underſtanding the ſenſe of many paſſages therein: And ſince, 2dly. perhaps they might by them intend ſome notion not certain, or not true, following ſome conceits then prevalent, but not built upon any ſure foundations. And ſince, 3dly. to ſpeak roundly, their bare authority, whoever they were (for that doth not appear) could not be ſuch as to oblige us to be of their minds, whatever they did mean or intend. We may owe much reverence, but no entire credence to their opinions. Yet, 4thly. if I were bound to ſpeak my thought, I muſt confeſs, ſuppoſing they had any diſtinct meaning, they did mean to ſay, that our Saviour's ſoul did by a true and proper kind of motion, deſcend into the regions infernal, or beneath the earth; where they conceived the ſouls of men were detained; for this appears to have been the more general and current opinion of thoſe times, which it is probable they did comply with herein, whence ſoever fetched, however grounded.

As to the ſecond inquiry, concerning the ſignification of the words: What may be meant by He deſcending: Whether our Saviour himſelf, according to his humanity; or his ſoul, or his body called he by ſynecdoche: What by deſcended, whether (to omit that ſenſe, which makes the whole ſentence an Allegory, denoting the ſufferance of infernal or helliſh pains and ſorrows, as too wide from the purpoſe) whether I ſay by deſcending may be ſignified a proper local motion toward ſuch a term; or an action, ſo called in reſpect to ſome ſuch motion accompanying it; or a vertual motion, by power and efficacy in places below: what by Hell; whether a ſtate of being, or a place; if a place, whether that where bodies are repoſed, or that to which ſouls do go; and if a place of ſouls, whether the place of good and happy ſouls, or that of bad and miſerable ones; or indifferently and in common, of both thoſe; for ſuch a manifold ambiguity theſe words have (or are made to have,) and each of theſe ſenſes are embraced and contended for: I ſhall not examine any of them, nor farther meddle in the matter than by ſaying,

1. That the Hebrew word Scheol (upon the true notion of which the ſenſe of the word Hell in this place is confeſſed to depend) doth ſeem originally, moſt properly, and moſt frequently (perhaps conſtantly, except when it is tranſlated, as all words ſometimes are, to a figurative uſe) to deſign the whole region protended downward from the ſurface of the earth, to a depth (according to the vulgar opinion, as it ſeems, of all ancient times over the world) indefinite and inconceivable; vaſtly capacious in extenſion; very darkſome, deſolate and dungeon-like in quality, (whence it is alſo ſtyled frequently * the pit, the abyſs, the darkneſs, the depths of the earth, &c.) I need not labour much to confirm the truth of this notion, ſince it is obvious that this Scheol (when moſt abſolutely and properly taken, the circumſtances of the diſcourſe implying ſo much) is commonly oppoſed to Heaven, not only in ſituation, but in dimenſion and diſtance; as when Job ſpeaking of the unſearchableneſs of the divine perfections, ſaith: It is as high as heaven, what canſt thou do? deeper than hell, what canſt thou know? And the Prophet Amos: Though they dig into hell, thence ſhall mine hand take them; though they climb up into heaven, thence will I bring them down. I ſay farther, 2dly. Becauſe the bodies (that is, the viſible remainders) of men dying do naturally fall down, or are put into the boſom of this pit, (which is therefore an univerſal Grave and receptacle of them,) therefore to die is frequently termed καταβαίνειν εἰς ᾅδου, or κατάγεσθαι εἰς ᾅδου, to deſcend, or to be brought down into this Hell; which happening unto all men without exception, (for, as the Pſalmiſt ſays) there is no man that ſhall deliver

* ἄβυσσος, Βάθιστον ὑπὸ
χθονὸς βέρεθρον.
Νερτέρος
κευθμῶν.
Βόθρος ᾅδου,
Ecclus. 21. 11.
μυχὸς ᾅδου,
Ecclus. 17. 14.
ἀπώλεια,
Prov. 15: 18.
διαφθορὰ,
27. 20.
Pſal. 107. 10.
88. 6.
143. 5.
Eccl. 6. 4.
Job 17. 13.
1 Sam. 2. 9.
Pſal. 71. 20.
Prov. 9. 18.
Job 11. 8.
Amos 9. 2.
Vid. Pſ. 139. 8.
Deut. 32. 22.
Iſa. 57. 9.
Pſal. 89. 48.

deliver his ſoul, or life (or himſelf) from the hand (or from the clutches) of this al-graſping Hell,) therefore it is attributed promiſcuouſly to all men, to good and bad alike: I will go down (ſaith good Jacob) unto the Gen. 37. 35.
Grave (to Scheol, this common Grave of mankind, καταβήσομαι εἰς ᾅδου) 44. 29, 31. unto my ſon mourning; and ſo frequently of others. Whence this Hell is apt figuratively to be put for and ſignifie equivalently with Death it ſelf, (it is once by the LXX. ſo tranſlated, and by St. Peter it ſeems after them,) 2 Sam. 22. 6. or for the law, condition, and ſtate thereof. I ſay farther, Acts 2. 24. Iſa. 38. 18.

3dly. That this word ſeems not in the ancient uſe to ſignifie the place, whither men's ſouls do go, or where they abide: For that,

1. It can hardly be made appear that the ancient Hebrews either had any name appropriate to the place of ſouls, or did conceive diſtinctly which way they went, otherwiſe than that (as the Preacher ſpeaks) they Eccl. 12. 7. returned unto God, who gave them; that they abode in God's hand (eſpecially the ſouls of the juſt: as we have it in Wiſdom; The ſouls of the righteous Wiſd. 3. 1. are in the hand of God and there ſhall no torment touch them, &c.) Deut. 33. 3.
And for that,

2dly. It is probable they did rather conceive the ſouls of men, when they died, did go upward, than downward: as the ſame Preacher intimates, Eccl. 3. 21.
differencing the ſpirit of man dying, from the ſoul of beaſts, that with its body deſcending, this aſcending, as it were unto God to be diſpoſed according to his pleaſure and juſtice: and by Enos his being taken unto God (whoſe ſpecial reſidence is expreſſed to be in heaven above,) and Gen. 5. 24.
by Elias his tranſlation upward into heaven (as it is in the hiſtory) it ſeems ἐν τοῖς ἄνω τόποις, Ariſt.
they might rather ſuppoſe the ſouls of the righteous to aſcend, than to de Cœlo.
be conveyed, downward into ſubterraneous Caverns; thoſe μυχοὶ, that 2 King. 2. 11. Ecclus. 21. 11.
βάθεος ᾅδου (thoſe cloſets, that deep pit of hell, as the ſon of Sirach and Sap. 17. 14.
the book of Wiſdom do call them;) to aſcend, I ſay, into conſortſhip and ſociety with the bleſſed Angels, who are deſcribed to attend upon God's throne in heaven, to the family of God in heaven, to that heavenly country, which they are ſaid to deſire earneſtly, the heavenly Jeruſalem.
I add,

3dly. That, if thoſe ancients had by Scheol meant the receptacle or manſion of ſouls, it is not likely they would have uſed ſuch expreſſions:
The Grave (Scheol) cannot praiſe thee, death cannot celebrate thee: they Iſa. 38. 18.
that go down into the pit cannot hope for thy truth, (ſo Hezekiah.) In death there is no remembrance of thee; in the grave (in Scheol again,) who ſhall give thee thanks, (ſo David;) and the Preacher more fully: There is no Pſal. 6. 6. work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wiſdom in the grave (in Scheol) whither Eccl. 9. 10.
thou goeſt: (it were much he ſhould ſay ſo, if by Scheol he meant the Vid. Ecclus.
place of ſouls, except he ſhould mean that ſouls after death were deprived 17. 27.
of all life and ſenſe.)

I muſt confeſs, that afterwards (even before our Saviour's time) the word ᾅδης was aſſumed by the Jews to deſign (as among the Greeks) either the place of ſouls in common, or more ſtrictly the place of ſouls condemned to puniſhment and pain for their evil lives here. (Joſephus is obſerved often to uſe the word in the firſt of theſe ſenſes; and in the New Teſtament it ſeems peculiarly applied to the latter, as in the Parable of the rich man, Luk. 16. 23.
who being, ἐν τῷ ᾅδῃ, in hell-torments did thence lift up his eyes, and behold afar off Lazarus in Abraham's boſom: But we cannot hence inferr the ſame concerning the ancient meaning of the word Scheol; eſpecially conſidering how the Jews after the prophetical days in their diſperſions becoming acquainted with the world, did ſomewhat improve in knowledge, and borrowed both notions and expreſſions from elſewhere; which expreſſions

our Saviour and his Apoſtles would not depart from, when they were agreeable or accommodable to truth. But however it be determined concerning the proper ſenſe in general of this principal word in the propoſition, and of the reſt depending thereupon as to their importance here, as to the preſent caſe, and the laſt main queſtion propounded about the meaning, whereof the words are truly capable here: I anſwer briefly,

1. That if we interpret this deſcent into Hell of our Saviour's interment, or being laid in the boſom of that general Grave we ſpeak of; or if (which little differs from that) we take theſe words for a phraſe (taking its ground thence in the manner fore-mentioned) importing, no otherwiſe than when it was ſpoken of Jacob and others, that our Saviour did really paſs into the ſtate of death, we ſhall be ſure therein not to err, the propoſition being moſt certainly true, ſo underſtood; we ſhall alſo hereby be able fairly to ſatisfie the firſt and beſt (if not the only) reaſon of this propoſition being commended to our belief; for that place of Scripture, or rather one place, being the ſame application of a place in the Pſalms; (which ſeems to have been the occaſion, and is the main ground of its aſſertion) doth not refuſe, but rather moſt commodiouſly admits this interpretation: For our Saviour's ſoul not being left in Hell, and not ſeeing corruption, is plainly by St. Peter himſelf interpreted of his reſurrection:
Acts 2.31. (He (David) foreſeeing this, ſpake of Chriſt's reſurrection, Acts 2.31. And 13.34. in like manner by St. Paul---As concerning that he raiſed him from the dead, now no more to ſee corruption: he ſaid on this wiſe, (Acts 13.34.) That ſpeech, I ſay, our Saviour's ſoul not being left in Hell, and not ſeeing corruption, is by the Apoſtles interpreted by our Saviour's reſurrection, (that is, by his being freed from the bands of death, and raiſed from the grave, before his fleſh had ſeen corruption) and is oppoſed by them to David's continuing in death and ſeeing corruption (his body being corrupted and conſumed in the Grave) the Apoſtles not deſigning to aſſert or prove more than our Saviour's reſurrection: David (argue they) fell on ſleep, and hath continued till now in that ſtate; David remained unto this day in the Grave, and ſo his body being reduced to duſt, ſaw cor-
Acts 2.29. ruption, ἐτελεύτεσε, ϗ ἐτάφη, ſaith St. Peter: he died and was buried without reverſion; therefore that ſpeech of his in the Pſalm muſt not fully and ultimately be underſtood of him (to whom they did not ſo exactly agree,) but of ſuch an one, who did not abide in that deadly ſleep, whoſe fleſh, by being opportunely raiſed up, did avoid the ſight (or undergoing of) corruption. And whereas 'tis ſaid, thou ſhalt not leave, τὴν ψυχὴν μȣ, my ſoul (or my life) nothing can be thence drawn greatly prejudicial to this Expoſition; for (to omit that bolder Expoſition of Beza, who by the ſoul underſtood the cadaver or dead body, ſometime tranſlating the words, non derelinques cadaver meum in ſepulchro,) nothing is more uſual in the Hebrew than both for the fleſh, and for the ſoul, each of them ſynecdochically to ſignifie the perſon (conſidered as ſometime endued with life,) and in propriety of ſpeech to ſtand for the body, or for the Exod. 31.14. ſoul: Every one that ſinneth ſhall be put to death, and that ſoul ſhall be cut
Lev. 7.25, 27. off, are terms equivalent in the law: the ſoul that eateth, the ſoul that
5.2, &c.
Pſal. 33.19. toucheth, and the like phraſes, often occurr: In fine; to deliver their ſoul
49.15. from death, as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks: God will redeem my ſoul from the power
89.48. of the Grave: What man is he that ſhall not ſee death; that ſhall deliver his ſoul from the hand of the Grave, do ſeem expreſſions parallel to this, Thou ſhalt not leave my ſoul in Hell; which yet ſeem to import no more, than the perſons there ſpoken of reſpectively to be preſerved from death: It is alſo obſervable that St. Paul, in the 13th of the Acts, neglecting the former

mer part, Thou ſhalt not leave my ſoul in Hell, contents himſelf with the latter, Thou wilt not yield thy holy One to ſee corruption, intimating both parts to ſignifie the ſame thing. If it be objected as an inconvenience to this explication of the words here in the Creed, that admitting it, they ſignifie no more, than what was before expreſſed in plain words, dead and buried, and ſo contain only a needleſs repetition. I anſwer, 1. That this objection concerns them, who inſerted the words here, who yet (even ſuppoſing the truth of this Expoſition) might be excuſable, as ſuſpecting it poſſible, that our Saviour's being ἐν ᾅδῃ, according to St. Peter, might imply more than this, although they knew not what diſtinctly; who might alſo perhaps intend ſomewhat by theſe words different from this ſenſe, but not ſo truly applicable to them, or agreeable to the truth of the thing. I anſwer, 2dly. That a greater inconvenience ſeems to ariſe from expounding them otherwiſe; it reflecting upon the more ancient Compilers both of this and moſt other Creeds, who left them out, which they ſhould not have done, if they contain any thing conſiderable and different from what is here otherwiſe expreſſed; whoſe credit is more, I conceive, to be tendred, than that of their juniors and followers; and ſo much the more, for that defect and omiſſion in matters of this kind is leſs tolerable, than any redundance in expreſſion. Which inconvenience may ſeem in a manner to reach higher, even to St. Paul himſelf, who (in the place fore-cited) declaring the ſum of what he both learned and taught concerning our Saviour's laſt grand performances, only mentions his death, burial, and reſurrection: I delivered unto you firſt, that Chriſt died according to the Scriptures, and that he was buried, and that he roſe again the third day; 1 Cor. 15. 4. which enumeration of his, it ſeems, we may well acquieſce in as ſufficient and complete; and may thence with great probability inferr, that no other deſcent of our Saviour into Hell (beſide his death and burial) was by him underſtood or delivered in his catechetical diſcourſes and preachings as a point of faith: So that what is objected as an inconvenience, proves no ſmall advantage to this Expoſition. But I ſay farther, 2dly. To the main queſtion, that interpreting Hell for the manſion or habitation of ſouls, (to omit that Scheol, as I before noted, ſeems to ſignifie otherwiſe in the Old Teſtament, and thence conſequently the places in the Acts, applied out of the Pſalms, not ſo proper to this purpoſe, whereby the main ground and ſupport of the aſſertion it ſelf, taken according to this ſenſe, is removed; waving I ſay that conſideration, and taking ᾅδης according to the meaning, (which we muſt confeſs it ſometime to bear in the New Teſtament, yet) there ſeems to follow ſome inconvenience thereupon; for then we muſt either take it for the place of damned ſpirits ſhut up in torment and deſpair (according to which acception the propoſition it ſelf would be moſt certainly uncertain, as having no good ground for it; and moſt probably falſe, for that it is affirmed our Saviour's ſoul the ſame day he died, did go into paradiſe,) or we muſt take it for a place common to all ſouls, as well good and bleſſed, as bad and miſerable, (for that it comprehends the place of torment, in the New Teſtament ſenſe, is evident by the Parable of Dives forecited.) But I think St. Auguſtine had reaſon to doubt whether it were conſonant to the ſtyle of the New Teſtament, that Hades there ſhould be ever taken in a good or middle ſenſe, at leaſt; whereas 'tis ſaid in the Revelation, that thoſe two inſeparable companions, Death and Hades (that Hades which is there ſaid to render up its dead to judgment) were caſt into the lake of fire; Apoc. 20. 14. 'tis hard to ſuppoſe Paradiſe was caſt in there, yea hard to ſay Hades was caſt in there, ſuppoſing that word did then in its uſual latitude of ſignification (as Chriſtians underſtood it) comprehend Paradiſe. Yea farther, this explication forces us upon this inconvenience, that we muſt ſuppoſe Paradiſe to be ſeated in a place beneath us (or within the earth;) that Paradiſe, 2 Cor. 12. which is either the ſame with the third heavens in St. Paul, or confining thereto; 'tis hard, I ſay, to be forced by an interpretation of theſe words to conſent that Paradiſe (that locus divinæ amœnitatis recipiendis ſanctorum ſpiritibus deſtinatus, the place of divine comfort and amœnity, deſtinated to receive the ſpirits of the Saints) ſhould have its place in the darkſome bowels of the earth, no commodious ſituation, it ſeems, for delightſome walks and bowers; yet ſo muſt it be ſeated, that our Saviour's ſoul may be (at leaſt in rigour and propriety of ſpeech) ſaid to deſcend thereinto; the word deſcend, taking Hell for the ancient Scheol forementioned, is proper enough, and hath ground both in authentick uſe and the nature of the thing; but taking Hell in this ſenſe (for the place of ſouls) is moſt probably improper, and hath no certain ground or authority to commend it: for it is ſaid that our Saviour's ſoul was in Hell, not that it deſcended thither; nor can it by conſequence be inferred ſo to have done, according to this meaning of Hell. However yet I add, 3dly. Seeing it is a moſt certain truth that our Saviour's ſoul did immediately go into the place appointed to receive happy ſouls after their receſſion from the body and reſignation into God's hands, if we take Hell in a general and common ſenſe for the place, or ſtate of ſouls departed; and deſcending, only for paſſing thereinto (by a falling as it were from life; or together with the deſcent of the body, and thence ſtyled deſcending; what appears viſibly happening to the body being attributed to the ſoul:) If, I ſay, we thus interpret our Saviour's deſcent into Hell for his ſouls going into the common receptacle and manſion of ſouls, we ſhall be ſure not ſubſtantially to miſtake: And this ſenſe, I muſt confeſs, if the words can handſomely bear them, would be very proper to this place, as ſignifying ſomewhat diſtinct from what is otherwiſe expreſſed, and ſerving to the farther confirmation of thoſe great Articles adjoining, our Saviour's Ἀδύνατος ᾅδης. death and reſurrection: it implying the perfect and utmoſt accompliſh- Sap. 17. 14. ment of death to have deſerted the body, and to have been tranſlated into thoſe inviſible regions, ſo diſtant hence, and whence——revocare gradum ſuperáſque evadere ad auras, is a labour indeed, and a work not to be effected but by the moſt miraculous power of him, whoſe privilege it is--- 1 Sam. 2. 6. to kill and make alive, to bring down to Hell and bring up; to lead unto the Sap. 16. 13. Tobit. 13. 2. gates of Hell, and bring back again.

Deut. 32. 39. This is all that I ſhall ſay about this point; for I will not be at the trouble to conſider or examine thoſe conceits, which pretend to acquaint us why and to what effect our Saviour deſcended into Hell: That he went thither to preach unto, convert and redeem all or ſome of the damned ſouls from thence, (for ſome ſay that he emptied, and quite depopulated that region of darkneſs; others are not ſo liberal as to free all thence, but ſome only, the fitter objects of compaſſion and favour; (both ſaying that which hath very weak, or no reaſons to maintain it, very ſtrong and plain objections to aſſail it;) that he went to free, and uſher into glory the ſouls of the Patriarchs and other good people from that infernal limbus, in which they ſuppoſe them to have been till then detained, (a place by no likely means to be proved exiſtent other-where than in the fancy of the inventours thereof) that he went to affront, triumph over, and terrifie the powers of darkneſs upon their own ground, in their own dominions: theſe and the like conceits ſeem ſufficiently diſcountenanced and confuted by ſaying the Scripture nowhere plainly declares any ſuch thing; and conſequently that they have no good ground to inſiſt on; they pretend only one or two difficult and obſcure places, which may be many ways otherwiſe expounded, ſo as not ſo much as to favour them;) whereas in teaching us that our Saviour preached upon earth ſalvation to them which in this life ſhould be converted to believe upon him and obey his laws; damnation irrecoverable to them which ſhould perſiſt in infidelity and diſobedience; that he merited by his obedience, and purchaſed by his bloud both a redemption from future diſtreſs, and a tranſlation into bliſs and glory, that he vanquiſhed and triumphed over the powers of Hell upon the Croſs, in theſe things the Scripture is clear and copious; but concerning that pretended preaching unto, converſion and deliverance of ſouls beneath; or that tranſlation of ſouls out of any ſubterraneous cloſets, or Bellarm. priſons, ſo they do not ſcruple to call them; or that local triumph in the Devil's Kingdom, it is quite ſilent, or very dark in expreſſion; and therefore we may be ſomewhat backward in aſſenting to ſuch conceits; which whoever firſt deviſed, we may ſuſpect they did ἐμβατεύειν ἃ μὴ Coloſſ. 2. 18. ἑωράκεσαν, invade things unſeen by themſelves, and in very deed inviſible to any. But let it ſuffice to have diſcourſed thus much about this endleſs queſtion.

The third day he roſe again from the dead.

THis Article is one of the principal Articles in its nature, its deſign, its conſequence; the faith of which was intended as a means to produce faith in the reſt; removing the doubts and difficulties that might obſtruct it; for by our Saviour's reſurrection, the truth of all his pretences concerning his Perſon, his Office, his Doctrine were to the higheſt degree of ſatisfaction, and conviction aſſured; no miracle could be greater in its ſelf, (more ſignifying the Power of God therein employed;) none more proper for production and confirmation of the faith required of us, concerning the dignity of his perſon, the efficacy of his performances, the validity of his promiſes, the reality of his doctrine in relation to the future ſtate. God (as St. Paul tells us, Acts 17. 31.) did πίστιν παρέχειν πᾶσιν, afford to all a moſt perſuaſive and convincing argument of all truth concerning our Saviour, raiſing him from the dead.

1. If the meanneſs of his birth and parentage; the low garb and ſmall luſtre of his life; the bitter ſorrows and ſhamefull diſgraces of his death, though accompanied with ſuch excellent qualities, and ſuch wonderfull performances, as did appear in and were done by him, might (eſpecially in thoſe that ſtand at diſtance) breed any ſuſpicion (as indeed they have afforded matter of argument to the adverſaries of Chriſtianity againſt it) concerning our Saviour, whether he were indeed (as he pretended) the Son of God, (ſo near in nature, in favour, in affection to God) deſigned by him to be the Saviour of mankind, the Lord of all things, the Judge of the World: If, I ſay, ſuch homely circumſtances, that attended his Perſon, ſuch ſad accidents, that befell him, may in the eyes of thoſe, Vid. Rom. 1. 4. who caſt only ſuperficial glances on the thing, and look not beyond outward appearances, beget doubtfull apprehenſions concerning our Saviour's Perſon, or ſomewhat depreſs him in their conceit; the wonderfull power, and ſpecial favour of God toward him demonſtrated in his reſurrection, will diſcuſs thoſe miſts, and raiſe him in their eſteem: For though (as 2 Cor. 13. 4. St. Paul ſpeaks) he was crucified out of weakneſs, (that is therein the infirmity of our nature being diſcovered,) yet he liveth by the power of God; by his recovering life, his divine power is declared; it was an ὑπερβάλλον

Eph. 1. 19. λον μέγεθος τῆς δυνάμεως, an exceſſive greatneſs of power, which God exerted, an ἐνέργεια τοῦ κράτους τῆς ἰσχύος, an activity of the might of ſtrength (or of moſt mighty ſtrength) which he ſet on work in the raiſing of Chriſt from the dead, (ſo the Apoſtle labours to expreſs the unexpreſſible Lib. II. cap. 7. eminency of this miracle.) [Pliny, I remember, among inſtances of things, which were impoſſible even to God himſelf, reckons theſe two, Mortales æternitate donare, & revocare defunctos, (to beſtow Eternity upon mortals, and to recall the dead to life;) both which ſuppoſitions we ſee by our Saviour's reſurrection clearly confuted, yet ſo as the making them argues how high and hard a work in humane conceit it was to effect it:]
Indeed, St. Paul ſeems to ſuppoſe otherwiſe; when he thus puts the queſtion:
Act. 26. 8. What; doth it ſeem incredible to you, that God ſhould raiſe the dead? But there is an emphaſis in the words παρ' ὑμῖν, with you; with you, whoſe minds were prepoſſeſſed with notions favourable to this doctrine; who had ſo many inſtances thereof; who had been inſtructed to hope future rewards from God: And as it was an inſtance of God's mighty power, ſo was it no leſs a mark of his ſpecial favour toward our Saviour: as to take away life ſignifies extremity of diſpleaſure, ſo to reſtore it implies the higheſt degree of favour: Death in it ſelf imports a total incapacity and deprivation of good, and is uſed to expreſs the worſt ſtate of being, or utmoſt miſery, conſequent upon man's diſobedience and God's diſpleaſure: and life, as it is really in its own nature the foundation of perceiving good, ſo it repreſents and expreſſes all the happineſs of which we are capable, all the reward promiſed to obedience:
Wherefore God raiſing our Saviour to life; declared thereby his eſpecial love and favour to him; his full approbation and acceptance of him: if yielding him to death might ſeem to argue God's diſpleaſure toward, or diſregard of him; raiſing him to life doth much more demonſtrate a tender affection, an extraordinary care for and reſpect to him; that might be ſuppoſed to proceed upon other grounds, this can receive no other interpretation. To give life is the ground of that relation, which is the Act. 13. 33. higheſt in nature, and ſpeaks moſt affection; wherefore in Scripture-language to raiſe up is termed to beget, and this regeneration is put for the reſurrection; and our Saviour in the myſtical ſpeech of the Pſalmiſt, expounded by St. Paul, is ſaid that day to be begot, when he was raiſed by God; ſo that it being a paternal act, doth ſignifie a paternal regard: whence St. Paul farther ſaith our Saviour was declared (or rather determined Rom. 1. 4. and defined) to be the Son of God by the reſurrection from the dead:
this act of God raiſing him, not only ſhewing him to be, but in ſome ſort conſtituting him the Son of God.

2. Thus doth our Saviour's reſurrection aptly ſerve to dignifie and exalt his Perſon in our eſteem; it alſo may confirm our faith in the efficacy of his performances for us; we need not doubt, conſidering this of the pardon of our ſins, the acceptance of our perſons, the ſanctification of our hearts, the ſalvation of our ſouls, (we, which is always to be ſuppoſed and underſtood, performing the conditions required of us;) I ſay Rom. 4. 24, 25. the pardon of our ſins, and acceptance of our perſons; for, as he was delivered for our offences, ſo he was raiſed again for our juſtification; that is, we are thereby aſſured of our acquittance from ſin, and reſtitution to God's favour; and perhaps ſomewhat more; our pardon and acceptance ſeems not only declared, but alſo conſigned and delivered up unto us by our Saviour's reſurrection; as we were puniſhed in his ſuffering, ſo in his reſurrection we were reſtored; Chriſt merited our juſtification by his paſſion, but God gave it us in his reſurrection; being that formal act of grace

grace whereby he was (after having undergone the effects of divine diſpleaſure) apparently re-inſtated in God's favour, and we virtually in him: Who then ſhall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect? It is God that Ro. 8. 33, 34. juſtifieth, who is he that condemneth? It is Chriſt that died, yea rather that is riſen again: Since God hath acknowledged ſatisfaction done to his juſtice by diſcharging our Surety from priſon and all farther proſecution; ſince he hath in a manner ſo notorious and ſignal demonſtrated his favour to our proxy, there can be no farther pretence againſt us, no fear of any diſpleaſure remaining: In our baptiſm was repreſented as the burial of Chriſt (we being there in ſhew, and myſtery buried with him) ſo his reſurrection alſo, in vertue of which we then received the benefits correſponding to that repreſentation: Being buried with Chriſt in baptiſm Col. 2. 13, 14. (ſaith St. Paul) in him alſo we were raiſed again----and us being dead in treſ- Eph. 2. 5, 6. paſſes, and the circumciſion of our fleſh he quickned together with him, forgiving us all our ſins: and συνζωοποίησε, συνήγειρε, συνεκάθισε, He co-quickned, co-raiſed, and co-ſeated us (if I may ſo ſpeak) with him in heavenly places.

3. We may alſo hence with good reaſon hope for aid ſufficient to ſanctifie our hearts and lives: that he which raiſed our Saviour from a na- Rom. 6. 4. tural death, both can and will raiſe us from ſpiritual death, from that Eph. 2. 2, &c. mortal ſlumber in ſins and treſpaſſes, in which we lie buried naturally, Col. 2. 13, 14. to walk in that newneſs of life, and heavenly converſation, to which the Goſpel calls us, and the divine Spirit excites us; which is that firſt Rev. 20. 6. reſurrection, which bleſſed and holy is he that hath a part in; on ſuch the ſecond death ſhall have no power; for alſo conſequently our Saviour's reſurrection aſſures to us the ſalvation of our ſouls; for by it (as St. Peter 1 Pet. 3, 4. tells us) God the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt hath regenerated us unto a lively hope of an inheritance uncorruptible and undefiled, reſerved for us in the heavens: and, if when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God Rom. 1. 10. by the death of his Son; much more being reconciled, we ſhall be ſaved by his life: Thus may our Saviour's reſurrection confirm our faith concerning the efficacy of his performances for us.

4. It was alſo a moſt ſtrong and proper argument to demonſtrate the validity of his promiſes, and the truth of his doctrine concerning the future ſtate; (a matter moſt important, and a fundamental ingredient of all Religion;) an argument moſt ſtrong, I ſay, as demonſtrating by palpable inſtance the poſſibility of what he promiſed and taught, exemplifying in himſelf, what he bad others to expect, that by divine power they ſhould be raiſed to life: by his doctrine he brought life and immortality to 2 Tim. 1. 10. light, (a point ſo much doubted and diſputed of before; ſo little ſeen in the darkneſs of natural reaſon, ſo clouded in the uncertainties of common tradition) but by his reſurrection he proved that light to be true and certain: He thereby (as St. Paul expreſſes it, Acts 26. 23. by the reſurrection from the dead did moſt effectually, φῶς καταγγέλλειν, denounce and declare light to the people, and to the nations (to all men, both Jews and Gentiles.) Infinitely weak and unſatisfactory are all the arguments, which the ſubtleſt ſpeculation could ever produce to aſſert the diſtinction from the body, the ſeparate exiſtence, the continuance of man's ſoul after death; the providence and juſtice of God over men here; the diſpenſations of reward and puniſhment hereafter (thoſe great incentives to vertue, and diſcouragements from vice) in compariſon of this one ſenſible experience, atteſting to and confirming that doctrine, which contains thoſe great things; and for the ſame reaſon a moſt proper argument; for though any Vid. 1 Pet. 1. miracle (plainly and convincingly ſo) may ſuffice to confirm any point 3, 4.

of doctrine; yet a miracle in the ſame kind, about the ſame matter, is more immediately pertinent and efficacious to that purpoſe. By curing the ſick, our Saviour proved that he could remit ſins; and that he was Lord of the Sabbath; having authority to diſpenſe with the rigorous obſervation of poſitive laws; and in like manner all the miracles he did were in their nature apt to prove the truth of whatever he taught: Theſe were
Joh. 20. 31. writ, ſaith St. John, that ye might believe that Jeſus is the Chriſt, the Son of God; yet ſo as to beget perſuaſion by diſcourſe interceding, and by vertue of a parity in reaſon; but our Saviour's reſurrection did prove the poſſibility of ours (with all that coheres or is conſequent thereto) directly and immediately, with all evidence poſſible to ſenſe it ſelf: We cannot (conſidering this) have any pretence to doubt of what he and his Apoſtles Apoc. 1. 5. have taught us, that he preceding as the firſt-born from the dead, as the Coloſſ. 1. 18. firſt-fruits of them that ſleep, as the Captain of life, as our fore-runner and 1 Cor. 15. 20. pattern, we ἐν ἰδίῳ τάγματι, in our due rank and ſeaſon, as younger ſons
Act. 3. 15. 5. 31. of the reſurrection, as ſerving under his command and conduct, in re-
Heb. 6. 20. ſemblance and imitation of him ſhall follow: So that, if the ſpirit of
Luk. 20. 36. Rom. 8. 11. him, who raiſed up Jeſus from the dead, doth dwell in us, he that raiſed up
Jeſus from the dead ſhall alſo quicken our mortal bodies by his ſpirit that
Rom. 6. 5. dwelleth in us; that if we have been planted together with him in the like-
1 Cor. 15. 22. neſs of his death, we ſhall be alſo (planted) in the likeneſs of his reſurre-
49. ction: That as in Adam we died, ſo in Chriſt we ſhall revive; as we have
1 Cor. 6. 14. born the image of the earthly man, we ſhall alſo bear the image of the hea-
2 Cor. 4. 14. venly: That he who raiſed our Lord, ſhall raiſe us, by his power; knowing that he who raiſed the Lord Jeſus, ſhall alſo raiſe us by Jeſus. Thus is the
Vid. 1 Theſſ. 4. reſurrection of our Saviour able and apt to beget and eſtabliſh our faith
14. concerning his perſon, his performances, and his doctrine; and it being in ſuch manner conducible to ſo high purpoſes, it was requiſite it ſelf ſhould be declared with moſt clear and full evidence; and that it ſhould be ſo, God did abundantly provide. I omit the types and myſtical re-preſentations which did fore-ſhadow it; and the prophetical paſſages expreſſing or alluding to it; (having incidently upon other occaſions bordering on this point, formerly to touched upon the principal of them;)
and only ſay, that no matter of fact is capable of ſurer atteſtation than Vid. Act. 17. 3. God did order this to have. He did προχειροτονεῖν (pre-deſign, with an Luk. 24. 46. eſpecial care pick out and appoint) witneſſes for this purpoſe; perſons Act. 10. 41. in all reſpects, for their number, for their qualifications, for their circumſtances moſt conſiderable and credible: not one or two, but very 1 Cor. 15. 6. many (five hundred, St. Paul tells us, ſaw him at once) not ſtrangers, but Joh. 15. 27. perſons moſt familiarly acquainted with him (who were with him from the Act. 1. 21, 22. beginning, who went out and in with him for three years ſpace, from his baptiſm to his aſcenſion) not upon relation, or at a diſtance, but by im-Act. 10. 41. mediate ſenſe, and converſe with him, (who did, as St. Peter, one of them tells us, eat and drink with him after that he riſe from the dead) not from a ſingle, tranſient experience, but by frequent converſation for a good Act. 13. 31. continuance of time; ἐπὶ πλείους ἡμέρας, for many days together, (To whom, Acts 1. 3. ſaith St. Luke, he preſented himſelf living after he had ſuffered, by many certain tokens, being ſeen of them forty days, and ſpeaking of the things con- cerning the Kingdom of God,) perſons of unqueſtionable diſcretion and honeſty; who preached ſincerity to others (with effectual perſuaſion) and in other things irreprovably practiſed it: who could have no imaginable deſign in teſtifying it, beſide the diſcharge of their conſcience in God's ſight; as encountring thereby the moſt terrible oppoſitions and difficulties; incurring moſt certain and moſt grievous dangers, troubles and ſufferings;

ferings; without any poſſible benefit (of worldly profit, honour or pleaſure) accruing thence to themſelves; without any comfort or ſupport, except the reward they might hope for from God for the performance of ſo difficult and troubleſome a duty: in fine, by perſons, whoſe teſtimony God himſelf ratified by extraordinary graces (invincible courage, conſtancy, patience, ſelf-denial, meekneſs and charity) conferred on them; by miraculous works openly and frequently performed by them; ſo that they did effectually with great power yield their teſtimony concerning the reſurrection of the Lord Jeſus, and great grace was upon them, (great appearance of the divine favour toward them, of divine goodneſs in them) as we have it, Act. 4. 33. It was the principal part of their office (of the higheſt Apoſtolical office) to teſtifie this truth; as we ſee in the choice of Matthias, where 'tis ſaid; Wherefore of theſe men, which have companied with us all the time, that the Lord Jeſus went in and out among us, muſt one be ordained to be a witneſs with us of his reſurrection. Acts 1. 21, 22. And beyond the providing witneſſes ſo qualified, teſtimonies ſo credible, what could God himſelf do neceſſary to convince men endued with any competency of reaſon and ingenuity, or to diſtinguiſh them from men of contrary diſpoſition (unreaſonably and unworthily incredulous;) what means, I ſay, could farther be required to beget and confirm our faith in the matter of our Saviour's reſurrection, and conſequently of all doctrines taught by him and his diſciples, which by this moſt ſignal miracle are ſo perfectly aſſerted and proved?

Now the great end and uſe of our Saviour's reſurrection being thus declared, I ſhall not inſiſt upon explaining the nature thereof (it being clear that his death conſiſting in the ſeparation of ſoul and body, each departing to its place, his reſurrection, oppoſed thereto and reſtoring him into the ſame ſtate, muſt conſiſt in reſuſcitating, reducing, and reuniting them together, ſo as to recover all vital faculties, and exerciſe vital operations,) nor in conſidering the cauſes efficient thereof, (which it is certain could be no other than that divinity common to the three Perſons individed in nature, power and operation; whence it is attributed as moſt commonly to God, ſo peculiarly ſometimes to the glory and power of the Father, Rom. 6. 4. who in order of nature and in all common operations doth precede; ſometimes to the Son, who laid down his life, and took it up again, Joh. 2. 19. 10. 17, 18. who demoliſhed the temple of his own body and reared it up again; Rom. 1. 4. ſometimes to the Holy Ghoſt, Rom. 8. 11. by which as he did caſt out devils, and performed other his great works, Matt. 12. 28. ſo he did this grand miracle; which dwelling in him, did quicken his mortal body, as is intimated and by conſequence ariſes from the place fore-cited, Rom. 8. 11. Upon theſe things, as alſo upon the manner and circumſtances of our Saviour's reſurrection I ſhall not inſiſt, having not leiſure ſufficient to conſider and proſecute all, but only to touch thoſe things, which ſeem moſt material and uſefull.

Yet muſt I not altogether paſs over the circumſtance of time (becauſe mentioned here) Upon the third day. This is added, as it is commonly in Scripture when mention is made of our Saviour's reſurrection, according to the common manner of ſpeech, in which when we relate any ſtory or matter of fact, we are wont to adjoin the circumſtances (of time moſt commonly, many times of place, and ſometimes of other reſpects and adjuncts) as ſigns and arguments of the things certainly, and our aſſurance in affirming it: Fictions uſually go naked of circumſtances, nor can the relatours of them tell when or where, or how the matter of them did exiſt; Act. 10. 40. 1 Cor. 15. 4. but when we are punctual in circumſtance, it ſignifies we are ſerious and confident, and grounded in the thing it ſelf. As for this circumſtance it ſelf, that which is moſt remarkable therein ſeems to be the wiſdom of God chooſing a convenient diſtance of time, after our Saviour's death, for his reſurrection; He ſtayed ſo long, that it might be thoroughly certain our Saviour was really dead, beyond all poſſibility of recovery by natural means; (all natural heat being neceſſarily extinguiſhed by that durance in the grave, although he had been taken down with ſome undiſcernible remainders thereof from the Croſs;) He deferred it no longer, both becauſe there was no reaſon for doing ſo, and becauſe it was fit, that while men's memories were freſh, their paſſions warm, their fancies buſie, their mouths open in diſcourſe concerning his death; while the deſigned witneſſes were preſent, (both enemies watching, and friends attending the event;) it was, I ſay, then moſt fitting that our Saviour ſhould ariſe: As for the meaning of the word third (whether it be to be taken incluſively in reſpect to the day of our Saviour's paſſion, or ſo as to exclude it) with the reconciling of ſome Scriptures ſeeming diſſonant in the point, I referr you for ſatisfaction to Commentators upon the Goſpel; the queſtion not belonging to the ſubſtance of our faith, nor having any very conſiderable influence (that I ſee) upon practice. I proceed therefore.

He aſcended into Heaven; and ſitteth at the right hand of God, the Father Almighty.

AFter our Lord had (after his reſurrection) conſummated what was requiſite to be done by him upon earth for the confirmation of our Faith and conſtitution of his Church; having a competent time converſed with his diſciples, (eſtabliſhing their faith, enlightning their minds in the knowledge of truth and underſtanding of the Scriptures, enflaming their affections, comforting their hearts againſt enſuing tribulations, all oppoſitions of earth, and hell, for his ſake; directing and preſcribing to them how they ſhould proceed in their inſtructing, converting, and reconciling the World to the faith and obedience of his law; furniſhing them with commiſſion and authority to teſtifie his truth, to diſpenſe the tenders of grace and pardon procured by him, to collect and build up that Church, which he had purchaſed by his bloud, laſtly imparting his effectual benediction to them; having, I ſay, done theſe things (which St. Luke expreſſes altogether by the words ἐντειλάμενος αὐτοῖς, that is, having given all neceſſary inſtructions, and laid fitting commands upon them,) he was in their preſence taken, carried up, ἀνελήφθη, ἀνεφέρετο) and aſcended into heaven; he, that is, he according to his humanity, his body and ſoul were by the divine power tranſlated into heaven: into heaven, what is meant by that (in the utmoſt extent, according to the truth of the thing) appears by other phraſes equivalent, by which this action is expreſſed: Aſcending to the father, that is, to the place of God's more eſpecial preſence and reſidence; where ἐμφανίζεται τῷ προσώπῳ τοῦ Θεοῦ, he appears to the face of God; being exalted to the right hand of God, (that is, to the place of higheſt eminency, and of greateſt proximity to God) entring εἰς τὰ ἅγια (into thoſe moſt holy places, that ἐσώτερον τοῦ καταπετάσματος, thoſe intimate receſſes of inacceſſible, and incommunicable glory) being aſſumed and entring into glory; paſſing through the heavens (that is, all places above, inferiour to the higheſt pitch of glory) aſcending ὑπεράνω πάντων τῶν οὐρανῶν, above, beyond all heavens; becoming ὑψηλότερος τῶν οὐρανῶν (more ſublime than, advanced above the heavens)

Vid. Luk. & Joh. ult.
Act. 1. 2.
Act. 1. 2.
Luk. 24. 51.
πορευθεὶς εἰς οὐρανόν.
1 Pet. 3. 22.
Joh. 13. 1.
20. 17.
Phil. 2. 9.
Eph. 1. 20.
Heb. 9. 24.
Act. 2. 33.
5. 31.
6. 19.
Heb. 9. 12.
1 Tim. 3. 16.
Luk. 24. 26.
Heb. 4. 14.
Eph. 4. 10.
Heb. 7. 26.

heavens) by which appears that the utmoſt term of our Saviour's aſcent was that place of all in ſituation moſt high, in quality moſt holy, in dignity moſt excellent, in glory moſt auguſt; the inmoſt ſanctuary of God's temple above, not made with hands; the moſt ſpecial preſence-chamber in thoſe heavenly courts. Thither did our Saviour aſcend; and there (as it follows here) he ſitteth at God's right hand, for the ends and uſes of theſe two, (one whereof is only the way or tendency unto the other) conſpiring or being co incident, (I ſhall join the conſideration of them together) the meaning of which words it is not hard to find out, it being obvious that the ſtate of things above is in Scripture repreſented to us by that ſimilitude, which is apt moſt to beget in us reverence towards God, (and which really doth moſt reſemble it) the ſtate of a King here, ſitting upon his throne; perſonages of higheſt rank and reſpect; his neareſt relations; his moſt beloved favourites; the chief miniſters and officers of his Crown attending upon Him, and ſurrounding his Throne; ſo yet, that for diſtinction ſome place (more eminent and honourable than the reſt) is aſſigned to him, toward whom the King intends to declare eſpecial regard and favour; which place (by cuſtom grounded upon reaſons plain enough, the opportunity of nearneſs for all kind of converſation and addreſs; and the right hands advantage for ſtrength and activity, acquired by uſe, and conſequently alſo its aptitude to give or take) hath been determined to be the next place at the right hand; as we ſee for inſtance, when Bathſheba came to Solomon, 'tis ſaid --The King ſate down on his Throne, and cauſed a ſeat to be ſet for the King's mother, and ſhe ſate on his right hand:) Thus our Saviour being raiſed by God to the ſupreme pitch of honour, of power, of favour with him, having advanced him to be a Prince and a Saviour, to give repentance to Iſrael, and remiſſion of ſins; having ſuper-exalted him, and beſtowed on him a name above all names, to which all knees in heaven, in earth, under the earth muſt bow; having ſeated him in heavenly places, above all principality, and authority, and power, and dominion, and name (or title) that is named both in the preſent world and that which is to come; Having committed to him all authority in heaven and upon the earth; given all things into his hands; Having made him heir of all things; ſubjected all things under his feet, (angels, authorities, and powers) crowned him with (ſovereign) glory and honour; Having given him (what that innumerable hoſt of heaven in the Revelation acknowledges him worthy of (5. 12.) power, and riches, and wiſdom, and ſtrength, and honour, and glory, and bleſſing, (that is, all good and excellence poſſible in the higheſt degree;) God having, I ſay, conferred theſe pre-eminencies of dignity, power, and favour upon our Saviour, he is ſaid therefore to have ſeated him at his right hand: At the right hand of the power (as it is in the Goſpels, that is, of the Soveraign and Almighty Potentate) at the right hand of the Majeſty on high; and at the right hand of the Throne of God (as it is in the Apoſtle to the Hebrews. So much plainly the whole ſpeech imports, and if there be any peculiar emphaſis deſigned in the word ſitting, beyond that which is ſometimes more ſimply and generally ſaid, being at God's right hand, here may be farther implied the firm poſſeſſion, the durable continuance, the undiſturbed reſt and quiet of this glorious and happy condition, wherein he is enſtated; as alſo it doth augment the main ſenſe, ſitting being the moſt honourable poſture; and therefore ſignifying to the utmoſt that eminency of favour and reſpect he hath in God's ſight; as alſo, it may denote farther the nature and quality of his preferment: his being conſtituted to rule and to judge; and therefore expreſſed as ſitting upon a Throne of Majeſty; upon a Tribunal of Juſtice.

1 King. 2. 19.
Acts 5. 31.
Phil. 2. 9.
Eph. 1. 20.
Matt. 28. 18.
Joh. 3. 35.
13. 3.
17. 2.
Heb. 1. 2.
2. 8, 9.
1 Pet. 3 22.

καθίζειν.
Eph. 1. 20.
Matt. 26. 64.
Mar. 14. 62.
Luk. 22. 69.
Heb. 8. 1.
12. 2.
Rom. 8. 34.
1 Pet. 3. 22.

So much briefly may ſerve for the Explication of theſe two Points: (For as to the words ſubjoined, The Father Almighty, whereof the latter is addititious and not extant in the more ancient Forms of this Creed, having conſidered them before, treating upon the beginning of the Creed, and particularly having there taken the word Almighty in its greateſt latitude, ſo as to include both παντοκράτωρ, and παντοδύναμος, paſſing over the critical diſtinction made between them; I ſhall not repeat any thing concerning them.)

Now as to the Ends of our Saviour's glorious aſcenſion and abode in Heaven, the effects produced thereby, the uſes which the belief and conſideration thereof may conduce to; the ends and effects thereof, I ſay, declared in Scripture, are briefly,

1ſt. That as a Prieſt and Advocate he might there intercede for us; for the pardon of our ſins, for the acceptance of our perſons, for the ſucceſs of our prayers; for the ſupply of our needs, for the collation of all benefits and bleſſings on us; repreſenting his merits, pleading our cauſe, preſenting our ſupplications, and interpoſing his favour and authority in
Heb. 7. 24. our behalf. He ever liveth to make interceſſion for us: He is our High-
8. 1. prieſt, ſitting at the right hand of the Majeſty in the Heavens, there per-
Rom. 8. 34. forming that Office for us: Who ſhall condemn? It is Chriſt who is at the 1 Joh. 2. 2. right hand of God, who alſo intercedeth for us (there.) If any man ſin, we
Act. 5. 31. have an Advocate with the Father, Jeſus Chriſt the righteous: God exalted him as a Prince and a Saviour to give repentance unto Iſrael, and remiſſion of
Heb. 7. 25. ſins. It is by him that we do προσέρχεσθαι τῷ Θεῷ, have our acceſs to God, not only by vertue of his merits, but by his continual act of mediation:
Apoc. 8. 3. it is he, that in the golden Cenſer, at the golden Altar before God, offers up the incenſe of our Prayers, conſecrated and perfumed by his hand.

2dly. He aſcended and reſides in Heaven, that as a King he might govern us, protect us, ſave and deliver us from our enemies; that he might ſubdue and deſtroy his and our enemies; the enemies of his Kingdom and of our Salvation; the world, the fleſh, the devil, ſin, death, and hell; whatever oppoſes his glory, his truth, his ſervice; and conſequently impedes our ſalvation, either by open violence, or fraudulent practice. God
Pſal. 110. 1. did ſay unto him: Sit thou at my right hand, till I have made thine enemies
Act. 2. 34. thy footſtool; and accordingly, He muſt reign until he hath put all his ene-
Heb. 1. 13. mies under his feet: No power ſhall be able to withſtand his will and com-
10. 13.
1 Cor. 15. 25. mand, who ſits at the helm of omnipotent Soveraignty; at thy right hand which governs and orders all things. But having before ſpoken concerning the Royal Office, and Lordſhip of our Saviour, I ſhall add no more to this purpoſe.

Joh. 14. 2. 3dly. Our Saviour tells us himſelf, that he went to heaven to prepare Pſal. 16. 11. a place for us; to prepare manſions of joy and bliſs in God's preſence, where is fulneſs of joy, at his right hand, where are pleaſures for ever-more. He
Heb. 6. 20. is our πρόδρομος, our fore-runner into Heaven, that hath diſpoſed things
Joh. 17. 24. there for our entertainment and reception: It is his will, that where he is, there we ſhould be alſo, that we might contemplate and partake of his glory.

4thly. Our Saviour alſo tells us, that it was neceſſary he ſhould depart
Joh. 16. 7. hence, that he might ſend the divine Spirit, the power from on high, to
Luk. 24. 49. enlighten, ſanctifie, and comfort us: If I go not away (ſaith he) the Paraclete will not come unto you; but if I go, I will ſend him unto you: That is, God in his wiſdom hath appointed (for the exaltation of our Saviour's honour) that ſo incomparably excellent a gift ſhould be the reward of his his obedience; the conſequence of his triumph; the fruit of his interceſſion; an ornament of his royal eſtate; a pledge of his princely munificence: it was reſerved as a moſt royal gift, fit to be given at his Coronation; his being inaugurated and inveſted in Soveraign dignity, power and glory: Whence it is ſaid, The Holy Spirit was not yet, (underſtand, was not yet poured forth and beſtowed in that manner and meaſure, as God did intend to do it hereafter) becauſe Jeſus was not yet glorified: It was from Jeſus, received into glory, that excellent gift was deſigned to come, in God's purpoſe and promiſe. Add hereto conſequently,

Joh. 7. 39.

5thly. That all good gifts and graces beſtowed on the Church in general, and upon every member thereof ſingly, uſefull for the perfecting of the Saints, for the work of the miniſtery, for the edification of Chriſt's body, do proceed hence: To every one of you (ſaith St. Paul) is given grace, according to the meaſure of the gift of Chriſt: Whence he ſaith, (the Pſalmiſt ſaith, prophecying of our Saviour) Having aſcended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men.

Epheſ. 4. 7, 8, &c.
Pſal. 68. 19.

6thly. I might add, that God thus advanced our Saviour to ſo high a dignity, to declare the love he bears to piety, righteouſneſs, and obedience, in ſo highly rewarding and dignifying it: For becauſe he was obedient to the death, therefore did God exalt him for the ſuffering of death, do we ſee Jeſus crowned with glory and honour. The belief therefore and conſideration of theſe truths will ſerve (briefly) to nouriſh and encreaſe our faith; to cheriſh and ſtrengthen our hope; to excite and inflame our devotion; to direct and elevate our affections; to enforce, and engage; to encourage and quicken our obedience.

Phil. 2. 9.
Heb. 2. 9.

To nouriſh, I ſay, and cheriſh our faith and hope: If the reſurrection of our Saviour did beget in us a ſtrong perſuaſion concerning the truth of, and a lively hope of the good proceeding from our Saviour's undertaking and doctrine; his aſcenſion declared by the ſame indubitable teſtimonies and authorities muſt needs nouriſh, augment, and corroborate them. We cannot diſtruſt any promiſes made by him; we cannot deſpair of any good from him (not of relief, ſuccour, ſupply in our ſtreights, or in our needs; of comfort in our afflictions, of protection in our dangers, of deliverance from our miſeries) from him who is aſcended into heaven, and ſitteth at the right hand of the divine power; having all things committed to his authority and diſpoſal. It alſo ſerves to excite and enflame our devotions: for having ſuch a mediatour in heaven, ſo near in God's preſence, ſo much in his favour; ſuch a maſter of requeſts; ſo good a friend at court; ſuch a favourite at hand to preſent up, to commend, to farther our petitions: We may (as the Apoſtle to the Hebrews injoins us) come to the throne of grace with all freedom of ſpeech and boldneſs, that we may receive mercy, and find grace for ſeaſonable aid: We need not doubt of that promiſe being fulfilled: Whatever ye ſhall ask in prayer, believing, ye ſhall receive: And what greater incitement can there be to devotion, than the aſſurance of ſo good acceptance, of ſo happy ſucceſs thereof? The proper influence alſo of theſe conſiderations is to direct and elevate our affections, from theſe inferiour, mean, vain, and baſe things to the things above: Seek the things above (ſaith St. Paul) where Chriſt is ſitting at the right hand of God; where Chriſt our life, our hope, our treaſure, our head is; there ſhould our hearts be, thither ſhould our affections tend; there ſhould our πολίτευμα (our buſineſs and converſation be) where the family is to which we relate, and its Maſter; where the city is, where our final reſt and abode ſhould be (for we are but ſtrangers and pilgrims, and ſojourners here) with its Lord and Governour; where our country is, the place

1 Pet. 1.
Heb. 4. 16.
Matt. 21. 22.
1 Joh. 5. 14.
Col. 3. 1, 4.
Col. 1. 27.
Phil. 3. 20.
Heb. 13. 14.
Heb. 11. 16.

of all our eſtate and concernment, and he reſides which only can make it good to us. It, laſtly, doth engage and encourage us to all kind of obedience; to conſider, that high reward of eternal glory and happineſs, which our Saviour hath obtained as a reward of his obedience, and as a pledge of like reward deſigned to us, if we inſiſt in his footſteps: Let us
Heb. 12. run the race that is ſet before us (ſaith the Apoſtle to the Hebrews) looking to the author and finiſher of our faith, Jeſus, who for the joy ſet before him endured the croſs, deſpiſing the ſhame, and is ſet at the right hand of God:
Luk. 22. 29. I covenant to you (ſaith our Saviour) a Kingdom, as my Father covenanted me a Kingdom; ſuppoſing we obey his commandments, we ſhall obtain a like excellent and happy eſtate: As we ſee God hath performed to him, 2 Tim. 2. 11. ſo will alſo he make good his word to us: The Word (ſaith St. Paul) is
Rom. 8. 17. faithfull and aſſuredly true: If we have died with him (to luſt and ſin) we ſhall alſo live with him (in joy and glory;) if we endure (in obedience and patience) we ſhall alſo reign with him: To which bleſſed Kingdom God in his Mercy bring us all, through the grace, merits, and interceſſion of him, who with God the Father and the Holy Ghoſt liveth and reigneth for ever: To whom be all praiſe and glory for ever. Amen.

From thence he ſhall come to judge the quick, and the dead.

THis is the laſt of thoſe particular characters, whereby the grand object of our faith, Jeſus Chriſt, the Son of God, our Lord and Saviour, is deſcribed, containing a moſt eminent office peculiar to him, implying the manner of executing it, and determining the extent thereof: The belief of which is of principal conſequence, and in a ſpecial manner influential upon practice: Whether we conſider the nature of the office, or the quality of the perſon deſigned thereto: The office, to judge; the perſon, He: Jeſus the Son of God and the Son of Man (he that was born, that died, that performed and ſuffered ſo much for us) he ſhall judge. Shall judge: There is no conſideration, whereof man's mind is capable, more apt to excite men to the performance of duty, to reſtrain them from offending, and to beget in them a care and conſcience of what they do, than this, that, they muſt ſometime hereafter certainly be forced to render an account of their actions; that they muſt undergo a moſt ſtrict and ſevere ſcrutiny; and ſhall be dealt with according to the reſult thereof; ſo as to be approved and rewarded for their good; condemned and puniſhed for their bad lives; a man conſidering and being perſuaded of this, muſt neceſſarily accuſe himſelf of extreme folly and madneſs, if he do not provide for that account, and order his life in reſpect thereto. This perſuaſion, I ſay, is the ſharpeſt ſpurr imaginable to the doing of good, the ſtrongeſt curb from doing ill; that could be deviſed; and therefore all nations in ſome manner have acknowledged it as a fundamental principle of Religion, (men generally with a ready inclination have embraced it as ſo) that after this life men ſhall be brought to a juſt impartial barr, their actions ſcanned exactly, their perſons doomed accordingly to comfort or pain.

And indeed ſetting this apart, all other incentives to vertue, and all avocatives from vice (which common experience or philoſophical ſpeculation do afford us) ſeem very blunt and faint; do promiſe ſmall effect: the native beauty and intrinſick worth of vertue, the conveniences flowing from it, the commendation that attends it, its moſt goodly fruits of health, peace, and tranquillity, comfort and ſatisfaction of mind; (beſide, that they are uſually balanced with contrary inconveniencies, difficulties, croſſes, troubles, and pains) if they do not extend beyond this tranſitory life,how can they in reaſon be very conſiderable and efficacious to engage men to adhere thereto? how can the worſt of preſent evils, accompanying or following vice, its innate deformity and turpitude; the diſtempers, diſturbances, and diſgraces ſpringing from or waiting on it, (which alſo are often tempered with ſome kinds of pleaſure, advantage, and ſatisfaction) if no more hereafter is to be feared, be ſufficient to deterr, or diſcourage men from the purſuit thereof? the danger of death it ſelf (the moſt extreme puniſhment which man can inflict, and which our nature doth moſt abhorr) doth not ſignifie much toward the diverting indigent, or ambitious, or paſſionate men from the moſt deſperately wicked attempts: It is Tully's obſervation, and he inferrs from it the neceſſity of ſuppoſing future puniſhments, in order to men's reſtraint from ſuch actions: Ut aliqua (ſaith he) in vita formido improbis eſſet poſita, apud inferos ejuſmodi quædam illi antiqui ſupplicia impiis conſtituta eſſe voluerunt, quòd videlicet intelligebant his remotis non eſſe mortem ipſam pertimeſcendam: (That in this life there might be ſome fear upon wicked men, thoſe Ancients would have ſome puniſhments appointed below for impious perſons; becauſe forſooth they underſtood, that theſe being ſet apart, death it ſelf was not much to be feared.) Neither is this perſuaſion thus only a ſpecial inſtrument of vertue, but the ſuppoſal thereof is otherwiſe a neceſſary ſupport of all Religion, ſecuring the firſt and main principles thereof, the being of a God, and his providence: the belief of a Deity, according to any tolerable notion thereof; of a providence over humane affairs, ſuch as might engage and encourage to religious performance, cannot ſubſiſt without ſupporting a future judgment: the objections that aſſail both would ſtrike too hard, and pierce too deep, if this ſhield did not receive and repell them. To ſee the moſt innocent and vertuous perſons conflict all their days with croſſes and hardſhips; (and as it ſometimes happeneth) after all to die miſerably, in great pain and ignominy; and again,to obſerve perſons moſt outragious in lewdneſs and injuſtice to flouriſh and rant it out in a long undiſturbed courſe of proſperity, ending their lives fairly and quietly; hath cauſed ſome men to doubt whether, hath induced others flatly to disbelieve, that there is a good, and a juſt Governour of the World; and that not without apparent cauſe, ſuppoſing all accompts to be made up here; no reckoning to remain to be caſt up by divine goodneſs and juſtice hereafter: then would it in ſome ſort ſeem true what he ſaid, θεῶν ὄνειδος τοὺς κακοὺς εὐδαιμονεῖν ('tis a reproach to God that bad men ſhould be ſo happy) then had Diagoras argued probably from an unpuniſhed perjury, that he which ſuffered himſelf and others under his care to be ſo abuſed, did not exiſt, or did not regard what was done: and Dionyſius might have authorized his ſacrilege by his proſperous navigation; and with ſome ſhew might Diogenes ſay, that Harpalus his ſucceſsfull treachery and rapine did teſtimonium contra Deos dicere, yield a ſhrewd teſtimony againſt the Being and Providence of God: But on the contrary, ſuppoſing a judgment to follow, and a proceeding according thereto, all theſe diſcourſes have no force or moment: God's preſent connivence (as it were) or patient indulgence toward bad men, will argue no more than what becomes him, his exceſs of goodneſs in expecting thoſe bad men's return to a better mind; or his wiſe ſeverity in ſuffering them to proceed to an inexcuſable

IV. in Catil.

Dies deficiat, ſi velim numerare quibus bonis malè evenerit, nec minus ſi commemorem, quibus improbis optimè. Cic. de Nat. D. III.

Cic. de Nat. D. III.

Improborum igitur proſperitates, ſecundæque res redarguunt (ut Diogenes dicebat) vim omnem Deorum ac poteſtatem.

ble degree of wickedneſs, to be ſtrictly inquired into and ſeverely puniſhed hereafter; as neither then doth God's permitting good men to ſuffer deeply, here inferr any thing prejudicial to his goodneſs or juſtice; ſince thereby he makes them fitter for, and gives them a ſurer title to that reward, which he intends hereafter, after trial and approbation of their vertue, to conferr upon them. Thus doth this doctrine clear the Providence and eſtabliſh the great Attributes of God; therefore doth Chriſtianity moſt fully and clearly teach, moſt earneſtly and frequently inculcate this point, with all poſſible advantage both for the juſtification of the divine attributes,
Dan. 7. 10. and the excitation of us to a vertuous and pious life. It tells us,
Rev. 20. 12. that all men's actions are regiſtred in books written with greateſt punctuality and exactneſs (the books of divine omniſcience) that all perſons Rom. 14. 10. ſhall be cited, and preſented at the barr (we muſt all, φανερωθῆναι, be made 2 Cor. 5. 10. to appear, παρίστασθαι, be ſet forth at the judgment-ſeat of Chriſt: I ſaw the Rev. 20. 12. dead, great and ſmall, ſtanding before God's throne,) that every thought, every word, every work of man ſhall be diſcloſed and diſcuſſed, with 1 Cor. 4. 5. its due quality and deſert: (God will bring to light the hidden things of Matt. 12. 36. darkneſs, and will make manifeſt the counſels of hearts: Every idle word that men ſhall ſpeak, thereof they ſhall render account at the day of judgment.
Eccleſ. 12. 14. Every work ſhall be brought into judgment, with every ſecret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil;) that according to the quality of their doings thus detected and examined, the merits of each cauſe weighed, every plea heard, every caſe conſidered and tried according to truth. Men ſhall be acquitted and commended; or declared guilty and Vid. 2 Theſſ. condemned; a definitive ſentence paſſing upon every one (ἔπαινος γενήσεται
1. 7, 8, 9. ἑκάστῳ, praiſe, that is, generally a due taxation and eſteem according to deſert) ſhall be made to every one by the righteous Judge. That this ſentence doth include a gracious reward and a juſt puniſhment aſſigned reſpectively; everlaſting glory and joy to them which have done well, endleſs ſhame and ſorrow to them who have done ill; which ſhall be Matt. 16. 27. Rom. 2. 6. infallibly executed: (For, God will render to every man according to his 2 Cor. 5. 10. works---To them who by patient continuance in well-doing, ſeek for glory and honour and immortality eternal life; but unto them that are contentious, and do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteouſneſs, indignation and wrath; tribulation and anguiſh upon every ſoul of man that doeth evil: But---glory, honour, and peace to every man that worketh good---So St. Paul in the 2d.
to the Romans: We muſt all appear before the tribunal of Chriſt, ἵνα κομίσηται ἕκαστος, that every one may bear according to the things done in the body, whether good or evil. That all this ſhall be performed in a moſt Matt. 24, 34, &c. publick and ſolemn manner, in open court, in the face of all the world;
Vid. Matt. 25. 31. before angels and men; to the conviction and ſatisfaction of all; ſo that
Luk. 12. 9. the conſciences of all concerned ſhall be forced to acquieſce in their doom
Rom. 2. 5. as moſt juſt and equal; and all ſhall confeſs and ſay with them in the Rev. 15. 3. Revelation: Salvation, and glory, and honour, and power be to the Lord
16. 7. our God; for true and righteous are his ways: Great and wonderfull are
19. 2. thy works, O Lord God Almighty; righteous and true are thy ways, O thou King of Saints.

Thus (and much more fully than time will permit me to relate) doth our Religion and holy Scripture ſet out that judgment, which all men hereafter muſt undergo, wherein the wonderfull clemency of God ſhall Rom. 2. 5. be demonſtrated, wherein his exact juſtice ſhall be declared, wherein the knotty myſteries of his providence ſhall be unfolded; wherein his honour (that ſeems now to ſuffer ſo much) ſhall be fully repaired and vindicated; wherein all ſcores, that now run on, ſhall be quitted and made even.

Such, I ſay, ſhall the judgment it ſelf be; the conſideration of which, if it make no impreſſion upon our hearts, if it beget no dread within us, if it do not render us ſomewhat wary and watchfull over our doings, what means can be imagined able? what method apt to do it? what a deſperate hardneſs and inſenſibility do we lie under? how deplorably blind and ſtupid are we? More ſtupid than Felix, who hearing St. Paul diſcourſe of Acts 24. 25.
Judgment to come, could not forbear trembling: More blind and ſenſeleſs than thoſe obſtinate ſons of darkneſs, the Devils themſelves, who believe and tremble.

But paſſing the Judgment, let us (which ſhould more ſtill engage us, and may work farther on us to the ſame purpoſe) conſider the Judge:
He ſhall come to judge--He: He that came once in our nature (with wonderfull condeſcenſion of grace and charity) to free us from ſin and miſery:
he that ſuffered ſo deeply for us; he that died to redeem us; he ſhall come to judge. The original and abſolute right, or power of judging Rom. 14. 4. appertains to God; whoſe creatures, whoſe ſubjects, whoſe ſervants we are naturally: As he is the ſoveraign Lord and King, ſo is he the Judge Heb. 12. 23.
of all: As we owe obedience to the laws he hath preſcribed us; performance Gen. 18. 25.
of the ſervice he hath allotted us; improvement of the talents he hath committed to us; ſo we ſtand bound to render account to him of the due performance in thoſe reſpects; and obnoxious to the judgment he ſhall make thereof. All judgment therefore muſt be exerciſed either immediately by God himſelf, or in ſubordination to him, in his name and right, by vertue of authority and power derived from him: And it (for the honour of his Son, for the comfort of us) hath he delegated and committed to Jeſus, our Saviour: Not immediately by himſelf, but by his Son he hath determined to judge the World: The Father judgeth no Joh. 5. 22.
man (ſaith our Saviour himſelf) but hath committed all judgment to the Son: And, God (ſaith St. Paul) hath appointed a day in which he will judge Acts 17. 31.
the World in righteouſneſs by the man, whom he hath ordained: And (ſaith St. Peter) God hath commanded us to preach unto the people, and to teſtifie Acts 10. 42.
that it is he, which was ordained of God to be the judge of quick and dead:
and, it is the judgment-ſeat of Chriſt, before which we muſt all appear: In Rom. 14. 10.
fine, The Father (ſaith our Saviour) hath given to the Son authority, to 2 Cor. 5. 10. execute judgment, for that he is the Son of man; (hath committed to him Joh. 5. 27.
authority regal, and judicial; for that he is that ſon of man, whom God had deſigned to this office, even of old, as we ſee in Daniel VII. 13, 14.
and in Eſay IX. 6, 7.)

It is plain then that our Saviour is by deſignment and deputation from Joh. 5. 23.
God inveſted with this great office and power; and why God ſo appointed him many reaſons may be aſſigned; upon many accounts our Saviour's perſon may appear moſt fit for this grand employment. How could God more plainly ſhew his goodneſs in this matter, than by conſtituting ſuch a Judge? Seeing that Judgment ſhould paſs upon us, it was neceſſary and requiſite; how could the terrour and ſeverity thereof be better tempered, than by putting the execution thereof into ſuch hands? Whom, were the choice permitted to us, ſhould we rather ſubmit to, than to him, who is by nature our brother; who in diſpoſition is meek and lowly; compaſſionate and mercifull; who by ſo many ſignal experiments hath expreſſed ſuch an exceſs of kindneſs and charity toward us? who hath ſo conſpicuouſly evidenced himſelf to be the beſt friend of mankind; that he ardently deſires the ſalvation of all men, even of his worſt enemies, whom he ſpent his bloud for, whom he prayed for dying, whom he continually invites to reconciliation and repentance? How alſo could God better

better declare his juſtice, than in exalting him to this pitch, who out of obedience and complyance with his will deſcended ſo low, and underwent ſo much? Who better deſerved a Crown; who more righteouſly would manage a Scepter, than he who willingly bore a Croſs; who patiently ſubmitted to a ſcourge? It was alſo equal and fit, that he who was unworthily rejected and deſpiſed; cruelly abuſed and perſecuted; unjuſtly accuſed, condemned and ſlaughtered by men, ſhould be requited with power to right himſelf upon them; to reprobate them worthily who had unworthily rejected him; to judge them juſtly, who had wickedly condemned him; to puniſh them ſeverely, who had unmercifully afflicted him; that he ſhould ſee his proud and ſpitefull enemies lying under his feet, at his diſcretion.

Add hereto the wiſdom of God in deſigning him to be judge, whom they who were to be judged might ſee and hear, and converſe with; whom the godly with cheerfull ſatisfaction and comfort, the wicked with befitting terrour and aſtoniſhment might behold; they with unexpreſſible joy hear him commending, acquitting and bleſſing them, thoſe with diſmal amazement and regret hear him pronouncing the fatal ſentence and curſe upon them; they with humble thankfulneſs acknowledge his grace, thoſe with confuſion confeſs their guilt: Behold (ſaith St. John in the Revelation (I. 7.) he cometh with clouds, and every eye ſhall ſee him, even they who did pierce him. The dreadfull preſence of God were neither diſcernible, nor ſupportable by guilty men; who may ſtand in his ſight, when once he is angry?

Jer. 10. 10. Pſal. 76. 7. Pſal. 130. 3.

1. Who could endure to hear that voice at which the earth melteth; that reproof, at which the pillars of heaven tremble; that majeſty, in preſence whereof the pureſt Seraphims are conſtrained to hide their faces, how ſhould impure men abide that face which no man can behold and live? but the milder, though glorious and bright aſpect of the Son of man, all men in ſome manner may be capable to ſee: and if we believe St. Auſtin, Rectum erat ut judicandi viderent judicem: It was fit that they who were to be judged ſhould ſee their Judge.

So much reaſon there was (and more queſtionleſs, beyond what we can know or comprehend) that our Saviour Jeſus ſhould be deſigned and deputed to this office; in it we may admire the wiſdom and adore the juſtice of God; for it we may applaud his goodneſs and clemency.

We may alſo (that this doctrine may have the greater impreſſion upon our hearts and influence upon our practice) farther conſider how great an aggravation it will ſeem to our whether fooliſh perverſeneſs, or ſlothful negligence, what extreme diſingenuity, how wretched ingratitude it will argue in us to be caſt and condemned by ſuch a Judge: a Judge ſo juſt and equal; ſo mild and gentle; ſo benign and favourable to us? With what face we having tranſgreſſed his moſt good and righteous laws; having violated our manifold obligations and engagements toward him; having abuſed his ſo great love and good-will toward us; having rejected his gracious tenders of mercy and favour; defeated his moſt ſerious purpoſes, fruſtrated his moſt earneſt endeavours for our good; having ſo forfeited all his favour, and incurred his moſt grievous diſpleaſure, ſhall appear in his preſence? how ſhall we bear the frowns of ſo dear love changed into fierce diſdain? of higheſt patience turned into extreme fury? of ſo great majeſty provoked by ſuch affronts? with what heart ſhall we be able to hear that voice, which did once ſo ſweetly and affectionately ſound words of peace and comfort in our ears, that ſo kindly invited us to peace, ſo meekly entreated us to complyance, now uttering only bitter complaints and rebukes, thundring forth words of indignation and terrour : denouncing horrible threats and curſes upon us ? But let this ſuffice for the nature of the office and act of judging ; and for the perſon exerciſing it : Here is farther implyed,

2. The manner of its exerciſe, or execution; or rather the manner of his addreſs and proceeding thereto ; (From thence he ſhall come.) The which we have in Scripture (for begetting anſwerable veneration , regard and awe within us) deſcribed to be with greateſt ſolemnity, glory, and magnificence; He came once in a meek humility to teach us our duty, but he ſhall come again with a terrible majeſty to exact an account Acts 3. 21.
thereof; taking his progreſs from the higheſt heavens, in a moſt 1 Theſſ. 4. 16. 1. 7.
royal ſtate, attended upon with a numerous, or rather an innumerable, πάντες οἱ ἅγιοι ἄγγελοι, all his holy Angels, it is Matt. XXV. v. 31. When the ſon of man ſhall come in his glory, and all his holy Angels with him ; that is, an innumerable company (as we read it Heb. 12. 22.) an innumerable numerous and pompous train of glorious Angels, accompanied with triumphant ſhouts and acclamations; a trumpet (blown by the mouth of an Arch-angel) ſounding before him an univerſal ſummons, with a noiſe ſo loud and piercing, as ſhall immediately, and with the twinkling of an 1 Cor. 15. 52.
eye, ſhake all the earth, and rouſe the dead out of their mortal ſlumber.
This ſame Jeſus (ſaid the Angels to the Apoſtles, expreſſing the thing in Act. 1. 11.
a more plain and ſimple manner) which is taken up from you into heaven, Vid. 2 Theſſ. 2. 7, 9. ſhall ſo come in like manner as ye have ſeen him go into heaven ; (a cloud took him up from their eyes; the clouds ſhould reſtore him to ſight : Rev. 1. 7.
For behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye ſhall ſee him, ſaith St. John ;) Matt. 24. 30.
and, They ſhall ſee the ſon of man (himſelf tells us) coming upon the clouds 26. 64.
of heaven, with power and great glory. And, The Lord himſelf (ſaith 1 Theſſ. 4. 16.
St. Paul) ſhall deſcend from heaven, ἐν κελεύσματι (with a ſhout, with an exciting ſummons) with the voice of an Arch-angel, with the trump of God---
The ſon of man ſhall come in the glory of his father with his Angels; and then Matt. 16. 27.
ſhall he render to every man according to his practice. When the ſon of man 1 Theſſ. 1. 7.
ſhall be revealed from heaven with his mighty Angels.

So the Scriptures (to the purpoſe fore-mentioned, to beget reſpect and dread in us) declare that our Saviour ſhall come at the end of the World, at the day of Judgment, and how.

Here is farther determined the extent of this Judgment : He ſhall come to judge ; whom, how many ? All, without exception; expreſſed by the words, Quick and dead : which expreſſion is taken from thoſe words of St. Peter (Acts 10. 42.) wherein our Saviour is ſaid to be deſigned by God κριτὴς ζώντων καὶ νεκρῶν, the judge of the living and the dead : or of St. Paul (2 Tim. 4. 1.) I charge thee therefore before God and the Lord
Jeſus Chriſt, who ſhall judge the quick and dead at his appearing and his Kingdom : or thoſe of St. Peter again (1 Ep. chap. 4. verſ. 5.) Who ſhall render an account to him that is ready to judge the quick and dead : add a like place, Rom. 14. 9. That he may be Lord both of the dead and living :
Theſe places evidently confirming the truth of the propoſition, yet ſo that the meaning thereof hath remained ſomewhat dubious, and that themſelves have ſeemed to need explication ; for it being a common law, to which all men by nature, by deſert, by divine appointment are ſubject, to undergo death ; (For what man is he that ſhall not ſee death ? It *is * appointed for men once to die, and after death judgment,)* why ſhould Pſal. 89. 48. not the dead comprehend all that are to be judged ? as we ſee it expreſſed Heb. 9. 27. * ἀπόκειται.
in the Revelation, I ſaw the dead, ſmall and great, ſtanding before God--- Rev. 20. 12.
and the dead were judged from the things written in the books according to their works---the dead were judged, no mention is made of the living: wherefore ſome have interpreted the dead and living not for a diſtinction of perſons, but of parts in men; the living ſouls,and dead bodies of men; others have taken them metaphorically, the living, (that is, righteous men, men endued with a ſpiritual life;) the dead, (that is, men dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, void of ſpiritual ſenſe and activity.) But the difficulty mentioned is not ſo ſtrong, as to force us upon ſo remote, and abſonous expoſitions: St. Paul hath evidently enough ſhewed us how to underſtand the words, and how to ſolve the knot propounded; that by the living, are to be underſtood thoſe, who ſhall be found (and as it were ſurprized) alive, when our Saviour comes; by the dead all others, who before that time had died, and ſhall be raiſed at the ſound of the laſt

1 Theſſ. 4. 15. ἐν λόγῳ Κυρίȣ. trump: This we ſay to you (ſaith he to the Theſſalonians) in the word of the Lord, (or as the word of the Lord) that we which live, remaining at the preſence of the Lord, ſhall not prevent them which are aſleep: Our Lord therefore ſhall find ſome alive, when he comes: Therefore what is ſaid of all men's being appointed to taſt death,is to be underſtood with this exception;all but thoſe,whoſe death ſhall be prevented by ourLord's coming Matt. 24. 42. (which is ſet out as ſudden and unexpected, like the coming of a thief
1 Theſſ. 5. 2. in the night;) neither are thoſe perſons ſo exempted from death, but that they muſt undergo that which is equivalent thereto, a change, which ſhall render them a like prepared for judgment with them,who have died:
1 Cor. 15. 51. Behold, (ſaith St. Paul again to the Corinthians) I tell you a myſtery: We ſhall not indeed all fall aſleep (or not all die) but we ſhall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye---Which words with ſufficient evidence declare the meaning of the expreſſion here: The ſum is, that all men, none excepted, of what condition or quality, what nation or time, what age ſoever ſhall be judged: High and low; rich and poor; wiſe and ignorant; good and bad: the mightieſt Princes and Lords, as well as the meaneſt Subjects and Slaves; the deepeſt Scholars, as well as the ſimpleſt Idiots; in a word, all men whatever, without any exception, without any acceptance of perſons muſt appear before this Judge, muſt undergo this trial and ſentence.

Thus ſhall He come to judge both quick and dead: Than the belief of which point,there is none more neceſſary, than the conſideration of which none more profitable; neceſſary and profitable in many reſpects.

1. The faith and regard thereof will preſerve us from disbelieving, from being offended with, from repining at the providence of God; from being diſſatisfied with his proceeding and diſpenſations here either toward our ſelves or others.

2. It may alſo keep us from raſh cenſure, and invading our Lord's
Rom. 14. 4, 10. office; Who art thou that judgeſt another man's ſervant; to his own Maſter he ſtands or falls; why doſt thou judge thy brother; or why doſt thou ſet at nought
Jac. 4. thy brother? We ſhall all ſtand at the judgment-ſeat of Chriſt: There is one Law-giver who can ſave or deſtroy, who art thou that judgeſt another? Judge
1 Cor. 4. 5. nothing before the time, untill the Lord come, who ſhall enlighten the hidden things of darkneſs, and manifeſt the counſels of hearts.

3. It may ſupport and comfort us againſt all unjuſt and uncharitable cenſures; groundleſs ſurmiſes and ſlanders; undeſerved ſcorns and reproaches of men, for that aſſuredly at that judgment right ſhall be done thee, thy innocence ſhall be cleared, thy honour vindicated and repaired;
Pſal. 37. 6. God ſhall bring forth thy righteouſneſs as the light, and thy judgment as the noon day: ſo that approving thy conſcience to God, thou mayeſt ſay with 1 Cor. 4. 3. St. Paul, With me it is a very ſmall thing that I ſhould be judged of you, or of man's judgment.

4. It is the moſt powerfull and effectual means poſſible to beget ſincerity in us; to render us circumſpect; to ſtir us up to diligence in all our converſation; in our thoughts, words, and actions: For ſince the moſt inward receſſes of our hearts muſt be ſearched out, our moſt ſecret deſigns and deſires muſt be brought to light, what profit will it be to diſſemble, to diſguiſe, to conceal our thoughts? Since we muſt render an account of every thought that riſeth in our minds (at leaſt which is entertained there) of every word that paſſeth through our mouth, of every action we undertake, what reaſon have we,

5. With more attentive and accurate regard to conſider and mind what we do? Since it is certain we ſhall be judged, but uncertain when we ſhall be called thereto, how watchfull are we concerned to be, how obſervant of our Saviour's admonition? Watch, for ye do not know the day nor the hour, in which the ſon of man cometh? If thou doſt not watch, I ſhall come upon thee as a thief, and thou ſhalt not know at what hour I ſhall come upon thee. It may be (for all we know) the next day, the next hour, when death ſhall call us to that priſon, where we ſhall be detained untill the time of our being preſented at the barr; and what a miſery will it be to be ſurpriz'd, to be found unprepared, unable to render a good accompt? What manner of perſons ought we to be in all holy converſation and godlineſs; looking for and haſting unto the coming of the day of God?

Matt. 24. 42.
25. 13.
2 Pet. 3. 12.

6. No perſuaſion, no conſideration doth promiſe ſuch efficacy towards the rowſing of our paſſions, or duly ordering and employing them upon religious practice; eſpecially it ſets on work thoſe two great engines, and mighty ſprings of action, fear and hope. How can we believe and think of this point without being poſſeſſed with a hideous fear of abiding ſo ſtrict a trial, of falling under ſo heavy a condemnation (if we are ſenſible of having been very faulty or negligent in performance of our duty) without a very comfortable hope of coming well off, of finding favour and mercy in that day, of being happily rewarded, if we are conſcious to our ſelves of having endeavoured ſeriouſly and carefully to pleaſe God, and obey his Commandments: If we can in our hearts ſay with St. Paul, I have combated the good combat, I have finiſhed the race, I have kept the faith; we may alſo ſay confidently with him: From henceforth is laid up for me a crown of righteouſneſs, which in that day the Lord, the righteous Judge, ſhall render unto me: If, by vertue of the grace of God, which appeared to all men, and according to its inſtruction we have denied ungodlineſs, worldly luſts, and lived ſoberly, righteouſly, and piouſly in this preſent world, we may joyfully expect the bleſſed hope and appearance of the great God, and our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt.

2 Tim. 1. 18.
2 Tim. 4. 7, 8.
Tit. 2. 12, 13.

I conclude, exhorting and wiſhing that the meditation of this moſt important buſineſs may be continually preſent to our minds, that we may ſeem (with that devout man) always to hear the laſt trumpet ſounding in our ears and piercing into our hearts, that ſo with a pious awe and a well-grounded hope, we may expect the coming of our Lord, and love his appearance: that being hence reſtrained from all impious and vicious converſation, being moved to a watchfull and circumſpect purſuit of all vertue and piety; guiding our lives inoffenſively in all good conſcience toward God and man, we may be able to render a good account, and with comfort unexpreſſible hear thoſe happy ſentences: Well done good and faithfull ſervants, enter into your Maſters joy. Come ye bleſſed of my Father, inherit the Kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the World. Unto the poſſeſſion whereof, God in his mercy bring us by the merits of our Saviour, in obedience to our Lord, according to the grace and mercy of our moſt righteous Judge, Jeſus; To whom with the Father, and the Holy Ghoſt, One God, bleſſed for ever, be all praiſe and glory. Amen.

2 Tim. 4. 8.
Matt. 25. 21.
34.

I believe in the Holy Ghoſt.

THE whole Creed (as was ſometime formerly obſerved) being probably built upon, and ſeeming no other than an enlargement or dilatation of that faith and confeſſion required at baptiſm in the Bleſſed Trinity, having ſurvey'd the two former parts concerning the two firſt perſons, God the Father, and God the Son; we are now come to the third great Branch thereof, wherein we profeſs our belief in the Holy Spirit of God; which is in order the third grand object of our faith: whereof ſeeing there is here only a ſimple mention (as it were made) without any deſcription, any characters thereof expreſſed, (ſuch as in this Creed are aſſigned to the other Perſons; ſuch as in the Conſtantipolitan and other Creeds after it, are attributed to this) we muſt endeavour in ſome manner to ſupply that omiſſion, by conſidering, 1. The Quid. 2. The Quale, thereof: Firſt, I ſay, what is its nature. 2. What peculiar characters, offices, and operations (according to that myſtical œconomy revealed in the Goſpel) are attributed and appertain thereto.

As for the firſt, the Nature thereof, or what it is; we may obſerve that the word Spirit (which primitively and properly ſignifies wind, or breath) becauſe the wind is a being not immediately expoſed to ſenſe, yet of great mobility and force, diſcovering it ſelf to be ſo, by many great and conſpicuous effects, is therefore tranſlated to denote thoſe excellent intellectual Beings, which, by reaſon of their more pure and ſubtle nature, being otherwiſe indiſcernible to ſenſe, do yet by manifeſt operations diſcover their exiſtence and great activity, are called ſpirits: ſuch as are in the firſt place God Almighty, (who inviſibly pervades and penetrates, and actuates all things, and is therefore by even Virgil himſelf, according to Lactantius and Macrobius his judgment, ſtyled Spirit) and next the Angels, and then the ſouls of men. Of theſe Beings there is one, mentioned through the Scripture, called the Holy Spirit, the Spirit of God, the Spirit of Chriſt, the eternal Spirit; and ſometimes ſimply by way of excellency, the Spirit: the nature of which Spirit we may beſt underſtand, by conſidering that the Holy Scripture doth attribute and aſcribe to him, 1. Divine properties and perfections, communicably peculiar to God. 2. Divine works and operations. 3. Divine appellations and titles. 4. A co-ordination in dignity; a participation of divine honour and worſhip. 5. An eſſential union with God the Father and God the Son; together with, 6. A perſonal and relative diſtinction from them. Alſo, 7. A derivation of Being from the two firſt Perſons, with an intimate relation unto them ſpringing thence. From the declaration and proof of which particulars, will plainly follow thoſe doctrines, which we are bound to believe, againſt thoſe, who have preſumed to contradict and oppugn either the perſonality, or the divinity of the Holy Ghoſt, or his proceſſion from the Father and the Son. Briefly therefore I ſay, Lact. I. 5.

—Cœlum ac terram campóſque liquentes
Lucentémque globum terræ Titaniáque atra Spiritus intus alit — Virg.

Otherwhere,

—Deum námque ire per omnes
Terráſque tractúſque maris, cœlúmque profundum.

Macedonians, Sabellians, Socinians, and the like, ἑτεροδοξοῦντες.

1. The Scripture aſcribes to the Holy Ghoſt the divine properties and perfections; the very word Holy (ſo abſolutely and ſpecially, and characteriſtically attributed to him) ſeems it ſelf to import ſo much: for (as it is in Hannah's prayer) there is none holy as the Lord, there is none beſide 1 Sam. 2. 2. him: none abſolutely, perfectly holy, but God; (Holy, that is, by nature exalted and ſeparated from all other things at a diſtance unapproachable, peculiarly venerable and auguſt,) whence the Holy One is a name, and Vid. Mr. Med. diſtinguiſhing attribute of God. The name Spirit, ſimply put, may ſeem diſc. 2. p. 15. alſo to imply the ſame; denoting higheſt purity and actuality. But we have farther the perfections of Eternity, Omnipreſence, Omniſcience, Omnipotence (the moſt high perfections, and proper to God) attributed to him. Eternity; for he is expreſly called αἰώνιον πνεῦμα: Who through Heb. 9. 14. the eternal Spirit offered himſelf ſpotleſs to God. Omnipreſence: Whither (ſaith David) ſhall I go from thy ſpirit? or whither ſhall I flee from thy Pſal. 139. 7. preſence? The Queſtion imports a negation, and a reaſon thereof: there is no flying from God's Spirit, for that it is every-where. Omniſcience: 1 Cor. 2. 10, 11. The ſpirit ſearcheth all things, (that is, perfectly to the bottom underſtands all things) even the depths of God; the things of God, which to know is as far above a creature, as for one man to know the thoughts, inclinations, and affections of another man, (ſuch an argument St. Paul inſinuates;) particularly Preſcience, the knowledge of future events (which is the higheſt and hardeſt kind of knowledge, and immediately proper to God, and therefore called divination) is in a ſpecial manner every-where appropriated to the Spirit, as the immediate fountain thereof; whence he is called the prophetical Spirit; to which we may add, independency of will and action: For (as St. Paul ſpeaks) all theſe things 1 Cor. 12. 11. (the production of all thoſe excellent graces, the diſtribution of all thoſe admirable gifts) doth the one and the ſame ſpirit work, dividing to every Joh. 3. 8. one as he pleaſeth. Ubi vult ſpirat; the ſpirit blows where he pleaſeth, doth every-where what he will. Abſolute goodneſs: Thy ſpirit is good (ſaith Pſal. 143. 10. David) lead me into the land of uprightneſs; perfect veracity, implied by the abſtract word, truth: It is the ſpirit (ſaith St. John) that witneſſeth, for 1 Joh. 5. 6. the ſpirit is truth: Truth it ſelf, the higheſt, moſt perfect truth.

2. Laſtly, Omnipotence; demonſtrated by thoſe works which are ſaid to be done by him; which are the greateſt and hardeſt poſſible: ſuch as Creation; * working of Miracles; Revelation of future events; Vivifi- * Rom. 15. 19. cation; Renovation of men's minds; † Juſtification, and the like; which † 1 Cor. 6. 11. Rom. 4. 5. both, according to the nature of the thing, and in Scripture-account do require a power no leſs than infinite and moſt divine to effect them: the places are frequent and obvious, which aſcribe ſuch works to the holy Spirit; I cannot ſtand to recite them.

3. To the Holy Ghoſt are alſo aſſigned the divine names and titles: Jehovah, Lord, God, and thoſe conſequently which go along with them. For often and upon divers occaſions the ſame things are ſaid to be done by God, or to God, and by, or to the Spirit; one word interpreting, or concurring in ſignification with the other, by reaſon of that real identity which belongs to the things ſignified by them. It is ſaid of the diſtruſtfull and diſobedient Iſraelites in the Pſalms, That they tempted God and Pſal. 78. 41, 56. limited the Holy One of Iſrael; That they tempted and provoked the moſt High God, and kept not his teſtimonies: which is expreſſed thus by the Prophet Eſay; They rebelled and vexed his Holy Spirit. St. Peter in the Iſa. 63. 10. Acts chargeth Ananias of having lyed to the Holy Spirit; and having lyed to God: Why (ſaith he) Ananias, hath Satan filled thy heart to lye unto (or Act. 5. 3, 4. cozen) the Holy Spirit?--Thou haſt not lyed unto men, but to God: Queſtionleſs by both thoſe expreſſions deſigning the ſame thing, and implying the Holy Ghoſt to be God. Our Saviour is ſaid to be conceived by the Luk. 1. 35. Holy Ghoſt, and therefore to be called the Son of God: he is ſaid to per- Rom. 15. 19.

form miracles ſometimes by the power of God, ſometimes by the power Matt. 12. 28. of the Holy Ghoſt: If I (ſaith St. Matthew) by the Holy Spirit caſt out
Luk. 11. 19. Devils: If I by the finger of God caſt them out (ſaith St. Luke.) And it
1 Theſſ. 4. 9. is ordinary for what is ſometimes called the Word of God, to be otherwhile
Vid. Act. 28. called the Word of the Spirit; proceeding from the ſame understanding, 25, 26. being dictated by the ſame operation. We are alſo ſaid to be
2 Cor. 3. 17. θεοδίδακτοι, taught of God, in reſpect to the inſtruction and guidance received
1 Cor. 3. 16, 17. from him; in fine, every good Chriſtian is ſaid to be a temple; a Epheſ. 2 22. temple of God; becauſe the Spirit of God dwells in him.

4. A co-ordinate dignity; a parity of honour and worſhip with God the Father, and God the Son is aſcribed to the Holy Spirit: this appears Matt. 28. 19. ſignally in our Saviour's inſtitution of Baptiſm to be adminiſtred in the joint names of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt; whereby we are initiated into the like faith and acknowledgment; are obliged to the ſame worſhip and obedience of all three perſons. The ſame appears by that benediction of St. Paul, imploring upon the Corinthians the divine favour and aſſiſtance, according to that myſtical œconomy, which the Goſpel 2 Cor. 13. 13. exhibits: The Grace of our Lord Jeſus, and the love of God (that is, of God the Father) and the communion of the Holy Ghoſt, be with you all. As alſo Epheſ. 2. 18. from that place of St. Paul: By Chriſt we have acceſs in one Spirit to the Father: He having an equal ſhare with God our Saviour in the Goſpel-diſpenſation of grace and ſalvation unto men. We alſo have the ſame co-ordination clearly ſuppoſed in 1 Cor. 12. 4, 5, 6. There are (ſaith St. Paul) diviſions of favours, but the ſame Spirit: and there are diviſions of miniſteries, but the ſame Lord, (i. e. the ſame Chriſt:) and there are diviſions of operations, but the ſame God, or Father: (All the gracious gifts of the Goſpel are beſtowed; all the ſacred miniſteries are managed; all the wonderfull performances are brought to paſs by the joint and equal conduct and co-operation of theſe three divine Perſons. And that ſoveraign regard our Saviour hath declared due to the honour and authority of the Holy Ghoſt, inſomuch that blaſphemy againſt him is a ſin peculiarly irremiſſible, argues his divinity; ſince neither according to the reaſon of the thing could offending againſt the fame of a creature, be capable of ſuch aggravations; nor could God in a manner preferr the honour of a creature before his own.

5. That there is an eſſential union between the Holy Ghoſt and the other divine perſons, is both by evident conſequence deducible from, and is immediately aſſerted in Scripture. For that there is but one God, is there continually taught and inculcated upon us, and how it calls the Holy Ghoſt, we have ſeen; therefore neceſſarily the Holy Ghoſt doth partake of that one divine eſſence. Alſo, that the Holy Ghoſt is God, is inferr'd 1 Cor. 2. 11. from that compariſon of S. Paul between the Spirit of man in reſpect to man, and the Spirit of God in reſpect to God; as the Spirit of man is intrinſecal to man, ſo the Spirit of God is to him: and by reaſon of the 1 Joh. 5. 7. perfect ſimplicity of the divine nature, that which ſubſiſts in God muſt neceſſarily be God. In fine, St. John expreſsly tells us, That there are three which bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghoſt, and theſe three are one: they are one, and yet,

6. There is a perſonal diſtinction of the Holy Ghoſt from the Father and the Son; for they are Three: three perſons, for that not only diſtinct Joh. 15. 26. names, but peculiar operations are aſſigned to them; which ſhould not be 14. 26. done without good reaſon, if there were no perſonal diſtinction: that
Rom. 8. 27. which alſo appears from his being ſaid to proceed from the Father and to Epheſ. 2. 18. be ſent from him; from his being an advocate and interceding with the father;
Gal. 4. 6. his his crying within us Abba Father, our having acceſs in him to the Father. As alſo his being ſent by the Son; his glorifying him; receiving of his; his not ſpeaking from himſelf: which expreſſions plainly argue a perſonal diſtinction. As do alſo our Saviour's birth by him, his performing miracles by him; in a word, God's executing all his purpoſes of grace and power by him.

Joh. 15. 26.
16. 13, 14.

7. Laſtly, That the Holy Spirit doth derive the common divine eſſence from the father and the ſon is thence ſufficiently apparent, for that he is called the ſpirit of the Father, and alſo the ſpirit of the Son: the Spirit of the Father, becauſe he doth ἐκπορεύεται; in a manner incomprehenſible doth proceed and emanate, from the father; is of him, is ſent by him: for the ſame reaſon is he the Spirit of the Son: wherefore he is alſo expreſſly ſaid to be ſent by the Son.

Matt. 10. 20.
Joh. 14. 26.
15. 26.
Τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἐκ Θεοῦ.
1 Cor. 2. 12.
Gal. 4. 6.

From theſe truths thus briefly declared doth follow that the Holy Ghoſt is one of the divine perſons, in order the third, partaking of the divine nature, and receiving it by communication from the Father and the Son. Which is all we intended to ſhew concerning his nature. I proceed to conſider the peculiar characters, offices, and operations of the Holy Spirit. There be many particular functions, and operations in a ſpecial manner attributed and appropriated to the Holy Spirit; which as they reſpect God ſeem reducible to two general ones the declaration of God's mind and the execution of his will; as they reſpect man (for in regard to other beings the Scripture doth not ſo much conſider what he performs, as not ſo much concerning us to know) the producing in us all qualities and diſpoſitions, the guiding and aiding us in all actions requiſite or conducible to our eternal happineſs and ſalvation doth in a manner comprize them.

Rom. 8. 9.
1 Pet. 1. 11.
Phil. 1. 19.

1. I ſay, the declaration of God's mind: Whence he is called the ſpirit of truth, the ſpirit of prophecy, the ſpirit of Revelation; for that all ſupernatural light and inſtruction hath ever proceeded from him: He inſtructed all the prophets that have been ſince the world began to know, he enabled them to ſpeak the mind of God concerning things preſent and future: Holy men (that have taught men their duty, and lead them in the way to happineſs) were but his inſtruments, and ſpake as they were moved by the Holy Ghoſt: By his inſpiration the Holy Scriptures (the moſt full and certain witneſſes of God's mind) were conceived; He guided the Apoſtles into all truth; and by them inſtructed all the world in the knowledge of God's gracious intentions toward mankind and the Holy myſteries of the Goſpel. All the knowledge we can pretend to in theſe things doth proceed from his revelation, doth rely upon his authority.

Joh. 15. 26.
Eph. 1. 17.
Rev. 19. 10.
Luk. 1. 70.
2 Pet. 1. 21.
1 Tim. 3. 16.
Joh. 16. 13.
Vid. 1 Cor. 2. 10.
Eph. 3. 5.

2. The execution of God's will. Whence he is called the power of God (the ſubſtantial power and vertue of God) and the hand of God, and what ever God hath deſigned he is ſaid to perform by him. By him he framed the world: he garniſhed the heavens (as Job ſpeaketh.) By him he governs the world; all extraordinary works of providence (when God beſide the common law and uſual courſe of nature interpoſeth) all miraculous performances, being attributed to his energy; but eſpecially by him (that which next is to be conſidered) he manages that work, by divine goodneſs ſo earneſtly deſigned, of man's ſalvation: Which he doth,

Luk. 1. 35.
Luk. 11. 19.
Pſal. 33. 6.
Job 26. 13.
Gen. 1. 1.

3. By working in us good diſpoſitions and qualities; by guiding and aiding us in our actions. We are naturally void of thoſe good diſpoſitions of underſtanding, of will, of affection, which are neceſſary to make us any-wiſe acceptable to God, fit to ſerve and pleaſe him, capable of any favour from him, of any true happineſs in our ſelves; our minds, I ſay, are blind and ſtupid; ignorant and prone to errour; eſpecially in things ſupernatural and abſtracted from ordinary ſenſe; our wills ſtubborn and froward, vain and unſtable; inclining to evil, and averſe from what is moſt truly good; our affections very irregular and unſettled; to remove which bad diſpoſitions (inconſiſtent with God's friendſhip and favour; tending to miſery) and to beget thoſe contrary to them, the knowledge and belief of divine truth, a love of, and willing compliance with goodneſs;

Acts 16. 14.
a well-compoſed, orderly, and ſteady frame of ſpirit. God in mercy hath appointed the Holy Spirit, who firſt opening our hearts, ſo as to let in and apprehend the light of divine truth propounded to us; then by repreſentation of proper arguments perſuading us to embrace it, begets divine knowledge and faith in our minds (which is the work of illumination, and inſtruction, the firſt part of this office) then by continual impreſſions bends our inclinations and mollifies our hearts and ſubdues our affections to a willing compliance with, a cheerfull complacence in that which is good and pleaſing to God: ſo begetting all pious and vertuous inclinations in us; reverence to God, charity to men; ſobriety and purity and the reſt of thoſe amiable and heavenly vertues: (which is the work of ſanctification, another great part of his office) both which together (illumination of our mind, ſanctification of our will and affections) do conſtitute Tit. 3. 5. Eph. 4. 23. Eph. 2. 5. Col. 2. 13. Col. 2. 12. Eph. 2. 10. 4. 24. 2 Cor. 5. 17. Gal. 5. 25. Rom. 8. 14.
that work, which is ſtyled the Regeneration, Renovation, Vivification, New-creation, Reſurrection; putting off the old, putting on the new man; of a man; the faculties of our ſouls being ſo much changed, and we made, as it were, other men thereby: able and apt to do that to which before we were altogether indiſpoſed and unfit. Neither only doth he alter and conſtitute our diſpoſitions, but he directs and governs our actions; leading and moving us in the ways of obedience to God's will and law. As we live by him (have a new ſpiritual life implanted in us) ſo we walk by him, by his continual guidance and aſſiſtance. He reclaims us from ſin and errour; ſupports and ſtrengthens us in temptation; adviſes, excites, encourages us to works of vertue and piety; particularly he guides and quickens us in devotion; ſhewing us what we ſhould ask; raiſing in us Rom. 8. 26, 27. 1 Joh. 5. 14.
holy deſires and comfortable hopes thereof; diſpoſing us to approach unto God with fit diſpoſitions of love, and reverence, and humble confidence.

It is alſo a notable part of the Holy Spirit's office to comfort and ſuſtain us, as in all our religious practice, ſo particularly in our doubts, difficulties, Rom. 15. 13. 1 Pet. 1. 8. Heb. 3. 6.
diſtreſſes, and afflictions, to beget joy, peace, and ſatisfaction in us in all our doings and all our ſufferings: Whence he hath the title of Comforter.

It is alſo a great part thereof, to aſſure us of God's love and favour; that we are his children; and to confirm us in the hopes of our everlaſting inheritance. We feeling our ſelves to live by him, to love God and goodneſs; to deſire and delight in pleaſing God, are thereby raiſed to hope God loves and favours us; and that he having by ſo authentick a ſeal ratified his word and promiſe; having already beſtowed ſo ſure a pledge, ſo precious an earneſt, ſo plentifull firſt-fruits will not fail to make good the remainder deſigned and promiſed us of everlaſting joy and bliſs.
2 Cor. 5. 5. 1. 22. Eph. 1. 14.

Laſtly, The Holy Ghoſt doth intercede for us with God; is our advocate and aſſiſtant in the preſenting our ſupplications, and procuring our good: He cries in us; he pleads for us to God: whence he is peculiarly called παράκλητος; that is, one who is called in by his good word or countenance to aid him, whoſe cauſe is to be examined; or whoſe petition is to be conſidered.

To which things I may add, That the Holy Ghoſt is deſigned to be as it were the ſoul, which informs, enlivens and actuates the whole body of the Church; connecting and containing together the members thereof in ſpiritual union, life, and motion; eſpecially quickning and moving the principal members (the Governours and Paſtors) thereof; conſtituting them in their function, qualifying them for the diſcharge thereof, guiding and aſſiſting them therein.

1 Cor. 12. 12, 13.
Acts 20. 28.
Eph. 4. 12.

Such is the office, ſuch the operations of the Holy Ghoſt; the which we ſhould more diſtinctly and fully conſider; if the time and nature of this exerciſe would give leave.

The uſe of theſe doctrines (the influence, the belief and conſideration of this article ſhould have upon our practice) is briefly, 1. To oblige us to render all due honour and adoration to the divine Majeſty of the Bleſſed Spirit. 2. To work in us an humble affection and a devout thankfulneſs to God for ſo ineſtimable a favour conferr'd upon us, ſuch as is the preſence and inhabitation, the counſel, conduct and aſſiſtance of God's Holy Spirit in us; Him we muſt acknowledge the author of our ſpiritual life; of all good diſpoſitions in us; of all good works performed by us; of all happineſs obtainable by us; to him we muſt render all thanks and praiſe: Therefore, 3. To excite us to deſire earneſtly, and pray for God's Spirit; the fountain of ſuch excellent benefits; ſuch graces, ſuch gifts, ſuch privileges, ſuch joys, and bleſſings unexpreſſible; If we heartily invite him, if we fervently pray for him, he will certainly come: So hath our Saviour promiſed; that our heavenly father will give the Holy Spirit to them which ask him. 4. We ſhould endeavour to demean our ſelves well toward the Holy Spirit; yielding to that heavenly gueſt, vouchſafing to come unto us, a ready entrance and kind welcome into our hearts; entertaining him with all poſſible reſpect and obſervance, hearkning attentively to his holy ſuggeſtions and carefully obeying them; not quenching the divine light or devout heat he kindles in us; not reſiſting his kindly motions and perſuaſions; not grieving or vexing him; that ſo with ſatisfaction he may continue and abide with us, to our infinite benefit and comfort; it ſhould engage us to cleanſe our ſelves from all filthineſs of fleſh and ſpirit, that we may be fit temples for ſo holy and pure a ſpirit to dwell in; leſt he loath and forſake us. 5. It is matter of comfort and encouragement (exceedingly uſefull and neceſſary for us) to conſider, that we have ſuch a guide and aſſiſtant in our religious practice and ſpiritual warfare. If our luſts be ſtrong, our temptations great, our enemies mighty, we need not be diſheartned; having this All-wiſe and Almighty friend to adviſe and help us: His grace is ſufficient for us againſt all the ſtrengths of Hell, Fleſh, and the World. Let our duty be never ſo hard, and our natural force never ſo weak, we ſhall be able to do all things by him that ſtrengtheneth us: If we will but faithfully apply our ſelves to him for his aid, we cannot fail of good ſucceſs.

Luk. 11. 13.

The Holy Catholick Church.

Eph. 4. 4.

THE Holy Catholick Church: In the more ancient Forms it ran only, Holy Church, (the word Catholick being left out) and in ſome of them it had not the ſame poſition, as now, being put in the laſt place; and it ſeems in the moſt ancient Symbols the Church was not propounded as an object of faith directly and immediately, but was mentioned obliquely, upon occaſion of remiſſion of ſins miniſtred by it; of eternal life obtained in it: as we may reaſonably deem from that notable place in Epiſt. ad Magnum.

Cap. 6.

Vid. lib. de Symbolo ad Catechumenos.

* Theodoret. I. 12. hiſt.

St. Cyprian: Nam cum dicunt (when they profeſs in the Symbol at Baptiſm) credis remiſſionem peccatorum & vitam æternam per Eccleſiam: To which kind of expreſſion that place in Tertull. de Baptiſmo, ſeems to allude, Cùm ſub tribus & teſtatio fidei, & ſponſio ſalutis pignorentur, neceſſariò, adjicitur Eccleſiæ mentio. And if we conſult the moſt ancient Summaries of faith extant in Irenæus and Tertullian, and compoſed by them, queſtionleſs according to the general ſenſe of their times, we ſhall not find this Article propounded; not even in the * Nicene Creed it ſelf. It is therefore moſt unprobable that this Article (either in ſubſtance, or at leaſt according to this manner of propoſal and expreſſion) is of a later ſtanding than the reſt; being introduced (as is likely) upon occaſion of thoſe many hereſies and ſchiſms, which continually ſprang up, to ſecure the truth of Chriſtian doctrine, the authority of Eccleſiaſtical diſcipline, the peace and unity of the Church, by obliging men to profeſs their diſclaiming any conſent or conſpiracy with thoſe erroneous and contentious people (who had deviſed new, deſtructive or dangerous conceits againſt the general conſent of Chriſtians, and drove on factions contrary to the common order and peace of the Church;) to profeſs, I ſay, their diſclaiming ſuch heretical principles and factious proceedings; and their conſtant adherence to the doctrines generally embraced by the Churches founded and inſtructed by the Apoſtles; as alſo their perſiſtance in concord and communion with them; their readineſs to obſerve the received cuſtoms and practices derived by them from Apoſtolical inſtitution; their ſubmiſſion to the laws and diſciplines eſtabliſhed in them by lawfull authority. This I conceive to have been the meaning of them, who firſt inſerted this Article, of believing the Holy Church, into the Creed: I believe; that is, I adhere unto, (for as we did at firſt obſerve, belief here is to be underſtood as the nature of the matter ſhould require,) I adhere unto, or am perſuaded that I ought to adhere unto that body of Chriſtians, which diffuſed over the world, retains the faith taught, the diſcipline ſettled, the practices appointed by our Lord and his Apoſtles.

Tertul. de præſcript. Iren. 1, 2, 3, &c.

And that men ſhould be obliged to do thus, there was ground both in the reaſon of the thing and in Scripture. In reaſon, there being no more proper or effectual argument to aſſure us that any doctrine is true, or practice warrantable, to convince Sectaries deviating from truth or duty, than the conſent of all Churches; of whom (being ſo diſtant in place, language, humour, cuſtom) it is not imaginable that they ſhould ſoon or eaſily conſpire in forſaking the doctrines inculcated by the Apoſtles, or the practices inſtituted by them, (which argument preſſed by Tertullian, Irenæus and other ancient defenders of Chriſtian truth and peace may well, as in matters of this kind, go for a demonſtration: and that ſentence of * Tertullian may well paſs for a certain principle and axiom: Quod apud multos unum invenitur, non eſt erratum, ſed traditum.

2 Pet. 2. 1.
Act. 20. 29, 30.
Matt. 24. 11. 7. 15.
Tit. 3. 10.
Rom. 16. 17.
Coloſſ. 2. 8.
2 Theſſ. 1. 6.
1 Tim. 6. 4, 5.

And for Scripture, as it foretells that pernicious hereſies ſhould be introduced; that many falſe prophets ſhould ariſe and ſeduce many; that grievous wolves ſhould come in, not ſparing the flock; and men ſhould ariſe, ſpeaking perverſe things to draw diſciples after them; as they warn us to take heed of ſuch men; to reject and refuſe hereticks; to mark thoſe, which make diviſions and ſcandals beſide the doctrine, which Chriſtians had learnt, and to decline from them; to ſtand off (ἀφιστάναι) from ſuch men as do ἑτεροδιδασκαλεῖν, teach things different from Apoſtolical doctrine, and do not conſent to wholeſom words (the words of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt) and the doctrine according to godlineſs. As it teacheth us that Hereſies and

---

* De præſcr. cap. 28. Conſtat id eſſe ab Apoſtolis traditum, quod apud Eccleſias Apoſtolorum fuerit ſacroſanctum.

Factions are works of the fleſh; [proceeding from pride and ambition; ſelf-intereſt and covetouſneſs; peeviſh and perverſe humour; blindneſs and vanity; raſhneſs and inſtability; dotage, diſtemper, and corruption of mind; deceit, cozenage, craft, and hypocriſie; want of good conſcience and reverence to God;] ſo it alſo deſcribes the univerſality of them who ſtick to the truth, and obſerve the law of Chriſt; are diſpoſed to charity and peace with all thoſe, who call upon our Lord with a pure mind, (that is, with all ſincere Chriſtians) to be one body, knit together and compacted of parts affording mutual aid and ſupply to its nouriſhment, and joined to, deriving ſenſe and motion from one head, and informed by one ſpirit; as one houſe, built upon the foundation of Prophets and Apoſtles, Chriſt himſelf being the chief corner ſtone, in whom all the building is fitly framed and connected: As one nation, or people, ſubject to the ſame law and government; (uſed to the ſame language, cuſtom, and converſation;) one city, one family; one flock under one ſhepherd; laſtly, one Church, or Congregation: for as ſometimes every particular aſſembly of Chriſtians, and ſometimes a larger collection of particular Societies combined together in one Order, or under one Government, are termed Churches (ἐκκλησίαι,) ſo the whole Aggregation of all Churches, of all Chriſtian people in the World, is frequently called the Church: Even as the whole body of thoſe who lived in profeſſion and obedience to the Jewiſh law (which was a type and image of the Chriſtian Church) was called קהל (Cahal) ἐκκλησία, the Congregation; from whence I conceive this name was taken; and as among them that word did ſignifie ſometimes * any particular aſſembly, ſometimes the whole body of ſuch perſons, who had right and obligation to aſſemble for the ſervice of God; ſo correſpondently was the word uſed in the New Teſtament; ſometimes for any Society leſſer or greater; ſometimes for the whole Body of God's new people; all the true ſubjects and ſervants of Chriſt; that is, for the Catholick or Univerſal ſociety of the Faithfull; yet even in this latter ſenſe there is ſome diſtinction: for ſometimes it is taken in a ſenſe (partly extenſive, partly reſtrained) ſo as to ſignifie all thoſe good men, and only ſuch, which in all places and all times did or ſhall faithfully worſhip and ſerve God; ſometimes in a ſenſe (in one reſpect more wide, in another more ſtrict) for all thoſe who at preſent, in any age, through all parts of the World, do openly profeſs the ſincere faith and obedience of Chriſt; maintaining an external practice agreeable to that profeſſion; according to both which ſenſes we may interpret the Holy Catholick Church here, they being, as to the duty required of us, conjoined and co-ordinate: For whatever is ſaid of the Church in Scripture, (all the characters and commendations attributed to it; as it doth principally agree to it in the firſt of theſe ſenſes, ſo it doth in ſome kind and meaſure agree to the latter: And therefore (without diſtinguiſhing) we may ſay that this is the Holy Catholick Church, which we believe: the Sion which the Lord hath choſen, which he hath deſired for his habitation, where he hath reſolved to place his reſt and reſidence for ever: The mountain ſeated above all mountains, unto which all nations ſhould flow: The houſe of God, built upon a rock; againſt which the gates of hell ſhall not prevail; the pillar and firmament of truth which it by its profeſſion and practice in a manner ſupporteth and maintaineth: The New Jeruſalem and City of God; the Mother of us all; the beloved Spouſe of the Lamb; The elect generation, royal prieſthood, holy nation, peculiar people: The Church which Chriſt hath purchaſed with his own bloud; which he delivered himſelf for, that he might ſanctifie it, and cleanſe it with the waſhing of water by the Word; that he might preſent it to

Eph. 4. 4.
2 Tim. 2. 22.
Eph. 1. 22.
Eph. 4. 16.
Rom. 12. 5.
1 Cor. 12. 12.
Eph. 4. 3, 4.
1 Cor. 12. 13.
Eph. 2. 21.
1 Pet. 2. 4, 5.
1 Pet. 2. 19.
Eph. 2. 19.
Heb. 12. 23.
Apoc. 3. 12.
21. 2, 10.

* Ubi tres ſunt, etiam laici, ibi eccleſia eſt. Tertul. Exh. Caſt.

Pſal. 132. 13.
Iſa. 2. 2.
Mic. 4. 1.
Matt. 16. 18.
Apoc. 3. 12.
Gal. 4. 26.
Apoc. 19. 7.
Matt. 22. 2.
25. 10.
Eph. 5. 25, &c.
1 Pet. 2. 9.

himſelf a glorious Church, not having ſpot or wrinkle, nor any ſuch thing, but that it might be Holy and unblemiſhed.

Act. 20. 28.
Eph. 5. 25, &c.

Holy we ſee it is expreſsly ſaid to be in Chriſt's deſign: Holy, as conſiſting of perſons ſeparated from the World (from profane and vain converſation,) and wholly devoted to God's ſervice; choſen to be Saints, and without blemiſh before God in love; perſons conſecrated and conſtituted Prieſts, to offer ſpiritual ſacrifices, acceptable to God, through Jeſus Chriſt. Holy, as in many reſpects peculiarly related to God; as his choſen people, (in which reſpect the Jews were anciently called a Holy, which is interpreted a choſen, ſpecial, peculiar, precious, ſeparate people) as his houſe and temple; wherein he in a ſpecial manner doth reſide, wherein he is continually worſhipped: Now the temple of God is holy, whoſe temple are you (ſaith St. Paul:) as, οἰκεῖοι τοῦ Θεοῦ, his domeſticks and familiars; as his children. Holy, as redeemed by Chriſt; cleanſed by his bloud; ſanctified by his ſpirit; as profeſſing a Holy faith; as partakers of a holy and heavenly calling; as endued with holy graces, and diſpoſitions; performing holy ſervices; obliged to holy converſation.

1 Pet. 2. 18.
1 Cor. 6. 20.
7. 23.
Eph. 1. 4.
1 Pet. 2. 5.
Apoc. 1. 6.
5. 10.
Deut. 7. 6.
14. 2. 26. 18.
Ex. 19. 5, 6.
1 Cor. 3. 17.
Jud. 20.
2 Tim. 1. 9.
Heb. 3. 1.
Rom. 12. 1, &c.
1 Pet. 1. 15.

The belief and conſideration of which point doth ſerve, 1. to engage us to perſiſt in the truth of Chriſtian doctrine, delivered by our Saviour and his Apoſtles; atteſted unto by the general conſent of Chriſtians; avoiding all novelties of opinion; not being carried about with various and ſtrange doctrines; not being like children toſſed with waves, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, in the cozenage of men, in craft according to the method (or artifice) of deceit; (not being deluded with fine words, or fair pretences of many innovatours. But ἀληθεύοντες ἐν ἀγάπῃ; holding the truth in love. 2. In love, that is another duty we are hence obliged to; to maintain a hearty charity and good affection toward all good Chriſtians; charity, which is the band that unites the Church, which preſerves it in a ſweet order and unity; Conſequently, 3. Readily to correſpond and communicate with all good Chriſtians (all ſocieties ſincerely profeſſing and practiſing faith, charity and obedience to our Lord) communicating I ſay in all offices of piety; 4. Submitting to all lawfull order and diſcipline; ſtudying peace, and to our power promoting concord among them: Conſequently. 5. To Diſavow and ſhun all factious combinations whatever of men corrupting the truth, or diſturbing the peace of the Church. In fine, ſincerely to wiſh in our hearts; to pray earneſtly for; to promote by our beſt endeavours the peace and proſperity of that Holy Catholick Church, whereof we ſhould be members and children: All which things St. Paul directs us to in thoſe few words: Purſue Righteouſneſs, Faith, Charity, Peace with thoſe that call upon (or are called by the name of) the Lord, with a pure heart. I proceed.

Heb. 13. 9.
Eph. 4. 14.
2 Tim. 2. 22.

The Communion of Saints.

THE words were not extant in any of the ancient Creeds, but when afterwards inſerted; nor (as I conceive) doth the meaning of them much differ from what was intended in the precedent article, concerning the Catholick Church; and perhaps it was adjoined thereto, by way of appoſition, for interpretation thereof. For it ſeems the meaning of them is this, That all the Saints (thoſe which are ſo either in outward eſteem, as profeſſing Chriſtian faith and obedience; or thoſe which are ſo in heart and inward diſpoſition; thoſe which either now converſe upon earth, or which are received into heaven, all the Saints) either in obligation ſhould or in effect do communicate, partake, join together, conſent and agree in what concerns Saints or Members of the ſame body; in believing and acknowledging the ſame heavenly truth; in performance of devotions and offices of piety toward God; with and for one another; in charitable affection and good-will toward each other; in affording mutual aſſiſtance and ſupplies toward each others either temporal or ſpiritual good; in mutual condolency and compaſſion of each others evil; congratulation and complacency in each others good; in minding (according to St. Paul's words) with care the ſame thing for one another: ſo that if one member ſuffers, all the members ſuffer together with it; or if one member be honoured, all the members rejoice with it. This briefly ſeems to be the meaning of this point, and I need not farther labour to ſhew the uſes thereof. The doctrine ſo plainly carrying its obligation and uſe in its face. 1 Cor. 12. 25, 26.

Concerning the Power of the Keys.

I Treated laſt upon the Catholick Church and Communion of Saints; between that Article and that which immediately follows concerning the remiſſion of ſins, I think it convenient to interpoſe a brief conſideration upon the Power of the Keys; the which we are directed and injoined ſometimes to diſcourſe on, and may do it, as it ſeems, here moſt ſeaſonably, it having ſo near a relation to the matter of both thoſe Articles; the Church, in which, by which, for which it is exerciſed; (by it alſo the communion of Saints being maintained and preſerved) and the Remiſſion of ſins, which (eſpecially as to be underſtood here) is a partial and moſt conſiderable effect or conſequent of its uſe. For though Remiſſion of ſins may be taken in its utmoſt latitude for all remiſſion indulged by God, and by what means, in what manner, upon what account ſoever diſpenſed; yet according to the intention of thoſe who compiled the Creed, it ſeems principally to deſign that formal remiſſion of ſins, which was conſigned by the Churches miniſtery; this being performed by vertue of a power imparted by Chriſt to the Church; called, as we ſhall ſee, the power of the Keys; concerning which therefore it will be not unſeaſonable for us here briefly to diſcourſe.

As God Almighty being King and Soveraign Lord of the world, doth govern it partly by his own immediate hand of Providence, partly by the mediation of viſible deputies and vicegerents conſtituted by him in ſeveral provinces of that his Kingdom; who receiving authority from him are obliged under him to govern in their reſpective places, according to rules of juſtice and equity preſcribed by him to the promotion of his honour and praiſe of his name; to the procurement of his ſubjects benefit and welfare (conſiſting chiefly in their leading a ſafe, quiet and commodious life here, with enjoyment of thoſe comforts, which are ſuitable to mens nature) each in his province moſt particularly regarding the welfare of thoſe ſubjects committed to their charge, yet ſo as withall to reſpect the common peace and proſperity of mankind, maintaining (ſo far as may be) good correſpondency with the reſt, obſerving the rules of juſtice and humanity toward all. This authority committed to them by God containing all powers neceſſary or conducible to thoſe purpoſes; the power of making and impoſing laws; of propounding and beſtowing rewards; of appointing and inflicting puniſhments, with obligation on the ſubjects part to entire obedience and ſubmiſſion.

In the ſame (or in a very like) manner doth Chriſt the Head and ſupreme Governour of the Church, adminiſter his Spiritual Kingdom; partly by the immediate direction and governance of his holy Spirit, partly by his preſidency of governours appointed by him in ſeveral provinces and ſocieties thereof; to manage things in ſuch order as may beſt conduce firſt to his glory and ſervice (as well by the propagation and enlargement of this empire, as preſervation and maintenance thereof in good condition; by procuring due reverence to his perſon and obedience to his laws) as may alſo conferr to the beſt advantage of his ſubjects, and their ſpiritual welfare, (conſiſting in their being inſtructed in duty, and diſpoſed to perform it, their being purified from ſin, and perfected in holineſs, and fitted for the poſſeſſion of that eternal happineſs to which they are called deſigned for them;) each in his province and ſociety (yet ſo as withall to reſpect the good of the whole body, maintaining charitable affection toward, and peaceable commerce with the reſt) being particularly obliged to promote thoſe ends; ſuch authority including all power requiſite to that purpoſe; of eſtabliſhing fit orders and rules to be obſerved in their reſpective ſocieties; of diſpenſing encouragements, and inflicting penalties agreeable to the nature of their office, and conducible to their deſignment; the ſubjects of this Kingdom being obliged to obedience and complyance with thoſe orders, to ſubmit to thoſe penalties and cenſures. Now this authority (either all or a great part of it) is commonly called Poteſtas Clavium, by a name taken from thoſe words of our Saviour wherein he promiſeth St. Peter that he would give him the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven: Concerning which promiſe we muſt firſt obſerve, that however it was made to St. Peter upon a ſpecial occaſion, yet the matter thereof was not peculiar and reſtrained to his perſon; for the particulars conjoined therewith, and which explain the meaning thereof, are otherwhere aſſigned to others, as well as him: Chriſt there declares that upon him he will build his Church; and other-where we are informed that the Church is built upon the foundation of the Prophets and Apoſtles: He promiſes that what he ſhall bind or looſe upon earth ſhall be bound or looſed in heaven; and the ſame privilege is promiſed otherwhere, in expreſs terms to any congregation or ſociety of Chriſtians, and in terms equivalent to a certain meeting of diſciples. This privilege therefore and authority was by our Saviour committed to the Church; and if to the Church, then (as to its uſe and exerciſe) to the governours thereof, who act in behalf thereof; to whom its preſervation is commended, upon whom the care of its welfare, its peace, its honour is incumbent: the which we ſhall at preſent ſuppoſe, and which by the nature, practice, end and deſign of this power will farther appear.

Matt. 16. 19.

Eph. 2. 20.
Apoc. 21. 14.
Matt. 18. 18.

Joh. 20. 23.

Claves illas regni cœlorum in beato Petro cuncti ſuſcepimus Sacerdotes. Ambroſ. Ep. 83.

At preſent, for the better underſtanding the nature and extent of this power, we will conſider, 1. Its Name. 2. Its object or correlative term. 3. The equivalent phraſes by which it is expreſſed or explained. 4. The practice and exerciſe thereof. 5. The riſe and occaſion of its inſtitution. 6. The neceſſity and uſefulneſs thereof: From the conſideration of which particulars, we may collect wherein it conſiſts, to what it tends, how far it extends. We will touch them briefly.

1. The name Keys being metaphorical, implies the thing thereby deſigned in its nature or ſome chief property (moſt obvious and conſpicuous) to reſemble Keys. Now they (as being inſtruments deſigned to no other purpoſe) have no other nature or property than opening or ſhutting the avenues or paſſages from one place to another; and conſequently their effects being either to give entrance and admiſſion, or to detain and keep within; or to ſtop the paſſage and exclude from a place; neceſſarily all or ſome of theſe actions (or ſomewhat anſwerable and like thereto) muſt agree to this power, in reſpect to that ſtate or place, which it referrs to; it muſt be therefore a power either admiſſive into, or retentive within, or excluſive from, or all theſe together, in reſpect to the Kingdom of heaven, whereof it is called the Keys; no other reaſon being conceivable of its obtaining that appellation; and we ſee, when this metaphor is uſed in like caſes, either all or one of theſe effects are by way of interpretation expreſſed; as when of the Holy and true One (that is, of our Saviour) it is ſaid in the Revelation, That he hath the Key of David; Apoc. 3. 7. it is ſubjoined; He openeth, and none ſhutteth; he ſhutteth, and none openeth. And when our Saviour imputes to the Lawyers, that they took away the Key of knowledge; he explains the meaning of his expreſſion by adding, that they would not enter themſelves, and thoſe who were entring, they Luk. 11. 52. hindred; and likewiſe in St. Matthew, concerning the Scribes and Phariſees: Ye ſhut the Kingdom of heaven (the ſame thing as here) before men, Matt. 23. 13. for your ſelves do not enter, nor do you ſuffer thoſe that are entring. Whence it ſeems may be collected, that this power (this having the Keys) is a power of admiſſion into, and excluſion from the place or ſtate, which it relates to: which we muſt next conſider; for ſuch muſt this power be, as its term or object doth admit or require.

2. As to the term it relates to, the Kingdom of heaven, that according to the New Teſtament uſe is capable eſpecially of two acceptions. It firſt commonly ſignifies the ſtate or conſtitution of religion under the Goſpel, in oppoſition or contradiſtinction to the ſtate of things under the ancient law. In the time of the law God's Kingdom was in a manner earthly; The land of Iſrael was his dominion; in Salom was his tabernacle, and his dwelling-place in Zion: Jeruſalem was his royal ſeat (the city of the Pſal. 114. 2. great King) 76. 2. the temple there his palace; he governed more immediately by oracles from time to time put into the mouth of his prieſts and prophets conſulting him for orders and directions; he received more viſible ſervices and homages from his ſubjects; he granted earthly conveniencies and privileges for them; he encouraged them to the obedience of his law by promiſes of temporal reward; deterr'd them from diſobedience and diſloyalty by threatning temporal pains and damages; but under the Evangelical diſpenſation, as God's Kingdom is more capacious and unlimited in extention, ſo he hath aſſumed no peculiar reſidence upon earth, nor is worſhipped otherwiſe than as being in heaven, the natural ſeat of his ſpecial Majeſty and Glory; he rules by a law perpetual and immutable, revealed from thence; the ſacrifices and adorations he requires are ſpiritual and inviſible for the moſt part and addreſſed thither; the privileges appertaining to the ſubjects of this Kingdom chiefly referr thither; they are allured to obedience by rewards to be conferred there; are withdrawn from diſobedience by penalties referring to a future ſtate: this ſtate therefore of things is called the Kingdom of heaven; of God; of Chriſt; that which * Ἡ ἐρχομένη βασιλεία, ἐγγίζουσα, &c. *was coming and approaching in the time of our Saviour's humble ſojourning upon earth; is now preſent, he reigning in heaven, into which they are ſaid to be tranſlated; Col. 1. 12, 13. to have acceſs unto the heavenly Jeruſalem; Eph. 2. 19. to be made fellow-citizens and co-heirs with the ſaints in light; Phil. 3. 20. to have their converſation in heaven, Heb. 3. 1. to partake a heavenly calling, 12. 22. to be ſeated together with Chriſt in heavenly places; who with ſincere perſuaſion of mind embrace the doctrine of Chriſt, with firm reſolution ſubmit to his law, becoming thereby ſubjects of this heavenly Kingdom, undertaking the obligations, and partaking the privileges belonging thereto. This ſtate,

I ſay, or relation is thus called; or (which comes to the ſame thing, and makes no alteration as to the matter in hand) taking the word perſonally (and concretely as it were) the ſociety of men put into ſuch a ſtate, the body of perſons ſtanding ſo related, (that is, the Church of Chriſt) may be called the Kingdom of heaven. This acception is ſo frequent and obvious that 'tis needleſs to cite inſtances or ſtand upon the confirmation thereof: but the phraſe is alſo ſometime taken for the perfection or utmoſt 2 Pet. 1. 11. improvement of this ſtate; that αἰώνιος βασιλεία, everlaſting Kingdom of our Lord, and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, (as St. Peter calls it) that ſtate of glory and bliſs into which all good Chriſtians, who ſhall through this temporal life perſiſt in faithfull obedience unto God, ſhall hereafter be Matt. 7. 21. received; that Kingdom into which not every one, who ſaith Lord, Lord, (who makes an external profeſſion or pretence) but he that doeth the will of God, who is in heaven, ſhall enter. Now whereas theſe two ſtates (one Acts 20. 24. being a ſtate of grace and favour with God here; the other of glory and joy with God hereafter) are in their nature, and according to their prime intention inſeparably coherent; one being ſubordinate to the other; that as a ſtep or degree, a way or tendency to this; this a completion and conſummation of that; that being ſuppoſed as precedent in order to this, this in deſign conſequent upon that, therefore what immediately concerns one, doth by conſequence reſpect the other: and in our caſe a power to open or ſhut; to admit into, or exclude from the ſtate of grace may be ſuppoſed and ſaid, in a manner, conſequently to be a power of opening and ſhutting the ſtate of glory hereafter, and reciprocally, both jointly may be well underſtood in their kind and order. But ſince the perſons, to whom this power is imparted, do exerciſe it here (and what thou ſhalt bind or looſe upon earth, ſaith our Saviour, implying the uſe of that power which he promiſed to communicate to St. Peter) ſince the immediate effects thereof are here below, therefore it ſeems fit that we underſtand the Kingdom of heaven in our caſe more directly and immediately the preſent Kingdom of heaven, or ſtate of grace into which Chriſtians are here received (or if you pleaſe, the ſociety it ſelf of perſons ſo enſtated) though more remotely and by conſequence it may imply the ſtate of glory hereafter.

We ſhould therefore conſider how theſe ſtates (eſpecially that of grace here more immediately reſpected) may be opened or ſhut; how one man may be enabled or empowered to permit entrance, or debarr others from it; and this we may conceive effectible either by yielding ſome real furtherance on one ſide, or ſome effectual hindrance on the other in reſpect of getting into or abiding in this ſtate; or elſe by ſome formal act of judgment and authority, by vertue of which ſome are admitted to partake the rights and privileges of this ſtate, or ſome excluded and rendred incapable thereof. I ſay, firſt, by real furtherance or hinderance: as on the one ſide, they who inſtruct or ſhew the way: who perſuade; who encourage men to enter; who afford any means or opportunities, may Acts 14. 27. be ſaid to open this ſtate (as in like manner it is ſaid that God did open 1 Cor. 16. 9. to the Gentiles a door of faith; and St. Paul ſaith, a great and effectual 2 Cor. 2. 12. door was opened to him at Epheſus, and another at Troas; and he exhorts Col. 4. 3. the Coloſſians to pray that God would open to him θύραν τοῦ λόγου, a door of preaching the myſtery of Chriſt; where opening a door denotes miniſtring opportunities and advantages of performing the things ſpecified.) And on the other ſide they who keep from knowing the way, which leads thither; who diſſuade or diſcourage from entring; who ſubſtract the means, or prevent opportunities of doing it; who interpoſe obſtacles or obſtructions of difficulty, danger, or damage may be ſaid to ſhut, or exclude (thus are the Scribes ſaid to ſhut the Kingdom of heaven,) that Matt. 23. 13. is to hinder men from embracing the doctrine, or ſubmitting to the rule of Chriſt by diſcouraging them from giving attention and credence to what he taught (which is other-where called taking away the Key of knowledge) Luk. 11. 52. as alſo by terrifying them from acknowledgment of the truth they ſaw and liked, by reproaches, perſecutions and puniſhments laid on them who did it. Thus may this ſtate be opened and ſhut; as alſo it may ſo by judicial and authoritative acts; by way of conſent and approbation declared; of deciſion and ſentence pronounced: in ſuch manner as we duly ſee men admitted into, and debarred from the ſtate of citizens and freemen (from enjoying in eſteem and effect the capacities, and immunities, belonging to the members of ſuch or ſuch ſocieties and corporations) by the conſent or diſſent, approbation or refuſal, decree or ſentence formally ſignified of perſons empowered to thoſe purpoſes. Now regarding the nature of that ſtate whereof we are ſpeaking, as to real furtherance, ſince reſpect to God's glory, and man's ſalvation obliges all men, to endeavour that men be brought into this ſtate, the ſame being in a ſpecial manner incumbent upon the governours and paſtors of the Church, therefore this may be conceived one way of opening or one part of this power; although to ſhut by way of real hindrance, in the manner deſcribed, cannot properly belong to any; duty and charity forbidding really and finally to obſtruct entrance into the ſtate of grace: the Scribes and Lawyers being blamed for not ſuffering men (otherwiſe willing and diſpoſed) to enter into the Kingdom of heaven. As to the other kind of opening and ſhutting by legal proceeding, as all perſons, according to charitable eſtimation, worthy and well qualified ought to be admitted thereinto; ſo neither according to the reaſon of the thing it ſelf, nor in regard to the publick benefit, nor reſpecting the good of the perſons pretending thereto, ſhould ſome be permitted to enjoy the communion thereof; therefore to diſtinguiſh and ſeparate ſuch perſons, the appointment and uſe of ſuch a power is requiſite. This will appear more plainly when we come to conſider the neceſſity and utility of this power. Farther, 3dly. For the phraſes equivalent, by which in places of the Goſpel moſt parallel this power is expreſſed and explained, they are eſpecially thoſe of binding and looſing; of retaining and remitting ſins: As for binding and looſing; when our Saviour had promiſed to beſtow upon St. Peter the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, he ſignifies what effect the uſe of them ſhould produce, by adding conjunctively---And whatever thou ſhalt bind on earth, ſhall be bound in heaven; and what thou ſhalt looſe upon earth, ſhall be looſed in heaven.

Now binding may ſignifie any kind of determination, of reſtraint, of detention upon perſons or things; and looſing that which is oppoſite thereto, the leaving indifferent, laying open, ſetting free of any perſon or thing reſpectively. He that (having good authority to do ſo) injoins or prohibits any thing doth bind that thing, (determining its moral quality, making it to be good or bad, lawfull or unlawfull) and binds the perſons concerned to obſervation or abſtinence: he that permits the ſame thing to be done, or diſpenſes with its doing may be ſaid to looſe: Thus all laws are bonds, and are ſaid to oblige: and the removing or ſuſpending their force in whole or in part, (by abrogation, or diſpenſation or exception) is conſequently a looſing or relaxation and the power of binding and looſing thus would be a power legiſlative, of making and repealing laws, and rules of action; and in ſome analogy hereto, the power (with authority and by office) of interpreting laws, that is, of determining and declaring what is commanded, what prohibited, what permitted, may be called a power of binding and looſing (and if we believe Mr. Selden and Grotius perhaps from him (in 16 Mat.) is ſo commonly termed among Jewiſh writers) alſo the exerciſe of any juriſdiction, the deciſion of any caſe, the warding any amends to be done, any mulct to be impoſed, any puniſhment to be inflicted, is a binding: to which kind of binding it ſeems plain that place doth more particularly referr, wherein Matt. 18. 18. our Saviour pronounces valid the arbitration between perſons in difference made by one or two friends; or (if that cannot terminate the controverſy) the final judgment of the Church, concerning which he with aſſeveration pronounces: Amen (verily) I ſay unto you, that whatſoever ye (a Church of you my diſciples) ſhall (viz. in this manner, by way of juriſdiction or arbitration) bind upon earth, ſhall be bound in heaven; and whatſoever ye ſhall looſe upon earth, ſhall be looſed in heaven: All your ſentences and deciſions (duly and impartially made) ſhall be valid and ratified by God himſelf. Alſo the reſult of any contract is an obligation, and they who make or enter into it do bind the parties concerned (themſelves and others.) Moreover the detaining any how under ones power or diſpoſal is binding, and the ſetting free thence a looſing anſwerable thereto, Luk. 13. 16. (ought not, ſaith our Saviour, this daughter of Abraham, whom Satan hath Act. 10. 38. bound this eighteen years to be looſed from this bond on the ſabbath-day? that which is here called bound by Satan, is otherwhere expreſs'd by καταδυναστευομένους ὑπὸ τοῦ διαβόλου, being under the power and dominion of the Devil.) Alſo binding may imply detaining in any preſent condition (as ſuppoſe a condition of guilt, of disfavour, of obnoxiouſneſs to wrath and puniſhment, either poſitively, (by keeping on the ſhackles, which hold them) or negatively by withdrawing the means of getting out; and correſpondently looſing, is a freeing from ſuch a ſtate, by removing the cauſes which hindred, or applying the means which procure liberty. And to Joh. 20. 23. this laſt ſence the other equivalent phraſe (uſed in St. John of retaining and remitting of ſins) doth ſeem to referr: Whoſeſoever ſins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whoſeſoever ſins ye retain, they are retained; that is, whomſoever ye ſhall think fit to detain in a ſtate of guilt, to refuſe pardon and reconcilement unto, they ſhall continue in ſuch ſtate, they ſhall reſt deprived of thoſe benefits; whomſoever ye ſhall judge worthy to be abſolved from guilt and received unto favour, they ſhall effectually be pardoned and reconciled in God's ſight: your act in reſpect to that remiſſion or retention ſhall be approved and ratified in heaven. Now from theſe conſiderations concerning the name of this power, and the term or object thereof; and of the phraſes in ſome meaſure equivalent to that, whereby it is expreſſed, although we may probably inferr ſomewhat concerning the nature thereof, yet the perfect nature, and full extent thereof ſeems beſt deducible from that which we muſt next conſider.

4. The practice and exerciſe of this power; which being by our Saviour committed to his Church, and to the Apoſtles as Governours thereof, and acting in its behalf, we cannot ſuppoſe they would act beyond or beſide it. What we ſee them (in way of office and authority) doing, applicable and agreeable to the meaning of thoſe words, as hitherto in ſome ſort explained, we may well believe done by vertue of this power, ſo expreſly by our Lord beſtowed on them; and the like we may reaſonably ſuppoſe concerning the Church's nearly ſucceeding to their times, that what they generally practiſed in way of government was by authority rity not arbitrarily aſſumed to themſelves, but derived from Chriſt's donation and appointment; declared to be ſo, directed and determined to particular uſe by the Apoſtles, when they planted and ſettled each Church. Act. 2. 14 &c. 20. 18, &c.

Now for the Apoſtles practice, we find as (firſt) to the opening part of this power, that they did with great earneſtneſs and diligence labour to bring men into the Kingdom of Heaven by inſtruction, invitation and perſuaſion (not ſparing any pains, not regarding any difficulty, not ſhunning any danger for the effecting hereof;) Not (to uſe St. Paul's words in the Acts) keeping back any thing that was profitable, but ſhewing and teaching them publickly from houſe to houſe, thoroughly teſtifying both to Jews, and alſo to the Greeks repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. That having thus induced men, and qualified them to enter, (by entertaining the doctrine of Chriſt, and reſolution to live according thereto) they did actually admit them into this ſtate; by a ſolemn act, containing a ſymbolical repreſentation of the nature of this ſtate, with the benefits and privileges accompanying it; declaring the perſons ſo admitted to be received into a ſtate of entire favour with God; to be freed from all precedent guilt; to have all their ſins remitted and blotted out; to be redeemed from the power of darkneſs and tranſlated into the Act. 2. 38. 3. 9.
Kingdom of Chriſt, God's beloved Son. That by conſtant exhortation Col. 2. 12, 13; &c.
to perſeverance, and progreſs in faith and obedience (againſt all temptations, perſecutions and ſeductions) in St. Paul's words, Warning every man, Rom. 4. 25. 1 Cor. 6. 11.
and teaching every man in all wiſdom, they might preſent (or render) every Col. 1. 18.
man perfect in Chriſt Jeſus:) They did endeavour to preſerve and retain men in this ſtate; that when men being overborn by temptation of the fleſh, or perſecution of the world, or ſeduced by the cunning of falſe-teachers did decline, and were in danger of deſerting the profeſſion or practice agreeable to this ſtate, they did labour zealouſly to reclaim, and re-ſettle them therein: and, that ſuch having fallen from it of themſelves, or having been (by reaſon of their ſcandalous and contagious practice) in way of cenſure and puniſhment removed from it, they were ready (upon their repentance ſufficiently declared) to receive and reſtore them; re-inſtating them in their former condition, and remitting their offences: (If any man, ſaith St. Paul, be prevented in a tranſgreſſion) ye Gal. 6. 1.
that are ſpiritual, καταρτίζετε τὸν τοιοῦτον, reſtore, (re-eſtabliſh, ſet in a right and entire ſtate) ſuch an one, in the ſpirit of meekneſs; conſidering thy ſelf leſt thou alſo be tempted: and, If any one doth not obey our words---mark 2 Theſſ. 3. 14.
ſuch an one, and do not converſe with him, that he may be aſhamed: however do not account him an enemy, but admoniſh him as a brother.) And more plainly; St. Paul injoins the Corinthians to account a puniſhment impo- 2 Cor. 2. 7, 8, 10.
ſed upon a grievous offender ſufficient; that they ſhould favour (or indulge with, or forgive) and comfort him, leſt he ſhould be ſwallowed up with grief; that they ſhould confirm love toward him; declaring, that what favour they ſhould ſhew in ſuch caſes, he ſhould conſent and comply with him therein: And he otherwhere tells us, that the power he had beſtowed 2 Cor. 13. 10.
upon him by Chriſt, according to which he might, upon occaſion, uſe 1 Cor. 5. 5.
perſons ſeverely, was for edification, and not for deſtruction; that the extremeſt puniſhment inflicted (delivery to Satan, from whoſe dominion they were by entrance into Chriſt's Kingdom freed) was for deſtruction 1 Tim. 1. 20.
of the fleſh, that the ſpirit might be ſaved in the day of judgment; and that they might learn not to blaſpheme, intimating a reſtitution into this ſtate by repentance: And laſtly, whereas St. Paul adviſes Timothy not to lay 1 Tim. 5. 22.
ſuddenly his hands upon any man, nor (thereby) to partake with other men's ſins; he ſeems to intimate the practice of receiving offenders into full communion of the Church, and re-admittance into this ſtate, ſignified by that ceremonious action. Thus did the Apoſtles uſe the Power of the Keys on one hand; opening, and admitting, and keeping within the ſtate of Grace. We alſo ſhall find them ſhutting and excluding from it: by * Εὔθετοι εἰς τὴν βασιλείαν τοῦ θεοῦ. refuſing and rejecting ſuch as were not worthy and * well diſpoſed for it; withdrawing the means of inſtruction, and perſuaſion; not caſting their Luk. 9. 62. pearls to ſwine; ſhaking the duſt off their feet, when men (as it is in the Act. 13. 46, 51. 18. 6. Acts) did thruſt away the Word of God, and did not judge themſelves worthy of eternal life. We find them alſo exerciſing authority upon ſuch as were admitted; dealing ſeverely with perſons walking diſorderly in any kind of lewd and vicious practice; diſobeying their words and orders; making diviſions and ſcandals; breathing falſe and bad doctrines, contrary to that which they had taught: ſuch they injoin Chriſtians to decline from, and avoid all communion and converſation with them: ſuch as bad lea- Rom. 16. 17, &c. ven, they command to be purged out from the Chriſtian congregations; 2 Theſſ. 2. 3. to be taken from among them; to be delivered up to Satan. Thus did 1 Cor. 5. 7. they ſhut the Kingdom of Heaven; and ſo, according to their example 2. 11. and order (as we ſhould in reaſon ſuppoſe) did the Governours of the Chriſtian Church after them both open and ſhut it: opening it by bap- Baſ. Naz. &c. tiſm (which the Fathers ſometime expreſsly call κλεὶς οὐρανῶν, the Key of Heaven) and receiving perſons well inſtructed and well diſpoſed into it; opening it again by receiving perſons, who had been for heinous offences put out, upon due teſtification and reaſonable aſſurance of their amendment and repentance; and ſhutting it upon perſons unfit to enter; ſeparating and excluding from it ſuch as notoriouſly misbehaved themſelves therein, to the diſhonour, diſturbance, and detriment of the Church. I cannot inſiſt upon particulars, nor ſtand to produce teſtimonies concerning them; let one clear paſſage (as to the latter part, ſhutting) out of Tertullian's Apologetick, wherein he declares the manner commonly Cap. 38. practiſed in the Chriſtian Churches, ſuffice. Certè (ſaith he) fidem ſanctis vocibus paſcimus, ſpem erigimus, fiduciam figimus, diſciplinam præceptorum nihilominus inculcationibus denſamus; ibidem etiam exhortationes, caſtigationes, & cenſura divina; nam & judicatur magno cum pondere, ut apud certos de Dei conſpectu, ſummúmque futuri judicii præjudicium eſt, ſi quis ità deliquerit, ut à communicatione orationis, & conventus, & omnis ſancti commercii relegetur.

5. As for the riſe and occaſion of this power (beſide the neceſſity and utility thereof, which might cauſe it to be appointed) we may conſider, that as all (or the greater part) of inſtitutions and ceremonies practiſed among Chriſtians; as the whole frame of government in their Churches ſeem to have been drawn from, or according to the pattern of God's ancient Church; (Chriſtianity not affecting novelty or difference from that, but ſo far as conſiſted with its main deſign of reforming men's minds, and promoting the ſpiritual ſervice of God, and ſuited with reaſon or expediency, endeavouring conformity to it and reſemblance thereof;) ſo it ſeems our Saviour in this particular did but accommodate and veſt in the governours of his Church a power uſed in that of the Jews; for we ſhall find this power in its ſeveral parts not only repreſented in type, but expreſſed in direct and real practice. We ſee that the Jewiſh Church was opened to Proſelytes by circumciſion, by waſhing, by expiatory ſacri- Numb. 15. 2. fices; that unclean and leprous perſons were excluded from the camp and congregation; prohibited conteſt and converſation, that they might not Levit. 14. annoy or infect thoſe which were pure and ſound; that upon their recovery and purification they were reſtored to ſociety and converſation;

that that Church was wholly ſhut upon enormous offenders, (ſuch who could not be kept in order, who preſumptuouſly neglected ſome great duty, or violated ſome great commandment; who diſgraced the Religion by ſcandalous practice, or diſturbed the peace by contumacious carriage, refuſing to hear the Judge and the Prieſt;) that, I ſay, ſuch perſons were quite ſhut out by total extermination and exciſion. We find alſo ſeveral degrees of Eccleſiaſtical cenſure (anſwerable to the degrees of offence) practiſed among them; alluded to in the New Teſtament; ſeparating from communion and converſe; excluſion from the ſynagogue; anathematizing or imprecating, and devoting to God's judgment: the practice of which things being grounded in reaſon, and ſuitable to the ſtate of the Chriſtian Church, (as well as to that of the Jews) and conducible to the welfare thereof, 'tis no wonder a power of doing the like was granted unto the Chriſtian Church, and exerciſed by the ſuper-intendency thereof. But theſe things I cannot ſtand to purſue minutely and diſtinctly.

Vid. Ez. 10.8.
Luk. 6. 22.
Joh. 11. 22.
12. 42.
Gal. 1. 8, 9, &c.

I ſhould, laſtly, conſider the neceſſity and uſefulneſs of this power; how neceſſary and conducible it is to promote the ends of Chriſtian Religion; to preſerve the honour of the Church, and of its Governours; to ſecure the members thereof from contagion of bad manners and influences of bad example; to maintain good order and peace; to reſtrain from offending; and reform them that ſhall offend; and to the like purpoſes. But I ſhall leave this Point to your farther conſideration.

The forgiveneſs of ſins; the reſurrection of the body; the life everlaſting.

THat it is the natural condition of mankind, to lie under a violent proclivity (or rather an unavoidable neceſſity) of frequently tranſgreſſing the plaineſt dictates of reaſon, the ſureſt rules of equity, however fortified by the authority of God himſelf; commanding and requiring duty, promiſing reward, and threatning puniſhment, continual experience ſhews; that hereby men do not only much diſgrace and abuſe themſelves (doing againſt the dignity of their nature and their own particular welfare) but highly injure, diſhonour, and ill requite God (their Maker, their natural Lord, their Benefactour, from whom they have received their being, under whoſe power they wholly are, to whom they owe all their Good; and conſequently to whom all obedience, reſpect, and gratitude is due from them) is alſo manifeſt; their own conſciences will tell them ſo much; their own reaſon will therefore condemn them; that hereby they are involved in a ſtate of guilt and debt, become obnoxious to the juſt wrath and vengeance of God, beyond all poſſibility of making (by themſelves) any reparation or ſatisfaction; (for they are more apt to incurr new, than able to make amends for old blame; to accumulate more than to diſcharge foregoing debts;) that hence they muſt fall into a condition of reſtleſs fear and inextricable perplexity of mind, dreading the effects of divine juſtice and vengeance, ſometime to come upon them; that there cannot in reality be any other relief or deliverance from this diſtreſs than from the benignity of God diſpoſing him to bear patiently, to forgive mercifully theſe offences; not in their apprehenſion any ſuch relief (any freedom from ſuch diſcomfort and anxiety) than from a plain ſignification of God's being ſo graciouſly diſpoſed, is alſo clear from the ſame light. Now of ſuch a diſpoſition in God (to be appeaſed and to pardon offences) we find a general preſumption among thoſe who have had any knowledge or opinion concerning ὑπόδικοι.

Deut. 32. 6.

Rom. 5. 19.

Teſtimonium animæ naturaliter Chriſtianæ. Tert.

God, (drawn, I ſuppoſe, partly from primitive tradition, partly from experience of God's forbearance to puniſh and continuance to beſtow the common benefits of Providence upon offenders, partly from an opinion that bounty and clemency are perfections and excellencies worthy of God, or laſtly, from a natural inclination in men (neceſſary to that quiet and comfort of their minds, to flatter themſelves with pleaſing hopes;) we find, I ſay, ſuch a general preſumption concerning God's diſpoſition to be reconcilable and mercifull to offenders; eſpecially upon their acknowledgment of guilt and need of favour, together with a declaration of their willingneſs to make him ſuch amends as they are able to do: ſuch a preſumption to have been that univerſal cuſtom of preſenting ſacrifices and obligations to God doth ſufficiently ſhew: which implied in them who preſented them a confeſſion of guilt to be expiated, of puniſhment to be deſerved (ſuch as was repreſented in the deſtruction of a living creature,) as alſo a deſire of making ſatisfaction (intimated by their cheerfull parting with ſomewhat dear and valuable to them;) upon which conſiderations of humble acknowledgment, of willingneſs to ſatisfy in a manner ſo ſignal and ſolemn, declared they did hope God's wrath would be appeaſed and his judgments averted from them: Such it ſeems was the common preſumption of mankind; which yet could not ſatisfy or quiet the minds of them who ſhould conſider, that as ſuch performances could not really take away guilt, nor ſufficiently repair thoſe ineſtimable wrongs and affronts put upon God, ſo God had never plainly declared his intention to conſider or accept them; ſo that in effect their opinion was ſomewhat unreaſonable, and their hope groundleſs. This obſervation I propound as yielding a good argument (the general conſent of mankind) to prove that the doctrine (concerning remiſſion of ſins obtainable from God) is a fundamental point, and a principal part of all Religion, and that yet (as to any ſolid and certain ground of believing or hoping it) it is peculiar to Chriſtian Religion; God never before the revelation Evangelical) having clearly and fully ſignified, that he would pardon offences (at leaſt all of them, heinous and preſumptuous offences) committed againſt him. What God would have done he had taught partly by a Rom. 2. natural law and light implanted in every man's ſoul, partly by expreſs promulgation made to the Patriarchs of old, and derived to poſterity from them by tradition; how men in reſpect thereto behaved themſelves, their conſcience (accuſing or excuſing them) could teſtify; but how, in caſe of tranſgreſſing thoſe dictates and laws, he would deal with them, he Gal. 3. never plainly had diſcovered. Indeed the Jewiſh diſpenſation (which was Numb. 15. 27, &c. particular and preparatory to Chriſtianity) did appoint and accept Expiations for ſome leſſer faults, committed out of ignorance and infirmity; Act. 13. 38. but did not pretend to juſtify from all things (as St. Paul in the Acts ſpeaks) nor promiſe or give hope of pardon upon any terms for great preſumptuous ſins committed wilfully, with a high hand: it rather threatens an indelible continuance of guilt upon an extreme and inevitable Numb. 15. 30. vengeance againſt the perpetrators of them: The ſoul (ſaith the Law) that doth preſumptuouſly, the ſame reproacheth the Lord, and that ſoul ſhall be cut off from among his people: Becauſe he hath deſpiſed the word of the Lord, and hath broken his commandment, that ſoul ſhall utterly be cut off, (by God's ſpecial Providence) his iniquity ſhall be upon him. And we know how ſolemn and dreadfull imprecations were pronounced againſt not only Deut. 27. 26. the tranſgreſſours of ſome particular laws, but generally againſt all thoſe Gal. 3. 10. who did not continue in all things written in the law to do them: ſo that the remiſſion tendred by Moſes was of a very narrow extent, and ſuch as could hardly exempt any man from obligation to and fear of puniſhment; Indeed, to prevent utter deſpair, and that which is naturally conſequent thereupon, a total neglect of duty; God was pleaſed by his Prophets among that people occaſionally to intimate ſomething of farther grace reſerved, and that he was willing (upon condition of humble and ſincere repentance) to receive even thoſe, who were guilty of the higheſt offences, to mercy. But theſe diſcoveries, as they were ſpecial and extraordinary, ſo were they farther preparatory to the Goſpel, and as dawnings to that bright day of grace, which did by Chriſt ſpread its comfortable Luk. 1. 77, 78.

light over the world, revealing to mankind a general capacity of God's 2 Cor. 6. 2. favour, (procured in a manner admirable and ſtrange) obtainable by means declared, upon terms propounded therein.

Thereby is fully and clearly manifeſted to us how God in free mercy and pity to us (all our works being unworthy of any acceptance, all our ſacrifices unfit in the leaſt part to ſatisfy for our offences) was pleaſed himſelf to provide an obedience worthy of his acceptance, and thoroughly well-pleaſing to him (imputable to us as performed by one of our kind and race; and apt to appeaſe God's juſt wrath againſt ſuch a generation of rebels) to provide a ſacrifice in nature ſo pure, in value ſo precious, as might be perfectly ſatisfactory for our offences: in regard to which obedience God is become reconciled, and opens his arms of grace to mankind; in reſpect to which ſacrifice, he tenders remiſſion to all men, that upon his terms (moſt equal and eaſie terms) are willing to embrace it.
This is the great doctrine, ſo peculiar to the Goſpel, from whence eſpe- Vid. Lu. 1. 77.
cially it hath its name; from whence it is ſtyled the Goſpel of grace; this Act. 20. 24.
is the good tidings of great joy to all people, which the Angel firſt preached Luk. 2. 10.
at our Saviour's birth; which the Apoſtles were ordained to preach and Luk. 24. 47, 48.
teſtify unto all nations as the main point of Chriſtian Religion (that in our Saviour's name repentance and remiſſion of ſins ſhould be preached unto Act. 5. 31.
all nations) that God had exalted him to his right hand as a Prince and a Heb. 12. 17.
Saviour to give repentance unto Iſrael, and remiſſion of ſins: (to give repentance, that is to give μετανοίας τόπον, i. e. a room for repentance in order Act. 13. 38.
to mercy, to make it acceptable and available for the remiſſion of ſins:) 1 Joh. 2. 12.
God (ſaith St. Paul) did conclude all men under diſobedience, that he might Rom. 11. 32.
have mercy upon all: All men have ſinned and are come ſhort of the glory of Gal. 3. 22.
God; But, we are juſtified freely by his grace, by the redemption which is in Rom. 3. 4, 5, &c.
Chriſt Jeſus; whom God hath propounded a propitiatory by faith in his bloud, for the demonſtration of his righteouſneſs, toward the forgiveneſs of fore-paſt offences. In which words of St. Paul, all things concerning the ſubject of our preſent diſcourſe are expreſſed or implied: the nature of it (freeing us from guilt, and rendring us juſt in God's ſight,) the cauſes whence it ſprang; the external impulſive in reſpect of God, or occaſion thereof, our neceſſity and miſery; the internal impulſive, God's grace, and free goodneſs; alſo the meritorious cauſe, procuring it (our Saviour's obedience, and ſuffering; whereby he did make atonement for our ſins,) the ends whither it tends (the demonſtration of God's goodneſs, and his juſtice; or of his mercifull juſtice, ſignified by the word δικαιοσύνη,) the terms and condition, upon complyance with, or performance of which the effect of it ſhould follow; (Faith, that is a ſincere embracement, or hearty perſuaſion concerning the truth of that doctrine or revelation, which offered it; implying alſo a firm reſolution to ſubmit to the yoke of Chriſt, and obey his righteous laws;) laſtly, the means of conveying, declaring, and confirming it (implied by the words, πάρεσις προγεγονότων ἁμαρτημάτων, the remiſſion of fore-paſt ſins; ſuch as was ſolemnly exhibited, ſignified, ratified in the Church-miniſteries of baptiſm, abſolution, and reconciliation upon penance and confeſſion; eſpecially the firſt.) Theſe things I cannot inſiſt upon particularly or diſtinctly, nor do much need to do ſo, having had occaſion to conſider moſt of them formerly in theſe diſcourſes, eſpecially when we ſpake concerning the ſalvation procured by Jeſus, the ſacerdotal office of Chriſt, the death and paſſion of our Saviour: I ſhall therefore only now briefly touch (that which ſeems here ſpecially referred to) the ordinary manner of conveying this great grace to men, by the miniſtery of the Church. To which purpoſe we may conſider, that although it be true that God generally propounds remiſſion of ſins (upon Acts 26. 20. 3. 19. account of our Saviour's performances and in his name) to all that truly repent and turn unto him; that he chiefly grants it upon this conſideration; nor with-holds it from any upon the blameleſs default of any other performance; yet he requires (and to comply with his will therein, is part of duty which the repentance mentioned diſpoſes to, and is declared by;) God requires, I ſay, (as well for the publick edification and the honour of the Church, as for the comfort and advantage of the perſons more immediately concerned herein) that this repentance,

1. Be publickly declared and approved by the Church; that this remiſſion be ſolemnly and formally imparted by the hands of God's Miniſters, declared by expreſs words, or ratified by certain ſeals, and ſignified by myſterious repreſentations appointed by God: Thus hath every man (upon declaration of his real faith and repentance, to the ſatisfaction of Acts 2. 38. 3. 19. the Church) being admitted to baptiſm, the entire forgiveneſs of his ſins, and reception into God's favour, conſigned unto him therein; confirmed and repreſented by a viſible ſign, ſhewing, that as by water the body is waſhed and cleanſed from adherent filth, ſo by the grace then imparted, the ſouls of them (upon whom that myſtical rite is performed) Act. 3. 19. Heb. 10. 22. 1 Pet. 3. 21. are cleared from the guilts that ſtained it, their ſins are wiped out ('tis St. Peter's expreſſion in the Acts) their hearts are ſprinkled from an evil conſcience (as it is in the Epiſtle to the Hebrews) they are ſaved (or put into a ſtate of ſalvation; as St. Peter aſſures us.)

2. Likewiſe, if Chriſtian men having fallen into ſin, or failed of duty toward God, do ſeriouſly confeſs their fault, and heartily repent thereof, when the Miniſters of the Church in God's name and for Chriſt's ſake do declare (or pronounce) to them ſo doing, or ſo qualified, the pardon of their ſin, and abſolve them from it; we need not doubt that their ſins are really forgiven, and the pardon expreſſed in words, is effectually diſpenſed unto them.

3. Moreover, if perſons having committed notorious enormities, ad- 1 Joh. 5. 16. judged of a deadly and deſtructive nature (ſins unto death, St. John calls them) inconſiſtent with the ſtate of grace, and ſcandalous to the Chriſtian profeſſion, are therefore juſtly ſecluded from communion of the Church; when upon ſubmiſſion to the penances injoined, and ſatisfactory demonſtrations of repentance, they are reſumed into the boſom of the Church, we may be aſſured that (according to the Catholick reſolution againſt the Novatians;) ſuppoſing the repentance true and real, their ſins are remitted, and they reſtored to a ſtate of grace: For ſince God hath Ezek. 18. 21, 22, 27, 30. Eſ. 1. 16, 17, 18. expreſly declared, that if the wicked will turn from all his ſins that he hath committed, and keep all God's ſtatutes, and do that which is lawfull and right, he ſhall ſurely live, he ſhall not die; All his tranſgreſſions that he hath committed, they ſhall not be mentioned unto him;---he ſhall ſave his ſoul alive Matt. 18. 13. Luk. 15. ---iniquity ſhall not be his ruin---that if we waſh our ſelves, and make our ſelves clean, and put away the evil of our doings from God's eyes, and ceaſe to do evil---Though our ſins be as ſcarlet, they ſhall be as white as ſnow; though they be red like crimſon, they ſhall be as wool. Since God delights not in the death of any ſinner, but rather deſires that all men ſhould be ſaved: Since our Saviour intimates the ſatisfaction he hath in finding the ſheep that had erred from his fold; and God is ſo highly pleaſed with the return of a prodigal ſon (that had ſpent abroad all his ſuſtenance in riot) home to his houſe: Since our Saviour's performances are in value and vertue ſufficient to expiate for the greateſt offences, to redeem the moſt grievous ſinners; ſo that if any man ſins, he hath, upon due repentance, an advocate with the father: Since the deſign of ſuch puniſhments, inflicted upon offenders, reſpects edification, not deſtruction; and procures the ruin of the fleſh that the ſpirit may be ſaved: Theſe things, I ſay, being conſidered, the Church (to which the publick and ordinary diſpenſation of God's grace, according to the diſpoſitions and conditions which he hath declared to require in order to men's becoming capable thereof, is committed) hath ſufficient warrant to receive ſuch perſons into a ſtate of grace and reconciliation with God; ſo that we need not doubt but whoſe ſins they ſhall thus remit, ſhall in effect (according to our Saviour's word) be remitted; whom they ſhall thus abſolve on earth, they ſhall be abſolved in heaven. But theſe things I have formerly touched, in diſcourſing upon the Power of the Keys; I ſhall only add a few words concerning the uſe and practical influence of this Point, being believed and conſidered, ſhould have upon us. And,

1 Joh. 2. 2.
1 Cor. 13. 10.
1 Cor. 5. 5.
Joh. 29. 23.
Matt. 18. 18.

1. It ſhould engage us to admire the goodneſs of God; and with gratefull hearts to praiſe him for it; if we ſhould offer the higheſt injuries, affronts, and deſpights to the Majeſty of an earthly Prince among us (ſo infinitely inferiour to that of God) we ſhould have reaſon to admire his goodneſs and clemency, did he paſs them over, did he not with extreme ſeverity avenge them: there can be no higher than thoſe we have offered to Almighty God (none capable in any compariſon of ſuch aggravations) how unexpreſſibly great therefore is his goodneſs that freely offers us pardon; that earneſtly invites and intreats us to accept it; that hath been at ſuch an expence, and condeſcended ſo low to purchaſe for us the means thereof? It is ὑπερβάλλουσα χάρις, an exceſſive grace of God; ὑπερβάλλων πλοῦτος τῆς χάριτος, an exceſſive riches of grace; ἀνεκδιήγητος δωρεὰ (an unutterable gift) of God, as St. Paul ſpeaketh: Let us conſider our ſtate, and the nature of God, with the aggravations of our offences grounded on them, and we ſhall in ſome meaſure perceive it ſo; and what thankfulneſs we are conſequently obliged to render.

2 Cor. 9. 14, 15.
Eph. 2. 7.

2. It ſhould beget in us as gratefull reſpect, ſo ardent love to God, in proportion to the favour we have received: It was his love that moved him to forgive us our ſins (God being rich in mercy, for his great love, with which he loved us, did quicken us with Chriſt, who were dead in treſpaſſes and ſins.) And to this love of pity in God, ſhould anſwer a love of reverence in us toward ſo gracious a Lord. Our Saviour you know propounds the queſtion to St. Peter concerning two debtours, of whom one did owe 50, the other 500 pence; and both being forgiven by the creditour, whom he thought of the two ſhould love him moſt: he anſwers according to the plain dictate of nature, he to whom moſt was forgiven: and our Saviour approves his anſwer with an ὀρθῶς ἔκρινας, Thou haſt judged rightly: And the Holy Penitent (Mary Magdalen) becauſe many ſins were forgiven her, therefore did love much: ſo doth reaſon and example oblige us to do.

Eph. 2. 4.
Luk. 7. 41. & 47.

Pſal. 32. 1, 2.
Rom. 5. 1.
Iſa. 44. 22.

3. It affords matter of comfort to us; a comfortable ſenſe of mercy conferred; a comfortable hope of mercy to be obtained: Bleſſed is he (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) whoſe tranſgreſſion is forgiven, whoſe ſin is pardoned--- Bleſſed is the man, unto whom the Lord imputeth no iniquity--- Being juſtified by faith, we have peace with God. All good Chriſtians are in this bleſſed ſtate, and may enjoy a delightfull ſatisfaction in reflecting thereupon, able to ſupport them againſt all other occaſions of ſorrow or diſpleaſure that may befall them; and, it will fortify us againſt deſpair to conſider, that however God hath been offended by our ſins, he will be appeaſed by our repentance; ſo that our ſins ſhall be blotted out and vaniſh as a thick cloud, which paſſing away, leaves a ſerene sky behind it. If any man ſin, we have an advocate, &c.

Joh. 5. 14.
Pœnitentia tabula poſt naufragium. Tertull.

4. It is alſo an engagement to obedience: Behold, (ſaid our Saviour to the diſeaſed man) thou art made whole, ſin no more, leſt a worſe thing come upon thee. Having obtained a cure and ſtate of health by God's grace, we by relapſing into ſin, expoſe our ſelves to greater danger, we incurr deeper guilt: Our ſtate, though not wholly deſperate, becomes very perillous. 'Tis better continuing in the ſhip, than committing our ſafety to a plank.

Matt. 18. 6.
Matt. 18. 35.
Matt. 6. 14.

5. Laſtly, the conſideration of this point will ſhew us how much we are obliged (in conformity and compliance with God) to bear with and forgive the offences or injuries done againſt us; you know how ſtrongly our Saviour preſſes the conſideration of God's free pardon beſtowed on us to this purpoſe: How he ſets out the unreaſonableneſs and diſ-ingenuity of them which are hard-hearted toward their brethren and fellow-ſervants in this caſe; how he threatens unavoidable ſeverity toward thoſe, who do not from their hearts forgive their brethren their treſpaſſes, and promiſes remiſſion of ſins, to them who (according to what they in their prayers profeſs themſelves to do) ſhall forgive to men the offences committed againſt them; making it not only an indiſpenſible condition, but (as it were) a means of obtaining God's mercy and favour. But I leave it to your meditation to make farther profitable deductions from this point: So I proceed:

The reſurrection of the body.

Vid. Maccab.
Tuſc. 1.

Τῆς σαρκὸς, of the fleſh, it is in Greek; which comes to the ſame; the immortality or ſurviving of the ſoul after death (as being a foundation of receiving reward and puniſhment for men's deeds in this life) hath been in all Religions (except perchance that of the ancient Jews; but they afterwards found it neceſſary to ſuppoſe this point--- when they found the moſt pious obnoxious to greateſt affliction, which propounded great rewards and puniſhments in this life, aſſuring that Providence which diſpenſed them, by ſenſible experiments) hath been, I ſay, almoſt in all Religions deemed a neceſſary principle, as the moſt potent excitement to vertue; the moſt powerful determent from wickedneſs; the moſt ſatisfactory ground of reſolving difficulties concerning the nature and providence of God; which general conſent (running through all ancient Religions) according to that of Cicero, Permanere animos arbitramur conſenſu nationum omnium, argueth it not only agreeable to common reaſon, but deduced from original tradition, without which (conſidering the variable diſpoſitions and capacities of mankind) it is hard to conceive ſo many Nations ſhould unanimouſly conſpire in an opinion of that nature (ſo removed from ſenſe) however reaſonable. Indeed the Philoſophers, men affecting to ſoar above the pitch of vulgar apprehenſion, and who perceiving the great ſuperſtition and vanity immixt with common Religions (as they had been by fraud and folly corrupted, and become degenerate from primitive tradition) did not ſcruple to call any thing delivered in them to queſtion, and to determine about them according to reaſons offering themſelves, did differ herein; yet ſo as ſcarce any, who acknowledged a Divinity, which (having made and governing the World, and to whom therefore reverence and ſervice from men was due) did not approve and aſſert it; as indeed they muſt needs do in conſonance to their opinion concerning God; all arguments upon which Religion is built, inferring it; which they did endeavour farther to confirm by reaſons, drawn from the nature of man, which you may ſee collected and elegantly urged by Cicero in the firſt of his Tuſculane Queſtions: which arguments yet we may perceive had not ſo great an efficacy either upon him, or upon Socrates himſelf (the firſt great promoter of this doctrine as deducible from reaſon) that they were thoroughly confident of its truth, and freed from all doubt concerning it. The certainty thereof we owe to Chriſtianity alone, and to his inſtruction, who brought life and 2 Tim. 1.10.

immortality (that is, immortal life) to light: It plainly teaches us, that when we die, we ſhall not wholly periſh like brute beaſts (or other natural bodies, when they are diſſolved) that our ſouls do not vaniſh into nothing, nor are reſolved into inviſible principles, but return into God's hand, and the place by him appointed for them; there continuing in that life, which is proper to a ſoul. This Chriſtianity teacheth us; and not only ſo, but farther, that our bodies themſelves ſhall be raiſed again out of their duſt and corruption; and our ſouls ſhall be re-united to them; and our perſons reſtored to their perfect integrity of nature: the bringing of which effects to paſs, by the divine power is called moſt commonly the reſurrection of the dead, (or from the dead, ἐκ νεκρῶν) and ſimply the ἐγείρειν.
reſurrection; ſometimes the regeneration (or iterated nativity) and being Heb. 11. 19. ἀναγαγεῖν.
born from the dead; which names plainly imply a reſpect to the body, and Heb. 13. 20.
to the perſon of a man, as conſtituted of body and ſoul: the meer per- Matt. 19. 28.
manency of our ſouls in being and life, could not be called (with any Coloſ. 1. 18. Apoc. 1. propriety or truth) a reſurrection; that which never had fallen, could not be ſaid to be raiſed up; that which did never die, could not be reſtored from death; nor could men be ſaid to riſe again but in reſpect to that part, or that ſtate, which had fallen and ceaſed to be: And as to be born at firſt ſignifies the production and union of the parts eſſential to a man, body and ſoul, ſo to be born again implies the reſtitution and re-union of the ſame; a man becoming thereby the ſame entire perſon, which he was before. The ſame is alſo ſometimes ſignified in terms more formal and expreſs:
the quickning of the dead; the vivification of our mortal bodies; the redemp- Rom. 4. 17. 8.11, 23.
tion of our body; this corruptible (τὸ φθαρτὸν τοῦτο, this very ſame corrup- 2 Cor. 5.2, &c. tible) putting on immortality; thoſe which are in the Graves hearing Chriſt's 1 Cor. 15. 53.
voice, and proceeding forth to reſurrection of life or judgment; The awaking Joh. 5.28.
of them which ſleep in the duſt of the earth; The ſea, the death, the hell (or Dan. 12.2. univerſal Grave) yielding up their dead: which expreſſions, and the like, Apoc. 20. 13.
occurring, moſt clearly and fully prove the reſtitution of the body, and its re-union with the ſoul, and the perſon becoming in ſubſtance completely the ſame that he was; which truth of all perhaps, which Chriſtianity revealed, as moſt new and ſtrange, was the hardlieſt received, and found moſt oppoſition among the Heathens, eſpecially Philoſophers.
Hearing the reſurrection of the dead, ſome of them mocked; others ſaid, Act. 17. 32.
We will hear thee again about this: ſo was St. Paul's diſcourſe entertained

Vid. Orig. c. Celſ. I. among the Athenians; ſome derided it as (it ſeems) conceiving it a thing altogether impoſſible, or very improbable to happen; they did not ſee Nat. Hiſt. II. 7. VII. 55. how it could, why it ſhould be done (as Pliny, ſome-where counting the revolution of the dead to life, a thing impoſſible to be performed, other-* Puerile deliramentum. where a * childiſh foppery to ſuppoſe it;) but why it ſhould be impoſſible to the divine power, no good reaſon can be aſſigned: To recollect the diſperſed parts of a man's body; to diſpoſe them into their due order; to reduce them unto a temper fit to ſerve vital functions; to re-join the ſoul unto the body ſo reſtored, why ſhould it be impoſſible, why ſeem hard to him, who firſt framed and temper'd our body out of the duſt, and inſpired the ſoul into it? yea to him, who out of meer confuſion digeſted the whole world into ſo wonderfull an order and harmony? to him that into a dead lump of earth inſerted ſuch varieties of life? that from ſeeds buried in the ground, and corrupted there, cauſes ſuch goodly plants to 1 Cor. 15. 36, &c. ſpring forth? that hath made all nature to ſubſiſt by continual vi-ciſſitudes of life and death? every morning (as it were) and every ſpring repreſenting a general reſurrection: [Ah Lord God (ſaith the Jer. 32. 17. Prophet Jeremy) thou haſt made the heaven and the earth by thy great power and ſtretched-out arm, and there is nothing too hard for thee: (too hard for omniſcient wiſdom to contrive, for omnipotent ſtrength to execute.)] And what difficulties ſoever fancy may ſuggeſt, can we doubt of that to be poſſible, which experience ſhews us to be done? Let that Eze. 37. 1, &c. paſſage in the Prophet Ezekiel ſuffice, concerning very dry bones ſcat-tered about in an open field, which at God's word came together and united in order; the ſinews and the fleſh coming upon them, and the skin covering them; and laſtly, breath coming into them, ſo that they lived and ſtood upon their feet an exceeding great Army; whether we ſuppoſe it to be a parable or a hiſtory, to relate to the laſt reſurrection or not, implies yet a poſſibility of ſuch a reſurrection, and yields a lively reſemblance thereof: But more plainly do many inſtances of particular reſurrections, for the confirmation of our faith recorded in Scripture:
Heb. 11. 35. Women (ſaith the Author to the Hebrews) *received their dead by reſur-
1 King. 17 23. rection*; relating to the Widow of Sarepta's child, who by Elias's prayer
2 King. 4. 36. did revive; and the Shunamites child raiſed by Eliſha; to which might 2 King. 13. 21. be added the man, who being let down into Eliſha's Sepulchre, and touching the bones of that Prophet, did revive and ſtand upon his feet:
And in the New Teſtament we have likewiſe divers examples of perſons by our Saviour raiſed and reſtored from death to life, Jairus his daugh-Joh. 11. 39. ter, the young man of Naim, Lazarus (who had been four days dead, in which time bodies come to putrefie and ſmell) and more remarkably Matt. 27. 52. 'tis ſaid in St. Matthew's Goſpel, that at our Saviour's death many tombs were opened, and many bodies of Saints, that had departed, roſe; and coming out of the tombs (after our Saviour's reſurrection) entred into the Holy τοῖς πολλοῖς. City, and did appear to many (or publickly; a clear and full experiment of a miraculous reſurrection, like to that we believe: But above all, our Saviour's reſurrection may confirm our faith herein, it being deſigned to that purpoſe, πίστιν παρασχὼν πᾶσιν, God holding forth (ſaith St. Paul) a Act. 17. 32. convincing argument to all of the reſurrection (and other appendant verities 1 Cor. 15. 10. taught in the Goſpel) raiſing him up from the dead: And if Chriſt be preached that he roſe from the dead; how ſay ſome, that there is no reſurrection of the dead? how can any man deny that to be poſſible, which is ſo really exemplified? nay, how can we doubt that we ſhall follow, when we ſee him going before; as the captain of life; as our fore-runner; as 1 Cor. 15. 21. 22. 49. the firſt-fruits of them that ſleep, and firſt-born from the dead, as that ſecond
Adam,

Adam, whom it is congruous that we ſhould all conform to in the reſtitution of our nature, as we did to the firſt Adam in the decay thereof; that we ſhould live by him, as we died by the other; and bear the image of the heavenly immortal man, as we did that of the earthly and mortal one: Neither (as not impoſſible ſo) can this reſurrection be ſhewed improbable, or implauſible, but rather very conſonant to the reaſon of the thing. Man, according to original deſign and frame, doth conſiſt of ſoul and body; thoſe parts have a natural relation, an aptitude, and an appetite (it ſeems by their unwillingneſs to part) to cohabit, communicate, and co-operate with each other: many actions very proper to man's nature cannot be performed without their conjunctions,concurrence,many capacities of joy and comfort (with their contraries) reſult thence: the ſeparation of them we ſee how violent and repugnant it is to nature; and we are taught that it is penal, and a conſequent of ſin; and therefore cannot be good and perfect. No wonder then, that God deſigning to reſtore man to his ancient integrity, and more (to a higher perfection) to reward him with all the felicity his nature is capable of,(on one hand I mean, as on the other hand to puniſh and afflict him according to his demerit) ſhould raiſe the body and re-join it to the ſoul, that it might contribute its natural ſubſerviency to ſuch enjoyments and ſufferings reſpectively: not to omit the congruity in juſtice, that the bodies which did partake in works of obedience and holineſs, or of diſobedience and prophaneneſs (which, in St. Paul's language, were either ſlaves to impurity and iniquity, or ſervants of righteouſneſs unto ſanctification) ſhould alſo partake in ſuitable recompences; that the body which endured grievous pains for righteouſneſs,ſhould enjoy comfortable refreſhments; that which wallowed in unlawfull pleaſures ſhould undergo juſt torments.

Rom. 6. 19. Tertul. Apol. &c.

I omit (the time ſo requiring) many conſiderations pertinent to this purpoſe: I ſhall only add, what we farther learn in Scripture (which alſo the reaſon of the thing would teach us) concerning this point; that as the bodies of men ſhall be raiſed the ſame in ſubſtance, ſo they ſhall be much altered in quality: for whereas according to their preſent temper and frame our bodies are frail and weak, apt by every ſmall impreſſion upon them to be broken, or impaired, needing continual reparation, and notwithſtanding all means uſed to preſerve them growing to decay and diſſolution; and whereas they are deſtined after their reſurrection, to a continual abiding in joy or pain; it is neceſſary they ſhould be ſo changed as that they may be fit without decay to enjoy thoſe everlaſting comforts, able without diſſolution to undergo thoſe endleſs pains: and particularly farther, whereas the body here doth clog the ſoul, doth excite troubleſome paſſions, doth incline to ſenſual deſire, doth require much care to preſerve and pleaſe it; ſuch things being inconſiſtent with or prejudicial to that ſtate of ſpiritual reſt and joy, which good men are deſtined to; a change muſt needs be made therein, preventive of ſuch inconveniencies: for (as St. Paul ſaith) fleſh and bloud (a body ſo brittle and paſſible, ſo apt to be affected by, ſo addicted to ſenſible goods) cannot enter into the Kingdom of God; nor can corruption inherit incorruption; but this corruptible muſt put on incorruption, and this mortal muſt put on immortality; the dead muſt be raiſed incorruptible; there muſt be a very ſudden mutation (ſo St. Paul in ſeveral places expreſly tells us) a metamorphoſis into a reſemblance with Chriſt's glory; a transfiguration of our vile body into conformity with his glorious body. Our body is ſown in corruption, it ſhall be raiſed in incorruption; it is ſown in diſhonour, raiſed in glory; ſown in weakneſs, raiſed in power; ſown a natural body, raiſed a ſpiritual. But ſo much concerning the Reſurrection,I proceed to that which follows thereupon.

1 Cor. 15. 50, 53. 49. 52.

1 Cor. 15. 52. 1 Theſſ. 4. 15, 16, 17. 2 Cor. 3. 18. Phil. 3. 21. Vid. 1 Cor. 15, 42, 43, 44.

Life

Life everlaſting.

THE immediate conſequent of the Reſurrection (common to juſt and unjuſt) is (as we have it in the Catalogue of fundamental doctrines, Heb. 6. 2. ſet down by the Apoſtle to the Hebrews,) κρῖμα αἰώνιον, that judgment, 2 Cor. 5. 10. or doom by which the eternal ſtate of every perſon is determined; accordingly every man muſt bear the things done in the body according to what he hath done, whether it be good or evil. Now this ſtate generally taken (as reſpecting both the righteous and bleſſed; the wicked and miſerable) as it doth ſuppoſe a perpetual duration in being and ſenſe, ſo it may be called everlaſting life; although life (as being commonly apprehended, a principal good, and all men having naturally a ſtrong deſire to preſerve it, Vid. Deut. 5. v. ult. with reference alſo perhaps to the phraſes uſed under the law, wherein continuance in life is propoſed as a reward to the obedient, and death threatned to tranſgreſſours) is uſed to denote peculiarly the bleſſed ſtate; as death (the moſt extreme of legal puniſhments, and moſt abominable to nature) is alſo uſed to ſignify the condition of the
Joh. 5. 29. damned; the reſurrection of life, and reſurrection of damnation; ever- Matt. 25. 45. Dan. 12. 2. laſting life, and everlaſting puniſhment (ſhame and everlaſting contempt) being oppoſed. Although I ſay life be commonly thus taken (as is alſo Phil. 3. 11. the reſurrection ſometimes for that which belongs only to the righteous, Luk. 20. 35. tranſmitting them into happineſs) yet the reaſon of the thing requires, that here we underſtand it generally, ſo as to comprehend both ſtates (both being matters of faith equally neceſſary, as it were, and of like fundamental conſequence;) both yielding both the higheſt encouragements to a good, and determents from a bad life. For as on the one hand what can excite us more to the performance of duty than ſo happy a ſtate; a Pſal. 16. 11. ſtate of higheſt dignity and glory, of ſweeteſt comfort and joy; of joy, full in meaſure, pure in quality, perpetual in duration, perfect in all reſpects to the utmoſt capacity of our nature: wherein all our parts and faculties ſhall be raiſed to their higheſt pitch of perfection; our bodies 1 Cor. 15. 42, become free from all corruptibility and decay; all weakneſs and diſeaſe;
43, 44. 2 Cor. 3. 18. all groſſneſs, unweildineſs, defilement, and deformity, ſhall be rendred
Phil. 3. 21. incorruptible, glorious, and ſpiritual: our ſouls in their nature perfected, 1 Cor. 13. 12. in their inclinations rectified, in their appetites ſatisfied; the underſtanding being full of light, clear and diſtinct in knowledge of truth, free from error and ignorance; the will ſteadily inclined to good, ready to comply with God's will, free from all perverſeneſs and weakneſs; our affections ſet in right order and frame, with conſtant regularity tending to that which is truly good, and taking full delight therein. Wherein we 1 Joh. 3. 2. ſhall enjoy the bliſsfull preſence and ſight of God, ſmiling in love and Heb. 12. 22. favour upon us, of our gracious redeemer, of the holy angels, of the juſt made perfect; whoſe company and converſation how unconceivably ſweet and delightfull muſt it be? wherein nothing adverſe, or trouble-ſome can befall us; no unpleaſant or offenſive object preſent it ſelf to us; no want or need of any thing; no care, or fear, or ſuſpicion; no labour or toil; no ſorrow or pain; no regret or diſtaſt; no ſtir or contention; Apoc. 3. 4. no liſtleſſneſs or ſatiety: God will wipe (as it is in the Apocalypſe) every tear from their eyes; and death ſhall be no more, nor ſorrow, nor clamour (or complaint) nor pain any more; in fine a ſtate ſurpaſſing all words to expreſs it, all thoughts to conceive it, of which the higheſt ſplendours and choiceſt pleaſures here are but obſcure ſhadows (do yield but faint and 1 Cor. 2. 9. imperfect reſemblances) comparable to which no eye hath ſeen, no ear hath heard,

heard, nor hath it aſcended into any heart to conceive the like, (as St. Paul out of the Prophet Eſay tells us) the firm belief, I ſay, and careful conſideration of the certainty by a pious and holy life, of acquiring right unto and poſſeſſion of ſuch a ſtate muſt needs be the greateſt excitement poſſible thereto; as muſt the loſs and falling ſhort thereof be of mighty efficacy to withdraw us from impiety: As on this hand, ſo on the other hand, the being perſuaded, that by neglecting our duty and tranſgreſſing God's law we ſhall certainly incurr intolerable pains and miſeries without eaſe or reſpit; without hope or remedy, without any end: that we ſhall for ever not only be ſecluded from God's preſence and favour, be deprived of all reſt, comfort, and joy; but detruded into utmoſt wretchedneſs; a ſtate more dark and diſmal, more forlorn and diſconſolate than we can imagine; which not the ſharpeſt pain of body, not the bittereſt anxiety of mind any of us ever felt, can in any meaſure repreſent; wherein our bodies ſhall be afflicted continually with a ſulphureous flame, not ſcorching the skin only, but piercing the inmoſt ſinews; our ſouls inceſſantly bit and gnawed upon by a worm (the worm of bitter remorſe for our wretched perverſneſs and folly; of horrid deſpair ever to get out of this ſad eſtate) under which vexations unexpreſſible, always enduring pangs of death, always dying, we ſhall never die: This perſuaſion, I ſay, muſt needs moſt effectually deterr us from thoſe courſes of impiety, which certainly lead to ſo miſerable a condition; if it cannot, what can do it? We muſt beyond all impreſſion that any reaſon can make upon us be irrecoverably ſtupid or obſtinate; infinitely careleſs of our own good, bent to our ruine. But theſe things the time will not permit me farther to dilate upon; and I did formerly (in treating upon our Saviour's coming to judgment) ſomewhat largely preſs conſiderations of this nature. I ſhall only therefore conclude with a Prayer to Almighty God, that according to his infinite mercy he by his gracious aſſiſtance leading us in the ways of piety and obedience would bring us into everlaſting life and happineſs; withdrawing us from impiety and iniquity would deliver us from eternal death and miſery: To whom be all praiſe and glory for ever. Amen.

Eſ. 64. 4.

AN EXPOSITION OF The Lord's Prayer.

AMong all the Duties preſcribed to us by our Religion, the rendring due Worſhip to God is in nature, and for conſequence the principal: God thereby being moſt directly honoured, and ſerved, we from it immediately deriving moſt ample, and high benefits; to the performance of which duty we are furniſhed with excellent direction, and aſſiſtance from that Prayer, which our Lord (at ſeveral times, and upon ſeveral occaſions) dictated, and recommended to his Diſciples, both as a pattern, according to which they ſhould regulate their devotions (Pray thus, or in this manner, ſaith he in St. Matthew) and as a form, in which they ſhould expreſs them (When you pray, ſay; that is, ſay this or in theſe words; ſo he enjoyns them in St. Luke): unto it therefore we ſhould carefully attend as to our beſt rule; and we ſhould frequently uſe it as our beſt matter of devotion; to the well-performing of both which duties, it is requiſite that we ſhould diſtinctly underſtand the particulars contained therein, in order to which purpoſe we ſhall endeavour to explain them; but firſt let us premiſe a few words in general about Prayer.

Matt. 6. 9.
Luk. 11. 2.

Quamlibet alia verba dicamus, quæ affectus orantis vel præcedendo format ut clareat, vel conſequendo attendit ut creſcat, nihil aliud dicimus, quàm quod in iſta Dominica Oratione poſitum eſt, ſi rectè & congruenter oramus. Aug. Epiſt. 121. Vide illum.

Prayer in its latitude of acceptation doth comprehend all devotion, or worſhip immediately addreſſed unto Almighty God; conſiſting of praiſe, which we render to God in regard to his moſt excellent perfections, and glorious works; of ſubmiſſive gratulation, declaring our ſatisfaction in all the diſpenſations of his moſt wiſe and juſt providence; of thankſgiving, for the numberleſs great benefits we have received from him; of acknowledging our total dependence on him, and our ſubjection to him; of profeſſing faith in him, and vowing ſervice to him; of confeſſing the ſins we have committed againſt him, with the guilt and aggravation of them; of deprecating the wrath and puniſhment due to us for our offences; of petition for all things needfull and convenient for us; of interceſſion for others, whoſe good we according to duty or charity are concerned to deſire and promote; Prayer, I ſay (although according to its moſt reſtrained ſenſe it only doth ſignifie one of theſe particulars, namely the petition of what is needfull or expedient for us, yet) in its larger acception, as it commonly is uſed, it doth comprize them all; and ſo we may well take it here; this form, although ſo very brief, being with ſo admirable wiſdom contrived, as without ſtraining the words beyond their natural importance, we may, applying a moderate attention, diſcern them all, as to their main ſubſtance, couched therein; ſo that we may indeed reaſonably regard this

1 Tim. 2. 1. —— δεήσεις, προσευχαὶ, ἐντεύξεις, εὐχαριστίαι.

Οὐ μόνον δ' εὐχῆς ἐςὶ διδασκαλία ἐκεῖνα τὰ ῥήματα, ἀλλὰ βίου τελείου παιδαγωγία. Chryſ. Tom. V. p. 185.

Totius Evangelii breviarium; Tert. de Orat. 1, 9.

Prayer as a complete directory, and a full exerciſe of all our devotion toward God: of devotion, I ſay, the which (to engage, excite and encourage us to the carefull and conſtant practice thereof) we may conſider injoined us as a neceſſary duty, commended to us as a requiſite means of good, and a ſpecial inſtrument of all piety, and as a high privilege granted to us by God.

Deut. 10. 20. Matth. 4. 10. Pſal. 65. 2.

1. It is a natural duty and debt we owe to God (both in correſpondence to the deſign of our being made and endowed with rational capacities agreeable to our relations; and in requital for our being, and for all the good we have, and do continually receive from him) as moſt highly to love and reverence him in our hearts; ſo to declare our eſteem of his excellencies, and our ſenſe of his bounty toward us; to avow the dependence we have upon his will and providence; the obligations we are under to his mercy and goodneſs; to yield our due homage of reſpect, ſubmiſſion and obedience to him: if we do acknowledge a God, our Maker, our Lord, our continual Benefactour to be, we muſt conſequently acknowledge theſe performances in reaſon, juſtice and gratitude due to him; and God accordingly requires, and poſitively injoins them: He is the Lord our God, whom we muſt worſhip and ſerve; the God whom praiſe waiteth for; who heareth prayers, and to whom therefore all fleſh muſt come; the Scripture is very frequent in commanding the duty.

Εὐχῆς δικαίας οὐκ ἀνήκοος Θεός. Pſal. 34. 10. 145. 18, 19. 10. 17. Jer. 29. 13. 1 Joh. 3. 22. Matt. 21. 22. 7. 7. Luk. 11. 9. Joh. 14. 13. 15. 7. 16. 23.

2. It is a moſt uſefull means, or a condition requiſite for the procurement of benefits, and bleſſings upon us. God hath declared that he doth accept, he hath promiſed that he will reward all devotions with an honeſt intention, and pure mind offered up unto him; that he is nigh unto all them that call upon him in truth; that he will be found of them who ſeek him with all their heart; that he will fulfill the deſire of them that fear him; he will hear their cry, and will ſave them; that they who ſeek him ſhall not want any good thing; that, whatever we ask in prayer believing we ſhall receive; that if we ask, it ſhall be given us, if we ſeek, we ſhall find; if we knock, it ſhall be opened to us. Prayer is alſo a means of procuring a bleſſing upon all our undertakings; it ſanctifieth every performance, &c. There is no good thing ſo great and pretious, ſo high above the reach of common power; ſo ſtrange to expect or difficult to compaſs, which we may not eaſily and ſurely by this means obtain; relief in all diſtreſſes both of our outward and inward eſtate; ſupplies of all our needs both corporal and ſpiritual; comfort in all our ſorrows and ſadneſſes; ſatisfaction in all our doubts and darkneſſes of mind; help and ſtrength againſt all our temptations we may be confident to obtain, if we duly ſeek them from the Almighty diſpenſer of all good gifts: ſure promiſes there are and obvious examples hereof, too many to be now recited: as on the other hand; they that will neglect this duty, that will not vouchſafe to ſeek help and remedy of God, may be ſure to want it; ſhall certainly ſuffer for their proud contempt, profane diffidence, or fooliſh ſloth: you will not (ſaith our Saviour) come to me, that ye may have life: no wonder then if they do not receive it, if they will not go thither for it, where only it is to be had. All good things are in God's hand, and we ſhall never by any force or policy get them thence without his will, moved by intreaty; all good gifts come from heaven, and thence we ſhall never fetch them down, without aſcending thither in our hearts and affections, ſpiritual goods eſpecially are ſo high above us, that we can never reach them otherwiſe, than by God's help by humble ſupplication obtained.

Joh. 5. 40.

3. It is not only a means by impetration acquiring for us, but it is an effectual inſtrument working in us all true good; It is the chanel, by which God conveyeth ſpiritual light into our minds, and ſpiritual vigour into our hearts. It is both the ſeed and the food of ſpiritual life; by which all holy diſpoſitions of ſoul, and all honeſt reſolutions of practice are bred and nouriſhed, are augmented and ſtrengthned in us. It exciteth, it quickneth, it maintaineth all pious affections; the love of God can no otherwiſe than by it be kindled, fomented or kept in life (without it we certainly ſhall have an eſtrangement, and an averſation from him) it alone can maintain a conſtant reverence and awe of God, keeping him in our thoughts, and making us to live as in his preſence; it chiefly enliveneth and exerciſeth our faith and our hope in God; it is that which begetteth in our hearts a ſavoury reliſh of divine things; which ſweetneth and endeareth to our ſouls the practice of piety; which only can enable us with delight and alacrity to obey God's commandments: It alone can raiſe our minds from the cares and concernments of this world to a ſenſe and deſire of heavenly things. By it God imparteth ſtrength to ſubdue bad inclinations, to reſtrain ſenſual appetites, to compreſs irregular paſſions; to evade the allurements to evil, and the diſcouragements from good, which this world always preſenteth; to ſupport alſo with patience and equanimity the many croſſes and troubles we muſt ſurely meet with therein. It is, in ſhort, the only ſtrong bulwark againſt temptation and ſin; the only ſure guard of piety and a good conſcience; no man indeed can be a faithfull ſervant to God, a real friend to goodneſs, a ſerious practicer of duty without a conſtant tenour of devotion.

Difficillimum eſt opus orare. Luth.

Fervour of Spirit. Rom. 12. 11. τῷ πνεύματι ζέοντες.

4. It is a moſt high privilege and advantage to us, that we are allowed to pray and addreſs our devotions to God. To have a free acceſs to the preſence and audience of an earthly Prince (to the effect of receiving from him all that we could deſire) would be deemed a matter of great honour, and much advantage; how much more is it ſo to us, that we are admitted to the preſence and ear of the great King of all the world; ſo mighty in power, ſo large in bounty, ſo full of goodneſs and pity; ſo throughly able, ſo exceedingly willing to grant and perform our requeſts? How ſweet a thing, of what comfort and benefit is it, to have the liberty of pouring out our ſouls and our hearts (as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks) before God; of disburthening our minds of all their cares, their deſires, their doubts, their griefs and anxieties into the breaſt of ſo kind a friend, ſo wiſe a counſeller, ſo able a helper; who alone indeed can afford relief, eaſe, ſatisfaction and comfort to us? Conſidering which things we ſhall appear not only very diſobedient to God, and highly ingratefull toward him (who ſo infinitely condeſcends in vouchſafing to us duſt and aſhes (vile and unworthy creatures) leave to ſpeak and converſe with him) but very injurious and unfaithfull to our ſelves, and to our own good; if we neglect this duty commanded, or ſlight this privilege indulged to us:

Pſal. 62. 8. 42. 4.

Gen. 18. 27.

In the due performance of which we are directed and aſſiſted by this Form of Prayer, compoſed and dictated for that purpoſe by him, who beſt knew what we ought to pray for, and how we ought to pray; what matter of deſire, what manner of addreſs; what diſpoſition of mind would be moſt pleaſing and acceptable to his Father; would moſt become and befit us in our approaches to him. We might conſequently obſerve many things concerning thoſe particulars, diſcernible in this Deus ſolus docere potuit, ut ſe vellet orari. Tert. de Orat. c. 9.

Form: the ſublimity, the gravity, the neceſſity, the ſingular choiceneſs of the matter; together with the fit order, and juſt diſpoſition thereof; according to the natural precedence of things in dignity or neceſſity; the full brevity, the deep plainneſs, the comely ſimplicity of expreſſion; the lowly reverence ſignified therein accompanied with due faith and confidence: theſe, and the like vertues directive of our devotion we might obſerve running generally through the whole contexture of this venerable Form; but we ſhall rather chuſe to take notice of them as they ſhall offer themſelves in their particular places, to the conſideration of which in order we now do apply our ſelves.

Our Father which art in Heaven.

Our Father; upon this title, or manner of compellation, we may firſt obſerve, that although our Saviour preſcribeth this Form as a pattern, and an exerciſe of private prayer to be performed in the Cloſet (and alone in ſecret as is expreſſed in the Goſpel) yet he directeth us to make our addreſſes to God in a ſtyle of plurality, ſaying, not my Father, but our Father; thereby, it ſeems, implying; 1. That we ſhould in our prayers conſider and acknowledge the Univerſality of God's power and goodneſs. 2. That we ſhould not in our conceit proudly and vainly appropriate or engroſs the regard of God unto our ſelves; but remember that our brethren have an equal ſhare with us therein. 3. That in all our devotions we ſhould be mindfull of thoſe common bands which knit us together as Men and as Chriſtians (the band of nature and humanity; the more ſtrict tyes of common faith and hope; of manifold relations unto God that made us, and our Saviour that redeemed us, and the Holy Spirit who animateth and quickneth us, and combineth us in ſpiritual union.) 4. That we ſhould bear ſuch hearty good-will, and charitable affection toward others, as not only to ſeek and deſire our own particular and private good, but that of all men; eſpecially of all good Chriſtians; who in a peculiar manner are God's children and our brethren; * He did not bid us ſay my Father, but our Father, who art in Heaven; that being taught that we have a common Father, we might ſhew a brotherly good-will one toward another, ſaith St. Chryſoſtom.

Matt. 6. 6, 9.

* Οὐ γὰρ ἐκέλευε λέγειν πατέρ μου, ὁ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς, ἀλλὰ πατέρ ἡμῶν, ἵνα κοινὸν πατέρα ἔχειν διδαχθέντες, ἀδελφικὴν πρὸς ἀλλήλους δεικνύωμεν εὔνοιαν. Tom. V. p. 186.

As for the appellation Father; it doth mind us of our relation to God, who upon many grounds, and in divers high reſpects is our Father; (by nature, for that he gave us our being, and made us after his own image; by providence, for that he continually preſerveth and maintaineth us; by grace, for that he reneweth us to his image in righteouſneſs and holineſs; by adoption, for that he alloweth us the benefit and privilege of his children, aſſigning an eternal inheritance to us;) of this relation, which as Creatures, as Men, as Chriſtians, we bear to God it mindeth us, and conſequently how we ought in correſpondence thereto to behave our ſelves; yielding to him all reſpect, affection and obſervance; demeaning our ſelves in all things as becomes ſuch a relation, and rank: This indeed of all God's names, titles and attributes is choſen as moſt ſutable to the nature of the preſent duty; as moſt encouraging to the performance thereof, as moſt fully implying the diſpoſitions required in us, when we apply our ſelves thereto. Our Saviour uſed to compare Prayer to a Son's asking nouriſhment of his Father; arguing thence what ſucceſs, and benefit we may expect from it: we come therein to God,

Matth. 7. 9.
Luk. 11. 11.

God, not (directly) as to a Lord or Maſter, to receive commands; but rather as to a Father to requeſt from him the ſuſtenance of our life, and ſupply of our needs; to render withall unto him our thankfull acknowledgments, for having continuedly done thoſe things for us; and to demonſtrate our dutifull reſpect, and affection toward him. It is natural for children in any danger, ſtrait, or want to fly to their parents for ſhelter, relief and ſuccour; and it is ſo likewiſe for us to have recourſe unto God, in all thoſe caſes, wherein no viſible means of help appear from elſewhere: And to do ſo the title of Father doth incourage us, ſignifying not only power and authority over us, but affection and dearneſs toward us: The name God, importing his excellent perfections; the name Lord, minding us of his power and empire, over us, with the like titles declarative of his ſupereminent Majeſty, might deter us, being conſcious of our meanneſs and unworthineſs, from approaching to him; but the word Father is attractive and emboldning; thinking on that we ſhall be apt to conceive hope, that how mean, how unworthy ſoever, yet being his children, he will not reject, or refuſe us: For, If men being evil do give good gifts unto Matth. 6. 11. their children; how much more will our Father, which is in heaven, give good things to them that ask him?

It alſo plainly intimates how qualified and diſpoſed in mind we ſhould come to God; namely, with high reverence, with humble affection, with hearty gratitude; as to the Authour of our being, to him that hath continually preſerved and brought us up; from whoſe care and providence we have received all the good we have ever enjoyed; from whoſe mercy and favour we can only expect any good for the future. By calling God Father, we avow our ſelves obliged to honour and love him incomparably beyond all things; We alſo declare our faith, and hope in God; that we believe him well affected toward us, and willing to do us good; and that we thence hope to receive the good deſireable from him (the which are diſpoſitions ne- Matth. 21. 22. ceſſary to the due performance of this duty.) It alſo implyeth, that Jam. 1. 6. we ſhould come thereto with purity of mind and good conſcience, which 1 Tim. 2. 8. is alſo requiſite to the ſame intent: for if we are conſcious of undutifull and diſobedient carriage toward God, how can we call him Father? with what heart, or face can we aſſume to our ſelves the title of children? If (ſaith St. Peter) ye call upon him as Father, who impartially 1 Pet. 1. 17. judges according to every man's work, (that is, who only eſteemeth them for his children, who truly behave themſelves as becometh children) paſs the time of your pilgrimage in fear (or in reverence toward God.) We may add, that we alſo hereby may be ſuppoſed to expreſs our charity toward our brethren; who bear unto God, the Father of all men, the ſame common relation. But I proceed:

Which art in Heaven.

God Almighty is ſubſtantially preſent every where; but he doth not every where in effects diſcover himſelf alike, nor with equal ſplendour in all places diſplay the beams of his glorious Majeſty. The Scripture frequently mentioneth a place of his ſpecial reſidence (ſeated in regions of inacceſſible light, above the reach, not only of our ſenſe but, of our fancy and conception) where his royal Court, his preſence Chamber, his imperial Throne are; where he is more immediately attended upon by the glorious Angels, and bleſſed Saints; which place is called Heaven, the higheſt heavens; the τὰ ὕψιστα, the higheſt places; by his preſence wherein God is deſcribed here, as for diſtinction from all other parents here on earth, ſo to encreaſe reverence in us toward him, (while we reflect upon his ſupereminent glory and majeſty) and to raiſe our hearts from theſe inferiour things unto deſire, and hope, and love of heavenly things; withdrawing (ſaith St. Chryſoſtom) him that prays from earth, and faſtning him to the places on high, and to the manſions above. But ſo much for the Title.

Luk. 2. 14. 19. 38. Matt. 21. 9.

Τῆς γῆς ἀπάγων τὸν εὐχόμενον, καὶ τοῖς ὑψηλοῖς προσηλῶν χωρίοις, καὶ ταῖς ἄνω διατριβαῖς.

The firſt ſentence of our Prayer is,

Hallowed (or ſanctified) be thy Name.

Let us firſt (with St. Chryſoſtom) obſerve the direction we hence receive in all our prayers to have a prime, and principal regard to the glory of God; not ſeeking any thing concerning our own good before his praiſe; that for the order. As to the ſubſtance of this particular we may conſider, that ſanctity implying a diſcrimination, a diſtance, an exaltment in nature or uſe of the thing, which is denominated thereby; and God's name ſignifying himſelf with all that we can know of him; himſelf, as however diſcovered or declared, with all that relates to him, and bears his inſcription; we do here accordingly expreſs our due acknowledgments and deſires; for by a rare complication this Sentence doth involve both praiſe and petition; doth expreſs both our acknowledgment of what is, and our deſire of what ſhould be: we do I ſay hereby partly acknowledge, and praiſe the ſupereminent perfections of God above all things, in all kind of excellency, joining in that ſeraphical Doxology (which to utter is the continual employment of the bleſſed Spirits above) who inceſſantly day and night, cry out, Holy, Holy, Holy; confeſſing with the heavenly hoſt in the Apocalypſe, that he is worthy of all honour, glory and power; we do alſo partly declare our hearty wiſhes, that God may be every where had in higheſt veneration; that all things relating to him may receive their due regard; that all honour and praiſe, all duty and ſervice may in a peculiar manner be rendred unto him by all men, by all creatures, by our ſelves eſpecially: that all minds may entertain good and worthy opinions of him; all tongues ſpeak well of him, celebrate and bleſs him; all creatures yield adoration to his name, and obedience to his will: that he be worſhipped in truth and ſincerity, with zeal and fervency; this particularly in the Prophet Eſay, and by St. Peter is called ſanctifying God's Name in oppoſition to idolatrous and profane Religion (Sanctifie the Lord of hoſts himſelf, and let him be your fear, let him be your dread, ſaith the Prophet; and, Fear not their fear, nor be troubled, but ſanctifie the Lord God in your hearts, ſaith the Apoſtle.) Thus do we here pray and wiſh in reſpect to all men, and to all creatures capable of thus ſanctifying God's Name; but more particularly we pray for our ſelves, that God would grant to us, that we by our religious and righteous converſation may bring honour to his name; ſo that men ſeeing our good works may glorifie our Father, which is in Heaven. (Vouchſafe, ſaith he, that we may live ſo purely, that all men by us may glorifie thee: ſo deſcants St. Chryſoſtom.)

Apoc. 4. 8. Apoc. 4. 11.

Τὸ ἁγιασθήτω ἀντὶ τοῦ δοξασθήτω εἴρηται. Chryſ. Tom. V. p. 186.

Eſa. 8. 13. 29. 23. 1 Pet. 3. 14, 15.

Matt. 5. 16. 1 Pet. 2. 12.

Καταξίωσον φησὶν, οὕτως ἡμᾶς βιοῦν καθαρῶς, ὡς δι' ἡμῶν ἅπαντας σε δοξάζειν, &c. Chryſ. in Matt. 6.

Thy

Thy Kingdom come.

This Petition, or devout wiſh, being ſubordinate to the former, as expreſſing a main particular of that, which is there generally deſired (we here to the glory of God deſiring a ſucceſsfull and ſpeedy propagation of true Religion) ſeems in its direct, and immediate ſenſe to reſpect the ſtate of things in that time, more eſpecially befitting our Lord's Diſciples then, when the Kingdom of God (that is, the ſtate of Religion under the Evangelical Diſpenſation) was coming and approaching; (according to that of our Saviour in St. Luke : I ſay unto you of a truth, there be ſome of you ſtanding here that ſhall not taſte death, till they ſee the Kingdom of God) whence it did become them in zeal to God's glory, and charity for mens ſalvation, to deſire that Chriſtianity might ſoon effectually be propagated over the world, being generally entertained by men with due faith and obedience: that is, that all men willingly might acknowledge God as their Lord and Maker, worſhipping and ſerving him in truth; that they might receive his bleſſed Son Jeſus Chriſt as their King and Saviour, heartily embracing his doctrine, and humbly ſubmitting to his laws; to which purpoſe our Lord injoins his Diſciples to pray, that the Lord of the harveſt would ſend labourers into his harveſt; and St. Paul exhorts the Theſſalonians to pray, that the word of the Lord may run and be glorified. And in parity of reaſon, upon the ſame grounds, we are concerned, and obliged to deſire, that Chriſtian Religion may be ſettled and confirmed; may grow and be encreaſed; may proſper and flouriſh in the world; that God's authority may, to the largeſt extenſion of place, to the higheſt intention of degree, univerſally and perfectly, be maintained and promoted, both in external profeſſion and real effect; the minds of all men being ſubdued to the obedience of faith; and avowing the ſubjection due to him; and truly yielding obedience to all his moſt juſt and holy laws. Thus ſhould we pray that God's Kingdom may come; particularly deſiring that it may ſo come into our own hearts; humbly imploring his grace, that he thereby would rule in our hearts, quelling in them all exorbitant paſſions, and vicious deſires, protecting them from all ſpiritual enemies, diſpoſing them to an entire ſubjection to his will, and a willing compliance with all his commandments: for this is the Kingdom of God, which (as our Lord telleth us) is within us; the which doth not (as Saint Paul teacheth us) conſiſt in meat and drink (in any outward formal performances) but in righteouſneſs, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghoſt; that is, in obedience to God's will, and in the comfortable conſequences thereof: this is the Kingdom of God, which we are enjoyned, before any worldly accommodations, firſt to ſeek.

Luk. 9. 27. Matt. 16. 28. 3. 2.

Matt. 9. 38.

2 Theſſ. 3. 1.

Τυραννούμενοι ὑπὸ τῶν τοῦ σώματος παθημάτων, καὶ μυρίας πειρασμῶν δεχόμενοι προσβολὰς τῆς τοῦ Θεοῦ χρήζομεν βασιλείας, ἵνα μὴ βασιλεύσῃ ἡ ἁμαρτία ἐν τῷ θνητῷ σώματι ἡμῶν, &c. Chryſ.

Luk. 17. 21.

Rom. 14. 17.

Matt. 6. 33.

Thy Will be done in earth, as it is in heaven.

This Sentence is likewiſe complicated of praiſe, good deſire, and petition: for we thereby firſt do acknowledge the wiſdom, juſtice and goodneſs of God in all reſolutions of his will, and diſpenſations of his providence.

1. We profeſs our approbation of all God's counſels, our complacence and ſatisfaction in all his proceedings, our cheerfull ſubmiſſion and conſent ſent to all his pleaſure; joining our ſuffrage, and ſaying in harmony Apoc. 15. 3. with that bleſſed Choire in the Revelation: Great, and wonderfull are thy works, O Lord God Almighty; juſt and true are thy ways, O thou King of Saints. We diſclaim our own judgments and conceits, we renounce our own deſires and deſigns, ſo far as they appear inconſiſtent with the determinations of God's wiſdom, or diſcordant with his pleaſure; ſaying Luk. 22. 42. after our Lord, Let not my will, but thine be done.

2. We do alſo expreſs our deſire, that as in heaven all things with a free and undiſturbed courſe do paſs according to God's will and goodliking; every intimation of his pleaſure finding there a moſt entire and Pſal. 103. 20. ready compliance, from thoſe perfectly loyal and pious ſpirits (thoſe miniſters of his, that do his pleaſure, as the Pſalmiſt calls them) ſo that here on earth the gracious deſigns of God may be accompliſhed with-Luk. 7. 30. out oppoſition or rub; that none ſhould preſume, as the Phariſees and Lawyers are ſaid to do, ἀθετεῖν τὴν βουλὴν τοῦ Θεοῦ, to diſappoint or defeat God's counſel; ἀπωθεῖσθαι, to thruſt away or repulſe God's word, Acts 13. 46. as the Jews did in the Acts; to reſiſt, provoke, or defie God by obſtinate diſobedience; as many are ſaid to do in the Scriptures; but that every where a free, humble, hearty and full obedience be rendred to his commands.

3. We do alſo pray, that God would grant us the grace willingly to Heb. 13. 21. perform whatever he requires of us, (perfecting us, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, in every good work to doe his will, and working in us that which is well-pleaſing in his ſight) contentedly to bear whatever he layeth upon us; that God would beſtow upon us a perfect reſignation of our wills unto Phil. 4. 11. his will; a cheerfull acquieſcence in that ſtate and ſtation wherein he hath placed us; a ſubmiſs patience in all adverſities, whereinto he diſpoſeth us to fall; a conſtant readineſs with ſatisfaction and thankfulneſs (without reluctancy or repining) to receive whatever cometh from his will, whether gratefull or diſtaſtfull to our preſent ſenſe; acknowledging his wiſdom, his goodneſs, his juſtice in all his dealings towards us; heartily ſaying with good Eli, It is the Lord, let him do what ſeemeth him good; with Hezekiah, Good is the word of the Lord, which thou haſt ſpoken; with David, behold here I am, let him do to me, as ſeemeth good to him; with Job, Shall we receive good at the hand of God, and ſhall we not receive evil? and, The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away, bleſſed be the name of the Lord: Yea, it were well, if we could, after the Heathen Philoſopher, upon all occaſions with our hearts ſay, εἰ ταύτῃ Θεῷ φίλον, ταύτῃ γινέσθω· If God will have it ſo, ſo let it be: if we could obſerve thoſe rules and precepts, which even the Philoſophers ſo much inculcate; to commit all our affairs to God, to love and embrace (hugg) all events; to follow, and to accompany God; to yield, deliver and reſign our ſelves up to him. (Deo ſe præbere, dedere, tradere, &c.) and the like.

1 Sam. 3. 18.
2 King. 20. 19.
2 Sam. 15. 26.
Job 2. 10.
1. 21.
Pſal. 37. 5.
55. 22.
Epict. Ench. 38.
Plat. Criton.
Τὸ ὑπόλοιπον τοῦ βίου διέξελθε, ὡς Θεοῖς ἐπιτετροφὼς τὰ σεαυτοῦ πάντα, &c. Ant. IV. 31.
Ἀσπαζόμενος τὰ συμβαίνοντα. Ant. III. 4, 16. II. 17. X. 11. XII. 1. Ant. VII. 31. X. 11. Sen. De Or. Sap. 32. Ego ſecundum naturam vivo, ſi totum me illi dedo. Optimum eſt Deum, quo auctore cuncta proveniunt ſine murmuratione comitari, &c. — hic eſt magnus animus, qui ſe Deo tradidit—— Sen. Ep. 37, 54, 71, &c. de Prov. 5.

Give us this day our daily bread.

I ſhall not ſtand to criticize upon the hard word here uſed, tranſlated daily; I only ſay, that of two ſenſes offering themſelves, both are probable, and by good authority countenanced; both are proper and ſutable to the matter or nature of the thing: according to one we pray for the bread τοῦ ἐπιόντος, of the time to come, or of that future life, which it ſhall pleaſe God to allow us; according to the other, we requeſt bread ἐπὶ τὸ εἶναι, which is neceſſary for our being, and the preſervation of our lives; joining both together (which is more ſure and ſafe) we pray for a competent proviſion toward the maintenance of our life hereafter, during our appointed time: that for the ſenſe; upon the Petition it ſelf we obſerve,

*Ἄρτον ἐπιούσιον, τοῦτ' ἐστὶν ἐπὶ τὴν οὐσίαν τοῦ σώματος διαβαίνοντα, καὶ συγκροτῆσαι ταύτην δυνάμενον, Chryſ. Tom. V. 187.

1. That after we have rendred our due tribute of praiſe and reſpect unto God, we are allowed and directed to requeſt of him good things for our ſelves; beginning, as nature prompteth, with the preſervation of our beings and lives; whereby we become capable of receiving and enjoying other good things;

2. By doing which we alſo do imply the ſenſe we have of our total dependence upon God; avowing our ſelves to ſubſiſt by his care and bounty; diſclaiming conſequently all confidence in any other means to maintain or ſupport us; in any ſtore we have laid up, or eſtate we pretend to; in any contrivance or induſtry we can uſe; in any ſuccour of friends or relations; for that notwithſtanding all theſe, we do need our daily bread to be dealt to us by God, and muſt continually beg it as a gift from his hands.

3. We are by that word, σήμερον, this day, taught our duty (ſignifying withall our performance thereof) of being willing continually to rely upon God; not affecting to be ever ſo much beforehand, as not to need God's conſtant aſſiſtance: we ask not, that God would give us at once what may ſerve us for ever, and may put us out of any fear to want hereafter; we ask not for that which may ſuffice for a long time, for many years, many months, many days; but that God would give us to day, or rather day by day (τὸ καθ' ἡμέραν, as it is expreſſed in Saint Luke) that is, that he would continually diſpenſe to us, what is needfull for us; we ſhould not therefore deſire to have an eſtate ſettled upon us; to live by our ſelves, or on our own incomes; to be ſet out of God's houſe, or immediate protection and care; this in it ſelf cannot be (for God cannot alienate his goods from himſelf, nor can we ſubſiſt out of his hand) nor muſt we deſire it ſhould be: 'tis a part of Atheiſm, of Infidelity, of Heatheniſh profaneneſs and folly to deſire it (theſe things, ſaith our Lord, do the Gentiles ſeek; that is, they are covetous of wealth, and carefull for proviſions to live without dependance upon God) but we muſt eſteem God's providence our ſureſt eſtate, God's bounty our beſt treaſure, God's fatherly care our moſt certain and moſt comfortable ſupport; caſting all our care on him, as being aſſured that he careth for us; will not leave nor forſake us; will not withhold, what is neceſſary for our comfortable ſuſtenance.

Luk. 11. 3.
Matt. 6. 32.
Matt. 6. 25.
1 Pet. 5. 7.
Heb. 12. 5.
Phil. 4. 6.

4. It is here intimated, how ſober and moderate our appetites ſhould be, in regard both to the quality and quantity of the things we uſe: we are directed to ask τροφὴν οὐ τρυφὴν, (as S. Chryſoſtom ſays) neceſſary food, not luxurious plenty or delicacy: it is bread (the moſt ſimple, homely, and common diet) that is, ſuch accommodations as are neceſſary to maintain our lives, and ſatisfie our natural deſires; not ſuperfluities, ſerving to pleaſe our wanton appetites, or humour our curious fancies; 'tis not variety, daintineſs, elegancy, or ſplendour we ſhould affect to enjoy, but be content to have our neceſſities ſupplied with the courſeſt diet, and the meaneſt apparel, if our condition requireth it, or God's providence in an honeſt way allotteth no other to us: we may ſoberly and thankfully enjoy what God ſends; but we ſhould not preſume to ask for, or deſire other than this.

And for the meaſure, we learn to ask only for ſo much as ſhall be fit to maintain us; not for rich, or plentifull ſtore; not for full barns, or for heaps of treaſure; not for wherewith to glut, or pamper our ſelves; but for daily bread, a moderate proviſion then to be dealt to us, when we need it.

It follows,

And forgive us our treſpaſſes, as we forgive them that treſpaſs againſt us (our treſpaſſes, 'tis our debts (ὀφειλήματα) in S. Matthew; our ſins (ἁμαρτίας) in S. Luke; and they who treſpaſs againſt us are in both Evangeliſts called our debtors: for he that injures another is obnoxious and in debt to him; owing him ſatisfaction, either by making reparation, or undergoing puniſhment.

After the preſervation of our beings (the foundation of enjoying other good things) our firſt care, we ſee, ought to be concerning the welfare of our better part and ſtate; which chiefly conſiſts in the terms, whereon we ſtand, toward God, upon whoſe favour all our happineſs dependeth; and from whoſe diſpleaſure all our miſery muſt proceed: ſince therefore we all do ſtand obnoxious to God's wrath and juſtice; having omitted many duties which we owe to him, having committed manifold offences againſt him; it is therefore moſt expedient, that we firſt endeavour to get him reconciled to us, by the forgiveneſs of our debts and offences; concerning which remiſſion, upon what account it is neceſſary, upon what terms it is granted, by what means it is obtained, in what manner it is diſpenſed by God, I have otherwhere touched, and it is not ſeaſonable now farther to inſiſt thereon; only it may be pertinent here to obſerve,

1. That this being the firſt of Petitions (formally ſuch, and) purely ſpiritual; we are hereby admoniſhed to lay the foundation of our devotions in humility; that we are obliged, before we preſume to ask any thing of God concerning our chief happineſs, and well-being, to reflect upon, acknowledge and confeſs our unworthineſs (not coming to our Prayers as the Phariſee did, doting upon our worthy qualities, and good deeds; but like the poor Publican, with a ſenſe of our infirmities and miſcarriages; ſo as to be ready to acknowledge our ſelves, as indeed we all are guilty of many and great ſins) this is here implyed; for in requeſting pardon for our ſins, we confeſs our ſelves to be ſinners, and to need God's mercy.

2. We may hence learn the neceſſity and the excellency of that benefit we here beg. When the Pſalmiſt applied himſelf to praiſe God for his benefits, this he ſet in the firſt place, as moſt needfull and conſiderable Pſal. 103. 2, 3. to him: Bleſs the Lord, O my Soul (ſaid he) and forget not all his benefits (or rather, not any of his benefits) who forgiveth all thine iniquities, who healeth all thy diſeaſes; and anſwerably, it is the firſt particular benefit we pray for.

3. We muſt take notice, that we are obliged to go to our devotions
1 Tim. 2. 8. with univerſal charity, and good-will toward others; to lift up (as Saint Paul injoineth) holy hands, without wrath and doubting (or without wrath and diſſention) to depoſe all enmity (as our Lord adviſeth) before we Matt. 5. 23. bring our oblation to the altar of God; reſerving no ſpight, or grudge toward any man, but having a heart clear of all ill will, and deſire of revenge:

being in affection of mind toward others as we do wiſh, and hope, and pray that God would be toward us: ſuch in all reaſon, equity and ingenuity ſhould our diſpoſition be; and ſuch God requires it to be; and ſuch we do aſſert and promiſe it to be; implying alſo a compact with God, no otherwiſe to deſire, or expect his favour and mercy toward us, than as we reſemble him in kind and mercifull intentions toward our brethren: It is implied on God's part, that he vouchſafes pardon only upon theſe terms; yea more, that he doth truly promiſe pardon upon our performing this condition; Matth. 6. 14. ſo our Saviour, purpoſely reflecting on this Petition, doth afterward expound it: for, ſaith he, if you forgive to men their treſpaſſes, your heavenly Father will alſo forgive you; it alſo implies a conſent on our parts, and ſubmiſſion to this condition, as moſt equal and reaſonable; ſo that if we break it, if we do retain any uncharitable inclinations, we deal falſely with God; we forfeit all pretence to favour and mercy from him; we are neither qualified for mercy, nor ſhall obtain it from God.

Lead us not into temptation.

Temptation is ſometime taken in a middle and indifferent ſenſe for any occaſion, by which the moral quality of perſons (their vertue, or vice) is examined and diſcovered: ſo God is ſaid to have tempted Abraham, when Gen. 22. 1. he propounded to him the offering up of his Son; ſo he tempted the Iſraelites, by leading them in that long journey through the wilderneſs, that he might know what was in their heart, whether they would keep his commandments, or no: Deut. 8. 2. ſo he likewiſe tempted them by permitting Seducers to ἵνα πειράσῃ σε do wonderfull things, that he might know, whether they did love the Lord Deut. 13. 3. with all their heart, and with all their ſoul: And becauſe affliction is of ſuch a nature, as to try the temper, diſpoſition and intentions of men, therefore temptation often is uſed for affliction. It ſeemeth alſo ſometimes put in a good ſenſe, for an occaſion deſigned to exerciſe, or to improve, or to declare the vertues of a perſon; ſo the inconveniences and croſſes incident to our nature and condition here, the which our Lord did undergo, are Luk. 22. 28. by Saint Luke, and others of the Apoſtles ſtyled temptations; ſo the fiery Heb. 2. 18. 4. 15. trial in Saint Peter was εἰς πειρασμὸν, to exerciſe and refine them, that 1 Pet. 4. 12. (ſaith he) the trial of their faith might be to praiſe, and honour, and glory; 1. 6, 7. ſo Saint James biddeth Chriſtians to rejoice, when they fall into divers Jam. 1. 2. temptations; that is, when they meet with opportunities of exerciſing their faith and patience; and ſo we may underſtand that place in Deuteronomy: Deut. 8. 16. Who ('tis ſaid) fed thee with Manna, that he might humble, and prove thee (or tempt thee, ἵνα ἐκπειράσῃ σε, ſay the LXX.) to do thee good at thy latter end; that he might tempt thee, that is, that he might render thee approved; might exerciſe and improve thy dependance on God, thy patience, thy obedience. But the word is commonly taken in a worſe ſenſe, for an occaſion preſented with ill purpoſe, or naturally tending and not eaſily avoided, of falling into ſin; a ſtumbling block, a ſnare; as when Saint Paul ſaith, that they who will be rich, do fall εἰς πειρασμὸν καὶ παγίδα, into temptation, and a ſnare; 1 Tim. 6. 9. thus Saint James aſſureth us, that God tempteth no man; Jam. 1. 13. that is, doth not intend to ſeduce or inveagle any man into ſin. Yet becauſe nothing in the world, either good or bad, doth happen without God's permiſſion and governance; and the Devil himſelf muſt obtain licence from God, before he can tempt any man, or do any miſchief (as we ſee in Job's caſe, and in the hiſtory of Ahab) ſince God ſeeth whatever is done, Job 2. 6. 1 King. 21.22. and with greateſt eaſe could hinder it; and doth not otherwiſe than for ſome good end ſuffer any evil to be deſigned, or atchieved; it is the ſtyle of Scripture to attribute ſuch things in ſome ſenſe to him; as when God

Gen. 45. 5. is ſaid to ſend Joſeph into Egypt to preſerve life; whenas in truth his brethren out of envy and ill-will did ſell him thither; and, God is ſaid to 2 Sam. 24. 1. move David to number the people; whenas indeed Satan (as it is otherwhere
1 Chr. 21. 1. affirmed) provoked him to number them; and that horrid Tragedy acted Act. 2. 23. by the Jews upon our Bleſſed Saviour is ſaid to be brought to paſs by the
4. 28. hand and definite counſel of God; becauſe God foreſeeing the temptations, which thoſe men ſhould incurr of committing ſuch acts, and their inclinations to perform them, did reſolve not to interpoſe his power in hindrance of them, but ſuffering them to proceed, would turn their miſchievous practices to an excellently good end, and uſe them as inſtruments of his juſt, holy and gracious purpoſes: Thus then whereas by temptation here is meant any occaſion alluring or provoking to ſin, or withdrawing from duty, with a violence, all things conſidered, exceeding our ſtrength to reſiſt or avoid; (or however ſuch an one, that is apt to overthrow us) God may be ſaid to bring them into it, whom in juſtice he permits to be expoſed thereto; although he do no otherwiſe intermeddle, or concur therein, than by not affording, or by withdrawing his eſpecial direction and aſſiſtance; leaving them without check blindly or wilfully to follow the ſway of their own tempers, the inſtinct of their vain minds, the bent of their corrupt wills; the violence of their unruly paſſions and appetites; letting them to fall into the manifold ſnares of falſe opinion, evil cuſtom, and contagious example, which the World ſets before them; (the World, which by its fair promiſes and pleaſing flatteries enticeth to ſin, or by its angry frowns and fierce threats diſcourageth from goodneſs) permitting the Devil, without controll or impediment, by his wiles to delude and ſeduce them; which kind of proceeding of God with men is clearly repreſented in the 81 Pſalm; where, of the Iſraelites God ſays, that having ſignally declared his pleaſure to them, and by promiſe of great benefits invited them to obſerve it; upon their wilfull Pſal. 81. 11, 12. neglect, he dealt thus with them: But (ſays God there) my people would not hearken to my voice, and Iſrael would none of me; So I gave them up unto their own hearts luſts; and they walked in their own counſels. In ſuch manner, if God, provoked thereto by our heinous miſcarriages, doth juſtly bring us into, or doth let us enter into temptation (as our Lord Luk. 22. 40, 46. otherwhere expreſſeth it, Pray, ſaith he, that ye enter not into temptation) we ſhall infallibly run into many grievous ſins and deſperate miſchiefs; no leſs ſurely, than we ſhall wander and ſtumble in the dark, than we ſhall ſlide and fall in the moſt ſlippery places; and ſometimes be entangled, when we do walk in the midſt of ſnares, ſurrounded with traps Jer. 10. 23. innumerable, moſt cunningly laid to catch us: It is not (ſaith the Prophet) in man to direct his ſteps; ſo as to go ſtreight and upright; 'tis not in him to ſee his duty, to bend his inclinations to compliance therewith; to reſtrain his appetites, when ſenſible objects forcibly preſs on them; to govern his paſſions, when they are vehemently ſtirr'd to diſorderly motion: we do
Pſ. 37. 23, 24. continually need God's inſtruction to guide us, God's hand to uphold us, God's care and help to guard us; when therefore, I ſay, our condition and circumſtances do miniſter dangerous occaſions of ſin; when our vain and weak tempers do incline or betray us thereto; when the world would ſmile, or frown us into it; when the Devil violently ſolicits, or thruſts on toward it; thus to be deſtitute of God's grace, thus to be left to our ſelves, is the moſt horrible judgment that can be. In ſuch caſes and ſeaſons God's interpoſal is neceſſary either to remove thoſe temptations, or to ſupport and defend us from the prevalence of them, φυλάσσων ἀπταίστους, keeping us from ſtumbling and falling (as Saint Jude ſpeaks) not ſuffering us Jude 24.

(as Saint Paul expreſſeth it) to be tempted above what we are able, but 1 Cor. 10.23.
making with the temptation alſo a way to eſcape, ſo that we ſhall be able to ſuſtain it.

That God would pleaſe to do this for us, we do here pray; and in purſuance of this Petition we ſubjoin that, which in part may paſs for an illuſtration thereof; (implying an antitheſis ſerving to that purpoſe: for, delivering from evil importeth the ſame with ῥύεσθαι ἐκ πειρασμοῦ, being reſcued from temptation, in Saint Peter; The Lord, ſaith he, know- 2 Pet. 2. 9. eth how to reſcue the godly out of temptation, and τηρεῖν ἐκ τῆς ὥρας πειρασμοῦ, to Apoc. 3. 10.
preſerve from the time of temptation, in the Revelation; which are oppoſed to bringing into temptation) partly it may be ſuppoſed an improvement thereof; delivering from evil ſignifying perhaps ſomewhat more, than not permitting us to incurr occaſions ſtrongly inviting us to evil; even the effectual keeping us from being overborn or complying with it; but let us conſider that Petition it ſelf.

But deliver us from evil.

From evil, ἀπὸ τοῦ πονηροῦ· S. Chryſoſtom takes it for the Devil; who is the ὁ πονηρὸς, the Evil one, the tempter; who ſeduceth us to evil: but we ſhall take it, according to the more common acception: from evil, that is principally, from ſin or evil moral and ſpiritual; the only evil, ſimply and in its own nature ſuch; and the root of all other evil; from that, and conſequently from all miſchief (evil natural and temporal; or evil penal and afflictive) which may grow upon, or ſprout from thence. As for ſuch evils as theſe, the want of things neceſſary or convenient for us, bodily diſeaſe and pain, diſappointment in our deſigns and ill ſucceſs in our undertakings, diſgrace and reproach upon our good names, dangers, difficulties and diſtreſſes concerning our outward eſtate, diſtractions, vexations and troubles of mind about temporal matters, with the like evils, (in ſome ſenſe, in ſome degree evils, or appearing ſuch to our natural ſenſe and fancy) we may indeed deprecate them (as even our Lord himſelf did) with ſubmiſſion (as he did) to the wiſdom and will of God, in caſe it pleaſeth him, and he thinketh fit to remove them; but all theſe things, being but names and empty ſounds in compariſon to ſpiritual and eternal evils (ſuch as are vicious diſtempers of mind, indiſpoſitions to ſerve God, ill progreſs in our ſpiritual affairs, diſſatisfaction concerning our ſtate in reſpect to God; actual tranſgreſſion of God's holy will and law; incurring God's diſpleaſure and diſfavour; being deprived of his grace and aſſiſtance; wanting the communion and comfort of his Holy Spirit; remorſe of conſcience, and anguiſh of ſpirit for having violated or neglected our duty; blindneſs of mind, hardneſs of heart; want of love, reverence, devotion toward God, of charity and good-will toward our neighbour; of ſobriety, humility, regularity of paſſion, and calmneſs of temper in reſpect to our ſelves and the inward frame of our ſouls; theſe, I ſay, and ſuch like evils) we ſhould abſolutely requeſt of God, that he in mercy would deliver and free us from them; they being irreconcileably repugnant to his will and glory; and inconſiſtent with our eternal welfare. Yet even theſe and all other things we do requeſt only in general terms, leaving the diſtinct matter, and manner, and meaſure, according to which they ſhould be diſpenſed, to the wiſdom and goodneſs of God; who doth (as our Lord telleth us) know what things Matth. 6. 8.
we have need of before we aſk him; and is not only able (as St. Paul ſays, Eph. 3. 20.

but willing alſo) to do for us ſuperabundantly above what we can ask or think. We are hereby (it ſeems) taught this point of good manners in our devotion, not to be tediouſly punctual and particular in our prayers, as if God needed our information, or were apt to neglect the particulars concerning our good.

We ſhut up all with a Doxology, moſt ſutable to the nature of devotion, ſignifying our due faith, our affection, and our reverence toward God.

For thine is the kingdom, the power, and the glory, for ever, and ever. Amen.

That is, For thou haſt a perpetual and unmoveable authority whereby juſtly to diſpoſe of all things; thou haſt an indefectible and irreſiſtible power, whereby thou canſt effect whatever ſeems juſt and good to thee; wherefore we profeſs only to rely upon, and ſeek help from thee; with hope and confidence we addreſs our ſelves to thee for the ſupply of our needs; thine is the glory; all honour and reverence, all love and thankfulneſs are due unto thee, therefore we render our adorations and acknowledgments to thee. Even ſo to thee, God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghoſt be for ever aſcribed all glory and praiſe. Amen.

AN EXPOSITION OF The Decalogue.

Although this Syſtem of Precepts may ſeem to have been in its deſign rather political, than moral; to regard publick, and external, rather than private, and interiour action; that great branch of morality, which reſpecteth our ſelves in our private retirements, or in our particular converſation, ſobriety of mind and manners, being ſcarce touched herein, at leaſt not openly and plainly expreſſed; as alſo devotion toward God (in any of its kinds, of praiſe, thankſgiving; confeſſion of ſin, prayer and interceſſion) that great part of natural Religion, being not explicitly, and poſitively injoined: Although alſo, (as by the introduction thereto, and ſome paſſages therein, eſpecially as it is delivered in Deuteronomy, may appear) it ſeemeth particularly to concern the Jewiſh Nation; a people called, and choſen by God out of all Nations, to be governed in a more ſpecial, and immediate manner by God himſelf, obliged to him by peculiar benefits and favours, deſigned by him to a ſeparate manner of living; being alſo perhaps in temper and diſpoſition as well as in condition and circumſtances of life different from other people; whence Laws convenient (or in a manner neceſſary) for them, might not ſo well ſute to all others; upon which accounts as other of their Laws, ſo perchance ſome paſſages in this notable part of them may not unreaſonably be deemed peculiarly to concern them; Although however this Syſteme doth more directly and immediately oblige that people, all being formally, and in ſtyle of Law directed only to them, promulged in their ears, expreſſed in their language, inſerted into the body of their Laws as a principal member of them; it being alſo expreſly called a Covenant with that people (He declared unto you, ſays the text, his covenant, which he commanded you to perform, even ten commandments) and accordingly was repoſed in the Ark, hence it ſeems named the Ark of the Covenant, the which, when all Nations ſhould be converted to God, and admitted into the Church, was (as the Prophet Jeremy foretold) to be utterly diſcarded and laid aſide. (In thoſe days, ſaith God in him, they ſhall ſay no more the Ark of the Covenant of the Lord; neither ſhall it come to mind, neither ſhall they remember it, neither ſhall they viſit it; neither ſhall that be done any more.) Hence although ſome paſſages herein, according to their primary, ſtrict and literal meaning might never have been intended univerſally and perpetually to oblige;

Ὁ γὰρ ἐν Χωρὴβ παλαιὸς ἤδη νόμος καὶ ὑμῶν μόνον, &c. Juſt M. Dial. cum Tryph. p. 228.

Deut. 4. 13. 10. 2.
Exod. 34. 1, 28.

Jer. 3. 16, 17.

Yet notwithſtanding theſe exceptions, if we conſider,

1. The manner of its delivery; with what extraordinary ſolemnity it was proclaimed; how it was dictated immediately from God's own mouth; and written with his finger; or

2. The matter of it, containing the prime dictates of natural reaſon, the chief rules of piety toward God, and equity toward our neighbour (whence

Neh. 9. 13. (whence thoſe elogies conferr'd on it, in Nehemiah: Thou cameſt alſo down upon mount Sinai, and gaveſt them right judgments, and true laws, good Rom. 7. 12. ſtatutes and commandments; and by St. Paul: The law is holy; the commandment holy, juſt and good; for that commendation doth I ſuppoſe eſpecially reſpect this part of the Jewiſh Law; out of which he takes his inſtance, Rom. 7. 7. Thou ſhalt not covet) if we alſo conſider,

3. The end and deſign of theſe Precepts, which was to ground them in true notions of Religion, and to diſpoſe them to the practice of righteouſneſs; to render them loyal and acceptable ſubjects to God; to pro- Deut. 10. 12. mote God's glory, and their own good; which being expreſſed in general concerning their Law, doth more eſpecially agree to this Syſteme; being as the baſe and platform, the heart and quinteſſence of all their other Laws; the which ſeem added as ſuperſtructures on it, or fences thereof:

4. If we alſo conſider, that our Saviour did not derogate from this Law; but declared his intention only to expound it, or to ampliate, and extend it (they are the words of Tertullian and Irenæus) and how the Rom. 7. 7. Apoſtles do ſometimes alledge ſome paſſages in it, as retaining ſome au- Eph. 6. 2. thority, and force to oblige.

5. Conſidering alſo farther, that there is no commandment herein (howſoever, according to its immediate and direct ſenſe ſeeming peculiar to that people) which may not in a larger, or in a myſterious and ſpiritual meaning; which at leaſt may not according to good analogy, or parity of reaſon concern us; obliging us, if not by direct authority in punctual manner to the very ſame thing, yet, as a ſignification of God's pleaſure and approbation, to ſomewhat anſwerable and like thereto;

6. Laſtly, If we conſider that all, or the greateſt part of, the main duties concerning us are either plainly expreſſed, or cloſely inſinuated in them; or may at leaſt be conveniently reduced to them; our Saviour himſelf having gone before, directing us in the matter and manner of doing it;

Conſidering, I ſay, theſe things, we have no ſmall reaſon to yield great veneration to this ancient Syſteme of Precepts; and to acknowledge the great uſe thereof in order to the guidance of our life and practice: we accordingly ſhall ſo deſcant thereon, as by conſidering the main drift, intrinſick reaſon, and ſpiritual intention of each particular, to reduce the chief Precepts of Chriſtian Doctrine, which oblige us thereto.

Premiſing thus much I addreſs my diſcourſe to the particulars; omitting all controverted niceties concerning the diviſion thereof; and all circumſtantial queſtions; touching only ſuch things, as ſhall appear ſubſtantial, and uſefull.

God ſpake all theſe Words, ſaying:

This is a title, or ſuperſcription like the Par de le Roy, (by the King) at the head of a Proclamation, declaring from whom, and in what manner, that which follows doth come; and therefore implying what it is, and how it ſhould be received.

God ſpake; It comes from God as Authour; and that moſt immediately, as it were from his own mouth; and hath conſequently the nature and force of a Law, obliging to higheſt regard and obedience; as that which proceedeth from the moſt ſovereign, unqueſtionable, and uncontrollable authority; which is promulged in a way moſt evident, and moſt direct: every ſignification of God's purpoſe, or pleaſure is uſually called God's word; for God (as the Apoſtle ſays) in divers kinds, and Heb. 1. 1. manners did ſpeak unto the fathers; and to every ſuch word our ear ſhould be attentive, our heart ſhould be ſubmiſſive, our hand ſhould be obedient; but eſpecially they ſhould be ſo, when God himſelf immediately declares his mind and will; as he did notoriouſly in this caſe, by a great voice, diſtinctly audible and intelligible, miraculouſly formed by himſelf: Behold, Deut. 5. 24. ſay the People, the Lord our God hath ſhewed us his glory, and his greatneſs, and we have heard his voice out of the midſt of the fire; we have ſeen this day, that God doth talk with man, and he liveth: and if whatever is in God's name (by meſſage of Angels, by inſpiration of men, or by any other ways) revealed muſt be entertained with all ſubmiſs reſpect, what regard is due to that word, which God is pleaſed, not by his Miniſters and inſtruments, but himſelf in perſon, as it were, to pronounce?

Theſe words: that is, theſe ſpeeches, or ſentences; (for ſo a Word in Scripture-ſtyle ſignifieth) or theſe things, and matters (for the Hebrew word debarim, as the Greek ῥήματα, ſignifieth both words and things: they are ſeveral times in the Pentateuch called the ten words, or ten things; Exod. 34. 28. whence the Syſteme of them is named the Decalogue. Deut. 4. 13.

All theſe words: all, without diſtinction or exception, did proceed from 10. 2. the ſame authority, and in the ſame manner; and all therefore do require Jam. 2. 10,11. the like regard and obſervance to be yielded to them. Matth. 5. 19.

I am the Lord; or, I am Jehovah, thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt:

Theſe words are by ſome taken for a Precept, injoining the acknowledgment, and acceptance of God, anſwerable to what is here implied; and conſequently all the poſitive duties of Religion, deducible hence; but we ſee the ſtyle is declarative, and aſſertive, not directly imperative; and ſo it may paſs rather as a Preface farther enforcing obligation to obedience; wherein are expreſſed, or intimated the chief reaſons, upon which it is grounded; every word containing in it ſomewhat of remarkable emphaſis:

I am Jehovah; or that very ſame God, who under this appellation diſcovered my ſelf to thy forefathers; who enacted a ſpecial Covenant with them; who received homage, worſhip, and engagements to ſervice from them; who promiſed eſpecial protection and favour to them, and to their ſeed; that Jehovah, who indeed am, what this name importeth, the only true and real God; eternal, independent, and indefectible in eſſence; true and infallible in word; conſtant and immutable in purpoſe; firm and faithfull in performance of whatever I promiſe, or threaten: that ſame Jehovah I am; to whoſe words therefore, upon all accounts of reaſon, of duty, of intereſt thou particularly doſt owe muſt ſubmiſſive attention and obedience.

Thy God: that ſupereminent being, and power, to whom thou peculiarly doſt owe worſhip and honour, love and affection, duty and ſervice: who although he be indeed the Lord of all the world, yet beareth a ſpecial relation unto thee; as having choſen, and avouched thee to be a ſpecial Deut. 7. 6. people to himſelf, above all the people, that are upon the face of the earth; 4. 2. having promiſed thee to make thee high above all nations, which he hath made, in praiſe, and in name, and in honour; and having by many ſignal demonſtrations of favour and mercy confirmed to thee the performance of his covenant, and promiſe; thou alſo reciprocally having avowed me Deut. 26. 16. to be thy God, to walk in my ways, to keep my ſtatutes, my commandments, my judgments, and to hearken to my voice.

Who brought thee out of the land of Egypt; out of of the houſe of bondage:

This is a particular, and moſt remarkable inſtance, by which it appeareth what God it is, that doth thus impoſe law upon them; and how they are obliged to entertain it: that God it is, who in purſuance of his ſingular favour toward thee, and of his Covenant made with thee, hath particularly obliged thee by ſo eminent a benefit, in a manner ſo full of wonder in it ſelf, ſo full of grace toward thee, delivering thee from ſaddeſt oppreſſion and ſlavery, bringing thee into a deſirable ſtate of preſent liberty, and of ſure tendency (not otherwiſe than by thy fault to be fruſtrated) toward enjoyment of reſt, of plenty, of all joy and comfort in the promiſed land; declaring hereby, as his glorious and divine perfections of wiſdom, and power, ſo his exceeding goodneſs toward thee, his faithfull care over thee, his readineſs and ſufficiency in all thy needs and exigencies to protect, preſerve and deliver thee:

I then being ſuch, Jehovah, the only true God; thy God, by particular engagement, and endearment; thy gracious and bountifull benefactour not in will only, but in deed; do thus propound my will unto thee; and upon all accounts of general and ſpecial duty; of reaſon, of juſtice, of gratitude require thy regard, and obſervance of what follows.

Now what God in a direct, and literal ſenſe thus ſpeaketh to the Jewiſh people, may according to likeneſs of caſe, and parity of reaſon (eſpecially in a myſtical and ſpiritual way) upon more conſiderable, and effectual accounts be applied unto us: The Lord Jehovah is ſuch no leſs to us than Heb. 13. 8. to them; He is the ſame yeſterday, to day, and for ever; to him, as to the only, true, eternal and Almighty God, the eſſential Authour, Lord and Governour of all things, our higheſt reſpect, and obſervance are due; He alſo, in a ſtricter relation, founded on higher grounds, is our God, having choſen us, and conſecrated us more eſpecially to himſelf; having received Heb 8. 6. 7. 22. us into a cloſer confederacy (a new and better covenant, as the Apoſtle calls it, eſtabliſhed upon better promiſes) having obliged us by granting nobler privileges, and diſpenſing more excellent benefits to us: who likewiſe hath brought us up out of a ſpiritual Egypt, and ſtate of infinitely more wretched bondage; hath reſcued us from the tyrannical dominion of Satan (a far more intolerably cruel and hard Maſter, than any Pharaoh) hath freed us from ſerving ſin in our ſouls and bodies, a far harder ſervice, than making bricks, or any bodily toil can be; who hath conducted us in the way, and conferr'd on us an aſſured hope (if we be not wanting to our ſelves, and our duty) of entring into the heavenly Canaan, a place of perfect reſt, and unconceivable bliſs: who (as Saint Paul expreſſeth it) hath Coloſſ. 1. 13. delivered us from the power of darkneſs, and tranſlated us into the kingdom of his moſt beloved Son: who therefore here, according to ſpiritual intent, may be underſtood to ſpeak in a higher ſtrain to us; juſtly exacting a more punctual and accurate obedience to his commandments. But ſo much for that part, which ſeems introductory.

Thou ſhalt have no other Gods before me. I. Commandment.

'Tis in the Hebrew; there ſhall be to thee no other Gods (or no Matth. 4. ſtrange Gods; for alii ſome render it, ſome alieni) על פני (al panai) to my face, or at my face; that is in compariſon, or competition with me; ſo as to be confronted to me; or together and in conſort with me: I am
He (ſaith God otherwhere) and there is no God עמדי (immadhi) with me; Deut. 32. 39.
or beſide me; πλὴν ἐμοῦ, the LXX. render it; and ſo the phraſe commonly importeth; as in that ſaying of the Scribe, anſwering to this: There is one God, καὶ οὐκ ἔστιν ἄλλος πλὴν αὐτοῦ, and there is no other God beſide him: Mark 12. 32.
but we need not criticize on the words, the ſenſe being plain; as containing a prohibition of aſſuming any other into partnerſhip with the one true God; acknowledging in mind, or in outward expreſſion any other for God. The Precept, as moſt of the reſt, is in form negative, and prohibitive, but ſuppoſeth and implieth ſomewhat affirmative and poſitive; as the reſt alſo may be conceived to do. It implies this affirmative Precept, Thou ſhalt have me for thy God: Now to have for our God, ſignifies as to internal diſpoſition of mind a moſt high eſteem, honour, dread and love of that Being, as endued with attributes, and perfections ſuperlatively excellent; the admiring all his works, approving all his actions, acquieſcing in all his proceedings and dealings with us; the repoſing our hope and truſt in him as moſt able and willing to help us, and do us good; in outward expreſſion to acknowledge, praiſe and bleſs him as ſuch; to yield all fitting demonſtrations of reſpect to his name, and to whatever is ſpecially related to him; patiently to ſubmit to his will, and readily to obey his commandments: theſe principally and the like acts of internal devotion, and external piety are comprized in the words, having him for our God, and we are to underſtand them here injoined to us; the ſame, which is in Scripture called the fearing, the ſerving, the worſhipping, the loving God Matt. 22. 37. Luke 10. 27.
with all our heart, and all our ſoul, and all our mind, and all our might. Deut. 6. 5.

This is implied; and it is expreſly prohibited us to yield to any other, beſide him, the like eſteem, acknowledgment, or ſervice: That there is in truth but one ſuch Being, to whom eminently thoſe acts are due, nature, ancient tradition, general conſent, and eſpecially divine revelation do aſſure us; whereupon is conſequent, that yielding them (yielding, I ſay, thoſe opinions, eſtimations and affections of our mind, or thoſe acknowledgments and expreſſions in word, or thoſe performances in deed or work, which we before ſpecified) to any other Being whatever, whether really exiſtent in the world, or merely formed by our imagination, is highly unreaſonable, unbeſeeming us, and unjuſt toward him.

1. It is highly unreaſonable, as falſe and groundleſs in it ſelf; as vain and unprofitable to us; as productive of many bad effects. It is from errour in a matter of the higheſt nature, and maineſt conſequence; and ſo beyond any other miſtake hurtfull to us, as reaſonable and intelligent creatures; the μετάλλαξις τῆς ἀληθείας τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐν τῷ ψεύδει, the tranſmu- Rom. 1. 25.
ting the truth of God into a lye, Saint Paul calls it; reckoning it for a grievous folly, and crime. It is a vanity of all moſt lamentable; a purſuance Jer. 2. 13.
of ſhadows, an embracing of clouds; a building in air, or mere vacuity; a leaning upon that, which hath no ſubſtance, or no ſtrength to ſupport us; a dreaming and doting upon mere nothing; whence thoſe falſe Deities Jer. 8. 19, &c.
well in Scripture are termed μάταια, vanities, for that as they have no Act. 14. 15, &c.
truth, or ſubſtance, or efficacy conſiderable in them, ſo all our thoughts, affections, expectations and labours are idlely miſemployed, and unprofitably miſpent upon them.

2. It is alſo a thing moſt unbeſeeming us men, (whom God hath placed in ſo high a rank of worth and dignity, among his creatures; who are in our original ſo near of kin,ſo like in nature, ſo dear in relation and regard unto God himſelf) to admire and worſhip, to place our choice affections upon, to afford lowly ſubmiſſions unto, to reſt our hope and confidence in any other but him, who alone truly ſo far excels us, and can worthily challenge ſuch reſpects from us; all flattery is baſe and unworthy, but this of all is the worſt and moſt unbecoming.

3. To do ſo, is alſo moſt unjuſt and injurious to God; to whom as to the Authour of our being, and of all our good received ſince, we do owe all that our mind can yield of reverence, all that our heart can hold of affection, all that our tongue can utter of praiſe, all that our utmoſt might can perform of ſervice; and ſince the exhibiting to any other thing part of theſe muſt needs not only by that communication debaſe, and derogate from their worth, but alſo withdraw them in great meaſure from him, ſo diminiſhing and embezilling his due (for we cannot, as our Saviour teacheth us, together adhere unto, or ſerve divers Maſters) therefore having any other God, but the true one, is a high indignity, and a heinous injury to him.

Οὐ περισπᾶται πρὸς τῷ Θεῷ καὶ ἄλλῳ τινὶ δουλεύειν μετ' αὐτοῦ, οὐδὲ πρὸς τὸ δυσὶ κυρίοις δουλεύειν.
Orig. l. 8.
p. 382.

This command therefore is moſt reaſonable upon many accounts; which as it hath been in groſſeſt manner violated by thoſe who have not acknowledged, or worſhipped any God at all, and by thoſe who have acknowledged and adored many Gods (by all Atheiſts and Polytheiſts) from which tranſgreſſions thereof we Chriſtians may ſeem totally exempt, who in formal profeſſion and practice have but one God (the Maker and Lord of all things, infinitely perfect, and glorious) yet there are many ſubtile, and perchance no leſs miſchievous tranſgreſſions thereof, of which even we may be very guilty, and to which we are very obnoxious. If we do not with all our hearts reverence, and love the moſt wiſe and powerfull, the moſt juſt and holy, the moſt good and gracious God; if we do not truſt and hope in him as the fountain of all our good; if we do not diligently worſhip and praiſe him; if we do not humbly ſubmit to his will, and obey his Laws, we break the poſitive intent of this Law, not having him for our God; being indeed like thoſe, of whom Saint Paul ſpeaketh, who profeſs to know God (that is, who in words and outward pretence acknowledge him) but in works deny him, being abominable, and diſobedient, and to every good work reprobate. Likewiſe if we frame in our fancy an Idea untrue, diſagreeable unto, or unworthy of that one moſt excellent Being, and to ſuch a phantaſm of our own creation do yield our higheſt reſpects, and beſt affections, we break this Law, and have another God to our ſelves. If upon any creature (whether our ſelves, or any other thing) we impart our chief eſteem, or affection; or employ our moſt earneſt care and endeavour; or chiefly rely upon it, or moſt delight in it, that thing we make a God unto us, and are guilty of breaking this Law; hence Saint Paul more than once calls the covetous (or wrongfull) perſon an Idolater; and our Lord calls the immoderate purſuit of riches, the ſerving (or worſhipping) of Mammon; and Saint Paul ſpeaketh of ſome perſons, who were φιλήδονοι μᾶλλον, ἢ φιλόθεοι, lovers of pleaſures, rather than lovers of God; of whom otherwiſe he ſays, that their God was their belly: we meet with thoſe in the Scripture, who put their truſts in their horſes, and their chariots; with thoſe, who ſacrifice to their net, and burn incenſe to their drag; with them who truſt in man, and make fleſh their arme (men of Mezentius his faith; ready to ſay with him, Dextra mihi Deus eſt, & telum quod miſſile libro) with thoſe, whoſe heart is lifted up (as the Prince of Tyre in Ezekiel)

Λέγει ὁ Ξήνων, ὁ τῆς Στωϊκῆς κτίστης αἱρέσεως -- μήτε ναοὺς ποιεῖν μήτε ἀγάλματα· οὐδὲν γὰρ εἶναι τῶν θεῶν ἄξιον κατασκεύασμα.
Clem. Alex.
Strom. V.
p. 426.
Id. de Numa.
p. 223.
Strom. I.
Vid. Aug. de C. D. 4. 31.
Tit. 1. 16.

Eph. 5. 5.
Coloſſ. 3. 5.
Matth. 6. 24.
2 Tim. 3. 4.
Phil. 3. 19.
Pſal. 20. 7.
Hab. 1. 16.
Jer. 17. 5.
Virgil Æn. 10.

kiel) and who ſay they are Gods; theſe, and whoever practiſe in like manner, are ſo many tranſgreſſours of this Covenant: In ſhort, whoever chiefly regards and affects, ſeeks and purſues, confides and delights in wealth, or honour, or pleaſure; wit, wiſdom, ſtrength, or beauty; himſelf, friends, or any other creature, he hath another God, againſt the deſign, and meaning of this holy Law. Ezek. 28. 2. Iſa. 10. 13.

Thou ſhalt not make unto thee any graven image, &c.

II. Commandment.

The firſt Commandment determined the final object of our Religion; this doth limit the manner of exerciſing and expreſſing it; as to the chief intent of it, interdicting that mode, which in the practice of ancient times had ſo generally prevailed, of repreſenting the Deities (apprehended ſo) in ſome corporeal ſhape, and thereto yielding ſuch expreſſions of reſpect, as they conceived ſutable and acceptable to ſuch Deities. I cannot ſtand to declare the riſe, and progreſs of ſuch a practice; how the Devil's malice, and ſome mens fraud conſpiring with other mens ſuperſtitious ignorance and fondneſs, prevailed ſo far to impoſe upon mankind; I ſhall only obſerve, that men naturally are very prone to comply with ſuggeſtions to ſuch guiſes of Religion: for as the ſenſe of want, and pain, and manifold inconvenience, not to be removed or remedied by any preſent ſenſible means, doth prompt men to wiſh, and ſeek for help from otherwhere; and this diſpoſes them to entertain any hopes propounded to them (with how little ſoever ground of probability) of receiving it from any abſent, or inviſible power; as it alſo conſequently engageth them to undertake any conditions required by thoſe, who propound ſuch hopes, as needfull for obtaining thereof; whence the ordinary ſort of men are very apt to embrace any way of Religion ſuggeſted to them, eſpecially by perſons of credit, and authority for knowledge; ſo alſo, when the propoſition thereof doth come attended with circumſtantial appearances, and ſhews gratifying their ſenſes, or humouring their paſſions, or delightfully amuſing their fancies, it moſt eaſily allures, and takes them; as likewiſe on the other ſide, when abſtraction of mind, and reſtraint of paſſion are required, and ſenſe or fancy are little entertained thereby, men are ſomewhat averſe from ſuch propoſals of Religion, and are not ſo eaſily brought heartily to like, or earneſtly to embrace them; wherefore ſince the propounding of images and ſenſible repreſentations (relating to ſomewhat not immediately diſcerned, from whence men are promiſed the ſupply of their needs, or relief from the inconveniences, which they endure) by their magnificency, beauty, curioſity, ſtrangeneſs, or even by their ſenſibility it ſelf, do make ſo facile, and pleaſant impreſſions upon the dull and low conceits of men, it is the leſs wonderfull, that men commonly have been ſo eaſily inveagled into ſuch idolatrous ſuperſtitions; ſo unreaſonable in themſelves, and of ſo miſchievous conſequence. For what can be more ſenſeleſs, than to imagine, that that Being, which in wiſdom and power is ſufficient to over-rule nature, and thereby to afford us the aſſiſtance we need, may be reſembled by any of theſe corporeal things, the beſt of which we cannot, without debaſing our ſelves, eſteem ſuperiour to our ſelves? how unreaſonable is it to conceit thus, how unworthy is it, and unſutable to the dignity of our nature, derived from heaven, to crouch unto ſuch mean repreſentations? it is Saint Paul's diſcourſe: Being (ſaith he) the off-ſpring of God, we ought not to think, that the Godhead is like unto gold, or ſilver, or ſtone graven by art, and man's device. How injurious alſo to that Κοινὸς ἁπάντων νόμος. Max. Tyr. diſſ. 38. Where he defendeth Idolatry.

Act. 17. 29.

that moſt excellent nature muſt it be to frame, and expoſe to view ſuch not only homely and mean, but in reſpect of the divine nature, moſt foul and ugly portraictures of him, which cannot but tend to viliſie him in mens conceit? * He that ſhould form the image of a ſerpent, or a toad, and exhibit it as the ſimilitude of a King, would ſurely derogate much from his Majeſty, and beget very mean and unbeſeeming conceits of his perſon in their minds, whom he ſhould perſuade to take it for ſuch; and infinitely more muſt he detract from the dignity, and diminiſh the reverence due to that immenſe, almighty, alwiſe, moſt pure and perfect being, who ſhall preſume to preſent any ſenſible, any finite, any corruptible thing as a reſemblance of him; changing (as St. Paul expreſſeth it) the glory of the incorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and fourfooted beaſts, and creeping things; as the Iſraelites are ſaid to have changed their glory (that is, their glorious God) into the ſimilitude of an ox, that eateth graſs: No wonder it was, that they, who uſed ſuch expreſſions of their Religion, had ſo low opinions concerning thoſe ſuppoſed Deities whom they worſhipped; that they ſuppoſed them liable to ſuch paſſions, fathered ſuch actions upon them, deſcribed them as vile in their diſpoſitions and their doings, as they repreſented them in their ſhape: Moſt reaſonable therefore is this prohibition of making any reſemblance of what kind ſoever (by picture, ſculpture or fuſion) in order to religious adoration; and yielding to them any ſuch ſignification of reſpect, which the cuſtom or conſent of men hath appropriated to Religion; as bowing, falling down, lying proſtrate before them, or the like: moſt reaſonable I ſay, for ſince there is but one proper, and allowable object of our worſhip, as the firſt Commandment declares and enacts, the making an image of any other exiſtent in nature, or deviſed by our own fancy in order to the worſhip thereof, is but a purſuance of that unreaſonable, unhandſom, and unjuſt ſuperſtition there forbidden; adding ſome abſurdity in the manner to the pravity in the ſubſtance of ſuch worſhip.

* Ἐξευτελίζει τὴν τοῦ θεοῦ σεμνότητα ἡ ἐν ἑτοίμῳ τῆς ὄψεως συνήθεια, καὶ τὴν νοητὴν οὐσίαν δι' ὕλης σεβάζεσθαι ἀτιμάζειν ἐστὶν αὐτὴν δι' αἰσθήσεως. Clem. Strom. V. p. 408.

The being ordinarily expoſed to view doth (ſaith Clem. Alex.) extenuate the venerability of God; and to worſhip the intelligible nature by matter doth viliſie it through the ſenſe.

Rom. 1. 23.

Pſal. 106. 20.

And as for that one true object of our devotion, the eternal, immenſe, and all perfect God; the glorious excellency of whoſe nature doth infinitely tranſcend our comprehenſion, and conſequently of whom we cannot deviſe any reſemblance not infinitely beneath him, unlike to him, unworthy of him (whereby we ſhall not diſparage him, and expoſe him to irreverent apprehenſions, eſpecially with the groſs vulgar; whereby indeed we ſhall not cloud his true inimitable perfections, and affix imperfections to him; blending inexpreſſible truth with apparent falſhood) it muſt be therefore a profane folly to pretend the repreſenting him by any image; and the doing of it is upon ſuch accounts in many places of Scripture forbidden; and that it is ſo here, according to the intent of this Precept is plain by that place in Deuteronomy, where Moſes reports the ground of this prohibition: Take ye therefore (ſaith he) good heed unto your ſelves; for ye ſaw no manner of ſimilitude on the day, that the Lord ſpake unto you in Horeb, out of the midſt of the fire, leſt you corrupt, and make you a graven image: No ſhape repreſenting God did appear at his utterance of theſe Laws, to prevent their framing any reſemblance of God, and taking occaſion to practiſe this ſort of worſhip; thereby implied to be unreaſonable. And the Prophet Eſay having in ſublime language and diſcourſe ſet out the incomparable greatneſs, power, and majeſty of God (who hath meaſured the waters in the hollow of his hand, and meted out heaven with a ſpan, and comprehended the duſt of the earth in a meaſure, and weighed the mountains in ſcales, and the hills in a balance; before whom the nations are as a drop of a bucket, and are counted as the ſmall duſt of a balance---yea before whom all nations are as nothing, and are counted to him leſs than nothing and vanity; who ſitteth upon the circle of the earth; and the inhabitants thereof are as graſhoppers; who ſtretcheth out the heavens as a curtain, and ſpreadeth them out as a tent to dwell in) having, I ſay, in this, and more ſuch language endeavoured to deſcribe the might, and majeſty of God, he inferrs: To whom then will ye liken God; or what likeneſs will ye compare unto him? and thereupon he proceeds to diſcourſe againſt making images for religious uſe. Like whereto is the diſcourſe of Saint Paul to the Athenians: God (ſaith he) who made the world, and all things that are therein, being Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands; nor is worſhipped by the hands of men,---we therefore being the off-ſpring of God, ought not to think that the Godhead is like unto gold, or ſilver, or ſtone, the engravement of art, and man's device; in which place, as the forming any image to repreſent divine things is manifeſtly prohibited, ſo the reaſons which we touched againſt ſuch practice, are diſcernibly enough inſinuated.

Deut. 4. 15.

Eſa. 40. 18.
—25.
Act. 17. 24.
—29.

Neither ſhould we omit, that this Law is confirmed in the New Teſtament, and there made a part of God's new Law: for we are therein often commanded to flee idols, not to be idolaters, to ſhun idolatry as a moſt heinous crime, of the higheſt rank, proceeding from fleſhly pravity, inconſiſtent with good conſcience, and expoſing to damnation: for the meaning and notion of Idolatry in which places, why ſhould we underſtand it otherwiſe, than according to the plain ſenſe of the word, which is the worſhip of images, or reſemblances? why ſhould we take it otherwiſe, than as oppoſite to God's Law, then in force? why ſhould we otherwiſe expound it, than according to the common notion and acceptance of God's people at that time? The word Idolatry was unknown to other people than the Jews; among the Jews it ſignified the violation of the ſecond Commandment; wherefore the obſervance of that Commandment is eſtabliſhed and enforced by the Apoſtles. The Jews deteſted the worſhipping any images; their deteſtation was grounded on this Law; they therefore, who earneſtly exhort them to continue in deteſtation thereof, do confirm, and enforce the obligation of this Law; nor can we reaſonably ſuppoſe any diſtinction, or reſervation for any Idolatry (or any worſhipping of images) as lawfull, or allowable to Chriſtians; ſince the Apoſtles as they found it univerſally prohibited to the Jews, ſo they continued to charge Chriſtians againſt it. This diſcourſe hath more force, conſidering that the ſame reaſon, upon which this Law was enacted, doth ſtill apparently continue; men ſtill unmeaſurably affecting this fancifull way of Religion, being apt in the exerciſe thereof (if not curb'd by a Law) to dote upon ſenſible repreſentations; being averſe from raiſing up their minds to the only true object of worſhip, as endued with intelligible, and ſpiritual perfections: this the experience of mens wild eagerneſs for images, reliques, and other ſuch fooliſh trinkets, which had almoſt quite oppreſſed our Religion (as in many ages the beſt and wiſeſt men did obſerve and complain) doth plainly evince.

1 Joh. 5. 21.
1 Cor. 10. 7, 14.
1 Cor. 5. 10, 11. 6. 9.
Gal. 5. 20.
Apoc. 9. 20. 21. 8. 22. 15.

We may add, that if the common tradition and conſent of the ancient Church is in any caſe a ground of perſuaſion, or rule of practice to us, we are thence obliged to diſapprove, and decline the worſhipping images; for nothing can be more evident than that all ſuch worſhip was not only carefully eſchewed, but zealouſly deteſted by the primitive Chriſtians: This is manifeſt from moſt expreſs words of the Fathers generally impugning and condemning all worſhip of images; which are as applicable to that worſhip, which hath been practiſed among Chriſtians, as to that of the Heathens; their expreſſions do not ſignify, nor their arguments prove any thing, if any worſhip of images be allowable, if they do not as well condemn and confute the modern, as the ancient Romans; They could not with any reaſon, or modeſty have uſed ſuch words, or urged ſuch reaſons, if their practice had been like that, which afterward crept into the Church; their darts then againſt Pagan Idolatry eaſily might, ſurely would have been, retorted on themſelves; which is ſo far from having been done, that the Pagans accuſed them for having no * Images (Celſus objecteth, † ſaith Origen, that we ſhun making altars, ſtatues and ſhrines, thinking this to be a faithfull pledge (or mark) of our ſecret communion together: this Origen anſwers by confeſſing the matter of fact; but defending the right; not for your reaſon, ſaith he, we ſhun theſe things, but * becauſe we by the doctrine of Jeſus, having found the true manner of piety toward God, do eſchew thoſe things, which in conceit or appearance of piety do make men impious—— and the images of Chriſtians are (ſaith he) their vertues, whereby they reſemble God; and truly worſhip him; and every good Chriſtian, carefully imitating God, is his beſt ſtatue.

* Cur nullas aras habent, templa nulla, nulla nota ſimulacra? Minur.

Conſueſtis crimen nobis maximum impietatis affingere, quòd neque ædes ſacras venerationis ad officia conſtruamus, non Deorum alicujus ſimulacrum conſtituamus, aut formam, &c. Arnob. 6.

† ——Κέλσος φησὶν ἡμᾶς βωμοὺς, καὶ ἀγάλματα, καὶ νεὼς ἱδρύσθαι φεύγειν ἐπεὶ τὸ πιστὸν ἡμῖν ἀφανοῦς καὶ ἀπορρήτου κοινωνίας οἴεται εἶναι σύνθημα. 8. p. 389.

Ὁ Μωσῆς τὰς δοκίμους καὶ γλαφυρὰς τέχνας ζωγραφίαν καὶ ἀνδριαντοποιΐαν ἐκ τῆς καθ' αὑτὸν πολιτείας ἐξήλασε. Philo de Gig.

* ——ἀλλ' ὅτι εὑρόντες, διὰ τὴν Ἰησοῦ διδασκαλίαν, τὸν τρόπον τῆς εἰς τὸ θεῖον εὐσεβείας, φεύγομεν τὰ φαντασίᾳ εὐσεβείας ἀσεβεῖς ποιοῦντα, &c.

Vid. Tert. de Idol. 3. 4. p. 389. 390.

Yea the Fathers were ſo far from practiſing worſhip of Images, that ſome of them condemn the ſimple making of them; calling the art of doing it a fallacious art, introduced by the Devil and forbidden by God; expounding this Commandment ſo, as that in it not only the worſhipping, but the forming any ſimilitude is forbidden: * Moſes, (ſaith Clem. Alex.) did of old expreſly give law, that no carved, or fuſile, or plaiſtered, or painted portraicture, or imagery ſhould be made; that we ſhould not attend to ſenſible things, but paſs to things intelligible: and † Tertullian in ſeveral places ſaith the ſame. Whether their expoſition (concurring it ſeems with the common opinion of the Jews in their time) were true, I ſhall not now diſcuſs; that making any ſimilitudes in order to worſhip is prohibited, is moſt evident.

* Μωσῆς πρόπαλαι διαῤῥήδην ἐνομοθέτησεν μηδὲν δεῖν γλυπτὸν, ἢ χωνευτὸν, ἢ πλαστὸν, ἢ γραπτὸν ἄγαλμά τε καὶ ἀπεικόνισμα ποιεῖσθαι· ὡς μὴ αἰσθητοῖς προσανέχοιμεν, ἐπὶ δὲ τὰ νοητὰ μετίωμεν, &c.

Clem. Strom. V. p. 408.

Οὐ γὰρ ἄν ποτε ὁ μηδὲ γλυπτὸν εἴδωλον δημιουργεῖν παραινέσας, αὐτὸς ἀπεικόνιζεν τῶν ἁγίων ἄγαλμα. p. 411.

† Tertul. de Spectac. cap. 23. de Idol. 3, 4, 5, &c. Contra Marc. 2. 22. Vid. Iren. 4. 31, 32. Tertul. de Idol. per tot. Aug. contra Fauſt. 15. 4, 7. & 19. 18. Contra 2 Epiſt. Pet. 3. 4.

In fine, divers of the Fathers ſay, that all the commands in the Decalogue, excepting the Sabbath, do continue in force, as naturally obligatory, and as confirmed by the Chriſtian Law: for inſtance St. Auguſtine in his 119 Epiſtle ſpeaketh thus: The other precepts (excepting the Sabbath) there (in the Decalogue) we do obſerve properly as they are commanded without any figurate obſervation; for we have maniſeſtly learnt, not to worſhip idols, and not to take the name of the Lord our God in vain, to honour father and mother, &c. do not figuratelу pretend one thing and myſtically ſignify another thing, but are ſo obſerved as they ſound.

But ſo much for the prohibition: I ſhall add, that we may conceive this poſitive Precept implied, and intended here, that in our devotions and religious ſervices of God we ſhould raiſe our mind above groſs ſenſe and fancy; that we ſhould entertain high and worthy conceptions of God; that we ſhould apprehend him incomparably ſuperiour to all things, which we do ſee or know; that we direct our minds unto him as to a being tranſcendently perfect in goodneſs, juſtice, wiſdom and power, above what we can comprehend and think; that which our Saviour calls worſhipping God in ſpirit and truth; which is (as I take it) the ſpecial poſitive duty of this Commandment. Joh. 4. 23, 24.

I need not farther to urge, how preſumptuous and dangerous the practices of thoſe men are, who (to the great danger, and ſcandal of Chriſtianity among Jews, and Mahometans, and men of other Religions) notwithſtanding theſe commandments of God, backed with others, of the ſame import, frequently occurring in the holy Scripture, (never that we find any intimation of, repealed or relaxed) particularly againſt that ſignal one made uſe of by our Saviour, Thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord, thy God, and him onely ſhalt thou ſerve; without any ancient good authority, or example, without any neceſſity or good reaſon inducing, do not only yield themſelves, but violently force others to yield unto Angels, and unto the ſouls of dead men (men of dubious ſtate in reference to God, not having paſt the laſt trial and judgment, the reſult whereof 'tis a profane temerity in us peremptorily to anticipate) all kinds of worſhip, both internal (repoſing truſt and hope in them of obtaining benefits from them; attributing unto them in their eſteem the knowledge and power, which for all that we can know are incommunicably proper unto God himſelf) and external, of prayer and invocation, of praiſe and thankſgiving; and not only thus as to the ſubſtance imparting a kind of divine worſhip to them, but as to the manner, erecting images of them, even in the places devoted to God's own ſervice, and affording to them the ſame expreſſions of reverence and reſpect, that we do or can preſent unto God himſelf (with great ſolemnity dedicating ſuch Images to them, with huge care and coſt decking them, with great ſemblance of devotion ſaluting them, and caſting themſelves down before them; carrying them in proceſſion, expoſing them to the people, and making long pilgrimages to them;) ſo that inſtead of the ſpiritual worſhip of God himſelf, peculiarly required of Chriſtians, and to which our Religion is perfectly ſuted, a Religion chiefly employing ſenſe, and fancy, and for the greateſt part directed unto the repreſentations of creatures is ſubſtituted, in deſpight, as it were, and in defiance of theſe Commandments: the plain force of which they endeavour to elude and evade by ſlender pretences, and ſubtile diſtinctions, by the like to which there is no Law, which may not as eaſily be rendred inſignificant, and invalid; never in the mean time conſidering, that theſe Laws were not given to employ the wits of Sophiſters and Schoolmen; but to direct the practice of rude and plain people; to which purpoſe no Law, after ſuch Artiſts have had the handling of it, can ſignify any thing: nothing being ſo clear which by their cavillations and quirks they cannot confound; nothing ſo ſmooth wherein they cannot find or make knots.

There is ſubjoined to theſe two Commandments (as we reckon them; others * have accounted them but one; and their opinion is ſomewhat countenanced, by what is added here ſeeming to bear a common reſpect to both, there is I ſay ſubjoined) a reaſon, or rather a contexture of reaſons ſtrongly preſſing and encouraging to obedience, deterring and diſcouraging from diſobedience to them; or indeed generally to all God's Commandments, but eſpecially unto theſe, moſt immediately relating to Him:

* S. Auſtin, Bede, &c.

For I the Lord thy God am a jealous God. (am El Exod. 34. 14. kanah, fortis zelotes, as the Vulgar Latine reads it: it may ſeem to have been a name of God, implying, as all the other names of God do, ſome attribute of God; for it is in the 34th of Exodus, ſaid: Thou ſhalt worſhip no other God for the Lord, whoſe Name is Jealous, or Kana, is a jealous God;)

I am a jealous God, that is, a God very tender of my honour, and of my right; who am impatient of any mate, or competitour in reſpect to thoſe duties, which properly and incommunicably belong unto me; I am Iſa. 42. 8. (ſaith God in the Prophet Eſay) the Lord, that is my name, and my glory I will not give to another, nor my praiſe to graven images: this Jealouſie doth contain in it not only a ſtrong diſlike, but a fierce diſpleaſure, againſt the Deut. 4. 24. infringers of theſe Laws: For the Lord thy God (ſaith Moſes in Deuteronomy, preſſing the obſervance of this ſame Precept, concerning the worſhip of Images) is a conſuming fire, he is a jealous God: And if God be thus jealous, ſo eaſily provoked to indignation by our detracting his due honour, and imparting it to any other, we have great reaſon to be afraid of incur- Pſal. 76. 7. ring the guilt of either; for who can ſtand in his ſight, when he is angry? who can ſupport the effects of his diſpleaſure?

Viſiting the iniquity of the Fathers upon the Children, unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me.

Viſiting the iniquities of fathers upon the children; God doth not only puniſh thoſe perſons themſelves, who commit notorious and heinous ſins (ſuch as theſe of idolatry and profaneneſs, whereby he is publickly wrong'd and diſhonoured) but the more to deterr men (who naturally bear much regard to their poſterity, and are afraid to be, aſhamed to appear the cauſes of ruine and calamity to their family) he declareth that in reſpect to their doings it ſhall go ill with their poſterity; they ſhall therefore be more ſtrictly and ſeverely dealt with; they ſhall upon this ſcore be capable of leſs favour and mercy from God, than otherwiſe they might have been: for we muſt not hereby underſtand, that God will arbitrarily inflict undeſerved pains upon the children of bad men for the faults of their anceſtours (God doth expreſly diſclaim ſuch kind of proceeding; Ezek. 18. 20. The ſon ſhall not bear the iniquity of the father; the ſoul that ſinneth it ſhall die; ſaith he in the Prophet: and, Every one ſhall die for his own Deut. 24. 16. Jer. 31. 30. iniquity; every man that eateth the ſowre grape, his teeth ſhall be ſet on edge) but that he will upon that account withdraw his free favours from them; that meaſure of grace and indulgence, which otherwiſe the ſon of ſuch a perſon (had he not been a great Traitour againſt God) might according to the general courſe of God's goodneſs have received, the which might have more effectually reſtrained him from ſin, and conſequently have prevented his guilt and his puniſhment, God may well (in conſiſtence with his juſtice and goodneſs, to manifeſt his deteſtation of heinous wickedneſs) withhold from him. Such a ſon, if he do fall into perſonal offences (for that alſo is to be underſtood; otherwiſe ſuch is the Ezek. 18. 14, 17. goodneſs of God, that he hath declared, if a ſon ſeeing his fathers ſins, and and conſidering doeth not the like, he ſhall not die for the iniquity of his father, but ſhall ſurely live; if I ſay he falleth into perſonal ſins) God will viſit; that is, will uſe a cloſe inſpection and animadverſion upon him, will ſeverely puniſh and avenge his ſin; not only upon his own, but on his father's account; examples of which proceeding do in the divine hiſtories frequently occurr; * in Solomon, in Jeroboam, in Baaſha, in Ahab, in Jehu, and in others.

*1 King. 11. 35.
1 Kings 14. 13. 13. 34. 14. 10. 16. 3. 21. 29.
2 Kings 9. 8. 10. 30. 15. 12.
Job 27. 14.

Of them that hate me. We may obſerve that in the Scripture ſtyle the tranſgreſſours of God's Laws are termed haters, and enemies of God; becauſe their actions ſignify a diſpoſition of mind in them repugnant to the mind of God; and becauſe by them they reſiſt, and oppoſe God's will; no wonder then if God deal thus ſeverely with them.

But God not only deterrs from diſobedience by threatning a train of puniſhments, but he encourageth to obedience by a declaration of his intention (or promiſe) graciouſly to reward not only upon the obedient perſons themſelves, but upon their poſterity for ever (in a manner) unto thouſands, that is unto a thouſand deſcents:

Shewing mercy unto thouſands of them that love me, and keep my commandments.

Shewing mercy; God doth not abſolutely promiſe, that he will forbear to puniſh the poſterity of good men, in caſe they offend, but that he will ſhew mercy, and deal the more favourably with them in that reſpect: his meaning and method in theſe caſes are plainly repreſented in thoſe words concerning David, If his children forſake my law, and walk not in my judgments, if they break my ſtatutes, and keep not my commandments; then will I viſit their tranſgreſſion with the rod, and their iniquity with ſtripes; nevertheleſs my loving kindneſs will I not utterly take from him----: God declares he will puniſh the offending children of very good men, yet ſo as their miſdeeds ſhall not interrupt his kindneſs toward the reſt of their poſterity, or aboliſh his remembrance of their goodneſs: ſo we may ſee God dealt with Abraham, and the Patriarchs, paſſing by (in memory of their love and reverence to him; and their faithfull obedience to his will) the manifold provocations of their poſterity; ſo that he did not for a long tract of time, and after many generations paſt ſuffer them (according as their perſonal demeanour highly deſerved) to incurr ruine; upon this conſideration he brought them out of Egypt, he ſettled them in Canaan, he frequently delivered them from their enemies, he reſtored them from oppreſſions, and captivities; as is often expreſſed, and inſinuated in Scripture. So alſo it is frequently mentioned, that for David's ſake, his poſterity, although highly provoking God by their miſcarriages, was protected and preſerved; I cannot ſtand to mention places. I ſhall only farther note that which is very obvious, and moſt remarkable here; the difference between God's proceeding in way of ſeverity, and in way of favour; by a vaſt proportion the expreſſions of God's mercy do exceed thoſe of juſtice, although both inſiſting upon like, or correſpondent grounds: he viſiteth the iniquities of diſobedient fathers unto the third or fourth generation, but he ſheweth mercy to a thouſand generations of thoſe that love and obey him; he ſoon forgetteth the wrongs done, but he long retaineth in memory the ſervices performed to him; which conſideration ſhould work upon our ingenuity, and engage us willingly to obey ſo gracious a Lord.

Vid. Deut. 7. 9.
Pſal. 89. 30.
2 Chron. 21. 7.
Iſa. 45. 4.
Pſal. 105. 42.
Deut. 4. 37.
Levit. 26. 42.
Exod. 2. 34.
1 King. 11. 12, 34. 15. 4.
Pſal. 18. 50.
Iſa. 37. 35.

It is alſo obſervable, that as diſobedience is ſtyled hatred of God, ſo loving God and keeping his commandments are conjoined as terms equivalent: they are indeed inſeparably connected, love being a certain cauſe of obedience, obedience an infallible ſign of love: He that hath my commandments, and obſerveth them, he it is (ſaith our Saviour) that loveth me: and, If any man loveth me, he will keep my word. But I paſs forward to the next,

Joh. 14. 21, 15.
Joh. 23. 24.

III. Commandment.

Thou ſhalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain, for the Lord will not hold him guiltleſs that taketh his name in vain.

It conſiſteth we ſee of a Precept, and of a reaſon deterring from diſobedience thereto, by declaring or threatning the miſchief enſuing thereon.

The Precept is: Thou ſhalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain: it might be rendred, Thou ſhalt not bring the name of the Lord thy God to a vanity (or to a lye, for ſo the word שוה, ſhaveh, frequently importeth) that is (as it ſeems interpreted in a parallel place, where moſt of theſe Laws are repeated, inculcated and fenced by additional injunctions) Thou ſhalt not ſwear in my name to a falſhood; and in the 24th Pſalm, to lift up one's ſoul to vanity, is explained by ſwearing למרמה (lemirmah) to deceit, or falſhood. Joſephus expreſſeth it by ἐπὶ μηδενὶ φαύλῳ τὸν Θεὸν ὀμνύναι, To adjure God to no bad matter (or to no falſe matter, as the word φαῦλος commonly in good Writers is taken.) And our Lord himſelf in his Sermon on the Mount ſeemeth to reſpect this Law, when he ſays; Ye have heard that it was ſaid to the ancients, οὐκ ἐπιορκήσεις, ye ſhall not forſwear, but ſhall render to the Lord your oaths; For he doth immediately before cite other paſſages out of the Decalogue (thou ſhalt not kill, thou ſhalt not commit adultery) with intention to explain or extend them; and therefore probably he proceeds reſpecting this Law, the moſt conſpicuous of all thoſe, which relate to this matter; and if this Law be (as ſome conceive) ſuppoſed to ſignify more ſtrictly, it had been more ſutable to his purpoſe to cite it, than any other of more lax importance; his drift being plainly to extend in matter, and to ſtraiten in obligation even the fulleſt, and ſtricteſt of ancient Laws, at leaſt as they were then commonly expounded, and underſtood; yea even in this caſe our Lord ſeemeth to affirm that the ancients had no Law ſtrict and perfect enough for Evangelical practice; conſidering which things, it is probable, that the prime intent of this Law is to prohibit that great ſin of Perjury, that is of invoking God's atteſtation to a lye; thereupon appealing to him as witneſs, and judge, that what we aſſert is true; as a ſurety, that what we promiſe we do ſtedfaſtly reſolve and ſhall faithfully endeavour to perform; implying alſo, that we do expect a curſe, and vengeance from him upon us, if we be found knowingly to falſify in our affirmation, or wilfully to violate our promiſe.

Levit. 19. 12.
Pſal. 24. 4.
Joſ. Arch. 3. 4.
Matth. 5. 33.

Πᾶς ὅρκος εἰς κατάραν τελευτᾷ τῆς ἐπιορκίας.

Swearing is in its own nature immediately an act of Religion, and as ſuch was injoined by God (Thou ſhalt fear the Lord thy God, and ſerve him, and ſhalt ſwear by his name; It expreſſeth the pious perſuaſion we have concerning God's chief attributes and prerogatives; of his omnipreſence and omniſcience (extending to the knowledge of our moſt inward thoughts, and ſecret purpoſes; of his watchfull providence over what we do; of his juſtice, and fidelity in maintaining truth and right, in avenging iniquity and falſhood: the reaſon of uſing it, was derived from, or grounded upon upon a perſuaſion, about God, which hath ever been common among men, that God the governour and judge of the world, the protectour and patron of right, is always ready upon our invocation and reference unto him to undertake the cognizance of matters in debate and controverſie between men, for the protection of truth, the maintenance of right, and preſervation of peace among them (An oath, ſaith the Apoſtle, for confir- Heb. 6. 16. mation is to men an end of all ſtrife) ſo that the uſe thereof becometh a main inſtrument of promoting thoſe purpoſes, the ſtrongeſt tye of fidelity, the ſureſt ground to proceed upon in adminiſtration of juſtice, the moſt ſacred band of all ſociety; which therefore he that ſhall preſume to violate, doth not only moſt unworthily wrong this or that perſon, this or that ſociety of men, but doth what in him lies to ſubvert the foundations of all publick juſtice and peace; withall moſt impiouſly abuſing, and affronting God Almighty himſelf; profaning his moſt ſacred ordinance, making his name inſtrumental to the compaſſing his deceitfull and baſe purpoſes, deſpiſing his judgment, and defying his vengeance.

Deut. 6. 13. 10. 20.

This ſeems to be the firſt, and direct meaning of this Law; but it may by parity of reaſon well be extended farther, ſo as we may hereby underſtand all light and vain ſwearing, all wanton and irreverent uſe of God's holy name: and hitherto our Lord hath plainly extended it, for- Matth. 5. 37. bidding us to ſwear at all, and charging us in our converſation to uſe only the ſimple and plain manner of aſſertion, or promiſe, ſaying only yea, yea, or nay, nay; without preſuming upon any ſlight occaſion to introduce the holy name of God; which indeed we ſhould not without extreme awe of ſpirit ever think upon, nor without high veneration dare to mention: 'tis an inſtance of the moſt ſottiſh folly, 'tis an argument of the moſt horrible impiety that can be thus (without any cauſe, or temptation thereto, without any profit or pleaſure thence) to trifle with the divine Majeſty; to abuſe his glorious Name, and provoke his dreadfull vengeance; who will no-wiſe hold him guiltleſs, that taketh his name in vain.

Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy, &c.

IV. Commandment.

The Decalogue is in ſeveral places of Scripture (as we before noted) called a Covenant with the Jewiſh People, and the obſervation of this Law is likewiſe ſo called in a particular and ſpecial manner: It is expreſſed to have been appointed as a ſign, or characteriſtical note, whereby their peculiar relation to God might be diſcerned, and they diſtinguiſhed from all other People. As Circumciſion was a ſeal of the Covenant made with Abraham and his poſterity; ſo keeping the Sabbath did obſignate the Covenant made with the Children of Iſrael after their delivery out of Egypt: The children of Iſrael (ſaith the text) ſhall keep the Sabbath Exod. 31. 16. to obſerve the Sabbath, throughout their generations for a perpetual Covenant, it is a ſign between me, and the Children of Iſrael for ever: and, I gave them (ſaith God in Ezekiel) my ſtatutes, and ſhewed them my Ezek. 20. 11, judgments, which if a man do, he ſhall live in them; moreover I gave 12, 20. them my Sabbaths to be a ſign between me, and them, that they might know, that I am the Lord, who ſanctifies them: and, Thou cameſt down from Neh. 9. 13, mount Sinai (ſay the Levites in Nehemiah) and ſpakeſt with them from 14. heaven, and gaveſt them right judgments, and true laws, good ſtatutes, and commandments; and madeſt known unto them thy holy Sabbaths: where making known to them the Sabbaths, as alſo otherwhere giving them the Exod. 16. 29. Sabbath are expreſſions together with the ſpecial ends of the Sabbath's appointment, which are mentioned in thoſe places) confirming the judgment of the ancient Chriſtians, Juſtin M. Irenæus, Tertullian, &c. who referr the firſt inſtitution of the Sabbath to Moſes, affirming (that which indeed the hiſtory by its total ſilence concerning the Sabbath before him ſufficiently doth ſeem to confirm) that the Patriarchs were not obliged thereto, nor did practiſe it.

Καὶ γὰρ μὴ Σαββατίσαντες οἱ προωνομασμένοι πάντες δίκαιοι τῷ Θεῷ εὐηρέστησαν, &c. Juſt. p. 236.

Ἀπὸ Ἀβραὰμ ἤρξατο περιτομὴ καὶ ἀπὸ Μωσέως Σάββατον, καὶ θυσίαι, καὶ προσφοραὶ, &c. 261.

Abraham ſine circumciſione, & ſine obſervatione Sabbatorum credidit Deo, &c. Iren. IV. 30.

Tertul. adv. Jud. 2. 4.

And we may obſerve, that the Law concerning the Sabbath, is mentioned and inſiſted upon ſeparately from the body of their Laws, as being in nature different from the reſt, and enacted upon a ſpecial deſign; as from the forecited paſſages appeareth; and farther may appear from conIſa. 56. 6. (4.) ſidering how the condition of Proſelytes (thoſe of the ſtricter ſort, called Proſelytes of Righteouſneſs) is deſcribed in Eſay; The ſons of the ſtrangers, (ſaith God in that Prophet) that join themſelves to the Lord, to ſerve him, and to love the name of the Lord, to be his ſervants, every one that keepeth the Sabbath from polluting it, and taketh hold of my Covenant; even them will I bring to my holy mountain, and make them joyfull in my houſe of prayer: where to undertake the obſervance of the Sabbath, and to lay hold of the Jewiſh Covenant are ſignified to be coincident, or eſpecially coherent.

All the other Precepts indeed (one paſſage in the Second Commandment as it may be underſtood to prohibit abſolutely the making of any ſimilitude, being liable to exception) are immediately grounded in the reaſon of the thing, and have a neceſſary obligation even viſible to natural light; they conſequently have been acknowledged as reaſonable, and obliging by the general conſent of men; or might be ſo propounded and aſſerted by argument, as eaſily to extort ſuch conſent: but this Command, (although as to its general and remote matter it is moſt evidently reaſonable, and requireth that, which no man can deny to be matter of neceſſary duty, yet) as to the more immediate matter, as to the determinate meaſure, and manner of performing thoſe general duties, no reaſon can diſcern an obligation diſtinct from, or antecedent to the Law-giver's Pſal. 143. 5. 92. 4. 107. 22. 26. 7. 145. 10. will, to practiſe according thereto: that we ſhould frequently with gratefull and joyfull ſenſe reflect upon the glorious works of God (eſpecially that grand and fundamental one, wherein God's wonderfull excellencies of goodneſs, wiſdom and power were ſo illuſtriouſly diſplayed; the creation of the world, wherein ſo great accommodations, and benefits were generally diſpenſed to all the creatures, and to us eminently among them; remembring with deepeſt reſpect, and moſt hearty thankfulneſs our bountifull Maker;) that we ſhould not be unmindfull of the ſpecial favours by God's gracious providence vouchſafed to our country, our relations, our ſelves (eſpecially ſuch very ſignal ones, as was that of the delivery from Egyptian ſlavery in a manner ſo remarkable and miraculous;) that we ſhould not ſpend our ſelves, and our time in perpetually carking and labouring about affairs touching our body, and this preſent life, but ſhould aſſign ſome competent time both for the relaxation of our mind, and for attendance to the concernments of our ſoul: that alſo we ſhould allow fitting time of reſpite, and refreſhment to thoſe of our brethren, whom divine Providence hath diſpoſed into a meaner condition, and relation of ſervants to us; that their lives may not by inceſſant care and toil be rendred overburthenſome, and grievous to them; but ſo that they may with ſome comfort ſerve us; that alſo they be not deſtituted of leaſure and opportunity to ſerve God, our common Maſter; and to regard the welfare of their ſouls, no leſs precious than our own: that alſo we ſhould ſhew ſome kindneſs, neſs, and mercy even toward our beaſts, allowing them ſome eaſe from their painfull drudgeries in our behalf; theſe are all of them things, which reaſon evidently dictates; which common ſenſe muſt needs admit, as duties of piety, juſtice and humanity: and to ſecure the performance of them both as to the ſubſtance, due meaſure, and fit manner of them, common prudence would ſuggeſt, that ſet times ſhould be appointed; in which they ſhould be ſolemnly and notoriouſly diſcharged, under the publick teſtimony and cognizance: and accordingly we find, that in all wiſe and civil Societies ſome proviſion ever hath been made, by appointing Feſtival times, for the practice of ſuch duties, in ſome kind or degree: The founders of Laws (ſaith Seneca) did inſtitute feſtival days, that men ſhould publickly be conſtrained to cheerfulneſs; interpoſing as neceſſary a temperament of their pains: Plato with a more admirable ſagacity referrs the invention, or firſt inſtitution of ſuch times unto God himſelf; The Gods (ſaith he; that is, the divine Providence adminiſtring affairs here by the miniſtery of inferiour inviſible powers, according to his notion and manner of ſpeaking) pitying mankind, born to painfull labour, appointed for an eaſe and ceſſation from their toils the recourſes of feſtival ſeaſons obſerved to the Gods. Thus (I ſay) reaſon acknowledges the ſubſtance of theſe duties, and approves the ſecuring their performance, as a good end, or fit matter of Law both divine and humane. But as to the circumſtantial determination of meaſure and manner; that a Seventh day preciſely ſhould be aſſigned, that a total ceſſation from labour for man and beaſt ſhould be preſcribed; this is above reaſon to diſcern a neceſſity of; or a conveniency in compariſon with other limitations in thoſe reſpects deviſeable and practicable: nor can we aſſuredly reſolve the obligation thereto into any other ground, than the pleaſure of the moſt wiſe Authour of this Law; who did ſee what was moſt fit to be preſcribed to thoſe, whom this Law concerned. Here is indeed mentioned a reaſon, why God ſpecially did chuſe this day to bleſs and ſanctify it in this manner to ſuch purpoſes; namely, his reſting upon the Seventh day from his works of Creation; the which yet doth not certainly import a natural conveniency, toward accompliſhing thoſe purpoſes, of this preciſe quantity of time, or in this way of obſerving it, in preference to any other, that might have been appointed; it only ſeemeth to imply a fitneſs of theſe determinations, as containing ſomewhat of profitable ſignificancy; that ſuch a correſpondency in circumſtance of time, and manner of practice might admoniſh us concerning the ſubſtance of our duty, or a principal part thereof peculiarly deſigned in the Sanction of this Law, the gratefull Commemoration of God's moſt glorious work (the foundation as it were of all other his acts of beneficence) the creation of the world: for thus in all ceremonial Inſtitutions we may obſerve, that ſome ſignificant circumſtance is ſelected, on purpoſe to inſtruct or excite us to practice, by repreſenting to our fancy the nature and intention of the main duty required, as in Circumciſion, in the Paſſover, in Baptiſm, and other ritual Conſtitutions it is not hard to perceive: ſo it being God's deſign to enforce the performance of that excellent duty: by appropriating a time thereto, we may conceive that he therefore eſpecially ſelected that day, as moſt apt to mind them, to whom this Law was given, of the hiſtory of the Creation; the reflecting upon and celebrating which was the main duty intended:

Legum conditores Feſtos inſtituerunt dies, ut ad hilaritatem homines publicè cogerentur, tanquam neceſſarium laboribus interponentes temperamentum Sen. de tranq. An.

Θεοὶ δὲ οἰκτείραντες τὸ τῶν ἀνθρώπων ἐπίπονον πεφυκὸς γένος ἀναπαύλας τὸ αὐτοῖς τῶν πόνων ἐτάξατο τῶν ἑορτῶν ἀμοιβὰς τοῖς θεοῖς. Plat. de Leg. II. p. 787.

Seeing therefore the obſervation of the Sabbath is expreſſed to have a peculiar reſpect to the children of Iſrael, as a ſign of the Covenant made with them, when he led them out of Egypt; ſeeing in its own nature it differeth from the reſt of the ten Laws, the obligation thereto being not, diſcernibly to natural light, grounded in the reaſon of the thing, we can no-wiſe be aſſured, that an univerſal and perpetual obligation thereto was intended, or that its obligation did extend farther than to the Jews, to whom it was as a formal Law delivered, and upon ſpecial conſiderations ſeverely inculcated; to whoſe humour, condition and circumſtances it might Juſt. Dial. cum Tryph. p. 235, &c. alſo perhaps be particularly ſuted: Juſtin M. was of opinion that this Law, as many others was given to the Jews, διὰ τὴν ἀνομίαν, καὶ σκληροκαρδίαν, for their iniquity, and hardneſs of heart, by way of conceſſion and indulgence; for, becauſe they by their natural diſpoſition were apt to forget their Maker; to neglect the ſtate of their ſoul, being wholly intent on worldly affairs; to exact intolerable pains from their brethren, who ſerved them; to uſe cruelly the poor beaſts, employed in tilling their ground, or bearing their burthens; therefore God (conſidering this incorrigible temper of theirs) did indulge ſix days to them for the proſecution of thoſe affairs, to which they were ſo devoted, contenting himſelf to exact from them no more, than this part of time for his own ſervice, for the benefit of ſervants, and eaſe of beaſts; if he had required more of them they could it ſeems or would hardly have endured it; the command would perhaps not only have been diſobeyed it ſelf, but the diſlike thereof might have rendred them averſe from all Religion, and ſervice of God; as it happeneth, when commands very rigorous, and exceeding mens ſtrength are enjoined; for we ſee the Prophets complain of them, that they could hardly be induced to go thus far, or to afford God this ſo moderate ſhare of time; but were impatient even for this one day in ſeven to abſtain from their ſecular buſineſs, to relax themſelves, or their ſervants, or their cattle from their daily Iſa. 58. 3, 13. Ezek. 20. 13, 21. 23. 38. 22. 26. labours: they impeach them for polluting, profaning, hiding their eyes from (that is, wholly overlooking, neglecting and diſregarding) the Sabbath; for doing their own pleaſure, and exacting their own labours upon it, for not delighting therein, or not willingly obſerving it: Amos 8. 4. Hear this (ſaith the Prophet Amos) O ye that ſwallow up the needy, even to make the poor of the land to fail, ſaying, when will the new-moon be gone, that we may ſell corn, and the ſabbath that we may ſet forth wheat? this being the diſpoſition of that People, not bearing a greater ſtrictneſs, they not being able to preſerve within their hearts a perpetual remembrance of God's works and favours; not to moderate their purſuits of temporal good things; not to bear a due regard and tenderneſs toward their brethren, and their fellow-creatures (the perfor- Σαββατίζειν ἡμᾶς ὁ καινὸς νόμος διαπαντὸς ἐθέλει. p. 229. ming which things in a conſtant uninterrupted tenour the ſaid holy Father, and bleſſed Martyr ſuppoſeth to be the Sabbatiſm, which Chriſtians are bound to obſerve) therefore God conſidering their infirmity and incapacity to comply with higher injunctions, did uſe (as in the caſes of Divorce, Revenge, and the like) an indulgence toward them, permitting them on the Iſa. 58. 13. other days to do their pleaſure (as the Prophet ſpeaks,) reſerving only this day for a punctual and ſolemn performance of the duties ſpecified: thus diſcourſes that good Ancient in his Dialogue with the Jew. However, that this Law (as to its circumſtantial parts) was not intended to oblige generally and perpetually, we have a moſt forcible ground to ſuppoſe; St. Paul himſelf his expreſs diſcharging Chriſtians from the obſervation thereof; yea his earneſt reprehenſion of ſome perſons for rigorouſly inſiſting thereon, deeming themſelves and urging it upon others as a neceſſary duty to obſerve it; his conjoining it with other ceremonial obſervances, whoſe nature was merely ſymbolical,and whoſe deſign was to continue no longer, than till the real ſubſtance of that, which they repreſented, came into full force and practice: Let no man (ſaith he to the Coloſſians) judge you for meat, or drink, or upon account of a feſtival day, or new moon, * or ſabbath; which things are the ſhadow of future things, but the body is of Chriſt (that is, they did only prefigure, and preſignify; the real ſubſtance intended, and repreſented by them is ſomewhat in the Law, and Doctrine of Chriſt, which coming immediately to appear, and to oblige, that ſhadow vaniſheth, and ceaſeth to have any regard due thereto;) Again more ſharply to the Galatians, whom ſome Judaizing Dogmatiſts had reduced, or were reducing to the practice of legal Rites, under conceit of needfull obligation to them; How, ſaith he, do ye return again to thoſe weak,and beggarly elements, to which back again you are pleaſed to be enſlaved: ye obſerve days, and months, and years; which words, that they relate generally to the Jewiſh Feſtivals, the context doth plainly enough ſhew, and there is good reaſon to think, that they chiefly reſpect the Sabbath we treat on, for which probably theſe men had the greateſt reſpect, and zeal; Again in the 14th to the Romans the ſame great Patron and Champion of Chriſtian Liberty, not obſcurely declareth his mind, that Chriſtians of ſtrength in judgment did regard no day above another, but eſteemed all days (he excepteth none) alike, as to any ſpecial obligation, grounded upon divine Law and right; in ſubordination to which Doctrine we may add, that this appears with great evidence to have been the common opinion of the wiſeſt, and moſt orthodox Chriſtians in the Primitive Church, the moſt conſtant and ſtrict adherents to Catholick Tradition (who from the Apoſtles inſtruction beſt underſtood the purport and limits of the liberty purchaſed by Chriſt) that this Law, as it was not known or practiſed before Moſes, ſo it ceaſed to oblige after Chriſt; being one of the ſhadows which the Evangelical light diſpelled, one of the burthens, which this Law of liberty did take off us.

Coloſſ. 2. 16, 17.

* σαββάτων, & σαββάτȣ, are both read; both equivalent.

Gal. 4. 10.

Rom. 14. 5, &c.

Inter omnia decem præcepta ſolùm ibi quod de Sabbato poſitum eſt figuratè obſervandum præcipitur. Aug Ep. 119. Vid. Cit. Patres.

Now although upon theſe accounts we cannot preſs the ſtrict obſervation of this Law in all its parts, according to its literal, and direct intention, yet we may learn much of our duty, much of God's will from it: all God's Laws, ſpiritually and wiſely underſtood, did tend to the promoting of piety and vertue; and abſtracting from the ſpecial circumſtances of that People, to whom they were conſigned, may (ſo far as our caſe is like theirs, and wherein a common reaſon doth appear) paſs for fit patterns for us to imitate, ſuggeſting proper means of exerciſing, nouriſhing, encreaſing thoſe qualities in us; and ſo from this Law we may learn theſe duties:

1. That we ſhould frequently call to mind, and conſider the great and glorious works of God, performed for the general good of his creatures, and ſpecially for mankind: The Creation of the World, the Redemption of mankind; the Nativity, Paſſion, Reſurrection and Exaltation of our Lord and Saviour, and the like, no leſs now conſiderable to us, both in reſpect of glory due to God, and of benefit accruing to us, than was the Creation formerly to the Jews.

2. That we are bound to reſtrain our ſelves in the proſecution of worldly buſineſs; not diſtracting our minds with care, not exhauſting our bodies with toil about them, but allowing our mind convenient and ſeaſonable freedom, affording our ſoul ſufficient leiſure with vigour and alacrity to enjoy its nobler entertainments, and to purſue its higher intereſts.

3. That we are obliged to uſe the ſame indulgence toward thoſe, whom divine providence hath diſpoſed to be under our power, care, or governance: to allow our children, our ſubjects, our ſervants a competent meaſure of reſt, and refreſhment from their ordinary labours, ſufficient time and leiſure undiſtractedly to ſerve God, and quietly to mind their ſpiritual welfare: we muſt ſo charitably tender their good, as to permit and procure, that their life may be eaſie and comfortable here; and that alſo they may have means to obtain for themſelves a happy immortality hereafter; not being in theſe reſpects either harſh to their outward man, or uncharitable to their ſouls.

4. That we muſt not be unmercifull to any creature, not only abſtaining from inflicting, in wantonneſs of humour, needleſs vexation upon them, but alſo from wearying and grieving them too much for our emolument or convenience: the advantage and preeminency beſtowed upon us by God over them ſhould be managed with moderation, and clemency; we ſhould be gentle maſters to them, not cruel tyrants over them: we ſhould conſider, that God did make them, as to help and ſerve us, ſo to enjoy ſomewhat themſelves of delight and ſatisfaction in their being; which if we go to deprive them of, rendring their condition intolerable and worſe than if they had no being, as we do abuſe and injure them, tranſgreſſing the bounds of our right over them, ſo we encroach upon, diſappoint, and wrong their maker, and cannot therein but diſpleaſe him; doing thus is a point of injuſtice not enough conſidered by them who commit it: they conſider not how beaſtly they are themſelves, when they miſuſe poor beaſts.

5. We may hence farther learn, that it is fit certain times ſhould be allotted for the publick, and ſolemn performance of the forenamed duties: common reaſon prompteth, that God (upon whoſe protection, and diſpoſal the publick good depends) ſhould be publickly honoured, and his benefits frequently acknowledged; alſo that care ſhould be taken in every ſociety, that all ſtates of men ſhould lead their lives in ſome competent degree of content; that all objects of grievous pity ſhould be removed from publick view; alſo common ſenſe will inform us, that theſe things cannot effectually be executed, without conſtituting definite periods of time, and limiting circumſtances, according to which they ſhall be practiſed under publick inſpection and cenſure: And theſe dictates of ordinary prudence the divine wiſdom hath ratified by his exemplary order; the which in caſes, wherein he hath not interpoſed his direct authority by way of precept, may ſerve for a good direction to Governours, what they may with ſafety, what they ſhould in wiſdom eſtabliſh; what proviſion they ſhould make for the promotion of piety and vertue: ſuch a precedent requires greateſt veneration, and reſpect, cannot but appear of high moment in conſultation about matters of this nature.

It is indeed particularly obſervable, that in this command there is not an expreſs order concerning the natural or moral ſervice of God (by prayer, or hearing God's Law) to be publickly performed on this day; but the Jews were themſelves ſo wiſe as to underſtand theſe duties couched in the ſanctification of the day preſcribed to them; and accordingly they practiſed; they in all places of their habitation did ſettle Synagogues, and Oratories; to them upon this day they reſorted; in them then they did offer devotions to God (as the names προσευχαὶ, and προσευκτήρια do import;) the Scribes did read the Law, and expound it to the People: Moſes (ſaith Joſephus) did command the people to aſſemble for hearing of the law, not once, or twice, or many times, but every ſeventh day, laying aſide their works; and exactly to learn it; whence, addeth he, the people became became ſo skilfull in the laws, that if one asked any of them concerning them, he would more eaſily tell them all than his own name; whence alſo an admirable concord in mind, and uniformity in practice did (as he farther obſerves) ariſe: and The cuſtom (ſaith Philo) was always as occaſion gave leave, eſpecially upon the ſeventh days, to philoſophate, &c. in conſideration of which practice it was, that the Jews ſo highly valued this Precept, that it was a ſaying among them, The Sabbath weigheth againſt all the Commandments; as procuring them all to be known, and obſerved: And if that blind people could pick theſe duties out of this Law, much more ſhould we ſee our ſelves obliged, according to analogy thereof, to appoint ſet times for enſuring the practice of them.

Οὐκ εἰσάπαξ ἀκροασαμένους, οὐδὲ δὶς, ἢ πολλάκις, ἀλλ' ἑκάστης ἑβδομάδος τῶν ἔργων ἀφεμένους, ἐπὶ τὴν ἀκρόασιν τοῦ νόμου ἐκέλευσε συλλέγεσθαι, καὶ τοῦτον ἀκριβῶς ἐκμανθάνειν. Joſeph. adv. App. 2. p. 946.

Ἡμῶν δ' ὁντινοῦν εἴ τις ἔροιτο τοὺς νόμους, ῥᾷον ἂν εἴποι πάντα, ἢ τοὔνομα τὸ ἑαυτοῦ. Ib. 947.

Ἔθος γὰρ ἦν, ἀεὶ μὲν κατὰ τὸ παρεῖκον, προηγουμένος δὲ ταῖς ἑβδόμαις, φιλοσοφεῖν, &c. Philo de Vit. Moſ.

Midraſh. Exod. 25.

6. Again, We may hence alſo learn our obligation to ſubmit obediently to the conſtitution of Governours relating to this matter; that we readily ſhould obſerve all ſolemn times of feſtivity and reſt, which the Rulers of Church or State do appoint for the ſecuring or the promoting thoſe purpoſes of piety or charity, according to the meaſure and manner preſcribed by them: for Reaſon approving the thing as good and uſefull, and divine order more clearly and fully confirming it to be ſo, and it not appearing that God hath made expreſs determinations about it, it remains, that it is left wholly to them, to whoſe care God hath entruſted the publick welfare, and hath committed to their judgments the providing means conducible thereto; having alſo conſequently injoined us in all lawfull things to folly their guidance and appointment in order thereto. God decreed death to be inflicted on thoſe who violated his command concerning the Sabbath, which ſheweth how great a fault it is to offend in this particular; and we may reaſonably eſteem that command to be his, which proceedeth from his Miniſters by authority from himſelf, and in conformity to his own pattern.

7. We add, that whereas God required of the Jews ſuch a portion of time to be ſolemnly dedicated to Religion and mercy, we to whom he hath vouchſafed higher benefits, and propoſed greater encouragements, cannot reaſonably but deem our ſelves obliged to ſequeſter and conſecrate as much or more time to the ſame intents: we ſhould indeed be content to withdraw our ſelves more frequently from purſuance of our own profits and pleaſures to the ſervice of God, to the remembrance and celebration of his favours: we ſhould willingly allow greater relaxation to our dependents; and ſhould the publick be deficient in exacting a performance of ſuch duties from us, it would become us to ſupply ſuch defects by our private devoting fit and frequent ſeaſons thereto; that in ſome proportion we may exceed the Jews in gratefull piety, as we ſurpaſs them in the matter, and cauſes thereof; that we may appear in ſome degree more charitable than they, as we have much greater reaſon and obligation to be ſo than they. So much for this;

I proceed briefly to conſider the remaining Commandments, the which immediately concern another Object: thoſe foregoing did chiefly ſerve to regulate our religious practice in yielding due reverence toward God; theſe following (which are ſuppoſed to have made up the ſecond of thoſe Tables, which written by God's hand were delivered to Moſes, and preſerved in the Ark of the Teſtimony) do guide our converſation and carriage toward our Neighbour; in the front of which worthily is placed that which obligeth to dutifulneſs toward our Parents; unto whom after God, and his ſupreme Vice-gerents we owe the higheſt reſpect, gratitude and duty.

V. Commandment.

Honour thy father, and thy mother.

Honour; the word ſignifies to have in weighty regard, and aptly ſerves to denote thoſe particular acts of duty, which are otherwhere ex- Levit. 9. 3. preſſed in Scripture; fear and reverence (ye ſhall fear every man his fa- Coloſſ. 3. 20. ther and his mother) obſervance and obedience (children, obey your parents in all things, for this is well-pleaſing to God) gratitude and retribution 1 Tim. 5. 4. (Let children learn ἴδιον οἶκον εὐσεβεῖν, to be pious toward their own family; and ἀμοιβὰς ἀποδιδόναι, to render ſutable returns, or to requite their parents, for this is good, and acceptable before God,) regarding their inſtru- Prov. 1. 8. 23. 22. ction and advice (My ſon, hear the inſtruction of thy father, and forſake not the law of thy mother;) it alſo comprehendeth a prohibition of the contrary acts, contemning, curſing, offering violence or contumely unto, diſobedience and contumacy toward parents, the which are forbidden under Deut. 27. 16. capital penalties, and dreadfull comminations: Curſed be he that ſetteth Exod. 21. 15, 17. light by his father or mother: and, The eye that mocketh at his father, and deſpiſeth to obey his mother, the ravens of the valley ſhall pick it out, and the young eagles ſhall eat it (that is, God in a fearfull and ſtrange manner will avenge that wickedneſs upon him) and in the Law it is ordained that the rebellious and ſtubborn ſon, who will not obey the voice of his father, or the voice of his mother; and that when they have chaſtned him, will not hearken unto them, ſhall be ſtoned by all the men of his City, and put to death in that manner.

Whence we may learn the nature of the duty here enjoined, and what rank it beareth among other duties; what high obligation belongs thereto, of what conſideration it is with God, and how grievous a crime the violation thereof is; that, briefly, we are obliged to yield our parents high affection of heart, great expreſſions of reſpect and obſervance in word and deed; that the neglect of theſe duties is, next to that of profaneneſs and undutifulneſs toward God himſelf, the greateſt diſorder we can be guilty of: this all civil Nations have conſented to be our duty; and if we conſider the grounds, upon which it is built, we ſhall find that reaſon, juſtice and neceſſity do require it: Saint Paul preſſeth his precept of obſervance Eph. 6. 1. to parents with, a τοῦτο γάρ ἐστι δίκαιον, for this is juſt and equal: for if we look upon the diſpoſition of parents in their mind toward children, we may preſume them always full of tender affection, and good-will toward them, full of deſire and care for their good, full of pity and compaſſion toward them; in the higheſt and moſt eſpecial degree beyond what they bear to others; which diſpoſitions in reaſon and equity do require anſwerable diſpoſitions in thoſe, upon whom they are placed, and who from them do receive ineſtimable benefits; for if we do regard the effects proceeding from them we ſhall diſcern, that

1. From parents children do receive being and life; that good which nature inclineth ſo highly to value and tender, as the foundation of all the good, happineſs, and comfort we are capable of.

2. They are obliged to their parents for the preſervation, maintenance and protection of their life: it is a long time before we come to be able (ſuch is the particular condition of man among all living creatures, ſo ordered on purpoſe, as it were, to beget this obligation and endearment) anywiſe to provide for, or to defend our ſelves; and the doing thereof, in that ſenſeleſs and helpleſs ſtate, relies upon the care, pain, and ſolicitous vigilance of our parents; the which they are not only always obliged, but are commonly diſpoſed with admirable willingneſs to ſpend on their children.

3. Parents not only thus at firſt undergo ſuch care and trouble to maintain their children, but by expenſive education (often with much inconvenience and incommodity to themſelves) they provide means for their future ſupport, and ſubſiſtence, during life.

4. Children are ſo ſtrictly tied to their parents, as by their willing conceſſion to partake in all the comforts of their ſtate, and ornaments of their fortune.

5. The goods acquired by the parents induſtry do uſually devolve upon their children by inheritance and ſucceſſion; whence that children live handſomely and comfortably, is the reward of their parents merit, comes from the ſtore, that they have carefully provided, and laid up for them.

6. To which we may add, that not only the proviſion for our temporal neceſſities and conveniences dependeth upon our parents, but the care of our ſouls, and our ſpiritual welfare is incumbent on them: they Deut. 6. 7, 20.
are obliged to inſtruct us in the fear of God, and to ſet us in the way toward eternal happineſs. Eph. 6. 4.

7. We may conſider alſo, that all this they do moſt frankly and out of pure kindneſs; without regard to any merit antecedent, or benefit conſequent to themſelves: as they received nothing to oblige and move them to ſuch performances, ſo they can ſeldom hope for anſwerable returns: it is abundant ſatisfaction to them if they ſee their children do well; their chief delight and contentment is in their childrens good abſolutely and abſtractedly, without indirect regards to their own advantage.

Upon theſe, and the like accounts it appeareth, that as parents have the affections moſt reſembling thoſe of God toward us, as they perform toward us the actions moſt like to his, as they are the principal inſtruments of divine providence and bounty (by which God's bleſſings are conveyed and conferred upon us) ſo they may be deemed in a ſort to repreſent God, and as his moſt lively images have an eſpecial veneration due to them. God himſelf, to endear and render himſelf amiable, or in the moſt kindly way venerable to us, to engage us to a more ready obedience of him, to declare the nature of our duty toward him, aſſumes the Deut. 32 6.
title of Father; and all Nations have agreed to ſtyle him ſo; Reciprocally alſo, whereas the duties toward other men are termed juſtice, or charity, or courteſie, or liberality, or gratitude, thoſe toward parents in Εὐσεβεῖν.
every Language (I ſuppoſe) are ſtyled piety, implying ſomewhat divine 1 Tim. 5. 4. Colere parentes.
in the object of thoſe duties; 'tis more than injuſtice to wrong a parent; 'tis more than uncharitableneſs to refuſe them ſuccour, or relief; 'tis more than diſcourteſie to be unkind to them; 'tis more than ſordid avarice to be in their need illiberal to them; 'tis rather high impiety to offend in any of theſe kinds.

He that returns not love in anſwer to their tender affection; that doth not (as occaſion requires, and his ability permits) requite the benefits received from them, doth not deferr to them an eſpecial reverence, in regard to that ſacred name and character they bear, thereby intimates, that he would in like manner be unjuſt, ungratefull and diſingenuous toward God, from whom he hath received the like benefits; the beginning and continuance of his being; the preſervation, maintenance and protection of his life: if he will not honour his earthly Parents, whom he hath ſeen, how will he reverence his heavenly Father, whom he hath not ſeen? ſo we may according to Saint John argue.

I might ſubjoin, that as juſtice, and ingenuity do enforce this duty, ſo for the good of the world there is a neceſſity that it ſhould be obſerved: If parents are not only by natural inſtinct diſpoſed, but by divine command obliged, and by humane Law *(the preſervation of the world ſo requiring) conſtrained to undergo ſuch hardſhips for the maintenance, and education of their children, it is fit and neceſſary they ſhould be ſupported and encouraged in the bearing them by reciprocal obligations in children to return them dutifull reſpect, obſervance and requital; the world could not well ſubſiſt without children being engaged to theſe duties: there were no reaſon to exact, there were no ground to expect, that parents ſhould cheerfully and faithfully diſcharge their part, upon other terms.

To this Precept there is added a Promiſe (and it is, as Saint Paul obſerveth, Eph. 6. 2. the firſt precept, that hath a promiſe formally annexed; whereby he enforceth his exhortation to the obſervance thereof.)

That thy days may be long upon the land, which the Lord thy God giveth thee.

So God expreſly promiſeth to bleſs dutifull children with a long life Ἱκανῶς βιώσεις γηροβοσκῶν τοὺς γονεῖς. in the comfortable poſſeſſion of thoſe good things, which he ſhould beſtow upon them; this was the moſt of reward, explicitly covenanted to the Jews, in regard to their obedience: there is alſo implied a commination of a contrary curſe from God upon the infringers of this Law, that they ſhould either be immaturely cut off from life (as Abimelech and Abſalom were upon this ſcore) or ſhould draw on a wretched life in baniſhment from the contents thereof; by which things reſpectively are intimated to us the rewards of piety in this kind, or the puniſhments of impiety in the future ſtate, whereof the land here mentioned was a ſhadow, or figure: what length of days in Canaan was to them, that to us is immortal life in Heaven; what being excluded thence was then, that now is everlaſting death, or baniſhment into the regions of miſery.

I might alſo note the congruity of the reward propounded, that they who are gratefull to thoſe from whom, in ſubordination to God, they received life, ſhall by God's diſpenſation enjoy that life long and well; and that they who neglect the authours of their life, ſhall ſoon be deprived of it, or of its comforts. But I find the ſame reward aſſigned to the Deut. 16. 20. Pſal. 37. 29. diligent obſervers of other duties; particularly to them, who are juſt in Pſal. 37. 9, 11. their dealings; to them who are charitable to the poor; to them who are Pſal. 34. 12, 13, 16. meek and patient; to them who confide in God; and to all good men Prov. 8. 16. that obey God's Commandments. Deut. 26. 15.

I ſhall only add farther, that we may, according to analogy and like ground of reaſon, reduce unto this Commandment the obligation we have to honour all thoſe, who perform toward us beneficial offices like unto thoſe, which we receive from our parents; thoſe who preſerve our life by relief, protection or defence; thoſe who afford us maintenance, or education; thoſe who watch over us for the good of our body, or of our ſoul; thoſe who inſtruct us, or adviſe us; ſuch are our Governours and Magiſtrates either political or eccleſiaſtical; our Benefactours and Patrons; our Schoolmaſters and Tutours; our eſpecial faithfull Friends; and the like; But I paſs forward.

In the ſubſequent Precepts are contained the prime rules of juſtice toward our neighbour; the obſervation of which is not only moſt equal and reaſonable in it ſelf, but neceſſary for the preſervation of civil ſociety, and publick peace among men; for the procurement of our ſafe, and pleaſant living and converſing in the world; men thereby being ſecured in the quiet enjoyment of God's gifts, and the fruits of their induſtry, and of whatever is dear and pretious to them; of their lives firſt; then of the comforts of their conjugal ſtate; of their poſſeſſions; of their reputations; the laws reſpecting theſe being here diſpoſed in order, according to the value of their reſpective objects, in the nature of things, or in the opinion of men, or in regard to the conſequences ariſing from them.

Thou ſhalt not kill.

VI. Commandment.

Of all good gifts conferr'd upon us none (according to the natural and common eſteem of men) is more pretious than life it ſelf, the foundation of enjoying the reſt. God hath therefore reſerved the diſpoſal of it entirely to himſelf, as his ſpecial prerogative: neither he that hath it, nor any other perſon having abſolutely any juſt power or right over it; No man can take away any man's life, but by commiſſion or licence from God, reaſonably preſumed to be granted by him: So may God (the abſolute King of the world) be ſuppoſed to have committed to lawfull Magiſtrates, as his Vice-gerents and officers, in his name and behalf, upon reaſonable cauſe, for preſervation of publick juſtice, peace and order, in a lawfull courſe of juſtice, to diſpoſe of mens lives, who have forfeited them to the Law: (The Magiſtrate, as Saint Paul ſaith, beareth not the ſword in vain; for he is the miniſter of God; an avenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil.) He hath not forbidden Sovereigns (in caſe of neceſſity, and when amicable means will not prevail) to maintain the ſafety or welfare of the Societies entruſted to their care, even by armed violence, againſt ſuch as wrongfully invade them, or anywiſe harm them, and will not otherwiſe be induced to forbear doing ſo; in which caſe the reſolution of ſuch differences (inſomuch as they cannot be tried at any other bar, or compoſed by other means) is referred to God's arbitrement; who is the Lord of Hoſts, the Sovereign Protectour of right, and diſpenſer of ſucceſs; the Souldier in a juſt cauſe being then his Miniſter, and carrying a tacit commiſſion from him. God alſo may be ſuppoſed together with life, with a natural love to it, with means to preſerve it, to have imparted to every man a right to defend his life, with its neceſſary ſupports, againſt unjuſt, extreme and inevitable violence upon it, or them: the ſlaughter therefore, which may happen in theſe caſes (or in the like, wherein God hath plainly by a general order, or by ſpecial command, or by permiſſion reaſonably ſuppoſed, conferred on any perſon a power over his neighbour's life, in the maintenance of God's own honour, or in ſubſerviency to publick good) is not concerned in the deſign, or meaning of this Precept: for he that kills another, in a way not irregular, as a Miniſter of juſtice, or in a lawfull war as a Souldier authorized by a Sovereign power here under God, or for his own juſt and neceſſary defence, doth not, according to the intent of this Law, kill; but rather God himſelf, the Lord of life and death, doth then kill; the authority of killing ſo being derived from him, and his work being done thereby: Vengeance is his, and he ſo (by his inſtruments) repays it. But here is forbidden all other voluntary taking away our neighbour's life, when a man acts as a private perſon; without juſt and neceſſary cauſe, in any illegal or irregular way; upon what motive, principle, or end ſoever (whether it be out of hatred, ſpight, envy, revenge; for our preſumed ſafety, or pretended reparation of honour; for promoting what intereſt, or procuring what ſatisfaction ſoever to our ſelves) by what means ſoever, either by direct violence, or by fraudulent contrivance; in an open, or clandeſtine

Rom. 13. 4.
1 Pet. 2. 14.

manner; immediately by our ſelves, or by means of others; by adviſing, encouraging, any-wiſe becoming inſtrumental, or acceſſory thereto.

This is the crime expreſly prohibited; but a poſitive duty ſhould alſo be underſtood; that we are obliged, ſo far as we are able, to preſerve our neighbour's life; by relieving him in extreme need, by ſuccouring him in extreme danger; by admoniſhing him of any deſtructive miſchief, when he appears tending unawares thereinto; the neglect of which things argueth a murtherous diſpoſition toward our neighbour, is in reaſonable eſteem, and in God's ſight a killing of him; for we miſtake, if we think with Cain, that we are not our brother's keepers, or are not bound when we are able to preſerve his life.

The violation of which Commandment is certainly the moſt heinous ſin, that can be committed of all thoſe, which are not immediately directed againſt God himſelf, or the perſons which peculiarly repreſent him; and a ſin which never can eſcape vengeance and due puniſhment from him. It is the greateſt wrong to God; it is the extremeſt injury to our neighbour; it is the higheſt ſort of uncharitableneſs; it is a principal offence againſt publick ſociety.

1. It is an exceeding wrong and affront done unto God; in aſſuming the diſpoſal of his gifts; in diſpoſſeſſing him of his rights, by robbing him of a creature, of his child, his ſervant, his ſubject (one whoſe life is pretious to him, and toward whom he beareth a tender regard) an uſurping in a high way his Sovereign Authority, his Throne of Majeſty, his Tribunal of Juſtice, his Sword of Vengeance; to omit the ſacrilege (as Philo ſpeaks) committed herein by violating God's own Image, which every man doth bear.

2. It is alſo an extreme injury to the perſon, who is thereby deprived of an unvaluable good, which can no-wiſe be repaired, or compenſated: he that loſes his life, doth therewith loſe all the good he poſſeſſeth, or is capable of here, without any poſſibility of recovering it again: the taking therefore of life can be no ſutable revenge, no reaſonable ſatisfaction for any injury or damage received; it infinitely, in a manner, ſurpaſſeth all the evil, which any man can ſuſtain from another in his eſtate, or fame, or welfare of any kind; for thoſe things have their meaſure, and may be capable of ſome reparation, but this is altogether extreme and irreparable; and therefore doth include greateſt iniquity: add hereto, that not only all temporal good is hereby at once raviſhed from a man, but the ſoul alſo of the perſon may incurr the greateſt damage or hazard in reſpect to its future eſtate by being thus ſnatched away: the ſlayer not only robbeth his brother of his temporal life, but of his time of repentance, and opportunity of making peace with God.

3. It is alſo the higheſt uncharitableneſs to deal thus with our neighbour; arguing that nothing of good-will, of pity, of humanity toward him is left in us: to hate his brother to the death is the utmoſt pitch of hatred. If in imitation of our Saviour, and out of reſpect to him we ought (as Saint John inſtructeth us) to be willing to lay down our lives for our brethren; how enormous a crime, how oppoſite to Chriſtian charity is it to take away our brother's life?

4. It is likewiſe a main offence againſt the publick; not only by unlawfull bereaving it of a member and ſubject, but to its prejudice and diſhonour (yea ſo far as lies in us to its ſubverſion and diſſolution) aſſuming to our ſelves, pulling away from it its rights, and prerogatives of judgment.

Such briefly is the direct intent, and importance of this Law; but our Saviour in his comment hereon hath explained and extended it farther, ſo as to interdict all, that any-wiſe approaches in nature, or in effect tends unto this heinous evil: he means to obſtruct all the ſprings, and extirpate all the roots thereof; ſuch as are raſh, cauſeleſs, outragious, inveterate anger, contumelious and deſpightfull language, reſerving grudges, or ſpight in our heart, not endeavouring ſpeedily to reconcile our ſelves to them, who have done us injury or diſpleaſure; for theſe things as they commonly do produce the act of murther, ſo they argue inclinations thereto (which if fear and ſelf-reſpect did not reſtrain, would produce it,) and conſequently in moral account, which regardeth not ſo much the act as the will, are of the ſame quality therewith; however they ariſe from the ſame bitter root of great uncharitableneſs; upon which ſcore Saint John telleth us, that He that hateth his brother is a murtherer; and conſequently in effect all malice, and ſpight, envy, hatred, malignity, rancour, immoderate and pertinacious anger, and animoſity are here prohibited. Matth. 5. 21. 1 Joh. 3. 15, 17.

Thou ſhalt not commit adultery.

VII. Commandment.

After life (if after that, for this command in the Greek Tranſlation of Exodus (though not in Deuteronomy) in ſome places of the New Teſtament, and in ſundry ancient Writers is placed before that againſt murther) nothing commonly is more dear to men, than the comforts of their conjugal eſtate; the enjoyment of that ſpecial affection, and friendſhip, together with thoſe inſtances of benevolence, which by divine inſtitution and mutual contract, ratified by moſt ſacred and ſolemn promiſes of fidelity, are reſerved peculiar to that ſtate: which encloſures therefore of his neighbour whoever ſhall invade, or treſpaſs upon, who ſhall any-wiſe looſe or ſlacken thoſe holy bands, who ſhall attempt the affection, or chaſtity of his neighbour's wife, doth moſt grievouſly offend God, and committeth (as Joſeph, when he was tempted thereto, did call it) a great evil againſt God, againſt his neighbour, againſt himſelf, againſt the common ſociety of men. He violateth an inſtitution, to which God hath affixed eſpecial marks of reſpect, and ſanctity; he wounds his neighbour's honour, and intereſt in the moſt tender part, wherein the content of his mind and comfort of his life are moſt deeply concerned: he as much (or rather more) diſhonoureth and abuſeth himſelf, not only by committing a fact of ſo high injuſtice, but by making himſelf acceſſory to the baſeſt perfidiouſneſs that can be. [Whoſo committeth adultery, lacketh underſtanding; he that doeth it, deſtroyeth his own ſoul; a wound and diſhonour ſhall he get, and his reproach ſhall not be wiped away; for jealouſie is the rage of a man, therefore he will not ſpare in the day of vengeance; he will not regard any ranſome, neither will he reſt content though thou giveſt many gifts.] He alſo offendeth againſt the publick quiet and welfare, breeding inextricable confuſions and implacable diſſentions in families, ſo that hardly from any other cauſe ſuch tragical events have iſſued as from this: in fine, this crime is, as Philo calls it, ϛυγητὸν, ϗ θεομίσητον ἀδίκημα, a loathſome unrighteouſneſs, moſt odious to God; and a fire (as Job repreſenteth it) that conſumeth to deſtruction. Prov. 6. 34. Job 31. 12.

But we muſt farther alſo conſider, that acts of this kind contain alſo in them another evil; that perſons committing them do not only ſo highly wrong their neighbour, but defile themſelves alſo by the fouleſt turpitude; in which reſpect the prohibition of all unlawfull and irregular ſatiſfactions factions to luſtfull appetite; all compliance with that great enemy of our ſouls, the fleſh; all kinds of impurity and laſciviouſneſs, not in act only, but in thought, in ſpeech, in geſture may be reduced to this Law: Our Lord himſelf doth ſo interpret it, as to make it include a forbidding of all unchaſt deſires; and Chriſtianity doth in a moſt ſtrict and ſpecial manner oblige us to all kinds of ſobriety and modeſty, of chaſtity and purity in body and ſpirit; injoining us to abſtain from all fleſhly luſts, as enemies to our ſouls, to mortify our fleſhly members; to poſſeſs our veſſels (or bodies) in ſanctity and honour; not to have any impurity, or filthineſs ſo much as named among us; nor to ſuffer a foul word to proceed out of our mouth; not to defile our bodies, conſecrated unto God, and made temples of the holy Spirit; excluding perſons guilty of ſuch things from any title, or capacity of entring into God's Kingdom; in fine, repreſenting all ſuch practices as moſt diſhonourable to us, moſt diſpleaſing to God, moſt grievous to God's holy Spirit (the fountain of all vertue and goodneſs) moſt contrary to the nature and deſign of our Religion, and moſt deſtructive of our ſouls.

Matth. 5. 14.
1 Pet. 2. 11.
Coloſſ. 3. 5.
1 Theſſ. 4. 4.
Eph. 5. 3.
Eph. 4. 29.
1 Cor. 3. 17.
6. 18, 19.
Eph. 5. 4, &c.

VIII. Commandment.

Thou ſhalt not ſteal.

That every man ſhould quietly enjoy thoſe ſupports and thoſe conveniences of life, which in any honeſt manner (by God's bounty immediately diſpenſing it, or by God's bleſſing upon his induſtry) he hath acquired the poſſeſſion of, or right unto, as all reaſon and equity do require, ſo it muſt be acknowledged abſolutely neceſſary for the preſervation of common peace, and the maintenance of civil ſociety among men: to ſecure which purpoſes, and to incourage honeſt induſtry, this Law prohibiteth all invaſion, or uſurpation by any means whatever (either by open violence and extortion, or by clandeſtine fraud and ſurreption) of our neighbour's proper goods and rights: He that in any way, againſt his neighbour's knowledge or will, getteth into his power, or detaineth therein what doth in equity belong to his neighbour, and which he can reſtore to him, doth tranſgreſs againſt the intent of this Law; as we ſee it interpreted in Leviticus; where it is thus expreſſed: Thou ſhalt not defraud thy neighbour, nor rob him: defrauding by cunning practice, is no leſs forbidden, than robbing by violent force. Any-wiſe ἀποστερεῖν (that is, to deprive our neighbour of his due) νοσφίζειν, to purloin, or (by ſubtile and ſly conveyance) to ſeparate any part of our neighbour's ſubſtance from him; πλεονεκτεῖν, to exact, or extort any thing more than ones due; ὑπερβαίνειν ἐν τῷ πράγματι, to go beyond, or over-reach our neighbour in dealing; to delude and cozen him by falſe ſpeeches, or fallacious pretences, are acts in Saint Paul's expreſſion, to be referred hither; as ſo many ſpecial acts of theft. I cannot ſtand to reckon up all the ſorts of unrighteouſneſs included here, or reducible to this matter (ſuch as, beſide down-right rapine and cheating, are, foul dealing in bargains and contracts; uſing falſe weights and meaſures, withholding the pledge, detaining the labourer's wages from him; the exerciſing vexatious, biting and devouring uſuries; removing bounds of poſſeſſion, oppreſſing by undue or rigorous exaction, corrupting juſtice for reward or favour, raiſing gain by unlawfull and ſhamefull arts, or practices; conſenting, or ſharing with, adviſing, or inſtigating to theſe, and the like acts; theſe I ſhall not particularly inſiſt upon) but ſhall only ſay, that God expreſſeth great indignation againſt, and threatneth moſt ſeverely to puniſh all acts of this kind: For all (ſaith he) that doe ſuch things (ſuch as uſe deceitfull meaſures in trade,) and all that doe unrighteouſneſs are an abomination unto the Lord thy God: ἔκδικος ὁ Θεός,

Lev. 19. 13.
2 Cor. 6. 8.
Tit. 2. 10.
1 Theſſ. 4. 6.
Prov. 22. 18.
20. 14. 9. 24.
Ezek. 22. 12.
18. 7, 16.
Hoſ. 5. 10.
Amos 8. 5.
Deut. 25. 13.
Lev. 19. 13.
Deut. 24. 14.
Pſal. 15. 4.
Iſa. 1. 23.
Jam. 5. 4.
Deut. 15. 16.

θεὸς περὶ πάντων τοιούτων, God (ſaith Saint Paul, ſpeaking againſt the circumventing and defrauding our neighbour) is an avenger for all theſe kinds of things: Nor indeed is the Goſpel more ſevere in denunciation of puniſhment againſt any crime than this: Know ye not, that unjuſt perſons (ſaith Saint Paul, meaning this ſort of unjuſt perſons, ſo moſt properly and ſtrictly called) ſhall not inherit the kingdom of God; and κλέπται, πλεονέκται, ἅρπαγες, thieves, exactours (or cheaters) and rapacious perſons make a good party in the catalogue of thoſe, who ſhall be excluded from eternal bliſs. 1 Theſſ. 4. 6. 1 Cor. 6. 9.

I ſhould add the poſitive duties, here to be underſtood, and referr'd to this matter, the which are commended to us in Scripture; ſuch are, diligence and induſtry in our calling, whereby with God's bleſſing we may ſupport our ſelves, preventing the need, and eſcaping the temptation of encroachment upon our neighbour's property; (whereby we may, as Saint Paul ſpeaketh, have need of nothing, may eat our own bread, may Eph. 4. 28.
even have wherewith to impart to the needs of others) contentment in that 1 Theſſ. 4. 12. 2 Theſſ. 8. 12.
eſtate, wherein God hath placed us, how mean ſoever; truſting in God, Phil. 4. 11.
and relying upon his providence; caſting our burthen and care upon him; 1 Tim. 6. 8. who hath promiſed to ſuſtain us; who hath ſaid, that he will never leave, Prov. 30. 8. Pſal. 55. 23.
or forſake us; laſtly, charitable relief of our neighbour in his need; for 1 Pet. 5. 7.
in ſuch a caſe our neighbour hath a title to the goods we poſſeſs; derived Heb. 13. 5.
from the appointment and donation of God, who is the abſolute proprietour of all we have, we being only his ſtewards, and diſpenſers thereof according to the rules he hath declared; ſo that if we do not according to his order, ſupply our poor neighbour, we are in juſt eſtimation, we ſhall in God's judgment appear to be thieves, both in reſpect to God himſelf, and to our neighbour; for that we thereby detain from God what by original right is his, and bereave our neighbour of what God hath beſtowed on him.

Thou ſhalt not bear falſe witneſs againſt thy neighbour.

IX. Commandment.

'Tis in the Hebrew, Thou ſhalt not anſwer (to wit being examined, or adjured in judgment) againſt thy neighbour as a falſe witneſs; ſo that primarily, it ſeems, bearing falſe teſtimony againſt our neighbour (eſpecially in matters of capital, or of high concernment to him) is prohibited: yet that not only this great crime, but that all injurious (even extrajudicial) prejudicing our neighbour's reputation, and conſequently his ſafety, or his welfare in any ſort, is forbidden, we may collect from that explication of this Law, or that parallel Law, which we have in Leviticus: Thou ſhalt not Levit. 19. 16.
('tis there ſaid) go up and down as a tale-bearer among thy people; neither ſhalt thou ſtand againſt the bloud of thy neighbour: as a tale-bearer, רָכִיל, LXX οὐ πορεύσῃ δόλῳ.
that is, a merchant, or trader in ill reports and ſtories concerning our neighbour, to his prejudice; defaming him, or detracting from him, or breeding in the minds of men an ill opinion of him; which vile and miſchievous practice is otherwhere under ſeveral names condemned and reproved; ſuch Prov. 18. 8. רגז are muttering: (The words of a mutterer, ſaith the Wiſe-man, are as wounds, going into the innermoſt parts of the belly:) whiſpering, ψιθυρισμὸς, we have Sirac. 5. 14. 21. 30. 28. 13.
often in the Son of Sirach, and in Saint Paul mentioned with a bad chara- 2 Cor. 12. 20. cter, or with prohibition and reproof: ſupplanting, (ſo in the good man's Rom. 1. 30.
deſcription, Pſal. 15. 'tis ſaid, He ſupplants not with his tongue, ſo the word Pſal. 15. 3. רגל ſignifies) detraction or backbiting, καταλαλία, which is ſo often in the Apo- 2 Cor. 12. 20.
ſtolical Writings forbidden and reprehended; ſlander, or calumny, and ſyco- Jam. 4. 11. Rom. 1. 30.

1 Pet. 2. 1. phantry; that is, oppreſſing, abuſing, or any way harming men by falſe Luke 3. 14. 19. 8. tales, ſuggeſtions, or pretences; which ſort of practices how baſe they are Levit. 19. 11. in themſelves (nothing being more unworthy of an honeſt and ingenuous Pſal. 72. 4. 119. 134. mind, nothing more ugly to the judgment of them, who have any ſenſe of goodneſs) how contrary they are to juſtice, which doth not permit us to wrong our neighbour, as well in his credit and good name, as in his other goods (for they perhaps may be as much valued by him, may really be of as much conſequence to him, as any thing that he hath) which bindeth us to abſtain from hurting him as well in word, as in deed; how oppoſite Prov. 10. 12. they are to charity, which obligeth us to think the beſt of our neighbour, 1 Cor. 13. 5, 7. and to endeavour that others alſo may do ſo; to conceal his real faults and blemiſhes; much more not to deviſe, and affix falſe ones to him; not to gather and diſperſe ill reports to his prejudice; of how miſchievous conſequence alſo they are, breeding ill-will, and ſowing ſtrife in all Prov. 16. 28. Societies both publick and private (even ſeparating chief friends, as the Wiſeman telleth us) common ſenſe and experience do ſhew: they conſequently muſt be very odious in the ſight of God, who loveth the peace and welfare of men; and very offenſive to men, who do the miſchiefs ſpringing from them.

To this Law may be reduced our obligations to be candid in our 1 Cor. 13. opinions and diſcourſes concerning others (according to Saint Paul's excellent deſcription of charity :) to forbear all raſh and harſh cenſure, as you know our Saviour in his moſt divine Sermon on the Mount chargeth us; to be veracious, ſincere and faithfull in all our converſation; which duties Levit. 19. 11. are ſo often taught and preſſed in both Teſtaments: Te ſhall not (ſaith the Pſal. 15. 2. Law) ſteal, nor deal falſely, nor lye one to another; and, To walk uprightly, and work righteouſneſs, and ſpeak the truth from his heart, are the firſt lineaments in the good man's character drawn by the Pſalmiſt: and, Theſe are Zech. 8. 16. the things ye ſhall doe (ſaith God in the Prophet) ſpeak ye every man the truth to his neighbour; execute the judgment of truth and peace in your gates: And Eph. 4. 25. in the New Teſtament, To lay aſide lying, to ſpeak the truth every man with
Col. 3. 9. 1 Pet. 2. 1. his neighbour; to lay aſide all malice, all guile, all hypocriſies, envyings and backbitings are Apoſtolical commands.

X. Commandment.

Thou ſhalt not covet thy neighbour's houſe; thou ſhalt not covet thy neighbour's wife; nor his man-ſervant, nor his maid-ſervant, nor his ox, nor his aſs, nor any thing that is thy neighbour's.

This Law is comprehenſive and recapitulatory (as it were) of the reſt concerning our neighbour, preſcribing univerſal juſtice toward him (whence Saint Mark it ſeems meaneth to render it in one word, by μὴ Mark 10. 19. ἀποςερήσης, deprive not, or bereave not your neighbour of any thing) and this not only in outward deed and dealing, but in inward thought and Matt. 15. 19. deſire, the ſpring, whence they do iſſue forth (for, from the heart, as our Saviour teacheth, do proceed evil thoughts, murthers, adulteries, fornications, thefts, falſe witneſs, blaſphemies) we are obliged to be ſo far from depriving our neighbour of any good thing belonging to him, that we are not ſo much as to wiſh or deſire it; not only to abſtain from injurious action, but to repreſs covetous inclinations: wherein is alſo implied, that we ſhould have a delight and complacence in our neighbour's good; not envying him any enjoyment; being in our minds content with the portion God pleaſeth to vouchſafe us; and entirely truſting in him, that he will ſupply us with with what is needfull or befitting to us, without the damage of our neighbour. Thus God's Law is (as Saint Paul obſerved) ſpiritual; not only reſtraining exteriour acts, but regulating our inmoſt thoughts, quelling all inordinate appetites and affections of heart within us; the which may be extended ſo as to reſpect not only matters of juſtice toward our neighbour, but all objects whatever of our practice; ſo as to import that, which in the Chriſtian Law is ſo frequently injoined us, as the life of our Religion, * circumciſing our hearts, crucifying the fleſh with its paſſions and deſires, mortifying our earthly members, putting to death by the ſpirit the deeds of the body, putting off the old man, which is corrupted according to the deceitfull luſts: οὐκ ἐπιθυμήσεις, thou ſhalt not unlawfully or irregularly deſire doth, according to the ſpiritual intent, import all this.

Rom. 7. 7, 14.
* Rom. 2. 29.
Phil. 3. 3.
Coloſſ. 2. 11.
Gal. 5. 24.
Rom. 6. 6.
Coloſſ. 3. 5.
2. 11.
Eph. 4. 22.
Rom. 8. 13.

I have done; and ſhall only add, that the ſum and end of theſe, and all other good Laws, of all Religion, and all our duty is (as we often are taught in the New Teſtament) compriſed in thoſe two Rules, of Loving God with all our heart, and, Loving our neighbour as our ſelves; ſeriouſly and honeſtly attending unto which we can hardly fail of knowing what in any caſe our duty is: It remains that we employ our beſt care and endeavour on the conſcientious practice thereof; imploring therewith the aſſiſtance of God's grace, and that good Spirit, which God hath moſt graciouſly promiſed to thoſe, who duly ask it, by which alone we can be enabled to keep God's Commandments: To him be all glory and praiſe. Amen.

1 Tim. 1. 5.

THE

[illegible]

[illegible] effect [illegible] unless [illegible]

[illegible] and [illegible] all [illegible] and very [illegible] on the [illegible] spec [illegible] ives.

THE DOCTRINE OF The Sacraments.

IT is a peculiar excellency of our Religion, that it doth not much employ mens care, pains and time, about matters of ceremonial obſervance; but doth chiefly (and in a manner wholly) exerciſe them in works of ſubſtantial duty, agreeable to reaſon, perfective of man's nature, productive of true glory to God, and ſolid benefit to men. Its deſign is not to amuſe our fancies with empty ſhews, nor to take up our endeavours in fruitleſs performances, but to render us truly good, and like unto God; firſt in interiour diſpoſition of mind, then in exteriour practice; full of hearty love and reverence to God, of tender charity and good-will toward men, of moderation and purity in the enjoyment of theſe things; of all true piety and vertue; whereby we may become qualified for that life of bliſs which it tendereth and promiſeth; for converſation in that holy Society above, to which it deſigneth and calleth us. Yet becauſe Fancy is naturally a medium, and an effectual inſtrument of action; and becauſe ſenſible objects are apt ſtrongly to affect our minds; it hath pleaſed the divine Wiſdom to apply them, in fit meaſure, and to ſanctifie them to thoſe good purpoſes, by appointing ſome few ſolemn and ſignificant Rites to be obſerved by us, being in their own nature proper and uſefull, and by God deſigned to declare his mind and gracious intents to us; to conſign and convey his Grace into our Souls, to confirm our Faith in him, to raiſe our devotion toward him, to quicken our reſolutions of obeying his Will; to enable and excite us to the practice of thoſe great Duties which he requireth of us: * Our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, ſaith St. Auſtin, hath ſubjected us to his gentle yoke, and light burthen; whence with Sacraments moſt few in number, moſt eaſie for obſervance, moſt excellent in ſignification he bound together the ſociety of new people. And, The mercy of God (ſaith he again) would have Religion free, by the celebration of a moſt few, and moſt clear Sacraments.

Cypr. Ep. 76.

It hath eſpecially upon vulgar and weaker minds a ſtrong efficacy.

---

* Dominus noſter leni jugo ſuo nos ſubdidit, & ſarcinæ levi; Unde Sacramentis numero pauciſſimis, obſervatione facillimis, ſignificatione præſtantiſſimis ſocietatem novi populi colligavit: ſicut eſt Baptiſmus Trinitatis nomine conſecratus, communicatio Corporis & Sanguinis ipſius; & ſi quid aliud in Scripturis Canonicis commendatur, &c. Ep. 118. Religionem pauciſſimis & manifeſtiſſimis celebrationum Sacramentis miſericordia Dei liberam eſſe voluit. Id. Ep. 119.

Of theſe there appear two (and St. Auſtin in the place cited could inſtance in no more) of general and principal uſe, inſtituted by our Lord himſelf; which becauſe they repreſent to us ſomewhat not ſubject to ſenſe, and have a ſecret influence upon us; becauſe what is intended by them, is not immediately diſcernible by what is done, without ſome explication, (their ſignificancy being not wholly grounded in the nature, but depending upon arbitrary inſtitution, as that of words, which is of kin to them; whence St. Auſtin calls a Sacrament, Verbum viſibile) have uſually been called Myſteries, (that is, actions of a cloſe and occult importance, of deeper meaning and deſign, than is obvious to ordinary perception) and thence are alſo called Sacraments, for no other reaſon, I conceive, than becauſe the ancienteſt Tranſlatours of the Bible into Latin, did uſually render the word μυστήριον by the word Sacramentum; whence every thing containing under it ſomewhat of abſtruſe meaning, is by ancient Writers termed a Sacrament. (So Tertullian calls all Chriſtianity the Sacrament of Chriſtian Religion; and Eliſha's Ax he calls the Sacrament of Wood; and St. Auſtin ſpeaks of the Sacrament of Bread, of Fiſh, of Numbers, of the Rock, &c. In ſhort, he ſays of all Signs, That when they belong to divine things, they are called † Sacraments; which ſhews to how ſmall purpoſe the Diſputes are, yea, on what ſmall grounds the decrees are, concerning the number, general nature and efficacy of Sacraments; for where a name or form of a Sacrament is of ſo large, ambiguous and indeterminate ſignification, there can be nothing but confuſion in the diſputes about it.) But thoſe which chiefly at leaſt, and in way of eminency have obtained this name, are thoſe two inſtituted by our Lord, Baptiſm, and the Lord's Supper; of which I ſhall in order diſcourſe; and ſo of each, as very briefly to conſider the occaſion of their inſtitution, the actions injoined in them; the nature of them, or wherein their myſtery doth conſiſt, the ends for which they were intended, and the effects they produce; together with the diſpoſitions and duties (antecedent, concomitant and conſequent) required of us in the uſe and practice of them. And firſt, Exod. 12. v. 26. Sacramenti natura diſertè & planè exprimitur.

† Nimis autem longum eſt convenienter diſputare de varietate ſignorum, quæ, cùm ad res divinas pertinent, Sacramenta appellantur. Aug. Ep. 5.

In cunctis Chriſti actionibus Sacramentorum myſteria corruſcarunt. Leo I. Ep. 4.

OF BAPTISM.

Βαπτισμῶν διδαχῆς, Heb. 6. 1, 2.

THERE were, (as the Apoſtle to the Hebrews telleth us) in ſacred uſe among the Jews διάφοροι βαπτισμοὶ, ſeveral kinds of Baptiſms. Heb. 9. 10. The Learned in their Laws and Cuſtoms teach, that they never did receive any perſon into their Covenant, Seld. de Synedriis. whether that which was more ſtrict (to which natural Jews, and Proſelytes of Righteouſneſs were tyed) or that which was more lax, with which Strangers and Proſelytes of the gate did comply, without a Baptiſm. And that Prieſts and Levites entring into Exod. 29. 4. their Office, were to be ſanctified by waſhing with water, Numb. 8. 6. we ſee plainly preſcribed in their Law; likewiſe that all perſons, who had contracted any kind of defilement, were purified by the like Ceremony, particularly Levit. 15. 8, Children new-born, 16, 18, 27. & 22. 6. is expreſſed there. Moreover, that it was in uſe for Perſons, who were conſcious to themſelves of having tranſgreſſed God's Numb. 19. 7, Law, being in God's Name invited by ſome perſon of eminent authority &c. (a Prophet, Ezek. 16. 4. or like a Prophet, one commiſſionated by God) unto repentance and amendment of life, to be waſhed by him, in teſtimony of their ſtedfaſt purpoſe to amend; and in hope to obtain pardon from God of their paſt offences, and to be re-inſtated in his favour, appears probable by Saint John the Baptiſt his undertaking, and the ſucceſs thereof. For if the Joh. 1. 25, 33. manner of his proceeding had been altogether unuſual and unknown, ſo many it ſeems would not ſo readily (without any ſtir or obſtacle) have complyed therewith; eſpecially among the Scribes and Phariſees, thoſe zealous adherents to traditionary practice, who, to maintain their credit and intereſt with the people, were ſo averſe from all appearance of novelty. This practice then of waſhing in ſo many caſes, and to ſo many purpoſes cuſtomary among God's people, to ſignify mens entring into a new ſtate or courſe of life, being withall moſt apt and proper for his deſign, our Bleſſed Saviour, who never favoured needleſs innovations, was pleaſed to aſſume and impoſe upon the Diſciples and followers of his Religion, accommodating it to thoſe holy purpoſes, which we ſhall now endeavour to declare.

What the action it ſelf enjoined is, what the manner and form thereof, is apparent by the words of our Lord's inſtitution; Going forth therefore, Matt. 28. 19. (ſaith he) teach (or diſciple) all Nations, baptizing them in the name of the Mark 16. 15. Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt, teaching them to obſerve all things, which I have commanded you.

The Action is baptizing or immerſing in water; the Object thereof, thoſe Perſons of any Nation, whom his Miniſters can by their inſtruction and perſuaſion render Diſciples, that is, ſuch as do ſincerely believe the truth of his Doctrine, and ſeriouſly reſolve to obey his Commandments. It is performed in the Name; that is, it is miniſtred by the authority, and bears ſpecial relation unto the Perſons of the Bleſſed Trinity, as the chief Objects of the Faith profeſſed, and the ſole Objects of the obedience undertaken therein; as exhibiting gracious favours unto the perſon baptized, and as receiving ſpecial obligations from him.

Such is the Action it ſelf declared to be; the myſtery thereof conſiſts in its being a notable ſign to repreſent, and an authentick Seal to ratifie the collation then made of certain great benefits to us; and our undertaking correſpondent duties toward God.

The Benefits which God then ſignifies, and (upon due terms) engageth to confer on us, are theſe:

1. The purgation or abſolution of us from the guilt of paſt offences, by a free and full remiſſion of them, (the which waſhing by Water, cleanſing from all ſtains, doth moſt appoſitely repreſent) and conſequently God's being reconciled unto us, his receiving us into a ſtate of grace and favour, his freely juſtifying us, (that is, looking upon us, or treating us as juſt and innocent Perſons, although before we ſtood guilty of heinous ſins, and thereupon liable to grievous puniſhments) that theſe benefits are conferred in Baptiſm, many places of Scripture plainly ſhew; [and the Primitive Church, with moſt firm and unanimous conſent, did believe*.] And now (ſaid Ananias to Saint Paul) Why doſt thou tarry? Ariſe and be baptized, and waſh away thy ſins. And, Repent (ſaith St. Peter, preaching to the Jews) and let every one of you be baptized for the remiſſion of ſins. And, Chriſt (ſaith S. Paul again to the Epheſians) loved his Church, and delivered himſelf for it, that he might ſanctifie it, purging it by the waſhing of water, ἐν ῥήματι, (that is, he effectually in Baptiſm conſigned to the members of his Church, that mercy and remiſſion of ſins, which he purchaſed and merited by his paſſion.) And again, Such (ſaith he to the Corinthians) were ſome of you, (that is, ye were perſons guilty of heinous ſins) but ye have been waſhed, ye have been ſanctified, ye have been juſtified in the name of our Lord, and by the ſpirit of our God; where, having been waſhed in Chriſt's name, doth (in congruity with what is ſaid in other places) denote Baptiſm in his name; being ſanctified and juſtified, do expreſs the firſt benefits accompanying that Baptiſm. And indeed, wherever a general remiſſion of ſins, or a full ſanctification, or conſecration, and juſtification of mens perſons in God's ſight, are mentioned; that remiſſion of ſins, that ſeparation, or dedication unto God's Service, that reception into Grace, which are conſigned in Baptiſm, are (I conceive) underſtood; there being no other ſeaſon or occaſion, wherein ordinarily and viſibly God doth exhibit thoſe Benefits.

* Vid. Juſt. Apol. 2. Tertul. de Bapt. &c.
Acts 22. 16.
Acts 2. 38.
Eph. 5. 26.
1 Cor. 6. 11.

Quid feſtinat innocens ætas ad remiſſionem peccatorum? Tertul.

It may be demanded, How Children, by reaſon of their innocent age, are capable of theſe Benefits; how they can be pardoned, who never had offended, how they can be juſtified, who never were capable of being unjuſt? I briefly anſwer, That becauſe they come from that race, which by ſin had forfeited God's favour, and had alienated it ſelf from him; becauſe alſo they have in them thoſe ſeeds of pravity from which afterward certainly, life continuing, (without God's reſtraining Grace) will ſprout forth innumerable evil actions; therefore that God overlooking all the defects of their nature, both relative, and abſolute, or perſonal, doth aſſume them into his ſpecial favour, is no ſmall benefit to them, anſwerable to the remiſſion of actual ſin, and reſtitution from the ſtate conſequent thereon in others.

—impletur apud nos Spiritu Sancto puerorum innocens ætas, &c. Cypr. Epiſt. 10.

2. In Baptiſm, the Gift of God's Holy Spirit is conferred, qualifying us for the ſtate into which we then come, and enabling us to perform the duties we then undertake, which otherwiſe we ſhould be unable to perform; for purification of our hearts from vicious inclinations and deſires; for begetting holy diſpoſitions and affections in our Souls; for to guide and inſtruct us, to ſuſtain and ſtrengthen us, to encourage and comfort us in all the courſe of Chriſtian piety: the which effects are well alſo figured by water, which purifieth things both from inherent and adherent filth. That this benefit is annexed to Baptiſm, the Scripture alſo teacheth us: Be baptized (ſaith Saint Peter) in the Name of Acts 2. 38.

Chriſt to the remiſſion of ſins, and ye ſhall receive the gift of the Holy Ghoſt:
εἰς ἓν πνεῦμα ἐποτίσθημεν, We being baptized in one body, are made to drink 1 Cor. 12. 13 of one ſpirit, ſaith Saint Paul: And with the * Laver of Regeneration, * λουτρὸν παλιγγενεσίας, Saint Paul again joineth the renovation of the Holy Ghoſt: And it is repreſented ἀνακαινώσεως as an advantage of our Saviour's Baptiſm above that of John, that πνεύματος our Lord not only baptized with water to repentance, but with the Holy ἁγίου. Tit. 3. 5.
Ghoſt, and Fire. Matt. 3. 15.

Some preventing operations of the Holy Ghoſt (whereby God freely draweth Men to Chriſtianity, perſuading their minds to aſſent thereto, inſpiring their hearts with reſolutions to comply with it) do precede Baptiſm; but a more full communication thereof (due by compact, aſſured by promiſe) for the confirming and maintaining us in the firm belief and conſtant practice of Chriſtianity is conſequent thereon; After ye had believed, ye were ſealed by the Holy Spirit of promiſe, ſaith Saint Epheſ. 1. 14.
Paul. To ſignifie which benefit then conferr'd, the ancient Chriſtians did to Baptiſm annex the Chriſm, or holy Unction, ſignifying the collation of that healing and chearing Spirit to the baptized perſon; that which Saint Paul may ſeem to reſpect, when he ſaith, He that eſtabliſheth 2 Cor. 1. 21.
(or confirmeth) us with you into Chriſt, and who hath anointed us, is God; who alſo hath ſealed us, and hath given us the earneſt of the Spirit in our hearts.

3. With thoſe gifts is connected the benefit of Regeneration, implying our entrance into a new ſtate and courſe of life; being endowed with new faculties, diſpoſitions and capacities of Souls, becoming new Creatures and new Men, as it were, renewed after the likeneſs of God Epheſ. 2 22, 23, 24.
in righteouſneſs and true holineſs, our being ſanctified in our hearts and Coloſ. 3. 10.
lives, being mortified to fleſhly luſts and worldly affections, being 2 Cor. 5. 17.
quickned to a ſpiritual life and heavenly converſation: in ſhort, becoming in relation and in diſpoſition of mind, the children of God. This the matter and the action of Baptiſm doth ſet out; for as children new born, (for cleanſing them from impurities adherent from the Womb) Ezek. 16. 4.
both among the Jews and other people, were wont to be waſhed; ſo ——λούσασα καὶ are we in Baptiſm, ſignifying our purification from natural and worldly ἐμπλήσασα defilements: The merſion alſo in Water, and the emerſion thence, doth γάλακτι. Theocr.
figure our death to the former, and receiving to a new life. Whence Baptiſm is by Saint Paul called the laver of Regeneration; and our Lord Tit. 3. 5.
ſaith, that, If a man be not born again of Water and the Spirit, he cannot Joh. 3. 5.
enter into the Kingdom of God; that is, every one becoming a Chriſtian, is by Baptiſm regenerated or put into a new ſtate of Life, getteth new diſpoſitions of Soul, and new relations to God. Ye are all (ſaith Saint Paul) Gal. 3. 25.
the children of God by faith in Chriſt Jeſus; that is, by embracing his Doctrine, and ſubmitting to his Law profeſſedly in Baptiſm. And, We (ſaith Saint Paul again) are buried with Chriſt through Baptiſm unto death; that as Rom. 6. 4.
Chriſt was raiſed from the dead by the glory of the Father, ſo alſo we ſhould Col. 2. 12.
walk in newneſs of life.

4. With theſe Benefits is conjoined that of being inſerted into God's Church, his family, the number of his choſen people, the myſtical body of Chriſt, whereby we become entitled to the privileges and immunities of that heavenly Corporation. We (ſaith Saint Paul) have been 1 Cor. 12. 13.
all baptized in one ſpirit into one body, the myſtical body of Chriſt:
And, ſo many of you (ſaith he again) as have been baptized into Chriſt, Gal. 3. 27.

(into Chriſt myſtical, or the Church) have put on Chriſt, and ye are (adds he) all one in Chriſt Jeſus. As Proſelytes among the Jews by Baptiſm were admitted unto the Communion and privileges of the Jewiſh; ſo thereby are we received into the like Communion and privileges of the Chriſtian, far more excellent, Society.

5. In conſequence of theſe things , there is with Baptiſm conferred a capacity of, a title unto, an aſſurance (under condition of perſevering in faith and obedience to our Lord) of eternal life and ſalvation. We are 1 Pet. 1. 2. therein, in Saint Peter's words, regenerated unto a lively hope of an incorruptible inheritance, by that reſurrection of Chriſt, which is repreſented to us in this action ; and ſo therein applied, as to beget in us a title and a hope to riſe again in like manner to a bliſsfull life ; whence we are ſaid therein Coloſſ. 2. 12. to riſe with him : Being, ſaith Saint Paul, buried with him in Baptiſm, wherein alſo we were raiſed again : whence by the two great Apoſtles, Baptiſm is 1 Pet. 3. 21. ſaid to ſave us : Baptiſm (ſaith Saint Peter) the antitype of the delivery in the flood, doth ſave us, that is, admitteth us into the Ark, putteth us Tit. 3. 5. into the ſure way of Salvation ; and, God (ſaith Saint Paul) according to Matt. 16. 16. his mercy ſaved us, by the laver of regeneration ; and, He that ſhall believe, and ſhall be baptized, ſhall be ſaved, is our Saviour's own word and promiſe; ſhall be ſaved, that is, ſhall be put into a ſtate and way of ſalvation, continuing in which ſtate, proceeding in which way he aſſuredly ſhall be ſaved : for Faith there denoteth perſeverance in Faith, and Baptiſm implieth performance of the conditions therein undertaken ; which next is to be conſidered.

For as this Holy Rite ſignifyeth and ſealeth God's collation of ſo many great Benefits on us ; ſo it alſo implieth and on our part ratifieth our Obligation, then in an eſpecial manner commencing, to ſeveral moſt important duties toward him. It implieth, that we are in mind fully perſuaded concerning the truth of that Doctrine, which God the Father revealed by his bleſſed Son, and confirmed by the miraculous operation of the Holy Ghoſt ; we therein profeſs our humble and thankfull embracing the overtures of Mercy and Grace , purchaſed for us by our Saviour's meritorious undertaking and performances, the which are then exhibited and tendred to us ; we therein declare our hearty reſolution to forſake all wicked courſes of life, repugnant to the Doctrine and Law of Chriſt ; fully to conform our lives to his Will, living thereafter in all piety, righteouſneſs and ſobriety, as loyal Subjects, faithfull Servants, and dutifull Children to God ; in brief, we therein are bound, renouncing all erroneous principles, all vicious inclinations, and all other engagements whatever, entirely to devote our ſelves to the Faith and Obedience of God the Father, our glorious and good Maker ; of God the Son our gracious Redeemer ; of God the Holy Ghoſt our bleſſed Guide, Aſſiſtant, Advocate and Comforter ; Theſe are the duties antecedent unto and concomitant of our Baptiſm (immediately and formally required of thoſe, who are capable of performing them, mediately and virtually of them who are not) the which are ſignified by our being baptized in the Name of the Holy Trinity.

Theſe Duties the Scripture commonly expreſſeth by the word, Faith Acts 8. 37. and Repentance ; ſometimes ſingly, ſometimes conjunctly : If (ſaid Philip to the Eunuch) thou believeſt with thy heart it is lawfull (for thee to be baptized ;) Faith was an indiſpenſible condition prerequiſite thereto ; Acts 2. 38. and, Repent (ſaith Saint Peter) and let every one of you be baptized ; Repentance alſo was neceſſary to precede it ; indeed both theſe (as they are meant in this caſe) do in effect ſignifie the ſame ; each importeth a being renewed in mind, in judgment, in will, in affection; a ſerious embracing of Chriſt's Doctrine, and a ſtedfaſt reſolution to adhere thereto in practice. Hence are thoſe effects or conſequences attributed to Faith, juſtifying us, reconciling and bringing us near to God, ſaving us; becauſe it is the neceſſary condition required by God, and by him accepted, that we may be capable of theſe benefits conferred in Baptiſm; the ſame being alſo referr'd to that repentance or change of mind, which muſt accompany our entrance into Chriſtianity; that good Conſcience with which we ſtipulate a perpetual devotion and obedience to God, the which therefore doth (as Saint Peter telleth us) ſave us; it contributing to our Salvation, as a duty neceſſarily required in order thereto. This is that death to ſin, and reſurrection to righteouſneſs, that being buried with Chriſt, and riſing again with him, ſo as to walk in newneſs of life, which the baptiſmal action ſignifies, and which we then really undertake to perform.

Acts 26. 14. 5. 31. & 20. 21. & 26. 20. & 3. 19. & 17. 30. Rom. 5. 1, 2. & 3. 25. & 2 4. Gal. 2. 16. & 3. 8. Heb. 10. 39. Epheſ. 2. 8. & 3. 12. 2 Theſſ. 2. 13. 2 Tim. 2. 25. 2 Pet. 3. 9. Matt. 9. 13. Luk. 24. 47. Mark 2. 17. 1 Pet. 3. 21. Rom. 6. 3, 4, &c.

And as ſuch are the duties preceding or accompanying Baptiſm; ſo making good the engagements they contain, conſtantly perſiſting in them, maintaining and improving them, are duties neceſſarily conſequent thereupon. Having (ſaith the Apoſtle) had our bodies waſhed with pure water, let us hold faſt the profeſſion of our faith without wavering. We ſhould indeed continually remember, frequently and ſeriouſly conſider, what in ſo ſolemn a manner we (upon ſo valuable conſiderations) did then undertake, promiſe and vow to God, diligently ſtriving to perform it; for violating our part of the Covenant and ſtipulation then made, by apoſtacy in profeſſion or practice from God and goodneſs, we certainly muſt forfeit thoſe ineſtimable benefits, which God otherwiſe hath tied himſelf to beſtow; the pardon of our ſins, the favour of God, the being members of Chriſt, the grace, guidance, aſſiſtance and comfort of the Holy Spirit; the right unto and hope of Salvation. We ſo doing, ſhall not only ſimply diſobey and offend God; but add the higheſt breach of fidelity to our diſobedience, together with the moſt heinous ingratitude, abuſing the greateſt grace that could be vouchſafed us: If we wilfully ſin, after we have taken the acknowledgment of the truth, (ſaith the Apoſtle, meaning that ſolemn profeſſion of our Faith in Baptiſm) we trample under foot the Son of God; we profane the bloud of the Covenant; we doe deſpite unto the Spirit of Grace; and incurring ſo deep guilt, we muſt expect ſutable puniſhment. But I proceed to the other Sacrament, Heb. 10. 23. 2 Pet. 3. 17.

Heb. 10. 26.

THE

THE EUCHARIST.

Cypr. Ep. 63. AMong the wonderfull works of Power and Grace performed by God Almighty, in favour of the Children of Iſrael, and in order to their delivery from the Egyptian ſlavery, a moſt ſignal one, was the ſmiting the firſt-born in every houſe of the Egyptians, and paſſing over the houſes of the Children of Iſrael; wherein God declared his juſt wrath againſt their cruel Oppreſſours, depriving them in a ſudden and dreadfull manner of what was neareſt and deareſt to them; and his gracious mercy toward them, in preſerving what was alike dear to them from ſo woſull a calamity; thus (as the Text expreſſeth it) putting a difference between the Egyptians and the Children of Iſrael. Now that the memory of ſo remarkable a Mercy might be preſerved, that their affections might be raiſed to a ſtrong ſenſe of God's goodneſs, and their Faith in them confirmed, ſo as in the like need to hope for the ſame favourable help and protection, by the conſideration of ſo notable an experiment, it pleaſed God to appoint a Sacrament, or myſterious Rite to be annually celebrated, repreſenting and recalling to mind, that Act of God wherein his ſpecial kindneſs was ſo eminently demonſtrated toward his People: The ſame alſo (as did other Rites and Sacrifices, inſtituted by God among that people) looking directly forward upon that other great delivery from Sin and Hell, which God in mercy deſigned toward mankind, to be atchieved by our Saviour; prefiguring, that the Souls of them who ſhould be willing to forſake the ſpiritual bondage of ſin, ſhould be ſaved from the ruin coming upon them who would abide therein; God regarding the bloud of our Saviour Exod. 12. 23. (that immaculate Lamb, ſacrificed for them) ſprinkled upon the doors of Heb. 10. 22. 1 Pet. 1. 2. their houſes, that is, by hearty Faith and Repentance, applied to their Conſciences. The occaſion of celebrating which Holy Rite, our Saviour we ſee did improve to the inſtitution of this Sacrament, moſt agreeing therewith in deſign, as repreſentative and commemorative of the greateſt bleſſing and mercy that we are capable of having vouchſafed to us; ſome part of that ancient Rite or Sacrifice (which was moſt ſutable to the ſpecial purpoſes of this Inſtitution, and moſt conformable to the general conſtitution of the Chriſtian Religion, whereby all bloudy Sacrifices are aboliſhed) being retained in this.

The Action it ſelf (or rather the whole Rite, conſiſting of divers actions) we ſee plainly deſcribed in the Goſpels, and in the firſt Epiſtle of Saint Paul to the Corinthians; diſtinguiſhable into theſe chief 1 Tim. 4. 5. parts. 1. The Benediction and Conſecration (by Prayer and Thankſgiving) of Bread and Wine. 2. The breaking of Bread, and handling the Cup. 3. The delivery and diſtribution of them to the perſons preLuke 22. 19, 20. εὐχαριστήσας. ſent. 4. The declaration accompanying that delivery, that thoſe ſymbolical things and actions did repreſent our Saviour's Body given and 1 Cor. 11. 24, 25. ἔκλασε. broken, our Saviour's Bloud ſhed and poured out for us, in ſanction of the new Covenant. 5 The actual partaking of thoſe Symbols, by eating the Bread,and drinking the Wine,done by all preſent. Theſe things we find done at the firſt inſtitution and exemplary practice of this holy Ceremony; the which our Saviour obliged us to imitate, ſaying, Do this in remembrance of me. There followeth in Saint Matthew and Saint Mark, preſently after the narration concerning theſe particulars,----καὶ ὑμνήσαντες, And having ſung a hymn,they went to the Mount of Olives: Which action was indeed in it ſelf proper to conclude the practice of this holy Rite,yet what reference it hath thereto, cannot thence be determined; However with theſe the Church hath always joined ſeveral acts of Devotion (Confeſſions, Prayers, Praiſes, Thankſgivings, Interceſſions, Vows) ſutable to the nature and deſign of the Sacrament, apt to glorify God, and edify the faithfull in the celebration thereof.

Luke 22. 17. διαμερίσατε. Mark 14. 23. ἔπιον ἅπαντες. Matt. 26. 30. Mark 14. 26.

Such is the practice it ſelf inſtituted and injoined by our Saviour; the myſterious importance thereof, as we find it explained in holy Scripture, (the only ſolid and ſure ground, upon which we can build the explication of ſupernatural Myſteries conſiſteth chiefly in theſe particulars:

1. It was intended for a commemorative repreſentation of our Saviour's Paſſion for us; fit to mind us of it, to move us to conſider it, to beget affections in us, ſutable to the memory and conſideration thereof: τοῦτο ποιεῖτε εἰς τὴν ἐμὴν ἀνάμνησιν· Do this (ſaith our Lord) for my remembrance, or in commemoration of me; that is, ſo as thereby to have raiſed in you a reflexion of mind and heart upon thoſe grievous pains, which I ſhall have endured for your ſake, to procure for you a remiſſion of ſins, and reconciliation to God: And, So often (ſaith Saint Paul) as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, καταγγέλλετε, Ye tell forth or ſignificantly expreſs) the death of our Lord till he come, or during his abſence from us. The ſuffering of our Saviour (the moſt wonderfull act of goodneſs and charity, that ever was performed in the world, which produced effects of higheſt conſequence to our benefit, the conſideration whereof is apt to work the beſt diſpoſitions of piety in us) ſhould very frequently be preſent to our thoughts and affections; and that it may be ſo with advantage, ſuch a ſolemn and ſenſible repreſentation thereof is very conducible; wherein we behold him crucified, as it were in effigie, his body broken, his bloud poured out for us; it being in a ſort a putting us into the circumſtances of thoſe, who did behold our Saviour for us hanging upon the Croſs. Our Lord being abſent in body from us, (ſitting in Heaven at God's right hand) to ſupply that abſence, that we ſhould not be apt to forget him, and thereby become wholly eſtranged from him, is pleaſed to order this occaſion of being preſent, and converſing with us, in ſuch a manner, as may retain in our memories his gracious performances for us; may impreſs in our hearts a kindly ſenſe of them; may raiſe us up in mind and affection to him.

Luke 22. 19. 1 Cor. 11. 25. 1 Cor. 11. 26.

2. The benefits conſequent upon our Saviour's Paſſion, rightly apprehended, heartily believed, ſeriouſly conſidered by us, are hereby lively repreſented, and effectually conveyed; to the ſuſtenance and nouriſhment of our ſpiritual life, to the refreſhment and comfort of our ſouls. It is a holy Feaſt, a ſpiritual Repaſt, a divine Entertainment, to which God in kindneſs invites us; to which if we come with well-diſpoſed minds, he there feeds us with moſt holy and delicious Viands, with heavenly Manna, with moſt reviving and cheriſhing Liquor. Bread is the ſtaff of life, the moſt common, moſt neceſſary, and moſt wholſome, and moſt ſavory Meat; Wine is the moſt pleaſant and wholſome alſo, the moſt ſprightly and cordial Drink; by them therefore our Lord choſe to repreſent preſent that body and bloud, by the oblation of which a capacity of life and health was procured to mankind; the taking in which by right apprehenſion, taſting it by hearty faith, digeſting it by carefull attention and meditation, converting it into our ſubſtance by devout, gratefull and holy affections, joined with ſerious and ſteady reſolutions of living anſwerable thereto, will certainly ſupport and maintain our ſpiritual life in a vigorous health and happy growth of grace; refreſhing our hearts Joh. 6. 51, 47. & 5. 36. with comfort and ſatisfaction unſpeakable; He that doeth thus, eats our Saviour's fleſh, and drinks his bloud, (that is, who as our Saviour interpreteth it, doth believe in him; that belief importing all other acts of mind and will, connected with right perſuaſions concerning him) hath eternal life, and ſhall live for ever, as himſelf declares and promiſes: which benefits therefore in the due performance of this holy duty, are conveyed unto us.

3. This Sacrament declares that union, which good Chriſtians partaking thereof have with Chriſt; their myſtical inſertion into him, by a Joh. 15. 4. cloſe dependence upon him for ſpiritual life, mercy, grace and ſalvation; a conſtant adherence to him by faith and obedience, a near conformity to him in mind and affection; an inſeparable conjunction with him, by the ſtricteſt bands of fidelity, and by the moſt endearing relations: Which things could not more fitly be ſet out, than by the partaking our beſt and moſt neceſſary food; which being taken in, ſoon becomes united to us, aſſimilated and converted into our ſubſtance; thereby renewing our John 6. 56. ſtrength, and repairing the decays of our nature: Wherefore, He (ſaith 1 Cor. 10. 16. our Saviour) that eateth my fleſh, and drinketh my bloud, abideth in me, and I in him; and, The cup of bleſſing (ſaith Saint Paul) which we bleſs, is it not the communion of the bloud of Chriſt? the bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Chriſt? We in the outward action, partake of the Symbols repreſenting our Saviour's Body and Bloud; We in the ſpiritual intention, communicate of his very Perſon, being (according to the manner inſinuated) intimately united to him.

4. By this Sacrament conſequently is ſignified and ſealed that union, which is among our Saviour's true Diſciples communicating therein; their being together united in conſent of mind, and unity of faith; in mutual good-will and affection, in hope and tendency to the ſame bleſſed end, in ſpiritual brotherhood and ſociety; eſpecially upon account of their com- Vid. Cyp. Ep. 63. p. 146. Ep. 67. p. 208. 1 Cor. 10. 17. munion with Chriſt, which moſt cloſely ties them one to another; they partaking of this one individual food, become tranſlated, as it were into one body and ſubſtance: Seeing (ſaith Saint Paul) we being many, are one bread, one body; for all of us do partake of one bread.

In the repreſenting, producing and promoting theſe things, we are taught the myſtery of this Sacrament doth conſiſt; It was deſigned as a proper and efficacious inſtrument, to raiſe in us pious affections toward our good God and gracious Redeemer; to diſpoſe us to all holy practice; to confirm our faith, to nouriſh our hope, to quicken our reſolutions of walking carefully in the ways of duty; to unite us more faſtly to our Saviour, and to combine us in charity one toward another; the accompliſhing of which intents thereof, doth ſuppoſe our faithfull and diligent concurrence in the uſe thereof; whence ariſe many duties incumbent upon us in reſpect thereto, ſome antecedent, ſome concomitant, ſome conſequent to the uſe thereof.

1. Before we addreſs our ſelves to the partaking of this venerable myſtery, we ſhould conſider whither we are going, what is the nature and importance of the action we ſet our ſelves about; that we are approaching to our Lord's Table, (ſo St. Paul calleth it) to come into his more eſpecial preſence, to be entertained by him with the deareſt welcome, and the beſt chear that can be; to receive the fulleſt teſtimonies of his mercy, and the ſureſt pledges of his favour toward us; that we are going to behold our Lord in tendereſt love, offering up himſelf a Sacrifice to God, therein undergoing the ſoreſt pains, and fouleſt diſgraces for our good and ſalvation; that we ought therefore to bring with us diſpoſitions of ſoul, ſutable to ſuch an acceſs unto, ſuch an entercourſe with our gracious Lord. Had we the honour and favour to be invited to the Table of a great Prince, what eſpecial care ſhould we have to dreſs our bodies in a clean and decent garb, to compoſe our minds in order to expreſſion of all due reſpect to him; to bring nothing about us noiſome or ugly, that might offend his ſight, or diſpleaſe his mind: The like ſurely, and greater care we ſhould apply, when we thus being called, do go into God's preſence and communion. We ſhould, in preparation thereto, with all our power, endeavour to cleanſe our ſouls from all impurity of thought and deſire; from all iniquity and perverſeneſs; from all malice, envy, hatred, anger, and all ſuch evil diſpoſitions, which are moſt offenſive to God's all-piercing ſight, and unbeſeeming his glorious preſence; we ſhould dreſs our ſouls with all thoſe comely ornaments of grace (with purity, humility, meekneſs and charity) which will render us acceptable and well-pleaſing to him: We ſhould compoſe our minds into a frame of reverence and awfull regard to the majeſty of God, into a lowly, calm, and tender diſpoſition of heart, apt to expreſs all reſpect due to his preſence, fit to admit the gracious illapſes of his holy Spirit; very ſuſceptive of all holy and heavenly affections, which are ſutable to ſuch a communion, or may ſpring from it. We ſhould therefore remove and abandon from us, not only all vicious inclinations, and evil purpoſes; but even all worldly cares, deſires and paſſions which may diſtract or diſcompoſe us, that may dull or deject us, that may cauſe us to behave our ſelves indecently or unworthily before God, that may bereave us of the excellent fruits from ſo bleſſed an entertainment.

1 Cor. 10. 21

1 Cor. 11. 28.

1 Cor. 5. 7.

To theſe purpoſes we ſhould, according to Saint Paul's advice, δοκιμάζειν ἑαυτȣ̀ς, examine and approve our ſelves; conſidering our paſt actions, and our preſent inclinations, and accordingly, by ſerious meditation, and fervent prayer to God for his gracious aſſiſtance therein, working our ſouls into a hearty remorſe for our paſt miſcarriages, and a ſincere reſolution to amend for the future; forſaking all ſin, endeavouring in all our actions to ſerve and pleaſe God; purging out (as Saint Paul again injoineth us) the old leaven of vice and wickedneſs; ſo that we may feaſt, and celebrate this Paſſeover, in which Chriſt is myſtically ſacrificed for us, in the unleavened diſpoſitions of ſincerity and truth. Such are the duties previous to our partaking this Sacrament.

1 Cor. 11. 29.

2. Thoſe duties which accompany it, are a reverent and devout affection of heart, with a ſutable behaviour therein; an awfull ſenſe of mind befitting the Majeſty of that Preſence wherein we do appear, anſwerable to the greatneſs, and goodneſs, and holineſs of him, with whom we converſe; becoming the ſacredneſs of thoſe Myſteries which are exhibited to us, (that which Saint Paul ſeemeth to call διακρίνειν τὸ σῶμα Κυρίȣ, to diſcern or diſtinguiſh our Lord's body; that is, yielding a peculiar reverence of mind and behaviour in regard thereto) a devotion of heart, conſiſting in hearty contrition for our ſins, which did expoſe our Saviour to the enduring ſuch pains, then remembred; in firm reſolution to forſake the like thereafter, as injurious, diſhonourable and diſpleaſing to him; in fervent love of him, as full of ſo wonderfull goodneſs and charity toward us; in moſt hearty thankſulneſs for thoſe unconceivably great expreſſions of kindneſs toward us; in deepeſt humility, upon ſenſe of our unworthineſs, to receive ſuch teſtimonies of grace and favour from him, (our unworthineſs to eat the crumbs that fall from his table, how much more to be admitted into ſuch degrees of honourable communion and familiarity, of cloſe conjunction and union with him?) of pious joy in conſideration of the excellent privileges herein imparted, and of the bleſſed fruits accruing to us from his gracious performances; in a comfortable hope of obtaining and enjoying the benefits of his obedience and paſſion, by the aſſiſtance of his Grace; in ſteady faith, and full perſuaſion of mind, that he is (ſuppoſing our dutifull compliance) ready to beſtow upon us all the bleſſings then exhibited; in attentively fixing the eyes of our mind, and all the powers of our ſoul (our underſtanding, will, memory, fancy, affection) upon him, as willingly pouring forth his life for our ſalvation; laſtly, in motions of enlarged good-will and charity toward all our brethren for his ſake, in obedience to his will, and in imitation of him; ſuch like duties ſhould attend our participation of this holy Sacrament.

3. The effects of having duly performed which, ſhould appear in the practice of thoſe duties, which are conſequent thereon; being ſuch as theſe; An increaſe of all pious inclinations and affections, expreſſing themſelves in a real amendment of our lives, and producing more goodly fruits of obedience; the thorough digeſtion of that ſpiritual nouriſhment by our becoming more faſtly knit to our Saviour by higher degrees of faith and love; the maintaining a more lively ſenſe of his ſuperabundant goodneſs; the cheriſhing thoſe influences of grace, which deſcend upon our hearts in this communion, and improving them to nearer degrees of perfection in all piety and vertue; a watchfull care and endeavour in our lives to approve our ſelves in ſome meaſure worthy of that great honour and favour, which God hath vouchſafed us in admitting us to ſo near approaches to himſelf; an earneſt purſuance of the reſolutions, performance of the vows, making good the engagements; which in ſo ſolemn a manner, upon ſo great an occaſion we made, and offered up unto our God and Saviour; finally, the conſidering, that by the breach of ſuch reſolutions, by the violation of ſuch engagements, our ſins receiving ſo mighty aggravation of vain inconſtancy and wicked perfidiouſneſs, our guilt will hugely be increaſed; our ſouls relapſing into ſo grievous diſtemper, our ſpiritual ſtrength will be exceedingly impaired; conſequently hence our true comforts will be abated, our beſt hopes will be ſhaken, our eternal ſtate will be deſperately endangered.

There is one duty which I ſhould not forbear to touch, concerning this Sacrament; that is, Our gladly embracing any opportunity preſented of communicating therein; the doing ſo, being not only our duty, but a great aid and inſtrument of piety; the neglecting it a grievous ſin, and productive of great miſchiefs to us.

The Primitive Chriſtians did very frequently uſe it, partaking therein, as it ſeems at every time of their meeting for God's ſervice; it is ſaid of them by Saint Luke, that They continued ſtedfaſtly in the Apoſtles doctrine and communion, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers; and, when you meet together, it is not (as according to the intent and duty of meeting it ſhould be) to eat the Lord's Supper (ſaith Saint Paul:) And Juſtin Martyr in his ſecond Apology, deſcribing the religious Service of God in their Aſſemblies, mentioneth it as a conſtant part thereof; and Epiphanius reporteth it a cuſtom in the Church, derived from Apoſtolical Inſtitution, to celebrate the Euchariſt thrice every week, that is, ſo often as they did meet to pray and praiſe God; which practice may well be conceived a great means of kindling and preſerving in them that holy fervour of piety, which they ſo illuſtriouſly expreſſed in their converſation; and in their gladſome ſuffering for Chriſt's ſake: and the remitting of that frequency, as it is certainly a ſign and an effect, ſo in part it may poſſibly be reckoned a cauſe of the degeneracy of Chriſtian practice, into that great coldneſs and ſlackneſs which afterward did ſeize upon it, and now doth apparently keep it in a languiſhing and half-dying ſtate.

Acts 2. 42.

1 Cor. 10. 20.

The rarer occaſions therefore we now have of performing this duty, (the which indeed was always eſteemed the principal office of God's Service) of enjoying this benefit, (the being deprived whereof, was alſo deemed the greateſt puniſhment and infelicity that could arrive to a Chriſtian) the more ready we ſhould be to embrace them. If we dread God's diſpleaſure, if we value our Lord and his benefits, if we tender the life, health and welfare of our ſouls, we ſhall not neglect it; for how can we but extremely offend God by ſo extreme rudeneſs, that when he kindly invites us to his Table, we are averſe from coming thither, or utterly refuſe it? That when he calleth us into his preſence, we run from him; that when he, with his own hand, offereth us ineſtimable mercies and bleſſings, we reject them? It is not only the breach of God's command, who enjoined us to doe this, but a direct contempt of his favour and goodneſs, moſt clearly and largely exhibited in this office. And how can we bear any regard to our Lord, or be any-wiſe ſenſible of his gracious performances in our behalf, if we are unwilling to join in thankfull and joyfull commemoration of them? How little do we love our own Souls, if we ſuffer them to pine and ſtarve for want of that Food, which God here diſpenſeth for their ſuſtenance and comfort? if we bereave them of enjoying ſo high a privilege, ſo ineſtimable a benefit, ſo incomparable pleaſures as are to be found and felt in this ſervice, or do ſpring and flow from it? what reaſonable excuſe can we frame for ſuch neglect? are we otherwiſe employed? What buſineſs can there be more important, than ſerving God, and ſaving our own ſouls? Is it wiſdom, in purſuance of any the greateſt affair here, to diſregard the principal concern of our ſouls? Do we think our ſelves unfit and unworthy to appear in God's preſence? But is any man unworthy to obey God's commands? Is any man unfit to implore and partake of God's mercy, if he be not unwilling to do it? What unworthineſs ſhould hinder us from remembring our Lord's exceſſive charity towards us, and thanking him for it? from praying for his grace; from reſolving to amend our lives? Muſt we, becauſe we are unworthy, continue ſo ſtill, by ſhunning the means of correcting and curing us? Muſt we encreaſe our unworthineſs, by tranſgreſſing our duty? If we eſteem things well, the conſcience of our ſinfulneſs ſhould rather drive us to it, as to our medicine, than detain us from it. There is no man indeed, who muſt not conceive and confeſs himſelf unworthy; therefore muſt no man come thither at God's call? If we have a ſenſe of our ſins, and a mind to leave them; if we have a ſenſe of God's goodneſs, and a heart to thank him for it; we are ſo worthy, that we ſhall be kindly received there, and graciouſly rewarded. If we will not take a little care to work theſe diſpoſitions in us, we are indeed unworthy; but the being ſo, from our own perverſe negligence, is a bad excuſe for the neglect of our duty. In fine, I dare ſay, that he, who with an honeſt meaning (although with an imperfect devotion) doth addreſs himſelf to the performance of this duty, is far more excuſable, than he that upon whatever ſcore declineth it; no ſcrupulous ſhineſs can ward us from blame; what then ſhall we ſay, if ſupine ſloth, or profane contempt, are the cauſes of ſuch neglect?

Mens deficit, quam non recepta Euchariſtia erigit & accendit. Cyp. Ep. 54.

Ὥσπερ γὰρ τὸ ὡς ἔτυχε προσιὲν κίνδυνος, οὕτω τὸ μὴ κοινονεῖν τῶν μυστικῶν δείπνων ἐκείνων λιμὸς καὶ θάνατος. Ἅυτη γὰρ ἡ τράπεζα τῆς ψυχῆς ἡμῶν τὰ νεῦρα, τῆς διανοίας ὁ σύνδεσμος, τῆς παῤῥησίας ἡ ὑπόθεσις, ἡ ἐλπὶς, ἡ σωτηρία, τὸ φῶς, ἡ ζωή. Chryſ. in 1 Cor. Or. 24.

Thus having briefly diſpatched the conſiderations that offered themſelves upon theſe Subjects, I ſhall conclude all with prayer to Almighty God, that we by his grace and help, believing rightly, ſtrongly, conſtantly and finally; being frequent and fervent in prayer, and all pious devotion, ſincerely obeying all God's Commandments; continuing orderly, dutifull and worthy members of Chriſt's Church, growing continually in grace, by the worthy participation of the holy Sacraments, may obtain the end of our faith, the ſucceſs of our prayers, the reward of our obedience, the continuance in that holy ſociety, the perfect conſummation of grace in the poſſeſſion of eternal joy, glory and bliſs; which God in his infinite mercy grant to us, for our bleſſed Saviour's ſake; to whom be all glory and praiſe for ever and ever. Amen.

A

A TABLE
OF
THINGS, or the Chief Matters contained in the Thirty two SERMONS, and the EXPOSITION on the Lord's Prayer, the Creed, and Decalogue, &c.

In the Firſt VOLUME.

A.

Advice, Opportunity in giving it to be regarded, 7. Farther Directions to be obſerved therein, 273.
Affairs of others, who may meddle in them, 265.
Affections govern'd by Religion, 5.
Afflictions ſupportable from Religion, 3.
Angels, Guardians of good men, 35, 57 421.
Antoninus, his opinion of God and his Providence, 34.
Atheiſts, their Folly, 170.

B.

Baptiſm, the Jews admitted no perſons into their Religion without Baptiſm, 657.
Baptiſm, a Myſtery, and why ſo ſtyled, 658. A repreſentation of the Reſurrection, 660.
Biſhops, their Dignity, 146.
Blaſpheme, the import of the word, 205.

C.

Cenſuring and Judging, to whom allowed, 250. The Impiety, Impertinence and Uncharitableneſs of raſh Cenſures, 259. v. Detraction.
Charity, the Neceſſity and Excellence thereof, 263, 301, 305. Poſſibility of the practice, 225, 226. Power thereof and extent, 305, 318. The nature, properties and acts thereof, 323, &c. Arguments to it, 338, &c.
Charity to the Poor, the Duty and Reward thereof, 383.
Chriſt's Paſſion and Sufferings, 423. The ſame lively repreſented in the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, 663.
Chryſippus, notatur, 43.
Clergy, v. Prieſts.
Commendation of a man's ſelf, when lawfull, 152.
Conſcience: A good Conſcience, the excellence thereof, and how attained, 4, 24.
Conſcience, the great ſupport of ſociety, 194.
Content, to be found in Religion, 28, &c.
Conteſts and Contentions, how to be managed, and who may interpoſe in them, 276.
Covetouſneſs, a cauſe of Self-love, 320.
Covetouſneſs, the ſin and miſchiefs thereof, 402.
Creed, The Apoſtles. A Large and full Expoſition of it, 443, to 609.
Cuſtoms. Innocent Cuſtoms of the place where we live to be obſerved, 363, 364.

D.

Decalogue. For whom primarily inſtituted, 623. Obligation thereof on Chriſtians, & in ſeq. 624.
Decalogue, a Large Expoſition of it, from 623, to 655.
Detraction, the Character and Cauſes thereof, 249, 250, &c.
Devotion, how to be performed, 193.

E.

Eccleſiaſtical Perſons, v. Prieſts.
Enemies, Love of them required, 366.
Epicureans. Falſe Principles of theirs refuted, 29.
Epicurus, his Opinion of beſtowing benefits, 367.
Errour, the Miſchiefs of it, 2.
The Euchariſt, 662.

Events, their ſtrangeneſs, ſeaſonableneſs, ſuddenneſs, &c. Arguments of a ſpecial Divine Providence, 136, 137.

Evil-ſpeaking, 204.

Example. Not to imitate good Example, the greateſt Ingratitude, 156.

F.

Father. The Import of the Name when attributed to God, 612.

Fear of God promoted by Belief of his Providence, 140.

Friendſhip obtained by the Practice of Religion, 36.

G.

GOD. What Notions to have of his Perfections, 44. How to be worſhipped, 45. Our great Obligation to Him, 92, &c. Not peremptorily to conclude concerning the determinate Reaſons of his Actions, 151.

Godlineſs, the Profitableneſs thereof, 11, 23.

Government, ſupported by Religion, 155. alſo maintained by the decent Circumſtances which attend it, 153.

H.

Happineſs attained by Religion, 32.

Hope, 2.

Honour in Religion, 17.

Honour. The Security, Uſefulneſs, and natural Deſire thereof, 37, &c.

Honouring God, the Reward thereof, 37, 53.

Humility taught by Religion, 14. Learnt from conſideration of Chriſt's Sufferings, 434.

I.

Idolatry, the Original, Unreaſonableneſs and Danger thereof, 629. Expreſly forbidden, 636.

Jehovah. The Title given not only to God, but alſo to Chriſt in Scripture, 625.

Jeſting, Limitations thereof, 176.

Jews, their Uncharitableneſs and Inhumane temper, 370.

Images, Worſhip thereof contrary to Reaſon, Scripture and Antiquity, 631, &c.

Ingratitude puniſhed by the Perſians, 109.

Iniquities of the Fathers puniſhed in their Poſterity, 634.

Joy excited by Belief of Divine Providence, 142.

Judges, the Nature of their Office and Place, 252, 253.

K.

Kings, the Authority of their Example, 47. The Duty of Praying for them, and Practice of the Church herein, 111, 125.

Knowledge learnt in Religion, 19.

L.

Laws. Humane Laws, ſtrict Obedience due to them, 316. The Miſchiefs ariſing from the Violation of them, 364.

Life. Long Life, to whom promiſed in Scripture, 646.

Light, Benefits thereof, 23.

Lord's Prayer, a full Expoſition of it, from 609, to 623.

Love, the Authority and Excellence thereof, 211.

Love deſcribed according to its eſſential Properties, 283.

Love of God, the Properties thereof, 284. wrought by attentive Conſideration of the Divine Perfections, 293. by meditation on God's Works and Actions, 295. and by reflecting on Perſonal Benefits received, 296.

Love of God to mankind apparent from the tendency of his Laws, 304.

Love of our Neighbour, 303. The Nature and Meaſure of it, 306. Examples hereof, 313, 314.

Love of one another, the Nature and Properties of it, 323, &c. The ſame Duty enforced by divers Arguments, 336, 337.

Lying, the Nature, Miſchiefs and Follies of it, 233.

M.

Magiſtrates; their Power to inflict Puniſhments, 647.

Melchiſedeck, the firſt Prieſt mentioned in Scripture, 155.

Miniſters, v. Prieſts.

Miracles; why the Prophets and Apoſtles dignified with the Power of working of them, 159.

Moderation recommended, 211.

Μυςήριον rendered by the ancienteſt Tranſlatours of the Bible by the word Sacrament, 656.

N.

Neighbour; Directions for loving him as our ſelves, 307. The manifold Obligations to this Duty, 309. That it is practicable, 312, 315. Arguments to that end, 323, 338, 652.

O.

Oaths; the Abuſe thereof, 172. how ſacred they are, ibid. repreſented in Scripture as a ſpecial part of Religious Worſhip, 191.
Oaths. Raſh Oaths, no Temptation to them, 203.
Oaths; their Limitation, 190. Nature, 200. the Sin of Abuſe of them, ibid. Directions about them, 627.
Oaths. Raſh Oaths; The Miſchiefs they bring on Society and Government, 193. commonly lead to unlawfull Practices, 196. and to Undertakings detrimental to a man's ſelf, ibid. the Diſparagement they bring on them that uſe them, 199. their Impertinence in Diſcourſe, 200. an uncivil practice, 201. they proceed from Paſſion, Conceit, Levity, Stupidity, Humour, want of Reverence to God, 202.
Oaths adjudged by Heathens to be the greateſt Obligation of Conſcience, 194.
Opportunity, to be obſerved in Action, and is beſt taught by Religion, 7.
Original ſin, 658.

P.

Parents; the Duty owing to them, 644.
Paſſover, why inſtituted, 662.
Peace, the great advantages thereof, 369. how attained, 374, 375.
Peaceable temper and behaviour, and whence learnt, 351.
Perfection; the Notion thereof explained as applied to man in Scripture, 164.
Perjury introduced by raſh and vain Swearing, 195.
Pleaſures conquered by Practice of Religion, 6, 33.
Pleaſures in Religion, 18.
Power obtained by Religion, 18.
Poor; The Duty and Reward of Charity to them, 383.
Poverty; the Diſadvantages and Contempt accompanying it, 158, 159.
Pragmaticalneſs, how avoided, 280.
Prayer. Arguments to the Duty of Prayer, 7, 63, 64, 78. Efficacy and Nature thereof, 122, 137, 609. the Prevalency hereof towards the love of God and of our Neighbour, 320. and to attain Peace, 299, 300. Opportunity and Conſtancy herein required, 67, 68, 73, 74.
Prieſt doth not import a Jewiſh Sacrificer, 150.
Prieſts, their Maintenance, 97. the Titles conferr'd on them in Scripture, 152, 153. the Reſpect paid them by all Nations, 155, 156. the Order of them related in Scripture according to their Antiquity, 155. their Authority among the Jews, 160. the Love they obtained in the firſt Ages of the Church, 161. their perſonal Qualities, 159. Employment, 160. Condition in the World engages Protection, 162.
Prieſts mentioned in the 132 Pſalm, v. 16. are the Prieſts and Paſtours of the Chriſtian Church, 147.
Prieſthood, the Excellence thereof, 156.
Profit, the Power of it 11. conſiſtent with Religion, ibid.
Proſperity attained by Religion, 16, 21.
Providence; Belief thereof makes all Conditions pleaſant, 3, 23.
Providence ſeen in Events, 129. whence objected againſt, 130.
Providence; Dependence thereon the beſt Preſervative of Government, 124. Belief thereof engages to mutual Love, 321.
Puniſhment; Deſign thereof Reformation, 130.
Puniſhments according to Damaſcene, 138.

Q.

Quietneſs; the Duty and Arguments to it, 145.

R.

Reaſon; the proper Uſe and Excellence of it, 188.
Regeneration, 659.
Religion; wherein it conſiſts, 9. Advantages of it, 1, 11, 14. Promiſes of this Life to it, 21. the Miſchiefs in the want thereof, 24, 26. Danger of the Contempt of it, 171.
Religion; the Excellence and Veneration thereof, 182.
Religious man; Deſcription of him, 59.
Reproof; who may uſe it, and when, 207. the Rules to be obſerved in it, 40.
Reputation; the Value ſet upon it, 40. gained by Religion, 5, 17, 24, 50, 58.
Reputation of others not to be detracted from, 651.
Reſolution; want thereof often makes things ſeem impoſſible that are poſſible, 317.
Reſolution gained by practice of Religion, 55.
Reſurrection repreſented by Baptiſm, 660.
Revenge; the Miſeries attending it, 369.
Riches; their Authority, 158. their proper Uſe, 411.

Rites in the Chriſtian Religion ſolemn, ſignificant, proper and uſefull, 655.
Romiſh Religion; the Character of it, 145.

S.

Sabbath; Inſtitution and End thereof, 637.
Sacrifice, 90.
Sacrifice called Tamidh among the Jews, 72.
Sacraments of the Chriſtian Religion, their Inſtitution and Character, 655.
Sacraments of the Chriſtian Religion, whence called Myſteries, 656.
Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, wherein differing from the Jewiſh Paſſover, 662.
Sacrament of the Lord's Supper; the Preparation for it, 665 Duty after receiving thereof, 666. Frequency of receiving among the Primitive Chriſtians, 667.
Safety obtained by Religion, 4, 6, 56.
Salvation. The Term explained, 150.
Seneca not free from Ambition, 39.
Self-love; how deſtroyed in us, 321, 351.
Slander, 651. the Nature and miſchievous Conſequences of it, 219, 230.
Slander and Detraction; how they differ, 249.
Sin; the Folly thereof, 230.
Society advanced by Chriſtian Religion, 8, 36, 322.
Society; the Benefits and Ends thereof, 368.
Solitude gratefull to good men, 36.
Soul's Immortality, 27.
Soul; Neceſſity of caring for it, 73.
Speech; not offending in it, an high inſtance of ſolid Goodneſs, 164.
Speech; the Extent and proper Uſe of it, 167, 203, 237.
Succeſs in Religion, 61.
Swearing, v. Oaths.

T.

Temptation; the Import of the word in Scripture, 619.
Thankſgiving; the Duty thereof, 83. Practice among the Gentiles, 90. Time when to be performed 95.
Tongue; Judgment and Circumſpection neceſſary to govern it, 167.
Tongue; the Excellence of not offending with it, 164. want of Government thereof, whence; and Miſchiefs accompanying it, 169.
Tongue; the proper uſe of it, 206, 237.
Tranquility in Religion, 30.
Truth; The Excellence and Delight thereof, 1. Ways thereof are plain, 54, 55.

V.

Vertue and Vice; their Affinity, 263.
Vnction. The Holy Unction or Chriſm annexed by the ancient Chriſtians to Baptiſm, 659.

W.

WAR; the Miſchiefs thereof, 369, 378.
Waſhings among the Jews, 657.
Will; Reſignation thereof, 369, 378. learnt from Conſideration of Chriſt's Sufferings, 439.
Wiſdom; A Life led according to it brings Delight and Content, 1.
Word; Not offending in it, an Evidence of a high pitch of Vertue, 164.
Words and Things frequently of like ſignification in Scripture, 624.
Worſhip of God; how to be performed, 193.
Worſhip. Publick worſhip of God, 74, 609. Solemn times thereof to be obſerved, 642.

The End of the Table to the Thirty two Sermons, &c.
In the Firſt Volume.

A TREATISE OF THE POPE'S SUPREMACY

To which is added

A DISCOURSE Concerning the Unity of the Church.

By ISAAC BARROW, D. D. Late Maſter of Trinity College in Cambridge, and one of His MAJESTY'S Chaplains in Ordinary.

Publiſhed by His Grace Dr. JOHN TILLOTSON, Late Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

The Fourth Edition Corrected.
With a TABLE to the Whole.

LONDON,
Printed for Brabazon Aylmer, at the Three Pigeons, againſt the Royal Exchange in Cornhill. 1700.

UMI

A TREATISE
OF THE
POPES SUPREMACY.

To which is added
A DISCOURSE
Concerning the Unity of the Church.

By ISAAC BARROW, D.D.
Master of Trinity College in Cambridge, and one of His MAJESTY's Chaplains in Ordinary.

Publish'd by his Grace Dr. JOHN TILLOTSON, late Lord Archbishop of Canterbury.

The Fourth Edition Corrected.
With a TABLE to the Whole.

LONDON:
Printed for Brabazon Aylmer at the Three Pigeons against the Royal Exchange in Cornhill. 1700.

TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE HENEAGE
Earl of Nottingham, Lord High CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND,
And One of His MAJESTY's moſt Honourable PRIVY COUNCIL;

THOMAS BARROW, the Author's Father,
Humbly Dedicateth this TREATISE.

THE PUBLISHER TO THE READER.

THIS excellent and elaborate Treatiſe of the Pope's Supremacy, which I here preſent thee withall, the learned Author of it upon his Death-bed gave me a particular permiſſion to publiſh; with this modeſt Character of it, That he hoped it was indifferent perfect, though not altogether as he intended it, if God had granted him longer life. He deſigned indeed to have tranſcribed it again, and to have fill'd up thoſe many Spaces which were purpoſely left in it, for the farther confirmation and illuſtration of ſeveral things by more Teſtimonies and Inſtances, which probably he had in his thoughts: And it would certainly have added much to the beauty and perfection of this Work, had it pleaſed God that he had lived to finiſh it to his mind, and to have given it his laſt hand.

However, as it is, it is not only a juſt but an admirable Diſcourſe upon this Subject; which many others have handled before, but he hath exhauſted it: inſomuch that no Argument of moment, nay hardly any Conſideration properly belonging to it, hath eſcaped his large and comprehenſive Mind. He hath ſaid enough to ſilence the Controverſy for ever, and to deter all wiſe Men, of both Sides, from medling any farther with it.

And I dare ſay, that whoever ſhall carefully peruſe this Treatiſe will find, that this Point of the Pope's Supremacy, (upon which Bellarmine hath the confidence to ſay, the whole of Chriſtianity depends) is not only an indefenſible, but an impudent Cauſe, as ever was undertaken by learned Pens. And nothing could have kept it ſo long from becoming ridiculous in the Judgment of Mankind, but its being ſo ſtrongly ſupported by a wordly Intereſt. For there is not one tolerable Argument for it, and there are a thouſand invincible Reaſons againſt it. There is neither from Scripture, nor Reaſon, nor Antiquity, any evidence of it; The paſt and the preſent ſtate of Chriſtendom, the Hiſtories and Records of all Ages, are a perpetual Demonſtration againſt it: And there is no other ground in the whole World for it, but that now of a long time it hath been by the Pope's Janizaries boldly aſſerted, and ſtiffly contended for without reaſon. So that any one might with as much colour and evidence of truth maintain, that the Grand Seignior is of right, and for many Ages hath been acknowledg'd Sovereign of the whole World, as that the Biſhop of Rome is of right, and in all Ages from the beginning of Chriſtianity hath been own'd to be the Univerſal Monarch and Head of the Chriſtian Church.

To this Treatiſe of The Pope's Supremacy I have, for the affinity of the Argument, added by way of Appendix another Diſcourſe of the ſame Authot's concerning The Unity of the Church; which he ſo explains as quite to take away the neceſſity of a Viſible Head over the whole Church for the preſervation of its Unity, which is the only ſpecious, but yet a very remote pretence for the Pope's Supremacy: For if a Viſible Monarch of the Church were granted neceſſary, many things more muſt be ſuppoſed, (which neither yet are, nor ever can be proved) to make the Biſhop of Rome the Man.

The Teſtimonies relating to both Parts, were very few of them tranſlated by the Author; which he certainly intended, having left Spaces for it, and is ſince done with great Care by two of his Worthy and Learned Friends of his own College.

This is all the Advertiſement I thought neceſſary.

J. Tillotſon.

THE CONTENTS.

THE Introduction. Page 1.

The Suppoſitions upon which the Pope's Supremacy is grounded. p. 26.

I. That Saint Peter had a Primacy over the Apoſtles. p. 27.

II. That Saint Peter's Primacy, with its Rights and Prerogatives, was not perſonal, but derivable to his Succeſſors. p. 72.

III. That Saint Peter was Biſhop of Rome. p. 78.

IV. That Saint Peter did continue Biſhop of Rome after his tranſlation, and was ſo at his deceaſe. p. 83.

V. That the Biſhops of Rome (according to God's inſtitution, and by original right derived thence) ſhould have an Univerſal Supremacy and Juriſdiction over the Chriſtian Church. p. 90.

VI. That in fact the Roman Biſhops continually from Saint Peter's time have enjoyed and exerciſed this Sovereign Power. p. 181.

VII. That this Power is indefectible and unalterable. p. 252.

A Diſcourſe of the Unity of the Church. p. 271

IMPRIMATUR,

Geo. Thop, R$^{mo.}$ in Chriſto Patri
& D^{no} D^{no} Gulielmo, Archiep.
Cant. à Sacris Domeſticis.

Ex Ædibus Lamb.
Feb. 27. 167$^{8}_{9}$

A TREATISE
OF THE Pope's Supremacy.

INTRODUCTION.

§ I. THE Roman Party doth much glory in Unity and Certainty of Doctrine, as things peculiar to them, and which no other Men have any means to attain: Yet about divers matters of notable conſideration, in what they agree, or of what they are certain, it is hard to deſcry.

They pretend it very needful that Controverſies ſhould be decided, and that they have a ſpecial knack of doing it: Yet do many Controverſies of great weight and conſequence ſtick on their hands unreſolved, many Points reſt in great doubt and debate among them.

The κύριαι δόξαι of the Roman Sect (concerning Doctrine, Practice, Laws and Cuſtoms of Diſcipline, Rites and Ceremonies) are of divers ſorts, or built on divers grounds. 1. Some eſtabliſhed by (pretended) general Synods. 2. Some founded on Decrees of Popes. 3. Some entertained as upon Tradition, Cuſtom, common Agreement. 4. Some which their eminent Divines or Schoolmen do commonly embrace. 5. Some prevailing by the favour of the Roman Court, and its zealous Dependents.

Hence it is very difficult to know wherein their Religion conſiſteth: for thoſe Grounds divers times ſeem to claſh, and accordingly their Divines (ſome building on theſe, ſome on others) diſagree.

This being ſo in many Points of importance, is ſo particularly in this.

For inſtance, The Head of their Church (as they call it) is, one would think, a Subject about which they ſhould thoroughly conſent, and which they by this time ſhould have cleared from all diſputes; ſo that (ſo far as their deciſive faculty goeth) we might be aſſured wherein his Authority conſiſteth, and how far it doth extend; ſeeing the reſolution of that Point ſo nearly toucheth the heart of Religion, the Faith and Practice of all Chriſtians, the good of the Church, and peace of the World; ſeeing that no one Queſtion (perhaps not all Queſtions together) hath created ſo many tragical Diſturbances in Chriſtendom, as that concerning the bounds of Papal Authority.

Agitur de ſumma rei Chriſtianæ. Bell. Præf. de Rom. Pont. Upon this one Point the very ſum and ſubſtance of Chriſtianity depends.

This diſagreement of the Roman Doctors about the nature and extent of Papal Authority is a ſhrewd prejudice againſt it. If a Man ſhould ſue for a piece of Land, and his Advocates (the notableſt could be had, and well payed) could not find where it lieth, how it is butted and bounded, from whom it was conveyed to him—one would be very apt to ſuſpect his Title. If God had inſtituted ſuch an Office, it is highly probable, we might ſatisfactorily know what the Nature and uſe of it were: the Patents and Charters for it would declare it.

Yet for reſolution in this great Caſe we are left to ſeek; they not having either the will, or the courage, or the power to determine it. This inſuperable Problem hath baffled all their infallible methods of deciding Controverſies; their Traditions blundring, their Synods claſhing, their Divines wrangling endleſly about what kind of thing the Pope is, and what Power he rightly may claim.

There is (ſaith a great Divine among them) ſo much controverſy about the plenitude of Eccleſiaſtical Power, and to what things it may extend it ſelf, that few things in that matter are ſecure ——

Tanta eſt inter Doctores controverſia de plenitudine Eccleſiaſticæ poteſtatis, & ad quæ ſe extendat, ut pauca ſint in ea materia ſecura——Almain. de Auct. Eccl. cap. 3.

This is a plain argument of the impotency of the Pope's power in judging and deciding Controverſies, or of his Cauſe in this matter; that he cannot define a Point ſo nearly concerning him, and which he ſo much deſireth an Agreement in; that he cannot ſettle his own Claim out of doubt; that all his Authority cannot ſecure it ſelf from conteſt.

So indeed it is, that no Spells can allay ſome Spirits; and where Intereſts are irreconcilable, Opinions will be ſo.

Some Points are ſo tough and ſo touchy, that no-body dare meddle with them, fearing that their reſolution will fail of ſucceſs, and ſubmiſſion. Hence even the anathematizing Definers of Trent (the boldeſt Undertakers to decide Controverſies that ever were) did wave this Point; the Legates of the Pope being injoined, to advertiſe, That they ſhould not for any cauſe whatever come to diſpute about the Pope's Authority.

—di' avertire, Che non ſi venga mai per qual cauſa ſi ſia alla diſputa dell Autorita di Papa. Concil. Trid. lib. 2. p. 159.

It was indeed wiſely done of them to decline this Queſtion, their Authority not being ſtrong enough to bear the weight of a Deciſion in favour of the Roman See, againſt which they could do nothing,) according to its Pretences; as appeareth by one clear inſtance. For whereas that Council took upon it incidentally to enact, that any Prince ſhould be excommunicate, and deprived of the dominion of any City or Place, where he ſhould permit a Duel to be fought; the Prelates of France in the Convention of Orders, Anno 1595. did declare againſt that Decree, as infringing their King's Authority.

Hic articulus eſt contra authoritatem Regis, qui non poteſt privari ſuo dominio temporali, reſpectu cujus nullum ſuperiorem recognoſcit. Bochel. l. 5. tit. 20. c. 45.
This Article is againſt the Authority of the King; who cannot be deprived of his Temporal Dominion, wherein he acknowledges no Superior.

It was therefore adviſedly done not to meddle with ſo ticklifh a point. But in the mean time their Policy ſeemeth greater than their Charity; which might have inclined them not to leave the World in darkneſs and doubt, and unreſolved in a Point of ſo main importance; (as indeed they did in others of no ſmall conſequence, diſputed among their Divines with obſtinate Heat, viz. The Divine Right of Biſhops, the Neceſſity of Reſidence, the immaculate Conception, &c.)

The Opinions therefore among them concerning the Pope's Authority, as they have been, ſo they are, and in likelihood may continue, very different.

§. II. There

§.II. There are among them thoſe who aſcribe to the Pope an univerſal, abſolute and boundleſs Empire over all Perſons indifferently, and in all Matters; conferred and ſettled on him by Divine immutable ſanction: ſo that all Men of whatever degree are obliged in conſcience to believe whatever he doth authoritatively dictate, and to obey whatever he doth preſcribe. So that if Princes themſelves do refuſe obedience to his will, he may excommunicate them, caſhier them, depoſe them, extirpate them. If he chargeth us to hold no Communion with our Prince, to renounce our Allegiance to him, to abandon, oppoſe and perſecute him even to death, we may without ſcruple, we muſt in duty obey. If he doth interdict whole Nations from the exerciſe of God's Worſhip and Service, they muſt comply therein. So that, according to their conceits, he is in effect Sovereign Lord of all the World; and ſuperiour, even in Temporal or Civil matters, unto all Kings and Princes.

It is notorious, that many Canoniſts (if not moſt) and many Divines of that Party do maintain this Doctrine; affirming, that all the Power of Chriſt (the Lord of Lords, and King of Kings, to whom all Power in Heaven and Earth doth appertain) is imparted to the Pope, as to his Vice-gerent.

Prima ſententia eſt, ſummum Pontificem jure divino habere pleniſſimam poteſtatem in univerſum orbem terrarum, tam in rebus Eccleſiaſticis quam Civilibus. Ita docent Aug. Triumphus, Alvarus Pelagius, Panormitanus, Hoſtienſis, Silveſter, & alii non pauci. Bell. 5. 1.

The firſt Opinion is, that the Pope hath a moſt full Power over the whole World, both in Eccleſiaſtical and Civil affairs. This is the Doctrine of Aug. Triumphus, &c. and of many others.

This is the Doctrine which almoſt 400 years ago Auguſtinus Triumphus, in his egregious Work concerning Eccleſiaſtical Power, did teach; attributing to the Pope an incomprehenſible and infinite Power; becauſe great is the Lord, and great is his Power, and of his Greatneſs there is no end.

Scripſit egregiam ſummam de poteſtate Eccleſiæ. Bell. de Script. An. 1301. Error eſt, non credere Pontificem Rom. Univerſalis Eccleſiæ Paſtorem, Petri Succeſſorem, & Chriſti Vicarium, ſupra temporalia & ſpiritualia Univerſalem non habere Primatum; in quem quandoq; multi labuntur, dictæ poteſtatis ignorantiâ; quæ cùm ſit infinita, eò quòd magnus eſt Dominus, & magna vertus ejus, & magnitudinis ejus non eſt finis, omnis creatus intellectus in ejus perſcrutatione invenitur deficere. Aug. Triumph. de Poteſt. Eccl. in præf. ad P. Joh. XXII.

This is the Doctrine which the leading Theologue of their Sect, their Angelical Doctor, doth affirm, both directly, ſaying, that in the Pope is the top of both Powers; and by plain conſequence, aſſerting, that when any one is denounced excommunicate for Apoſtaſy, his Subjects are immediately freed from his dominion, and their Oath of Allegiance to him.

Thomas in fine Secun. Sent. dicit in Papa eſſe apicem utriuſq; Poteſtatis. Bell. 5. 1. Quum quis per ſententiam denunciatur propter Apoſtaſiam excommunicatus, ipſo facto ejus ſubditi à dominio, & juramento fidelitatis ejus liberati ſunt. Th. 2. Secund. qu. 12. art. 2.

This the ſame Thomas (or an Author paſſing under his name, in his Book touching the Rule of Princes,) doth teach, affirming, that the Pope, as Supreme King of all the World, may impoſe taxes on all Chriſtians, and deſtroy Towns and Caſtles for the preſervation of Chriſtianity.

S. Thomas (in lib. 3. de Regim. Princ. cap. 10. & 19.) affirmat ſummum Pontificem jure divino habere ſpiritualem & temporalem Poteſtatem, ut ſupremum totius mundi Regem, adeò ut etiam taleas omnibus Chriſtianis poſſit imponere, & civitates ac caſtra deſtruere pro conſervatione Chriſtianitatis. Bell. 5. 5.

This (as Card. Zabarell near 300 years ago telleth us) is the Doctrine which, for a long time, thoſe who would pleaſe Popes did perſuade them, that they could do all things, whatever they pleaſed; yea and things unlawful; and ſo could do more than God.

Quæ jura ſunt notanda, quia malè conſiderata ſunt per multos aſſentatores, qui voluerunt placere Pontificibus, per multa retro tempora, & uſq; ad hodierna ſuaſerunt eis, quòd omnia poſſent; & ſic quòd facerent quicquid liberet, etiam illicita, & ſic plus quàm Deus. Zab. de Shiſm.

According to this Doctrine then current at Rome, in the laſt Lateran Great Synod, under the Pope's noſe and in his ear, one Biſhop ſtyled him Prince of the World; another Orator called him King of Kings, and Orbis Princeps, Epiſc. Spal. Seſſ. 1. p. 24.

Monarch of the Earth.; another great Prelate ſaid of him, that he had all Power above all Powers both of Heaven and Earth. And the ſame rouſed up Pope Leo X. in theſe brave terms; Snatch up therefore the two-edged ſword of Divine Power, committed to thee; and injoin, command and charge, that an univerſal Peace and Alliance be made among Chriſtians for at leaſt 10 years; and to that bind Kings in the fetters of the great King, and conſtrain Nobles by the iron manacles of Cenſures: for to thee is given all Power in Heaven and in Earth.

Regum Rex, & Orbis terrarum Monarcha, Del Rio, *Seſſ.*8. *p.*87. --- Virum, in quo erat Poteſtas ſupra omnes Poteſtates, tam cœli, quàm terræ. Epiſc. Patrac. *Seſſ.*10 *p.*132.

Arripe ergò gladium Divinæ Poteſtatis tibi creditum, bis acutum; & jube, impera, manda, ut Pax univerſalis & Colligatio per decennium inter Chriſtianos ad minus fiat; & Reges ad id in compedibus magni Regis liga, & Nobiles in manicis ferreis Cenſurarum conſtringe: quoniam tibi data eſt omnis Poteſtas in cœlo & in terra. Ibid. *p.*133.

This is the Doctrine which Baronius with a Roman confidence doth ſo often aſſert, and drive forward, ſaying, *that there can be no doubt of it, but that the Civil Principality is ſubject to the Sacerdotal: And, † that God hath made the Political Government ſubject to the Dominion of the Spiritual Church.

* *Politicum Principatum Sacerdotali eſſe ſubjectum nulla poteſt eſſe dubitatio. An.*57. §.23. † Politicum Imperium ſubjecit ſpiritualis Eccleſiæ dominio. Ib. §. 33.

§.III. From that Doctrine the Opinion in effect doth not differ, which Bellarmine voucheth for the common Opinion of Catholicks, that by reaſon of the Spiritual Power the Pope at leaſt indirectly hath a Supreme Power even in temporal matters.

Tertia ſententia media & Catholicorum communis, Pontificem ut Pontificem non habere directè & immediatè ullam temporalem poteſtatem, ſed ſolùm ſpiritualem, tamen ratione ſpiritualis habere ſaltem indirectè poteſtatem quandam, eámq; ſummam, in temporalibus. Bell.5 1.

This Opinion, ſo common, doth not, I ſay, in effect, and practical conſideration, any-wiſe differ from the former; but only in words deviſed to ſhun envy, and veil the impudence of the other Aſſertion: for the qualifications, by reaſon of the Spiritual Power, and, at leaſt indirectly, are but notional, inſignificant and illuſive in regard to practice: it importing not, if he hath in his keeping a Sovereign Power, upon what account, or in what formality he doth employ it; ſeeing that every matter is eaſily referrible to a ſpiritual account; ſeeing he is ſole Judge upon what account he doth act; ſeeing experience ſheweth, that he will ſpiritualize all his intereſts, and upon any occaſion exerciſe that pretended Authority; ſeeing it little mattereth, if he may ſtrike Princes, whether he doth it by a downright blow, or ſlantingly.

§.IV. That ſuch an univerſal and abſolute Power hath been claimed by divers Popes, ſucceſſively for many Ages, is apparent from their moſt ſolemn Declarations, and notorious Practices; whereof (beginning from later times, and riſing upward toward the ſource of this Doctrine) we ſhall repreſent ſome.

*An.*1585. The Bull of P. Sixtus V. againſt the Two Sons of wrath, Henry K. of Navarre, and the P. of Conde, beginneth thus; The Authority given to Saint Peter and his Succeſſors by the immenſe Power of the Eternal King excels all the Powers of earthly Kings and Princes. — It paſſes uncontrollable ſentence upon them all.—— And if it find any of them reſiſting God's Ordinance, it takes more ſevere vengeance of them, caſting them down from their Thrones, though never ſo puiſſant, and tumbling them down to the loweſt parts of the earth, as the Miniſters of aſpiring Lucifer. And then he proceeds to thunder againſt them, We deprive them and their poſterity for Ab immenſa æterni Regis potentia B. Petro ejúſq; Succeſſoribus tradita Auctoritas omnes terrenorum Regum & Principum ſupereminet Poteſtates—Inconcuſſa profert in omnes judicia —— Et ſi quos ordinationi Dei reſiſtentes invenit, ſeveriore hos vindictâ ulciſcitur, &, quamvìs potentiores, de ſolio dejiciens, veluti ſuperbientis Luciferi miniſtros, ad infima terræ deturbatos proſternit.—— for ever of their Dominions and Kingdoms, and accordingly he depriveth thoſe Princes of their Kingdoms and Dominions, abſolveth their Subjects from their Oaths of Allegience, and forbiddeth them to pay any Obedience to them. By the Authority of theſe preſents, we do abſolve and ſet free all perſons, as well jointly as ſeverally, from any ſuch Oath, and from all duty whatſoever in regard of Dominion, Fealty and Obedience, and do charge and forbid all and every of them, that they do not dare to obey them, or any of their Admonitions, Laws and Commands.

Dominiis, Regnis, &c. nos illos illorúmq; poſteros privamus in perpetuum.——

A Juramento hujuſmodi, ac omni prorſus Dominii, Fidelitatis & Obſequii debito, illos omnes tam universè quàm ſingulatim auctoritate præſentium abſolvimus & liberamus; præcipimúſque & interdicimus eis univerſis & ſingulis, nè illis eorúmque monitis, legibus & mandatis audeant obedire.

Bulla Sixti V. Contra Henr. Navarr. R. &c.

P. Pius V. (one of the Holieſt Popes of the laſt ſtamp, who hardly hath An. 1570. ſcaped Canonization until now) beginneth his Bull againſt our Q. Elizabeth in theſe words; He that reigneth on high, to whom is given all Power in Heaven and in Earth, hath committed the one H. Catholick and Apoſtolick Church, out of which there is no Salvation, to one alone on earth, namely to Peter Prince of the Apoſtles, and to the Roman Pontife, Succeſſor of Peter, to be governed with a plenitude of Power: This one he hath conſtituted Prince over all Nations, and all Kingdoms, that he might pluck up, deſtroy, diſſipate, ruinate, plant and build.—— And in the ſame Bull he declares, that he thereby deprives the Queen of her pretended Right to the Kingdom, and of all Dominion, Dignity and Privilege whatſoever; and abſolves all the Nobles, Subjects and People of the Kingdom, and whoever elſe have ſworn to her, from their Oath, and all duty whatſoever, in regard of Dominion, Fidelity and Obedience.

Pius V.——Quem mirum eſt in albo Sanctorum nondum relatum eſſe. Briet. Chr. Anno 1572.

Regnans in excelſis, cui data eſt omnis in cœlo & in terra poteſtas, unam Sanctam, Catholicam & Apoſtolicam Eccleſiam, extra quam nulla eſt Salus, uni ſoli in terris, videlicet Apoſtolorum Principi Petro, Petríq; Succeſſori Romano Pontifici, in poteſtatis plenitudine tradidit gubernandam: Hunc unum ſuper omnes gentes & omnia regna Principem conſtituit, qui evellat, deſtruat, diſſipet, diſperdat, plantet & ædificet. —— P. Pius V. in Bull. contra R. Eliz. (Cambd. Hiſt. Anno 1570.)

Ipſam prætenſo regni jure, nec non omni quocunq; dominio, dignitate privilegióq; privamus; & iterum Proceres, ſubditos, &c. Ibid.

P. Clement VI. did pretend to depoſe the Emperour Lewis IV. An. 1346.

P. Clement V. in the great Synod of Vienna, declared the Emperour An. 1311. ſubject to him, or ſtanding obliged to him by a proper Oath of Fealty.

Apoſtolica auctoritate de fratrum noſtrorum conſilio declaramus, illa juramenta prædicta fidelitatis exiſtere & cenſeri debere. Clem. lib. 2. tit. 9. Vide Conc. Vienn. p. 909.

P. Boniface VIII. hath a Decree extant in the Canon-Law running An. 1294.
thus; We declare, ſay, define, pronounce it to be of neceſſity to Salvation, for every humane Creature to be ſubject to the Romane Pontife. The which Subjection, according to this intent, reacheth all matters; for he there challengeth a double Sword, and aſſerteth to himſelf Juriſdiction over all Temporal Authorities: for, One Sword (ſaith he) muſt be under another, and the temporal Authority muſt be ſubject to the Spiritual Power--- whence if the Earthly Power doth go aſtray, it muſt be judged by the Spiritual Power. The which Aphoriſms he proveth by Scriptures admirably expounded to that purpoſe.

Subeſſe Romano Pontifici omni humanæ creaturæ declaramus, dicimus, definimus, & pronunciamus omnino eſſe de neceſſitate ſalutis. Extrav. com. lib. 1. tit. 8. cap. 1.

Oportet gladium eſſe ſub gladio, & temporalem authoritatem ſpirituali ſubjici poteſtati. Ibid.

Ergò ſi deviat terrena poteſtas, judicabitur à poteſtate ſpirituali. Ibid.

This Definition might paſs for a Rant of that boiſterous Pope, (a Man above meaſure ambitious and arrogant,) vented in his paſſion againſt K. Philip of France, if it had not the advantage (of a greater than which no Papal Decree is capable) of being expreſly confirmed by one of their General Councils; for, We (ſaith Pope Leo X. in his Bull read and paſſed in the Lateran Council) do renew and approve that H. Conſtitution, with approbation of the preſent H. Council. Accordingly Melch. Canus ſaith, that the Lateran Council did renew and approve that extravagant(indeed extravagant) Conſtitution: and Baronius ſaith of it, that all do aſſent to it, ſo that none diſſenteth, who doth not by diſcord fall from the Church.

Vir ſuper modum ambitioſus & arrogans (Binius in vita Bonif. VIII.)

Conſtitutionem ipſam, ſacro præſenti Concilio approbante, innovamus & approbamus. Concil. Lateran. Seſſ. 11. *p.*153.

Quam extravagantem renovavit & approbavit Concilium Lateranenſe ſub Leone X. Canus loc. 6 4.

Hæc Bonifacius, cui aſſentiuntur omnes, ut nullus diſcrepet, niſi qui diſſidio ab Eccleſia excidit. Baron. Anno 1053. § 14.

The Truth is, P. Boniface did not invent that Propoſition, but borrowed it from the School; for Thomas Aquinas, in his work againſt the Greeks, pretendeth to ſhew, that it is of neceſſity to Salvation to be ſubject to the Roman Pontiſe. The which Scholaſtical Aphoriſm P. Boniface turned into Law, and applied to his purpoſe of exerciſing domination over Princes; offering in virtue of it to deprive King Philip of his Kingdom.

Oſtenditur etiam quod ſubeſſe Romano Pontifici ſit de neceſſitate ſalutis. (Tho. in opuſc. contra Græcos.)

The Appendix to Mart. Pol. ſaith of P. Boniface VIII. Regem ſe Regum, Mundi Monarcham, unicum in Spiritualibus & Temporalibus Dominum promulgavit; That he openly declar'd himſelf to be King of Kings, Monarch of the World, and ſole Lord and Governour both in Spirituals and Temporals.

*An.*1245. Before him, P. Innocent IV. did hold and exemplify the ſame notion; declaring the Emperour Frederick II. his Vaſſal, and denouncing in his General Council of Lyons a ſentence of deprivation againſt him in theſe terms: We having about the foregoing and many other his wicked Miſcarriages had before a careful deliberation with our Brethren and the H. Council, ſeeing that we, although unworthy to hold the place of Jeſus Chriſt on earth, and that it was ſaid unto us in the Perſon of Saint Peter the Apoſtle, Whatever thou ſhalt bind on earth--- the ſaid Prince (who hath rendred himſelf unworthy of Empire and Kingdoms, and of all Honour and Dignity, and who for his Iniquities is caſt away by God, that he ſhould not reign or command, being bound by his Sins, and caſt away, and deprived by the Lord of all Honour and Dignity) do ſhew, denounce, and accordingly by Sentence deprive; abſolving all who are held bound by Oath of Allegiance from ſuch Oath for ever; by Apoſtolical Authority firmly prohibiting, that no Man henceforth do obey or regard him as Emperour or King; and decreeing, that whoever ſhall hereafter yield advice, or aid, or favour to him as Emperour or King, ſhall immediately lie under the band of Excommunication.

Nos itaque ſuper præmiſſis, &c. P. Innoc. IV. in Conc. Ludg.

Matt. Paris (Anno 1253.) ſaith, he deemed Kings Mancipia Papæ.

Before him, Pope Innocent the Third, (that true wonder of the World, and changer of the Age,) did affirm the Pontifical Authority ſo much to exceed the Royal Power, as the Sun doth the Moon; and applieth to the former that of the Prophet Jeremy, Ecce, conſtitui te ſuper gentes & regna — * See, I have ſet thee over the Nations and over the Kingdoms, to root out, and to pull down, and to deſtroy, and to throw down, &c.

Verè ſtupor mundi, & immutator ſeculi. Matt. Par. Anno 1217.

Ut quanta eſt inter Solem & Lunam tanta inter Pontifices & Reges differentia cognoſcatur. P. Innoc. III. in Decret. Greg. *lib.*1. *tit.*33. *cap.*6.

*Jer.1.10.

Of this Power that Pope made experiment, by depoſing the Emperour Otho IV; whom, (ſaith Naucleruſ) as rebellious to the Apoſtolical See, he firſt did ſtrike with an Anathema; then him perſevering in his obſtinacy did in a Council of Prelates held at Rome pronounce depoſed from Empire.

Imperatorem ---ut rebellem Sedi Apoſtolicæ & inobedientem anathemate primùm, deinde in pertinacia perſeverantem, in Concilio Præſulum, quod Romæ tum Innocentius celebrabat, ab Imperio depoſitum percuſſit & pronunciavit. Naucl. Anno 1212.

The which Authority was avowed by that great Council under this Pope, (the which, according to the Men of Trent, did repreſent or conſtitute the Church,) wherein it was ordain'd, that if a Temporal Lord, being required and admoniſhed by the Church, ſhould neglect to purge his Territory from Heretical filth, he ſhould by the Metropolitan and the other Comprovincial Biſhops be nooſed in the band of Excommunication; and that if he ſhould ſlight to make ſatisfaction within a year, it ſhould be ſignified to the Pope, that he might from that time denounce the Subjects abſolved from their Fealty to him, and expoſe the Territory to be ſeized on by Catholicks, &c.

Neque enim per Lateranenſe Concilium Eccleſia ſtatuit, &c. Syn. Trid. Seſſ. 14. cap. 5.

Si vero Dominus temporalis requiſitus & monitus. Conc. Later. cap. 3. in Decret. Greg. lib. 5. tit. 7. cap. 13.

Anno 1099. Before that, Pope Paſchal II. deprived Henry IV. and excited enemies to perſecute him; telling them, that they could not offer a more acceptable Sacrifice to God, than by impugning him, who endeavoured to take the Kingdom from God's Church.

Nam in hac non tantùm parte, ſed ubique, cùm poteris, Henricum, Hæreticorum caput, & ejus fautores pro viribus perſequaris. Nullum profectò gratius Deo ſacrificium, quàm ſi eum impugnes, qui ſe contra Deum erexit, qui Eccleſiæ regnum auferre conatur. P. Paſch. Ep. 7. ad Rob. Fland. Com.

Anno 1088. Before him, Pope Urban II. (called Turban by ſome in his Age) did preach this Doctrine, recommended to us in the Decrees, that Subjects are by no authority conſtrained to pay the Fidelity which they have ſworn to a Chriſtian Prince, who oppoſes God and his Saints, or violateth their Precepts. An inſtance whereof we have in his granting a privilege to the Canons of Tours; * which (ſaith he) if any Emperour, King, Prince, &c. ſhall wilfully attempt to thwart, let him be deprived of the dignity of his honour and power.

Fidelitatem enim quam Chriſtiano Principi jurârunt, Deo ejuſque Sanctis adverſanti, eorumque præcepta, nulla cohibentur auctoritate perſolvere. Cauſ. 15. qu. 7. cap. 5.

* Si quis Imperator, Rex, Princeps——contra hanc Conſtitutionem venire tentaverit——poteſtatis honoriſque ſui dignitate careat——P. Urb. II. Ep. 12.

But the great Apoſtle (if not Author) of this confounding Doctrine was Pope Gregory VII. (a Man of a bold ſpirit and fiery temper, inured even before his entry on that See to bear ſway, and drive on daring projects, poſſeſſed with reſolution to uſe the advantages of his place and time in puſhing forward the Papal Intereſt to the utmoſt,) who did lift up his voice like a Trumpet, kindling Wars and Seditions thereby over Chriſtendom. His Dictates and Practices are well known, being iterated in his own Epiſtles, and in the Roman Councils under him, extant: Yet it may be worth the while to hear him ſwagger in his own language.

Vid. ejus dictata apud Bin. poſt. Ep. l. 2. Ep. 55.

Ep. 4. 2. 8. 21. & paſſim. Ep. 1. 58. 2. 5, 12, 13, 18, 32. 3. 10. 4. 1, 2, 3, 7, 22.

For the dignity and defence of God's Holy Church, in the name of Almighty God, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, I depoſe from Imperial and Royal Adminiſtration King Henry, Son of Henry ſometime Emperour, who too boldly and raſhly hath laid hands on thy Church; and I abſolve all Chriſtians ſubject to the Empire from that Oath whereby they were wont to plight their faith unto true Kings: for it is right, that he ſhould be deprived of Dignity, who doth endeavour to diminiſh the Majeſty of the Church.

Hâc itaque fiduciâ fretus, pro dignitate & tutela Eccleſiæ ſuæ Sanctæ, Omnipotentis Dei nomine, Patris, Filii, & Spiritus S. Henricum Regem, Henrici quondam Imperatoris filium, qui audacter nimiùm & temerariè in Eccleſiam tuam manus injecit, Imperatoriâ adminiſtratione Regiâque dejicio; & Chriſtianos omnes Imperio ſubjectos Juramento illo abſolvo, quo fidem veris Regibus præſtare conſueverunt: dignum enim eſt, ut is honore careat, qui majeſtatem Eccleſiæ imminuere cauſatur. Plat. in Greg. VII. & Tom. 7. Conc. Rom. 3. apud Bin. p. 484.

Go to therefore, moſt Holy Princes of the Apoſtles, and what I ſaid, by interpoſing your Authority, confirm; that all Men may now at length underſtand, if ye can bind and looſe in Heaven, that ye alſo can upon Earth take away and Agite igitur, Apoſtolorum ſanctiſſimi Principes, give Empires, Kingdoms, and whatſoever Mortals can have: for if ye can judge things belonging unto God, what is to be deemed concerning theſe inferiour and profane things? And if it is your part to judge Angels, who govern proud Princes, what becometh it you to do toward their Servants? Let Kings now and all Secular Princes learn by this Man's example, what ye can do in Heaven, and in what eſteem ye are with God; and let them henceforth fear to ſlight the commands of Holy Church: but put forth ſuddenly this judgment, that all Men may underſtand, that not caſually, but by your means this Son of iniquity doth fall from his Kingdom.

& quod dixi— Plat. in Greg. VII. Conc. Rom. 7. apud Bin. Tom. 7. p. 491.

So did that Pope, not unadviſedly in heat or paſſion, but out of ſettled judgment, upon cool deliberation, expreſs himſelf in his Synods at Rome.

This Pope is indeed by many held the inventor and broacher of this ſtrange Doctrine; and even thoſe, who about his Age did oppoſe it, did expreſs themſelves of this mind; calling it the novel Tradition, Schiſm, Hereſie of Hildebrand.

Quod ex novella Traditione Hildebrandus— Eccl. Leod. apud Bin. Tom. 7. p. 521.

Pope Hildebrand (ſaith the Church of Leige, in their anſwer to the Epiſtle to P. Paſchal.) is Authour of this New Schiſm, and firſt did raiſe the Prieſts Lance againſt the Royal Diadem.------Who firſt did girt himſelf, and by his example other Popes, with the ſword of war againſt the Emperors.

Hildebrandus P. author eſt hujus novelli Schiſmatis, & primus levait ſacerdotalem lanceam contra diadema regni. Ib. p. 522. Qui primus ſe, & ſuo exemplo alios Pontifices, contra Imp. accinxit gladio belli. Ibid. p. 523.

This only Novelity, (ſaith *Sigebert) not to ſay Hereſie, had not yet ſprang up in the World, that the Prieſts of him * who ſaith to the King, Apoſtate, and who maketh Hypocrites to reign for the ſins of the People, ſhould teach the People, that they owe no ſubjection to bad Kings, and although they have ſworn Allegiance to the King: they yet owe him none and that they who take part againſt the King may not be ſaid to be perjured; yea, that he who ſhall obey the King may be held excommunicate; he that ſhall oppoſe the King, may be abſolved from the crime of injuſtice and perjury.*

Hæc ſola Novitas, nè dicam Hæreſis nondum in mundo emerſerat, ut Sacerdotes illius qui dicit Regi, Apoſtata, & qui regnare facit hypocritas propter peccata populi, doceant populum, quòd malis Regibus nullam debeant ſubjectionem, & licèt ei Sacramentum fidelitatis fecerint, nullam tamen fidelitatem debeant; nec perjuri dicantur, qui contra Regem ſenſerint; imò, qui Regi paruerit pro excommunicato habeatur; qui contra Regem fecerit, à noxa injuſtitiæ & perjurii abſolvatur. Sigeb. Chron. Anno 1088. *Job 34. 18. 30.

Indeed certain it is, that this Man did in moſt downright ſtrains hold the Doctrine, and moſt ſmartly apply it to practice; yet did he diſclaim the invention or introduction of it; profeſſing that he followed the notions and examples of his Predeceſſors; divers of which he alledgeth in defence of his proceedings. We, (ſaith he) holding the Statutes of our Holy Predeceſſors, do by Apoſtolical authority abſolve thoſe from their Oath who are obliged by Fealty or Sacrament to excommunicate Perſons, and by all means prohibit that they obſerve Fealty to them.

Nos, ſanctorum prædeceſſorum ſtatuta tenentes, eos qui excommunicatis fidelitate aut ſacramento conſtricti ſunt, Apoſtolicâ auctoritate à ſacramento abſolvimus, & nè eis fidelitatem obſervent omnibus modis prohibemus. Greg. VII. Ep. 8. 21. Cauſ. 15. qu. 7. cap. 4.

And ſo it is, that (although for many ſucceſſions before Pope Hildebrand the Popes were not in condition or capacity to take ſo much upon them; there having been a row of Perſons intruded into that See, void of virtue, and of ſmall authority, moſt of them very Beaſts, who depended upon the favour of Princes for their admittance, confirmation or ſupport in the place; yet) we may find ſome Popes before him, who had a great ſpice of thoſe imperious conceits, and upon occaſion made very bold with Princes, aſſuming power over them, and darting menances againſt them. For,

Pope Leo IX. telleth us, that Conſtantine M. did think it very unbecoming, that they ſhould be ſubject to an Earthly Empire whom the Divine Majeſty had ſet over an Heavenly: and ſurely he was of his Author's mind, whom he alledged; although indeed this Pope may be ſuppoſed to ſpeak this, and other ſayings to that purpoſe, by ſuggeſtion of Hildebrand, by whom he was much governed.

Valde indignum fore arbitratus, terreno imperio ſubdi, quos Divina Majeſtas præfecit cœleſti. P. Leo IX. Ep. 1. c. 12.

Plat. in vita Leon. IX.

Pope Stephanus VI. told the Emperor Baſilius, that he ought to be ſubject with all veneration to the Roman Church.

Quis te ſeduxit, ut Pontificem Oecumenicum ſcommatibus laceſſeres, & S. Romanam Eccleſiam maledictis inceſſeres, cui cum omni veneratione ſubditus eſſe debes? Steph. VI. Ep. 1. Baron. Anno 885. §. 11.

Pope John VIII. (or IX.) did pretend Obedience due to him from Princes; and in default thereof threatned to excomunicate them.

Anno 873. —cuncti venire per inobedientiam neglexiſtis. Joh. VIII. Ep. 119. deinceps excommunicamus omnes, &c. Ibid.

Pope Nicolas I. caſt many imperious ſayings and threats at King Lotharius; theſe among others. We do therefore by Apoſtolical authority, under obteſtation of the Divine judgment, injoin to thee, that in Triers and Colen thou ſhouldſt not ſuffer any Biſhop to be choſen, before a report be made to our Apoſtleſhip. (Was not this ſatis pro imperio?) And again, That being compelled thou mayſt be able to repent, know, that very ſoon thou ſhalt be ſtruck with the Eccleſiaſtical Sword; ſo that thou mayſt be afraid any more to commit ſuch things in God's holy Church.

Anno 858. Idcirco Apoſtolicâ authoritate, ſub Divini judicis obteſtatione, injungimus tibi, ut in Trevirenſi urbe & in Agrippina Colonia nullum eligi patiaris, antequam relatum ſuper hoc noſtro Apoſtolatui fiat. Grat. Diſt. 63. cap. 4.

Ut ſaltem compulſus reſipiſcere valeas, noveris, te citiſſimè mucrone Eccleſiaſtico feriendum; ità ut ulteriùs talia in S. Dei Eccleſia perpetrare formides. P. Nic. I. Ep. 64.

And this he ſuggeſteth for right Doctrine, that Subjection is not due to bad Princes; perverting the Apoſtle's words to that purpoſe, Be ſubject to the King as excelling, that is, ſaith he, in vertues, not in vices: whereas the Apoſtle meaneth eminency in power.

Regi quaſi præcellenti, virtutibus ſcilicet, non vitiis, ſubditi eſtote. P. Nic. I. Epiſt. 4. append. p. 626.

Pope Gegory VII. doth alſo alledge Pope Zachary, who (ſaith he) did depoſe the King of the Franks, and did abſolve all the French from the Oath of fidelity which they had taken unto him, not ſo much for his iniquities, as becauſe he was unfit for ſuch a Power.

Alius item Rom. Pontifex, Zacharias ſcilicet, Regem Francorum, non tam pro ſuis iniquitatibus, quàm pro eo quòd tantæ poteſtati erat inutilis, depoſuit —— omnéſque Francigenas à juramento fidelitatis quod illi —— Decret. 2. part. Cauſ. 15. q. 6.

This indeed was a notable act of juriſdiction, if Pope Gregory's word may be taken for matter of fact, but divers mantain, that Pope Zachary did only concur with the rebellious depoſers of King Chilperick in way of advice or approbation, not by authority

It was pretty briskly ſaid of Pope Ardian I. We do by general decree conſtitute, that whatever King, or Biſhop, or Potentate, ſhall hereafter believe, or permit that the Cenſure of the Roman Pontifes may be violated in any caſe, he ſhall be an execrable Anathema, and ſhall be guilty before God as a betrayer of the Catholick Faith.

An. 772. Generali decreto conſtituimus, ut exſecrandum Anathema ſit, & veluti prævaricator Catholicæ Fidei ſemper apud Deum reus exiſtat, quicunque Regum, ſeu Epiſcoporum, vel Potentum, deinceps Romanorum Pontificum Cenſuram in quocunque crediderit, vel permiſerit violandam. P. Had. I. Capit. apud Grat. Cauſ. 25. qu. 1. cap. 11.

Conſtitutions againſt the Canons and Decrees of the Biſhops of Rome,or againſt good manners, are of no moment.

Conſtitutiones contra Canones & decreta Præſulum Romanorum, vel bonos mores, nullius ſunt momenti. Diſtinct. 10. cap. 4.

Before that, Pope Gregory II. becauſe the Eaſtern Emperor did croſs the worſhip of Images, did withdraw Subjection from him, and did thruſt his Authority out of Italy. He (ſaith Baronius) did effectually cauſe both the Romans and Italians to recede from Obedience to the Emperor.

An. 730. Tum Romanos tum Italos ab ejus obedientia recedere penitùs fecit. Baron. Anno 730. § 40.

This was an act in truth of Rebellion againſt the Emperor, in pretence of Juriſdiction over him; for how otherwiſe could he juſtify or colour the fact? So (as Baronius reflecteth) he did leave to poſterity a worthy example, (forſooth,) that Heretical Princes ſhould not be ſuffered to reign in the Church of Chriſt, if, being warned, they were found pertinacious in errour.

Sic dignum poſteris reliquit exemplum, nè in Eccleſia Chriſti regnare ſinerentur hæretici Principes, ſi ſæpe moniti, in errore perſiſtere obſtinato animo invenirentur. Baron. ibid.

And no wonder he then was ſo bold, ſeeing the Pope had obtained ſo much reſpect in thoſe parts of the World, that (as he told the Emperor Leo Iſ.) all the Kingdoms of the Weſt did hold Saint Peter as an earthly God: of which he might be able to ſeduce ſome to uphold him in his rebellious practices.

Ὃν αἱ πᾶσαι βασιλεῖαι τῆς δύσεως ὡς θεὸν ἐπίγειον ἔχουσι. Greg. II. Epiſt. 1. Bin. Tom. 5. p. 508.

This is the higheſt ſource, as I take it, to which this extravagant Doctrine can be driven. For that ſingle paſſage of Pope Felix III. though much ancienter, will not amount to it. It is certain, that, in cauſes relating to God, 'tis the ſafeſt courſe for you, that according to his inſtitution, ye endeavour to ſubmit the will of the King to the Prieſts, &c.

Certum eſt rebus veſtris hoc eſſe ſalutare, ut, cùm de cauſis Dei agitur, juxta ipſius conſtitutionem, Regiam voluntatem Sacerdotibus Chriſti ſtudeatis ſubdere, non præferre — &c. P. Felix III. (Anno 483) diſt. 10. cap. 3.

For while the Emperor did retain any conſiderable Authority in Italy, the Popes were better adviſed than to vent ſuch notions, and while they themſelves did retain any meaſure of pious or prudent Modeſty, they were not diſpoſed to it. And we may obſerve divers Popes near that time in word and practice thwarting that practice. For inſtance, Pope Gelaſius, a vehement ſtickler for Papal Authority, doth ſay to the Emperor Anaſtaſius, I, as being a Roman born, do love, worſhip, reverence thee as the Roman Prince. And he ſaith, that the Prelates of Religion (knowing the Empire conferr'd on him by Divine Providence) did obey his Laws. And otherwhere he diſcourſeth, that Chriſt had diſtinguiſhed by their proper acts and dignities the offices of Eccleſiaſtical and Civil Power, that one ſhould not meddle with the other; ſo diſclaiming Temporal Power due to himſelf, being content to ſcrew up his Spiritual Authority.

Te, ſicut Romanus natus, Romanum Principem amo, colo, ſuſpicio. P. Gelaſ. 1. Epiſt. 8. (ad Anaſt. Imp.) ——cognoſcentes imperium tibi supernâ diſpoſitione collatum, legibus tuis ipſi quoque parent religionis Antiſtites. Ibid.

Chriſtus, diſpenſatione magnificâ temperans, ſic actionibus propriis dignitatibúſque diſtinctis officia Poteſtatis utriuſque diſcrevit, &c.

After him, as is well known, Pope Gregory I. (as became a pious and good man) did avow the Emperor for his Lord, by God's gift ſuperiour to all men, to whom he was ſubject, whom he in duty was bound to obey;

Ad hoc poteſtas Dominorum meorum pietati cœlitus data eſt ſuper omnes homines.

Ego indignus famulus veſter——

Ego quidem juſſioni ſubjectus.

obey; and ſuppoſed it a high preſumption for any one to ſet himſelf above the honour of the Empire, by aſſuming the title of Univerſal Biſhop.

P.Greg.I. Ep. 2. 26.
Qui honori quoque Imperii veſtri ſe per privatum vocabulum ſuperponit. Ep. 4. 32.

After him, Pope Agatho, in the Acts of the ſixth General Council, doth call the Emperor Conſtantine Pogonatus his Lord; doth avow himſelf together with all Preſidents of the Churches ſervants to the Emperor; doth ſay, that his See and his Synod were ſubject to him, and did own Obedience to him.

Anno 680. δεσπόται καὶ τέκνα. Act. Syn. 6. p. 53.
ἡμεῖς δοῦλοι τοῦ βασιλέως. p. 304.
ἡμετέρα δουλεία. p. 32.
τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν πρόεδροι οἱ δοῦλοι τοῦ χριστιανικωτάτου ὑμῶν κράτους. p. 94.
δουλικὸς ὑμῶν καθ' ἡμᾶς θρόνος. p. 64.
ἕνεκεν ὑπακοῆς, ἧς ὀφείλομεν. p. 33, 34.

Preſently after him, Pope Leo II. who confirmed that General Synod, doth call the Emperor the prototype Son of the Church; and acknowledgeth the body of Prieſts to be ſervants (meaneſt ſervants) of his Royal Nobleneſs.

πρωτότυπον ἐκκλησίας τέκνον. Act. Syn. VI. p. 303.
ἡ βασιλικὴ συγγένεια τοῖς ἐσχάτοις ἑαυτῆς δούλοις συγκατέβαινε. Ibid. p. 304.

After him, Pope Conſtantine, (the immediate Predeceſſor of Pope Greg. II.) when the Emperor did command him to come to Conſtantinople, The moſt holy man, ſaith Anaſtaſius in his Life, did obey the Imperial Commands.

Anno 709. Miſit imp. ad Conſtantinum P. ſacram, per quam juſſit eum ad Regiam aſcendere urbem; qui ſanctiſſ. vir juſſis imperialibus obtemperans—Anaſt. in vit. P. Conſt.

Yea, Pope Gregory II. himſelf, before his defection, (when perhaps the circumſtances of time did not animate him thereto,) did, in his Epiſtle to Leo Iſaurus, acknowledge him as Emperor to be the Head of Chriſtians, and himſelf conſequently ſubject to him.

This Gregory therefore may be reputed the Father of that Doctrine, which, being foſtered by his Succeſſors, was by Pope Gregory VII. brought up to its robuſt pitch and ſtature.

ὡς βασιλεὺς καὶ κεφαλὴ τῶν χριστιανῶν. P.Greg.II. ad Leon Iſ. Ep. 1. (p. 502.)

I know, Pope Gregory VII. to countenance him, doth alledge Pope Innocent I. excommunicating the Emperor Arcadius for his proceeding againſt St. Chryſoſtome: and the Writers of St. Chryſoſtome's Life, with others of the like age and credit, do back him therein. But ſeeing the Hiſtorians who lived in St. Chryſoſtome's own time, and who write very carefully about him, do not mention any ſuch thing; ſeeing that, being the firſt Act in the kind, muſt have been very notable, and have made a great noiſe; ſeeing that ſtory doth not ſute with the tenor of proceedings, reported by thoſe moſt credible Hiſtorians, in that caſe; ſeeing that fact doth no-wiſe ſort to the condition and way of thoſe Times; that report cannot be true, and it muſt be numbred among the many fabulous narrations, deviſed by ſome wanton Greeks, to ſet out the Life of that excellent Perſonage.

Greg. VII. Epiſt. 8. 2.
Baron. Anno 407. §. 23.

Georg. Alex. vit Chryſ. cap. 68.
Anon. vit. Chryſ. cap. 39.

Socrates, Sozomen, Theodoret, Palladius.

The ſame Pope doth alſo alledge St. Gregory M. denouncing Excommunication, and Deprivation of honour, to all Kings, Biſhops, Judges, &c. who ſhould violate the Privilege granted to the Monaſtery of St. Medard. But this (as are many ſuch Privileges) is a rank Forgery, unworthily impoſed on P. Gregory, (that prudent, meek and holy man,) much to his wrong and diſgrace: which I will not be at trouble to confute, having ſhewed St. Gregory to have been of another judgment and temper, than to behave himſelf thus towards Princes; and ſeeing that task is abundantly diſcharged by that very learned man, Monſieur Launoy.

Siquis autem Regum, Antiſtitum, Judicum, vel quarumcumque ſecularium perſonarum, hujus Apoſtolicæ auctoritatis, & noſtræ præceptionis decreta violaverit, ——cujuſcunque dignitatis vel ſublimitatis ſit, honore ſuo privetur.—— Greg. M poſt Epiſt. 38. libri 2.

Epiſt. pars VII.

Indeed (upon this occaſion to digreſs a little farther) it doth not ſeem to have been the opinion of the ancient Popes, that they might excommunicate their Sovereign Princes: for if they might, why did they forbear to exerciſe that power, when there was greateſt reaſon, and great temptation for it?

Why did not Pope Julius or Pope Liberius excommunicate Conſtantius the great Favourer of the Arians, againſt whom Athanaſius, St. Hilary, and Lucifer Calar. do ſo earneſtly inveigh, calling him Heretick, Antichriſt, and what not? How did Julian himſelf eſcape the cenſure of Pope Liberius? Why did not Pope Damaſus thunder againſt Valens, that fierce Perſecutor of Catholicks? Why did not Damaſus cenſure the Empreſs Juſtina, the Patroneſs of Arianiſm? Why did not Pope Siricius cenſure Theodoſius I. for that bloudy fact, for which St. Ambroſe denied him the Communion? How was it that Pope Leo I. (that ſtout and high Pope) had not the heart to correct Theodoſius Junior in his way, who was the ſupporter of his adverſary Dioſcorus, and the obſtinate protector of the ſecond Epheſine Council, which that Pope ſo much deteſted? Why did not that Pope rather compel that Emperor to reaſon by cenſures, than ſupplicate him by tears? How did ſo many Popes connive at Theodorick, and other Princes profeſſing Arianiſm at their door? Wherefore did not Pope Simplicius or Pope Felix thus puniſh the Emperor Zeno, the ſupplanter of the Synod of Chalcedon, for which they had ſo much zeal?

Why did neither Pope Felix, nor Pope Gelaſius, nor Pope Symmachus, nor Pope Hormiſdas excommunicate the Emperor Anaſtaſius, (yea did not ſo much, Pope Gelaſius ſaith, as touch his name,) for countenancing the Oriental Biſhops in their Schiſm, and refractory Non-compliance with the Papal Authority? Those Popes did indeed claſh with that Emperor, but they expreſly deny, that they did condemn him with others whom he did favour. We (ſaith Pope Symmachus) did not excommunicate thee, O Emperor, but Acacius.---- If you mingle your ſelf, you are not excommunicated by us, but by your ſelf. And, If the Emperor pleaſeth to join himſelf with thoſe condemned, (ſaith Pope Gelaſius) it can not be imputed to us.

Quod ſibi vult autem, quod dixerit Imperator à nobis ſe in religione damnatum, cùm ſuper hac parte deceſſor meus non ſolùm minimè nomen ejus attigerit--- P. Gelaſ. I. Epiſt. 4.

Nos te non excommunicavimus, Imperator, ſed Acacium.—Si te miſces, non à nobis, ſed à te ipſo excommunicatus es. P. Symmachus I. Ep. 7. Si iſti placet ſe miſcere ddmnatis, nobis non poteſt imputari. P. Gelaſ. I. Ep. 4.

Wherefore Baronius doth ill, in affirming Pope Symmachus to have anathematized Anaſtaſius: whereas that Pope plainly denied that he had excommunicated him, yea, denied it even in thoſe words which are cited to prove it, being rightly read: for they are corruptly written in Baronius and Binius; Ego (which hath no ſenſe, or one contradictory to his former aſſertion) being put for Nego, which is good ſenſe, and agreeable to what he and the other Popes do affirm in relation to that matter.

Baron. Anno 503. §. 17.

Dicis quòd mecum conſpirante Senatu, excommunicaverim te. Iſta quidem ego (nego,) ſed rationabiliter factum à deceſſoribus meis ſine dubio ſubſequor. P Sym. Epiſt. 7.
You ſay, that I excommunicated you by the joint conſent of the Senate. This I deny: but I undoubtedly follow what was with good reaſon done by my Predeceſſors.

Why do we not read that any Pope formally did excommunicate, though divers did zealouſly contradict and oppoſe, the Princes who did reject Images?

In fine, a noble Biſhop above 500 years ago did ſay, I read and read again the Records of the Roman Kings and Emperors, and I no where find that any of them before this was excommunicated or deprived of his Kingdom by the Roman Pontife.

Lego & relego Romanorum Regum & Imperatorum geſta, & nuſquam invenio quenquam eorum ante hunc à Romano Pontifice excommunicatum, vel Regno privatum. Otho Friſing. Chron. lib. 6. cap. 35.

Surely therefore the ancient Popes did either not know their Power, or were very negligent of their Duty.

Such have been the Doctrine and behaviour of Popes in reference to their Power.

§. V. This Doctrine of the Pope's Univerſal Power over all Perſons in all Matters may reaſonably be ſuppoſed the ſentiment of all Popes continually for a long time, even for more than 500 years unto this preſent day. For,

1. If this Doctrine be falſe, it implieth no ſlight Error, but one of a very high nature and moſt dangerous conſequence; which involveth great arrogance and iniquity, which tendeth to work enormous wrongs and grievous miſchiefs: whence, if any Pope ſhould conceive it falſe, he were bound openly to diſclaim, to condemn, to refute it; leſt the authority of his Predeceſſors, and his connivence, ſhould induce others into it, or ſettle them in it; as it is (in regard to Pope Honorius) charged upon P. Leo II. who did not, as it became the Apoſtolical Authority, extinguiſh the flame of Heretical doctrine beginning, but did by neglecting cheriſh it. In ſuch a caſe a Pope muſt not be ſilent: For, No ſmall danger (ſaid P. Gelaſius) lieth upon Popes in being ſilent about what agreeth to the ſervice of God: and, If (ſaith P. Paſchal) a Pope by his ſilence doth ſuffer the Church to be polluted with the gall of bitterneſs and root of impiety, he ſhould no wiſe be excuſable before the Eternal Judge: and Error (ſaith P. Felix III.) which is not reſiſted, (by thoſe in eminent office,) is approved; and Truth which is not defended, is oppreſſed: and, He is not free from ſuſpicion of a cloſe ſociety in miſchief, who ceaſeth to obviate it: and, We (ſaith P. Gregory I.) do greatly offend, if we do hold our peace at things that are to be corrected. But all Popes ſince the time ſpecified have either openly declared for this Doctrine; or have been ſilent, and ſo have avowed it by tacit conſent.

—cum Honorio, qui flammam hæretici dogmatis non, ut decuit Apoſtolicam authoritatem, incipientem extinxit. ſed negligendo confovit, P. Leo II. Ep. 2.

Non leve diſcrimen incumbit Pontificibus ſiluiſſe pro divinitatis cultu quod congruit. P. Gelaſ. 1. Epiſt. 8. (ad Anaſtaſ. Imp.

Si vero noſtro ſilentio pateremur Eccleſiam felle amaritudinis & impietatis radice pollui, quâ ratione poſſemus apud æternum Judicem excuſari? P. Paſchal II. Ep. 3 (ad Anſelm. Cant)

Error cui non reſiſtitur, approbatur; & veritas quæ minimè defenſatur, opprimitur. P. Felix III. Ep. 1. (ad Acacium.)

Non caret ſcrupulo ſocietatis occultæ, qui evidenter facinori deſinit obviare. Id. ibid.

Si ea quæ nobis corrigenda ſunt tacemus, valde delinquimus. P. Greg. I. Ep. 2. 37.

2. Any Pope diſapproving that Tenent were bound to renounce communion with thoſe that hold and profeſs it; or at leaſt to check and diſcountenance it. But on the contrary they have ſuffered it to be maintained in their preſence and audience; and have hugged that ſort of Men with ſpecial favour, as their moſt affectionate and ſure friends: they have ſuſpected, diſcountenanced and frowned on thoſe who have ſhewed diſlike of it.

Thoſe Men indeed who vouch this Doctrine, may reaſonably be deemed to do it as accomplices with the Popes, on purpoſe to gratifie and curry favour with them, in hopes of obtaining reward and preferment of them for it.

Οὐ μόνον αὐτὰ ποιοῦσιν, ἀλλὰ καὶ συνευδοκοῦσι τοῖς πράσσουσι, Rom. 1. 32. They not only do the ſame, but have pleaſure in them that do them.

3. The chief Authors and moſt zealous Abettors of theſe notions (Popes, Synods, Doctors of the School) have continually paſſed for moſt authentick Maſters of Divinity, and have retained greateſt authority in the Church governed and guided by the Pope.

4. The Decrees containing them do ſtand in their Canon-Law, and in their Collections of Synods, without any caution or mark of diſlike; which is a ſufficient indication of their conſtant adherence to this Doctrine.

5. The common ſtyle of the Papal Edicts or Bulls doth import their ſenſe; which is imperious, in regard to all perſons without exception: Let no Man (ſay they) preſume to infringe this our will and command, &c.

6. Popes of all tempers and qualifications (even thoſe who have paſſed for the moſt wiſe and moderate among them, have been ready to practiſe according to thoſe principles, when occaſion did invite, and circumſtances of things did permit; interdicting Princes, abſolving Subjects from their Allegiance, raiſing or encouraging Inſurrections; as appeareth by their tranſactions not long ſince againſt our Princes, and thoſe of France; which ſhews the very See imbued with thoſe Notions.

7. They do oblige all Biſhops moſt ſolemnly to avow this Doctrine, and to engage themſelves to practiſe according to it. For in the Oath preſcribed to all Biſhops they are required to avow, that they will obſerve the Apoſtolical commands with all their power, and cauſe them to be obſerved by others; that they will aid and defend the Roman Papacy and the Royalties of Saint Peter againſt every Man; that they will to their power perſecute and impugn Hereticks, Schiſmaticks and Rebels to the Pope or his Succeſſors, without any exception; which was I ſuppoſe chiefly meant againſt their own Prince, (if occaſion ſhould be;) together with divers other points, importing their acknowledgment and abetting the Pope's univerſal Domination.

Mandata Apoſtolica totis viribus obſervabo, & ab aliis obſervari faciam.

Papatum Romanum & Regalia S. Petri adjutor eis ero ad retinendum & defendendum contra omnem hominem.

Hæreticos, Schiſmaticos & Rebelles eidem Domino noſtro vel ſucceſſoribus prædictis pro poſſe perſequar & impugnabo.

Theſe horrible Oaths of Biſhops to the Pope do ſeem to have iſſued from the ſame ſhop with the high Hildebrandine dictates: for the Oath in the Decretals is aſcribed to Pope Gregory, (I ſuppoſe Greg. VII.) And in the ſixth Roman Synod under Greg. VII. there is an Oath of like tenor exacted from the Biſhops of Aquileia; perhaps occaſionally, which in purſuance of that example might be extended to all.

Greg. *Decret. lib.*2. tit. 24. *cap.*4. Concil. Rom. VI. apud Bin. *p.*489.

And that before that time ſuch Oaths were not impoſed doth appear from hence, that when P. Paſchal II. did require them from ſome great Biſhops, (the Biſhop of Palermo, and the Archbiſhop of Poland,) they did wonder and boggle at it as an uncouth Novelty; nor doth the Pope in favour of his demand alledge any ancient precedent, but only propoſeth ſome odd reaſons, for it. You have ſignified unto me, moſt dear Brother, that the King and his Nobles did exceedingly wonder, that an Oath with ſuch a condition ſhould be every where offered you by my Commiſſioners, and that you ſhould take that Oath, which I had written, and they tendered to you.

Decret. Greg. *lib.*1. tit. 6. cap. 4.

Significâſti, frater chariſſime, Regem & Regni Majores admiratione permotos, quòd paſſim tibi ab Apocriſiariis noſtris tali conditione oblatum fuerit, ſi ſacramentum, quod à nobis ſcriptum detulerant, jurares, P. Paſch.. II. Epiſt. 6.

§. VI. All Romaniſts, in conſiſtence with their Principles, do ſeem obliged to hold this opinion concerning the Pope's Univerſal Power. For, ſeeing many of their ſtanding Maſters and Judges of Controverſies have ſo expreſly from their Chair declared and defined it; all the Row for many Ages conſenting to it and countenancing it; not one of them having ſignified any diſſent or diſlike of it: And conſidering that, if in any thing they may require or deſerve belief, it is in this point; for in what are they more skilfull and credible than about the nature of their own Office? What (ſaith Bellarmine wiſely) may they be conceived to know better than the Authority of their own See? Seeing it hath been approved by

Ipſis præcipuè debet eſſe nota ſuæ Sedis authoritas. Bell. 4. 3.

by their moſt great and famous Councils, which they hold Univerſal, and which their adored Synod of Trent doth alledge for ſuch, (the Laterane under P. Innocent III. that of Lions under P. Innocent IV. the other Laterane under P. Leo X.) Seeing it hath been current among their Divines of greateſt vogue and authority, the great Maſters of their School: Seeing by ſo large a conſent and concurrence, during ſo long a time, it may pretend (much better than divers other Points of great importance) to be confirmed by Tradition or Preſcription: Why ſhould it not be admitted for a Doctrine of the Holy Roman Church, the Mother and Miſtreſs of all Churches? How can they who diſavow this Notion be true Sons of that Mother, or faithfull Scholars of that Miſtreſs? How can they acknowledge any Authority in their Church to be infallible, or certain, or obliging to aſſent?

How can they admit the Pope for authentick Judge of Controverſies, or Maſter of Chriſtian Doctrine, or in any Point credible, who hath in ſo great a matter erred ſo foully, and ſeduced the Chriſtian World; whom they deſert in a Point of ſo great conſideration, and influence on practice; whom they, by virtue of their diſſent from him in this Opinion, may often be obliged to oppoſe in his proceedings?

How can they deny, that bad Doctrines might creep in, and obtain ſway in the Church, by the intereſt of the Pope and his Clients?

How can they charge Novelty or Heterodoxy on thoſe who refuſe ſome Dictates of Popes, of Papal Councils, of Scholaſtick Divines, which ſtand upon no better grounds than thoſe on which this Doctrine ſtandeth?

Why hath no Synod, of the many which have been held in all parts of Chriſtendom, clearly diſclaimed this Opinion; but all have let it ſlip, or have ſeemed by ſilence to approve it?

Yea, how can the Concord and Unity of that Church well conſiſt with a Diſſent from this Doctrine? For,

No Man apprehending it falſe, ſeemeth capable with good conſcience to hold Communion with thoſe who profeſs it: for, upon ſuppoſition of its falſhood, the Pope and his chief adherents are the teachers and abettours of the higheſt violation of Divine Commands, and moſt enormous ſins, of Uſurpation, Tyranny, Impoſture, Perjury, Rebellion, Murther, Rapine, and all the Villanies complicated in the practical influence of this Doctrine.

It ſeemeth clear as the Sun, that if this Doctrine be an Error, it is one of the moſt pernicious Hereſies that ever was vented; involving the higheſt Impiety, and producing the greateſt Miſchief. For, If he that ſhould teach Adultery, Inceſt, Simony, Theft, Murther, or the like Crimes, to be lawful, would be a Heretick; how much more would he be ſuch, that ſhould recommend Perjury, Rebellion, Regicide, (things inducing Wars, Confuſions, Slaughters, Deſolations, all ſorts of Injuſtice and Miſchief,) as Duties?

How then can any Man ſafely hold Communion with ſuch perſons? May we not ſay with P. Symmachus, that to communicate with ſuch, is to conſent with them? with P. Gelaſius, that it is worſe than ignorance of the truth to communicate with the enemies of truth? and, that He who communicateth with ſuch an Hereſie is worthily judged to be removed from our ſociety?

An communicare non eſt conſentire cum talibus? P. Sym. I. Ep. 7. Quaſi non ſit deterius, & non ignoraſſe veritatem, & tamen communicaſſe cum veritatis inimicis. P. Gelaſ. I. Ep. 1. Cuicunque hæreſi communicans meritò judicatur à noſtra ſocietate removendus. Id. ibid. Vide Ep. 13. p. 642.

§. VII. Yet ſo looſe and ſlippery are the Principles of the Party which is jumbled in adherence to the Pope, that divers will not allow us to take this Tenent of Infinite Power to be a Doctrine of their Church; for divers in that Communion do not aſſent to it.

For there is a ſort of Hereticks (as Bellarmine and Baronius call them) ſculking every-where in the boſom of their Church, all about Chriſtendom, and in ſome places ſtalking with open face, who reſtrain the Pope's Authority ſo far, as not to allow him any Power over Sovereign Princes in Temporal Affairs; much leſs any power of depriving them of their Kingdoms and Principalities.

Altera non tam ſententia quàm hæreſis duo docet, primò, Pontificem ut Pontificem ex jure Divino nullam habere temporalem poteſtatem, nec poſſe ullo modo imperare Principibus ſecularibus, nedum eos regnis & principatu privare——Bell. V. 1.

They are all branded for Hereticks, who take from the Church of Rome, and the See of St. Peter, one of the two Swords, and allow only the Spiritual. This Hereſie Baronius hath nominated the Hereſie of the Politicks.

Hæreſis errore notantur omnes qui ab Eccleſia Rom. cathedra Petri è duobus alterum gladium auferunt, nec niſi ſpiritualem concedunt. Baron. Anno 1053. §. 14. Hæreſis Politicorum, Baron Anno 1073. § 13.

This Hereſie a great Nation, otherwiſe ſticking to the Roman Communion, doth ſtiffly maintain, not enduring the Papal Sovereignty over Princes in Temporals to be preached in it.

There are many perſons, yea, Synods, who did oppoſe Pope Hildebrand in the birth of his Doctrine, condemning it for a pernicious Novelty, and branding it with the name of Hereſie: as we before ſhewed.

Since the Hildebrandine Age there have been in every Nation (yea in Italy it ſelf) divers Hiſtorians, Divines and Lawyers, who have in elaborate Tracts maintained the Royal Sovereignty againſt the Pontifical.

Otto Friſing. Sigebert. Abbas Ubſp. Occam, Marſilius Patav. &c.

This ſort of Hereticks are now ſo much encreaſed, that the Hildebrandine Doctrine is commonly exploded. Which, by the way, ſheweth, that the Roman Party is no leſs than others ſubject to change its ſentiments; Opinions among them gaining and loſing vogue, according to circumſtances of time and contingencies of things.

§. VIII. Neither are the adherents to the Roman Church more agreed concerning the extent of the Pope's Authority even in Spiritual matters.

For, although the Popes themſelves plainly do claim an abſolute Supremacy in them over the Church; although the ſtream of Divines who do flouriſh in favour with them doth run that way; although, according to their principles, (if they had any principles clearly and certainly fixed,) that might ſeem to be the Doctrine of their Church: Yet is there among them a numerous party, which doth not allow him ſuch a Supremacy, putting great reſtraints to his Authority; (as we ſhall preſently ſhew.) And as the other party doth charge this with Hereſie, ſo doth this return back the ſame imputation on that.

§. IX. That their Doctrine is in this matter ſo various and uncertain, is no great wonder; ſeeing Intereſt is concerned in the queſtion, and Principles are defective toward the reſolution of it.

1. Contrary Intereſts will not ſuffer the Point to be decided, nor indeed to be freely diſputed on either hand.

On one hand, the Pope will not allow his Prerogatives to be diſcuſſed; according to that maxim of the great Pope Innocent III. When there is a queſtion touching the Privileges of the Apoſtolick See, we will not that others judge about them. Whence (as we before touched) the Pope did peremptorily command his Legates at Trent, in no caſe to permit any diſpute about his Authority.

Cum ſuper privilegiis ſedis Apoſtolicæ cauſa vertatur, nolumus de ipſis per alios judicari. Greg. Decr. lib. 2. tit. 1. c. 12.

On the other hand, the French will not permit the Supremacy of their King in Temporals, or the Privileges of their Church in Spirituals, to be conteſted in their Kingdom. Nor, we may ſuppoſe, would any Prince admit a Deciſion prejudicial to his Authority and Welfare, ſubjecting and enſlaving him to the will of the Roman Court. Nor (we may hope) would any Church patiently comport with the irrecoverable oppreſſion of all its rights and liberties by a peremptory eſtabliſhment of Papal Omnipotency.

2. Nor is it eaſie for their Diſſenſions to be reconciled upon Theological grounds, and authorities to which they pretend deference. For, not only their Schools and Maſters of their Doctrine do in the caſe diſagree, but their Synods do notoriouſly claſh.

§. X. Yea even Popes themſelves have ſhifted their pretences, and varied in ſtyle, according to the different circumſtances of time, and their variety of humours, deſigns, intereſts.

In time of proſperity and upon advantage, when they might ſafely do it, any Pope almoſt would talk high, and aſſume much to himſelf: but when they were low, or ſtood in fear of powerful contradiction, even the boldeſt Popes would ſpeak ſubmiſſly or moderately. As for inſtance, Pope Leo I. after the ſecond Epheſine Synod, when he had to do with Theodoſius II. did humbly ſupplicate, and whine pitifully; but after the Synod of Chalcedon, having got the Emperor favourable, and moſt of the Biſhops complacent to him, he ranted bravely. And we may obſerve, that even Pope Gregory VII. who did ſwagger ſo boiſterouſly againſt the Emperor Henry, was yet calm and mild in his conteſts with our William the Conqueror; who had a ſpirit good enough for him, and was far out of his reach.

And Popes of high ſpirit and bold face, (ſuch as Leo I. Gelaſius I. Nic. I. Gregory II. Gregory VII. Innocent III. Boniface VIII. Julius II. Paul IV. Sextus V. Paulus V, &c.) as they did ever aſpire to ſcrue Papal authority to the higheſt peg; ſo would they ſtrain their language in commendation of their See as high as their times would bear. But other Popes of meeker and modeſter diſpoſition, (ſuch as Julius I. Anaſtaſius II. Gregory I. Leo II. Adrian VI, &c.) were content to let things ſtand as they found them, and to ſpeak in the ordinary ſtyle of their times; yet ſo, that few have let their Authority to go backward or decline.

We may obſerve, that the pretences and language of Popes have varied according to ſeveral periods, uſually growing higher as their State grew looſer from danger of oppoſition or controll.

In the firſt times, while the Emperors were Pagans, their pretences were ſuted to their condition, and could not ſoar high; they were not then ſo mad as to pretend to any Temporal Power, and a pittance of Spiritual eminency did content them.

When the Empire was divided, they could ſometimes be more haughty and peremptory; as being in the Weſt, ſhrowded under the wing of the Emperors there, (who commonly did affect to improve their Authority, in competition to that of other Biſhops) and at diſtance from the reach of the Eaſtern Emperor.

P. Nich. ad Imp. Mich. p. 511, & 513.

The cauſe of Athanaſius having produced the Sardican Canons, concerning the Reviſion of ſome cauſes by the Popes, by colour of them they did hugely enlarge their Authority, and raiſe their ſtyle; eſpecially in the Weſt, where they had great advantages of augmenting their Power.

When the Weſtern Empire was fallen, their influence upon that part of the Empire which came under protection of the Eaſtern Emperors rendring them able to do ſervice or diſſervice to thoſe Emperors, they, according to the ſtate of Times and the need of them, did talk more big, or more tamely.

Pope Boniface III. having by compliance with the Uſurper Phocas obtained a declaration from him concerning the Headſhip of the Roman Church, did make a conſiderable ſtep forward toward the height of Papal Greatneſs.

After that Pope Greg. II. had withdrawn Italy from the Oriental Empire, and Rome had grown in a manner looſe and independent from other ſecular powers; in the confuſions of the Weſt, the Pope interpoſing to arbitrate between Princes, trucking and bartering with them, as occaſion ſerved, for mutual aid and countenance, did grow in Power, and anſwerably did advance his pretences.

The ſpurious Decretal Epiſtles of the ancient Popes (which aſſerted to the Pope high degrees of Authority) being foiſted into mens hands, and inſenſibly creeping into repute, did inſpire the Pope with confidence to invade all the ancient Conſtitutions, Privileges and Liberties of Churches; and having got ſuch intereſt every where, he might ſay what he pleaſed, no Clergy-man daring to check or croſs him. Having drawn to himſelf the final deciſion of all Cauſes, having got a finger in diſpoſal of all Preferments, having by Diſpenſations, Exemptions and Grants of privileges tyed to him ſo many Dependents, what might not he ſay or do?

Pope Gregory VII. being a Man of untameable Spirit, and taking advantage from the diſtractions and corruptions of his Times, did venture to pull a feather with the Emperor; and with ſucceſs having mated him, did ſet up a peremptory claim to Sovereignty over all Perſons in all Cauſes.

In his footſteps his Succeſſors have trodden, being ever ready upon occaſion to plead ſuch a title, and to practiſe according to it. No Pope would forgoe any Power which had been claimed by his Predeceſſors. And Popes would ever be ſure to have dancers after their pipe, numberleſs abetters of their pretences.

No wonder then that perſons deferring much regard to the Authority of Popes, and accommodating their conceits to the dictates of them, (or of perſons depending on them,) ſhould in their opinions vary about the nature and extent of Papal Authority; it having never been fixed within certain bounds, or having in ſeveral Ages continued the ſame thing.

§. XI. Wherefore intending by God's help to diſcuſs the pretended Authority of the Pope, and to ſhew that He by no Divine inſtitution and by no Immutable right, hath any ſuch power as he doth claim; by reaſon of this perplexed variety of Opinions I do find it difficult to ſtate the Queſtion, or to know at what diſtinct mark I ſhould level my Diſcourſe.

§. XII. But ſeeing his pretence to any Authority in Temporals, or to the Civil Sword, is ſo palpably vain, that it hardly will bear a ſerious diſpute, having nothing but impudence and ſophiſtry to countenance it; ſeeing ſo many in the Roman Communion do reject it, and have ſubſtantially confuted it; ſeeing now moſt are aſhamed of it, and very ew, (even among thoſe Sects, which have been ts chief Patrons) will own it; ſeeing Bellarmine himſelf doth acknowledge it a Novelty, deviſed about 500 years ago in St. Bernard's time; ſeeing the Popes themſelves, what-ever they think, dare now ſcarce ſpeak out, and forbear upon ſufficient provocation to practiſe according to it; I ſhall ſpare the trouble of meddling with it, confining my Diſcourſe to the Pope's Authority in Eccleſiaſtical affairs; the pretence whereto I am perſuaded to be no leſs groundleſs, and no leſs noxious than the other to Chriſtendom; the which being overthrown, the other, as ſuperſtructed on it, muſt alſo neceſſarily fall.

Primi qui temporalem poteſtatem ſummo Pontifici ex Chriſti inſtitutione tribuunt,. videntur eſſe Hugo de S. Victore, Bernardus, &c. Bell. 5. 5.

The firſt that yield the Pope Temporal power by Chriſt's Inſtitution, ſeem to be Hugo, &c.

§. XIII. And here the Doctrine which I ſhall conteſt againſt is that in which the Cordial partizans of that See do ſeem to conſent, which is moſt common and current, moſt applauded and countenanced in their Theological Schools; which the Popes themſelves have ſolemnly defined, and declared for ſtanding law, or rule of Juriſdiction; which their moſt authentick Synods (whereby their Religion is declared, and diſtinguiſhed from others) have aſſerted, or ſuppoſed; which the tenour of their Diſcipline and Practice doth hold forth; which their Clergy by moſt ſolemn profeſſions and engagements is tied to avow; which all the Clients and Confidents of Rome do zealouſly ſtand for (more than for any other point of Doctrine;) and which no man can diſclaim without being deemed an enemy, or a prevaricator toward the Apoſtolick See.

§. XIV. Which Doctrine is this, That (in the words of the Florentine Synod's Definition) the Apoſtolical Chair and the Roman High-Prieſt doth hold a Primacy over the Univerſal Church; and that the Roman High-Prieſt is the Succeſſor of St. Peter the Prince of the Apoſtles; and the true Lieutenant of Chriſt, and the Head of the Church; and that he is the Father and Doctor of all Chriſtians; and that unto him in St. Peter full Power is committed to feed, and direct, and govern the Catholick Church under Chriſt; according as is contained in the Acts of General Councils, and in the Holy Canons.

*Ἔτι ὁρίζομεν τὴν ἁγίαν ἀποστολικὴν καθέδραν, &c. Concil. Flor. defin. p. 854.

That (in the words of Pope Leo X. approved by the Laterane Synod) Chriſt, before his departure from the world, did in ſolidity of the Rock inſtitute Peter and his Succeſſors, to be his Lieutenants, to whom it is ſo neceſſary to obey, that who doth not obey muſt die the death.

Chriſtus——migraturus ex mundo ad Patrem, in ſoliditate Petræ Petrum ejúſque Succeſſores vicarios ſuos inſtituit, quibus ex libri Regum teſtimonio ità obedire neceſſe eſt, ut qui non obedierit, morte moriatur. P. Leo X. in Conc. Later. Seſſ. 11. p. 151.

That to the Pope as Sovereign Monarch, by Divine Sanction of the whole Church, do appertain Royal Prerogatives, (Regalia Petri, the Royalties of Peter they are called in the Oath preſcribed to Biſhops.) Such as theſe which follow;

To be Superiour to the whole Church, and to its Repreſentative a General Synod of Biſhops. To convocate General Synods at his pleaſure; all Biſhops being obliged to attend, upon ſummons from him. To preſide in Synods, ſo as to ſuggeſt matter, promote, obſtruct, over-rule the debates in them. To confirm or invalidate their Determinations, giving life to them by his aſſent, or ſubtracting it by his diſſent. To define Points of Doctrine, or to decide Controverſies authoritatively; ſo that none may preſume to conteſt, or diſſent from his Dictates. To enact, eſtabliſh, abrogate, ſuſpend, diſpenſe with Eccleſiaſtical Laws and Canons. To relax or evacuate Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures by indulgence, pardon, &c. To void Promiſes, Vows, Oaths, Obligations to Laws

Bell. 4. 22. by his Diſpenſation. To be the Fountain of all Paſtoral Juriſdiction and Dignity. To conſtitute, confirm, judge, cenſure, ſuſpend, depoſe, remove, reſtore, reconcile Biſhops. To conferr Eccleſiaſtical Dignities and Benefices by paramount Authority, in way of Proviſion, Reſervation, &c. To exempt Colleges, Monaſteries, &c. from Juriſdiction of their Biſhops and ordinary Superiors. To judge all perſons in all Spiritual Cauſes, by calling them to his cognizance, or delegating Judges for them; with a final and peremptory Sentence. To receive Appeals from all Eccleſiaſtical Judicatories; and to reverſe their Judgments, if he findeth cauſe. To be himſelf unaccountable for any of his doings, exempt from judgment, and liable to no reproof. To erect, transfer, aboliſh Epiſcopal Sees. To exact Oaths of Fealty and Obedience from the Clergy. To found Religious Orders; or to raiſe a Spiritual Militia for propagation and defence of the Church. To ſummon and commiſſionate Soldiers by Croiſade, &c. to fight againſt Infidels, or perſecute Infidels.

Some of theſe are expreſſed, others in general terms couched in thoſe words of P. Eugenius, telling the Greeks what they muſt conſent unto. The Pope (ſaid he) will have the Prerogatives of his Church; and he will have Appeals to him; and to feed all the Church of Chriſt, as Shepherd of the Sheep. Beſide theſe things, that he may have authority and power to convoke General Synods, when need ſhall be; and that all the Patriarchs do yield to his will.

Θέλει τὰ ϖρονόμια τῆς ἐκκλησίας αὐτοῦ, ϗ θέλει ἔχειν τὴν ἔκκλητον, ϗ ποιμαίνειν πᾶσαν τὴν ἐκκλησίαν τοῦ Χριστοῦ, ὥσπερ ποιμὴν τῶν προβάτων· ϖρὸς τούτοις, ἵνα ἔχῃ ἐξουσίαν ϗ δύναμιν συγκροτεῖν σύνοδον οἰκουμενικὴν, ὅτι δεήσει· ϗ πάντας τοὺς πατριάρχας ὑπείκειν τῷ θελήματι αὐτοῦ. Conc. Flor. p. 846.

That the Pope doth claim, aſſume and exerciſe a Sovereignty over the Church endowed with ſuch Prerogatives, is ſufficiently viſible in experience of fact, is apparent by the authorized dictates in their Canon-law, and ſhall be diſtinctly proved by competent allegations, when we ſhall examine the branches of this pretended Authority.

In the mean time it ſufficeth to obſerve, that in effect all Clergy-men do avow ſo much, who bonâ fide and without prevarication do ſubmit to take the Oaths and Engagements preſcribed to them of courſe by Papal appointment. For this ſurely, according to the Pope's meaning, (by which their obligation is to be meaſured,) is deſigned in the profeſſion ordained by Pope Pius IV. wherein every beneficed Clergy-man is injoined to ſay, And I do promiſe and ſwear true Obedience to the Roman Pontif the Succeſſor of St. Peter and the Vicar of Jeſus Chriſt. Which profeſſion was appointed in purſuance of a Sanction made by the Trent Council, that all ſuch perſons ſhould vow and ſwear to abide in Obedience to the Roman Church; and conſequently, how hard ſoever its Yoke ſhould be, they would not ſhake it off: which inferreth moſt abſolute Sovereignty of that Church, or of the Pope, who ruleth the roaſt in it.

—Romanóque Pontifici, B. Petri ſucceſſori, ac Jeſu Chriſti Vicario, veram obedientiam ſpondeo ac juro. Bull. Pii IV. ſuper forma juram.

Proviſi de beneficiis —— in Romanæ Eccleſiæ obedientia ſe permanſuros ſpondeant ac jurent. Conc. Trid. Seſſ. 24. cap. 12.

But what that true Obedience doth import, or how far the Papal Authority in the Pope's own ſenſe, and according to the publick ſpirit of that Church, doth ſtretch, is more explicitly ſignified in the Oath which all Biſhops at their Conſecration, and all Metropolitans at their Inſtalment, are required to take; the which, as it is extant in the Roman Pontifical, ſet out by order of Pope Clement VIII. doth run in theſe terms.

Pontif. Rom. Antwerp. Anno 1626. p. 59. & p. 86.

I N. Elect of the Church of N. from henceforward will be faithful and obedient to St. Peter the Apoſtle, and to the Holy Roman Church, and to our Lord, the Lord N. Pope N. and to his Succeſſors canonically coming in. I will neither adviſe, conſent, or do any thing that they may loſe life or member, or that their Perſons may be ſeized or hands any-wiſe laid upon them, or any injuries offer'd to them under any pretence whatſoever. The counſel which they ſhall intruſt me withal, by themſelves, their Meſſengers or Letters, I will not knowingly reveal to any to their prejudice. I will help them to defend and keep the Roman Papacy, and the Royalties of St. Peter, ſaving my Order, againſt all Men. The Legate of the Apoſtolick See, going and coming, I will honourably treat and help in his neceſſities, The rights, honours, privileges, and authority of the Holy Roman Church, of our Lord the Pope, and his foreſaid Succeſſors, I will endeavour to preſerve, defend, increaſe and advance. I will not be in any counſel, action or treaty in which ſhall be plotted againſt our ſaid Lord, and the ſaid Roman Church any thing to the hurt or prejudice of their perſons, right, honour, ſtate or power; and if I ſhall know any ſuch thing to be treated or agitated by any whatſoever, I will hinder it to my power; and as ſoon as I can will ſignifie it to our ſaid Lord, or to ſome other by whom it may come to his knowledge. The Rules of the Holy Fathers, the Apoſtolick decrees, ordinances or diſpoſals, reſervations, proviſions and mandates I will obſerve with all my might, and cauſe to be obſerved by others. Hereticks, Schiſmaticks, and Rebels to our ſaid Lord or his foreſaid Succeſſors I will to my power perſecute and oppoſe. I will come to a Council when I am call'd, unleſs I be hinder'd by a Canonical impediment. I will by my ſelf in perſon viſit the threſhold of the Apoſtles every three years; and give an account to our Lord and his foreſaid Succeſſors of all my Paſtoral Office, and of all things any wiſe belonging to the ſtate of my Church, to the diſcipline of my Clergy and People, and laſtly to the ſalvation of Souls committed to my truſt; and will in like manner humbly receive and diligently execute the Apoſtolick commands. And if I be detain'd by a lawful impediment, I will perform all the things aforeſaid by a certain Meſſenger hereto ſpecially impower'd, a member of my Chapter, or ſome other in Eccleſiaſtical Dignity or elſe having a Parſonage; or in default of theſe, by a Prieſt of the Dioceſe; or in default of one of the Clergy [of the Dioceſe] by ſome other Secular or Regular Prieſt of approved Integrity and Religion, fully inſtructed in all things abovementioned. And ſuch impediment I will make out by lawful proofs to be tranſmitted by the foreſaid Meſſen-

Ego N. Electus Eccleſiæ N. ab hac hora in antea fidelis & obediens ero B. Petro Apoſtolo, Sanctæque Romanæ Eccleſiæ, & Domino noſtro, Domino N. Papæ N. ſuiſque Succeſſoribus canonicè intrantibus. Non ero in conſilio, aut conſenſu, vel facto, ut vitam perdant, aut membrum; ſeu capiantur mala captione; aut in eos manus quomodolibet ingerantur; vel injuriæ aliquæ inferantur, quovis quæſito colore. Conſilium verò quod mihi credituri ſunt, per ſe, aut Nuncios ſuos, ſeu literas, ad eorum damnum, me ſciente, nemini pandam. Papatum Romanum & Regalia Sancti Petri adjutor eis ero ad defendendum & retinendum, ſalvo meo ordine, contra omnem hominem. Legatum Apoſtolicæ Sedis in eundo & redeundo honorificè tractabo, & in ſuis neceſſitatibus adjuvabo. Jura, honores, privilegia, & auctoritatem Sanctæ Romanæ Eccleſiæ, Domini noſtri Papæ & Succeſſorum prædictorum, conſervare, defendere, augere, promovere curabo. Neque ero in conſilio, vel facto, ſeu tractatu in quibus contra ipſum Dominum noſtrum, vel eandem Romanam Eccleſiam aliqua ſiniſtra vel præjudicialia perſonarum, juris, honoris, ſtatûs & poteſtatis eorum machinentur. Et ſi talia à quibuſcunque tractari vel procurari novero, impediam hoc pro poſſe, & quanto citiùs potero ſignificabo eidem Domino noſtro, vel alteri per quem poſſit ad ipſius notitiam pervenire. Regulas Sanctorum Patrum, decreta, ordinationes, ſeu diſpoſitiones, reſervationes, proviſiones & mandata Apoſtolica totis viribus obſervabo, & faciam ab aliis obſervari. Hæreticos, Schiſmaticos & Rebelles eidem Domino noſtro vel Succeſſoribus prædictis pro poſſe perſequar & impugnabo. Vocatus ad Synodum veniam, niſi præpeditus fuero canonicâ præpeditione. Apoſtolorum limina ſingulis trienniis perſonaliter per me ipſum viſitabo, & Domino noſtro ac Succeſſoribus præfatis rationem reddam de toto meo paſtorali officio ac de rebus omnibus ad meæ Eccleſiæ ſtatum, ad cleri, & populi diſciplinam, animarum denique quæ meæ fidei traditæ ſunt, ſalutem quovis modo pertinentibus, & viciſſim mandata Apoſtolica humiliter recipiam & quàm diligentiſſimè exequar. Quod ſi legitimo impedimento detentus fuero præfata omnia adimplebo per Certum Nuncium ad hoc ſpeciale mandatum habentem de gremio mei Capituli, aut alium in dignitate Eccleſiaſtica conſtitutum, ſeu aliàs perſonatum habentem; aut, his mihi deficientibus, per diœceſanum Sacerdotem; & clero deficiente omninò per aliquem alium Presbyterum ſecularem vel regularem ſpectatæ probitatis & religionis de ſupradictis omnibus plenè inſtructum. De hujuſmodi autem impedimento docebo per legitimas probationes ad Sanctæ Romanæ Eccleſiæ Cardinalem Proponentem in Congregatione Sacri Concilii per ſupradictum Nuncium tranſmittendas. Poſſeſſiones verò ad menſam meam pertinentes non vendam, nec donabo neque impignorabo, nec de novo infeudabo ger to the Cardinal Proponent of the Holy Roman Church in the Congregation of the Sacred Council. The Poſſeſſions belonging to my Table I will neither ſell nor give away, nor mortgage, nor grant anew in fee, nor any wiſe alienate, no not even with the conſent of the Chapter of my Church, without conſulting the Roman Pontiſe. And if I ſhall make any alienation, I will thereby incur the Penalties contain'd in a certain Conſtitution put forth about this matter. So help me God and the Holy Goſpels of God.

vel aliquo modo alienabo, etiam cum conſenſu Capituli Eccleſiæ meæ, inconſulto Romano Pontifice. Et ſi ad aliquam alienationem devenero, pœnas in quadam ſuper hoc edita conſtitutione contentas eo ipſo incurrere volo. Sic me Deus adjuvet & hæc Sancta Dei Evangelia.

Such is the Oath preſcribed to Biſhops, the which is worth the moſt ſerious attention of all Men, who would underſtand how miſerably ſlaviſh the condition of the Clergy is in that Church, and how inconſiſtent their obligation to the Pope is with their duty to their Prince.

And in peruſing it we may note, that the clauſes in a different character are in the more ancient Oath extant in the Gregorian Decretals: by which it appeareth how the Pope doth more and more enlarge his Power, and ſtraiten the bands of Subjection to him. And it is very remarkable that the new Oath hath chang'd thoſe words REGULAS SANCTORUM PATRUM into REGALIA SANCTI PETRI, i. e. THE RULES OF THE HOLY FATHERS into THE ROYALTIES OF SAINT PETER.

Gregor. Decret. lib. 2. tit. 24. cap. 4.

§. XV. I know there are within the Roman Communion great ſtore of Divines, who do contract the Papal Sovereignty within a much narrower compaſs, refuſing to him many of thoſe Prerogatives, yea ſcarce allowing to him any of them.

There are thoſe who affirm the Pope, in Doctrine and Diſcipline, ſubject to the Church, or to a General Synod repreſenting it. Which opinion thwarteth a propoſition, in Bellarmine's opinion, e'en almoſt an Article of Faith: but to be even with him, they do hold his propoſition to be quite heretical: The Pope is ſimply and abſolutely above the Univerſal Church—this propoſition is almoſt an Article of Faith, ſaith Bellarmine: The Cardinal of Lorrain on the contrary, But I (ſaith he) cannot deny but that I am a French-man, and bred up in the Church of Paris, which teaches that the Roman Pontiſe is ſubject to a Council, and they who teach the contrary are there branded as Hereticks.

* Summus Pontifex ſimpliciter & abſolutè eſt ſupra Eccleſiam Univerſam; —— hæc propoſitio eſt ferè de fide. Bell. de Conc. 2. 17.

Ego verò negare non poſſum quin Gallus ſim, & Pariſienſis Eccleſiæ alumnus, in quâ Rom. Pontificem ſubeſſe concilio tenetur, & qui docent ibi contrarium, ii tanquam hæretici notantur. Card. Loth. apud Laun. Ep. 1. 1.

There are thoſe who affirm the Pope, if he undertake Points of Faith without aſſiſtance of a General Synod, may teach Hereſie: (*which opinion, as Bellarmine thought, doth cloſely border on Hereſie:) And thoſe who conceive that Popes may be, and have been Hereticks; whence Chriſtians ſometimes are not obliged to admit their Doctrine, or obſerve their pleaſure.

* Quæ ſententia videtur omnino erronea & hæreſi proxima. Bell. 4. 2.

There are thoſe who maintain the Pope, no leſs than other Biſhops, ſubject to the Canons, or bound to obſerve the Conſtitutions of the Church; that he may not infringe them, or over-rule againſt them, or diſpenſe with them: and that to him attempting to do ſo obedience is not due.

There are thoſe who maintain, that the Pope cannot ſubvert or violate the Rights and Liberties of particular Churches, ſettled in them agreeably to the ancient Canons of the Church Univerſal.

There are thoſe who aſſert to General Councils a power of Reforming the Church, without or againſt the Pope's conſent.

There are thoſe who (as Bellarmine telleth us) do allow the Pope to be no more in the Eccleſiaſtical Republick, than as the Duke of Venice in his Senate, or as the General of an Order in his Congregation; and that he therefore hath but a very limited and ſubordinate Power.

There are conſequently thoſe who conceive the Pope notoriouſly erring, or miſdemeaning himſelf to the prejudice of the Chriſtian State, may be called to an account, may be judged, may be corrected, may be diſcarded by a General Synod.

Such notions have manifeſtly prevailed in a good part of the Roman Communion, and are maintained by moſt Divines in the French Church; and they may be ſuppoſed every-where common, where there is any liberty of judgment, or where the Inquiſition doth not reign.

There have been ſeaſons wherein they have ſo prevailed, as to have been defined for Catholick Truths in great Synods, and by them to have been applied to practice. For,

In the firſt great Synod of Piſa it was declared, that Councils may reform the Church ſufficiently both in Head and Members: and accordingly that Synod did aſſume to judge two Popes (Gregory XII. and Benedict XIII.) contending for the Papacy, (whereof one was the true Pope,) and depoſing them both, did ſubſtitute Alexander V. who for one year (as Antoninus reporteth) according to the common opinion did hold the Seat of Peter.

An. 1409. Conc. Piſ. Seſſ. 16, 17.

Qui anno uno ſedem Petri tenuit, ſecundum communem opinionem. Anton. de Concil. Piſ. cap. 5. §. 3.

The Synod of Conſtance declared, that the Synod lawfully aſſembled in the Holy Ghoſt, making a General Council repreſenting the Catholick Church militant, hath immediately power from Chriſt; to which every one, of whatever ſtate or dignity he be, although it be Papal, is bound to obey in thoſe things which belong to Faith, and the extirpation of (the ſaid) Schiſm, and the general reformation of the Church of God in Head and Members.

Primò declarat quòd ipſa Synodus, &c. Seſſ. 4. & 5.

The which Doctrine they notably put in practice, exerciſing juriſdiction over Popes, and for Errors, Miſdemeanors, or Contumacies diſcarding three (of whom it is hard if one were not true Pope,) and chuſing another, who afterward did paſs for a right Pope, and himſelf did confirm the Acts of that Council. (So that this Semi-hereſie hath at leaſt the authority of one Pope to countenance it.) Our moſt holy Lord the Pope ſaid in anſwer thereunto, that he would maintain and inviolably obſerve all and every of thoſe things that were conciliarly determin'd, concluded and decreed by the preſent Council in matters of Faith.

Sanctiſſ. Dominus noſter Papa dixit, reſpondendo ad prædicta, quod omnia & ſingula determinata, concluſa & decreta in materiis fidei per præſens concilium conciliariter tenere, & inviolabiliter obſervare volebat. Conc. Conſt. Seſſ. 45. p. 1119.

The Synod of Baſil declared the ſame Point, that Councils are ſuperiour to Popes, to be a truth of Catholick Faith, which whoever doth ſtiffly oppoſe is to be accounted a Heretick: Nor (ſay they) did any skilful Man ever doubt the Pope to be ſubject to the judgment of General Synods in things concerning Faith. In virtue of which Doctrine, and by its irreſiſtible authority, the Synod did ſentence and reject Pope Eugenius as criminal, heretical and contumacious.

Veritas de poteſtate Concilii ſupra Papam——eſt veritas fidei Catholicæ——cui pertinaciter repugnans eſt cenſendus hæreticus. Conc. Baſ. Seſſ. 33. (p. 95.)

Nec unquam aliquis peritorum dubitavit, ſummum Pontificem in his quæ fidem concernunt judicio earundem generalium Synodorum eſſe ſubjectum. Concil. Baſ. Seſſ. 45. p. 117.

Vigore cujus, ac ineffabili & inexpugnabili authoritate——Seſſ. 38. p. 101.

Theſe Synods, although reprobated by Popes * in Counter-ſynods, are yet by many Roman Catholick Divines retained in great veneration; and their Doctrine is ſo current in the famous Sorbonne, that (if we may believe the great Cardinal of Lorrain) the contrary is there reputed heretical.

* (Concil. Later. &c.)

Ego verò negare non poſſum, &c

§. XVI. Yet notwithſtanding theſe oppoſitions, the former Opinion averring the Pope's abſolute Sovereignty, doth ſeem to be the genuine Doctrine of the Roman Church, if it hath any.

For thoſe Divines by the Pope and his intimate Confidents are looked upon as a mongrel brood, or mutinous faction; which he by politick connivence doth only tolerate, becauſe he is not well able to correct or ſuppreſs them. He is afraid to be violent in reclaiming them to his ſenſe, leſt he ſpend his artillery in vain, and loſe all his power and intereſt with them.

Nam adhuc videmus ab Eccleſia tolerari, qui eam ſententiam ſequuntur —— Bell. 4. 2.

Nor indeed do thoſe Men ſeem to adhere to the Roman Party out of entire judgment or cordial affection; but in compliance with their Princes, or upon account of their Intereſt, or at beſt with regard to peace and quiet. They cannot conveniently break with the Pope, becauſe his Intereſt is twiſted with their own, ſo as not eaſily to be diſentangled.

For how can they heartily ſtick to the Pope, whenas their Opinion doth plainly imply him to be an Uſurper and a Tyrant, (claiming to himſelf, and exerciſing authority over the Church, which doth not rightfully belong to him;) to be a Rebel and Traitor againſt the Church, (invading and poſſeſſing the Sovereignty due to it; for ſuch queſtionleſs the Duke of Venice would be, ſhould he challenge and aſſume to himſelf ſuch a Power over his Commonwealth, as the Pope hath over Chriſtendom;) to be an Impoſtor and Seducer, pretending to infallible conduct, which he hath not.

How can they honeſtly condemn thoſe who (upon ſuch grounds) do ſhake off ſuch yokes, refuſing to comply with the Pope, till he correct his Errors, till he deſiſt from thoſe Uſurpations and Impoſtures, till he reſtore to the Church its Rights and Liberties?

How are the Doctrines of thoſe Men conſiſtent or congruous to their practice? For they call the Pope Monarch of the Church, and Univerſal Paſtor of Chriſtians, by God's appointment, indefectibly; yet will they not admit all his Laws, and reject Doctrines which he teacheth, particularly thoſe which moſt nearly touch him, concerning his own Office and Authority. They profeſs themſelves his loyal Subjects, yet pretend Liberties which they will maintain againſt him. They hold that all are bound to entertain Communion with him, yet confeſs that he may be heretical, and ſeduce into Error. They give him the name and ſhadow of a Supremacy, but ſo that they void the ſubſtance and reality thereof.

Manifeſtum autem Schiſmatis argumentum eſt, cùm quis ſe communioni ſubtrahit Apoſtolicæ ſedis. Baluſ. not. ad Agobard. p. 112.

It is a manifeſt Argument of Schiſm, when any Man withdraws himſelf from Communion with the Apoſtolick See.

In fine, where ſhould we ſeek for the Doctrine of the Roman Church, but at Rome, or from Rome it ſelf? Where theſe Doctrines are Heterodoxies.

§. XVII. We ſhall not therefore have a diſtinct regard to the Opinion of theſe Semi-romaniſts; nor conſider them otherwiſe, than to confirm that part of Truth which they hold, and to confute that part of Error which they embrace; allowing, at leaſt in word and ſemblance, more power to the Pope, than we can admit as due to him. Our diſcourſe ſhall be levelled at him as ſuch as he pretendeth himſelf to be, or as aſſuming to himſelf the forementioned Powers and Prerogatives.

§. XVIII. Of ſuch vaſt Pretences we have reaſon to require ſufficient Grounds. He that demandeth aſſent to ſuch important Aſſertions, ought to produce clear proofs of them: He that claimeth ſo mighty Power, ſhould be able to make out a good Title to it; for No Man may take this (more than Pontifical) honour to himſelf, but he that is called by God, as was Aaron. They are worthily to be blamed, who tumultuouſly and diſorderly fall upon curbing or reſtraining thoſe who by no law are ſubject to them.

Heb. 5. 4.

Jure culpandi ſunt, qui turbidè atque inordinatè in eos coërcendos inſiliunt, qui nullâ ſibi lege ſubjecti ſunt. Aug. de Unit. Eccl. cap. 17.

We cannot well be juſtified from a ſtupid Eaſineſs, in admitting ſuch a Lieutenancy to our Lord, if we do not ſee exhibited to us manifeſt and certain Patents aſſuring its Commiſſion to us. We ſhould love the Church better, than to yield up its Liberty to the will of a Pretender, upon ſlight or no ground. Their boldly claiming ſuch a Power, their having ſometime uſurped ſuch a Power, will not excuſe them or us. Nor will precarious Aſſumptions, or ſubtil Diſtinctions, or blind Traditions, or looſe Conjectures ſerve for probations in ſuch a caſe.

Nemo ſibi & profeſſor & teſtis eſt. Tertul. 5. 1. adv. Marc.

None can be both a Claimer and a Witneſs for himſelf.

§. XIX. Such demands they cannot wholly balk: wherefore for ſatisfaction to them, not finding any better plea, they hook in St. Peter; affirming that on him by our Lord there was inſtated a Primacy over his brethren, all the Apoſtles and the Diſciples of our Lord, importing all the Authority which they claim; and that from him this Primacy was devolved by ſucceſſion to the Biſhops of Rome, by right indefectible for all future Ages.

Which Plea of theirs doth involve theſe main Suppoſitions,

I. That St. Peter had a Primacy over the Apoſtles.

II. That St. Peter*'s Primacy with its Rights and Prerogatives was not perſonal but derivable to his Succeſſors.*

III. That St. Peter was Biſhop of Rome.

IV. That St. Peter did continue Biſhop of Rome, after his Tranſlation, and was ſo at his deceaſe.

V. That the Biſhops of Rome (according to God's Inſtitution, and by original right derived thence) ſhould have an Univerſal Supremacy and Juriſdiction over the Chriſtian Church.

VI. That in fact the Roman Biſhops continually from St. Peter*'s time have enjoyed and exerciſed this Sovereign Power.*

VII. That this Power is indefectible and unalterable.

The Truth and Certainty of theſe Propoſitions we ſhall in order diſcuſs; ſo that it may competently appear, whether thoſe who diſclaim theſe Pretences are (as they are charged) guilty of Hereſie and Schiſm; or they rather are liable to the imputations of Arrogancy and Impiety who do obtrude and urge them.

E A

A TREATISE OF THE Pope's Supremacy.

MATTH. X. 2.

πρῶτος Σίμων. Now the Names of the twelve Apoſtles were theſe; the firſt, Simon, who is called Peter.

AMONG the Modern Controverſies there is ſcarce any of greater conſequence, than that about Univerſal Supremacy, which the Biſhop of Rome claimeth over the Chriſtian Church; the aſſertion whereof on his ſide dependeth upon divers Suppoſitions; namely theſe.

I. That Saint Peter by our Lord's appointment had a Primacy, implying a Sovereignty of Authority and Juriſdiction over the Apoſtles.

II. That the Rights and Prerogatives of this Sovereignty were not perſonal, but derivable, and tranſmitted to Succeſſors.

III. That Saint Peter was Biſhop of Rome.

IV. That Saint Peter did continue Biſhop of Rome after his Tranſlation, and was ſo at his deceaſe.

V. That hence of Right to the Biſhops of Rome, as Saint Peter*'s Succeſſors, an Univerſal Juriſdiction over the whole Church of* Chriſt doth appertain.

VI. That in Fact the ſaid Biſhops continually from Saint Peter*'s time have enjoyed and exerciſed this Power.*

VII. That this Power is indefectible; ſuch as by no means can be forfeited or fail.

In order to the diſcuſſion and reſolution of the firſt Point, I ſhall treat upon the Primacy of Saint Peter; endeavouring to ſhew what Primacy he was capable of, or might enjoy; what he could not pretend to, nor did poſſeſs.

I. SUP-

SUPPOSITION. I.

The firſt Suppoſition of thoſe who claim Univerſal Juriſdiction to the Pope over the Church, is, That Saint Peter had a Primacy over the Apoſtles.

IN order to the reſolution of this Point, we may conſider, that there are ſeveral kinds of Primacy, which may belong to a Perſon in reſpect of others: for there are,

1. A Primacy of Worth, or Perſonal Excellency.
2. A Primacy of Reputation and Eſteem.
3. A Primacy of Order, or bare Dignity and Precedence.
4. A Primacy of Power or Juriſdiction.

To each of theſe what Title Saint Peter might have, let us in order examine.

I. As for the firſt of theſe (a Primacy of Worth, or Merit, as ſome of the Ancients call it) we may well grant it to Saint Peter, admitting that probably he did exceed the reſt of his Brethren in perſonal Endowments and Capacities, (both natural and moral) qualifying him for the diſcharge of the Apoſtolical Office in an eminent manner; particularly that in quickneſs of apprehenſion, in boldneſs of ſpirit, in readineſs of ſpeech, in charity to our Lord, and zeal for his Service, in reſolution, activity and induſtry he was tranſcendent, may ſeem to appear by the tenour of the Evangelical and Apoſtolical Hiſtories; in the which we may obſerve him upon all occaſions ready to ſpeak firſt, and to make himſelf the mouth (as the Fathers ſpeak) of the Apoſtles, in all deliberations nimble at propounding his advice, in all undertakings forward to make the onſet; being πανταχοῦ θερμὸς, always hot and eager, always prompt and vigorous, as St. Chryſoſtom often affirmeth concerning him: theſe things are apparent in his demeanour, and it may not be amiſs to ſet down ſome inſtances.

Εὐπερίστροφος γὰρ ἀεί πως ἦν ἄνθρωπος, κεκεντρωμένος οὐ μετρίως εἰς τὴν ἐπὶ τῷ δρᾶσαι καὶ εἰπεῖν προθυμίαν. Cyrill. in Joh. 21. 15. He was a very active and ſtirring man, exceedingly ſpurr'd on with much promptneſs and alacrity in doing and ſpeaking.

Πανταχοῦ εὑρίσκεται ἀπὸ πόθου ὁρμῶν. Chryſ. in Joh. Or. 12. (13.24.)

Διὰ πάντων καὶ ἐν πᾶσιν τὴν αὐτὴν ἐμφαίνει θερμότητα. Chryſoſt. Tom. 5. Orat. 59.

When our Lord obſerving the different apprehenſions men had concerning him, asked the Apoſtles, but whom ſay ye that I am, up ſtarteth he, προπηδᾷ καὶ προλαμβάνεται, he ſkippeth forth, and preventeth the reſt, crying, Thou art the Chriſt, the Son of the living God. The other Apoſtles were not ignorant of the Point; for they at their Converſion did take Jeſus for the Meſſias, which (even according to the common Notion of the Jews) did imply his being the Son of God; Nathanael (that is, Saint Bartholomew, as is ſuppoſed) had in terms confeſſed it; the whole company, upon ſeeing our Lord walk on the Sea, had avowed it; Saint Peter before that, in the name of them all had ſaid, Ἡμεῖς πεπιστεύκαμεν, καὶ ἐγνώκαμεν, We have believed, and have known, that thou art the Chriſt, the Son of the living God. They therefore had the ſame Faith, but he from a ſpecial alacrity of ſpirit, and expedition in utterance, was more forward to declare it; He was more hot (ſaith St. Greg. Naz.) than the reſt at acknowledging Chriſt.

Matt. 16. 16.

Licèt cæteri Apoſtoli ſciant, Petrus tamen reſpondet pro cæteris. Ambr. in Luc. lib. 6. cap. 9.

Joh. 1. 42, 46.

Matt. 26. 63.

Joh. 1. 50.

Matt. 14. 33.

Joh. 6. 69.

Θερμότερος τῶν ἄλλων εἰς ἐπίγνωσιν Χριστοῦ. Greg. Naz. Or. 34.

Matt. 14. 28. When our Saviour walked on the Sea, who but He had the Faith and the Courage to venture on the Waters towards him?

Joh. 18. 10. When our Lord was apprehended by the Souldiers, preſently up was his ſpirit, and out went his Sword in defence of him.

Matt. 26. 33. 35. Joh. 13. 37. When our Lord predicted, that upon his coming into trouble all the Diſciples would be offended, and deſert him; he was ready to ſay, Though all men ſhould be offended becauſe of thee, yet will I never be offended; and, Though I ſhould die with thee, yet will I not deny thee; ſuch was his natural courage and confidence.

Matt 16. 22. When our Lord was diſcourſing about his Paſſion, he ſuddenly muſt be adviſing in the caſe, and urging him to ſpare himſelf; upon which St. Chryſoſtom biddeth us to conſider, not that his anſwer was unadviſed, but that it came from a genuine and fervent affection.

Μὴ τοῦτο ἐξετάσωμεν, ὅτι ἀπερίσκεπτος ἡ ἀπόκρισις· ἀλλ' ὅτι γνησίου πόθου ἦν καὶ ζέοντος. Tom. 5. Or. 59.

Μὴ εἰδὼς ὃ λέγει. Mark 9. 6. Luk. 9. 33. And at the Transfiguration, he fell to propoſing about making an abode there, not knowing what he ſaid; ſo brisk was he in imagination and ſpeech.

Luk. 24. 12, 34. Joh 20. 3. Upon the good Womans report that our Lord was riſen from the dead, he firſt ran to the Sepulchre, and ſo (as Saint Paul implieth) did obtain the firſt ſight of our Lord after the Reſurrection; ſuch was his zeal and activity upon all occaſions.

καὶ ὅτι ὤφθη Κηφᾷ, εἶτα τοῖς δώδεκα. 1 Cor 15. 5. And that he appeared to Cephas, after that to the twelve.

Acts 1. 15. At the Conſultation about ſupplying the place of Judas, he roſe up, propoſed, and preſſed the matter.

Acts 15. 7. At the Convention of the Apoſtles and Elders about reſolving the debate concerning obſervance of Moſaical Inſtitutions, he firſt roſe up, and declared his ſenſe.

In the Promulgation of the Goſpel, and Defence thereof before the Jewiſh Rulers, he did aſſume the conduct, and conſtantly took upon him to be the Speaker; the reſt ſtanding by him, implying aſſent, and ready to avow his word; Peter (ſaith Saint Luke) ſtanding with the reſt lift up his voice, and ſaid unto them; ſo did they utter a common voice, (ſaith St. Chryſ.) and he was the mouth of all.

Κοινὴν προεβάλλοντο φωνήν, καὶ πάντων αὐτὸς ἦν τὸ στόμα.

Aug. in Joh. Tract. 123.

Ὁ μανικὸς ἐραστὴς τοῦ Χριστοῦ. Chryſ. Tom. 5. Or. 24. An extreme lover of Chriſt.

Sæpe diximus nimii ardoris, amoriſq; quam maximi fuiſſe Petrum in Dominum. Hier. in Mat. 16. 22.

We have often ſaid that Peter was tranſported with too much heat, and extraordinary great love of our Lord.

Ipſe enim Petrus in Apoſtolorum ordine primus, in Chriſti amore promptiſſimus, ſæpe unus reſpondet pro omnibus. Aug. Serm. 13. de verb. Dom. in Matt. 1.

For Peter himſelf being firſt in the Order of the Apoſtles, and moſt prompt and forward in the Love of Chriſt, anſwer'd oftentimes alone for all the reſt.

That in affection to our Lord, and zeal for for his ſervice, Saint Peter had ſome advantage over the reſt, that Queſtion, Simon Peter, doſt thou love me more than theſe? may ſeem to imply: (although the words πλέον τούτων may bear other interpretations, whereby the ſeeming invidiouſneſs of the Queſtion according to that ſenſe will be removed.) However, that he had a ſingular zeal for promoting our Lord's ſervice, and propagation of the Goſpel, therein outſhining the reſt, ſeemeth manifeſt in the Hiſtory, and may be inferred from the peculiar regard our Lord apparently did ſhew to him.

Upon theſe Premiſſes we may well admit that Saint Peter had a Primacy of Worth; or that in perſonal accompliſhments he was moſt eminent among the twelve Apoſtles; (although afterward there did ſpring up one, who hardly in any of theſe reſpects would yield to him; who could confidently ſay, That

That he did not come behind the very chief Apoſtles: and of whom St. Ambroſe ſaith, * Neither was Paul inferiour to Peter —— being well to be compar'd even to the firſt, and ſecond to none: and St. Chryſoſtom, † For what was greater than Peter, and what equal to Paul?) This is the Primacy which Euſebius attributeth to him, when he calleth him, the excellent and great Apoſtle, who for his vertue was the Prologuutor of all the reſt.

1 Cor. 15. 10. 2 Cor. 11. 23. 2 Cor. 11. 5. & 12. 11.

* Nec Paulus inferior Petro —— cum primo quoq; facilè conferendus, & nulli ſecundus. Ambr. de Sp. S. 2. 12.

† Τί γὰρ Πέτρου μεῖζον; τί δὲ Παύλου ἴσον. Chryſ. Tom. 5. Orat. 167.

Τὸν καρτερὸν καὶ μέγαν τῶν Ἀποστόλων, τὸν ἀρετῆς ἕνεκα τῶν λοιπῶν ἁπάντων προήγορον. Euſeb. Hiſt. 2. 4.

II. As to a Primacy of Repute; which Saint Paul meaneth, when he ſpeaketh of the οἱ δοκοῦντες, thoſe which had a ſpecial reputation, of thoſe who ſeemed to be Pillars, of the ὑπὲρ λίαν Ἀπόστολοι, the ſupereminent Apoſtles; this advantage cannot be refuſed him; being a neceſſary conſequent of thoſe eminent qualities reſplendent in him, and of the illuſtrious performances atchieved by him, beyond the reſt. Gal 2. 2, 6. Gal. 2. 9. 2 Cor. 11. 5. 12. 11.

This may be inferred from that advantageous renown, which he hath had propagated from the beginning to all poſterity.

This at leaſt thoſe elogies of the Fathers (ſtyling him the Chief, Prince, Head of the Apoſtles) do ſignify.

Ὁ ἐπιφανέστατος τῶν Ἀποστόλων Πέτρος. Ath. diſp. c. Arium, p. 121.

This alſo may be collected from his being ſo conſtantly ranked in the firſt place, before the reſt of his Brethren.

III. As to a Primacy of Order, or bare Dignity, importing, that commonly in all meetings and proceedings the other Apoſtles did yield him the precedence, the προηγορία or privilege of ſpeaking firſt (whether in propounding matters for debate, or in delivering his advice) in the conduct and moderation of affairs; that this was ſtated on him, may be queſtioned; for that this were a kind of womaniſh privilege; and that it doth not ſeem to befit the gravity of ſuch perſons, or their condition and circumſtances to ſtand upon ceremonies of reſpect; for that alſo our Lords Rules do ſeem to exclude all ſemblance of ambition, all kinds of inequality, and diſtance between his Apoſtles; for that this practice doth not ſeem conſtantly and thoroughly to agree to his being endowed with this advantage; eſpecially ſeeing all that practice which favoureth it, may fairly be aſſigned to other cauſes; for that alſo the Fathers Authority (if that be objected, as a main argument of ſuch a Primacy) in points of this nature, not bordering on eſſentials of Faith, is of no great ſtrength; they in ſuch caſes ſpeaking out of their own ingeny and conjecture; and commonly indulging their imaginations no leſs freely than other men.

But yet this Primacy may be granted, as probable upon divers accounts of uſe and convenience; it might be uſeful to preſerve order, and to promote expedition, or to prevent confuſion, diſtraction, and dilatory obſtruction in the management of things; yea to maintain concord, and to exclude that ambition or affectation to be foremoſt, which is natural to men.

For ſeeing all could not go, ſpeak, or act firſt, all could not guide affairs, it was expedient that one ſhould be ready to undertake it, knowing his cue; See (ſaith St. Chryſoſtom, noting on Act. 2. 14. where Saint Peter ſpeaketh for the reſt) the concord of the Apoſtles; they yield unto him the ſpeech, for they could not all ſpeak; and One (ſaith St. Hierom) is choſen among the twelve, that a head being appointed, an occaſion of Schiſm might be removed.

Σκόπει τῶν Ἀποστόλων τὴν ὁμόνοιαν, αὐτοὶ παραχωροῦσιν αὐτῷ τῆς δημηγορίας, οὐ γὰρ ἔδει πάντας φθέγγεσθαι. Chryſ. in Act. 2. 14.

Inter duodecim unus eligitur, ut capite conſtituto Schiſmatis tolleretur occaſio. Hier. in Jovin. I. cap. 14.

St. Cyprian,

Cyp. Ep. 73. de unit. Eccl. &c.

St. Cyprian hath a reaſon for it ſomewhat more ſubtile and myſtical, ſuppoſing our Lord did confer on him a preference of this kind to his Brethren (who otherwiſe in power and authority were equal to him) that he might intimate and recommend unity to us; and the other African Doctors (Optatus and St. Auſtin) do commonly harp on the ſame notion: I can diſcern little ſolidity in this conceit, and as little harm.

In typo unitatis— Aug. de Bapt 3.17.

However, ſuppoſing this Primacy (at leaſt in reſpect to the Fathers, who generally ſeem to countenance it) divers probable reaſons may be aſſigned, why it ſhould eſpecially be conferred on Saint Peter.

Petrus—naturâ unus homo erat, gratiâ unus Chriſtianus, abundantiore gratiâ unus idémq; primus Apoſtolus. Aug. in Joh. tract. 123.

Peter was by nature one Man, by grace one Chriſtian, by a more abundant grace one and the ſame prime Apoſtle.

Ipſe enim Petrus in Apoſtolorum ordine primus, in Chriſti amore promptiſſimus, ſæpe unus reſpondet pro omnibus. Aug. de verbis Dom. ſup. Mat. 1. Serm. 13.

For Peter himſelf being the firſt in the Order of the Apoſtles, the moſt forward in the love of Chriſt, he alone oft times anſwers for all the reſt.

1. It is probable, that Saint Peter was firſt in ſtanding among the Apoſtles; I mean not that he was the firſt Diſciple, or firſt converted to Faith in Chriſt; but firſt called to the Apoſtolical Office; or firſt nominated by our Lord, when out of all his Diſciples he choſe twelve and called them Apoſtles; Simon whom he called Peter, and Andrew his Brother—— He was one of the firſt Believers at large; he was perhaps the firſt, that diſtinctly believed our Lord's Divinity; he was probably the very firſt Apoſtle; * as the fitteſt Perſon in our Lord's eye for that employment. He (ſaith St. Hilary) did firſt believe, and is the Prince (or firſt man) of the Apoſtleſhip. He (ſaith St. Cyprian) was the firſt, whom the Lord choſe. He (ſaith St. Baſil) was by judgment preferred before all the Diſciples. He by other Ancients is called the firſt-fruits of the Apoſtles. And according to this ſenſe St. Hierom (I ſuppoſe) doth call him, and his Brother Andrew, Principes Apoſtolorum, that is (according to frequent uſage of the word Princeps in Latin) the firſt of the Apoſtles.

[Προτίθησι δὲ Πέτρον καὶ Ἀνδρέαν, διότι καὶ πρωτόκλητοι. Theoph. in Matt. 10.]

Luke 6. 14. Matt. 4. 18.
Mark 1. 16. Luke 5. 3.

* Γινώσκων τίς ἐν πρώτοις ἄξιος τάττεσθαι, ἐξελέξατο Πέτρον ἀρχηγὸν εἶναι—— Epiph. hær. 51.

Primus credidit, & Apoſtolatûs eſt Princeps. Hil. in Matt. Can. 7.

Quem primum Dominus elegit. Cypr. Ep. 71.

Ὁ πάντων τῶν μαθητῶν προκριθείς. Baſ. de Judicio Dei, Tom. 2. p. 268.

Ἀπαρχὴ τῶν Ἀποστόλων. Modeſt. apud Phot. Cod. 275. Clem. ad Jac.

Hier. in Jovin. 1.

So that as in divers Churches, (perhaps when time was, in all) anciently priority in ordination did ground a right to precedence, as it is in ours, with ſome exception; ſo might Saint Peter upon this account of being firſt ordained Apoſtle, obtain ſuch a Primacy.

2. Saint Peter alſo might be the firſt in age; which among Perſons otherwiſe equal is a fair ground of preference; for he was a married Man; and that before he was called, as is intimated in Saint Luke; and may be inferred from hence, that he would not have married after that he had left all, and devoted himſelf to follow our Lord. Upon which account of Age St. Hierom did ſuppoſe that he was preferred before the beloved Diſciple; why (ſaith he) was not Saint John elected, being a Batchelour? it was deferred to age, becauſe Peter was elder, that a youth and almoſt a boy might not be preferred before men of good age.

Luk. 4 38. 5. 7. Matt. 19. 27.

Sed cur non Joannes electus eſt virgo? ætati delatum eſt, quia Petrus ſenior erat; nè adhuc adoleſcens & penè puer progreſſæ ætatis hominibus præferretur. Hier. in Jovin. 1. 14.

I know that Epiphanius affirmeth St. Andrew to have been the elder Brother; but it doth not appear whether he ſaith it from conjecture, or upon any other ground. And his Authority, although we ſhould ſuppoſe Μικροτέρου ὄντος τοῦ Πέτρου τῷ χρόνῳ τῆς ἡλικίας. Epiph. hær. 51.

Peter being the younger in age.

poſe it bottomed on tradition, is not great; tradition it ſelf in ſuch matters being very ſlippery; and often one tradition croſſing another.

3. The moſt eminent qualifications of Saint Peter, (ſuch as we before deſcribed) might procure to him this advantage.

They might breed in him an honeſt confidence, puſhing him forward on all occaſions to aſſume the former place, and thence by cuſtom to poſſeſs it; for qui ſibi fidet, Dux regit examen — it being in all action, Hor.Ep.1. 19.
as in walking, where he that naturally is moſt vigorous and active doth go before the reſt.

They might induce others to a voluntary conceſſion thereof; for to thoſe, who indiſputably do excel in good qualities or abilities, honeſt and meek Perſons eaſily will yield precedence, eſpecially on occaſions of publick concernment; wherein it is expedient, that the beſt qualified perſons ſhould be firſt ſeen.

Αὐτοὶ παραχωροῦσιν αὐτῷ, &c. Chryſ. in Acts 2. 14.
They yield unto him, &c.

They probably might alſo move our Lord himſelf to ſettle, or at leaſt to inſinuate this order; aſſigning the firſt place to him, whom he knew moſt willing to ſerve him, and moſt able to lead on the reſt in his ſervice.

It is indeed obſervable, that upon all occaſions our Lord ſignified a particular reſpect to him, before the reſt of his Collegues; for to him more frequently than to any of them he directed his diſcourſe; unto him, by a kind of anticipation he granted or promiſed thoſe gifts and privileges, which he meant to confer on them all; Him he did aſſume as Spectator and Witneſs of his glorious Transfiguration; Him he picked out as Companion and Attendant on him in his grievous Agony; His Feet he firſt waſhed; to him he did firſt diſcover himſelf after his Reſurrection (as Saint Paul implieth;) and with him then he did entertain moſt diſcourſe; in eſpecial manner recommending to him the Paſtoral care of the Church; by which manner of proceeding our Lord may ſeem to have conſtituted Saint Peter the firſt in order among the Apoſtles, or ſufficiently to have hinted his mind for their direction, admoniſhing them by his example to render unto him a ſpecial deference.

Matt.16. 16.
Mat.17.1.
Matt.26. 37.
John 13.6.
1 Cor.15. 5.
John 21.

4. The Fathers commonly do attribute his priority to the merit of his Faith and Confeſſion, wherein he did outſtrip his Brethren. He obtained ſupereminent glory by the confeſſion of his bleſſed faith, ſaith St. Hilary. Becauſe he alone of all the reſt profeſſeth his love, Joh.21. therefore he is preferred above all, ſaith St. Ambroſe.

Hil. in Mat. Can.14.p.566.
Supereminentem beatæ fidei ſuæ confeſſione gloriam promeruit. Hil. de Trin. lib.6. p.121.
Ideò quia ſolus profitetur amorem ſuum (John 21.) ex omnibus, omnibus antefertur. Ambr. in Luc. cap.ult.

5. Conſtantly in all the Catalogues of the Apoſtles Saint Peter's name is ſet in the front; and when actions are reported, in which he was concerned jointly with others, he is uſually mentioned firſt, which ſeemeth not done without careful deſign, or ſpecial reaſon.

Matt.10.2.
Mar.3 17.
Luk.6. 14.
Acts 1.13.
Joh.21.2.

Upon ſuch grounds it may be reaſonable to allow Saint Peter a primacy of order; ſuch a one as the Ring-leader hath in a Dance, as the primipilar Centurion had in the Legion, or the Prince of the Senate had there, in the Roman State; at leaſt, as among Earls, Baronets, &c. and others co-ordinate in degree, yet one hath a precedence of the reſt.

VI. As to a Primacy, importing Superiority in power, command, or juriſdiction; this by the Roman Party is aſſerted to Saint Peter, but we have great reaſon to deny it, upon the following conſiderations.

1. For ſuch a Power (being of ſo great importance) it was needful that a Commiſſion from God, its Founder, ſhould be granted in downright and perſpicuous terms; that no man concerned in duty grounded thereon, might have any doubt of it, or excuſe for boggling at it; * it was neceſſary not only for the Apoſtles to bind and warrant their Obedience, but alſo, for us, becauſe it is made the ſole foundation of a like duty incumbent on us; which we cannot heartily diſcharge without being aſſured of our obligation thereto, by clear revelation, or promulgation of God's will in the Holy Scripture; for it was of old a current, and ever will be a true Rule, which St. Auſtin in one caſe thus expreſſeth, I do believe that alſo on this ſide there would be moſt clear authority of the Divine Oracles, if a man could not be ignorant of it, without damage of his ſalvation; and Lactantius thus, Thoſe things can have no foundation, or firmneſs, which are not ſuſtained by any Oracle of God's word.

* It was a reaſonable demand, which was made to our Saviour, Tell us by what authority thou doſt theſe things, or who is he that gave thee this authority? (Luke 20.2) and the reaſonabledeſs of it our Lord did often avow, declaring that if by his doctrine and works he had not vouched the divinity of his authority, it had been no ſin to disbelieve or reject him, (John 5. 31,36. 10. 25,37. 15. 22, 24.)

Credo etiam hinc divinorum eloquiorum clariſſima authoritas eſſet, ſi homo ſine diſpendio promiſſæ ſalutis ignorare non poſſet. Aug. *de pec. mer. & rem.*2. 36.

Nullum fundamentum, aut firmitatem poſſunt habere, quæ nullis divinarum vocum fulciuntur oraculis. Lact.7.2.

But apparently no ſuch Commiſſion is extant in Scripture; the allegations for it being, as we ſhall hereafter ſhew, no-wiſe clear, nor probably expreſſive of any ſuch Authority granted by God; but on the contrary divers clearer teſtimonies are producible derogating from it.

2. If ſo illuſtrious an Office was inſtituted by our Saviour, it is ſtrange that no-where in the Evangelical or Apoſtolical Hiſtory (wherein divers acts and paſſages of ſmaller moment are recorded) there ſhould be any expreſs mention of that Inſtitution; there being not only much reaſon for ſuch a report, but many pat occaſions for it: The time when Saint Peter was veſted with that Authority; the manner and circumſtances of his Inſtalment therein; the nature, rules and limits of ſuch an Office had ſurely well deſerved to have been noted, among other occurrences relating to our Faith and Diſcipline, by the Holy Evangeliſts; no one of them, in all probability, could have forborn punctually to relate a matter of ſo great conſequence, as the ſettlement of a Monarch in God's Church, and a Sovereign of the Apoſtolical College; (from whom ſo eminent Authority was to be derived to all poſterity, for compliance wherewith the whole Church for ever muſt be accountable;) particularly it is not credible that Saint Luke ſhould quite ſlip Luk.1.1. over ſo notable a paſſage, who had (as he telleth us) attained a perfect underſtanding of all things, and had undertaken to write in order the things that were ſurely believed among Chriſtians in his time, of which things, this, if any, was one of the moſt conſiderable.

The time of his receiving Inſtitution to ſuch Authority can hardly be aſſigned. For was it when he was conſtituted by our Lord an Apoſtle?
Matt.10.1. Then indeed probably he began to obtain all the primacy and preeminence he ever had; but no ſuch power doth appear then conferred on him, or at any time in our Saviour's life; at leaſt, if it was, it was ſo covertly and indiſcernibly, that both he himſelf, and all the Apoſtles muſt be ignorant thereof, who a little before our Lord's Paſſion did more than once earneſtly conteſt about Superiority. And it is obſervable, that whereas our Lord before his Paſſion did carefully teach and preſs on the Apoſtles the chief duties, which they were to obſerve in their behaviour behaviour towards each other, The maintenance of peace, of charity, of unity, of humility toward one another; yet of paying due reſpect and obedience to this Superior he ſaid nothing to them.

Mar. 9. 50. Joh. 13. 34. 15. 12. 17. 21.

The collation of that Power could not well be at any time before the celebration of our Lord's Supper, becauſe before that time Saint Peter was ſcarce an Eccleſiaſtical Perſon; at leaſt he was no Prieſt, as the Convention of Trent under a curſe doth require us to believe; for it were ſtrange, that an unconſecrated Perſon, or one who was not ſo much as a Prieſt, ſhould be endowed with ſo much ſpiritual Power.

Joh. 13. 14.

Si quis dixerit, illis verbis, Hoc facite in meam commemorationem, Chriſtum non inſtituiſſe Apoſtolos Sacerdotes —— anathema ſit. Conc. Trid. Seſſ. 22. Can. 2.

If any one ſhall ſay that in thoſe words, Do this in remembrance of me, Chriſt did not ordain his Apoſtles Prieſts —— Let him be accurſed.

After his Reſurrection, our Lord did give divers common Inſtructions, Orders, and Commiſſions to his Apoſtles, but it doth not appear that he did make any peculiar grant to St. Peter; for as to the pretence of ſuch an one drawn out of the Appendix to Saint John's Goſpel, or grounded on the words Paſce oves, we ſhall afterward declare that to be invalid.

Ἐντειλάμενος τοῖς Ἀποστόλοις —— Acts 1. 2. Joh. 20. 21. Matt. 28. 19 Luke 24. 49. Mark 16. 15.

4. If Saint Peter had been inſtituted Sovereign of the Apoſtolical Senate, his Office and State had been in nature and kind very diſtinct from the common Office of the other Apoſtles; as the Office of a King from the Office of any Subject; as an ordinary, ſtanding, perpetual, ſucceſſive Office from one that is only extraordinary, tranſitory, temporary, perſonal and incommunicable; (to ſpeak according to diſtinctions now in uſe, and applied to this caſe) whence probably, as it was expedient to be, it would have been ſignified by ſome diſtinct name, or title, characterizing it, and diſtinguiſhing it from others; as that of Arch-apoſtle, Arch-paſtour, High-prieſt, Sovereign Pontiſe, Pope, his Holineſs, the Vicar of Chriſt, or the like; whereby it might have appeared that there was ſuch an Officer, what the nature of his Office was, what ſpecialty of reſpect and obedience was due to him: But no ſuch name or title (upon any occaſion) was aſſumed by him, or was by the reſt attributed to him, or in Hiſtory is recorded concerning him; the name of an Apoſtle being all that he took on him, or by others was given to him.

5. There was indeed no Office above that of an Apoſtle known to the Apoſtles, or to the Primitive Church; this (ſaith St. Chryſoſtom) was the greateſt authority, and the top of authorities; there was (ſaith he) none before an Apoſtle, none ſuperiour, none equal to him; this he aſſerteth of all the Apoſtles, this he particularly applieth to Saint Paul; this he demonſtrateth from Saint Paul himſelf, who purpoſely enumerateth the chief Officers inſtituted by God in his Church, doth place Apoſtles in the higheſt rank; Our Lord (*ſaith Saint Paul) gave ſome Apoſtles, ſome Prophets, ſome Evangeliſts, ſome Paſtors and Teachers; and God hath ſet ſome in †his Church, firſt Apoſtles, ſecondarily Prophets, thirdly Teachers; πρῶτον Ἀποστόλους, why not firſt a Pope, an Univerſal Paſtor, an Oecumenical Judge, a Vicar of Chriſt, a Head of the Catholick Ἀρχὴ μεγίστη. κορυφὴ τῶν ἀρχῶν. } Chryſ. Tom. 8. p. 114.

Εἶδες ὑψηλὸν καθήμενον τὸν Ἀπόστολον, καὶ οὐδένα πρὸ ἐκείνου ὄντα, οὔτε ἀνώτερον. Ibid.

Τῶν γὰρ Ἀποστόλων ἴσος οὐδεὶς γέγονεν. Chryſ. Tom. 5. Or. 33.

Αὐτοῦ τοῦ Παύλου ἠκούσαμεν ἀριθμοῦντος τὰς ἀρχὰς, καὶ ἐν τῷ ὑψηλοτέρῳ χωρίῳ τὴν Ἀποστολικὴν καθίζοντος. Chryſ. Tom. 8. ubi ſuprà.

We have heard Paul himſelf reckoning up powers or authorities, and placing the Apoſtolical in the higheſt place.

* Eph. 4. 11.

† 1 Cor. 12. 28.

lick Church? Could Saint Paul be ſo ignorant, could he be ſo negligent, or ſo envious, as to paſs by, without any diſtinction, the Supreme Officer, if ſuch a one then had been? As put caſe, that one ſhould undertake to recite the Officers in any State, or Republick, would he not do ſtrangely if he ſhould pretermit the King, the Duke, the Conſul, the Major thereof? Would not any one, confiding in the skill, diligence and integrity of ſuch a Relator, be induced from ſuch an omiſſion to believe there was no ſuch Officer there? St. Chryſoſtom therefore did hence very rationally infer, that the Apoſtolical Office was the Supreme in the Chriſtian ſtate, having no other Superiour to it.

Saint Peter therefore was no more than an Apoſtle, and as ſuch he could have no command over thoſe, who were in the ſame higheſt rank co-ordinate to him; and who as Apoſtles could not be ſubject to any.

6. Our Lord himſelf, at ſeveral times, declared againſt this kind of Primacy, inſtituting equality among his Apoſtles, prohibiting them to affect, to ſeek, to aſſume or admit a ſuperiority of Power one above another.

Luke 22. 14. Luke 22. 24. Τίς αὐτῶν δοκεῖ εἶναι μείζων.

There was (ſaith St. Luke among the twelve, at the participation of the Holy Supper) a ſtrife among them, who of them ſhould be accounted the greateſt, or who had the beſt pretence to Superiority; this ſtrife our Lord preſently did check and quaſh; but how? not by telling them, that he already had decided the caſe in appointing them a Superiour, but rather by aſſuring them, that he did intend none ſuch to be; that he would have no Monarchy, no exercise of any Dominion or authority by one among them over the reſt; but that notwithſtanding any advantages one might have before the other, (as *greater in gifts, or as preceding in any reſpect) they ſhould be one as another, all humbly condeſcending to one another, each being ready to yield help and ſervice to one another; The Kings (ſaid he) of the Gentiles exerciſe Lordſhip over them; and they that exerciſe authority over them, are called benefactors, but ye ſhall not be ſo; but he that is †greater among you let him be as the younger; and he that is ‖ leader, as he that doth miniſter; that is, whatever privilege any of you obtaineth, let it not be employed in way of command, but rather of compliance and ſubſerviency, as occaſion ſhall require; let him not pretend to be a Superior, but rather behave himſelf as an Inferior: thus our Lord did ſmother the debate, by removing from among them, whatever greatneſs any of them did affect or pretend to; forbidding that any of them ſhould,
Luke 22. 25, 26. κυριεύειν, or ἐξουσιάζειν, exerciſe any Dominion or Authority over the reſt, as worldly Princes did over their Subjects.

So doth St. Clemens interpret μείζων, alluding to this place.

* Ἤτω τις πιστὸς, ἤτω δυνατὸς γνῶσιν ἐξειπεῖν, ἤτω σοφὸς ἐν διακρίσει λόγων, ἤτω γοργὸς ἐν ἔργοις, τοσούτῳ μᾶλλον ταπεινοφρονεῖν ὀφείλει, ὅσῳ δοκεῖ μᾶλλον μείζων εἶναι· καὶ ζητεῖν τὸ κοινωφελὲς πᾶσιν, μὴ τὸ ἑαυτοῦ. Clem. ad Corinth. I. p. 63. apud Clem. Alex. Strom. 6. p. 466.

Let a man be faithful, let him be powerful in declaring knowledge, let him be wiſe in diſcovering reaſons, let him be ſtrenuous in works, by ſo much the more ought he to be humble-minded, by how much the more he ſeems to be greater than others; and to ſeek the common benefit of all, and not of himſelf.

† ὁ μείζων.

‖ ὁ ἡγούμενος.

Again upon another occaſion (as the circumſtances of the place do imply) when two of the Apoſtles (of ſpecial worth and conſideration with our Lord, Saint James and Saint John the Sons of Zebedee) did af-Mark 10. 37. Matt. 20. 25. fect a preeminence over the reſt, requeſting of our Lord, Grant unto us, that we may ſit one on thy right-hand, and the other on thy left-hand in thy Glory, (or in thy Kingdom, as Saint Matthew hath it, that is, in that new ſtate, which they conceived our Lord was ready to introduce;) which requeſt doth not ſeem to import any great matter of Authority; nor probably did they deſire ſo much, as our Adverſaries do give to Saint Peter;

yet our Lord doth not only reject their ſute, but generally declareth, that none of them were capable of ſuch a preferment in his Kingdom; which therein differed from worldly Dominion, becauſe in it there was no room for ſuch an ambition; eſpecially in that ſtate of things, wherein the Apoſtles were to be placed; which was a ſtate of undergoing Perſecutions, not of enjoying Dignity, or exerciſing Command; all the preferment, which they reaſonably could aſpire to, being to be diſpenſed in the future ſtate (whereof they were not aware) according to God's preparation, in correſpondence to the patience and induſtry any of them ſhould exert in God's ſervice (upon which account St. Chryſoſtom ſaith, it was a clear caſe, that St. Paul ſhould obtain the preference.

Εὔδηλον ὅτι τῆς ἀνωτάτω ἀπολαύσεται τιμῆς καὶ προεδρίας. Chryſ. Tom 5. Orat. 33.

It was indeed (as our Lord intimateth) incongruous for thoſe, who had forſaken all things for Chriſt, who had embraced a condition of diſgrace, who were deſigned by ſelf-denial, humility, neglect of temporal grandeur, wealth and honour; by undergoing perſecution, and undertaking conformity to our Lord (being baptized with the baptiſm, with which he was baptized) to propagate the Faith of a Crucified Maſter; to ſeek, or take on them authoritative dignity; for among them there could not well be any need of commanding, or being commanded; it was more fit, that all of them ſhould conſpire to help and ſerve one another, in promoting the common deſign and ſervice of their Lord, with mutual condeſcenſion, and compliance; which was the beſt way of recommending themſelves to his acceptance, and obtaining from him anſwerable reward. Such was the drift of our Lord's diſcourſe; whereunto (as in the other caſe) he did annex the prohibition of exerciſing dominion; Ye know (ſaith he) that the Princes of nations exerciſe dominion over them, and they that are great exerciſe authority upon them, but it ſhall not be ſo among you; but whoſoever will be great among you, let him be your miniſter; and whoſoever will be firſt among you, let him be your ſervant; Ὃς ἐὰν θέλῃ, whoever among you hath a mind to ſpecial grandeur and preeminence, let him underſtand, that there is no other to be attained, beſide that which reſulteth from the humble performance of charitable Offices to his Brethren: the which whoever ſhall beſt diſcharge, he alone will become greateſt and higheſt in the eye of God.

* Τότε ἡ ἐπιστασία ἦν οὐ τιμή. ἀλλὰ πρόνοια τῶν ἀρχομένων, &c. Chryſ. in Acts 1. 26.

Then the Government was not an honour, but a provident care of the governed, &c.

Matt. 20. 26.

Again at another time, the Apoſtles dreaming of a ſecular Kingdom to be erected by our Lord, diſputed among themſelves, who ſhould be the greateſt; and for ſatisfaction preſumed to enquire of our Lord about it; when as they ſurely were very ignorant of Saint Peter's being their head, ſo there was a fair occaſion as could be of our Lord's inſtructing them in that point, and injoining their duty towards him; but he did not ſo, but rather taught him together with the reſt not to pretend to any ſuch thing, as preferment above the reſt; He ſitting down called the twelve, and ſaid unto them, If any one deſire to be firſt, the ſame ſhall be laſt of all, and ſervant of all; how could he (conſidering the occaſion and circumſtances of that ſpeech) in plainer terms eſtabliſh equality, or diſcountenance any claim to ſuperiority among them? Had Saint Peter then advanced ſuch a plea, as they now affirm of right belonging to him, would he not thereby have depreſſed and debaſed himſelf to the loweſt degree?

Mar. 9. 34. Luk. 9. 46. Matt. 18. 1.

Mar. 9. 35.

Καὶ τοῖς περὶ πρωτείων φιλονεικοῦσι γνωρίμοις μετ' ἁπλότητος τὴν ἰσότητα παρεγγυᾷ, λέγων ὡς τὰ παιδία αὐτοὺς γενέσθαι δεῖν. Clem. Alex. Str. 5. (*p.*409.)

And to thoſe familiar friends ſtriving for the preeminence, he commends equality together with ſimplicity, ſaying, that they ought to become as little Children.

To impreſs this rule, our Lord then calling a little child, did ſet him in the midſt of them, telling them, that except they were converted (from ſuch ambitious pretences) and became like little children, (wholly void of ſuch conceits) they could not enter into the Kingdom of heaven, that is, could not in effect be ſo much as ordinary good Chriſtians; adjoining, that whoſoever ſhould humble himſelf as did that little child (not affecting, or aſſuming more than ſuch an innocent did) ſhould be greateſt in the kingdom of heaven; in real worth, and in the favour of God tranſcending the reſt; ſo that St. Peter claiming ſuperiority to himſelf would have forfeited any title to eminency among Chriſtians.

Again, as to the power, which is now aſcribed to Saint Peter by the Party of his pretended Succeſſors, we may argue from another place; where our Saviour prohibiting his Diſciples to reſemble the Jewiſh Scribes and Phariſees in their ambitious deſires and practices, their affectations of preeminence, their aſſuming places and titles importing difference of rank and authority, He ſaith, But be ye not called Rabbi, for there is one Maſter (one Guide, or Governour) of you, even Chriſt, but ye are Brethren. How more pregnably could he have declared the nature of his Conſtitution, and the relation of Chriſtians one to another eſtabliſhed therein, to exclude ſuch differences of power? Whereby one doth in way of domination impoſe his opinion or his will on others.

Matt. 23. 8. εἷς καθηγητής.

Ye are all fellow-ſcholars, fellow-ſervants and fellow-children of God; it therefore doth not become you to be any wiſe imperious over one another; but all of you humbly and lovingly to conſpire in learning and obſerving the Precepts of your common Lord; the doing which is backed with a Promiſe, and a Threat ſutable to the purpoſe; He that exalteth himſelf ſhall be abaſed, and he that will abaſe himſelf ſhall be exalted; the which ſentences are to be interpreted according to the intent of the Rules foregoing.

If it be ſaid, that ſuch diſcourſe doth impugn all Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction; I anſwer, that indeed thereby is removed all ſuch haughty, and harſh Rule, which ſome have exerciſed over Chriſtians; that αὐθεντία, (arbitrary power,) that ἐξουσία ἀνυπεύθυνος (abſolute, uncontrollable authority) that τυραννικὴ προνομία (tyrannical prerogative) of which the Fathers complain, that κατακυριεύειν τῶν κλήρων (domineering over their charges) which Saint Peter forbiddeth. We (ſaith St. Chryſoſtoſtom) were deſigned to teach the word, not to exerciſe empire or abſolute ſovereignty; we do bear the rank of adviſers exhorting to duty.

Chryſ. in 1 Tim. 3. 1. in Eph. Or. 11. Iſid. Pel. Ep. 4. 219. 2. 125. Greg. Naz. Orat. 28. 1 Pet. 5. 3.

Εἰς διδασκαλίαν λόγου προεχειρίσθημεν, οὐκ εἰς ἀρχὴν, οὐδὲ εἰς αὐθεντίαν· συμβούλων τάξιν ἐπέχομεν παραινούντων. Chryſ. in Eph. Orat. 11.

A Biſhop (ſaith St. Hierom) differeth from a King, in that a Biſhop preſideth over thoſe that are willing, the King againſt their will; (that is, the Biſhop's governance ſhould be ſo gentle and eaſy, that men hardly can be unwilling to comply with it; but ſhould obey, as Saint Peter exhorteth, οὐκ ἀναγκαστῶς, ἀλλ' ἑκουσίως, not by conſtraint, but of their own accord) and, Let (ſaith he) the Biſhops be content with their honour; let them know

Ille enim nolentibus præeſt, hic volentibus. Hier. Ep. 3. ad Nepot.

Ὁ μέντοι ἑκόντων ὀφείλων ἄρχειν, &c. Chryſ. in Tit 1 7.

He ought to rule them ſo as they may be willing to be ruled, &c.

1 Pet. 5.

Sed contenti ſint honore ſuo; Patres ſe ſciant eſſe non dominos —— Hier. Ep. 62. ad Theoph. cap. 3.

know themſelves to be Fathers, not Lords; they ſhould be loved, not feared.

*Amari parens, & epiſcopus debet, non timeri. Ibid. cap.*1.

And Thou (ſaith St. Bernard to Pope Eugenius) doſt ſuperintend, the name of Biſhop ſignifying to thee not dominion, but duty.

Indè denique ſuperintendis, ſonante tibi Epiſcopi nomine non dominium, ſed officium. Bern. de Conſid. 2. 6.

At leaſt thoſe precepts of our Lord do exclude that power, which is aſcribed to Saint Peter over the Apoſtles themſelves, the which indeed is greater, than in likelihood any Phariſee did ever affect; yea in many reſpects doth exceed any domination which hath been claimed or uſurped by the moſt abſolute Monarch upon earth; for the power of Saint Peter, in their opinion was the ſame, which now the Roman Biſhop doth challenge to himſelf over the Paſtors and People of God's Church, by virtue of ſucceſſion to him; (Saint Peter's power being the baſe of the Papal, and therefore not narrower than its ſuperſtructure; (but what domination comparable to that hath ever been uſed in the world?

What Emperor did ever pretend to a rule ſo wide in extent (in regard either to perſons, or matters) or ſo abſolute in effect?

Who ever, beſide his Holineſs, did uſurp a command not only over the external actions, but the moſt inward cogitations of all mankind; ſubjecting the very minds and conſciences of men to his dictates, his laws, his cenſures?

Who ever thundred Curſes and Damnations on all thoſe, who ſhould preſume to diſſent from his Opinion, or to conteſt his pleaſure?

Who ever claimed more abſolute Power, in making, aboliſhing, ſuſpending Laws, or impoſing upon men what he pleaſed, under obligation of conſcience, and upon extremeſt penalties?

What Prince ever uſed a ſtyle more imperious, than is that which is uſual in the Papal Bulls; Let it be lawful for no man whatever to infringe this expreſſion of our will and command, or to go againſt it with bold raſhneſs.

Nulli hominum liceat hanc paginam noſtræ voluntatis & mandati infringere, vel ei auſu temerario contra ire.

What Domitian more commonly did admit the appellation of Lord, than doth the Pope? our moſt Holy Lord, is the ordinary ſtyle, attributed to him by the Fathers of Trent, as if they were his ſlaves, and intended to enſlave all Chriſtendom to him.

Sanctiſſimus Dominus noſter. Concil. Trid. *Seſſ.*22. *cap.*11.&c.

Who ever did exempt his Clients and Dependents in all Nations from ſubjection to Civil Laws, from undergoing common burthens and taxes, from being judged or puniſhed for their miſdemeanors and crimes?

Who ever claimed a power to diſpoſe of all things one way or other, either directly or indirectly? to diſpoſe even of Kingdoms, to judge Sovereign Princes, and to condemn them, to depoſe them from their authority, abſolving their Subjects from all allegiance to them, and expoſing their Kingdoms to rapine?

To whom but a Pope were ever aſcribed prerogatives like thoſe of judging all men, and himſelf being liable to no judgment, no account, no reproof or blame; ſo that (as a Papal Canon aſſureth us) let a Pope be ſo bad, as by his negligence and male-adminiſtration to carry with him innumerable people to Hell, yet no mortal man whatever muſt preſume here to reprove his faults; becauſe he being to judge all men is himſelf to be judged of no man except he be catcht ſwerving from the Faith; which is a caſe they will hardly ſuffer a man to ſuppoſe poſſible.

Si Papa ſuæ,&c. Grat. diſ 40. *cap.*6.

To

Concil. Lat. ſub Leone X Seſſ. 11. p. 133. (in Orat. Archiep. Patrac.)

To whom but to a Pope was ſuch Power attributed by his followers, and admitted by himſelf, that he could hear thoſe words applying to him, All Power is given to thee in Heaven and in Earth?

Hâc itaque fiduciâ fretus, &c. Excommun. Henrici R. in Concil. Rom. 3. ſub Greg 7. apud Bin. Tom. 7. p. 484.

Agite Apoſtolorum Sanctiſſimi Principes, &c. Plat. in Greg VII In Concil. Rom. 6. apud Bin. p. 491.

Such Power the Popes are wont to challenge, and when occaſion ſerveth do not fail to execute; as Succeſſors of St. Peter; to whom therefore conſequently they aſcribe it; and ſometimes in expreſs terms; as in that brave apoſtrophe of P. Gregory VII. (the Spirit of which Pope hath poſſeſſed his Succeſſors generally) Go to therefore (ſaid he, directing his Speech to Saint Peter, and Saint Paul) moſt Holy Princes of the Apoſtles, and what I have ſaid confirm by your Authority, that now at length all men may underſtand, whether ye can bind and looſe; that alſo ye can take away and give on Earth Empires, Kingdoms, and whatever mortal men can have.

Now if the aſſuming and exerciſing ſuch Powers be not that κατακυριεύειν, and κατεξουσιάζειν, that exalting ones ſelf, that being called Rabbi, Father, Maſter, which our Lord prohibiteth, what is ſo? what then can thoſe words ſignify? what could our Lord mean?

The Authority therefore which they aſſign to Saint Peter, and aſſume to themſelves from him, is voided by thoſe Declarations and Precepts of our Lord; the which it can hardly be well conceived that our Lord would have propoſed, if he had deſigned to conſtitute Saint Peter in ſuch a Supremacy over his Diſciples and Church.

7. Surveying particulars, we ſhall not find any peculiar adminiſtration committed to Saint Peter, nor any privilege conferred on him, which was not alſo granted to the other Apoſtles.

Et quamvis Apoſtolis omnibus poſt reſurrectionem ſuam parem poteſtatem tribuat & dicat, Sicut, &c. Cypr. de Un. Eccl.

2 Cor. 5. 20.
1 Cor. 4. 1. 2 Cor. 6. 4.

Was Saint Peter an Ambaſſador, a Steward, a Miniſter, a Vicar (if you pleaſe) or Surrogate of Chriſt; ſo were they, by no leſs immediate and expreſs warrant than he; for As the Father ſent me, ſo alſo I ſend you, ſaid our Lord preſently before his departure; by thoſe words (as St. Cyprian remarketh) granting an equal Power to all the Apoſtles; and We (ſaith St. Paul) are Ambaſſadors for Chriſt; we pray you in Chriſt's ſtead be reconciled to God; and, So let a man eſteem us as the Miniſters of Chriſt, and Stewards of the Myſteries of God.

Matt. 16. 18.
Apoc. 21. 10, 14.
Eph. 2. 20.

Was Saint Peter a Rock, on which the Church was to be founded? Be it ſo; but no leſs were they all; for the Wall of Jeruſalem, which came down from Heaven, had twelve foundations, on which were inſcribed the names of the twelve Apoſtles of the Lamb; and We (ſaith Saint Paul) are all built upon the foundation of the Prophets and Apoſtles, Chriſt himſelf being the chief Corner-ſtone; whence Equally (ſaith St. Hierom) the ſtrength of the Church is ſetled upon them.

Ex æquo ſuper eos Eccleſiæ fortitudo ſolidatur. Hier. in Jovin. 1. 14.

1 Pet. 2. 5.
1 Cor. 3. 10.

Was Saint Peter an Architect of the Spiritual houſe (as himſelf called the Church?) ſo were alſo they; for I (ſaith Saint Paul) as a wiſe Maſter-builder have laid the Foundation.

Matt. 16. 19.

Were the Keys of the Church (or of the Kingdom of Heaven) committed to him? So alſo were they unto them; They had a Power to open and ſhut it by effectual inſtruction and perſuaſion, by diſpenſation of the Sacraments, by exerciſe of Diſcipline, by excluſion of ſcandalous and heretical Perſons; Whatever faculty the Keys did import, the Apoſtles did uſe it in the foundation, guidance and government of the Church; and did (as the Fathers teach) impart it to thoſe, whom they did in their ſtead conſtitute to feed and govern the Church.

Had Saint Peter a Power given him of binding and looſing effectually? So had they, immediately granted by our Saviour, in as full manner, and couched in the ſame terms; If thou ſhalt bind on Earth, it ſhall Matt. 16. 19. be bound in Heaven, ſaid our Lord to him; and Whatſoever things ye ſhall Matt. 18. 18. bind on Earth, they ſhall be bound in Heaven, ſaid the ſame Divine mouth to them.

— ὅτι γε καὶ τοῖς ἀπ' ἐκείνων τὸ ἀρχιερατικὸν κατὰ διαδοχὴν ἐπιβεβλημένοις ἀξίωμα, τὴν αὐτὴν προσεῖναι τοῦ δεσμεῖν καὶ λύειν ἐξουσίαν πιστεύομεν. Phot. *Cod.*283. p. 1600.

Thoſe, who by Succeſſion from them (viz. the Apoſtles,) were endowed with Epiſcopal Authority, we believe to have the ſame Power of binding and looſing.

Had he a privilege to remit and retain ſins? it was then by virtue of that common grant or promiſe; Whoſe ſoever ſins ye remit, they ſhall be Joh.20.23. remitted; and whoſe ſoever ſins ye retain, they are retained.

Had he power and obligation to feed the Sheep of Chriſt (all or ſome?) ſo had they indefinitely and immediately: ſo had others by Authority derived from them; who were nominated Paſtors; who had this charge Eph.4.11. laid on them: Take heed unto your ſelves, and to all the Flock, over which Act 20. 28. the Holy Ghoſt hath made you Overſeers, to feed the Church of God, which he hath purchaſed with his own Blood; whom he doth himſelf exhort, Feed the Flock of God which is among you, taking the overſight thereof: Let 1 Pet. 5.2. feeding ſignify what it can, inſtruction or guidance, or governance, or all of them together (Regio more impera, if you pleaſe, as Bellarmine will have it) it did appertain to their charge; to teach was a common duty, to lead and to rule were common functions; Saint Peter could not, nor would not appropriate it to himſelf; it is his own exhortation, when he taketh moſt upon him, Be mindful of the commandment (or pre- 2 Pet. 3.2. cept) of us the Apoſtles of the Lord and Saviour.

Was his commiſſion univerſal, or unlimited? ſo was theirs, by the Matt. 28. 19. ſame immediate Authority; for All Power (ſaid he to them, when he gave his laſt charge) is given to me in Heaven and in Earth, Go therefore and teach all Nations, baptizing them, and teaching them to obſerve all things, Mark 16. 15. whatſoever I commanded you, and Go ye into all the world, and preach the Luke 24. 47. Goſpel to every Creature.

They (as St. Chryſoſtom ſpeaketh) were all in common intruſted with the whole world, and had the care of all Nations.

Πάντες κοινῇ τὴν οἰκουμένην ἐμπιστευθέντες. Chryſ. Tom 8. *p.*115. *Tom.*5. *Orat.*47. in 2 Cor.12.28.

Was he furniſhed with extraordinary gifts, with ſpecial graces, with continual directions and aſſiſtances for the diſcharge of the Apoſtolical Office? ſo were they; for the promiſe was common of ſending the Holy Luke 24. 49. Spirit, to lead them into all truth, and cloathing them with the power from on Joh.16.13, 14,26. high; and of endowing them with Power to perform all ſorts of miraculous Works; Our Lord before his departure breathed into them, and Luke 24. 49. ſaid, Receive ye the Holy Ghoſt; All of them (ſaith Saint Luke) were filled Mark 16. 17. with the Holy Ghoſt; all of them with confidence and truth could ſay, It hath ſeemed God unto the Holy Ghoſt, and to us; all of them did abun- Joh.20.22. Act.2.24. dantly partake of that character, which Saint Paul reſpected, when Act.15.28. he did ſay, The Signs of an Apoſtle were wrought among you, in ſigns and 2 Cor. 12. 11,12. wonders, and mighty deeds.

Did Saint Peter repreſent the Church as receiving privileges in its behalf; as the Fathers affirm? ſo did they according to the ſame Fathers;

Cui totius Eccleſiæ figuram gerenti, &c. Aug. *Ep.*165.

Ergò ſi perſonam gerebant Eccleſiæ, & ſic illis hoc dictum eſt, tanquam ipſi Eccleſiæ diceretur, pax Eccleſiæ dimittit peccata,&c. Aug. *de Bapt. c. Dom.*3.18.

thers; If therefore (ſaith St. Auſtin, citing the famous place, ſicut me miſit Pater) they did bear the Perſon of the Church, and this was ſaid to them as if it were ſaid to the Church it ſelf, then the peace of the Church remitteth Sins.

What ſingular prerogative then can be imagined appertaining to Saint Peter? what ſubſtantial advantage could he pretend to beyond the other Apoſtles? Nothing ſurely doth appear; whatever the Patrons of his Supremacy do claim for him, is precariouſly aſſumed, without any fair colour of proof: he for it is beholding not to any teſtimony of Holy Scripture, but to the invention of Roman fancy: We may well infer with Cardinal Cuſanus; We know that Peter did not receive more Power from Chriſt than the other Apoſtles; for nothing was ſaid to Peter, which was not alſo ſaid to the other; Therefore (addeth he) we rightly ſay, that all the Apoſtles were equal to Peter in Power.

Scimus quòd Petrus nihil plus poteſtatis à Chriſto recepit aliis Apoſtolis; nihil enim dictum eſt ad Petrum, quod aliis etiam dictum non eſt. Ideo rectè dicimus omnes Apoſtolos eſſe æquales cum Petro in poteſtate. Card. Cuſ. de Conc. Cath. 2. 13.

8. Whereas Saint Peter himſelf did write two Catholick Epiſtles; there doth not in them appear any intimation, any air or ſavour of pretence to this Arch-apoſtolical Power. It is natural for Perſons endowed with unqueſtionable Authority (howſoever otherwiſe prudent and modeſt) to diſcover a ſpice thereof in the matter, or in the ſtyle of their writing; their Mind conſcious of ſuch advantage will ſuggeſt an authoritative way of expreſſion; eſpecially when they earneſtly exhort, or ſeriouſly reprove, in which caſes their very Authority is a conſiderable motive to aſſent or compliance, and ſtrongly doth impreſs any other arguments; But no Critick peruſing thoſe Epiſtles would ſmell a Pope in them. The Speech of Saint Peter, although preſſing his Doctrine with conſiderations of this nature, hath no tang of ſuch Authority.

1 Pet.5.1. The Elders, (ſaith he) which are among you, I exhort, who alſo am an Elder, and a witneſs of the ſufferings of Chriſt, and alſo a partaker of the Glory that ſhall be revealed; by ſuch excellent, but common advantages of his Perſon and Office he preſſeth on the Clergy his advices.

Had he been what they make him, he might have ſaid, I the peculiar Vicar of Chriſt, and Sovereign of the Apoſtles do not only exhort, but require this of you; this language had been very proper, and no leſs forcible; but nothing like this, nothing of the Spirit and Majeſty of a Pope is ſeen in his diſcourſe; there is no pagina noſtræ voluntatis & mandati, which now is the Papal ſtyle; when He ſpeaketh higheſt, it is in the common name of the Apoſtles, Be mindful (ſaith he) of the command (that is of the Doctrine, and Precepts) of us the Apoſtles of the Lord and Saviour.

τῆς ἐντολῆς. 2 Pet.3.2.

Καὶ γὰρ τὰς προῤῥήσεις ἃς ἐν τοῖς εὐαγγελίοις ὁ Χριστὸς προαναφωνεῖ, ταύτας εἰς ἔργον ἐνταῦθά ἐστιν ἰδεῖν, καὶ ἐπ' αὐτῶν τῶν πραγμάτων διαλάμπουσαν τὴν ἀλήθειαν. Chryſ. in Act. 1.

9. In the Apoſtolical Hiſtory, the proper place of exerciſing this power (wherein, as St. Chryſoſtom ſaith, we may ſee the predictions of Chriſt, which he uttered in the Goſpels, reduced to act, and the truth of them ſhining in the things themſelves) no footſtep thereof doth appear.

We cannot there diſcern, that Saint Peter did aſſume any extraordinary authority, or that any deference by his Brethren was rendered to him as to their Governour or Judge. No inſtance there doth occur of his laying commands on any one Apoſtle, or exerciſing any act of juriſdiction upon any one; but rather to the contrary divers paſſages are obſervable, which argue, that he pretended to no ſuch thing, and that others did not underſtand any ſuch thing belonging to him.

His temper indeed and zeal commonly did prompt him to be moſt forward in ſpeaking and acting upon any emergency for the propagation or maintenance of the Goſpel; and the memory of the particular charge which our Lord departing had lately put on him, ſtrongly might inſtigate him thereto; regard to his ſpecial gifts, and ſufficiency, did incline the reſt willingly to yield that advantage to him; and perhaps becauſe upon the conſiderations before touched, they did allow ſome preference in order to him; but in other reſpects, as to the main adminiſtration of things, he is but one among the reſt; not taking upon him in his ſpeech or behaviour beyond others. All things are tranſacted by common agreement, and in the name of all concurring; no appeal in caſes of difference is made ſingly to him, no peremptory deciſion or decree is made by him; no orders are iſſued out by him alone, or in a ſpecial way; in Eccleſiaſtical Aſſemblies he acteth but as one member; in deliberations he doth only propound his opinion, and paſſeth a ſingle vote; his judgment and practice are ſometime queſtioned, but he is put to render an account of them; he doth not ſtand upon his Authority, but aſſigneth reaſons to perſuade his opinion, and juſtify his actions; yea ſometimes he is moved by the reſt, receiving orders and employment from them; theſe things we may diſcern by conſidering the inſtances which follow.

Ὡς θερμὸς, καὶ ὡς ἐμπιστευθεὶς παρὰ τοῦ Χριστοῦ τὸ ποιμνίον καὶ ὡς τοῦ χοροῦ πρῶτος ἀεὶ πρότερος ἄρχεται τοῦ λόγου. Chryſ. in Act. 1. 15.

As being a man hot and earneſt, and as intruſted with the flock by Chriſt, and as the fore-man of the company, he ever begins to ſpeak.

Εἰκότως ταῦτα ἐγένετο διὰ τὴν ἀρετὴν τοῦ ἀνδρὸς — in Act. 1. 26.

Probably ſo it fell out by reaſon of the ſignal vertue of the man.

Ἕτερός τις τῶν ἀπ' ἐκείνου τοῦ χοροῦ Chryſ. de Sacerd. Or. 4.

Ὅρα δ' αὐτὸν μετὰ κοινῆς πάντα ποιοῦντα γνώμης· οὐδὲν αὐθεντικῶς, οὐδὲ ἀρχικῶς. Chryſ. in Act. 1. 16.

Behold him doing all things by common conſent; nothing authoritatively, nor imperiouſly.

In the deſignation of a new Apoſtle, to ſupply the place of Judas, he did indeed ſuggeſt the matter and lay the caſe before them, he firſt declared his ſenſe; but the whole company did chuſe two, and referred the determination of one to lot, or to God's arbitration.

Act. 1.
Act. 1. 15, 21.
Act. 23. 26

καὶ ἔστησαν δύο —

At the inſtitution of Deacons, the twelve did call the multitude of Diſciples, and directed them to elect the perſons; and the propoſal being acceptable to them, it was done accordingly; they choſe Stephen,&c. whom they ſet before the Apoſtles, and when they had prayed, they laid their hands on them.

Act. 6. 2.

V. 5. καὶ ἤρεσεν ὁ λόγος ἐνώπιον παντὸς τοῦ πλήθους· καὶ ἐξελέξαντο Στέφανον.

In that important tranſaction about the obſervance of Moſaical Inſtitutions, a great ſtir and debate being ſtarted; which Saint Paul and Saint Barnabas by diſputation could not appeaſe, what courſe was then taken? did they appeal to Saint Peter as to the Supreme Dictator and Judge of Controverſies? not ſo; but they ſent to the Apoſtles and Elders at Jeruſalem to enquire about the queſtion: when thoſe great Meſſengers were arrived there, they were received by the Church, and the Apoſtles, and Elders; and having made their report, the Apoſtles and Elders did aſſemble to conſider about that matter. In this Aſſembly, after much debate paſſed, and that many had freely uttered their ſenſe, Saint Peter roſe up, with Apoſtolical gravity, declaring what his reaſon and experience did ſuggeſt conducing to a reſolution of the point; whereto his words might indeed be much available, grounded not only upon common reaſon, but upon ſpecial revelation concerning the caſe; whereupon Saint

Act. 15.
Γενομένης στάσεως, καὶ συζητήσεως οὐκ ὀλίγης.
Ver. 2.
V. 4.
V. 6.
V. 7.

James, alledging that revelation and backing it with reaſon drawn from Scripture, with much authority pronounceth his judgment: Therefore, ſaith he, I judge, (that is, ſaith St. Chryſoſtom, I authoritatively ſay) that we trouble not them, who from among the Gentiles are turned to God; but that we write unto them, &c. And the reſult was, that according to the propoſal of Saint James, it was by general conſent determined to ſend a decretal Letter unto the Gentile Chriſtians, containing a Canon or Advice directive of their practice in the caſe; It then ſeemed good to (or was decreed by) the Apoſtles and Elders, with the whole Church, to ſend—— and the Letter ran thus, The Apoſtles and Elders, and Brethren to the Brethren of the Gentiles.—— Now in all this action, (in his leading precedent for the management of things in Eccleſiaſtical Synods and Conſiſtories) where can the ſharpeſt ſight deſcry any mark of diſtinction or preeminence which Saint Peter had in reſpect to the other Apoſtles? did Saint Peter there any-wiſe behave himſelf like his pretended Succeſſors upon ſuch occaſions? what authority did he claim or uſe before that Aſſembly, or in it, or after it; did he ſummon or convocate it? no, they met upon common agreement: did he preſide there? no, but rather Saint James, to whom (ſaith St. Chryſoſtom) as Biſhop of Jeruſalem the Government was committed: did he offer to curb or check any man, or to reſtrain him from his liberty of diſcourſe there? no, there was much diſputation, every man frankly ſpeaking his ſenſe: did he more than uſe his freedom of ſpeech becoming an Apoſtle, in arguing the caſe, and paſſing his vote? no, for in ſo exact relation nothing more doth appear: did he form the definitions, or pronounce the Decree reſulting? no, Saint James rather did that; for (as an ancient Author ſaith) Peter did make an Oration, but Saint James did enact the Law: was, beſide his ſuffrage in the debate, any ſingular approbation required from him, or did he by any Bull confirm the Decrees? no ſuch matter; theſe were devices of ambition, creeping on and growing up to the pitch where they now are. In ſhort, doth any thing correſpondent to Papal pretences appear aſſumed by Saint Peter, or deferred to him? If Saint Peter was ſuch a Man as they make him, how wanting then was he to himſelf, how did he neglect the right and dignity of his Office, in not taking more upon him, upon ſo illuſtrious an occaſion, the greateſt he did ever meet with? How defective alſo were the Apoſtolical College, and the whole Church of Jeruſalem, in point of duty and decency, yielding no more deference to their Sovereign, the Vicar of their Lord? Whatever account may be framed of theſe defailances, the truth is, that Saint Peter then did know his own place and duty better, than men do know them now; and the reſt as well underſtood how it became them to demean themſelves; St. Chryſoſtom's reflections on thoſe paſſages are very good, that indeed then there was no faſtuouſneſs in the Church, and the ſouls of thoſe primitive Chriſtians were clear of Vanity; the which diſpoſitions did afterward ſpring up and grow rankly to the great prejudice of Religion, begetting thoſe exorbitant pretences, which we now diſprove.

Again,

Act. 15. V. 13 — V. 14. v. 15.

Διὸ ἐγὼ κρίνω. V. 19.

Τί ἐστι κρίνω ἐγώ; ἀντὶ τοῦ μετ᾽ ἐξουσίας λέγω τοῦτο εἶναι. Chryſ.

Τότε ἔδοξε τοῖς, &c. V. 22.

Τὰ δόγματα τὰ κεκριμένα ὑπὸ τῶν Ἀποστόλων, καὶ τῶν πρεσβυτέρων. Act. 16. 4.

Κρίναντες ἡμεῖς ἐπεστείλαμεν. Act. 21. 25.

Ἰάκωβος ὁ ἀδελφὸς τοῦ Κυρίου τὴν Ἐκκλησίαν τότε ἐπεσκόπευεν ἐν ἀρχῇ τὴν ἐν Ἱεροσολύμοις, καὶ τῶν ἐξ Ἰουδαίων πιστευσάντων προειστήκει πάντων. Chry. Tom. 5. Or. 59.)

Ἐκεῖνος γὰρ τὴν ἀρχὴν ἐγκεχειρισμένος —— ἐν δυναστείᾳ ἦν. Chryſ. in loc.

For he had the Government committed to him —— he was impowered.

Πέτρος δημηγορεῖ, ἀλλ᾽ Ἰάκωβος νομοθετεῖ. Heſych apud Phot. Cod. 275.

Οὕτως οὐδεὶς τῦφος ἦν ἐν τῇ Ἐκκλησίᾳ· οὕτως καθαρὰ δόξης ἦν αὐτῶν ἡ ψυχή. Chryſ. ibid.

Again, when Saint Peter being warned from Heaven thereto, did receive Cornelius, a Gentile Souldier, unto Communion; divers good Chriſtians, who were ignorant of the warrantableneſs of that proceeding (as others commonly were, and Saint Peter himſelf was, before he was informed by that ſpecial revelation) did not fear διακρίνεσθαι πρὸς αὐτὸν, to conteſt with him about it; not having any notion (as it ſeemeth) of his Supreme unaccountable Authority (not to ſay of that infallibility, with which the Canoniſts and Jeſuits have inveſted him) unto whom Saint Peter rendreth a fair account, and maketh a ſatisfactory Apology for his proceedings; not brow-beating thoſe audacious contenders with his Authority, but gently ſatisfying them with reaſon. But if he had known his Power to be ſuch, as now they pretend it to be, he ſhould have done well to have aſſerted it, even out of Good-will and Charity to thoſe good Brethren; correcting their errour and checking their miſdemeanour; ſhewing them what an enormous preſumption it was ſo to contend with their Sovereign Paſtor and Judge.

Act. 10. 28. Καὶ ἐμοὶ ὁ Θεὸς ἔδειξε — Act. 11. 12. Act. 11. 2.

Bell. de Pont. Rom. 4. 3, 4, &c.
Act. 11. 18.
Ὅρα τὸ ἄτυφον καὶ ἀκενόδοξον, — ὅρα πῶς ἀπολογεῖται, καὶ οὐκ ἀξιοῖ τῷ τοῦ διδασκάλου ἀξιώματι κεχρῆσθαι. Chryſ.
See how free he is from pride and vainglory; ſee how he excuſes himſelf, and thinks himſelf not worthy to have the honour of a Maſter.

Ità ut Petrus quoq; timens ne culparetur ab ipſis. Iren. 3. 12.

N. In the matter at Antioch Saint Peter did comply with Saint James, and the Judaizers, which did not beſeem ſuch Authority.

Farther, ſo far was Saint Peter from aſſuming Command over his Brethren, that he was upon occaſion ready to obey their Orders; as we may ſee by that paſſage, where upon the converſion of divers perſons in Samaria, it is ſaid, that the Apoſtles hearing it, did ſend to them Peter and John, who going down prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghoſt. The Apoſtles ſent him, that, had he been their Sovereign, would have been ſomewhat unſeemly and preſumptuous; for Subjects are not wont to ſend their Prince, or Souldiers their Captain; to be ſent being a mark of inferiority, as our Lord himſelf did teach; A Servant (ſaid he) is not greater than his Lord, nor he that is ſent greater than he that ſent him. Saint Luke therefore ſhould at leaſt have ſo expreſſed this paſſage, that the Apoſtles might have ſeemed to keep their diſtance, and obſerved good manners: if he had ſaid, they beſeeched him to go, that had ſounded well; but they ſent him, is harſh, if he were Dominus noſter Papa, as the modern Apoſtles of Rome do ſtyle their Peter. The truth is, then among Chriſtians there was little ſtanding upon Punctilio's, private conſiderations and pretences to power then took ſmall place; each one was ready to comply with that which the moſt did approve, the community did take upon it to preſcribe unto the greateſt perſons, as we ſee again in another inſtance, where the Brethren at Antioch did appoint Paul and Barnabas (the moſt conſiderable perſons among them) to go up unto Jeruſalem. They were then ſo generous, ſo merciful, ſo full of charity, as rather than to cauſe or foment any diſturbance, to recede, or go whither the multitude pleaſed, and do what was commanded by it.

Act. 8. 14. Joh. 13. 16. Ἔταξαν ἀναβαίνειν Π. καὶ Β. Act. 15. 2. 13. 3.

Τίς οὖν ἐν ὑμῖν γενναῖος; τίς εὔσπλαγχνος; τίς πεπληροφορημένος ἀγάπης; εἰπάτω, εἰ δι' ἐμὲ στάσις, καὶ ἔρεις, καὶ σχίσματα, ἐκχωρῶ, ἄπειμι οὗ ἐὰν βούλησθε, καὶ ποιῶ τὰ προστασσόμενα ὑπὸ τοῦ πλήθους. Clem. ad Cor. p. 69.
Who among you is noble and generous? who has bowels of compaſſion? who is full of charity? Let him ſay, If for my ſake there be ſedition, and ſtrife, and diviſions, I will depart and go whither you would have me, and do what ſhall be enjoyned me by the multitude.

10. In all relations, which occur in Scripture, about Controverſies incident of Doctrine or Practice, there is no appeal made to Saint Peter's Judgment, or allegation of it as deciſive, no Argument is built on his Authority; diſſent from his Opinion, or diſconformity to his Practice, or diſobedience to his Orders are not mentioned as ground of reproof, as aggravation of any errour, any miſdemeanour, any diſorder; which were very ſtrange, if then he was admitted or known to be the Univerſal Prince and Paſtor of Chriſtians, or the Supreme Judge and Arbitrator of Controverſies among them: for then ſurely the moſt clear, compendious and effectual way to confute any errour, or check any diſorder, had been to alledge the Authority of Saint Peter againſt it; who then could have withſtood ſo mighty a prejudice againſt his cauſe? If now a queſtion doth ariſe about any Point of Doctrine, inſtantly the Parties (at leaſt one of them, which hopeth to find moſt favour) hath recourſe to the Pope to define it; and his Judgment, with thoſe who admit his pretences, proveth ſufficiently deciſive, or at leaſt greatly ſwayeth in prejudice to the oppoſite Party. If any Hereſy, or any Opinion diſagreeing from the current ſentiments is broached, the Pope preſently doth roar, that his voice is heard through Chriſtendom, and thundreth it down; if any Schiſm or diſorder ſpringeth up, you may be ſure that Rome will inſtantly meddle to quaſh it, or to ſettle matters as beſt ſtandeth with its Principles and Intereſts; ſuch influence hath the ſhadow of Saint Peter's Authority now; but no ſuch regard was then had to poor Pope Peter himſelf; he was not ſo buſy and ſtirring in ſuch caſes: the Apoſtles did not ſend Hereticks to be knocked down by his Sentence, nor Schiſmaticks to be ſcourged by his Cenſure, but were fain to uſe the long way of Diſputation, ſtriving to convince them by Teſtimonies of Scripture, and rational Diſcourſe. If they did uſe authority, it was their own; which they challenge as given to them by Chriſt for edification, or upon account of the more than ordinary gifts and graces of the Divine Spirit, conferred on them by God.

2 Cor. 13. 10. 10.8. 12.21. 1 Cor. 4.2. 2 Theſ. 3. 14. 1 Cor. 7. 25,40. 1 Theſ. 4.8.

11. Saint Peter no where doth appear intermedling as a Judge or Governour paramount in ſuch caſes; yea where he doth himſelf deal with Hereticks, and diſorderly perſons, confuting and reproving them (as he dealeth with divers notoriouſly ſuch) he proceedeth not as a Pope decreeing, but as an Apoſtle warning, arguing, and perſuading againſt them.

It is particularly remarkable how Saint Paul reproving the factions, which were among Chriſtians at Corinth, doth repreſent the ſeveral Parties, ſaying, I am of Paul, I am of Apollos, I am of Cephas, I am of Chriſt; Now ſuppoſing the caſe then had been clear and certain (and if it were not ſo then, how can it be ſo now?) that Saint Peter was Sovereign of the Apoſtles, is it not wonderful, that any Chriſtian ſhould prefer any Apoſtle, or any Preacher before him? as if it were now clear and generally acknowledged that the Pope is truly what he pretendeth to be, would any body ſtand in competition with him, would any glory in a relation to any other Miniſter before him?

1 Cor. 1. 12. 3.21.

It is obſervable how St. Clemens reflecteth on this contention; Ye were (ſaith he) leſs culpable for that partiality; for ye did then incline to renowned Apoſtles, and to a man approved by them; but now, &c.

Ἀλλ' ἡ πρόσκλισις ἐκείνη ἧττον ἁμαρτίαν ὑμῖν προσήνεγκεν· προσεκλίθητε γὰρ Ἀποστόλοις μεμαρτυρημένοις, καὶ ἀνδρὶ δεδοκιμασμένῳ παρ' αὐτοῖς· νυνὶ δὲ, &c. Clem. ad Corinth. p 61.

If it be replied, that Chriſt himſelf did come into the compariſon; I anſwer that probably no man was ſo vain, as to compare him with the reſt, nor indeed could any there pretend to have been baptized by him (which was the ground of the emulation in reſpect of the others) but thoſe who ſaid they were of Chriſt, were the wiſe and peaceable ſort, who by ſaying ſo declined and diſavowed faction; whoſe behaviour Saint Paul himſelf in his diſcourſe commendeth and confirmeth, ſhewing that all indeed were of Chriſt, the Apoſtles being only his Miniſters to work faith and vertue in them. None (ſaith St. Auſtin) of thoſe contentious perſons were good, except thoſe who ſaid, but I am of Chriſt.

1 Cor. 3. 5.

Falſum eſt quòd illi boni erant, exceptis eis qui dicebant, Ego autem Chriſti. Aug. cont. Creſcon.1.27.

We may alſo here obſerve, that Saint Paul in reflecting upon theſe contentions had a fair occaſion of intimating ſomewhat concerning Saint Peter's Supremacy, and aggravating their blameable fondneſs, who compared others with him.

12. The conſideration of the Apoſtles proceeding in the converſion of people, in the foundation of Churches, and in adminiſtration of their ſpiritual affairs, will exclude any probability of Saint Peter's Juriſdiction over them.

They went about their buſineſs not by Order or Licence from St. Peter, but according to ſpecial inſtinct and direction of God's Spirit (being ſent forth by the Holy Ghoſt; going by revelation) or according to their ordinary prudence, and the habitual wiſdom given unto them; by thoſe aids, (without troubling St. Peter or themſelves more) they founded Societies, they ordained Paſtors, they framed Rules and Orders requiſite for the Edification and good Government of Churches, reſerving to themſelves a kind of paramount inſpection and juriſdiction over them; which in effect was only πατρικὴ ἐπιμέλεια, a paternal care over them; which they particularly claimed to themſelves upon account of ſpiritual parentage, for that they had begotten them to Chriſt: If (ſaith St. Paul to the Corinthians) I am not an Apoſtle to others, I am however ſo to you? why ſo? becauſe he had converted them, and could ſay, As my beloved Sons I warn you, for though ye have ten thouſand Inſtructors in Chriſt, yet ye have not many fathers; for in Chriſt Jeſus I have begotten you through the Goſpel. This paternal charge they did exerciſe without any dependence, or regard to Saint Peter, none ſuch appearing, it not being mentioned that they did ever conſult his pleaſure, or render him an account of their proceedings; but it rather being implied in the reports of their actions, that they proceeded abſolutely, by virtue of their Univerſal Office and Commiſſion of our Lord.

Ἐκπεμφθέντες ὑπὸ τοῦ πνεύμ. ἁγ.
Act. 13. 4. 2. 16. 6,9.
Gal. 2. 2. κατ᾽ ἀποκάλυψιν.
2 Pet. 3. 5.
1 Cor. 7. 17. 11. 34. 16. 1.
Tit. 1. 5.
Iſid. Pel.
1 Theſ. 2. 7, 11.
1 Cor. 9. 2.
Act. 18. 1.
1 Cor. 4. 14, 15.
Gal. 4. 19.

If it be alledged that Saint Paul went to Jeruſalem to Saint Peter; I anſwer that it was to viſit him out of reſpect and love; or to confer with him for mutual edification and comfort; or at moſt to obtain approbation from him and the other Apoſtles, which might ſatisfy ſome doubters, but not to receive his commands or authoritative inſtructions from him; it being, as we ſhall afterwards ſee, the deſign of Saint Paul's diſcourſe to diſavow any ſuch dependence on any man whatever. So doth St. Chryſoſtom note, What (ſaith he) can be more humble than this Soul? after ſo many and ſo great exploits, having no need at all of Peter, or of his diſcourſe, but being in dignity equal to him (for I will now ſay no more) he yet doth go up to him, as to one greater and ancien-

Gal. 1. 18. ἱστορῆσαι.

Τί ταύτης ταπεινοφρονέστερον γένοιτ᾽ ἂν τῆς ψυχῆς; μετὰ τοσαῦτα καὶ τοιαῦτα κατορθώματα μηδὲν Πέτρου δεόμενος, μηδὲ τῆς ἐκείνου φωνῆς, ἀλλ᾽ ἰσότιμος ὢν αὐτῷ (πλέον γὰρ οὐδὲν ἐρῶ τέως) ὅμως ἀνέρχεται ὡς πρὸς μείζονα, καὶ πρεσβύτερον· καὶ τῆς ἀποδημίας αὐτῷ τῆς ἐκεῖ γίνεται αἰτίας ἡ ἱστορία Πέter; and a ſight alone of Peter is the cauſe of his journey thither. ---- And He went (ſaith he again) not to learn any thing of him, nor to receive any correction from him, but for this only, that he might ſee him, and honour him with his preſence.

τρου μόνου. —— οὐχ ὡς μαθησόμενός τι παρ' αὐτοῦ, οὐδὲ ὡς διόρθωσίν τινα δεξάμενος, ἀλλὰ διὰ τοῦτο μόνον, ὥστε ἰδεῖν αὐτὸν καὶ τιμῆσαι τῇ παρουσίᾳ. Chryſ. in Gal. 1. 18.

And indeed that there was no ſuch deference of the Apoſtles to Saint Peter, we may hence reaſonably preſume, becauſe it would then have been not only impertinent and needleſs, but inconvenient and troubleſome. For,

13. If we conſider the nature of the Apoſtolical Office, the ſtate of things at that time, and the manner of Saint Peter's Life; in correſpondence to thoſe things, he will appear uncapable, or unfit to manage ſuch a juriſdiction over the Apoſtles as they aſſign him.

The nature of the Apoſtolical Miniſtry was ſuch, that the Apoſtles were not fixed in one place of reſidence, but were continually moving about the World, or in procinctu, ready in their gears to move whither Divine ſuggeſtions did call them, or fair occaſion did invite them, for the propagation or furtherance of the Goſpel.

2 Cor. 11. 25.

Ἐπειδὰν γὰρ ἤμελλον τῆς οἰκουμένης τὴν ἐπιτροπὴν ἀναδέξασθαι, οὐκ ἔδει συμπεπλέχθαι λοιπὸν ἀλλήλοις· ἦ γὰρ ἂν μεγάλη τοῦτο τῇ οἰκουμένῃ γέγονε ζημία. Chryſ. in John 21. 23.

For ſeeing they were to take upon them the inſpection and ſuperintendency of all the World, it behoved them not any longer to be mixt or conjoyned together, for this had been a great loſs and hinderance to the World.

1 Cor. 4. 9. 2 Cor. 4. 8. 6. 4. 11. 25. Matt. 24. 9. Luke 21. 12.

The ſtate of things was not favourable to the Apoſtles, who were diſcountenanced and diſgraced, perſecuted, and driven from one place to another; (as our Lord foretold of them) Chriſtians lay ſcattered about at diſtant places, ſo that opportunities of diſpatch for conveyance of inſtructions from him, or of accounts to him were not eaſily found.

Euſeb. 3. 1. Niceph. 2. 38, 39, 40. Tertul. ad Jud. cap. 7

* Ὁ τὴν οἰκουμένην σταδιεύσας, καὶ τῷ περὶ πίστεως δρόμῳ τὸν κόσμον μικρὸν ἀποφήνας. Baſ. Seleuc. Or. 2.

He that run his race through the whole Univerſe, and by his ſo eager running for the Faith made the World as it were too narrow for him.

Col. 1. 6. 23. Rom. 10. 18.

Saint Thomas preaching in Parthia, Saint Andrew in Scythia, Saint John in Aſia, Simon Zelotes in Britain, * Saint Paul in many places; other Apoſtles and Apoſtolical men in Arabia, in Æthiopia, in India, in Spain, in Gaul, in Germany, in the whole World, and in all the Creation under Heaven (as Saint Paul ſpeaketh) could not well maintain correſpondence with Saint Peter; eſpecially conſidering the manner of his Life, which was not ſettled in any one known place, but movable and uncertain; for he continually roved over the wide World, preaching the Goſpel, converting, confirming and comforting Chriſtian People, as occaſion ſtarting up did induce; how then could he conveniently diſpenſe all about his ruling and judging influence? how in caſes incident could direction be fetched from him, or reference be made to him by thoſe ſubordinate Governors, who could not eaſily know where to come at him, or whence to hear from him in any competent time? To ſend to him had been to ſhoot at rovers; affairs therefore which ſhould depend on his reſolution and orders, muſt have had great ſtops; he could but very lamely have executed ſuch an office; ſo that his juriſdiction muſt have been rather an extreme inconvenience and encumbrance, than any-wiſe beneficial or uſeful to the Church.

Gold and Silver he had none, or a very ſmall Purſe to maintain Dependents and Officers to help him; (Nuncio's, Legates à latere, Secretaries, Auditors, &c.) Infinity of affairs would have oppreſſed a poor helpleſs man; and to bear ſuch a burthen as they lay on him no one could be ſufficient.

14. It was indeed moſt requiſite, that every Apoſtle ſhould have a complete, abſolute, independent Authority in managing the concerns and duties of his Office; that he might not any-wiſe be obſtructed in the diſcharge of them; not clogged with a need to conſult others, not hampered with orders from thoſe who were at diſtance, and could not well deſcry what was fit in every place to be done.

The direction of him who had promiſed to be perpetually preſent with them, and by his Holy Spirit to guide, to inſtruct, to admoniſh them upon all occaſion, was abundantly ſufficient; they did not want any other conduct or aid beſide that ſpecial Light and powerful Influence of Grace, which they received from him; the which ἱκάνωσεν αὐτοὺς, did (as Saint Paul ſpeaketh) render them ſufficient Miniſters of the New Teſtament.

Matt.28. 20.
Joh.16.13. 14.26.
2 Cor.3.5.
Rom.15. 15.

Accordingly their diſcourſe and practice do thoroughly ſavour of ſuch an independence; nor in them is there any appearance of that being true, which Bellarmine dictateth, that the Apoſtles depended on Saint Peter, as on their head, and commander.

—— à quo illi tanquam à capite, & imperatore ſuo pendebant. Bellarm. de Pont. 1. 16.

15. Particularly the diſcourſe and behaviour of Saint Paul towards Saint Peter doth evidence, that he did not acknowledge any dependence on him, any ſubjection to him.

Saint Paul doth often purpoſely aſſert to himſelf an independent and abſolute power, inferiour or ſubordinate to none other, inſiſting thereon for the enforcement or neceſſary defence of his Doctrine and Practice; (I have become a fool in glorying, ye have compelled me, (ſaith he) alledging divers pregnant arguments to prove and confirm it, drawn from the manner of his call, the characters and warrants of his Office, the tenour of his proceedings in the diſcharge of it, the ſucceſs of his endeavours, the approbation and demeanour toward him of other Apoſtles.

2 Cor.12. 11.
Rom.11. 13.

As for his call and commiſſion to the Apoſtolical Office, he maintaineth (as if he meant deſignedly to exclude thoſe pretences, that other Apoſtles were only called in partem ſolicitudinis with Saint Peter) that he was an Apoſtle not from men, nor by man, but by Jeſus Chriſt, and God the Father; that is, that he derived not his Office immediately or mediately from men, or by the miniſtry of any man; but immediately had received the grant and charge thereof from our Lord; as indeed the Hiſtory plainly ſheweth, in which our Lord telleth him, that he did Conſtitute him an Officer, and a choſen inſtrument to him, to bear his name to the Gentiles.

Bell.1. 9, 14,16.
Οὐκ ἀπ' ἀνθρώπων, οὐδὲ δι' ἀνθρώπου. Gal.1.1.

Προχειρίσασθαί σε ὑπηρέτην, &c. Act.9. 15. 22. 21.

Hence he ſo often is careful and cautious to expreſs himſelf an Apoſtle by the will and ſpecial grace, or favour and appointment, and command of God; and particularly telleth the Romans, that by Chriſt he had received grace, and Apoſtleſhip.

Θελήματι Θεοῦ. 1 Cor. 1. 1. 2 Cor. 1. 1. Eph.1.1. Col.1.1. 2 Tim.1. 1.
Χάριτι. 1 Cor.15.10. Eph.3.7. 1 Tim. 1.12. 2 Tim.1.12.
Κατ' ἐπιταγήν. 1 Tim.1.1. Rom. 1.5.

For the warrant of his Office, he doth not alledge the allowance of Saint Peter, or any other, but thoſe ſpecial gifts and graces which were conſpicuous in him, and exerted in miraculous performances; Truly, ſaith he, the ſigns of an Apoſtle were wrought among you in all patience, in ſigns, and wonders, and mighty deeds; and I will not dare to ſpeak of any of thoſe things, which Chriſt hath not wrought by me to make the Gentiles obedient by word and deed, through mighty ſigns and wonders, by the power of the Spirit of God.

2 Cor.12. 12.
Rom.15. 18,19.
1 Cor.2 4.

1 Cor 9. 1 —— 1 Cor. 15. 10. 2 Cor. 11. 23.

To the ſame purpoſe he alledgeth his ſucceſsful induſtry in converting men to the Goſpel; Am I not an Apoſtle? (ſaith he) are ye not my work in the Lord? If I am not an Apoſtle to others, I am ſurely one to you; for the ſeal of mine Apoſtleſhip are ye in the Lord. And, By the grace of God I am what I am, and his grace which was on me became not in vain, but I laboured more abundantly than they all.

Gal. 1. 16, 17.

In the diſcharge of his Office, he immediately (after that he had received his call and charge from our Saviour) without conſulting or taking licence from any man, did vigorouſly apply himſelf to the work, Immediately, ſaith he, I conferred not with fleſh and blood, neither went I up to Jeruſalem to them, that before me were Apoſtles, ſo little did he take upon himſelf to be accountable to any man.

2 Cor. 13. 10. 10.8.

In ſettling order, and correcting irregularities in the Church, he profeſſed to act merely by his own Authority, conferred on him by our Lord; Therefore (ſaith he) being abſent I write theſe things, that being preſent I may not uſe ſeverity, according to the authority which the Lord hath given me for edification, not for deſtruction.

Gal. 2. 9.

Such being the privileges, which he did aſſert to himſelf with all confidence, he did not receive for it any check from other Apoſtles, but the chief of them, knowing the grace that was given unto him, gave unto him the right-hand of fellowſhip; in token of their acknowledgment and allowance of his proceedings.

2 Cor. 12. 16, 17. 2 Cor. 12. 11. 11. 5. 1 Cor. 15. 9. Eph 3. 8. 1 Cor. 15. 10. Eph 3. 7.

Upon theſe conſiderations (plainly ſignifying his abſolute independence in the reception and execution of his Office,) he doth more than once affirm (and in a manner boaſt) himſelf to be inferior in nothing to the very chief Apoſtles; in nothing, that is in nothing pertinent to the Authority, or ſubſtantial Dignity of his place; for as to his perſonal merit he profeſſeth himſelf much leſs than the leaſt of the Apoſtles, but as to the authentickneſs and authority of his Office he deemed himſelf equal to the greateſt; being by the grace of God what he was; a Miniſter of the Goſpel, according to the gift of the grace of God, which was given him according to the effectual working of his power.

Πρὸς τὸν περὶ Πέτρον ποιούμενος τὴν σύγκρισιν. 2 Cor. 11. 5. Κατὰ προδιόρθωσιν. 2 Cor. 12. 11. 1. 16, 17 Rom. 11. 13.

When he ſaid he was behind none, he could not forget Saint Peter; when he ſaid none of the chief, he could not but eſpecially mean him (he did indeed, as St. Chryſoſtom ſaith, intend to compare himſelf with St. Peter;) when he ſaid in nothing, he could not but deſign that which was moſt conſiderable, the Authority of his place; which in the context he did expreſly mention. For when he objected to himſelf the ſemblance of fondneſs or arrogance in ſpeaking after that manner, he declared that he did not ſpeak raſhly or vainly, but upon ſerious conſideration, and with full aſſurance, finding it very needful or uſeful to maintain his Authority, or to magnify his Office, as he otherwhere ſpeaketh.

Bell. de Pont. 1. 11.

If things had been, as now we are taught from the Roman School, it is ſtrange, that Saint Paul ſhould compare himſelf ſo generally, not excepting Saint Peter; that he ſhould expreſs (nor by the leaſt touch intimate) no ſpecial conſideration for his, as they tell us, ordinary Paſtor; that he ſhould not conſider how liable ſuch words were to be interpreted in derogation to Saint Peter's due Prerogatives.

But it is no wonder, that Saint Paul, in Saint Peter's abſence, ſhould thus ſtand on his own legs, not ſeeming to mind him, whenas in immediate tranſactions with him he demeaned himſelf as his fellow, yielding to him no reſpect or deference as to his Superior. For,

When Saint Paul went to Jeruſalem to have conference with Saint Peter, and other Apoſtles, who were chief in repute, he profeſſeth, that they they did not confer any thing to him, ſo as to change his opinion, or divert him from his ordinary courſe of practice, which was different from theirs; this was (it ſeemeth) hardly proper or ſeemly for him to to ſay, if Saint Peter had been his Sovereign; but he ſeemeth to ſay it on very purpoſe, to exclude any any prejudice that might ariſe to his Doctrine from their authority or repute; their authority being none over him, their repute being impertinent to the caſe; for whatſoever (addeth he) they were, it maketh no matter to me, God reſpecteth no man's perſon; the which might well be ſaid of Perſons greater in common eſteem, but not ſo well of one was his Superior in Office; to whoſe opinion and conduct, as of his Judge and Paſtor by God's appointment, he did owe a ſpecial regard.

Gal.2.6.

Gal 2.6.

Again, St. Paul at Antioch obſerving St. Peter out of fear and policy to act otherwiſe than became the ſimplicity and ſincerity of Chriſtians, to the prejudice of Evangelical Truth, Charity and Liberty, againſt his own judgment and former practice, drawing others by his pattern into the ſame unwarrantable courſe of behaviour, did withſtand him to the face, did openly reprove him before all, becauſe he was blamable, did as P. Gelaſius I. affirmeth (to excuſe another Pope miſbehaving himſelf) worthily confute him; did (as St. Auguſtine often doth affirm and urge, in proof that greateſt Perſons may ſometimes err and fail,) correct him, rebuke him, chide him.

Gal.2. 12, 13, 14.

(Vid. P. Pelag. II. apud Bin. Tom. 4. p. 308. in Epiſt. ad Eliam.)

V. 11. 14.

Nunquid ideò aut illa ejus ſequenda ſunt, quæ meritò ejus Co-apoſtolus ejus facta redarguit. Gelaſ. I. de Anath. (apud Bin. Tom. 3. *p.*645.)

Apoſtolo Paulo monſtrante, & corrigente, Aug. c. Creſcon, 1.32. 2. 32. Ep. 19. de Bapt. c. Don. 2. 1.2. correptus cont. Don. 2. 1. objurgavit. Ep. 8.

——qui de minore cauſa converſationis ambiguæ Petro ipſi non pepercit. Tert. 5. 3. (contra Marc.)

——who for a ſmaller matter of doubtful converſation ſpared not Peter himſelf.

Cùm laudetur etiam Pauli minimi Apoſtolorum ſana ratio atque libertas, quod Petrum Apoſtolorum primum adductum in hypocriſin, & non rectâ viâ incedentem ad veritatem Evangelii fidenter improbans, in faciem illi reſtitit, eúmque coràm omnibus coràm objurgavit. Fac. Her. 8. 6.

Whereas the ſound reaſon and freedom even of Paul the leaſt of the Apoſtles, is commended, in that, when Peter the chief of the Apoſtles was carried away with diſſimulation, and walked not in a right way, according to the truth of the Goſpel, he boldly diſlik'd, and withſtood him to the face, and reprov'd him openly before all.

Which behaviour of Saint Paul doth not well conſiſt with the Suppoſition, That Saint Peter was his ſuperior in Office; if that had been, Porphyrius with good colour of reaſon might have objected procacity to Saint Paul in taxing his betters; for he then indeed had ſhewed us no commendable pattern of demeanour towards our Governors, in ſo boldly oppoſing Saint Peter, in ſo openly cenſuring him, in ſo ſmartly confuting him.

Hier. ad Aug. Ep. 11. in Prol. ad Gal.

More unſeemly alſo it had been to report the buſineſs as he doth in writing to the Galatians; for to divulge the miſcarriages of Superiors, to revive the memory of them, to regiſter them, and tranſmit them down to all poſterity, to ſet forth our claſhing and conteſts with them, is hardly allowable; if it may conſiſt with juſtice and honeſty, it doth yet little ſavour of gravity and modeſty: It would have been more ſeemly for Saint Paul to have privately and humbly remonſtrated to Saint Peter, than openly and down-rightly to have reprehended him; at leaſt it would have become him in cold blood to have repreſented his carriage more reſpectfully, conſulting the honour of the Univerſal Paſtor, whoſe reputation was like to ſuffer by ſuch a repreſentation of his proceedings. Pope Pelagius II. would have taught Saint Paul better manners; who ſaith, that they are not to be approved, but reprobated, who do reprove or accuſe their Prelates; and Pope Gregory would have taught him another leſſen, namely, that the evils of their Superiors do ſo diſpleaſe good Subjects, that however they do conceal them from others; and Subjects are to be admoniſhed, that they do not raſhly judge the life of their Superiors, if perhaps they ſee them do blamably, &c.

Non ſunt conſentiendi, ſed reprobandi, qui prælatos ſuos reprehendunt vel accuſant. Pelag. *II. Ep.*2.

Bonis ſubditis ſic præpoſitorum ſuorum, mala diſplicent, ut tamen hæc ab aliis occultent. Greg. M. Moral. 25. 15.

Admonendi ſunt ſubditi, nè præpoſitorum ſuorum vitam temerè judicent, ſiquid eos fortaſſe agere reprehenſibiliter vident, &c. Greg. Paſt. part. 3. cap. 1. Admon. 5.

It is plain, that Saint Paul was more bold with Saint Peter, than any man now muſt be with the Pope; for let the Pope commit never ſo great crimes, yet no mortal (ſaith the Canon Law) preſume to reprove his faults.

Grat. diſt. 40. cap. 6.

But if Saint Peter were not in Office ſuperior to Saint Paul, but his Collegue, and equal in Authority, although preceeding him in ſtanding, repute, and other advantages; then Saint Paul's free proceeding toward him was not only warrantable, but wholeſom, and deſerving for edification to be recited and recorded; as implying an example how Collegues upon occaſion ſhould with freedom and ſincerity admoniſh their Brethren of their errours and faults; Saint Peter's carriage in patiently bearing that correption alſo affording another good pattern of equanimity in ſuch caſes; to which purpoſe * St. Cyprian (alledged and approved by † St. Auſtin) doth apply this paſſage; for (ſaith he) neither Peter whom the Lord firſt choſe, and upon whom he built his Church, when Paul afterward conteſted with him about circumciſion, did inſolently challenge, or arrogantly aſſume any thing to himſelf, ſo as to ſay that he did hold the primacy, and that rather thoſe who were newer and later Apoſtles ought to obey him, neither deſpiſed he Saint Paul, becauſe he was before a perſecutor of the Church, but he admitted the counſel of truth, and eaſily conſented to the lawful courſe, which Saint Paul did maintain; yielding indeed to us a document both of concord and patience, that we ſhould not pertinaciouſly love our own things, but ſhould rather take thoſe things for ours which ſometimes are profitably and wholeſomly ſuggeſted by our Brethren and Collegues, if they are true and lawful; this St. Cyprian ſpeaketh, upon ſuppoſition that Saint Peter and Saint Paul were equals, or (as he calleth them) Collegues and Brethren, in rank co-ordinate; otherwiſe St. Cyprian would not have approved the action; for he often ſeverely doth inveigh againſt Inferiors taking upon them to cenſure their Superiors; What tumour (ſaith he) of pride, what arrogance of mind, what inflation of heart, is it to call our Superiors and Biſhops to our cogniſance? St. Cyprian therefore could not conceive Saint Peter to be Saint Paul's Governor, or Superior in Power; he doth indeed plainly enough in the forecited words ſignify that in his Judgment Saint Peter had done inſolently and arrogantly, if he had aſſumed any obedience from Saint Paul. St. Auſtin alſo doth in ſeveral places of his Writings make the like application of this paſſage.

* Nam nec Petrus, quem primum Dominus elegit, &c. Cypr. Ep. 71. (ad Quint.)

† Aug. de Bapt. c. Don. 2. 2.

Quis enim hic eſt ſuperbiæ tumor, quæ arrogantia animi, quæ mentis inflatio ad cognitionem ſuos præpoſitos & Sacerdotes vocare? Cypr. Ep. 69.

Aug. c. Don. de Bapt. 2. 1, 2. Ep. 19.

The ancient Writer contemporary to St. Ambroſe, and paſſing under his name, doth argue in this manner; Who dared reſiſt Peter the firſt Apoſtle, to whom the Lord did give the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, but another ſuch a one; who in aſſurance of his election knowing himſelf to be not unequal to him, might conſtantly diſprove what he had unadviſedly done?

Nam quis eorum auderet Petro primo Apoſtolo, cui claves regni cœlorum Dominus dedit, reſiſtere, niſi alius talis, qui fiduciâ electionis ſuæ, ſciens ſe non imparem, conſtanter improbaret quod ille ſine conſilio fecerat? Ambr. in Gal. 2. 9.

Paulus Petrum reprehendit, quod non auderet, niſi ſe non imparem ſciret. (Hieron vel alius ad Gal. citatus à Grat. Cauſ. 2. qu. 7. cap. 33.)

Paul reprehended Peter, which he would not have dared to do, had he not known himſelf to be equal to him.

It is indeed well known, that Origen, and after him St. Chryſoſtom and St. Hierom, and divers of the Ancients beſide, did conceive that Saint Paul did not ſeriouſly oppoſe or tax Saint Peter, but did only do it ſeemingly, upon confederacy with him, for promoting a good deſign.

S. Cyril. c. Jul. lib. 9. (p. 325.) Chryſ. Tom. 5. Or. 59. οὐκ ἀπὸ ψυχῆς. Aug. Ep. 11.

This interpretation, however ſtrained and earneſtly impugned by Saint Auſtin, I will not diſcuſs; but only ſhall obſerve, that it being admitted doth rather ſtrengthen than weaken our diſcourſe: for, if Saint Peter were Saint Paul's Governor, it maketh Saint Peter to have conſented to an act in all appearance indecent, irregular, and ſcandalous; and how can we imagine, that Saint Peter would have complotted to the impairing his own juſt Authority in the eye of a great Church? doth not ſuch a condeſcenſion imply in him a diſavowing of Superiority over Saint Paul, or a conſpiracy with him to overthrow good Order?

To which purpoſe we may obſerve, that St. Chryſoſtom, in a large and very elaborate diſcourſe, wherein he profeſſeth to endeavour an aggravation of the irregularity of Saint Paul's demeanour, if it were ſerious; doth not lay the ſtreſs of that aggravation upon Saint Paul's oppoſing his lawful Governor; but his only ſo treating a Co-apoſtle of ſuch eminency: neither when to that end he deſigneth to reckon all the advantages of Saint Peter beyond Saint Paul, or any other Apoſtle, doth he mention this, which was chiefly material to his purpoſe, that he was Saint Paul's Governour; which obſervations if we do carefully weigh, we can hardly imagine, that St. Chryſoſtom had any notion of Saint Peter's Supremacy in relation to the Apoſtles.

Chryſ. Tom 5. Or. 59. Καὶ γὰρ αὔξω τὴν κατηγορίαν, καὶ μείζονα ποιῶ, &c.

Ὡς οὐδέν μοι ὄφελος ἂν Πέτρον τῆς κατηγορίας ἀποσκεδασάμενον, ὁ Παῦλος φαίνεται θαρσαλέως, καὶ ἀπερισκέπτως τοῦ συναποστόλου κατηγορῶν ——

So that 'tis no advantage to me, if, when Peter has confuted the charge, Paul appear to accuſe his Fellew-Apoſtle boldly and inconſiderately.

In fine, the drift of Saint Paul, in reporting thoſe paſſages concerning himſelf, was not to diſparage the other Apoſtles, nor merely to commend himſelf, but to fence the truth of his Doctrine, and maintain the liberty of his Diſciples againſt any prejudice that mighr ariſe from any authority, that might be pretended in any conſiderable reſpects ſuperior to his, and alledged againſt them; to which purpoſe he declareth by arguments and matters of fact, that his Authority was perfectly Apoſtolical, and equal to the greateſt; even to that of Saint Peter the prime Apoſtle, of Saint John the beloved Diſciple, of Saint James the Biſhop of Jeruſalem; the judgment or practice of whom, was no law to him, nor ſhould be to them, farther than it did conſiſt with that Doctrine, which he by an independent Authority, and by ſpecial revelation from Chriſt did preach unto them:) He might (as St. Chryſoſtom noteth) have pretended to ſome advantage over them, in regard that he had laboured more abundantly than they all, but he forbeareth to do ſo, being contented to obtain equal advantages.

Gal. 1. 12.

Καὶ ταύτῃ μάλιστα τῶν Ἀποστόλων πλεονεκτήσας, περισσότερον γὰρ αὐτῶν ἐκοπίασα, φησὶν, ἀλλὰ τέως οὐ κατασκευάζει τοῦτο, ἀλλ' ἀγαπᾷ τὰ ἴσα φέρων. Chryſ. in Gal. 1. 1.

Well therefore, conſidering the diſadvantage with this paſſage bringeth to the Roman pretence might this Hiſtory be called by Baronius, a Hiſtory hard to be underſtood, a ſtone of offence, a rock of ſcandal, a rugged place, which Saint Auſtin himſelf, under favour, could not paſs over without ſtumbling.

Baron. An. 51. § 32.--- 34. 35. &c.

Ro.11.13. It may alſo be conſidered, that Saint Paul particularly doth aſſert to himſelf an independent authority over the Gentiles, co-ordinate to that which Saint Peter had over the Jews; the which might engage him ſo earneſtly to conteſt with Saint Peter, as by his practice ſeducing thoſe, who belonged to his charge; the which alſo probably moved him thus to aſſert his authority to the Galatians, as being Gentiles under his care, and thence obliged eſpecially to regard his authority. Gal.1.6,7. They (ſaith Saint Paul) knowing that I was entruſted with the Goſpel of uncircumciſion, as Peter was entruſted with that of circumciſion, —— gave unto me and Barnabas the right hand of fellowſhip; the which words do clearly enough ſignify, that he took himſelf, and that the other Apoſtles took him to have under Chriſt an abſolute charge, ſubordinate to no man, over the Gentiles; whence he 2 Cor. 11. 28. claimeth to himſelf, as the burthen, the care of all the Churches; he therefore might well conteſt for their liberty, he might well inſiſt upon his authority among them.

Plena authoritas Petro in Judaiſmi prædicatione data dignoſcitur, & Pauli perfecta authoritas in prædicatione Gentium invenitur. Ambr.

There is diſcerned a full authority given to Peter of preaching to the Jews, and in Paul there is found a perfect power and authority of preaching to the Gentiles.

Thus did St. Chryſoſtom underſtand the caſe; for Chriſt (ſaith he) committed the Jews to Peter, but ſet Paul over the Gentiles; and, He (ſaith that great Father) farther doth ſhew himſelf to be equal to them in dignity, and compareth himſelf not only to the others, but even to the ring-leader; ſhewing that each did enjoy equal dignity.

Τοὺς μὲν γὰρ Ἰουδαίους ἐπέτρεψε τῷ Πέτρῳ, τοῖς δὲ Ἕλλησι τὸν Παῦλον ἐπέστησεν ὁ Χριστός. Chryſ. T.5. *Or.*59.

Δείκνυσιν αὐτοῖς ὁμότιμον ὄντα λοιπὸν. καὶ οὐ τοῖς ἄλλοις ἑαυτὸν, ἀλλὰ τῷ κορυφαίῳ συγκρίνει, δεικνὺς ὅτι τῆς αὐτῆς ἕκαστος ἀπήλαυσεν ἀξίας. Chryſ. in Gal.2.8.

It may alſo by any prudent Conſiderer eaſily be diſcerned, that if Saint Peter had really been as they aſſert him, ſo in Authority ſuperior to the other Apoſtles, it is hardly poſſible, that Saint Paul ſhould upon theſe occaſions expreſs nothing of it.

16. If Saint Peter had been appointed Sovereign of the Church, it ſeemeth that it ſhould have been requiſite, that he ſhould have outlived all the Apoſtles; for then either the Church muſt have wanted a Head, or there muſt have been an inextricable Controverſy about who that Head was. Saint Peter dyed long before Saint John (as all agree) and perhaps before divers other of the Apoſtles. Now, after his departure, did the Church want a Head? (then it might before, and after have none; and our Adverſaries loſe the main ground of their pretence) did one of the Apoſtles become Head? (which of them was it; upon what ground did he aſſume the Headſhip, or who conferred it on him; who ever did acknowledge any ſuch thing, or where is there any report about it?) was any other perſon made Head? (ſuppoſe the Biſhop of Rome, who only pretendeth thereto;) then did Saint John, and other Apoſtles become ſubject to one in degree inferior to them; then what 1 Cor.12. 28. becometh of Saint Paul's firſt Apoſtles, ſecondly Prophets, thirdly Teachers? what do all the Apoſtolical privileges come to, when Saint John muſt be at the command of Linus, and Cletus, and Clemens, and of I know Eph.4.11. not who beſide? was it not a great abſurdity for the Apoſtles to truckle under the Paſtors, and Teachers of Rome?

The like may be ſaid for Saint James, if he (as the Roman Church doth in its Liturgicks ſuppoſe) were an Apoſtle; who in many reſpects might claim the preeminence. Who therefore in the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions is preferred before Clement Biſhop of Rome.

17. Upon the ſame grounds, on which a Supremacy of power is claimed to Saint Peter, other Apoſtles might alſo challenge a Superiority therein over their Brethren; but to ſuppoſe ſuch a difference of power among the reſt is abſonous; and therefore the grounds are not valid, upon which Saint Peter's Supremacy is built.

I inſtance in Saint James and Saint John, who upon the ſame probabilities had (after Saint Peter) a preferenc to the other Apoſtles. For to them our Saviour declared a ſpecial regard; to them the Apoſtles afterwards may ſeem to have yielded a particular deference; they, in merit and performances ſeem to have ſurpaſſed; they, (after Saint Peter and his Brother) were firſt called to the Apoſtolical Office; they (as Saint Peter) were by our Lord new Chriſtned (as it were) and nominated Boanerges, by a name ſignifying the efficacy of their endeavour in their Maſter's ſervice; they, together with Saint Peter, were aſſumed to behold the transfiguration; they were culled out to wait on our Lord in his agony; they alſo, with Saint Peter (others being excluded) were taken to atteſt our Lord's performance of that great Miracle, of reſtoring the Ruler's Daughter to life; they, preſuming on their ſpecial favour with our Lord, did pretend to the chief places in his Kingdom.

Matt. 4. 21. Luk. 5. 10. Mar. 3. 17. Matt. 17. 1. 2 Pet. 1. 16. Matt. 26. 37. Mark 14. 15. Matt. 20. 20. Mark 10. 35. Mark 10. 37.

To one of them it is expreſſed that our Saviour did bear a peculiar affection, he being the Diſciple whom Jeſus loved, and who leaned on his boſom; to the other he particularly diſcovered himſelf after his Reſurrection, and firſt honoured him with the Crown of Martyrdom.

Joh. 13. 23. 21. 7, 20. 1 Cor. 15. 7.

They in blood and cognation did neareſt touch our Lord; being his Couſin Germans; (which was eſteemed by the Ancients a ground of preferment;) as Hegeſippus reporteth.

Τοὺς δ' ἀπολυθέντας ἡγήσασθαι τῶν Ἐκκλησιῶν, ὡς ἂν δὴ μάρτυρας ὁμοῦ καὶ ἀπὸ γένους ὄντας τοῦ Κυρίου. Hegeſipp. apud Euſeb. 3. 20. They being diſmiſt and ſent away to govern the Churches, as being both Witneſſes, and alſo Kinſmen of our Lord.

Their induſtry and activity in propagation of the Goſpel was moſt eminently conſpicuous.

To them it was peculiar, that Saint James did firſt Suffer for it, and Saint John did longeſt perſiſt in the faithful Confeſſion of it; whoſe Writings in ſeveral kinds do remain as the richeſt magazines of Chriſtian Doctrine, furniſhing us with the fulleſt Teſtimonies concerning the Divinity of our Lord, with ſpecial Hiſtories of his Life, and with his divineſt Diſcourſes; with moſt lively incitements to Piety and Charity; with prophetical Revelations concerning the ſtate of the Church. He therefore was one of the στῦλοι, chief Pillars and Props of the Chriſtian Profeſſion, one of the ὑπερλίαν Ἀπόστολοι, the Superlative Apoſtles.

Acts 12. 2. Gal. 2. 9. 2 Cor. 12. 11. 11. 5. Mar. 3. 17.

Accordingly in the Rolls of the Apoſtles, and in reports concerning them, their names uſually are placed after Saint Peter.

Act. 1. 13.

Hence alſo ſome of the Fathers do take them, as Saint Peter was, to have been preferred by our Lord*; Peter (ſaith Saint Gregory Nazianzen) and James and John, who both were indeed, and were reckoned before the others---- ſo indeed did Chriſt himſelf prefer them; and Peter, James and John, (ſaith Clemens Alex.) did not as being preferred by the Lord himſelf, conteſt for honour, but did chuſe James the Juſt, Biſhop of Jeruſalem, (or as Ruffinus reads, Biſhop of the Apoſtles.)

* Λαβὼν τοίνυν τοὺς κορυφαίους. Chryſ. in Matt. 17. 1. Taking therefore the chief and principal. Διὰ τί τούτους παραλαμβάνει μόνους; ὅτι οὗτοι τῶν ἄλλων ἦσαν ὑπερέχοντες. Chryſ. ib. Wherefore taketh he theſe only with him? becauſe theſe were the chief and principal above the others.

Πέτρος, καὶ Ἰάκωβος, καὶ Ἰωάννης, οἱ πρὸ τῶν ἄλλων καὶ ὄντες καὶ ἀριθμούμενοι —— αὕτη μὲν ἡ Χριστοῦ προτίμησις. Greg. Naz. Or. 26.

Πέτρον φησὶ καὶ Ἰάκωβον, καὶ Ἰωάννην ὡς ἂν καὶ ὑπὸ τοῦ κυρίου προτετιμημένους μὴ ἐπιδικάζεσθαι δόξης, ἀλλὰ Ἰάκωβον τὸν δίκαιον ἐπίσκοπον Ἱεροσολύμων ἑλέσθαι. (Ruffinus reddit Apoſtolorum Epiſcopum.) Clem. Alex. apud Euſeb. 2. 1.

Hence if by deſignation of Chriſt, by the Conceſſion of the Apoſtolical College, by the prefulgency of his excellent worth and merit, or upon any other ground Saint Peter had the πρωτεῖα or firſt place, the δευτερεῖα or next place in the ſame kind, by like means, upon the ſame grounds ſeem to have belonged unto them; and if their advantage did imply difference not in Power but in Order only (not authoritative Superiority, but honorary Precedence) then can no more be allowed or concluded due to him.

18. The Fathers both in expreſs terms, and implicitly or by conſequence, do aſſert the Apoſtles to have been equal or co-ordinate in Power and Authority.

What can be more expreſs, than that of St. Cyprian. The other Apoſtles were indeed that which Peter was, endowed with equal conſortſhip of honour and power; and again, Although our Lord giveth to all the Apoſtles after his reſurrection an equal power, and ſaith, As the Father ſent me, ſo I ſend you.

Hoc erant utiq; & cæteri Apoſtoli quod fuit Petrus, pari conſortio præditi & honoris & poteſtatis. —— quamvis Apoſtolis omnibus poſt reſurrectionem ſuam parem poteſtatem tribuat, ac dicat,&c. Cypr. de Un. Eccl.

What can be more plain than that of St. Chryſoſtom, Saint Paul ſheweth, that each Apoſtle did enjoy equal dignity?

Δεικνὺς, ὅτι τῆς αὐτῆς ἕκαστος ἀπήλαυσεν ἀξίας. Chryſ. in Gal. 2. 8.

How again could St. Chryſoſtom more clearly ſignify his Opinion, than when comparing Saint Paul to Saint Peter, he calleth Saint Paul ἰσότιμον αὐτῷ, equal in honour to him, adding, πλέον γὰρ οὐδὲν ἐρῶ τέως, for I will not as yet ſay any thing more, as if he thought Saint Paul indeed the more honourable?

Chryſ. in Gal. 1. 8.

Vide Tert. de Præſcr. cap. 20.

How alſo could Saint Cyril more plainly declare his ſenſe to be the ſame, than when he called Saint Peter and Saint John ἰσοτίμους ἀλλήλοις, equal to one another in honour?

Πέτρος καὶ Ἰωάννης ἰσότιμοι ἀλλήλοις, καθὸ καὶ Ἀπόστολοι καὶ ἅγιοι μαθηταί. Act. Con. Eph. part. 1. p. 209. Peter and John were equal in honour one to another, as were alſo the Apoſtles, and holy Diſciples.

Did Tertullian think Saint Paul inferior to Saint Peter, when he ſaid, It is well that Peter is even in martyrdom equalled to Paul? Bene quòd Petrus Paulo & in martyrio adæquatur. Tert. de Præſcr. 24.

Did not St. Hierom alſo ſufficiently declare his mind in the caſe, when he ſaith of the Apoſtles, that the ſtrength of the Church is equally ſetled upon them.

At dicis ſuper Petrum fundatur Eccleſia, licèt id ipſum alio loco ſuper omnes Apoſtolos fiat, & ex æquo ſuper eos Eccleſiæ fortitudo ſolidetur. Hieron. in Jovin. 1. 14.

But you will ſay, the Church is founded upon Peter, though the ſame thing in another place is affirmed of all the Apoſtles, aud that, &c.

Doth not Dionyſius (the ſuppoſed Areopagite) call the Decad of the Apoſtles co-ordinate with their Foreman, Saint Peter? in conformity, I ſuppoſe, to the current judgment of his Age.

Ὁ τῶν μαθητῶν κορυφαῖος, μετὰ τῆς ὁμοταγοῦς αὐτῷ καὶ ἱεραρχικῆς δεκάδος. Dionyſ. de Eccl. Hier. cap. 5.

What can be more full than that of Iſidore, (whoſe words ſhew how long this ſenſe continued in the Church) The other Apoſtles did receive an equal ſhare of honour and power; who alſo being diſperſed in the whole world did preach the Goſpel; and to whom departing the Biſhops did ſucceed, who are conſtituted through the whole world in the Sees of the Apoſtles.

Cæteri Apoſtoli cum Petro par conſortium honoris & poteſtatis acceperunt, qui etiam in toto orbe diſperſi Evangelium prædicaverunt, quibúſq; decedentibus ſucceſſerunt Epiſcopi, qui ſunt conſtituti per totum mundum in ſedibus Apoſtolorum. Iſid. Hiſp. de Off. 2. 5.

By conſequence the Fathers do aſſert this equality, when they affirm (as we before did ſhew) the Apoſtolical Office to be abſolutely Supreme;

preme; when alſo they affirm (as afterwards we ſhall ſhew) all the Apoſtles Succeſſors to be equal as ſuch; and particularly that the Roman Biſhop upon account of his ſucceeding Saint Peter hath no preeminence above his Brethren? for, whereever a Biſhop be, whether at Rome, or at Eugubium, at Conſtantinople, or at Rhegium, at Alexandria, or at Thanis, he is of the ſame worth, and of the ſame Prieſthood: the force of wealth, and lowneſs of poverty, doth not render a Biſhop more high, or more low; for that all of them are Succeſſors of the Apoſtles.

Ubicunq; fuerit Epiſcopus, ſive Romæ ſive Eugubii,&c. Hier. ad Evagr. *Ep.*85.

19. Neither is it to prudential eſteem a deſpicable conſideration, that the moſt ancient of the Fathers, having occaſion ſometimes largely to diſcourſe of Saint Peter, do not mention any ſuch Prerogatives belonging to him.

Clem. ad Corinth. Iren.3 12. 3. 1, 3.

20. The laſt Argument which I ſhall uſe againſt this Primacy, ſhall be the inſufficiency of thoſe Arguments and Teſtimonies, which they alledge to warrant and prove it.

If this Point be of ſo great conſequence as they make it; if, as they would perſuade us, the ſubſiſtence, order, unity and peace of the Church, together with the Salvation of Chriſtians, do depend on it; if, as they ſuppoſe, many great points of truth do hang on this pin; if it be, as they declare, a main Article of Faith, and not only a ſimple errour, but a pernicious hereſy to deny this primacy: then it is requiſite that a clear revelation from God ſhould be producible in favour of it (for upon that ground only ſuch points can firmly ſtand) then it is moſt probable, that God (to prevent controverſies, occaſions of doubt, and excuſes for errour about ſo grand a matter) would not have failed to have declared it ſo plainly, as might ſerve to ſatisfy any reaſonable man, and to convince any froward Gainſayer; but no ſuch revelation doth appear; for the places of Scripture which they alledge do not plainly expreſs it, nor pregnantly imply it, nor can it by fair conſequence be inferred from them: No man unprepoſſeſſed with affection to their ſide would deſcry it in them; without thwarting Saint Peter's Order, and wreſting the Scriptures they cannot deduce it from them. This by examining their Allegations will appear.

Agitur de ſumma rei Chriſtianæ,&c. Bell. præf. ad lib. de Pontif. R.

Eſt enim reverâ non ſimplex error, ſed pernicioſa hæreſis negare B. Petri primatum à Chriſto inſtitutum. Bell. de Pont. R. 1. 10.

2 Pet.3. 16.

I. They alledge thoſe words of our Saviour, uttered by him upon occaſion of Saint Peter's confeſſing him to be the Son of God, Thou art Peter, and upon this rock will I build my Church; here, ſay they, Saint Peter is declared the Foundation, that is, the ſole Supreme Governor of the Church.

Matt. 16. 18.

S. Romana Eccleſia nullis Synodicis conſtitutis cæteris Eccleſiis prælata eſt, ſed Evangelicâ voce Domini & ſalvatoris noſtri primatum obtinuit; Tu es Petrus (inquiens) &c. P. Gelaſ.1. *diſt.*21. *cap.*3.

The Holy Church of Rome is not preferr'd before other Churches by any Synodical Decrees, but has obtain'd the primacy by the voice of our Lord and Saviour in the Goſpel, ſaying, Thou art Peter,&c.

To this I anſwer.

1. Thoſe words do not clearly ſignify any thing to their purpoſe; for they are metaphorical, and thence ambiguous or capable of divers interpretations; whence they cannot ſuffice to ground ſo main a point of Doctrine, or to warrant ſo huge a Pretence; theſe ought to ſtand upon down-right, evident and indubitable Teſtimony.

It is pretty to obſerve how Bellarmine propoſeth this Teſtimony; Of which words (ſaith he) the ſenſe is plain and obvious, that it be underſtood, that under two metaphors the principate of the whole Church was promiſed; as if that ſenſe could be ſo plain and obvious, which is couched under two metaphors, and thoſe not very pat or clear in application to their ſenſe.

Quorum verborum planus & obvius ſenſus eſt, ut intelligatur ſub duabus metaphoris promiſſum Petro totius Eccleſiæ principatum. Bell. *de Pont.*1.10.

2. This is manifeſtly confirmed from that the Fathers and Divines both ancient and modern have much differed in expoſition of theſe words.

[Some (ſaith Abulenſis) ſay that this rock is Peter —— others ſay, and better, that it is Chriſt —— others ſay, and yet better, that it is the confeſſion which Peter maketh.]

Toſtat. in Matth. 16. qu. 67.

For ſome interpret this rock to be Chriſt himſelf, of whom Saint Paul ſaith, Other foundation can no man lay, than that which is laid, which is Jeſus Chriſt.

1 Cor. 3. 11.

St. Auſtin telleth us in his Retractations, that he often had expounded the words to this purpoſe, although he did not abſolutely reject that interpretation which made Saint Peter the rock; leaving it to the Reader's choice which is the moſt probable.

Scio me poſtea ſæpiſſimè expoſuiſſe, ut ſuper hanc Petram intelligeretur quem confeſſus eſt Petrus; harum autem duarum ſententiarum quæ ſit probabilior eligat Lector. Aug. Retr. 1. 21. Vide Aug. in Joh. tr. 124. de verb. Dom. in Matt. Serm. 13.

Super hanc, inquit, Petram quam confeſſus es, ædificabo Eccleſiam meam. Aug. in Joh. tr. 124. & de verb. Dom in Matt. Serm. 13. (Tom. 10.)

Super hanc Petram, id eſt, ſuper me ædificabo Eccleſiam meam. Anſ. in Matt. 16. 18.

Others (and thoſe moſt eminent Fathers) do take the rock to be Saint Peter's faith, or profeſſion; Upon the Rock (ſaith the Prince of interpreters) that is upon the faith of his profeſſion; and again, Chriſt ſaid that he would build his Church on Peter's confeſſion; and, again (he or another ancient Writer under his name) upon this rock, he ſaid not upon Peter, for he did not build his Church upon the man, but upon his faith.

Our Lord (ſaith Theodoret) did permit the firſt of the Apoſtles, whoſe confeſſion he did fix as a prop or foundation of the Church, to be ſhaken.

[Whence Origen ſaith, that every diſciple of Chriſt is the rock, in virtue of his agreement with Peter in that holy confeſſion.]

This ſenſe even Popes have embraced.

Τῇ Πέτρᾳ —— τουτέστι τῇ πίστει τῆς ὁμολογίας. Chryſ. in Matt 16. 18.

—— τὴν Ἐκκλησίαν ἔφησεν ἐπὶ τὴν ὁμολογίαν οἰκοδομήσειν τὴν ἐκείνου. Chryſ. in Joh. 1. 50.

Ἐπὶ ταύτῃ τῇ Πέτρᾳ, οὐκ εἶπεν ἐπὶ τῷ Πέτρῳ· οὔτε γὰρ ἐπὶ τῷ ἀνθρώπῳ, ἀλλ' ἐπὶ τὴν πίστιν τὴν ἑαυτοῦ Ἐκκλησίαν ᾠκοδόμησε. Chryſ. Tom. 5. Or. 163.

Super hanc igitur confeſſionis Petram Eccleſiæ ædificatio eſt. Hil. de Trin. 6.

—— Ἀποστόλων τὸν πρῶτον, οὗ τὴν ὁμολογίαν οἷόν τινα κρηπῖδα, καὶ θεμέλιον τῆς Ἐκκλησίας κατέπηξε, συνεχώρησε σαλευθῆναι. Theod. Ep. 77.

Πέτρα γὰρ πᾶς ὁ Χριστοῦ μαθητής, &c. Orig. in Matt. 16. p. 275.

In vera fide perſiſtite, & vitam veſtram in Petra Eccleſiæ, hoc eſt in confeſſione B. Petri Apoſtolorum Principis ſolidate. Greg. M. Ep. 3. 33. Perſiſt in the true Faith, and eſtabliſh and fix your life upon the rock of the Church, that is, upon the confeſſion of Bleſſed Peter the Prince of the Apoſtles.

Super iſta confeſſione ædificabo Eccleſiam meam. Felix III. Ep. 5. Vide Nic. I. Ep. 2. 6. Joh. VIII. Ep. 76.

Others ſay, that as Saint Peter did not ſpeak for himſelf, but in the name of all the Apoſtles, and of all faithful people, repreſenting the Paſtors and people of the Church; ſo correſpondently our Lord did declare, that he would build his Church upon ſuch faithful Paſtors and Confeſſors.

Unus pro omnibus loquens, & Eccleſiæ voce reſpondens. Cypr. Ep. 55. One ſpeaking for all, and anſwering in the name of the Church.

Cui Eccleſiæ figuram gerenti Dominus ait, Super hanc —— Aug. Ep. 165. To whom, repreſenting the whole Church, our Lord ſaith, Upon this rock, &c.

Petrus ex perſona omnium Apoſtolorum profitetur. Hier. in loc. Peter profeſſes in the perſon of all the Apoſtles.

Others do indeed by the rock underſtand Saint Peter's perſon, but do not thereby expound to be meant his being Supreme Governor of the Apoſtles, or of the whole Church.

Vide Rigalt. in Cypr. Ep. 27. 40. 70. 71. 73. 69.

The Divines, Schoolmen and Canoniſts of the Roman Communion do not alſo agree in expoſition of the words; and divers of the moſt learned among them do approve the interpretation of St. Chryſoſtom.

Now then how can ſo great a Point of Doctrine be firmly grounded on a place of ſo doubtful interpretation? how can any one be obliged to underſtand the words according to their interpretation which Perſons of ſo good ſenſe, and ſo great Authority do underſtand otherwiſe? with what modeſty can they pretend that meaning to be clear, which ſo perſpicacious eyes could not diſcern therein? why may not I excuſably agree with St. Chryſoſtom, or St. Auſtin, in underſtanding the place? may I not reaſonably oppoſe their judgment to the Opinion of any Modern Doctors, deeming Bellarmine as fallible in his conceptions, as one of them; why conſequently may I not without blame refuſe their Doctrine as built upon this place, or diſavow the goodneſs of this proof?

3. It is very evident that the Apoſtles themſelves did not underſtand thoſe words of our Lord to ſignify any grant or promiſe to Saint Peter of Supremacy over them; for would they have contended for the chief place, if they had underſtood whoſe it of right was by our Lord's own poſitive determination? would they have diſputed about a queſtion, which to their knowledge by their Maſter was already ſtated? would they have troubled our Lord to inquire of him who ſhould be the greateſt in his Kingdom, when they knew that our Lord had declared his will to make Saint Peter Viceroy? would the Sons of Zebedee have been ſo fooliſh and preſumptuous as to beg the place, which they knew by our Lord's word and promiſe fixed on Saint Peter? would Saint Peter among the reſt have fretted at that idle overture, whenas he knew the place by our Lord's immutable purpoſe and infallible declaration aſſured to him? And if none of the Apoſtles did underſtand the words to imply this Roman ſenſe, who can be obliged ſo to underſtand them? yea who can wiſely, who can ſafely ſo underſtand them? for ſurely they had common ſenſe, as well as any man living now; they had as much advantage as we can have to know our Lord's meaning; their ignorance therefore of this ſenſe being ſo apparent, is not only a juſt excuſe for not admitting this interpretation, but a ſtrong bar againſt it.

Luke 22. 14.

Mar. 9. 3.

Matt. 18. 1.

Matth. 20. 21. Ἀκούσαντες οἱ δέκα ἠγανάκτησαν.

And when the ten heard it, they were moved with indignation.

4. This interpretation alſo doth not well conſiſt with our Lord's anſwers to the conteſts, inquiries, and petitions of his Diſciples concerning the point of Superiority: for doth he not (if the Roman expoſitions be good) ſeem upon thoſe occaſions not only to diſſemble his own word and promiſe, but to diſavow them or thwart them? can we conceive, that he would in ſuch a caſe of doubt forbear to reſolve them, clearly to inſtruct them, and admoniſh them of their Duty?

5. Taking the Rock as they would have it to be the Perſon of Saint Peter, and that on him the Church ſhould be built, yet do not the words being a Rock probably denote Government; for what reſemblance is there between being a Rock and a Governor; at leaſt what aſſurance can there be that this metaphor preciſely doth import that ſenſe; ſeeing in other reſpects, upon as fair ſimilitudes, he might be called ſo?

St. Auſtin ſaith, the Apoſtles were Foundations, becauſe their Authority doth ſupport our weakneſs.

Quare ſunt fundamenta Apoſtoli & Prophetæ, quia eorum auctoritas portat infirmitatem noſtram. Aug. in Pſ 86.

St. Hierom ſaith, that they were Foundations, becauſe the Faith of the Church was firſt laid in them.

In illis erant fundamenta, ibi primùm poſita eſt fides Eccleſiæ. Hier. in Pſ. 86.

St. Baſil ſaith, that Saint Peter's Soul was called the Rock, becauſe it was firmly rooted in the Faith, and did hold ſtiff without giving way againſt the blows of temptation.

Πέτρα δὲ ὑψηλὴ ἡ ψυχὴ τοῦ μακαρίου Πέτρου ὠνόμασται, διὰ τὸ παγίως ἐνεῤῥιζῶσθαι τῇ πίστει, καὶ στεῤῥῶς καὶ ἀνενδότως ἔχειν πρὸς τὰς ἐκ πειρασμῶν ἐπαγομένας πληγάς. Baſ. in Iſ. 2. p. 869.

Chryſologus ſaith, that Peter had his name from a Rock, becauſe he firſt merited to found the Church by firmneſs of Faith.

Petrus à Petra nomen adeptus eſt, quia primus meruit Eccleſiam fidei firmitate fundare. Chryſ. Serm. 53.

Theſe are fair explications of the metaphor, without any reference to Saint Peter's Government.

But however alſo admitting this, that being ſuch a Rock doth imply Government and Paſtoral Charge; yet do they (notwitſtanding theſe grants and ſuppoſitions) effect nothing; for they cannot prove the words ſpoken excluſively in regard to other Apoſtles, or to import any thing ſingular to him above or beſide them: He might be a governing Rock, ſo might others be; the Church might be built on him, ſo it might be on other Apoſtles; he might be deſigned a Governor, a great Governor, a principal Governor, ſo might they alſo be; this might be without any violence done to thoſe words.

And this indeed was; for all the other Apoſtles in Holy Scripture are called Foundations, and the Church is ſaid to be built on them.

If (ſaith Origen, the Father of Interpreters) you think the whole Church to be only built on Peter alone, what will you ſay of John the Son of thunder, and of each of the Apoſtles? &c. largely to this purpoſe.

Εἰ δὲ ἐπὶ τὸν ἕνα ἐκεῖνον Πέτρον νομίζεις ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ οἰκοδομεῖσθαι τὴν πᾶσαν Ἐκκλησίαν μόνον, τί ἂν φήσαις περὶ Ἰωάννου τοῦ τῆς βροντῆς υἱοῦ, ἢ ἑκάστου τῶν Ἀποστόλων, &c. Orig. in Matth. 16. p. 275.

Eph. 2. 20.

Chriſt (as St. Hierom ſaith) was the Rock, and he beſtowed on the Apoſtles, that they ſhould be called Rocks. And You ſay (ſaith he again) that the Church is founded on Peter, but the ſame in another place is done upon all the Apoſtles.

Petra Chriſtus eſt, qui donavit Apoſtolis, ut ipſi quoque Petræ vocentur. Hier. in Amos 9. 12.

Dicis ſuper Petrum fundatur Eccleſia, licèt id ipſum in alio loco ſuper omnes Apoſtolos fiat. Hier. in Jovin. 1. 14.

The twelve Apoſtles (ſaith another ancient Author) were the immutable Pillars of orthodoxie, the Rock of the Church.

The Church (ſaith St. Baſil) is built upon the Foundation of the Prophets and Apoſtles, Peter alſo was one of the Mountains; upon which Rock the Lord did promiſe to build his Church.

Ἐκκλησία — ᾠκοδόμηται ἐπὶ τῷ θεμελίῳ τῶν Ἀποστόλων καὶ Προφητῶν· ἓν τῶν ὀρέων ἦν καὶ Πέτρος, ἐφ᾽ ἧς καὶ Πέτρας ἐπηγγείλατο ὁ Κύριος οἰκοδομήσειν αὐτοῦ τὴν Ἐκκλησίαν. Baſil. in Iſa. 2. p. 869.

St. Cyprian in his diſputes with Pope Stephen did more than once alledge this place, yet could he not take them in their ſenſe to ſignify excluſively; for he did not acknowledge any imparity of Power among the Apoſtles or their Succeſſors. He indeed plainly took theſe words to reſpect all the Apoſtles and their Succeſſors, our Lord taking occaſion to promiſe that to one, which he intended to impart to all for themſelves and their Succeſſors; Our Lord (ſaith he) ordering the honour of a Biſhop, and the order of his Church, ſaith to Peter, I ſay to thee, &c. hence through the turns of times and ſucceſſions, the ordination of Biſhops, and the manner of the Church doth run on, that the Church ſhould be ſettled upon the Biſhops, and every Act of the Church ſhould be governed by the ſame Prelates: as therefore he did conceive the Church to be built not on the Pope ſingularly, but on all

Cypr. Ep. 71, & 73.

Dominus noſter Epiſcopi honorem, & Eccleſiæ ſuæ rationem diſponens, dicit Petro, Ego tibi dico—— Inde per temporum & ſucceſſionum vices Epiſcoporum ordinatio, & Eccleſiæ ratio decurrit, ut Eccleſia ſuper Epiſcopos conſtituatur, & omnis actus Eccleſiæ per eoſdem præpoſitos gubernetur. Cypr. Ep. 27. & de Unit. Eccl.

all the Biſhops; ſo he thought our Lord did intend to build his Church not upon Saint Peter only, but on all his Apoſtles.

6. It is not ſaid, that the Apoſtles, or the Apoſtolical Office ſhould be built on him; for that could not be, ſeing the Apoſtles were conſtituted, and the Apoſtolical Office was founded before that promiſe; the words only therefore can import, that according to ſome meaning he was a Rock, upon which the Church, afterward to be collected, ſhould be built; he was A Rock of the Church to be built, as Tertullian ſpeaketh; the words therefore cannot ſignify any thing available to their purpoſe, in relation to the Apoſtles.

Latuit aliquid Petrum ædificandæ Eccleſiæ Petram dictum. Tertul. de Præſcr. cap. 22.

7. If we take Saint Peter himſelf for the Rock, then (as I take it) the beſt meaning of the words doth import, that our Lord deſigned Saint Peter for a prime Inſtrument, (the firſt Mover, the moſt diligent, and active at the beginning, the moſt conſtant, ſtiff and firm) in the ſupport of his Truth, and propagation of his Doctrine, or converſion of men to the belief of the Goſpel; the which is called building of the Church; according to that of St. Ambroſe, or ſome ancient Homiliſt under his name, He is called a Rock, becauſe he firſt did lay in the Nations the Foundations of Faith: In which regard as the other Apoſtles are called Foundations of the Church, (the Church being founded on their labours,) ſo might Saint Peter ſignally be ſo called; who (as St. Baſil ſaith, alluſively interpreting our Saviour's words) for the excellency of his Faith did take on him the edifying of the Church.

Πέτρος ἐν Ἀποστόλοις πρῶτος ἐκήρυξε τὸν Χριστόν. Chryſ.

Peter firſt of all the Apoſtles preach'd Chriſt.

Petra dicitur eò quòd primus in nationibus fidei fundamenta poſuerit. Ambr. de Sanctis. Serm. 2.

Ὁ διὰ πίστεως ὑπεροχὴν ἐφ᾽ ἑαυτὸν τὴν οἰκοδομὴν τῆς Ἐκκλησίας δεξάμενος. Baſ. contra Eunom. lib 2.

Petra ædificandæ Eccleſiæ. Tertul. *de præſ. c.*22.

Both he and they alſo might be ſo termed, for that upon their teſtimonies concerning the Life, Death and Reſurrection of Chriſt, the Faith of Chriſtians was grounded; as alſo it ſtands upon their convincing diſcourſes, their holy practice, their miraculous performances, in all which Saint Peter was moſt eminent; and in the beginning of Chriſtianity diſplayed them to the edification of the Church.

This interpretation plainly doth agree with matter of fact and hiſtory; which is the beſt interpreter of right or privilege in ſuch caſes; for we may reaſonably underſtand our Saviour to have promiſed that, which in effect we ſee performed, ſo the event ſheweth, the Church was built on him, that is by him; ſaith Tertullian.

Sic enim exitus docet, in ipſo Eccleſia extructa eſt, id eſt per ipſum, &c. Tert. *de pudic. cap.*21.

But this ſenſe doth not imply any Superiority of Power, or Dignity granted to Saint Peter above his Brethren; however it may ſignify an advantage belonging to him, and deſerving eſpecial reſpect; as St. Chryſoſtom notably doth ſet out in theſe words; Although John, although James, although Paul, although any other whoever may appear performing great matters; he yet doth ſurpaſs them all, who did precede them in liberty of ſpeech, and opened the entrance, and gave to them as to a river carried with a huge ſtream to enter with great eaſe: Doing this, as, I ſay, it might ſignify his being a Rock of the Church, ſo it denoteth an excellency of merit, but not a Superiority in Power.

Κἂν Ἰωάννης, κἂν Ἰάκωβος, κἂν Παῦλος κἂν ἄλλος ὁστισοῦν μετὰ ταῦτα μέγα τι ποιῶν φαίνηται, ἁπάντων οὗτος πλεονεκτεῖ, ὁ προοδοποιήσας αὐτῶν τῇ παρρησίᾳ, καὶ διανοίξας τὴν εἴσοδον, καὶ δοὺς αὐτοῖς καθάπερ ποταμῷ πολλῷ φερομένῳ ῥεύματι μετὰ πολλῆς ἀδείας ἐπεισελθεῖν, &c. Chryſ. Tom. 5. Or. 59.

8. It may alſo be obſerved, that Saint Peter before the ſpeaking of thoſe Words by our Lord may ſeem to have had a Primacy, intimated by the Evangeliſts, when they report his call to the Apoſtolical Office; and by his behaviour, when in this confeſſion, and before in the like, he undertook to be their mouth and Spokeſman; when not being unmindful of his place (ſaith St. Ambroſe) he did act a Primacy; a Primacy (addeth that Father) of Confeſſion, not of honour; of Faith, not of order; his Primacy therefore (ſuch as he had) cannot well be founded on this place, he being afore poſſeſſed of it, and (as St. Ambroſe conceived) exerciſing it at that time.

Matt. 10. 2.
John 6. 69.

Loci non immemor ſui primatum egit; ——primatum Confeſſionis, non honoris; Fidei, non ordinis. Ambr. de Incarn. cap. 4.

II. They alledge the next words of our Lord, ſpoken in ſequel upon the ſame occaſion, To thee will I give the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, that is, ſay they, the Supreme power over all the Church; for he (ſay they) that hath the Keys is Maſter of the Houſe.

Per claves datas Petro intelligimus ſummam poteſtatem in omnem Eccleſiam. Bell. de Pont. 1. 3.

To this teſtimony we may apply divers of the ſame anſwers, which were given to the former; for,

1. Theſe words are figurate, and therefore not clear enough to prove their aſſertion.

2. They do admit and had received various interpretations.

3. It is evident, that the Apoſtles themſelves did not underſtand theſe words as importing a Supremacy over them, that Saint Peter himſelf did not apprehend this ſenſe, that our Lord upon occaſion inviting to it did not take notice of his promiſe, according thereto.

4. The words, I will give thee, cannot any-wiſe be aſſured to have been excluſive of others, or appropriated to him. He ſaid (as a very learned man of the Roman Communion noteth) to Peter, I will give thee the Keys, but he ſaid not, I will give them to thee alone; nothing therefore can be concluded from them to their purpoſe.

Dixit Petro, dabo tibi claves, at non dixit, dabo tibi ſoli. Rigalt. in Epiſt. Firmil.

5. The Fathers do affirm, that all the Apoſtles did receive the ſame Keys.

Are (ſaith Origen) the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven given by the Lord to Peter alone, and ſhall none other of the Bleſſed ones receive them? but if this, I will give thee the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, be common, how alſo are not all the things common, which were ſpoken before, or are added as ſpoken to Peter.

Ἆρα δὲ τῷ Πέτρῳ μόνῳ δίδονται ὑπὸ τοῦ Κυρίου αἱ κλεῖδες τῆς τῶν οὐρανῶν βασιλείας, καὶ οὐδεὶς ἕτερος τῶν μακαρίων αὐτὰς λήψεται; εἰ δὲ κοινόν ἐστι καὶ πρὸς ἑτέρους, τὸ δώσω σοι τὰς κλεῖδας τῆς βασιλείας τῶν οὐρανῶν, πῶς οὐχὶ καὶ πάντα τά τε προειρημένα, καὶ τὰ ἐπιφερόμενα ὡς πρὸς Πέτρον λελεγμένα; Orig. in Matt. 16 p. 275.

St. Hierom ſays in expreſs words, that all the Apoſtles did receive the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven.

Quod Petro dicitur, Apoſtolis dicitur. Ambr. in Pſal. 38. What is ſaid to Peter, is ſaid to the Apoſtles.

Licèt id ipſum in alio loco ſuper omnes Apoſtolos fiat, & cuncti claves regni cœlorum accipiant. Hier. in Jov. 1. 14.

Though the ſame thing in another place is done upon all the Apoſtles, and all receive the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven.

He (ſaith Optatus) did alone receive the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven (which were) to be communicated to the reſt; that is (as Rigaltius well poundeth thoſe words) which Chriſt himſelf would alſo communicate to the reſt.

Claves regni cœlorum communicandas cæteris ſolus ſolus accepit. Opt. lib. 7.

Communicandas cæteris dixit, quas ipſe Chriſtus communicaturus erat & cæteris. Rigalt in Cypr. de Un. Eccl.

Theophylact. Although it be ſpoken to Peter alone, I will give thee, yet it is given to all the Apoſtles.

Εἰ γὰρ καὶ πρὸς Πέτρον μόνον εἴρηται τὸ δώσω σοι, ἀλλὰ καὶ πᾶσι τοῖς Ἀποστόλοις δέδοται. Theoph. in loc.

It is part of Saint John's character in St. Chryſoſtom, He that hath the Keys of the Heavens.

Ὁ τὰς κλεῖς ἔχων τῶν οὐρανῶν. Chryſ. in præf. Evang. Joh.

6. Indeed whatever (according to any tolerable expoſition, or according to the current expoſitions of the Fathers) thoſe Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven do import (whether it be a faculty of opening it by Doctrine, of admitting into it by diſpenſation of Baptiſm, and abſolution, of excluding from it by Eccleſiaſtical cenſure, or any ſuch faculty ſignified by the metaphorical expreſſion) it plainly did belong to all the Apoſtles, and was effectually conferred on them; yea after them upon all the Paſtors of the Church in their ſeveral precincts and degrees; who in all Ages have claimed to themſelves the power of the Keys; to be (as the Council of Compeign calleth all Biſhops) clavigeri, the Key-bearers of the Kingdom of Heaven.

Claves intelligit verbum Dei, evangelium Chriſti. Rigalt in Cyp. Ep. 13.

Epiſcopi —— quos conſtat eſſe vicarios Chriſti,& clavigeros regni cœlorum. Conc. Comp. apud Bin. *Tom.*6. *p.*361.

So that in theſe words nothing ſingular was promiſed or granted to Saint Peter; although it well may be deemed a ſingular mark of favour, that what our Lord did intend to beſtow on all Paſtors, that he did anticipately promiſe to him; or, as the Fathers ſay, to the Church and its Paſtors in him. In which reſpect we may admit thoſe words of Pope Leo I.

Tranſivit quidem in Apoſtolos alios vis iſtius poteſtatis, ſed non fruſtra uni commendatur quod omnibus intimetur. Petro ergò ſingulariter hoc creditur, quia cunctis Eccleſiæ rectoribus Petri forma proponitur. Leo *I. in Nat. Petri & Pauli. Serm.*2.

The efficacy of this Power paſſed indeed upon all the Apoſtles; yet was it not in vain, that what was intimated to all, was commended to one. Therefore this is committed ſingly to Peter, becauſe Peter's pattern and example is propounded to all the Governors of the Church.

7. Indeed divers of the Fathers do conceive the words ſpoken to Saint Peter not as a ſingle perſon, but as a repreſentative of the Church, or as ſtanding in the room of each Paſtor therein; unto whom our Lord deſigned to impart the power of the Keys.

All we Biſhops (ſaith St. Ambroſe) have in Saint Peter received the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven.

In B. Petro claves regni cœlorum cuncti ſuſcepimus ſacerdotes. Ambr. de dign. Sac 1. Eccleſia quæ fundatur in Chriſto, claves ab eo regni cœlorum accepit, id eſt, poteſtatem ligandi ſolvendíq; peccata. Aug. tract. 124. in Joh. *vide tract.*50.

The Church which is founded upon Chriſt, received from him the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, i. e. the power of binding and looſing Sins.

In typo unitatis Petro Dominus dedit poteſtatem——— Aug. *de Bap.*3.17.

Our Lord gave the power to Peter, as a type of Unity.

Ἐν προσώπῳ τοῦ κορυφαίου καὶ τοῖς λοιποῖς τῶν μαθητῶν ἡ τοιαύτη ἐξουσία δέδοται. Phot. Cod. 280.

Such Authority was given to the reſt of the Apoſtles in the perſon of him who was the chief.

Non ſine cauſa inter omnes Apoſtolos Eccleſiæ Catholicæ perſonas ſuſtinet Petrus; huic enim Eccleſiæ claves regni cœlorum datæ ſunt, cùm Petro datæ ſunt— Aug. *de Ag. Chr. cap.*30 in Pſ. 108.

Not without cauſe does Peter among the reſt of the Apoſtles ſuſtain the Perſon of the Catholick Church; for to this Church are the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven given, when they are given unto Peter.

8. Theſe anſwers are confirmed by the words immediately adjoyned * equivalent to theſe, and interpretative of them, And whatſoever thou ſhalt bind on Earth, ſhall be bound in Heaven ---- the which do import a power or privilege ſoon after expreſly, and in the very ſame words promiſed or granted to all the Apoſtles; as alſo the ſame power in other words was by our Lord conferred on them all after the Reſurrection.

*Aug ſupr. Matt. 18. 18. Joh. 20. 23.

If therefore the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven do import ſupreme Power, then each Apoſtle had Supreme Power.

9. If we ſhould grant (that which no-wiſe can be proved,) that ſomething peculiarly belonging to Saint Peter is implied in thoſe words, it can only be this, that he ſhould be a prime man in the work of preaching and propagating the Goſpel, and conveying the heavenly benefits of it to Believers ; which is an opening of the Kingdom of Heaven ; according to what Tertullian excellently ſaith of him ; So (ſaith he) the event teacheth, the Church was built in him, that is, by him ; he did initiate the Key ; ſee which, Te men of Iſrael, hear theſe words, Jeſus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you, &c. He, in fine, in the baptiſm of Chriſt did unlock the entrance to the Kingdom of Heaven, &c.

Sic enim exitus docet, in ipſo Eccleſia extructa eſt, id eſt, per ipſum ; ipſe clavem imbuit ; vide quam, Viri Iſraelitæ auribus mandate quæ dico, Jeſum Nazarenum virum à Deo vobis deſtinatum, &c. Ipſe denique primus in Chriſti baptiſmo reſeravit aditum cœleſtis regni, &c. Tert. de pud. 21.

10. It ſeemeth abſurd, that Saint Peter ſhould exerciſe the power of the Keys in reſpect to the Apoſtles : for did he open the Kingdom of Heaven to them, who were by our Lord long before admitted into it ? ——

11. In fine, our Lord (as Saint Luke relateth it) did ſay to Saint Peter, and probably to him firſt, Fear not from henceforth thou ſhalt catch men ; might it hence be inferred, that Saint Peter had a peculiar or ſole faculty of catching men ? why might it not by as good a conſequence, as this, whereby they would appropriate to him this opening faculty ? Many ſuch inſtances might in like manner be uſed.

Luk. 5. 10. Matt. 4. 19.

III. They produce thoſe words of our Saviour to Saint Peter, Feed my ſheep, that is, in the Roman interpretation, Be thou Univerſal Governor of my Church.

To this allegation I anſwer.

1. From words which truly and properly might have been ſaid to any other Apoſtle, yea to any Chriſtian Paſtor whatever, nothing can be concluded to their purpoſe, importing a peculiar duty, or ſingular privilege of Saint Peter.

2. From indefinite words a definite concluſion (eſpecially in matters of this Kind) may not be inferred ; it is ſaid, do thou feed my Sheep, it is not ſaid do thou alone feed all my Sheep ; this is their arbitrary gloſs, or preſumptuous improvement of the Text ; without ſuccour whereof the words ſignify nothing to their purpoſe, ſo far are they from ſufficiently aſſuring ſo vaſt a pretence : for inſtance, when Saint Paul doth exhort the Biſhops at Epheſus to feed the Church of God, may it thence be collected, that each of them was an Univerſal Governor of the whole Church, which Chriſt had purchaſed with his own his own blood?

Act. 20. 28.

3. By theſe words no new power is (aſſuredly at leaſt) granted or inſtituted by our Lord ; for the Apoſtles before this had their Warrant and Authority conſigned to them, when our Lord did inſpire them, and ſolemnly commiſſionate them, ſaying, As the Father did ſend me, ſo I ſend you ; to which Commiſſion, theſe words, (ſpoken occaſionally, before a few of the Diſciples) did not add or derogate. At moſt the words do only (as St. Cyril ſaith) renew the former Grant of Apoſtleſhip, after his great offence of denying our Lord.

Κεχειροτόνητο μὲν ἤδη πρὸς τὴν θείαν Ἀποστολὴν ὁμοῦ τοῖς ἑτέροις μαθηταῖς Πέτρος. Cyril in loc.

Peter was ordained to the holy Apoſtleſhip together with the reſt of the Diſciples.

John 20. 21.

Διὰ δὲ τοῦ φάναι τὸν Κύριον Βόσκε τὰ ἀρνία μου, ἀνανέωσις ὥσπερ τις τῆς ἤδη δοθείσης Ἀποστολῆς αὐτῷ γενέσθαι νοεῖται. Cyril ib.

4. Theſe words do not ſeem inſtitutive or collative of Power, but rather only admonitive or exhortative to duty ; implying no more, but the preſſing a common duty, before incumbent on Saint Peter, upon a ſpecial occaſion, in an advantageous ſeaſon, that he ſhould effectually diſcharge the Office, which our Lord had committed to him.

Our Lord (I ſay) preſently before his departure, when his words were like to have a ſtrong impreſſion on Saint Peter, doth earneſtly direct and warn him to expreſs that ſpecial ardency of affection, which he obſerved in him, in an anſwerable care to perform his duty of feeding, that is of inſtructing, guiding, edifying in faith and obedience thoſe Sheep of his, that is, thoſe Believers, who ſhould be converted to embrace his Religion, as ever he ſhould find opportunity.

Paulus Apoſtolus boni Paſtoris implebat Officium, quando Chriſtum prædicabat Aug. in Joh. tr. 47.

Paul fulfilled the Office of a good Paſtor, when he preached Chriſt.

5. The ſame Office certainly did belong to all the Apoſtles, who (as St. Hierom ſpeaketh) were the Princes of our Diſcipline, and Chieftains of the Chriſtian Doctrine; they at their firſt vocation had a commiſſion and command to go unto the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael; that were ſcattered abroad like ſheep not having a ſhepherd; they before our Lord's Aſcenſion were enjoyned to teach all Nations the Doctrines and Precepts of Chriſt; to receive them into the fold, to feed them with good inſtruction, to guide and govern their Converts with good Diſcipline; Hence All of them (as St. Cyprian ſaith) were ſhepherds; but the flock did appear one, which was fed by the Apoſtles with unanimous agreement.

Principes Diſciplinæ noſtræ, & Chriſtiani Dogmatis duces. Hier. in Jovin. 1.14.

Matt. 10.6. 9.36.

Matt. 28. 19, 20.

Paſtores ſunt omnes, ſed grex unus oſtenditur, qui ab Apoſtolis omnibus unanimi conſenſione paſcatur. Cypr. de Un. Eccl.

6. Neither could Saint Peter's charge be more extenſive, than was that of the other Apoſtles; for they had a general and unlimmited care of the whole Church; that is, according to their capacity and opportunity, none being exempted from it, who needed or came into the way of their diſcharging Paſtoral Offices for them.

They were Oecumenical Rulers (as St. Chryſoſtom ſaith) appointed by God, who did not receive ſeveral Nations or Cities, but all of them in common were entruſted with the world.

*Ἄρχοντές εἰσιν ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ χειροτονηθέντες οἱ Ἀπόστολοι· ἄρχοντες οὐκ ἔθνη καὶ πόλεις διαφόρους λαμβάνοντες, ἀλλὰ πάντες κοινῇ τὴν οἰκουμένην ἐμπιστευθέντες. Chryſ. Tom.8. p.115.

Hence particularly St. Chryſoſtom calleth Saint John, a Pillar of the Churches over the world, and Saint Paul an Apoſtle of the world; who had the care not of one Houſe, but of Cities and Nations, and of the whole Earth; who undertook the World, and governed the Churches; on whom the whole World did look, and on whoſe ſoul the care of all the Churches every where did hang; into whoſe hands were delivered the Earth, and the Sea, the inhabited and the uninhabited parts of the World.

Ὁ στύλος τῶν κατὰ τὴν οἰκουμένην Ἐκκλησιῶν. Chryſ. præf. comment ad Joh.

Καὶ γὰρ τῆς οἰκουμένης Ἀπόστολος ἦν. Chryſ. in 1 Cor. 9.2. Οὗτος οὐκ οἰκίας μιᾶς, ἀλλὰ καὶ πόλεων, καὶ δήμων, καὶ ἐθνῶν, καὶ ὁλοκλήρου τῆς οἰκουμένης φροντίδα ἔχων. Chryſ. in 2 Cor. 11.28. Τῆς οἰκουμένης ἀντιλαμβάνετο πάσης, καὶ διεκυβέρνα τὰς Ἐκκλησίας. Chryſ. *Tom.*8. *p.*115. Ἡ οἰκουμένη πᾶσα πρὸς αὐτὸν ἔβλεπεν, αἱ φροντίδες τῶν πανταχοῦ τῆς γῆς Ἐκκλησιῶν τῆς ἐκείνου ψυχῆς ἦν ἐξηρτημέναι —— Chryſ. *Tom.*5. *Or.*59. Ὁ Μιχαὴλ τὸ τῶν Ἰουδαίων ἔθνος ἐνεχειρίσθη· Παῦλος δὲ γῆν, καὶ θάλατταν, καὶ τὴν οἰκουμένην, καὶ τὴν ἀοίκητον. Chryſ. *Tom.*8. *p.*39.

And could Saint Peter have a larger Flock committed to him? could this charge, feed my ſheep, more agree to him, than to thoſe, who no leſs than he were obliged to feed all Chriſtian people every where?

7. The words indeed are applicable to all Chriſtian Biſhops and Governors of the Church; according to that of St. Cyprian, to Pope Stephen himſelf, We being many Shepherds do feed one Flock, and all the Sheep of Chriſt; for they are ſtiled Paſtors; they in terms as indefinite as thoſe in this text are exhorted to feed the Church of God, which he hath purchaſed with his own blood; to them (as the Fathers commonly ſuppoſe) this Injunction doth reach, our Lord when he ſpake thus to Saint Peter, intending to lay a charge on them all to expreſs their love and piety toward them in this way, by feeding his Sheep and People.

Paſtores multi ſumus, unum tamen gregem, & oves Chriſti univerſas paſcimus. Cypr. Ep. 67. ad P. Steph.

Quanto magis debent uſq; ad mortem pro veritate certare, & uſq; ad ſanguinem adverſus peccatum, quibus oves ipſas paſcendas, hoc eſt docendas regendáſq; committit. Aug. in Joh. tr. 123.

How much more ought they to contend for the truth even unto death, and againſt ſin even unto blood, to whom he committeth his Sheep to be fed, that is to be taught and governed.

Which Sheep, ſaith St. Ambroſe, and which Flock, not only then Saint Peter did receive, but alſo with him all we Prieſts did receive it.

Quas oves, & quem gregem non ſolum tunc B. ſuſcepit Petrus, ſed & cum eo nos ſuſcepimus omnes. Ambr. *de Sacerd.*2.

Our Lord (ſaith St. Chryſoſtom) did commit his Sheep to Peter, and to thoſe which came after him, that is, to all Chriſtian Paſtors, as the ſcope of his diſcourſe ſheweth.

Τὰ πρόβατα, ἃ τῷ Πέτρῳ, καὶ τοῖς μετ' ἐκεῖνον ἐνεχείρισε. Chryſ. de Sacerd. 1.

When it is ſaid to Peter (ſaith St. Auſtin) it is ſaid to all, Feed my Sheep.

Cùm dicitur Petro, ad omnes dicitur, Paſce oves meas. Aug *de Agone Chriſt.*30.

And we (ſaith St. Baſil) are taught this (obedience to Superiors) by Chriſt himſelf, conſtituting Saint Peter Paſtor after himſelf of the Church (for Peter, ſaith he, doſt thou love me more than theſe? feed my Sheep) and conferring to all Paſtors and Teachers continually afterward an equal power (of doing ſo;) whereof it is a ſign that all do in like manner, bind and do looſe as he.

Καὶ τοῦτο παρ' αὐτοῦ Χριστοῦ παιδευόμεθα, Πέτρον ποιμένα μεθ' ἑαυτὸν τῆς Ἐκκλησίας καθιστῶντος, Πέτρε, γάρ φησι, φιλεῖς με πλέον τούτων; ποίμαινε τὰ πρόβατά μου· καὶ πᾶσι δὴ τοῖς ἐφεξῆς ποιμέσι καὶ διδασκάλοις τὴν ἴσην παρέχοντος ἐξουσίαν· καὶ τούτου σημεῖον τὸ δεσμεῖν ἅπαντας ὁμοίως, καὶ λύειν ὥσπερ ἐκεῖνος. Baſ. *Conſt. Mon. cap.*22.

Saint Auſtin compriſeth all theſe conſiderations in thoſe words.

Et quidem, fratres, quod Paſtor eſt, dedit & membris ſuis; nam & Petrus Paſtor, & Paulus Paſtor, & cæteri Apoſtoli Paſtores, & boni Epiſcopi Paſtores. Aug. in Joh. tr. 47.

And indeed, brethren, that which a Paſtor is, he gave alſo to his members, for both Peter was a Paſtor, and Paul a Paſtor, and the reſt of his Apoſtles were Paſtors, and good Biſhops are Paſtors.

How could theſe great Maſters more clearly expreſs their mind, that our Lord in thoſe words to Saint Peter did inculcate a duty no-wiſe peculiar to him, but equally together with him belonging to all Guides of the Church; but in ſuch manner, as when a Maſter doth preſs a duty on one Servant, he doth thereby admoniſh all his Servants of the like duty; whence St. Auſtin ſaith, that St. Peter in that caſe did ſuſtain the perſon of the Church, that which was ſpoken to him, belonging to all its members, eſpecially to his Brethren the Clergy.

Ut ergo Petrus quando ei dictum eſt, Tibi dabo claves, in figura perſonam geſtabat Eccleſiæ, ſic & quando ei dictum eſt, Paſce oves meas, Eccleſiæ quoque perſonam in figura geſtabat. Aug. in Pſal. 108.

Οὐ πρὸς ἱερέας δὲ τοῦτο μόνον εἴρηται, ἀλλὰ καὶ πρὸς ἕκαστον ἡμῶν τῶν καὶ μικρὸν ἐμπεπιστευμένων ποιμνίον. Chryſ. in Matt. 24. Or. 77.

This was not ſpoken to thoſe Prieſts only, but to every one of us, who have the care even of a little Flock committed to us.

It was (ſaith Cyril) a leſſon to Teachers, that they cannot otherwiſe pleaſe the Arch-paſtor of all, than by taking care of the welfare of the rational Sheep.

Διδασκάλοις δὲ γνῶσις διὰ τῶν προκειμένων εἰσβέβηκε θεωρίας, ὡς οὐκ ἂν ἑτέρως εὐαρεστήσειεν τῷ πάντων ἀρχιποιμένι, εἰ μὴ τῶν λογικῶν προβάτων εὐρωστίας, καὶ τῆς εἰς τὸ εὖ εἶναι διαμονῆς ποιοῖντο φροντίδα. Cyril. ibid.

8. Hence it followeth, that the Sheep, which our Saviour biddeth Saint Peter to feed, were not the Apoſtles, who were his Fellow-ſhepherds, herds, deſigned to feed others, and needing not to be fed by him; but the common Believers or People of God, which Saint Peter himſelf doth call the Flock of God; Feed, ſaith he to his Fellow-elders, the flock of God, which is among you; and Saint Paul, Take heed therefore unto your ſelves, and to all the flock, over which the Holy Ghoſt hath made you Overſeers.

1 Pet.2.5.

Act.20.28.

9. Take ſeeding for what you pleaſe; for Teaching, for Guiding--- the Apoſtles were not fit objects of it, who were immediately taught, and guided by God himſelf.

Hence we may interpret that ſaying of St. Chryſoſtom, which is the moſt plauſible argument they can alledge for them, that our Lord in ſaying this, did commit to Saint Peter a charge (or preſidency) over his brethren; that is, he made him a Paſtor of Chriſtian people, as he did others; at leaſt, if προστασία τῶν ἀδελφῶν be referred to the Apoſtles, it muſt not ſignify authority over them, but at moſt a primacy of order among them; for that Saint Peter otherwiſe ſhould feed them, St. Chryſoſtom could hardly think, who preſently after ſaith, that ſeeing the Apoſtles were to receive the adminiſtration of the whole world, they ought not afterward to converſe with one another; for that would ſurely have been a great damage to the world.

Ἐγκειρίζει τὴν προστασίαν τῶν ἀδελφῶν. Chryſ. in Joh.21.15.

Τὴν προστασίαν ἐνεπιστεύθη τῶν ἀδελφῶν. in ver. 21.

Ἐπειδὰν γὰρ ἔμελλον τῆς οἰκουμένης τὴν ἐπιτροπὴν ἀναδέξασθαι, οὐκ ἔδει συμπεπλέχθαι λοιπὸν ἀλλήλοις· ἦ γὰρ ἂν μεγάλη τοῦτο τῇ οἰκουμένῃ γέγονε ζημία. Ibid. V. 23.

10. But they, forſooth, muſt have Saint Peter ſolely obliged to feed all Chriſt's Sheep; ſo they did impoſe upon him a vaſt and crabbed Province; a task very incommodious, or rather impoſſible for him to undergo: how could he in duty be obliged, how could he in effect be able to feed ſo many flocks of Chriſtian people ſcattered about in diſtant Regions, through all Nations under Heaven: he, poor man, that had ſo few helps, that had no Officers or Dependents, nor wealth to maintain them, would have been much put to it to feed the Sheep in Britain, and in Parthia; unto infinite diſtraction of thoughts ſuch a charge muſt needs have engaged him.

But for this their great Champion hath a fine expedient; Saint Peter, ſaith he, did feed Chriſt's whole flock, partly by himſelf, partly by others; ſo that, it ſeemeth, the other Apoſtles were Saint Peter's Curates, or Vicars and Deputies: this indeed were an eaſy way of feeding; thus although he had ſlept all his time, he might have fed all the Sheep under heaven; thus any man as well might have fed them. But this manner of feeding is, I fear, a later invention, not known ſo ſoon in the Church; and it might then ſeem near as abſurd to be a Shepherd, as it is now (in his own account) to be a juſt man by imputation; that would be a kind of putative paſtorage, as this a putative righteouſneſs. However the Apoſtles, I dare ſay, did not take themſelves to be Saint Peter's Surrogates, but challenged to themſelves to be accounted the Miniſters, the Stewards, the Ambaſſadors of Chriſt himſelf; from whom immediately they received their Orders, in whoſe name they acted, to whom they conſtantly refer their Authority, without taking the leaſt notice of Saint Peter, or intimating any dependence on him.

Reſpondeo, S. Petrum partim per ſe, partim per alios univerſum Dominicum gregem ut ſibi imperatum erat paviſſe— Bel. de Pont. R. 1.16.

2 Cor.4.1.
2 Cor.5.20. 10.8.
Gal.1.1. Tit.1.3. } &c.

It was therefore enough for Saint Peter, that had he Authority reſtrained to no place, but might, as he found occaſion, preach the Goſpel, convert, confirm, guide Chriſtians every where to truth and duty; nor can our Saviour's words be forced to ſignify more.

In fine, this (together with the precedent Teſtimonies) muſt not be interpreted ſo as to thwart Practice and Hiſtory; according to which it appeareth, that Saint Peter did not exerciſe ſuch a Power, and therefore our Lord did not intend to confer ſuch an one upon him.

P. Leo IX. Ep. 1. Ad ejuſdem primatus confirmationem, &c. Bell. 1.17.

IV. Farther in confirmation of their Doctrine they do draw forth a whole ſhole of Teſtimonies, containing divers Prerogatives, as they call them, of Saint Peter; which do, as they ſuppoſe, imply this Primacy; ſo very-ſharp-ſighted indeed they are, that in every remarkable accident befalling him, in every action performed by him or to him, or about him, they can deſcry ſome argument or ſhrewd inſinuation of his preheminence; eſpecially being aided by the gloſſes of ſome fanciful Expoſitor. From the change of his Name, from his walking on the Sea, from his miraculous draught of Fiſh, from our Lord's praying for him, that his Faith ſhould not fail, and bidding him to confirm his Brethren; from our Lord's ordering him to pay the tribute for them both; from our Lord's firſt waſhing his feet, and his firſt appearing to him after the Reſurrection; from the prediction of his Martyrdom; from ſick Perſons being cured by his ſhadow; from his ſentencing Ananias and Sapphira to death, from his preaching to Cornelius, from its being ſaid that he paſſed through all, from his being prayed for by the Church, from Saint Paul's going to viſit him; from theſe paſſages, I ſay, they deduce or confirm his Authority: Now in earneſt is not this ſtout arguing? is it not egregious modeſty for ſuch a point to alledge ſuch proofs? what cauſe may not be countenanced by ſuch rare fetches? who would not ſuſpect the weakneſs of that Opinion, which is fain to uſe ſuch forces in its maintenance? In fine, is it honeſt or conſcionable dealing ſo to wreſt or play with the Holy Scripture, pretending to derive thence proofs, where there is no ſhew of conſequence?

Act. 9.32.

To be even with them, I might aſſert the Primacy of Saint John, and to that purpoſe might alledge his Prerogatives (which indeed may ſeem greater than thoſe of Saint Peter,) namely, that he was the beloved Diſciple, that he leaned on our Lord's breaſt, that Saint Peter, not preſuming to ask our Lord a queſtion, deſired him to do it, as having a more ſpecial confidence with our Lord; that Saint John did higher ſervice to the Church, and all Poſterity, by writing not only more Epiſtles, but alſo a moſt divine Goſpel, and a ſublime * Prophecy concerning the ſtate of the Church; that Saint John did † out-run Peter, and came firſt to the Sepulchre, (in which paſſage ſuch acute deviſers would find out marvellous ſignificancy) that Saint John was a Virgin; that he did out live all the Apoſtles (and thence was moſt fit to be Univerſal Paſtor;) that St. Hierom comparing Peter and John, doth ſeem to prefer the latter; for Peter (ſaith he) was an Apoſtle, and John was an Apoſtle; but Peter was only an Apoſtle, John both an Apoſtle and an Evangeliſt, and alſo a Prophet,--- and (ſaith he) that I may in brief ſpeech comprehend many things, and ſhew what privilege belongeth to John,--- yea virginity in John; by our Lord a Virgin, his Mother the Virgin is commended to the Virgin Diſciple: thus I might by Prerogatives and Paſſages very notable infer the Superiority of Saint John to Saint Peter,

in

Joh. 13.24.

* Infinita futurorum myſteria continentem. Hier.

Containing infinite myſteries of future things.

† Joh. 20. 4.

Petrus Apoſtolus eſt, & Joannes Apoſtolus, maritus & Virgo; ſed Petrus Apoſtolus tantùm, Joannes & Apoſtolus & Evangeliſta & Propheta, &c. Hier. in Jovin. 1. 14.

Et ut brevi ſermone multa comprehendam, doceámq; cujus privilegii ſit Johannes. —— imò in Joanne Virginitas; à Domino Virgine mater Virgo Virgini Diſcipulo commendatur. Hier. ibid.

in imitation of their reaſoning; but I am afraid they would ſcarce be at the trouble to anſwer me ſeriouſly, but would think it enough to ſay I trifled; wherefore let it ſuffice for me in the ſame manner to put off thoſe levities of diſcourſe.

V. They argue this Primacy from the conſtant placing Saint Peter's name before the other Apoſtles, in the Catalogues and Narrations concerning him and them.

To this I anſwer,

1. That this Order is not ſo ſtrictly obſerved, as not to admit ſome exceptions; for Saint Paul ſaith, that James, Cephas, and John, knowing the grace given unto him —— ſo it is commonly read in the ordinary Copies, in the Text of ancient Commentators, and in old Tranſlations; and, whether Paul, whether Apollo, whether Cephas, ſaith Saint Paul again; and, As the other Apoſtles, and the Brethren of our Lord, and Cephas; and Philip (ſaith Saint John) was of Bethſaida, the City of Andrew and Peter; and Clemens Alex. in Euſebius ſaith, that the Lord after his reſurrection delivered the ſpecial knowledge to James the Juſt, and to John, and to Peter, poſt-poning Saint Peter, as perhaps conceiving him to have leſs of ſublime Revelations imparted to him; that Order therefore is not ſo punctually conſtant.

Gal. 2. 9.

1 Cor. 3. 22.

1 Cor. 9. 5.

Joh. 1. 45.

Ἰακώβῳ τῷ δικαίῳ καὶ Ἰωάννῃ καὶ Πέτρῳ μετὰ τὴν ἀνάστασιν παρέδωκε τὴν γνῶσιν ὁ Κύριος. Euſeb. Hiſt. 2. 1.

In the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions, Saint Paul and Saint Peter being induced jointly preſcribing Orders, they begin, I Paul, and I Peter do appoint —— ſo little ambitious or curious of precedence are they repreſented.

Ἐγὼ Παῦλος καὶ ἐγὼ Πέτρος διατασσόμεθα——

Conſt. Apoſt. 8. 33.

2. But it being indeed ſo conſtant as not to ſeem caſual, I farther ſay, that poſition of names doth not argue difference of degree, or ſuperiority in power; any ſmall advantage of age, ſtanding, merit, or wealth, ſerving to ground ſuch precedence, as common experience doth ſhew.

3. We formerly did aſſign other ſufficient and probable cauſes, why Saint Peter had this place. So that this is no cogent Reaſon.

VI. Farther, (and this indeed is far their moſt plauſible argumentation) they alledge the Titles and Elogies given to Saint Peter by the Fathers; who call him ἔξαρχον (the Prince) κορυφαῖον (the Ring-leader) κεφαλὴν (the Head) * πρόεδρον (the Preſident) ἀρχηγὸν (the Captain) προήγορον (the Proloqutor) πρωτοστάτην (the Foreman) προστάτην (the Warden) ἔκκριτον τῶν Ἀποστόλων (the choice, or egregious Apoſtle) Majorem (the greater, or Grandee among them) primum (the firſt, or prime Apoſtle.)

* Chryſ. Tom. 5. Or. 59.

Chryſ. in Joh. 21.

Cyr. c. Jul. 9. (p. 325.)

Aug. Ep. 11. 19.

To theſe and the like allegations I anſwer,

1. If we ſhould ſay, that we are not accountable for every hyberbolical flaſh or flouriſh occurring in the Fathers, (it being well known, that they in their encomiaſtick ſpeeches, as Orators are wont, following the heat and gaiety of fancy, do ſometimes overlaſh) we ſhould have the pattern of their greateſt Controvertiſts to warrant us; for Bellarmine doth put off their Teſtimonies, by ſaying, that they do ſometimes ſpeak in way of exceſs, leſs properly, leſs warily, ſo as to need benign Expoſition, &c. as Biſhop * Andrews ſheweth; and it is a common ſhift

The truth is, the beſt Arguments of the Papiſts in other queſtions are ſome flouriſhes of Orators, ſpeaking hyperbolically and heedleſly.

Per exceſſum loqui. Bell. de Miſſ. 2. 10. minùs propriè. 3. 4. benignâ expoſitione opus habere. de amiſſ. gr. 4. 12. minùs, cautè. de purg. 1. 11.

* Tort. Tort. p. 338.

of Cardinal Perron, whereof you may ſee divers inſtances alledged by * M. Dallée.

* Dall. *de uſ. P. lib.*1. *c.*6. *p.*158. (& p. 314.)

Which obſervation is eſpecially applicable to this caſe; for that eloquent men do never more exceed in their indulgence to fancy, than in the demonſtrative kind, in panegyricks, in their commendations of perſons; and I hope they will embrace this way of reckoning for thoſe expreſſions of Pope Leo, ſounding ſo exorbitantly, that Saint Peter was by our Lord aſſumed into conſortſhip of his individual unity; and that nothing did paſs upon any from God, the fountain of good things, without the participation of Peter.

Nunc enim in conſortium individuæ unitatis aſſumptum id quod ipſe erat voluit nominari. P. Leo I. *Ep.*89. Nihil à bonorum fonte Deo in quenquam ſine Petri participatione tranſire. P. Leo *de aſſumpt. ſuâ. Serm.*3.

2. We may obſerve, that ſuch turgid Elogies of Saint Peter are not found in the more ancient Fathers; for Clemens Romanus, Irenæus, Clemens Alex. Tertullian, Origen, Cyprian, Firmilian—— when they mention Saint Peter, do ſpeak more temperately and ſimply, according to the current notions and traditions of the Church in their time; uſing indeed fair terms of reſpect, but not ſuch high ſtreins of courtſhip, about him. But they are found in the latter Fathers, who being men of wit and eloquence, and affecting in their diſcourſes to vent thoſe faculties, did ſpeak more out of their own invention and fancy.

Whence according to a prudent eſtimation of things in ſuch a caſe, the ſilence or ſparingneſs of the firſt ſort is of more conſideration on the one hand, than the ſpeech, how free ſoever, of the latter is on the other hand: and we may rather ſuppoſe thoſe titles do not belong to Saint Peter, becauſe the firſt do not give them, than that they do, becauſe the other are ſo liberal in doing it.

Indeed if we conſult the Teſtimonies of this kind alledged by the Romaniſts, who with their utmoſt diligence have raked all ancient Writings for them, it is ſtrange that they cannot find any very ancient ones; that they can find ſo few plauſible ones; that they are fain (to make up the number) to produce ſo many, which evidently have no force or pertinency; being only commendations of his Apoſtolical Office, or of his Perſonal Merits, without relation to others.

3. We ſay, that all thoſe terms of Titles, which they urge, are ambiguous, and applicable to any ſort of Primacy or Preheminency; to that which we admit, no leſs than to that which we refuſe; as by inſtances from good Authors, and from common uſe, might eaſily be demonſtrated; ſo that from them nothing can be inferred advantageous to their cauſe.

Cicero calleth Socrates, Prince of the Philoſophers; and Sulpitius, Prince of all Lawyers; would it not be ridiculous thence to infer, that Socrates was a Sovereign Governor of the Philoſophers, or Sulpitius of the Lawyers? The ſame great Speaker calleth Pompey Prince of the City in all Men's judgment; doth he mean, that he did exerciſe juriſdiction over the City?

Cic. *de Nat. D. lib.*2. Cic. de clar. Orat.

Quem omnium judicio longè principem eſſe Civitatis videbat—— Principem orbis terræ virum— Cic. pro domo ſua.

Tertullus calleth Saint Paul, πρωτοστάτην, a ring-leader of the ſect of the Nazarenes; and St. Baſil calleth Euſtathius Sebaſtenus, foreman of the ſect of the Pneumatomachi; did Tertullus mean, that Saint Paul had univerſal Juriſdiction over Chriſtians; or St. Baſil, that Euſtathius was Sovereign of thoſe Hereticks?

Act. 24. 5.

Πρωτοστάτην τῆς τῶν πνευματομάχων αἱρέσεως. Baſ. Ep. 74.

So neither did Prince of the Apoſtles, or any equivalent term, in the ſenſe of thoſe who aſſigned it to Saint Peter, import Authority over the Apoſtles, but eminency among them in worth, in merit, in Apoſtolical performances, or at moſt in order of precedence.

Such words are to be interpreted by the ſtate of things, not the ſtate of things to be inferred from them; and in underſtanding them we ſhould obſerve the Rule of Tertullian.

Malo te ad ſenſum rei quàm ad ſonum vocabuli exerceas. Tert. ad Prax. cap. 3. I had rather you would apply your ſelf to the ſenſe of the thing, than to the ſound of the word.

Οὐ γὰρ αἱ λέξεις τὴν φύσιν παραιροῦνται· ἀλλὰ μᾶλλον ἡ φύσις τὰς λέξεις εἰς ἑαυτὴν ἕλκουσα μεταβάλλει. Athan. Orat. 3. adv. Ar. (p. 373.)

For words do not take away the nature of things, but the nature rather changes the words, and draws them to it ſelf.

4. Accordingly the Fathers ſometimes do explain thoſe Elogies ſignifying them to import the ſpecial gifts and vertues of Saint Peter, wherein he did excel; ſo Euſebius calleth Saint Peter, the moſt excellent and great Apoſtle, who for his vertue was proloquutor of the reſt.

Euſeb. Hiſt. 2. 14.

5. This anſwer is thoroughly confirmed from hence; that even thoſe who gave thoſe Titles to Saint Peter, do yet expreſly affirm other Apoſtles in power and dignity equal to him.

Who doth give higher Elogies to him than St. Chryſoſtom? yet doth he aſſert all the Apoſtles to be Supreme, and equal in dignity; and particularly he doth often affirm Saint Paul to be ἰσότιμον, equal in honour to Saint Peter, as we before ſhewed.

The like we declared of St. Hierom, St. Cyril, &c. And as for St. Cyprian, who did allow a Primacy to Saint Peter, nothing can be more evident, than that he took the other Apoſtles to be equal to him in power and honour.

The like we may conceive of St. Auſtin, who having carefully peruſed thoſe Writings of St. Cyprian, and frequently alledging them, doth never contradict that his Sentiment.

Even Pope Gregory himſelf acknowledgeth Saint Peter not to have been properly the Head, but only the firſt member of the univerſal Church; all being members of the Church under one Head.

Certè Petrus Apoſtolus primum membrum S. & univerſalis Eccleſiæ——ſub uno capite omnes membra ſunt Eccleſiæ. Greg. I. Epiſt. 4. 38.

6. If Pope Leo I. or any other ancient Pope, do ſeem to mean farther, we may reaſonably except againſt their Opinion, as being ſingular, and proceeding from partial affection to their See; ſuch affection having influence on the mind of the wiſeſt men; according to that certain maxim of Ariſtotle, every man is a bad Judge in his own caſe.

7. The Ancients, when their ſubject doth allure them, do adorn other Apoſtles with the like titles, equalling thoſe of Saint Peter, and not well conſiſtent with them, according to that rigour of ſenſe, which our Adverſaries affix to the commendations of Saint Peter.

The Epiſtle of Clemens Rom. to Saint James (an Apocryphal, but ancient Writing) calleth Saint James our Lord's Brother, The Biſhop of Biſhops; the Clementine Recognitions call him The Prince of Biſhops; Ruffinus, in his tranſlation of Euſebius, The Biſhop of the Apoſtles; Κλήμης Ἰακώβῳ —— ἐπισκόπων ἐπισκόπῳ.

Jacobum Epiſcoporum Principem Sacerdotum Princeps orabat. Clem. Rec. 1. 68.

Apoſtolorum Epiſcopus. Ruf. Euſeb. 2. 1.

* St. Chry-

* St. Chryſoſtom ſaith of him, that he did preſide over all the Jewiſh believers; Heſychius Presbyter of Jeruſalem, calleth him the chief Captain of the new Jeruſalem, the Captain of Prieſts, the Prince of the Apoſtles, the top among the Heads, &c.

* It is likely that Ruffinus did call him ſo by miſtaking that in the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions.

Ὑπὲρ τοῦ ἐπισκόπου ἡμῶν Ἰακώβου. Apoſt. Conſt 8. 10.

Τῶν δὲ Ἰουδαίων πιστευσάντων προειστήκει πάντων. Chryſ. Tom. 5. Or. 59.

Τὸν τῆς νέας Ἱερουσαλὴμ ἀρχιστράτηγον, τὸν ἱερέων ἡγήμωνα, τὸν Ἀποσόλων τὸν ἔξαρχον, τὴν ἐν κεφαλαῖς κορυφὴν, &c. Heſych. Presb. apud Phot. Cod. 275. (p. 1525.)

The ſame Heſychius calleth Saint Andrew, the firſt-born of the Apoſtolical Choire, the firſt ſettled pillar of the Church, the Peter before Peter, the foundation of the foundation, the firſt-fruits of the beginning, &c.

Ὁ τοῦ χοροῦ τῶν Ἀποσόλων πρωτότοκος, ὁ πρωτοπαγὴς τῆς ἐκκλησίας σύλος, ὁ πρὸ Πέτρου Πέτρος, ὁ τοῦ θεμελίου θεμέλιος, ὁ τῆς ἀρχῆς ἀπαρχὴ —— Heſych. apud Phot. Cod. 269.

St. Chryſoſtom ſaith of Saint John, that he was a pillar of the Churches through the world, he that had the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, &c.

Ὁ σύλος τῶν κατὰ τὴν οἰκουμένην ἐκκλησιῶν, ὁ τὰς κλεῖς ἔχων τῶν οὐρανῶν, &c. Chryſ. in Joh. 1. 1.

But as occaſion of ſpeaking about Saint Paul was more frequent, ſo the elogies of him are more copious, and indeed ſo high as not to yield to thoſe of Saint Peter.

He was (ſaith St. Chryſoſtom) the ring-leader and guardian of the Choire of all the Saints.

Ὁ τῶν ἁγίων χοροῦ κορυφαῖος, καὶ προστάτης. Chryſ. in Rom. 16. 24.

Ὁ τῆς οἰκουμένης Ἀπόσολος. Chryſ. in 1 Cor. 9. 2.

He was the tongue, the teacher, the Apoſtle of the world. He had the whole world put into his hands, and took care thereof, and had committed to him all men dwelling upon Earth.

Ἡ γλῶττα τῆς οἰκουμένης, τὸ φῶς τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν, ὁ θεμέλιος τῆς πίστεως, ὁ σύλος, καὶ ἑδραίωμα τῆς ἀληθείας.

Τὴν οἰκουμένην ἅπασαν ἐγκεχειρισμένος. —— He had the whole habitable World committed to his charge.

Τῆς οἰκουμένης διδάσκαλος ὢν τοὺς τὴν γῆν οἰκοῦντας ἅπαντας ἐπιτραπείς.

He was the Teacher of the World, and had all the inhabitants of the Earth committed to his truſt.

He was the light of the Churches, the foundation of Faith, the pillar and ground of Truth.

He had the patronage of the World committed into his hands.

Τὴν τῆς οἰκουμένης προστασίαν ἐγκεχειρισμένος. in Jud. Or. 6. Τῆς οἰκουμένης τὴν προστασίαν ἐπεδέξατο. in 1 Cor. Or. 22.

Οὐ τὴν οἰκουμένην ἅπασαν εἰς χεῖρας αὐτοῦ φέρων ἔθηκεν ὁ Θεός. Tom. 7. p. 2.

Did not God put into his hands the whole world?

Ὁ πάσης οἰκουμένης κρατήσας. in 2 Tim. 2. 1. He had the charge of the whole world.

He was better than all men, greater than the Apoſtles, and ſurpaſſing them all.

Πάντων ἀνθρώπων κρείττων. de Sacerd. 4. Τίς οὖν ἁπάντων ἀνθρώπων ἀμείνων; τίς δὲ ἕτερος, ἀλλ' ἢ ὁ σκηνοποιὸς ἐκεῖνος, ὁ τῆς οἰκουμένης διδάσκαλος —— εἰ τοίνυν μείζονα τῶν Ἀποσόλων λαμβάνει σέφανον, τῶν δὲ Ἀποσόλων ἴσος οὐδεὶς γέγονεν, οὗτος δὲ κἀκείνων μείζων, εὔδηλον ὅτι τῆς ἀνωτάτω ἀπολαύσεται τιμῆς καὶ προεδρίας. Tom. 5. Or. 33.

Who then was better than all other men? who elſe but that Tent-maker, the Teacher of the world? —— If therefore he receive a greater Crown than the Apoſtles, and none perhaps was equal to the Apoſtles, and yet he greater than they, it is manifeſt that he ſhall enjoy the higheſt honour and preeminence.

Nothing was more bright, nothing more illuſtrious than he.

Παύλου λαμπρότερον οὐδὲν ἦν, οὐδὲ περιφανέστερον. Tom. 5. Or. 47.

None was greater than he, yea none equal to him.

Οὐδεὶς δὲ ἐκείνου μείζων, ἀλλ' οὐδὲ ἴσος ἐστί. Tom. 6. Or. 9. Οὐδεὶς Παύλου ἴσος ἦν. 2 Tim. 3. 15.

Ὁ πάνσοφος, ὁ τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν ἄριστος ἀρχιτέκτων. Theod. Ep. 146.

The moſt wiſe, and beſt Architect, or chief Builder of the Churches.

Ὁ μακάριος Ἀπόστολος, ὁ τῶν πατέρων πατήρ. Juſt. M. reſp. ad Orthod. Qu. 119.

The bleſſed Apoſtle, the Father of the Fathers.

Pope Gregory I. ſaith of Saint Paul, that he was made head of the Nations, becauſe he obtained the principate of the whole Church.

Caput effectus eſt Nationum; quia obtinuit totius Eccleſiæ principatum, Greg. M. in 1 Reg. lib. 4. Videſis. Paulus Apoſtolorum Princeps. Ep. Spalat. in Lat. Syn. ſub P. Jul. II. Seſſ. 1. p. 25.

Theſe Characters of Saint Paul I leave them to interpret, and reconcile with thoſe of Saint Peter.

8. That the Fathers by calling Saint Peter Prince, Chieftain, &c. of the Apoſtles, do not mean Authority over them, may be argued from their joyning Saint Paul with him in the ſame appellations; who yet ſurely could have no Juriſdiction over them; and his having any would deſtroy the pretended Eccleſiaſtical Monarchy.

St. Cyril calleth them together Patrons, or Preſidents of the Church.

Πέτρος κ) Παῦλος, οἱ τῆς ἐκκλησίας προστάται. Cyril. *Cat.*6.

St. Auſtin (or St. Ambr. or Max.) calleth them Princes of the Churches.

Eccleſiarum Principes. Aug. de Sanct. 27.

The Popes Agatho and Adrian (in their General Synods) call them the ring-leading Apoſtles.

Κορυφαῖοι Ἀποστόλων. P. Agatho *in 6 Syn. Act.*4. *p.*35. P. Adrian in 7 Syn. Act. 2. p. 554.

The Popes Nicholas I. and Gregory VII. &c. call them Princes of the Apoſtles.

Nicol. I. Ep. 7. Plat. in Greg. VII. &c.

St. Ambroſe, or St. Auſtin, or St. Maximus Taur. (chuſe you which) doth thus ſpeak of them; Bleſſed Peter and Paul are moſt eminent among all the Apoſtles, excelling the reſt by a kind of peculiar prerogative: but whether of the two be preferred before the other is uncertain; for I count them to be equal in merit, becauſe they are equal in ſuffering, &c.

Beati Petrus & Paulus eminent inter Univerſos Apoſtolos, & peculiari quâquam prærogativâ præcellunt; verùm inter ipſos quis cui præponatur incertum eſt, puto enim illos æquales eſſe meritis, quia æquales ſunt paſſione, &c. Ambr. *Serm.*66. Aug. de Sanct. 27. Max. Taur. *Serm.*54.

To all this diſcourſe I ſhall only add, that if any of the Apoſtles, or Apoſtolical men, might claim a preſidency or authoritative Headſhip over the reſt, Saint James ſeemeth to have the beſt title thereto; for Jeruſalem was the Mother of all Churches, the Fountain of the Chriſtian Law and Doctrine, the See of our Lord himſelf, the chief Paſtor.

Hæ voces Eccleſiæ, ex qua habuit omnis Eccleſia initium. Iren 3.12.

These are the words of the Church, from whence every Church had its beginning.

Iſa. 2.3. Luke 14. 47.

Eccleſia in Hieruſalem fundata totius orbis Eccleſias ſeminavit. Hieron. in Iſa. 2. The Church founded in Jeruſalem was the Seminary of the Churches throughout the whole world.

Theod. 5.9. Vide Tert. de Præſcr. cap. 20.

He therefore, who (as the Fathers tells us) was by our Lord himſelf conſtituted Biſhop of that City, and the firſt of all Biſhops, might beſt pretend to be in ſpecial manner our Lord's Viear or Succeſſor. He (ſaith Epiphanius) did firſt receive the Epiſcopal Chair, and to him our Lord firſt did entruſt his own Throne upon Earth.

Ἔπειτα ὤφθη Ἰακώβῳ, ἐμοὶ δοκεῖ τῷ ἀδελφῷ αὐτοῦ· αὐτὸς γὰρ αὐτὸν λέγεται κεχειροτονηκέναι, κ) ἐπίσκοπον ἐν Ἱεροσολύμοις πεποιηκέναι πρῶτον. Chryſ. in 1 Cor. Or. 11.

After that he was ſeen of James, I ſuppoſe to his Brother; for he is ſaid to have ordained him, and made him the firſt Biſhop of Jeruſalem.

Πρῶτος οὗτος εἴληφε τὴν καθέδραν τῆς ἐπισκοπῆς, ᾧ πεπίστευκε Κύριος τὸν θρόνον αὐτοῦ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς πρώτῳ. Epiph. hær. 78.

He accordingly did firſt exerciſe the Authority of preſiding and moderating in the firſt Eccleſiaſtical Synod, as St. Chryſoſtom in his Notes thereon doth remark.

He therefore probably by Saint Paul is firſt named in his report concerning the paſſages at Jeruſalem; and to his orders it ſeemeth that Saint Peter himſelf did conform; for 'tis ſaid there, that before certain came from Saint James he did eat with the Gentiles, but when they were come he withdrew.

Gal. 2. 9. Gal. 2. 12.

Hence in the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions, in the Prayer preſcribed for the Church, and for all the Governors of it, the Biſhops of the principal Churches being ſpecified by name; Saint James is put in the firſt place; before the Biſhops of Rome, and of Antioch; Let us pray for the whole Epiſcopacy under Heaven of thoſe who rightly diſpenſe the word of thy Truth; and let us pray for our Biſhop James with all his Pariſhes; let us pray for our Biſhops Clemens and all his Pariſhes; let us pray for Evodius and all his Pariſhes. ——

Ὑπὲρ πάσης ἐπισκοπῆς τῆς ὑπὸ τὸν οὐρανὸν τῶν ὀρθοτομούντων τὸν λόγον τῆς σῆς ἀληθείας δεηθῶμεν· καὶ ὑπὲρ τοῦ ἐπισκόπου ἡμῶν Ἰακώβου, καὶ τῶν παροικιῶν αὐτοῦ δεηθῶμεν· ὑπὲρ τοῦ ἐπισκόπου ἡμῶν Κλήμεντος, &c. Conſt. Ap. 8. 10.

Hereto conſenteth the Tradition of thoſe ancient Writers aforecited, who call Saint James, the Biſhop of Biſhops, the Biſhop of the Apoſtles, &c.

SUPPOSITION II.

I proceed to examine the next Suppoſition of the Church Monarchiſts, which is, That Saint Peter's Primacy, with its Rights and Prerogatives, was not perſonal, but derivable to his Succeſſors.

AGainſt which Suppoſition I do aſſert, that admitting a Primacy of of Saint Peter, of what kind or to what purpoſe ſoever, we yet have reaſon to deem it meerly perſonal, and (not according to its grounds and its deſign) communicable to any Succeſſors, nor indeed in effect conveyed to any ſuch.

It is a rule in the Canon Law; That a perſonal Privilege doth follow the Perſon, and is extinguiſhed with the Perſon; and ſuch we affirm that of Saint Peter; for, Privilegium perſonale Perſonam ſequitur, & cum Perſona extinguitur. Reg. Juris, 7. in Sexto.

1. His Primacy was grounded upon perſonal acts (ſuch as his chearful following of Chriſt, his faithful confeſſing of Chriſt, his reſolute adherence to Chriſt, his embracing ſpecial Revelations from God) or upon perſonal graces (his great Faith, his ſpecial Love to our Lord, his ſingular Zeal for Chriſt's Service) or upon perſonal gifts and endowments (his courage, reſolution, activity, forwardneſs in apprehenſion, and in ſpeech) the which advantages are not tranſient, and conſequently a preeminency built on them is not in its nature ſuch.

2. All the pretence of Primacy granted to Saint Peter is grounded upon words directed to Saint Peter's Perſon, characterized by moſt perſonal adjuncts, as name, parentage, and which exactly were accompliſhed in Saint Peter's perſonal actings, which therefore it is unreaſonable to extend farther.

Matt. 16. 17. Joh. 21. 15, 16, 17.

Matt. 16. 17. Our Lord promiſed to Simon Son of Jona, to build his Church on him; accordingly in eminent manner the Church was founded upon his Miniſtry, or by his firſt preaching, teſtimony, performances.

Our Lord promiſed to give him the Keys of the Heavenly Kingdom; this Power Saint Peter ſignally did execute in converting Chriſtians, and receiving them by Baptiſm into the Church, by conferring the Holy Ghoſt, and the like adminiſtrations.

Joh. 21. 15. Our Lord charged Simon Son of Jonas to feed his Sheep; this he performed by preaching, writing, guiding and governing Chriſtians, as he found opportunity; wherefore if any thing was couched under thoſe promiſes or orders, ſingularly pertinent to Saint Peter; for the ſame reaſon that they were ſingular, they were perſonal; for,

Theſe things being, in a conſpicuous manner accompliſhed in St. Peter's Perſon, the ſenſe of thoſe words is exhauſted; there may not, with any probability, there cannot with any aſſurance be any more grounded on them; whatever more is inferred, muſt be by precarious aſſumption; and juſtly we may caſt at thoſe who ſhall infer it that expoſtulation of Tertullian, What art thou, who doſt overturn and change the manifeſt intention of our Lord, perſonally conferring this on Peter?

Qualis es evertens atque commutans manifeſtam Domini intentionem perſonaliter hoc Petro conferentem? Tertul. de pud. 21.

3. Particularly the grand promiſe to Saint Peter of founding the Church on him cannot reach beyond his perſon; becauſe there can be no other foundations of a Society, than ſuch as are firſt laid; the Succeſſors of thoſe, who firſt did erect a Society, and eſtabliſh it, are themſelves but ſuperſtructures.

4. The Apoſtolical Office as ſuch was perſonal and temporary; and therefore according to its nature and deſign not ſucceſſive or communicable to others in perpetual deſcendence from them.

It was, as ſuch, in all reſpects extraordinary, conferred in a ſpecial manner, deſigned for ſpecial purpoſes, diſcharged by ſpecial aids, endowed with ſpecial privileges, as was needful for the propagation of Chriſtianity, and founding of Churches.

To that Office it was requiſite, that the Perſon ſhould have an immediate deſignation and commiſſion from God; ſuch as Saint Paul ſo often doth inſiſt upon for aſſerting his title to the Office; Paul an Apoſtle, not from men, or by man— not by men, ſaith St. Chryſoſtom, this is a property of the Apoſtles.

Gal. 1. 1.
Τὸ γὰρ δι' ἀνθρώπων τοῦτο ἴδιον τῶν Ἀποστόλων. Chryſ. Ibid.

It was requiſite that an Apoſtle ſhould be able to atteſt concerning our Lord's Reſurrection or Aſcenſion, either immediately as the twelve, or by evident conſequence as Saint Paul; thus Saint Peter implied, at the choice of Matthias, Wherefore of thoſe men, which have companied with us —— muſt one be ordained to be a witneſs with us of the Reſurrection; and, Am I not (ſaith Saint Paul) an Apoſtle, have I not ſeen the Lord? according to that of Ananias, The God of our Fathers hath choſen thee that thou ſhouldeſt know his will, and ſee that juſt one, and ſhouldeſt hear the voice of his mouth; for thou ſhalt bear witneſs unto all men of what thou haſt ſeen and heard.

Act. 1. 21.
1 Cor 9. 1. 15. 8.
Act. 22. 14.

It was needful alſo that an Apoſtle ſhould be endowed with miraculous gifts and graces, enabling him both to aſſure his Authority, and to execute his Office; wherefore Saint Paul calleth theſe, the marks of an Apoſtle, the which were wrought by him among the Corinthians in all patience (or perſevering) in ſigns, and wonders, and mighty deeds.

2 Cor. 12. 12.
Rom. 15. 18.

It was alſo in St. Chryſoſtom's opinion, proper to an Apoſtle, that he ſhould be able according to his diſcretion in a certain and conſpicuous manner to impart Spiritual Gifts; as Saint Peter and Saint John did at Samaria; which to do, according to that Father, was the peculiar gift and privilege of the Apoſtles.

Τοῦτο γὰρ τὸ δῶρον μόνων τῶν δώδεκα— τοῦτο γὰρ ἦν τῶν Ἀποστόλων ἐξαίρετον. Chryſ. in Act. 8. 18. De ſolis Apoſtolis legitur, quorum vicem tenent Epiſcopi, quod per manûs impoſitionem Spiritum S. dabant. P. Eugenius IV. Inſtit. Arm.

'Tis recorded of the Apoſtles alone, in whoſe room the Biſhops ſucceed, that they gave the Holy Ghoſt by the laying on of hands.

It was alſo a privilege of an Apoſtle, by virtue of his commiſſion from Chriſt to inſtruct all Nations in the Doctrine and Law of Chriſt; He had right and warrant to exerciſe his function every where, His charge was univerſal and indefinite; the whole world was his Province; he was not affixed to any one place, nor could be excluded from any; he was (as St. Cyril calleth him) an Oecumenical Judge, and an Inſtructor of all the Subceleſtial World.

Ἐπειδὴ ἔμελλον τῆς οἰκουμένης τὴν ἐπιτροπὴν ἐπιδέξασθαι. Chryſ. in Joh. 21.

Κριταὶ οἰκουμενικοὶ, καὶ τῆς ὑφ' ἡλίῳ καθηγηταί. Cyril. γλαφ. in Gen. 7.

Apoſtles alſo did govern in an abſolute manner, according to diſcretion, as being guided by infallible aſſiſtance, to the which they might upon occaſion appeal, and affirm, It hath ſeemed good to the Holy Ghoſt and us. Whence their Writings have paſſed for inſpired, and therefore Canonical, or certain Rules of Faith and Practice.

Act. 15. 28.

It did belong to them to found Churches, to conſtitute Paſtors, to ſettle orders, to correct offences, to perform all ſuch Acts of Sovereign, Spiritual Power, in virtue of the ſame Divine aſſiſtance, according to the Authority, which the Lord had given them for edification; as we ſee practiſed by Saint Paul.

In fine, the Apoſtleſhip was (as St. Chryſoſtom telleth us) a buſineſs fraught with ten thouſand good things; both greater than all privileges of grace, and comprehenſive of them.

Τὴν Ἀποστολὴν, χρῆμα μυρίων ἀγαθῶν γέμον, τῶν χαρισμάτων ἁπάντων καὶ μεῖζον καὶ περιεκτικόν. Chryſ. in Rom. 1. Or. 1. Tom. 8. p. 114.

Now ſuch an Office, conſiſting of ſo many extraordinary privileges and miraculous powers, which were requiſite for the foundation of the Church, and the diffuſion of Chriſtianity, againſt the manifold difficulties and diſadvantages, which it then needs muſt encounter, was not deſigned to continue by derivation; for it containeth in it divers things, which apparently were not communicated, and which no man without groſs impoſture and hypocriſy could challenge to himſelf.

Neither did the Apoſtles pretend to communicate it; they did indeed appoint ſtanding Paſtors and Teachers in each Church; they did aſſume Fellow-labourers or Aſſiſtants in the work of Preaching and Governance; but they did not conſtitute Apoſtles, equal to themſelves in Authority, Privileges or Gifts. For who knoweth not (ſaith St. Auſtin) that principate of Apoſtleſhip to be preferred before any Epiſcopacy? and the Biſhops (ſaith Bellarmine) have no part of the true Apoſtolical Authority. *

Quis neſcit illum Apoſtolatûs principatum cuilibet Epiſcopatui præferendum? Aug. de Bapt. c. Don. 2. 1. Epiſcopi nullam habent partem veræ Apoſtolicæ auctoritatis. Bell. 4. 25.

* The Apoſtles themſelves do make the Apoſtulate a diſtinct Office from Paſtors and Teachers, which are the ſtanding Offices in the Church. Ep. 4. 11. 1 Cor. 12. 28.

Whereſore Saint Peter, who had no other Office mentioned in Scripture, or known to Antiquity, beſide that of an Apoſtle, could not have properly and adequately any Succeſſor to his Office; but it naturally did expire with his Perſon, as did that of the other Apoſtles.

5. Accordingly, whereas the other Apoſtles, as ſuch, had no Succeſſors, the Apoſtolical Office not being propagated; the Primacy of Saint Peter (whatever it were, whether of Order or Juriſdiction, in regard to his Brethren) did ceaſe with him; for when there were no Apoſtles extant, there could be no Head, or Prince of the Apoſtles in any ſenſe.

6. If ſome privileges of Saint Peter were derived to Popes, why were not all? why was not Pope Alexander VI. as holy as Saint Peter? why was not Pope Honorius as ſound in his private judgment? why is not every Pope inſpired? why is not every Papal Epiſtle to be reputed Canonical? why are not all Popes endowed with power of doing Miracles? why doth not the Pope by a Sermon convert thouſands? (why indeed do Popes never preach?) why doth not he cure men by his ſhadow? (he is, ſay they, himſelf his ſhadow:) what ground is there of diſtinguiſhing the privileges, ſo that he ſhall have ſome, not others? where is the ground to be found?

7. If it be objected, that the Fathers commonly do call Biſhops Succeſſors of the Apoſtles; to aſſoil that objection we may conſider, that whereas the Apoſtolical Office virtually did contain the functions of Teaching, and ruling God's people, the which for preſervation of Chriſtian doctrine, and edification of the Church, were requiſite to be continued perpetually in ordinary ſtanding Offices, theſe indeed were derived from the Apoſtles, but not properly in way of ſucceſſion, as by univocal propagation; but by Ordination, imparting all the power needful for ſuch Offices; which therefore were exerciſed by perſons during the Apoſtles lives concurrently, or in ſubordination to them; even as a Dictator at Rome might create inferior Magiſtrates, who derived from him, but not as his Succeſſors; for (as Bellarmine himſelf telleth us) there can be no proper ſucceſſion but in reſpect of one preceding, but Apoſtles and Biſhops were together in the Church.

Non ſucceditur propriè niſi præcedenti, at ſimul fuerunt in Eccleſia Apoſtoli & Epiſcopi —— Bell. de Pont. R.4.25.

The Fathers therefore ſo in a large ſenſe call all Biſhops Succeſſors of the Apoſtles, not meaning that any of them did ſucceed into the whole Apoſtolical Office; but that each did receive his power from ſome one (immediately or mediately) whom ſome Apoſtle did conſtitute Biſhop, veſting him with Authority to feed the particular Flock committed to him in way of ordinary charge; according to the ſayings of that Apoſtolical perſon, Clemens Rom. The Apoſtles preaching in Regions and Cities, did conſtitute their firſt Converts, having approved them by the Spirit, for Biſhops and Deacons of thoſe who ſhould afterward believe; and having conſtituted the foreſaid (Biſhops and Deacons) they withal gave them farther charge, that if they ſhould die, other approved men ſucceſſively ſhould receive their Office: thus did the Biſhops ſupply the room of the Apoſtles, each in guiding his particular charge, all of them together by mutual aid conſpiring to govern the whole Body of the Church.

Κατὰ χώρας καὶ πόλεις κηρύσσοντες καθίστανον τὰς ἀπαρχὰς αὐτῶν, δοκιμάσαντες τῷ πνεύματι, εἰς Ἐπισκόπους καὶ Διακόνους τῶν μελλόντων πιστεύειν. Clem. ad Corinth. 1. p. 54.

Κατέστησαν τοὺς προειρημένους, καὶ μεταξὺ ἐπινομὴν ἐπιδεδώκασι, ὅπως ἐὰν κοιμηθῶσι, διαδέξωνται ἕτεροι δεδοκιμασμένοι ἄνδρες τὴν λειτουργίαν αὐτῶν. Ibid. p. 57.

Singulis paſtoribus portio gregis adſcripta eſt, quam regat unuſquiſq; & gubernet —— Cypr. Ep. 55.

8. In which regard it may be ſaid that not one ſingle Biſhop, but all Biſhops together through the whole Church do ſucceed Saint Peter, or any other Apoſtle; for that all of them in union together have an univerſal Sovereign Authority, commenſurate to an Apoſtle.

9. This is the notion, which St. Cyprian doth ſo much inſiſt upon, affirming that the Biſhops do ſucceed Saint Peter, and the other Apoſtles, by vicarious ordination; that the Biſhops are Apoſtles; that there is but one chair by the Lord's word built upon one Peter;

Præpoſitos, qui Apoſtolis vicariâ ordinatione ſuccedunt —— *Ep.*69.42.75.

Apoſtolos, id eſt, Epiſcopos & præpoſitos Dominus elegit. Ep. 65.

Cathedra una ſuper Petrum Domini

One undivided Biſhoprick, diffuſed in the peaceful numeroſity of many Biſhops, wherof each Biſhop doth hold his ſhare; One Flock whom the Apoſtles by unanimous agreement did feed, and which afterward the Biſhops do feed; having a portion thereof allotted to each, which he ſhould govern.

voce fundata—— Ep.40. & Ep.73. & de unit Eccl.

*Epiſcopatus unus, Epiſcoporum multorum concordi numeroſitate diffuſus. Ep.*52.

Epiſcopatus unus, cujus à ſingulis in ſolidum pars tenetur. De unit. Eccl.

Et Paſtores ſunt omnes, ſed grex unus oſtenditur, qui ab Apoſtolis omnibus unanimi conſentione paſcatur. De unit. Eccl.

*Nam etſi Paſtores multi ſumus, unam tamen gregem paſcimus, & oves univerſas, &c. Epiſt.*67.

For though we are many Paſtors, yet we feed one flock, and all the ſheep, &c.

So the Synod of Carthage with St. Cyprian.

Manifeſta eſt ſententia Domini noſtri Jeſu Chriſti Apoſtolos ſuos mittentis, & ipſis ſolis poteſtatem à patre ſibi datam permittentis quibus nos ſucceſſimus, eâdem poteſtate Eccleſiam Domini gubernantes.

The mind and meaning of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt is manifeſt in ſending his Apoſtles, and allowing the power given him of the Father to them alone, whoſe Succeſſors we are, governing the Church of God by the ſame power.

So alſo St. Chryſoſtom ſaith, that the Sheep of Chriſt were committed by him to Peter, and to thoſe after him, that is, in his meaning, to all Biſhops.

Τὰ πρόβατα—— ἃ τῷ Πέτρῳ καὶ τοῖς μετ' ἐκεῖνον ἐνεχείρισε. Chryſ. de Sacerd. 1.

10. Such, and no other power Saint Peter might devolve on any Biſhop ordained by him in any Church; which he did conſtitute or inſpect; as in that of Antioch, of Alexandria, of Babylon, of Rome.

The like did the other Apoſtles communicate, who had the ſame power with Saint Peter in founding and ſettling Churches; whoſe Succeſſors of this kind were equal to thoſe of the ſame kind, whom Saint Peter did conſtitute; enjoying in their ſeveral precincts an equal part of the Apoſtolical power as St. Cyprian often doth aſſert.

Hier. ad Evagr.

11. It is in conſequence obſervable, that in thoſe Churches, whereof the Apoſtles themſelves were never accounted Biſhops, yet the Biſhops are called Succeſſors of the Apoſtles; which cannot otherwiſe be underſtood, than according to the ſenſe which we have propoſed; that is, becauſe they ſucceeded thoſe, who were conſtituted by the Apoſtles; according to thoſe ſayings of Irenæus and Tertullian; We can number thoſe, who were inſtituted Biſhops by the Apoſtles and their Succeſſors; and, All the Churches do ſhew thoſe, whom being by the Apoſtles conſtituted in the Epiſcopal Office they have as Continuers of the Apoſtolical ſeed.

Habemus annumerare eos, qui ab Apoſtolis inſtituti ſunt Epiſcopi, & Succeſſores eorum uſq; ad nos—— Iren.3.3.

Proinde utiq; & cæteræ exhibent, quos ab Apoſtolis in Epiſcopatum conſtitutos Apoſtolici ſeminis traduces habent. Tert. *de Præſcr.*32.

So although Saint Peter was never reckoned Biſhop of Alexandria, yet becauſe it is reported that he placed Saint Mark there, the Biſhop of Alexandria is ſaid to ſucceed the Apoſtles.

Τέταρτος ἀπὸ τῶν Ἀποστόλων τῆς αὐτόθι λειτουργίαν κληροῦται Πρῖμος. Euſ. hiſt. 4. 1. Primus is the fourth from the Apoſtles who was the Biſhop of that place, or obtained the miniſtery there.

And becauſe Saint John did abide at Epheſus, inſpecting that Church, and appointing Biſhops there, the Biſhops of that See did refer their Origin to him.

Ὅπου μὲν Ἐπισκόπους καταστήσων, ὅπου δὲ ὅλας Ἐκκλησίας ἁρμόσων, &c. Clem. Alex. apud Euſeb.3.23. Ordo Epiſcoporum ad originem recenſus in Joannem ſtabit autorem. Tert. in Marc.4.5. Tert. de Præſcr. 32.

So many Biſhops did claim from Saint Paul.

So St. Cyprian and Firmilian do aſſert themſelves Succeſſors of the Apoſtles, who yet perhaps never were at Carthage, or Cæſarea.

Unitatem à Domino & per Apoſtolos nobis ſucceſſoribus traditam Cypr *Ep.*42.

Adverſarii noſtri qui Apoſtolis ſucceſſimus, Firmil. in Cypr. Ep. 75.

So the Church of Conſtantinople is often in the Acts of the Sixth General Council, called this great Apoſtolock Church, being ſuch Churches as thoſe of whom Tertullian ſaith, that although they do not produce any of the Apoſtles, or Apoſtolical men for their Author, yet conſpiring in the ſame faith, and no leſs, for the conſanguinity of doctrine, reputed Apoſtolical.

——ab illis Eccleſiis, quæ licèt nullum ex Apoſtolis, vel Apoſtolicis, auctorem ſuum proferant, aut multo poſteriores, quæ deniq; quotidie inſtituuntur, tamen in eadem fide conſpirantes, non minùs Apoſtolicæ deputantur, pro conſanguinitate doctrinæ. Tert. de Præſcr. 32.

Yea hence St. Hierom doth aſſert a parity of merit and dignity Sacerdotal to all Biſhops; becauſe (ſaith he) all of them are Succeſſors to the Apoſtles; having all a like power by their ordination conferred on them. Hier. ad Evagr.

12. Whereas our Adverſaries do pretend, that indeed the other Apoſtles had an extraordinary charge as Legates of Chriſt, which had no ſucceſſion, but was extinct in their perſons; but that Saint Peter had a peculiar charge, as ordinary Paſtor of the whole Church, which ſurviveth: Bell. 4. 25, &c.

To this it is enough to rejoin, that it is a mere figment, deviſed for a ſhift, and affirmed precariouſly; having no ground either in Holy Scripture, or in ancient Tradition; there being no ſuch diſtinction in the Sacred or Eccleſiaſtical Writings; no mention occurring there of any Office which he did aſſume, or which was attributed to him, diſtinct from that extraordinary one of an Apoſtle, and all the paſtoral charge imaginable being aſcribed by the Ancients to all the Apoſtles in regard to the whole Church, as hath been ſufficiently declared.

13. In fine, if any ſuch conveyance of power, (of power ſo great, ſo momentous, ſo mightily concerning the perpetual ſtate of the Church, and of each perſon therein) had been made; it had been (for general direction and ſatisfaction, for voiding all doubt and debate about it, for ſtifling theſe pretended Hereſies and Schiſms) very requiſite, that it ſhould have been expreſſed in ſome authentick Record, that a particular Law ſhould have been extant concerning it, that all poſterity ſhould be warned to yield the ſubmiſſion grounded thereon.

Indeed a matter of ſo great conſequence to the being and welfare of the Church, could ſcarce have ſcaped from being clearly mentioned ſomewhere or other in Scripture, wherein ſo much is ſpoken touching Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline; it could ſcarce have avoided the Pen of the firſt Fathers, (Clemens, Ignatius, the Apoſtolical Canons and Conſtitutions, Tertullian, &c.) who alſo ſo much treat concerning the Function and Authority of Chriſtian Governors.

Nothing can be more ſtrange, than that in the Statute-book of the new Jeruſalem, and in all the Original Monuments concerning it, there ſhould be ſuch a dead ſilence concerning the ſucceſſion of its chief Magiſtrate.

Wherefore no ſuch thing appearing, we may reaſonably conclude no ſuch thing to have been, and that our Adverſaries aſſertion of it is wholly arbitrary, imaginary and groundleſs.

14. I might add, as a very convincing Argument, that if ſuch a ſucceſſion had been deſigned, and known in old times, it is morally impoſſible, that none of the Fathers (Origen, Chryſoſtom, Auguſtine, Cyril, Hierom, Theodoret, &c.) in their expoſition of the places alledged by the Romaniſts for the Primacy of Saint Peter, ſhould declare that Primacy to have been derived and ſettled on Saint Peter's Succeſſor; a point of that moment, if they had been aware of it, they could not but have touched, as a moſt uſeful application, and direction for duty.

SUPPOSITION III.

They affirm, That Saint Peter was Biſhop of Rome.

Concerning which Aſſertion we ſay, that it may with great reaſon be denied, and that it cannot any-wiſe be aſſured; as will appear by the following Conſiderations.

1. Saint Peter's being Biſhop of Rome would confound the Offices, which God made diſtinct; for God did appoint firſt Apoſtles, then Prophets, then Paſtors and Teachers; wherefore Saint Peter after he was an Apoſtle, could not well become a Biſhop; it would be ſuch an irregularity, as if a Biſhop ſhould be made a Deacon.

1 Cor. 12. 28. Eph. 4. 11.

2. The Offices of an Apoſtle, and of a Biſhop, are not in their nature well conſiſtent; for the Apoſtleſhip is an extraordinary Office, charged with inſtruction and government of the whole world, and calling for an anſwerable care (the Apoſtles being Rulers, as Saint Chryſoſtom ſaith, ordained by God; Rulers not taking ſeveral Nations and Cities, but all of them in common entruſted with the whole world) but Epiſcopacy is an ordinary ſtanding charge, affixed to one place, and requiring a ſpecial attendance there; Biſhops being Paſtors, who (as St. Chryſoſtom ſaith) do ſit, and are employed in one place: Now he that hath ſuch a general care, can hardly diſcharge ſuch a particular Office; and he that is fixed to ſo particular attendance, can hardly look well after ſo general a charge: Either of thoſe Offices alone would ſuffice to take up a whole man; as thoſe tell us, who have conſidered the burthen incumbent on the meaneſt of them; the which we may ſee deſcribed in St. Chryſoſtom's Diſcourſes concerning the Prieſthood.

Ἄρχοντές εἰσιν ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ χειροτονηθέντες οἱ Ἀπόστολοι. ἄρχοντες, οὐκ ἔθνη καὶ πόλεις διαφόρους λαμβάνοντες, ἀλλὰ πάντες κοινῇ τὴν οἰκουμένην ἐμπιστευθέντες. Chryſ. Tom. 8. p. 115.

Οἱ καθήμενοι καὶ περὶ ἕνα τόπον ἠσχολημένοι. Chryſ. in Eph 4. 11.

Baronius ſaith of Saint Peter, that it was his Office, not to ſtay in one place, but as much as it was poſſible for one man to travel over the whole world, and to bring thoſe who did yet believe to the faith, but thoroughly to eſtabliſh believers; if ſo, how could he be Biſhop of Rome, which was an Office inconſiſtent with ſuch vagrancy?

Non erat ejus Officii in uno loco conſiſtere, ſed quantum homini licuiſſet univerſum peragrare orbem, & nondum credentes ad fidem perducere, credentes verò in fide penitus ſtabilire. Baron. Anno 58. §. 51.

3. It would not have beſeemed Saint Peter the prime Apoſtle, to aſſume the charge of a particular Biſhop; it had been a degradation of himſelf, and a diſparagement to the Apoſtolical Majeſty, for him to take upon him the Biſhoprick of Rome; as if the King ſhould become Mayor of London; as if the Biſhop of London ſhould be Vicar of Pancras.

4. Wherefore it is not likely, that Saint Peter, being ſenſible of that ſuperior charge belonging to him, which did exact a more extenſive care, would vouchſafe to undertake an inferior charge.

We cannot conceive, that Saint Peter did affect the Name of a Biſhop, as now men do, allured by the baits of wealth and power, which then were none: if he did affect the Title, why did he not in either of his Epiſtles (one of which, as they would perſwade us, was written from Rome) inſcribe himſelf Biſhop of Rome?

Eſpecially conſidering, that being an Apoſtle, he did not need any particular Authority, that involving all power, and enabling him in any particular place to execute all kinds of Eccleſiaſtical Adminiſtrations: there was no reaſon that an Apoſtle (or Univerſal Biſhop) ſhould become a particular Biſhop.

5. Alſo Saint Peter's general charge of converting and inſpecting the Jews, diſperſed over the World (his Apoſtleſhip, as Saint Paul calleth it, of the Circumciſion) which required much travel, and his preſence in divers places, doth not well agree to his aſſuming the Epiſcopal Office at Rome.

Gal. 2. 8. Ἀποςολὴ περιτομῆς.

Eſpecially at that time, when they firſt make him to aſſume it; which was in the time of Claudius, who (as Saint Luke, and other Hiſtories do report) did baniſh all the Jews from Rome, as Tiberius alſo had done before him: He was too skilful a Fiſherman to caſt his Net there, where there was no Fiſh.

Act. 18. 2. Sueton. in Claud. 25. in Tib. 36.

6. If we conſider Saint Peter's life, we may well deem him uncapable of this Office; which he could not conveniently diſcharge; for it, as Hiſtory doth repreſent it, and may be collected from divers circumſtances of it, was very unſettled; he went much about the World, and therefore could ſeldom recide at Rome.

Many have argued him to have never been at Rome; which opinion I ſhall not avow, as bearing a more civil reſpect to ancient Teſtimonies and Traditions; although many falſe and fabulous relations of that kind having crept into Hiſtory and common vogue; many doubtful reports having paſſed concerning him; many notorious forgeries having been vented about his travels and acts, (all that is reported of him out of Scripture having a ſmack of the Legend) would tempt a man to ſuſpect any thing touching him, which is grounded only upon human Tradition; ſo that the forger of his Epiſtle to Saint James might well induce him ſaying, If while I do yet ſurvive, men dare to feign ſuch things of me, how much more will they dare to do ſo after my deceaſe?

Euſeb. 3. 3.

Εἰ δὲ ἐμοῦ ἔτι περιόντος τοιαῦτα τολμῶσιν καταψεύδεσθαι, πόσῳ γε μᾶλλον μετ' ἐμὲ ποιεῖν οἱ μετ' ἐμὲ τολμήσουσι; Petr. ad Jacob.

But at leaſt the diſcourſes of thoſe men have evinced that it is hard to aſſign the time, when he was at Rome; and that he could never long abide there. For,

The time which old Tradition aſſigneth of his going to Rome, is rejected by divers learned men, even of the Roman Party.

Scal. in Euſeb. p. 189.
Onuph. apud Bell. 2. 6.
Valeſ. in Euſeb. 2. 16.

He was often in other places; ſometimes at Jeruſalem, ſometimes at Antioch, ſometimes at Babylon, ſometimes at Corinth, ſometimes probably at each of thoſe places unto which he directeth his Catholick Epiſtles; among which Epiphanius ſaith, that Peter did often viſit Pontus and Bithynia.

Act. 11. 2. 15. 7. Gal. 1. 18. 2. 9.
Gal. 2. 11. 1 Pet. 5. 13.
1 Cor. 1. 12.
2 Pet. 3. 2. 1 Pet. 1. 1.

Πέτρος πολλάκις Πόντον καὶ Βιθυνίαν ἐπεσκέψατο. Epiph. hær. 27.

And that he ſeldom was at Rome, may well be collected from Saint Paul's Writings; for he writing at different times one Epiſtle to Rome, and divers Epiſtles from Rome, (that to the Galatians, that to the Epheſians, that to the Philippians, that to the Coloſſians, and the Second to Timothy) doth never mention him, ſending any ſalutation to him, or from him.

Particularly Saint Peter was not there, when Saint Paul mentioning Tychicus, Oneſimus, Ariſtarchus, Marcus and Juſtus, addeth theſe alone

Col. 4. 11.

my fellow-workers unto the Kingdom of God, who have been a comfort unto me.

2 Tim.4. 16. He was not there when Saint Paul ſaid, at my firſt defence no man ſtood with me, but all men forſook me.

2 Tim 4.6. 2 Tim.4. 21. He was not there immediately before Saint Paul's death, (when the the time of his departure was at hand) when he telleth Timothy, that all the brethren did ſalute him, and naming divers of them, he omitteth Peter.

Which things being conſidered, it is not probable that Saint Peter would aſſume the Epiſcopal Chair of Rome, he being little capable to recide there, and for that other needful affairs would have forced him to leave ſo great a Church deſtitute of their Paſtor.

7. It was needleſs that he ſhould be Biſhop, for that by virtue of his Apoſtleſhip (involving all the power of inferior degrees) he might when ever he ſhould be at Rome exerciſe Epiſcopal functions and Authority. What need a Sovereign Prince be made a Juſtice of Peace ——

Conc. Nic. Can. 16. Conc. Ant. Can. 3. Conc. Sard. Can. 11, 12. Conc. Trul. Can. 80. 8. Had he done ſo, he muſt have given a bad example of Non-reſidence, a Practice that would have been very ill reliſhed in the Primitive Church, as we may ſee by ſeveral Canons interdicting offences of kin to it (it being I think then not ſo known as nominally to be cenſured) and culpable upon the ſame ground; and by the ſayings of Fathers condemning practices approaching to it.

Οἶδας ἀναγνοὺς τὰς γραφὰς, ἡλίκον ἐστὶ δὴ ἔγκλημα καταλιμπάνειν Ἐπίσκοπον τὴν Ἐκκλησίαν, καὶ ἀμελεῖν τῶν τοῦ Θεοῦ ποιμνίων Athan. *Apol.*1.

Having read the Scriptures, you know how great an offence it is for a Biſhop to forſake his Church, and to neglect the Flocks of God.

Oportet enim Epiſcopos curis ſecularibus expeditos curam ſuorum agere populorum, nec Eccleſiis ſuis abeſſe diutiùs. P. Paſchal. *II. Ep.*22.

For Biſhops ought to be diſentangled from ſecular cares, and to take charge of their people, and not to be long abſent from their Churches.

Even later Synods in more corrupt times, and in the declenſion of good Order, yet did prohibit this practce.

Præcipimus nè conductitiis miniſtris Eccleſiæ committantur, & unaquæq; Eccleſia, cui facultas ſuppetit, proprium habeat Sacerdotem. Conc. Lat.2. (ſub Innoc. II) *Can.*10.

We injoyn that Churches be not committed to hired Miniſters, but that every Church, that is of ability, have its proper Prieſt.

Cùm igitur Eccleſia vel Eccleſiaſticum miniſterium committi debuerit, talis ad hoc perſona quæratur, quæ reſidere in loco, & curam ejus per ſeipſum valet exercere; quòd ſi aliter fuerit actum, & qui receperit, quod contra Sanctos Canones accepit, amittat. Conc. Lat.3. (ſub Alexandro III.) *cap.*13.

Therefore when a Church or the Eccleſiaſtical Miniſtry be to be committed to any man, let ſuch a perſon be found out for this purpoſe, who can reſide upon the place, and diſcharge the cure by himſelf: but if it prove otherwiſe, then let him who has received, loſe that which he has taken contrary to the holy Canons.

Epiphanius therefore did well infer, that it was needful the Apoſtles ſhould conſtitute Biſhops reſident at Rome; It was (ſaith he) poſſible that the Apoſtles Peter and Paul yet ſurviving other Biſhops ſhould be conſtituted, becauſe the Apoſtles often did take journeys into other Countries, for preaching Chriſt, but the City of Rome could not be without a Biſhop.

Πλὴν ἀλλὰ καὶ οὕτως ἠδύνατο ἔτι περιόντων τῶν Ἀποστόλων, φημὶ δὲ τῶν περὶ Πέτρον καὶ Παῦλον, Ἐπισκόπους ἄλλους καθίστασθαι, διὰ τὸ τοὺς Ἀποστόλους πολλάκις ἐπὶ τὰς ἄλλας πατρίδας τὴν πορείαν στέλλεσθαι, διὰ τὸ κήρυγμα τοῦ Χριστοῦ μὴ δύνασθαι δὲ τὴν τῶν Ῥωμαίων πόλιν ἄνευ Ἐπισκόπου εἶναι. Epiph. *hær.*27.

9. If Saint Peter were Biſhop of Rome, he thereby did offend againſt divers other good Eccleſiaſtical Rules, which either were in practice from the beginning, or at leaſt the reaſon of them was always good, upon which the Church did afterward enact them; ſo that either he did ill in thwarting them, or the Church had done it in eſtabliſhing them, ſo as to condemn his practice.

10. It was againſt Rule, that any Biſhop ſhould deſert one Church, and transfer himſelf to another; and indeed againſt Reaſon, ſuch a relation and endearment being contracted between a Biſhop and his Church, which cannot well be diſſolved.

*Apoſt. Can.*14.

But Saint Peter is by Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtorians reported (and by Romaniſts admitted) to have been Biſhop of Antioch for ſeven years together.

Τοῦ μεγάλου Πέτρου θρόνον ἡ Ἀντιοχέων μεγαλόπολις ἔχει. Theodor. *Ep.*86.

The great City of the Antiochians hath the throne of the great Saint Peter.

He therefore did ill to relinquiſh that Church, that moſt ancient and truly Apoſtoliek Church of Antioch, (as the Conſtantinopolitan Fathers call'd it) and to place his See at Rome.

Τὴν πρεσβυτάτην καὶ ὄντως Ἀποστολικὴν Ἐκκλησίαν. Theod. 5.6.

This practice was eſteemed bad, and of very miſchievous conſequence; earneſtly eproved as heinouſly criminal by great Fathers, ſeverely condemned by divers Synods.

Particularly a tranſmigration from a leſſer and poorer to a greater and more wealthy Biſhoprick (which is the preſent caſe) was checked by them as rankly ſavouring of ſelfiſh ambition or avarice.

The Synod of Alexandria (in Athanaſius) in its Epiſtle to all Catholick Biſhops doth ſay, that Euſebius by paſſing from Berytus to Nicomedia, had annulled his Epiſcopacy, making it an adultery, worſe than that which is committed by marriage upon divorce, Euſebius (ſay they) did not conſider the Apoſtle's admonition, Art thou bound to a wife, do not ſeek to be looſed; for if it be ſaid of a woman, how much more of a Church; of the ſame Biſhoprick; to which one being tyed, ought not to ſeek another, that he may not be found alſo an adulterer, according to the Holy Scripture? Surely when they ſaid this, they did forget, what Saint Peter was ſaid to have done in that kind; as did alſo the Sardican Fathers in their Synodical Letter extant in the ſame Apology of Athanaſius, condemning tranſlations from leſſer Cities and greater Dioceſes.

Ἀκυρώσας αὐτήν. Athanaſ. Apol. 2. *p.*726.

Οὐ συνορῶν τὸ παράγγελμα, δέδεσαι γυναικὶ, μὴ ζήτει λύσιν· εἰ δὲ ἐπὶ γυναικὸς τὸ ῥητὸν, πόσῳ μᾶλλον ἐπὶ Ἐκκλησίας ἐκ τῆς αὐτῆς Ἐπισκοπῆς, ᾗ ὁ συνδεθεὶς ἄλλην οὐκ ὀφείλει ζητεῖν, ἵνα μὴ καὶ μοιχὸς παρὰ ταῖς θείαις εὑρίσκηται γραφαῖς. Syn. Alex. apud Athan. *p.*727.

*Τὰς μεταθέσεις ἀπὸ μικρῶν πόλεων εἰς μείζονας παροικίας. Ibid.p.*765.

The ſame practice is forbidden by the Synods of Nice I. of Chalcedon, of Antioch, of Sardica, of Arles I. &c.

Syn. Nic. Can. 15. Syn. Chalc. Can. 5. Syn. Ant. Can. 21. Syn. Sard. Can. 1. Syn. Arel. Can. 22. Grat. Cauſ. 8. qu. 1. cap. 4.

In the Synod under Mennas, it was laid to the charge of Anthimus, that having been Biſhop of Trabiſond, he had adulterouſly ſnatched the See of Conſtantinople, againſt all Eccleſiaſtical Laws and Canons.

—— ἠδυνήθη μοιχικῶς τὸν τῆσδε τῆς πόλεως ἀρχιερατικὸν ὑφαρπάσαι θρόνον παρὰ πάντας τοὺς Ἐκκλησιαστικοὺς θεσμοὺς καὶ κανόνας. Cono.ſub. Menn. *p.*9.

Yea great Popes of Rome, (little conſidering how peccant therein their Predeceſſor Pope Peter was) Pope Julius and Pope Damaſus did greatly tax this practice; whereof the latter in his Synod at Rome did excommunicate all thoſe, who ſhould commit it.

P. Jul. I. apud Athan. *in Apol.*2. *p.*744.

Τοὺς δὲ ἀπὸ Ἐκκλησιῶν εἰς ἑτέρας Ἐκκλησίας μετελθόντας ἄχρι τοσούτου ἀπὸ τῆς ἡμετέρας κοινωνίας ἀλλοτρίους ἔχομεν, ἄχρις οὗ πρὸς αὐτὰς ἐπανέλθωσι τὰς πόλεις, ἐν αἷς πρῶτον ἐχειροτονήθησαν. Theod.5.11.

Thoſe that paſs from their own Churches to other Churches, we eſteem ſo long excommunicate (or ſtrangers from our communion) till ſuch time as they return to the ſame Cities where they were firſt ordained.

In like manner Pope Leo I.

Si quis Epiſcopus, mediocritate Civitatis ſuæ deſpectâ, adminiſtrationem loci celebrioris ambierit, & ad majorem ſe plebem quacunque occaſione tranſtulerit, non ſolùm à Cathedra quidem pellatur aliena, ſed carebit & propriâ, &c. P. Leo I. Ep. 84. c. 4.

If a Biſhop, deſpiſing the meanneſs of his City, ſeeks for the adminiſtration of a more eminent place, and upon any occaſion whatſoever tranfers himſelf to a greater people, he ſhall not only be driven out of another's See, but alſo loſe his own.

Theſe Laws were ſo indiſpenſible, that in reſpect to them Conſtantine M. who much loved and honoured Euſebius (acknowledging him in the common judgment of the world deſerving to be Biſhop of the whole Church) did not like, that he ſhould accept the Biſhoprick of Antioch, to which he was invited; and commended his waving it, as an act not only conſonant to the Eccleſiaſtical Canons, but acceptable to God, and agreeable to Apoſtolical Tradition; ſo little aware was the good Emperor, of Saint Peter being tranſlated from Antioch to Rome.

Euſeb. *de Vit.*Conſt. 3. 61.

In regard to the ſame Law, Gregory Nazianzene (a perſon of ſo great worth, and who had deſerved ſo highly of the Church at Conſtantinople) could not be permitted to retain his Biſhoprick of that Church, to which he had been call'd from that ſmall one of Saſima: The Synod (ſaith Sozomen) obſerving the Ancient Laws, and the Eccleſiaſtical Rule, did receive his Biſhoprick, from him being willingly offered, no-wiſe regarding the great merits of the perſon; the which Synod ſurely would have excluded Saint Peter from the Biſhoprick of Rome: and it is obſervable that Pope Damaſus did approve and exhort thoſe Fathers to that proceeding ——

Ἀλλ' ὅμως ἡ σύνοδος καὶ τοὺς πατρίους νόμους, καὶ τὴν ἐκκλησιαστικὴν τάξιν φυλάττουσα, ὃ δέδωκε παρ' ἑκόντος ἀπείληφε, μηδὲν αἰδεσθεῖσα τῶν τοῦ ἀνδρὸς πλεονεκτημάτων. Sozom. 7. 7.

Illud prætere a commoneo dilectionem veſtram, nè patiamini aliquam contra Statuta majorum noſtrorum de Civitate alia ad aliam tranſduci, & deſerere plebem ſibi commiſſam, &c. P. Damaſi Epiſt. apud Holſten. *p.*41. & R. Marc. 5. 21.

Moreover this I adviſe you, that out of your charity you would not ſuffer any one, againſt the Decrees of our Anceſtors, to be removed from one City to another, and to forſake the people committed to his charge, &c.

We may indeed obſerve, that Pope Pelagius II. did excuſe the tranſlation of Biſhops by the example of Saint Peter; for whoever dareth to ſay (argueth he) that Saint Peter the Prince of the Apoſtles did not act well, when he changed his See from Antioch to Rome?

Quis enim unquam audet dicere S. Petrum Apoſtolorum Principem non benè egiſſe, quando mutavit ſedem de Antiochia in Romam? Pelag. *II. Ep.*1.

But I think it more adviſable to excuſe Saint Peter from being Author of a practice, judged ſo irregular, by denying the matter of Fact laid to his charge.

11. It was anciently deemed a very irregular thing, contrary (ſaith St. Cyprian) to the Eccleſiaſtical diſpoſition, contrary to the Evangelical Law, contrary to the unity of Catholick Inſtitution; a Symbol (ſaith another ancient Writer) of diſſenſion, and diſagreeable to Eccleſiaſtical Law; which therefore was condemned by the Synod of Nice, by Pope Cornelius, by Pope Innocent I. and others, that two Biſhops ſhould precide together in one City.

Contra Eccleſiaſticam diſpoſitionem, contra Evangelicam legem, contra Inſtitutionis Catholicæ unitatem— Cypr. Ep. 44. (ut & *Ep.*46, 52, 55, 58.)

Ὁ διχονοίας σύμβολόν ἐστι καὶ ἐκκλησιαστικοῦ θεσμοῦ ἀλλότριον. Soz. 4. 15.

Syn. Nic. Can. 8.

Cornelius apud Euſeb. 6. 43.

Cypr. Ep. 46. P. Innocentius apud Sozom. 8. 26. Opt. I. Cathedra una.

This was condemned with good reaſon; for this on the Churches part would be a kind of ſpiritual Polygamy; this would render a Church a monſter with two heads; this would deſtroy the end of Epiſcopacy, which is unity and prevention of Schiſms.

In remedium Schiſmatis. Hier.

But if Saint Peter was Biſhop of Rome, this irregularity was committed; for the ſame Authority upon which Saint Peter's Epiſcopacy of Rome is built, doth alſo reckon Saint Paul Biſhop of the ſame; the ſame Writers do make both Founders and Planters of the Roman Church, and the ſame call both Biſhops of it; wherefore if Epiſcopacy be taken in a ſtrict and proper ſenſe, agreeable to this Controverſy, that rule muſt needs be infringed thereby.

Irenæus ſaith, that the Roman Church was founded and conſtituted by the two moſt glorious Apoſtles Peter and Paul; Dionyſius of Corinth calleth it the plantation of Peter and Paul; Epiphanius ſaith, that Peter and Paul were firſt at Rome both Apoſtles and Biſhops; ſo Euſebius implieth, ſaying, that P. Alexander derived a ſucceſſion in the fifth place from Peter and Paul.

— à glorioſiſſimis duobus Apoſtolis Petro & Paulo Romæ fundata, & conſtituta Eccleſia. Iren. 3. 3. 1.

Τὴν ἀπὸ Πέτρου ϗ Παύλου φυτείαν —— Dionyſ. Corinth. apud Euſeb. 2. 25.
Ἐν Ῥώμῃ γεγόνασι πρῶτοι Πέτρος ϗ Παῦλος Ἀπόστολοι αὐτοὶ ϗ Ἐπίσκοποι. Epiph. Hær. 27.
Πέμπτην ἀπὸ Πέτρου ϗ Παύλου κατάγων διαδοχήν. Euſeb. 4. 1.

Wherefore both of them were Roman Biſhops, or neither of them: In reaſon and rule neither of them may be called ſo in a ſtrict and proper ſenſe; but in a larger and improper ſenſe both might be ſo ſtyled.

Indeed that Saint Paul was in ſome acception Biſhop of Rome (that is, had a Supreme ſuperintendence or inſpection of it) is reaſonable to affirm; becauſe he did for a good time reſide there, and during that reſidence could not but have the chief place, could be ſubject to no other; He (ſaith Saint Luke) did abide two whole years in his own hired houſe, and received all that entred in unto him, preaching the Kingdom of God, and teaching thoſe things, which concern the Lord Jeſus Chriſt with all confidence, no man forbidding him.

Act. 28. 30.

It may be enquired, if Saint Peter was Biſhop of Rome, how he did become ſuch? did our Lord appoint him ſuch? did the Apoſtles all or any conſtitute him? did the people elect him? did he put himſelf into it? of none of theſe things there is any appearance, nor any probability. Non conſtat.

SUPPOSITION IV.

They affirm, That Saint Peter did continue Biſhop of Rome after his tranſlation, and was ſo at his deceaſe.

AGainſt which Aſſertions we may conſider:

1. Eccleſiaſtical Writers do affirm, that Saint Peter (either alone, or together with Saint Paul) did conſtitute other Biſhops; wherefore Saint Peter was never Biſhop, or did not continue Biſhop there.

Irenæus ſaith, that the Apoſtles founding and rearing that Church, delivered the Epiſcopal Office into the hands of Linus; if ſo, how did they retain it in their own hands or perſons? could they give, and have?

Θεμελιώσαντες οὖν ϗ οἰκοδομήσαντες οἱ μακάριοι Ἀπόστολοι τὴν Ἐκκλησίαν, Λίνῳ τὴν Ἐπισκοπῆς λειτουργίαν ἐνεχείρισαν. Iren. apud Euſeb. 5. 6.

Tertullian ſaith, that Saint Peter did ordain Clement.

Romanorum Eccleſiæ Clementem à Petro ordinatum edit. Tert. de Præſcr. 32.

In the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions (a very ancient Book, and ſetting forth the moſt ancient Traditions of the Church,) the Apoſtles ordering

Ex quibus electum magnum plebíque probatum,
Hâc Cathedrâ, Petrus quâ ſederat ipſe, locatum
Maxima Roma Linum primum conſidere juſſit. Tert. in Marc 3.9.

Prayers to be made for all Biſhops, and naming the principal, do reckon, not Saint Peter, but Clement, Let us pray for our Biſhop James, for our Biſhop Clemens, for our Biſhop Evodius, &c.

Τῆς δὲ Ῥωμαίων Ἐκκλησίας Λῖνος μὲν ὁ Κλαυδίας πρῶτος ὑπὸ Παύλου, Κλήμης δὲ μετὰ τὸν Λίνου θάνατον ὑπ' ἐμοῦ Πέτρου δεύτερος κεχειροτόνηται. Conſt. Apoſt. 7. 46.

Theſe reports are conſiſtent, and reconciled by that which the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions affirm; that Linus was firſt ordained Biſhop of the Roman Church by Paul; but Clemens after the death of Linus by Peter in the ſecond place.

Euſeb. 3. 4. 13. Aug Ep. 165.
Epiph. Hær. 27. Opt 2.
Tertull. poem. in Marc. 3. 9.
Phot. Cod. 112. (p. 290.)
N. Euſebius (3. 2.) ſaith, that Linus did ſit Biſhop after the Martyrdom of Saint Peter, but this is not ſo probable, as that which the Author of the Conſtitutions doth affirm, which reconcileth the diſſonancies of Writers.

Others between Linus and Clemens do interpoſe Cletus or Anacletus (ſome taking theſe for one, others for two perſons) which doth not alter the caſe.

Now hence we may infer, both that Saint Peter never was Biſhop; and upon ſuppoſition that he was, that he did not continue ſo. For,

2. If he had ever been Biſhop, he could not well lay down his Office, or ſubrogate another, either to preſide with him, or to ſucceed him; according to the ancient Rules of Diſcipline, and that which paſſed for right in the Primitive Church.

Οὐδὲ γὰρ πώποτε παρὰ τῶν πατέρων ταῦτα τετολμῆσθαι ἐγνώκαμεν· ἀλλὰ μᾶλλον κεκωλῦσθαι, τῷ μηδενὶ εἰς τόπον ζῶντος χειροτονεῖν ἄλλον δεδόσθαι ἐξουσίαν. P. Inn. I. apud Soz. 8. 26.

This practice Pope Innocent I. condemned, as irregular and never known before his time; We (ſaith he in his Epiſtle to the Clergy and People of Conſtantinople) never have known theſe things to have been adventured by our Fathers, but rather to have been hindered; for that none hath power given him to ordain another in the place of one living: He did not (it ſeems) conſider, that Saint Peter had uſed ſuch a power.

Ἐπισκόπῳ μὴ ἐξεῖναι ἀνθ' ἑαυτοῦ καθίστασθαι ἕτερον, κἂν πρὸς τῇ τελευτῇ τοῦ βίου τυγχάνῃ. Syn. Ant. Can. 23.

Accordingly the Synod of Antioch (to ſecure the tradition and practice of the Church, which began by ſome to be infringed) did make this Sanction, that it ſhould not be lawful for any Biſhop to conſtitute another in his room to ſucceed him; although it were at the point of death.

3. But ſuppoſing Saint Peter were Biſhop once, yet by conſtituting Linus, or Clemens in his place, he ceaſed to be ſo, and deveſted himſelf of that place; for it had been a great irregularity for him to continue Biſhop together with another.

Cùm poſt primum ſecundus eſſe non poſſit; quiſquis poſt unum, qui ſolus eſſe debeat, non jam ſecundus ille, ſed nullus eſt. Cypr. Ep. 52.

That being, in St. Cyprian's judgment, the Ordination of Linus had been void and null; for ſeeing (ſaith that H. Martyr) there cannot after the firſt be any ſecond, whoever is after one, who ought to be ſole Biſhop, he is not now ſecond, but none.

Thod. hiſt. 2. 17.
Ταύτῃ πῃ τοῦ Θεοῦ διοικήσαντος, ὥστε τὸν Πέτρου θρόνον μὴ ἀδοξεῖν ὑπὸ δύο ἡγεμόσιν ἰθυνόμενον.

Upon this ground, when the Emperor Conſtantius would have procured Felix to ſit Biſhop of Rome together with Pope Liberius, at his return from Baniſhment (after his compliance with the Arians) the people of Rome would not admit it, exclaiming One God, one Chriſt, one Biſhop; and whereas Felix ſoon after that died, the Hiſtorian remarketh it as a ſpecial providence of God that Peter's Throne might not ſuffer infamy; being governed under two Prelates; he never conſidered, that Saint Peter and Saint Paul, Saint Peter and Linus had thus governed that ſame Church.

Upon this account St. Auſtin being aſſumed by Valerius with him to be Biſhop of Hippo, did afterward diſcern and acknowledge his errour.

Adhuc in corpore poſito beatæ memoriæ patre & Epiſcopo meo ſene Valerio Epiſcopus ordinatus ſum, & ſedi cum illo, quod concilio Niceno prohibitum fuiſſe neſciebam, nec ipſe ſciebat. Aug. *Ep.*110.

While my Father and Biſhop of bleſſed memory, old Valerius was yet living, I was ordained Biſhop, and held the See with him: which I knew not, nor did he know, to be forbidden by the Council of Nice.

In fine, to obviate this practice, ſo many Canons of Councils (both general and particular) were made, which we before did mention.

4. In ſum, when Saint Peter did ordain others (as ſtory doth accord in affirming) either he did retain the Epiſcopacy, and then (beſide need, reaſon and rule) there were concurrently divers Biſhops of Rome at one time; or he did quite relinquiſh and finally divorce himſelf from the Office, ſo that he did not die Biſhop of Rome, the which overturneth the main ground of the Romiſh pretence. Or will they ſay, that Saint Peter, having laid aſide the Office for a time, did afterward before his death reſume it? then what became of Linus, of Cletus, of Clemens? were they diſpoſſeſſed of their place, or depoſed from their function; would Saint Peter ſucceed them in it? this in Bellarmin's own judgment had been plainly intolerable.

Ipſe ſublimavit Sedem, in qua etiam quieſcere, & præſentem vitam finire dignatus eſt. Greg.*I. Ep.*6.37. Innoc.I. Ep. 21. P. Nic.*I. Ep.*9. *p.*509. Grat. *cauſ.*8.*q.*1. cap. 1.

He advanced that See, wherein he vouchſafed both to ſet up his reſt, and alſo to end this preſent life.

Bell.2.12. § At verò —— Petrum Apoſtolum ſucceſſiſſe in Epiſcopatu Antiocheno alicui ex diſcipulis, quod eſt planè intolerandum. Bell.2.6.

5. To avoid all which difficulties in the caſe, and perplexities in ſtory, it is reaſonable to underſtand thoſe of the Ancients, who call Peter Biſhop of Rome, and Rome the place, the Chair, the See of Peter, as meaning that he was Biſhop or Superintendent of that Church, in a large ſenſe; becauſe he did found the Church by converting men to the Chriſtian Faith; becauſe he did erect the Chair by ordaining the firſt Biſhops; becauſe he did in virtue both of his Apoſtolical Office, and his ſpecial Parental relation to that Church, maintain a particular inſpection over it, when he was there: which notion is not new, for of old Ruffinus affirmeth that he had it, not from his own invention, but from Tradition of others; Some (ſaith he) inquire how, ſeeing Linus and Cletus were Biſhops in the City of Rome before Clement, Clement himſelf writing to James, could ſay that the See was delivered to him by Peter: whereof this reaſon has been given us, viz. that Linus and Cletus were indeed Biſhops of Rome before Clement, but Peter being yet living, viz. that they might take the Epiſcopal charge, but he fulfill'd the Office of the Apoſtleſhip.

Quidam enim requirunt quo modo, cum Linus & Cletus in urbe Roma ante Clementem hunc fuerint Epiſcopi, ipſe Clemens ad Jacobum ſcribens, ſibi dicat à Petro docendi Cathedram traditam, cujus rei hanc accepimus eſſe rationem, quòd Linus & Cletus fuerunt quidem ante Clementem Epiſcopi in urbe Roma, ſed ſuperſtite Petro; videlicet ut illi Epiſcopatûs curam gererent, ipſe verò Apoſtolatûs impleret Officium. Ruffin. in præf. ad Clem. Recogn.

6. This notion may be confirmed by divers obſervations.

It is obſervable that the moſt ancient Writers, living neareſt the fountains of Tradition, do not expreſly ſtyle Saint Peter Biſhop of Rome, but only ſay, that he did found that Church, inſtituting and ordaining Biſhops there; as the other Apoſtles did in the Churches which they ſetled; ſo that the Biſhops there in a large ſenſe did ſucceed him, and deriving their power from his ordination, and ſupplying his room in Conſt. Apoſt. 7. 46. Iren.3. 3. Tertull.

the Fundantes igitur, & inſtruentes beati Apoſtoli Eccleſiam Lino Epiſcopatum adminiſtrandæ Eccleſiæ tradiderunt. Iren. 3. 3.

The Bleſſed Apoſtles therefore founding and inſtructing the Church, delivered the Epiſcopal power of ordering and governing the Church to Linus.

the inſtruction and governance of that great Church. Yea their words if we well mark them, do exclude the Apoſtles from the Epiſcopacy. Which words the later Writers (who did not foreſee the conſequence, nor what an exorbitant ſuperſtructure would be raiſed on that ſlender bottom, and who were willing to comply with the Roman Biſhops, affecting by all means to reckon Saint Peter for their predeceſſor) did eaſily catch, and not well diſtinguiſhing did call him Biſhop, and Saint Paul alſo, ſo making two Heads of one Church.

7. It is alſo obſervable, that in the recenſions of the Roman Biſhops, ſometimes the Apoſtles are reckoned in, ſometimes excluded.

Euſeb. 3, 4, 13, 15.
Iren. 3. 3.

So Euſebius calleth Clemens the third Biſhop of Rome, yet before him he reckoneth Linus and Anacletus.

Πέμπτην ἀπὸ Πέτρου καὶ Παύλου κατάγων διαδοχήν. Euſeb 4. 1.

And of Alexander he ſaith, that he deduced his Succeſſion in the fifth place from Peter and Paul, that is, excluding the Apoſtles.

Iren. 1. 28. 3. 3, 4.
Euſeb. 4. 10.

And Hyginus is thus accounted ſometime the eighth, ſometime the ninth Biſhop of Rome.

The ſame difference in reckoning may be obſerved in other Churches; for inſtance, although Saint Peter is called no leſs Biſhop of Antioch than of Rome, by the Ancients, yet Euſebius ſaith, that Evodius was firſt Biſhop of Antioch; and another bids the Antiocheans remember Evodius, who was firſt entruſted with the Preſidency over them by the Apoſtles.

Ἀντιοχέων ἐκκλησίας πρῶτος ἐπίσκοπος Εὔοδιος ἐχρημάτισε. Euſeb. Chron. p. 7. Hiſt. 3. 22.

Μνημονεύετε Εὐοδίου, ὃς πρῶτον ἐνεχειρίσθη ὑπὸ τῶν Ἀποστόλων ὑμετέραν προστασίαν. Pſeud. Ignat. ad Ant.

Euſeb. counteth Annianus the firſt Biſhop of Alexandria.

Other inſtances may be ſeen in the Notes of Cotelerius upon the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions, where he maketh this general Obſervation.

Celebris mos eſt Apoſtolos pro poteſtate eorum ordinaria vel extraordinaria, Epiſcopali vel Apoſtolica, Indiculis antiſtitum præfigere, aut ex iis eximere. Cotel. Not. p. 299.

'Tis an uſual cuſtom with the Apoſtles according to their Power ordinary or extraordinary, Epiſcopal or Apoſtolical, to prefix, &c. but it was needleſs to ſuppoſe theſe two Powers, when one was ſufficient, it virtually containing the other.

This is an Argument that the Ancients were not aſſured in opinion; that the Apoſtles were Biſhops; or that they did not eſteem them Biſhops in the ſame notion with others.

8. It is obſervable, that divers Churches did take denomination from the Apoſtles, and were called Apoſtolical Thrones, or Chairs, not becauſe the Apoſtles themſelves did ſit Biſhops there, but becauſe they did exerciſe their Apoſtleſhip, in teaching; and in conſtituting Biſhops there, who (as Tertullian ſaith) did propagate the Apoſtolical ſeed.

Apoſtolicæ Eccleſiæ. Tert. de Præſcr. 32.
Ἀποστολικοὶ θρόνοι. Soz. 1. 17.

2 Tim. 1. 6.

In Canonicis autem Scripturis Eccleſiarum Catholicarum quamplurium auctoritatem ſequatur, inter quas ſanè illæ ſunt, quæ Apoſtolicas ſedes habere, & Epiſtolas accipere meruerunt. Aug. de doctr. Ch. 2. 8.

Let him follow the Authority of thoſe many Catholick Churches in the Canonical Scriptures, among which ſurely are thoſe which had the honour to have Apoſtolical Sees, and to receive Epiſtles from the Apoſtles.

Proinde utique & cæteræ exhibent quos ab Apoſtolis in Epiſcopatum conſtitutos Apoſtolici ſeminis traduces habent. Tertull. de Præſcr. 32.

So was Epheſus eſteemed, becauſe Saint Paul did found it, and ordained Timothy there; and becauſe Saint John did govern and appoint Biſhops there.

Sed & quæ eſt Epheſi Eccleſia à Paulo quidem fundata, Johanne autem permanente apud eos uſque ad Trajani tempora, &c. Iren. 3. 3.
And alſo the Church of Epheſus which was founded by Saint Paul, Saint John continuing with them till the time of Trajan, &c.
Ordo Epiſcoporum ad originem recenſus in Johannem ſtabit auctorem. Tertull. in Marc.4.5.
Τῆς δὲ Ἐφέσου Τιμόθεος μὲν ὑπὸ Παύλου, Ἰωάννης δὲ ὑπ' ἐμοῦ Ἰωάννου. Apoſt. Conſt. 7. 46.

So was Smyrna accounted, becauſe Polycarpus was ſettled there by the Apoſtles, or by Saint John.

Ab Apoſtolis in ea quæ eſt Smyrnis Eccleſia conſtitutus Epiſcopus. Iren.3.3. Smyrnæorum Eccleſia habens Polycarpum ab Johanne conlocatum. Tertull. *de Præſcr.*32. Euſeb.3.36.
Τῆς κατὰ Σμύρναν Ἐκκλησίας πρὸς τῶν αὐτοπτῶν, καὶ ὑπηρετῶν τοῦ Κυρίου τὴν ἐπισκοπὴν ἐγκεχειρισμένος. Euſeb.3.36.

So Cyril, Biſhop of Jeruſalem, had a controverſy about metropolitical Rights with Acacius Biſhop of Cæſarea, as preſiding in an Apoſtolical See.

Περὶ μητροπολιτικῶν δικαίων διεφέρετο πρὸς Ἀκάκιον τὸν Καισαρείας, ὡς Ἀποστολικοῦ θρόνου ἡγούμενος. Sozom.4.25.

So Alexandria was deemed, becauſe Saint Mark was ſuppoſed by the appointment of Saint Peter to ſit there.

So were Corinth, Theſſalonica, Philippi called by Tertullian, becauſe Saint Paul did found them, and furniſh them with Paſtors; in which reſpect peculiarly the Biſhops of thoſe places were called Succeſſors of the Apoſtles.

Tertull. *de Præſcr.*36.

So Conſtantinople did aſſume the title of an Apoſtolical Church, probably becauſe, according to tradition, St. Andrew did found that Church, although Pope Leo I. would not allow it that appellation.

Ἀποστολικοῦ τούτου θρόνου καταφρονεῖς.

Syn. Chalc. *Act.*10. *p.*379. *p.*284. Thou deſpiſeſt this Apoſtolical Throne.——Ἐφ' ᾧ καὶ πρῶτον ἐπίσκοπον τὸν θεῖον Στάχυν καταστήσας, ἐν ἐκκλησίᾳ ἣν ἐκεῖσε πρῶτος αὐτὸς ἐπήξατο. Niceph.2.9.
Foraſmuch as having appointed holy Stachys the firſt Biſhop, in the Church which he firſt ſettled there.
Non dedignetur regiam civitatem, quam Apoſtolicam non poteſt facere ſedem—— P. Leo I. Ep. 54.
Let him not diſdain the Royal City, which he cannot make an Apoſtolick See.

Upon the ſame account might Rome at firſt be called an Apoſtolical See; although afterward the Roman Biſhops did rather pretend to that denomination, upon account of Saint Peter being Biſhop there; and the like may be ſaid of Antioch.

Memento quia Apoſtolicam ſedem Regis —— Greg. M. Ep.4 37. Remember you rule an Apoſtolick See.

9. It is obſervable, that the Author of the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions, reciting the firſt Biſhops conſtituted in ſeveral Churches, doth not reckon any of the Apoſtles; particularly not Peter, or Paul, or John.

*Conſt. Apoſt.*7.46.

10. Again, any Apoſtle whereever he did recide by virtue of his Apoſtolical Office, without any other deſignation or aſſumption of a more ſpecial Power, was qualified to preſide there, exerciſing a Superintendency comprehenſive of all Epiſcopal functions; ſo that it was needleſs, that he ſhould take upon himſelf the character or ſtyle of a Biſhop.

This (beſide the tenour of ancient Doctrine) doth appear from the demeanour of Saint John, who never was reckoned Biſhop of Epheſus; nor could be, without diſplacing Timothy, who by Saint Paul was conſtituted Biſhop there, or ſucceeding in his room; yet he abiding at Epheſus, did Ἀπὸ τοῦ ἁγίου Τιμοθέου μέχρι νῦν κζ' ἐπίσκοποι ἐγένοντο· πάντες ἐν Ἐφέσῳ χειροτονήθησαν. Syn. Chal. *Act.*11. 2 Tim.1.6.

From holy Timothy till now there have been ſeven and twenty Biſhops, and all ordained at Epheſus.
Johanne autem permanente apud eos, &c. Iren.3.3.

did their diſcharge the Office of a Metropolitan; giverning the Churches, and in the adjacent Churches here conſtituting Biſhops, there forming whole Churches, otherwhere allotting to the Clergy Perſons deſigned by the Spirit.

Τὰς αὐτόθι διέπειν Ἐκκλησίας —— ὅπου μὲν ἐπισκόπους καταστήσων· ὅπου δὲ ὅλας Ἐκκλησίας ἁρμόσων. ὅπου δὲ κλήρῳ ἕνα γέ τινα κληρώσων τῶν ὑπὸ τοῦ πνεύματος σημαινομένων. Euſeb. hiſt. 3.23.

Such Functions might Saint Peter execute in the parts of Rome, or Antioch, without being a Biſhop; and as the Biſhops of Aſia did (ſaith Tertullian) refer their original to Saint John, ſo might the Biſhops of Italy, upon the like ground, refer their original to Saint Peter.

Ordo Epiſcoporum ad originem recenſus in Joannem ſtabit auctorem. Tertull. in Marc. 4.5.

It is obſervable, that whereas Saint Peter is affirmed to have been Biſhop of Antioch ſeven years before his acceſs to Rome, that is within the compaſs of Saint Luke's Story; yet he paſſeth over a matter of ſo great moment; as St. Hierom obſerveth.

An. Ch. 39. Baron, §. 8. Act. 9. 32. Act. 11. 20.

Denique primum Epiſcopum Antiochenæ Eccleſiæ Petrum fuiſſe accepimus, & Romam exinde translatum, quod Lucas penitus omiſit Hier. in Gal. 2.

Laſtly, we have received by tradition that Peter was the firſt Biſhop of Antioch, and from thence tranſlated to Rome: which Luke has altogether omitted.

I cannot grant, that if Saint Luke had thought Peter Sovereign of the Church, and his Epiſcopacy of a place a matter of ſuch conſequence, he would have ſlipped it over, being ſo obvious a thing, and coming in the way of his Story.

He therefore I conceive was no Biſhop of Antioch, although a Biſhop at Antioch.

'Tis the diſtinction of a Pope. Rex Etruriæ, & Rex in Etruria.

11. If in objection to ſome of theſe diſcourſes, it be alledged, that Saint James our Lord's near Kinſman, although he was an Apoſtle, was made Biſhop of Jeruſalem; and that for the like reaſon Saint Peter might aſſume the Biſhoprick of Rome;

I anſwer.

1. It is not certain, that Saint James the Biſhop of Jeruſalem was an Apoſtle; (meaning an Apoſtle of the primary rank,) for Euſebius (the greateſt Antiquary of old times) doth reckon him one of the 70 Diſciples.

Εἷς δὲ καὶ οὗτος τῶν φερομένων τοῦ σωτῆρος μαθητῶν, ἀλλὰ μὴν καὶ ἀδελφῶν ἦν. Euſeb. 1. 12.

So doth the Author of the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions in divers places ſuppoſe.

Apoſt. Conſt. 6. 12. 6. 14. 2. 53. 7. 46, &c. Ἡμεῖς οἱ δώδεκα ἅμα τῷ Ἰακώβῳ —— 6. 12. we the twelve Apoſtles together with James.

Hegeſippus (that moſt ancient Hiſtorian) was of the ſame mind, who ſaith, that there were many of this name, and that this James did undertake the Church with the Apoſtles.

Διαδέχεται δὲ τὴν Ἐκκλησίαν μετὰ τῶν Ἀποστόλων ὁ ἀδελφὸς τοῦ Κυρίου Ἰάκωβος. Euſeb. 2. 23.

Of the ſame opinion was Epiphanius, who ſaith, that Saint James was the Son of Joſeph by another Wife.

Epiph. Hær. 78.

The whole Greek Church doth ſuppoſe the ſame, keeping three diſtinct ſolemnities for him, and the two Apoſtles of the ſame name.

Gregory Nyſſene, St. Hierom, and divers other ancient Writers do concur herein, whom we may ſee alledged by Grotius, Dr. Hammond, (who themſelves did embrace the ſame opinion) Valeſius, Blondel, &c.

Grot. in Jac. 1. 1.
Hamm. diſſert. Ignat. 4. 3.
Valeſ. in Euſeb. 1. 12.
Blondel. in Epiſt. Clem. ad Jacob.

Salmaſius (after his confident manner) ſaith it is certain, that he was not one of the twelve; I may at leaſt ſay, it is not certain that he was, and Certum eſt non fuiſſe unum ex duodecim. Wal. Meſſ. p. 20.

and conſequently the objection is grounded on an uncertainty.

2. Granting that Saint James was one of the Apoſtles (as ſome of the Ancients ſeem to think, calling him an Apoſtle; and as divers modern Divines conceive, grounding chiefly upon theſe words of Saint Paul, But other of the Apoſtles ſaw I none, ſave James the Lord's Brother, and taking Apoſtles there in the ſtricteſt ſenſe) I anſwer, Hieroſolymitanam, quam primus Apoſtolus Jacobus Epiſcopatu ſuo rexit. Aug. c. Creſc. 2. 37.

The Church of Jeruſalem, which James the Apoſtle firſt governed by his Epiſcopal power.

Gal. 1. 19.

That the caſe was peculiar, and there doth appear a ſpecial reaſon, why one of the Apoſtles ſhould be deſigned to make a conſtant reſidence at Jeruſalem, and conſequently to preſide there like a Biſhop. For Jeruſalem was the Metropolis, the Fountain, the Centre of the Chriſtian Religion, where it had birth, where was greateſt matter and occaſion of propagating the Goſpel, moſt people diſpoſed to embrace it reſorting thither; where the Church was very numerous, conſiſting, as Saint Luke (or Saint James in him) doth intimate, of divers myriads Act. 21. 20.
of believing Jews; whence it might ſeem expedient, that a perſon of greateſt Authority ſhould be fixed there for the confirming and improving that Church, together with the propagation of Religion among the people, which reſorted thither; the which might induce the Apoſtles to ſettle Saint James there, both for diſcharging the Office of an Apoſtle, and the ſupplying the room of a Biſhop there.

According to him (ſaith Euſebius) The Epiſcopal Throne was committed by the Apoſtles; or our Lord (ſaith Epiphanius) did entruſt him with his own Throne.

ᾧ πρὸς τῶν Ἀποστόλων ὁ τῆς Ἐπισκοπῆς ἐγκεχείριστο θρόνος. Euſeb. 2. 23.

ᾧ πεπίστευκε Κύριος τὸν θρόνον αὐτοῦ Epiph. Hær. 78.

But there was no need of fixing an Apoſtle at other places; nor doth it appear that any was ſo fixed; eſpecially Saint Peter was uncapable of ſuch an employment, requiring ſettlement and conſtant attendance, who beſide his general Apoſtleſhip, had a peculiar Apoſtleſhip of the diſperſed Jews committed to him; who therefore was much engaged in travel for propagation of the Faith, and edifying his Converts every where.

3. The greater conſent of the moſt ancient Writers making Saint James not to have been one of the twelve Apoſtles, it is thence accountable, why (as we before noted) Saint James was called by ſome ancient Writers, the Biſhop of Biſhops, the Prince of Biſhops, &c. becauſe he was the firſt Biſhop, of the firſt See, the Mother Church; the Apoſtles being excluded from the compariſon.

Upon theſe conſiderations we have great reaſon to refuſe the aſſertion or ſcandal caſt on Saint Peter, that he took on him to be Biſhop of Rome, in a ſtrict ſenſe, as it is underſtood in this controverſy.

SUPPOSITION V.

A farther Aſſertion is this, ſuperſtructed by conſequence on the former, That the Biſhops of Rome, (according to God's Inſtitution, and by original Right derived thence) ſhould have an Univerſal Supremacy and Juriſdiction, (containing the privileges and prerogatives formerly deſcribed) over the Chriſtian Church.

THIS Aſſertion to be very uncertain, yea to be moſt falſe, I ſhall by divers conſiderations evince.

1. If any of the former Suppoſitions be uncertain, or falſe, this Aſſertion, ſtanding on thoſe legs, muſt partake of thoſe defects, and anſwerably be dubious, or falſe. If either Peter was not Monarch of the Apoſtles, or if his privileges were not ſucceſſive, or if he were not properly Biſhop of Rome at his deceaſe, then farewel the Romiſh claim; if any of thoſe things be dubious, it doth totter; if any of them doth prove falſe, then down it falleth.

But that each of them is falſe, hath I conceive been ſufficiently declared; that all of them are uncertain, hath at leaſt been made evident.

The Structure therefore cannot be firm, which relieth on ſuch Props.

2. Even admitting all thoſe Suppoſitions, the inference from them is not aſſuredly valid. For Saint Peter might have an Univerſal Juriſdiction, he might derive it by Succeſſion, he might be Biſhop of Rome; yet no ſuch Authority might hence accrue to the Roman Biſhop, his Succeſſor in that See.

For that Univerſal Juriſdiction might be derived into another Chanel; and the Biſhop of Rome might in other reſpects be Succeſſor to him, without being ſo in this.

As for inſtance, in the Roman Empire, before any Rule of Succeſſion was eſtabliſhed therein, the Emperor was Sovereign Governor, and he might die Conſul of Rome, having aſſumed that place to himſelf; yet when he died, the Supreme Authority did not lapſe into the hands of the Conſul, who ſucceeded him, but into the hands of the Senate, and People: his Conſular Authority only going to his Succeſſor in that Office. So might Saint Peter's Univerſal Power be transferred unto the Eccleſiaſtical College of Biſhops, and of the Church; his Epiſcopal inferior Authority over the ſingular ϖαροικία, or Province of Rome, being tranſmitted to his Followers in that Chair.

3. That in truth it was thus, and that all the Authority of Saint Peter, and of all other Apoſtles, was devolved to the Church, and to the repreſentative Body thereof, the Fathers did ſuppoſe; affirming the Church to have received from our Lord a Sovereign Power.

This (ſaith St. Cyprian) is that One Church, which holdeth and poſſeſſeth all the power of its Spouſe and Lord, in this we preſide; for the honour and unity of this we fight —— ſaith he in his Epiſtle to Jubianus, wherein he doth impugn the proceedings ceedings of Pope Stephanus; the which Sentence St. Auſtin appropiateth to himſelf, ſpeaking it abſolutely, without citing St. Cyprian. To this Authority of the Church, St. Baſil would have all that confeſs the faith of Chriſt to ſubmit; To which end we exceedingly need your aſſiſtance, that they who confeſs the Apoſtolick faith, would renounce the Schiſms which they have deviſed, and ſubmit themſelves henceforth to the Authority of the Church.

Hæc eſt una quæ tenet & poſſidet omnem ſponſi ſui & Domini poteſtatem, in hac præſidemus, pro honore ejus & unitate pugnamus —— Cypr. Ep. 73.

Aug. de Bapt. c. Don. 4. 1.

Ἐφ' ἅπερ καὶ μάλιστα τῆς παρ' ὑμῶν χρῄζομεν βοηθείας, ὥστε τοὺς τὴν Ἀποστολικὴν ὁμολογοῦντας πίστιν, ἅπερ ἐπενόησαν, σχίσματα διαλύσαντας, ὑποταγῆναι τοῦ λοιποῦ τῇ αὐθεντίᾳ τῆς Ἐκκλησίας. Baſ. Epiſt. 69.

They (after the Holy Scripture, which ſaith, that each Biſhop hath a care of God's Church, and is obliged to feed the Church of God —— and is appointed to edify the body of Chriſt) do ſuppoſe the adminiſtration of the Eccleſiaſtical Affairs concerning the publick ſtate of the Church, the defence of the common Faith, the maintenance of Order, Peace and Unity jointly to belong unto the whole body of Paſtors; according to that of St. Cyprian to Pope Stephanus himſelf, Therefore, moſt dear brother, the body of Prieſts is copious, being joined together by the glue of mutual concord, and the bond of unity, that if any of our College ſhould attempt to make hereſy, and to tear or waſte the flock of Chriſt, the reſt may come to ſuccour; and like uſeful and merciful ſhepherds may recollect the ſheep into the flock. And again, Which thing it concerns us to look after and redreſs, moſt dear brother, who bearing in mind the divine clemency, and holding the ſcales of the Church government, &c.

1 Tim. 3. 5, 15.
Act. 20. 28.
Eph. 4. 12.

Collegium Sacerdotum. Cypr. Ep. 67. 52. ——
Ὑπὲρ πάσης Ἐπισκοπῆς τῆς ὑπὸ τὸν οὐρανόν. Apoſt. Conſt. 8. 10.

Idcirco enim, frater chariſſime, copioſum corpus eſt Sacerdotum, concordiæ mutuæ glutino atq; unitatis vinculo copulatum, ut ſiquis ex Collegio noſtro hæreſin facere, & gregem Chriſti lacerare & vaſtare tentaverit, ſubveniant cæteri, & quaſi Paſtores utiles & miſericordes oves Domini in gregem colligant. Cypr. Ep. 67.

Cui rei noſtrum eſt conſulere, & ſubvenire, frater chariſſime, qui divinam clementiam cogitantes, & gubernandæ Eccleſiæ libram tenentes, &c. Ibid.

So even the Roman Clergy did acknowledge, For we ought all of us to watch for the body of the whole Church, whoſe members are digeſted through ſeveral Provinces.

Like the Trinity, whoſe power is one and undivided, there is one Prieſthood among divers Biſhops.

Omnes enim nos decet pro corpore totius Eccleſiæ, cujus per varias quaſq; provincias membra digeſta ſunt, excubare. Cler. Rom. apud Cypr. Ep. 30.

Ad Trinitatis inſtar, cujus una eſt atq; individua poteſtas, unum eſſe per diverſos Antiſtites Sacerdotem. P. Symmachus ad Æonium Arelat.

So in the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions, the Apoſtles tell the Biſhops, that an univerſal Epiſcopacy is entruſted to them.

Εἰς ἐπιστηριγμὸν ὑμῶν, τῶν τὴν καθόλου Ἐπισκοπὴν πεπιστευμένων. Conſt. Apoſt. 6. 14.

So the Council of Carthage with St. Cyprian ---- Clear and manifeſt is the mind and meaning of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, ſending his Apoſtles, and affording to them alone the power given him of the Father; in whoſe room we ſucceeded, governing the Church of God with the ſame power.

Chriſt our Lord and our God going to the Father, commended his Spouſe to us.

Manifeſta eſt ſententia Domini noſtri Jeſu Chriſti Apoſtolos ſuos mittentis, & ipſis ſolis poteſtatem à Petro ſibi datam permittentis, quibus nos ſucceſſimus, eâdem poteſtate Eccleſiam Domini gubernantes. Conc. Carth. apud Cypr. p. 405.]

Chriſtus Dominus & Deus noſter ad Patrem proficiſcens, ſponſam ſuam nobis commendavit —— Ibid. p. 404.

A very ancient Inſtance of which adminiſtration is the proceeding againſt Paulus Samoſatenus; when the Paſtors of the Churches, ſome from one place, ſome from another, did aſſemble together againſt him as a peſt of Chriſt's flock, all of them haſtning to Antioch; where they depoſed, exterminated and deprived him of communion, warning the whole Church to reject and diſavow him.

Οἱ λοιποὶ τῶν Ἐκκλησιῶν ποιμένες ἄλλοι ἄλλοθεν ὡς ἐπὶ λυμεῶνα τῆς τοῦ Χριστοῦ ποίμνης συνίεσαν, οἱ πάντες ἐπὶ τὴν Ἀντιόχειαν σπεύσαντες. Euſeb 7. 27.

Seeing the Paſtoral charge is common to us all, who bear the Epiſcopal Office, although thou ſitteſt in a higher and more eminent place.

Cùm communis ſit omnibus nobis, qui fungimur Epiſcopatûs officio, quamvis ipſe in eo præmineas celſiore faſtigio, ſpecula paſtoralis —— Aug. ad Bonif. contra duas Epiſt. Pelag. 1. 1.

Therefore for this cauſe the Holy Church is committed to you and to us, that we may labour for all, and not be ſlack in yielding help and aſſiſtance to all.

Hujus ergo rei gratiâ vobis & nobis ſancta commiſſa eſt Eccleſia, ut pro omnibus laboremus, & cunctis opem ferre non negligamus—— P. Joh. 1. Ep. 1. (ad Zachar.) apud Bin. Tom. 3. *p.*812.

Hence St. Chryſoſtom ſaid of Euſtathius his Biſhop; For he was well inſtructed and taught by the grace of the Holy Spirit, that a Preſident or Biſhop of a Church ought not to take care of that Church alone, wherewith he is intruſted by the Holy Ghoſt, but alſo of the whole Church diſperſed throughout the world.

Καὶ γὰρ ἦν πεπαιδευμένος καλῶς παρὰ τῆς τοῦ πνεύματος χάριτος, ὅτι τῆς Ἐκκλησίας προεστῶτα οὐκ ἐκείνης μόνης κήδεσθαι δεῖ τῆς παρὰ τοῦ πνεύματος ἐγχειρισθείσης αὐτῷ, ἀλλὰ καὶ πάσης κατὰ τὴν οἰκουμένην κειμένης. Chryſ. Tom. 5. Or. 93.

They conſequently did repute Schiſm, or Eccleſiaſtical Rebellion, to conſiſt in a departure from the conſent of the body of the Prieſthood, as St. Cyprian in divers places doth expreſs it, in his Epiſtles to Pope Stephen, and others.

A corpore noſtri, & Sacerdotii conſenſione diſceſſerit—— Cypr. *Ep.*67.

Qui ſe ab Eccleſiæ vinculo, atque à Sacerdotum Collegio ſeparat. Cypr. Ep. 52.

They deem all Biſhops to partake of the Apoſtolical Authority, according to that of St. Baſil to St. Ambroſe; the Lord himſelf hath tranſlated thee from the Judges of the Earth unto the Prelacy of the Apoſtles.

Αὐτός σε ὁ Κύριος ἀπὸ τῶν κριτῶν τῆς γῆς ἐπὶ τὴν προεδρίαν τῶν Ἀποστόλων μετέθηκεν Baſil. *Ep.*56.

They took themſelves all to be Vicars of Chriſt, and Judges in his ſtead; according to that of St. Cyprian; For Hereſies are ſprung up, and Schiſms grown from no other ground nor root but this, becauſe God's Prieſt was not obeyed, nor was there one Prieſt or Biſhop for a time in the Church, nor a Judge thought on for a time to ſupply the room of Chriſt. Where that by Church is meant any particular Church, and by Prieſt a Biſhop of ſuch Church, any one not bewitched with prejudice by the tenour of St. Cyprian's diſcourſe will eaſily diſcern.

Neque enim aliunde Hæreſes obortæ ſunt, aut nata ſunt Schiſmata, quàm indè quòd Sacerdoti Dei non obtemperetur, nec unus in Eccleſia ad tempus Sacerdos, & ad tempus Judex vice Chriſti cogitatur. Cypr. *Ep.*55.

Epiſcopus perſonam habet Chriſti & Vicarius Domini eſt. Ambr. in 1 Cor. 11. The Biſhop ſuſtains the Perſon of Chriſt, and is the Vicar of our Lord.

They conceive that our Saviour did promiſe to Saint Peter the Keys in behalf of the Church, and as repreſenting it.

Cypr. Ep. 27.

They ſuppoſe the combination of Biſhops in peaceable conſent and mutual aid, to be the Rock on which the Church is built.

They alledge the Authority granted to Saint Peter as a ground of claim to the ſame in all Biſhops jointly, and in each Biſhop ſingly, according to his rata pars, or allotted proportion.

Which may eaſily be underſtood by the words of our Lord, when he ſays to bleſſed Peter, whoſe place the Biſhops ſupply, Whatſoever, &c.

Quod ex verbis Domini facilè intelligi poteſt, quibus P. Petro, cujus vicem Epiſcopi gerunt, ait Quodcunque, &c. Capit. Caroli M. *lib.*5 *cap.*163.

I have the ſword of Conſtantine in my hands, you of Peter, ſaid our great King Edgar.

Ego Conſtantini, vos Petri gladium habetis in manibus.

They do therefore in this regard take themſelves all to be Succeſſors of Saint Peter, that his power is derived to them all, and that the whole Epiſcopal Order is the Chair by the Lord's voice founded on Saint Peter; thus St. Cyprian in divers places (before touched) diſcourſeth; and thus Firmilian from the Keys granted to Saint Peter inferreth, diſputing againſt the Roman Biſhop; Therefore (ſaith he) the power of remitting ſins is given to the Apoſtles, and to the Churches, which they being ſent from Chriſt did conſtitute, and to the Biſhops, which do ſucceed them by vicarious ordination.

Poteſtas ergò remittendorum peccatorum Apoſtolis data eſt, & Eccleſiis quas illi à Chriſto miſſi conſtituerunt, & Epiſcopis qui eis ordinatione vicariâ ſuccedunt. Firmil. apud Cypr. *Ep.*75.

4. The Biſhops of any other Churches founded by the Apoſtles, in the Fathers ſtyle are Succeſſors of the Apoſtles, in the ſame ſenſe, and to the ſame intent as the Biſhop of Rome is by them accounted Succeſſor of Saint Peter; the Apoſtolical power, which in extent was univerſal, being in ſome ſenſe, in reference to them, not quite extinct, but tranſmitted by ſucceſſion; yet the Biſhops of Apoſtolical Churches did never claim, nor allowedly exerciſe Apoſtolical Juriſdiction, beyond their own precincts; according to thoſe words of St. Hierom, Tell me, what doth Paleſtine belong to the Biſhop of Alexandria?

Reſponde mihi, ad Alexandrinum Epiſcopum Palæſtina quid pertinet? Hier. ad Pammach. *Ep.*61.15.

This ſheweth the inconſequence of their diſcourſe; for in like manner the Pope might be Succeſſor to Saint Peter, and Saint Peter's univerſal power might be ſucceſſive, yet the Pope have no ſingular claim thereto, beyond the bounds of his particular Church.

5. So again, for inſtance, Saint James (whom the Roman Church, in her Liturgies, doth avow for an Apoſtle,) was Biſhop of Jeruſalem more unqueſtionably, than Saint Peter was Biſhop of Rome; Jeruſalem alſo was the root, and the mother of all Churches, (as the Fathers of the Second General Synod, in their Letter to Pope Damaſus himſelf, and the Occidental Biſhops did call it, forgetting the ſingular pretence of Rome to that Title.)

Τῆς δὲ μητρὸς ἁπασῶν τῶν Ἐκκλησιῶν, τῆς ἐν Ἱεροσολύμοις. Theodor. 5.9.
Mater Chriſtiani nominis. Imper. Juſt. ad P. Hormiſd. apud Bin. Tom. 3. p. 794.
The mother of the Chriſtian name.

Yet the Biſhops of Jeruſalem, Succeſſors of Saint James, did not thence claim I know not what kind of extenſive Juriſdiction; yea notwithſtanding their ſucceſſion they did not ſo much as obtain a metropolitical Authority in Paleſtine, which did belong to Cæſarea (having been aſſigned thereto, in conformity to the Civil Government) and was by ſpecial proviſion reſerved thereto in the Synod of Nice; whence St. Jerom did not ſtick to affirm, that the Biſhop of Jeruſalem was ſubject to the Biſhop of Cæſarea; for ſpeaking to John Biſhop of Jeruſalem, who for compurgation of himſelf from errors imputed to him had appealed to Theophilus Biſhop of Alexandria, he ſaith, Thou hadſt rather cauſe moleſtation to ears poſſeſſed, than render honour to thy Metropolitan, that is, to the Biſhop of Cæſarea.

Τῇ μητροπόλει σωζομένου τοῦ οἰκείου ἀξιώματος. Conc. Nic. Can. 7.
Ibi decernitur, ut Palæſtinæ metropolis Cæſarea ſit. Hier. *Ep.*61.15.
'Tis there decreed that Cæſarea ſhould be the metropolis of Paleſtine.

Maluiſti occupatis auribus moleſtias facere, quam debitum metropolitano tuo honorem reddere. Hier. ad Pammach. Ep. 61. 15.

By which inſtance we may diſcern, what little conſideration ſometimes was had of perſonal or topical ſucceſſion to the Apoſtles in determining the extent of Juriſdiction, and why ſhould the Roman Biſhop upon that ſcore pretend more validity than others?

Hier. ad Galat. 2. P. Pelag. II. Ep. 1.

6. Saint Peter probably e'er that he came at Rome did found divers other Churches, whereof he was paramount Biſhop, or did retain a ſpecial ſuperintendency over them; particularly Antioch was anciently called his See, and he is acknowledged to have ſat there ſeven years, before he was Biſhop of Rome.

——θρόνον τοῦ Ἀντιοχέων μεγαλοπόλεως. τοῦ ἁγίου Πέτρου. Syn. Chalced. Act. 7. p. 264.

Why therefore may not the Biſhop of Antioch pretend to ſucceed Saint Peter in his univerſal Paſtorſhip as well as his younger brother of Rome? why ſhould Evodius ordained by Saint Peter at Antioch, yield to Clemens afterward by him ordained at Rome?

Act. 11. 26.

Antioch was the firſt-born of Gentile Churches, where the name of Chriſtians was firſt heard; Antioch was (as the Conſtantinopolitan Fathers called it) the moſt ancient and truly Apoſtolical Church.

Πρεσβυτάτη καὶ ὄντως Ἀποστολικὴ Ἐκκλησία. Theod. 5. 9.

Ubi Imperator, ibi Roma.

Where the Emperor is, there is Rome.

Antioch by virtue of Saint Peter's ſitting there, or peculiar relation to it, was (according to their own conceits) the principal See.

Why therefore ſhould Saint Peter be ſo unkind to it, as not only to relinquiſh it, but to debaſe it; not only transferring his See from it, but deveſting it of the privilege, which it had got?

Why ſhould he prefer before it the City of Rome, the myſtical Babylon, the mother of abominations of the earth, the Throne of Satan's Empire, the place which did then moſt perſecute the Chriſtian Faith; and was drunk with the blood of the Saints?

Apo. 17. 5. Apo. 17. 6.

Sic & Babylon apud Joannem noſtrum Romanæ Urbis figura eſt, proinde & magnæ & regno ſuperbæ, & ſanctorum debellatricis. Tertull. adv. Jud. cap. 9.

So alſo Babylon in our Saint John is a type of the City of Rome, and therefore of a great, royal, and proud City, and a ſubduer of the Saints.

Bell. 2. 12.

7. The ground of this preference was, ſay they, Saint Peter's Will; and they have reaſon to ſay ſo, for otherwiſe if Saint Peter had died inteſtate, the Elder Son of Antioch would have had the beſt right to all his goods and dignities.

Potuiſſet Petrus nullam ſedem particularem ſibi unquam eligere, ſicut fecit primus quinq; annis—Ibid. Peter might have choſen to himſelf no particular City, as he did the firſt five years.

But how doth that Will appear? in what Tables was it written? in what Regiſters is it extant? in whoſe preſence did he nuncupate it? it is no where to be ſeen or heard of.

Neither do they otherwiſe know of it, than by reaſoning it out; and in effect they ſay only that it was fit he ſhould will it, but they may be miſtaken in their divinations; and perhaps notwithſtanding them Saint Peter might Will as well to his former See of Antioch, as to his latter of Rome.

Jubente Domino, 2. 1.

Deus ipſe juſſit Romæ figi Apoſtolicam Petri ſedem 4. 4.

8. Indeed Bellarmine ſometimes poſitively and briskly enough doth affirm, that God did command Saint Peter to fix his See at Rome; but his proofs of it are ſo ridiculouſly fond and weak, that I grudge the trouble of reciting them; and he himſelf ſufficiently confuteth them, by ſaying otherwhere, It is not unprobable, that our Lord gave an expreſs command, that Peter ſhould ſo fix his See at Rome, that the Biſhop of Rome ſhould abſolutely ſucceed him.

Non eſt improbabile Dominum etiam aperte juſſiſſe, ut ſedem ſuam Petrus ità figeret Romæ, ut Romanus Epiſcopus abſolutè ei ſuccederet. Bell. 2. 12. § Et quoniam.

He ſaith it is not improbable; if it be no more than ſo, it is uncertain; it may be a mere conjecture or a dream.

It is much more not-unprobable that if God had commanded it, there would have been ſome aſſurance of a command ſo very important.

9. Antioch hath at leaſt a fair plea for a ſhare in Saint Peter's Prerogatives; for it did ever hold the repute of an Apoſtolical Church, and upon that ſcore ſome deference was paid to it; why ſo, if Saint Peter did carry his See with all its Prerogatives to another place? But if he carried with him only part of his Prerogative, leaving ſome part behind at Antioch, how much then I pray did he leave there? why did he divide unequally, or leave leſs than half? if perchance he did leave half, the Biſhop of Antioch is equal to him of Rome.

10. Other perſons alſo may be found, who according to equal judgment might have a better title to the ſucceſſion of Peter in his Univerſal Authority than the Pope; having a nearer relation to him than he, (although his Succeſſor in one charge) or upon other equitable grounds.

For inſtance, Saint John, or any other Apoſtle, who did ſurvive Saint Peter; for if Saint Peter was the Father of Chriſtians, (which Title yet our Saviour forbiddeth any one to aſſume) Saint John might well claim to be his eldeſt Son; and it had been a very hard caſe for him to have been poſtponed in the ſucceſſion; it had been a derogation to our Lord's own choice, a neglect of his ſpecial affection, a diſparagement of the Apoſtolical Office for him to be ſubjected to any other; neither could any other pretend to the like gifts for management of that great charge.

11. The Biſhop of Jeruſalem might with much reaſon have put in his claim thereto, as being Succeſſor of our Lord himſelf, who unqueſtionably was the High-prieſt of our Profeſſion, and Archbiſhop of all our Souls; whoſe See was the Mother of all Churches; wherein Saint Peter himſelf did at firſt reſide, exerciſing his Vicarſhip: If our Lord, upon ſpecial accounts out of courſe had put the Sovereignty into Saint Peter's hands, yet after his deceaſe it might be fit, that it ſhould return into its proper chanel.

This may ſeem to have been the judgment of the times, when the Author of the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions did write, who reporteth the Apoſtles to have ordered Prayers to be made firſt for James, then for Clement, then for Evodius.

12. Equity would rather have required, that one ſhould by common conſent and election of the whole Church be placed in Saint Peter's room, than that the Biſhop of Rome, by election of a few Perſons there, ſhould ſucceed into it.

As the whole body of Paſtors was highly concerned in that Succeſſion, ſo it was reaſonable that all of them ſhould concur in deſignation of a Perſon thereto; it is not reaſonable, to ſuppoſe, that either God would inſtitute, or Saint Peter by will ſhould deviſe a courſe of proceeding in ſuch a caſe, ſo unequal and unſatisfactory.

If therefore the Church conſidering this equity of the caſe, together with the expediency of affairs in relation to its good, ſhould undertake to chuſe for its ſelf another Monarch, (the Biſhop of another See, who ſhould ſeem fitter for the place) to ſucceeed into the prerogatives of Saint Peter, that Perſon would have a fairer title to that Office than the Pope; for ſuch a Perſon would have a real title, grounded on ſome reaſon of the caſe; whenas the Pope's pretence doth only ſtand upon a poſitive Inſtitution, whereof he cannot exhibit any Certificate: This was the mind of a great man among themſelves; who ſaith, that if poſſibly, the Biſhop of Triers ſhould be choſen for Head of the Church. For the Church has free power to provide it ſelf a Head.

Quòd ſi per poſſibile, Trevirenſis eligeretur pro Capite Eccleſiæ. Habet enim Eccleſia poteſtatem liberam ſibi de Capite providendi —— Card. Cuſ. de Conc. Cath. 2. 13. ——

Bellarmine himſelf confeſſeth, that if Saint Peter (as he might have done if he had pleaſed) ſhould have choſen no particular See, as he did not for the firſt five years, then after Peter's death, neither the Biſhop of Rome, nor of Antioch had ſucceeded, but he whom the Church ſhould have choſen for it ſelf. Now if the Church upon that ſuppoſition would have had ſuch a right, it is not probable, that Saint Peter by his fact would have deprived it thereof or willingly done any thing in prejudice to it; there being apparently ſo much equity, that the Church ſhould have a ſtroke in deſignation of its Paſtor.

Nam potuiſſet Petrus nullam ſedem particularem ſibi unquam eligere, ſicut fecit primis quinque annis, & tunc moriente Petro, non Epiſcopus Romanus, neque Antiochenus ſucceſſiſſet, ſed is quem Eccleſia ſibi elegiſſet. Bell. 2. 12.

In ancient times there was not any ſmall Church, which had not a ſuffrage in the choice of its Paſtor; and was it fitting that all the Church ſhould have one impoſed on it without its conſent?

Nulla ratio ſinit, ut inter Epiſcopos habeantur, qui nec à Clericis ſunt electi, nec à plebibus expetiti, nec à comprovincialibus Epiſcopis cum Metropolitani judicio conſecrati. P. Leo I. Ep. 92.

No reaſon will admit, that they ſhould be eſteemed Biſhops, who are neither choſen by the Clergy, nor deſir'd by the People, nor conſecrated by the Biſhops of the ſame Province, with the conſent of the Metropolitan.)

Nullus invitis detur Epiſcopus: Cleri, plebis, & ordinis conſenſus requiratur. —— P. Celeſt. I. Ep. 2. Grat. diſt. 61. cap. 13.

Let there be no Biſhop impoſed on any againſt their wills: Let the conſent of the Clergy and People, and his own Order be required.

If we conſider the manner in ancient time of electing and conſtituting the Roman Biſhop, we may thence diſcern not only the improbability, but iniquity of this pretence: how was he then choſen? was it by a General Synod of Biſhops, or by Delegates from all parts of Chriſtendom, whereby the common intereſt in him might appear; and whereby the World might be ſatisfied that one was elected fit for that high Office? No; he was choſen, as uſually then other particular Biſhops were, by the Clergy and People of Rome; none of the World being conſcious of the proceeding, or bearing any ſhare therein.

Now, was it equal that ſuch a power of impoſing a Sovereign on all the grave Biſhops, and on all the good People of the Chriſtian world, ſhould be granted to one City?

Was it fitting, that ſuch a charge, importing advancement above all Paſtors, and being entruſted with the welfare of all Souls in Chriſtendom, ſhould be the reſult of an election liable to ſo many defects and corruptions? which aſſuredly often, if not almoſt conſtantly, would be procured by ambition, bribery or partiality, would be managed by popular faction and tumults.

It was obſerved generally of ſuch Elections by Nazienzen; that Prelacies were not rather by vertue than by naughtineſs; and that Epiſcopal Thrones did not rather belong to the more worthy, than to the more powerful.

Οὐ γὰρ ἐξ ἀρετῆς μᾶλλον ἢ κακουργίας ἡ προεδρεία, οὐδὲ τῶν ἀξιωτέρων μᾶλλον, ἢ δυνατωτέρων οἱ θρόνοι. Naz. Or. 20. p. 335.

And declaring his mind or wiſh that Elections of Biſhops ſhould reſt only or chiefly in the beſt men; not in the wealthieſt and mightieſt; or in the impetuouſneſs and unreaſonableneſs of the people, and among them in thoſe who are moſt eaſily bought and bribed; whereby he intimateth the common practice, and ſubjoineth; but now I can hardly avoid thinking, that the popular (or civil) governances are better ordered than ours, which are reputed to have divine grace attending them.

Ἐφ' οἷς ἔδει τὰς τοιαύτας προβολὰς κεῖσθαι μόνοις. ἢ ὅτι μάλιστα — ἀλλὰ μὴ τοῖς εὐπορωτάτοις τε καὶ δυνατωτάτοις, ἢ φορᾷ δήμου καὶ ἀλογίᾳ, καὶ τούτων αὐτῶν μάλιστα τοῖς εὐωνοτάτοις· νῦν δὲ κινδυνεύω τὰς δημοσίας ἀρχὰς εὐτακτοτέρας ὑπερλαμβάνων τῆς ἡμετέρας, αἷς ἡ θεία χάρις ἐπιφημίζεται. Greg. Naz. Or. 19. *p.*211.

And that the Roman Elections in that time were come into that courſe, we may ſee by the relation and reflections of an honeſt Pagan Hiſtorian concerning the Election of Pope Damaſus (contemporary of Gregory Nazianzen) Damaſus (ſaith he) and Urſinus, above humane meaſure burning with deſire to ſnatch the Epiſcopal See, did with divided parties moſt fiercely conflict; in which conflict upon one day in the very Church 130 Perſons were ſlain; ſo did that great Pope get into the Chair; thus (as the Hiſtorian reflecteth) the wealth and pomp of the place naturally did provoke ambition by all means to ſeek it, and did cauſe fierce contentions to ariſe in the choice; whence commonly, wiſe and modeſt perſons being excluded from any capacity thereof, any ambitious and cunning man, who had the art or the luck to pleaſe the multitude would by violence obtain it; which was a goodly way of conſtituting a Sovereign to the Church.

Damaſus & Urſinus ſupra humanum modum ad rapiendam Epiſcopalem ſedem ardentes ſciſſis ſtudiis acerrimè conflictabantur—Am Marcell. lib. 27.

Sozom. 6. 23.

Neque ego ab uno oſtentationem rerum conſiderans urbanarum, hujus rei cupidos, &c. Id. Ibid.

Thus it went within three ages after our Lord; and afterwards in the declenſions of Chriſtian ſimplicity and integrity matters were not like to be mended; but did indeed rather grow worſe; as beſide the reports and complaints of Hiſtorians, how that commonly by ambitious prenſations, by Simoniacal corruptions, by political bandyings, by popular factions, by all kinds of ſiniſter ways, men crept into the place, doth appear by thoſe many diſmal Schiſms, which gave the Church many pretended Heads, but not one certain one: as alſo by the reſult of them, being the choice of perſons very unworthy and horribly flagitious.

Damaſus II — Pontificatum per vim occupat, nullo Cleri populique conſenſu; Adeò enim inoleverat hic mos, ut jam cuique ambitioſo liceret Petri ſedem invadere. Plat. (p. 314)

Damaſus II. invades the Popedome by force, without any conſent of the Clergy and People; For ſo was it now grown into cuſtom, that any ambitious man might invade Peter's See.

Eò enim tum Pontificatus devenerat, ut qui plus largitione & ambitione, non dico ſanctitate vitæ & doctrinâ valeret, is tuntummodo dignitatis gradum bonis oppreſſis & a rejectis obtineret; quem morem utinam aliquando non retinuiſſent noſtra tempora. Plat. in Silv.

For the buſineſs of the Papacy was come to that paſs, that whoever by bribery and ambition, I ſay not, by holineſs of life and learning, got the ſtart of others, he alone obtained that degree of dignity, good men in the mean being depreſſed and rejected; which cuſtom I would to God our times had not retained.

Cùm jam eò deveniſſent Eccleſiaſtici, ut non coacti ut antea, ſed ſponte & largitionibus Pontificium munus obirent. Plat. in Steph. 6. Baron. Anno 112. § 8.

Whenas now Eccleſiaſtical perſons are come to that paſs, that they execute the Papal Office, not being compelled unto it, as heretofore, but of their own accord, and by bribing for it.

Videbat enim Imperator eò licentiæ factioſum quemque & potentem, quamvis ignobilem deveniſſe, ut corruptis ſuffragiis tantam dignitatem conſequeretur, &c. Plat. in Clem. 2. (p 313.)

For the Emperour ſaw, that every factious and powerful perſon, though baſe and ignoble, was grown to that height of licenciousneſs, that he obtained ſo great Dignity by corruption and buying of Suffrages.

Omne Papale negotium munus agunt: quem dabis mihi de tota maxima Urbe, qui te in Papam receperit, pretio ſeu ſpe pretii non interveniente? Bern. de Conſid. 4. 2.

The whole buſineſs of making a Pope is managed by gifts: whom can you ſhew me in all this great City, who took you into the Papacy, without being bribed and corrupted with reward, or at leaſt with hope of it?

If it be ſaid, that the Election of a Pope in old times was wont to be approved by the conſent of all Biſhops in the World, according to the teſtimony of St. Cyprian, who ſaith of Cornelius, that he was known by the teſtimony of his fellow-Biſhops whoſe whole number through all the World did with peaceful unanimity conſent.

——co-Epiſcoporum teſtimonio, quorum numerus univerſius per totum mundum concordi unanimitate conſentit--Cypr. Ep. 52.

Cùm Fabiani locus, id eſt cùm locus Petri, & gradus Cathedræ ſacerdotalis vacaret, quo occupato de Dei voluntate atque omnium noſtrum conſentione.——Ibid.

When Fabianus's place, (i. e.) when the place of Peter, and the degree of the Sacerdotal Chair was vacant; which being obtained by the will of God, and all our conſents.—— Satis erat ut tu te Epiſcopum factum Literis nunciares, &c. Cypr. Ep. 42.

It was enough that you declared by Letters that you were made Biſhop.

Epiſcopo ſemel facto, & Collegarum ac plebis teſtimonio & judicio comprobato---- Cypr. Ep. 41.

I anſwer, that this conſent was not in the Election, or antecedently to it; that it was only by Letters or Meſſages declaring the Election, according to that of St. Cyprian; that it was not any wiſe peculiar to the Roman Biſhop, but ſuch as was yielded to all Catholick Biſhops, each of whom was to be approved, as St. Cyprian ſaith, by the teſtimony and judgment of his Collegues; that it was in order only to the maintaining fraternal communion and correſpondence, ſignifying that ſuch a Biſhop was duly elected by his Clergy and People, was rightly ordained by his neighbour Biſhops, did profeſs the Catholick Faith, and was therefore qualified for communion with his Brethren, ſuch a conſent to the election of any Biſhop of old was given, (eſpecially upon occaſion, and when any queſtion concerning the right of a Biſhop did intervene) whereof now in the Election of a Pope no footſtep doth remain.

Euſeb. We may alſo note, that the Election of Cornelius being conteſted, he did more ſolemnly acquaint all the Biſhops of the World with his caſe, and ſo did obtain their approbation, in a way more than ordinary.

13. If God had deſigned this derivation of Univerſal Sovereignty, it is probable, that he would have preſcribed ſome certain, ſtanding, immutable way of Election; and imparted the right to certain Perſons, and not left it at ſuch uncertainty to the chances of time, ſo that the manner of Election hath often changed, and the power of it toſſed into divers hands.

Et licèt diverſis temporibus diverſi modi ſuper Electione Romanorum Pontificum obſervati ſunt, prout neceſſitas, & utilitas Eccleſiæ expoſcebat——Conc. Baſ. Seſſ. 37. p. 98. Vide Grat. diſt. 63. per tot.

And though in ſeveral times there have been obſerved ſeveral ways as to the Election of the Roman Pontifs, according as the neceſſity and expediency of the Church required.

Of old it was (as other Elections) managed by nomination of the Clergy, and ſuffrage of the People.

Afterward the Emperours did aſſume to themſelves the nomination, or approbation of them.

For then nothing was done by the Clergy in the choice of the Pope, unleſs the Emperour had approv'd his Election.

Nil enim tum à clero in eligendo Pontifice actum erat, niſi ejus Electionem Imperator approbâſſet. Plat. in Pelag. II.

But he, ſeeing the Princes conſent was required, ſent Meſſengers with Letters, to intreat Mauritius, that he would not ſuffer the Election made by the Clergy and People of Rome in that caſe to be valid.

Is autem, cùm Principis conſenſus requireretur, nuncios cum Literis miſerat, qui Mauritium obſecrarent, ne pateretur electionem Cleri & Populi Romani ea in re valere. Plat. in Greg. M. Vid. Grat. diſt. 63.——

Leo VIII. being tired out with the inconſtancy of the Romans, transferred the whole power and authority of chuſing the Pope from the Clergy and People of Rome, to the Emperour.

Conc. Tom. 7. p. 182. Leo VIII.--Romanorum inconſtantiam pertæſus, Autoritatem omnem eligendi Pontificis à Clero, Populoque Romano ad Imperatorem tranſtulit. Plat. in Leo VIII. (p. 291.)

At ſome times the Clergy had no hand in the Election; but Popes were intruded by powerful Men or Women at their pleaſure.

Nuſquam Cleri eligentis, vel poſtea conſentientis aliqua mentio. Baron. Anno 112. § 8. Anno 131. §. 1. There was nowhere any mention of the Clergy electing, or afterward conſenting.

Afterwards the Cardinals (that is, ſome of the chief Roman Clergy) did appropriate the Election to themſelves; by the Decree of Pope Nicolas II. in his Lateran Synod.

Grat. diſt. 23. cap. 1. Plat. in Nic. II.

Sometimes, out of courſe, general Synods did aſſume the Choice to themſelves: as at Conſtance, Piſa and Baſil.

14. From the Premiſſes to conclude the Pope's Title to Saint Peter's Authority, it is requiſite to ſhew the Power demiſed by him to be according to God's inſtitution and intent, immutable and indefectible; for Power built upon the like, but far more certain principles hath in courſe of times, and by worldly changes been quite loſt, or conveyed into other Chanels, than thoſe, wherein it was firſt put; and that irrecoverably, ſo that it cannot any-wiſe be retrived, or reduced into the firſt order.

For inſtance, Adam was by God conſtituted Univerſal Sovereign of Mankind; and into that Power his eldeſt Son of right did ſucceed; and ſo it of right ſhould have been continually propagated.

Yet ſoon did that Power fail, or was diverted into other courſes; the World being cantonized into ſeveral Dominions; ſo that the Heir at Law among all the deſcendents of Adam cannot ſo eaſily be found, as a Needle in a bottle of Hay, he probably is a Subject, and perhaps is a Peaſant.

So might Saint Peter be Monarch of the Church, and the Pope might ſucceed him, yet by revolutions of things, by ſeveral defaults and incapacities in himſelf, by divers obſtructions incident, by forfeiture upon encroaching on other mens rights, according to that Maxime of a great Pope, He loſeth his own, who coveteth more than his due, his Power might be cliped, might be tranſplanted, might utterly decay and fail; to ſuch fatalities other Powers are ſubject; nor can that of the Pope be exempt from them, as other where we ſhall more largely declare.

Propria perdit qui indebita concupiſcit. P. Leo I. Ep. 54.

15. Indeed that God did intend his Church ſhould perpetually ſubſiſt united in any one political frame of Government, is a principle, which they do aſſume, and build upon, but can no-wiſe prove. Nor indeed is it true. For,

If the Unity of the Church deſigned and inſtituted by God were only an Unity of Faith, of Charity, of Peace, of fraternal Communion and Correſpondence between particular Societies and Paſtours, then in vain it is to ſeek for the Subject and Seat of Univerſal Juriſdiction; now that God did not intend any other Unity, than ſuch as thoſe ſpecified, we have good reaſon to judge, and ſhall we hope otherwhere ſufficiently prove.

16. We may conſider, that really the Sovereign Power (ſuch as it is pretended) hath often failed, there having been for long ſpaces of time no Roman Bishops at all, upon ſeveral accounts; which is a ſign that the Church may ſubſiſt without it.

As, 1. When Rome was deſolated by the Goths, Vandals and Lombards.

Vide Bern. Ep. 242, 243. Bell. 4. 4.

2. In times, when the Romans would not ſuffer Popes to live with them.

3. In caſe of diſcontinuance from Rome, when the Popes (ſo calling themſelves) did for above ſeventy years abide in France; when they indeed, not being choſen by the Roman People, nor exerciſing Paſtoral care over them, were only titular, not real Biſhops of Rome; (They were Popes of Avignion, not of Rome; and Succeſſors of God knows who, not of Saint Peter) no more than one continually living in England can be Biſhop of Jeruſalem.

4. In times of many long Schiſms (22 Schiſms) when either there was no true Pope, or which in effect was the ſame, no certain one.

—Inopem me copia fecit. Baron. ad Anno 112. §. 8.

5. When Popes were intruded by violence, whom Baronius himſelf poſitively affirmeth to have been no Popes: how then could a Succeſſion of true Popes be continued from them, by the Clergy, which they in virtue of their Papal Authority did pretend to create?

6. When Elections had a flaw in them, were uncanonical and ſo null.

P. Greg. VII. Ep. 3. 7.

7. When Popes were Simoniacally choſen; who by their own Rules and Laws are no true Popes; being Hereticks, Hereſiarchs.

P. Jul. in Conc. Lat. Seſſ. 5. p. 57. Non ſolùm hujuſmodi Electio vel aſſumptio eo ipſo nulla exiſtat——&c. Vide ſup. §. 12.

Such an Election or Aſſumption, let it not only be upon that account void and null.

The which was done for long courſes of time very commonly, and in a manner conſtantly.

Vide quæſo quantum iſti degeneraverint à majoribus ſuis; Illi enim upote viri Sanctiſſimi Dignitatem ultrò oblatam contemnebant, orationi & Doctrinæ Chriſtianæ vacantes; hi verò largitione & ambitione Pontificatum quærentes, & adepti, poſthabito divino cultu, &c. Plat. in Serg. 3. (p. 279.) Vid.——in Bened. IV. p. 277.

See, I beſeech you, how much they have degenerated from their Anceſtours; For they as being very Holy men did contemn that Dignity when freely offered, giving themſelves wholly to Prayer and the Doctrine of Chriſt; but theſe by bribery and ambition ſeek and obtain the Papacy.

8. When Popes have been depoſed; (as ſome by the Emperours, others by General Councils) in which caſe, according to Papal Principles, the Succeſſours were illegal; for the Pope being Soveraign, he could not be judged or depoſed; and his Succeſſour is an Uſurper.

9. When Popes where Heretical, that is (ſay they) no Popes.

10. When Atheiſts, Sorcerers,——

Elections in ſome of theſe caſes being null, and therefore the Acts conſequent to them invalid, there is probably a deſailance of right continued to poſterity.

Plat. in Joh. 10. (p. 275.) Pontifices ipſi à Petri veſtigiis diſceſſerant. The Popes had ſwerv'd from the Examples of Peter. Poſſeſſor malæ fidei ullo tempore non præſcribit. Reg. Jur. 2. in Sexto.

He that has no right to the thing he poſſeſſes, cannot preſcribe or plead any length of time to make his poſſeſſion lawful.

And probably therefore there is now no true Pope.

For (upon violent intruſion, or Simoniacal choice, or any uſurpation) the Cardinals, Biſhops, &c. which the Pope createth are not truly ſuch; and conſequently their Votes not good in the choice of another Pope; and ſo ſucceſſively.

Theſe conſiderations may ſuffice to declare the inconſequence of their Diſcourſes, even admitting their Aſſertions, which yet are ſo falſe; or ſo apparently uncertain.

I ſhall in the next place level ſome Arguments directly againſt their main Concluſion it ſelf.

I. My firſt Argument againſt this pretence ſhall be, that it is deſtitute of any good warrant, either from Divine or Humane teſtimony; and ſo is groundleſs. As will appear by the following Conſiderations.

1. If God had deſigned the Biſhop of Rome to be for the perpetual courſe of times Sovereign Monarch of his Church, it may reaſonably be ſuppoſed, that he would expreſly have declared his mind in the caſe; it being a point of greateſt importance of all, that concern the adminiſtration of his Kingdom in the World. Princes do not uſe to ſend their Vice-Roys unfurniſhed with Patents clearly ſignifying their Commiſſion, that no man, out of ignorance or doubt concerning that point, excuſably may refuſe compliance; And in all equity promulgation is requiſite to the eſtabliſhment of any Law, or exacting obedience. But in all the Pandects of Divine Revelation the Biſhop of Rome is not ſo much as once mentioned, either by name, or by character, or by probable intimation; they cannot hook him in otherwiſe, than by ſtreining hard, and framing a long Chain of Conſequences; each of which is too ſubtile for to conſtrain any man's perſuaſion: They have indeed found the Pope in the firſt Chapter of Geneſis; for (if we believe Pope Innocent III.) he is one of the two great Luminaries there; and he is as plainly there, as any where elſe in the Bible.

Nec verò ſimile ſit, ut rem tam neceſſariam ad Eccleſiæ unitatem continendam Chriſtus Dominus Apoſtolis ſuis non revelârit. Melch. Can. 6.8.

Neither is it likely that our Lord Chriſt would not have revealed to his Apoſtles a thing ſo neceſſary for preſerving the Unity of the Church.

Ad Firmamentum igitur Cœli, hoc eſt Univerſalis Eccleſiæ, fecit Deus duo magna Luminaria, id eſt, duas inſtituit Dignitates, quæ ſunt Pontificalis auctoritas, & Regalis poteſtas, ſed illa quæ præeſt diebus, id eſt, Spiritualibus, major eſt; quæ verò Carnalibus, minor, &c. Innoc. III. in Decret. Greg. I. 33.6.

For the Firmament therefore of Heaven, (i. e.) of the Univerſal Church, God made two great Lights, (i.e) he ordained two Dignities or Powers, which are the Pontifical Authority, and the Regal Power; but that which rules the days, (i.e.) Spiritual matters, is the greater, but that which governs Carnal things, is the leſſer, &c.

Wherefore if upon this account we ſhould reject this pretence, we might do it juſtly; and for ſo doing we have the allowance of the ancient Fathers; for they did not hold any man obliged to admit any point of Doctrine, or rule of Manners, which is not in expreſs words, or in terms equivalent contained in Holy Scripture; or which at leaſt might not thence be deduced by clear and certain inference; this their manner of diſputing with Hereticks and heterodox People doth ſhew; this appeareth by their way of defining and ſettling Doctrines of Faith; this they often do avow in plain words applicable to our caſe; for If (ſaith St. Auſtin) about Chriſt, or about his Church, or about any other thing; which concerneth our Faith and Life, I will not ſay We, who are no wiſe comparable to him, who ſaid Although we; but even as he going on did add, If an Angel from Heaven ſhould tell you beſide what you have received in the Legal and Evangelical Scriptures, let him be anathema; in which words we have St. Auſtin's warrant not only to refuſe, but to deteſt this Doctrine, which being no-where extant in Law or Goſpel, is yet obtruded on us as nearly relating both to Chriſt and his Church; as greatly concerning both our Faith and Practice.

Proinde ſive de Chriſto, ſive de ejus Eccleſia, ſive de quacunq; alia re, quæ pertinet ad fidem vitámq; noſtram, non dicam Nos, nequaquam comparandi ei qui dixit, licet ſi nos, ſed omnino quod ſequutus adjecit, ſi Angelus de cœlo vobis annunciaverit, præterquam quod in Scripturis Legalibus ac Evangelicis accepiſtis, anathema ſit. Aug. contr. Petil. 3.6.

2. To enforce this Argument, we may conſider, that the Evangeliſts do ſpeak about the propagation, ſettlement, and continuance of our Lord's Kingdom; that the Apoſtles do often treat about the ſtate of the Church and its edification, order, peace, unity; about the diſtinction of its Officers and Members, about the qualifications, duties, graces, privileges of Spiritnal Governors and Guides; about prevention and remedy of Hereſies, Schiſms, Diſorders; upon any of which occaſions how is it poſſible that the mention of ſuch a Spiritual Monarch (who was to have a main influence on each of thoſe particulars) ſhould wholly eſcape them, if they had known ſuch an one inſtituted by God.

In the Levitical Law all things concerning the High-Prieſt; not only Exod. 28. 1. his Deſignation, Succeſſion, Conſecration, Duty, Power, Maintenance, Exod. 28. 4. Privileges; but even his Garments, Marriage; Mourning, &c. are punctually determined and deſcribed; and is it not wonderful that Levit. 21. in the many deſcriptions of the New-Law, no mention ſhould be made concerning any Duty, or Privilege of its High-Prieſt? whereby he might be directed in the adminiſtration of his Office, and know what obſervance to require?

3. Whereas alſo the Scripture doth inculcate duties of all ſorts, and doth not forget frequently to preſs duties of reſpect and obedience toward particular Governors of the Church; is it not ſtrange that it never ſhould beſtow one precept, whereby we might be inſtructed and admoniſhed to pay our duty to the Univerſal Paſtor? eſpecially conſidering, that God who directed the Pens of the Apoſtles, and who intended that their Writings ſhould continue for the perpetual inſtruction of Chriſtians, did foreſee, how requiſite ſuch a precept would be to ſecure that duty; for if but one ſuch precept did appear, it would do the buſineſs, and void all conteſtation about it.

4. They who ſo carefully do exhort to honour and obey the temporal Sovereignty, how come they ſo wholly to wave urging the no leſs needful obligations to obey the Spiritual Monarch? while they P. Nic. I. Ep. 10. are ſo mindful of the Emperor, why are they ſo neglectful of the Pope? P. Leo. IX. Ep. 1. inſomuch, that divers Popes afterward, to ground and urge obedience to them, are fain to borrow thoſe precepts, which command obe- P. Greg. VII. Ep. 1. 22. dience to Princes, accommodating them by analogy and inference to themſelves?

5. Particularly Saint Peter, one would think, who doth ſo earneſtly 1 Pet. 2. 13—17. injoin to obey the King as Supreme, and to honour him, ſhould not have been unmindful of his Succeſſors; or quite have forborn to warn Chriſtians of the reſpect due to them: ſurely the Popes afterward do not follow him in this reſervedneſs; for in their Decretal Epiſtles they urge nothing ſo much as obedience to the Apoſtolical See.

6. One might have expected ſomething of that nature from Saint Paul himſelf, who did write ſo largely to the Romans, and ſo often from Rome; that at leaſt ſome word, or ſome intimation ſhould have dropped from him concerning theſe huge Rights and Privileges of this See, and of the regard due to it. Particularly then, when he profeſſedly doth enumerate the Offices, inſtituted by God, for ſtanding uſe and Eph. 3. 11, 12, 13. perpetual duration; for the perfecting of the Saints, for the work of the Miniſtry, for the edifying of the Body of Chriſt; till we all come in the Unity of 1 Cor. 12. 28. Faith, &c.

Quarum laudum & gloriæ degenerem fuiſſe, maximum crimen eſt. Cl. Rom. ad Cypr. Ep. 31.
To degenerate from which praiſe and glory, is an exceeding great crime.

He commendeth them for their Faith, which was ſpoken of through the whole world; yet giving them no advantage above others; as St. Chryſoſtom obſerveth on thoſe words; for obedience to the Faith among all Nations, among whom alſo are ye; this (ſaith St. Chryſoſtom) he ſaith to depreſs their conceit, to void their haughtineſs of mind, and to teach them (to deem others equal in Dignity with them.

Rom. 1. 8.

Οὐδὲν πλέον αὐτοῖς δίδωσι τῶν λοιπῶν ἐθνῶν.

Ταῦτα δὲ ποιεῖ καθαιρῶν αὐτῶν τὸ φρόνημα, καὶ κινῶν τὸ φύσημα τῆς διανοίας, καὶ διδάσκων αὐτοὺς τὴν πρὸς ἄλλους ἰσοτιμίαν.

When he writeth to that Church (*which was ſome time after Saint Peter had ſettled the Popedom) he doth only ſtile them κλητοὶ ἅγιοι, (called Saints) and ἀγαπητοὶ Θεοῦ, (beloved of God) which are common adjuncts of all Chriſtians; He ſaith their Faith was ſpoken of generally, but of the fame of their Authority being ſo ſpread he taketh no notice; that their obedience had come abroad to all men, but their commands had not (it ſeemeth) come any where.

(* Vid. Chryſ. Theo. Hier.) Baron. Anno 58. §. 46. &c.

Rom. 1. 7. & 8. 16. 19.

He wrote divers Epiſtles from Rome, wherein he reſolveth many caſes debated, yet never doth urge the Authority of the Roman Church for any point, which now is ſo ponderous an Argument.

7. But however ſeeing the Scripture is ſo ſtrangely reſerved, how cometh it to paſs that Tradition is alſo ſo defective, and ſtaunch in ſo grand a caſe? We have in divers of the Fathers, (particularly in Tertullian, in St. Baſil, in St. Hierom) Catalogues of Traditional Doctrines and Obſervances, which they recite to aſſert Tradition in ſome caſes ſupplemental to Scripture; in which their purpoſe did require, that they ſhould ſet down thoſe of principal moment; and they are ſo punctual as to inſert many of ſmall conſideration; how then came they to neglect this, concerning the Papal Authority over the whole Church, which had been moſt pertinent to their deſign, and in conſequence did vaſtly ſurpaſs all the reſt, which they do name?

Tertull. de Cor. Mil. 3.
Baſil. de Sp. S. 27.
Hier. adverſ. Lucif. 4.

8. The deſignation of the Roman Biſhop by ſucceſſion to obtain ſo high a degree in the Church, being, above all others, a moſt remarkable and noble piece of Hiſtory, which it had been a horrible fault in an Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory to ſlip over, without careful reporting, and reflecting upon it; yet Euſebius, that moſt diligent Compiler of all paſſages relating to the original Conſtitution of the Church, and to all tranſactions therein, hath not one word about it; who yet ſtudiouſly doth report the Succeſſions of the Roman Biſhops, and all the notable occurrences he knew concerning them, with favourable advantage.

9. Whereas this Doctrine is pretended to be a Point of Faith, of vaſt conſequence to the ſubſiſtence of the Church, and to the Salvation of men, it is ſomewhat ſtrange, that it ſhould not be inſerted into any one ancient Summary of things to be believed (of which Summaries divers remain, ſome compoſed by publick conſent, others by perſons of Eminency in the Church) nor by fair and forcible conſequence ſhould be deducible from any Article in them; eſpecially conſidering that ſuch Summaries were framed upon occaſion of Hereſies ſpringing up, which diſregarded the Pope's Authority, and which by aſſerting it were plainly confuted. We are therefore beholden to Pope Innocent III. and his Lateran Synod, for firſt Synodically defining this Point, together with other Points no leſs new and unheard of before. The Creed of Pope Pius IV. formed the other day, is the firſt, as I take it, which did contain this Article of Faith.

Conſt. Apoſt. 7. 41. (a full Creed. at Baptiſm.)

Conc. Lat. 4. cap. 5. An. 1215.

10. It is much that this point of Faith ſhould not be delivered in any of thoſe ancient Expoſitions of the Creed (made by St. Auſtin, Ruffin, &c.) which enlarge it to neceſſary points of Doctrine, connected with the Articles therein, eſpecially with that of the Catholick Church, to which the Pope's Authority hath ſo cloſe a connexion; that it ſhould not be touched in the Catechetical Diſcourſes of Cyril, Ambroſe, &c. that in the Syſtems of Divinity compoſed by Saint Auſtin, Lactantius, &c. it ſhould not be treated on: The world is now changed, for the Catechiſm of Trent doth not overlook ſo material a Point; and it would paſs for a lame Body of Theology, which ſhould omit to treat on this Subject.

11. It is more wonderful, that this Point ſhould never be defined, in downright and full terms, by any ancient Synod; it being ſo notoriouſly in thoſe old times oppoſed by divers, who diſſented in opinion, and diſcorded in practice from the Pope; it being alſo a Point of that conſequence, that ſuch a ſolemn declaration of it would have much conduced to the ruin of all particular Errors and Schiſms, which were maintained then in oppoſition to the Church.

12. Indeed had this Point been allowed by the main Body of Orthodox Biſhops, the Pope could not have been ſo drowſy or ſtupid, as not to have ſolicited for ſuch a definition thereof; nor would the Biſhops have been backward in compliance thereto; it being, in our Adverſaries conceits, ſo compendious and effectual a way of ſupreſſing all Hereſies, Schiſms and Diſorders; (although indeed later Experience hath ſhewed it no leſs available to ſtifle Truth, Juſtice and Piety:) The Popes after Luther were better adviſed, and ſo were the Biſhops adhering to his Opinions.

13. Whereas alſo it is moſt apparent, that many perſons diſclaimed this Authority, not regarding either the Doctrines or Decrees of the Popes; it is wonderful, that ſuch men ſhould not be reckoned in the large Catalogues of Hereticks, wherein Errors of leſs obvious conſideration, and of far leſs importance did place men; If Epiphanius, Theodoret, Leontius, &c. were ſo negligent or unconcerned, yet St. Auſtin, Philaſtrius, --- Weſtern men, ſhould not have overlooked this ſort of deſperate Hereticks; Aerius for queſtioning the Dignity of Biſhops is ſet among the Hereticks, but who got that name for diſavowing the Pope's Supremacy, among the many who did it? (It is but lately, that ſuch as we have been thruſt in among Hereticks.)

14. Whereas no Point avowed by Chriſtians could be ſo apt to raiſe offence and jealouſy in Pagans againſt our Religion as this, which ſetteth up a Power of ſo vaſt extent, and huge influence; whereas no novelty could be more ſurprizing or ſtartling, than the Erection of an Univerſal Empire over the Conſciences and Religious Practices of men; whereas alſo this Doctrine could not but be very conſpicuous and glaring in ordinary practice; it is prodigious, that all Pagans ſhould not loudly exclaim againſt it.

It is ſtrange, that Pagan Hiſtorians (ſuch as Marcellinus, who often ſpeaketh of Popes, and blameth them for their luxurious way of living, and pompous garb: as Zozimus, who bore a great ſpight at Chriſtianity; as all the Writers of the Imperial Hiſtory before Conſtantine) ſhould not report it, as a very ſtrange pretence newly ſtarted up.

—procedantq; vehiculis inſidentes, circumſpectè veſtiti, epulas curantes profuſas, adeò ut eorum convivia Regales ſuperent menſas. Marcell. *lib.*27. *p.*338. They travel ſitting in Chariots, curiouſly apparelled, procuring profuſe dainties, inſomuch as their meals exceed the feaſts of Kings.

It is wonderful, that the eager Adverſaries of our Religion (ſuch as Celſus, Porphyrie, Hierocles, Julian himſelf) ſhould not particularly level their Diſcourſe againſt it, as a moſt ſcandalous poſition and dangerous pretence, threatning the Government of the Empire.

It is admirable, that the Emperors themſelves, enflamed with emulation and ſuſpicion of ſuch an Authority (the which hath been ſo terrible even to Chriſtian Princes) ſhould not in their Edicts expreſly decry and impugn it; that indeed every one of them ſhould not with extremeſt violence implacably ſtrive to extirpate it.

In conſequence of theſe things it may alſo ſeem ſtrange, that none of the Advocates of our Faith (Juſtin, Origen, Tertullian, Arnobius, Cyril, Auſtin) ſhould be put to defend it, or ſo much as forced to mention it, in their elaborate Apologies for the Doctrines and Practices, which were reprehended by any ſort of Adverſaries thereto.

We may add that divers of them in their Apologies and repreſentations concerning Chriſtianity would have appeared not to deal fairly, or to have been very inconſiderate; when they profeſs for their common belief aſſertions repugnant to that Doctrine; as when Tertullian ſaith, || We reverence the Emperor as a man ſecond to God, and leſs only than God; when * Optatus affirmeth, that above the Emperor there is none beſide God who made the Emperor; and that † Donatus by extolling himſelf (as ſome now do) above the Emperor, did in ſo doing as it were exceed the bounds of men, that he did eſteem himſelf as God, not as a man. When St. Chryſoſtom aſſerteth, the Emperor to be the Crown and Head of all men upon earth; and ſaith, that even Apoſtles, Evangeliſts, Prophets, any men whoever are to be ſubject to the temporal Powers; when (a) St. Cyril calleth the Emperor the Supreme top of glory among men, elevated above all others by incomparable differences, &c. When even Popes talk at this rate; as Pope (b) Gregory I. calling the Emperor his Lord, and Lord of all, telling the Emperor, that his Competitor, by aſſuming the the title of Univerſal Biſhop, did ſet himſelf above the honour of his Imperial Majeſty; which he ſuppoſeth a piece of great abſurdity and arrogance; and even Pope (c) Gregory II. doth call that Emperor (againſt whom he afterward rebelled) the Head of Chriſtians. Whereas indeed if the Pope be Monarch of the Church, endowed with the Regalities which they now aſcribe to him, is it plain enough that he is not inferior to any man living, in real power and dignity; wherefore the modern Doctors of Rome are far more ſincere or conſi-

Sentiunt enim Deum eſſe ſolum, in cujus ſolius poteſtate ſunt, à quo ſunt ſecundi, poſt quem primi, antè omnes & ſuper omnes Deos. Quidni? cùm ſuper omnes homines, qui utiq; vivunt, & mortuis antiſtant. Tertull. *Apolog. c.*30.

For they think it is God alone in whoſe power they are, next to whom they are the chief, before all, and above all Gods. And why not? when they are above all men alive, and ſurpaſs the dead.

|| Colimus Imperatorem ut hominem à Deo ſecundum, & ſolo Deo minorem. Tertull. ad Scap. 2.

* Cùm ſuper Imperatorem non ſit niſi ſolus Deus qui fecit Imperatorem. Opt. *lib.*3.

† —— dum ſe Donatus ſuper Imperatorem extollit, jam quaſi hominum exceſſerat modum, ut ſe ut Deum, non hominem æſtimaret. Id. ibid.

Βασιλεὺς γὰρ κορυφὴ καὶ κεφαλὴ τῶν ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς ἐστιν ἁπάντων. Chryſ. ἀνδρ. 2. *p.*463.

Κἂν Ἀπόστολος ᾖ, κἂν Εὐαγγελιστὴς, κἂν Προφήτης, κἂν ὁστισοῦν, &c. Chryſ. in Rom. 13. 1.

Οὐ γάρ ἐστιν ὁ ὑβρισθεὶς ὁμότιμόν τινα ἔχων ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, βασιλεὺς γὰρ —— Chryſ. ſuprà.

For he that is thus wrong'd has not his equal upon earth, for he is King, &c.

(a) Τῆς μὲν ἐν ἀνθρώποις εὐκλείας τὸ ἀνώτατον καὶ ἀσυγκρίτοις διαφοραῖς τῶν ἄλλων ἁπάντων ἀνεστηχὸς καὶ ὑπερκείμενον, ὑμεῖς, ὦ φιλόχριστοι βασιλεῖς, καὶ κλῆρος ὑμῖν ἐξαίρετός τε καὶ πρέπων παρὰ θεοῦ τῆς ἐνούσης αὐτῷ κατὰ πάντων ὑπεροχῆς Cyril. ad Theod. in Conc. Eph. part. 1. cap. 3. p. 20.

(b) P. Greg. M. *Ep.*2.62.

Quia Sereniſſ Domine ex illo jam tempore Dominus meus fuiſti, quando adhuc Dominus omnium non eras —— Ego quidem juſſioni ſubjectus —— Ibid.

Ad hoc enim poteſtas Dominorum meorum pietati cœlitus data eſt ſuper omnes homines, &c. Ibid. Ego indignus famulus veſter. Ib.

Qui honori quoq; Imperii veſtri ſe per privatum vocabulum ſuperponit. P. Greg. I. *Ep.*4.32.

(c) Ὡς βασιλεὺς καὶ κεφαλὴ τῶν χριστιανῶν. P. Greg. II. in Epiſt. 1. ad Leon. Iſaur. apud Bin. *Tom.*5. p. 502. As King and Head of Chriſtians.

derate in their Heraldry, than were thoſe old Fathers of Chriſtendom; who now ſtick not downrightly to prefer the Pope before all Princes of the World; not only in Doctrine and Notion, but in the Sacred Offices of the Church; for in the very Canon of their Maſs, the Pope (together with the Biſhop of the Dioceſs, one of his Miniſters) is ſet before all Chriſtian Princes; every Chriſtian Subject being thereby taught to deem the Pope ſuperiour to his Prince: * Now we muſt believe (for one Pope hath written it, another hath put it in his Decretals, and it is current Law) that the Papal Authority doth no leſs ſurpaſs the Royal, than the Sun doth outſhine the Moon.

——unà cum famulo tuo Papa noſtro N. & Antiſtite noſtro N. & Rege noſtro N. & omnibus Orthodoxis, &c.

Together with thy Servant our Pope N. and our Biſhop N. and our King N. and all Orthodox, &c.

* Fiat autem oratio pro dignitate Regia poſt orationem factam pro Papa, quia poteſtas ſuprema Sacerdotalis excedit Regiam antiquitate, dignitate & utilitate, &c. Gab. Biel. in Can. miſ.

Let prayer be made for the King after prayer made for the Pope, becauſe the ſupreme Sacerdotal power exceeds the Kingly in antiquity, dignity and utility, &c.

Now it is abundantly declared by Papal definition, as a point neceſſary to Salvation, that every humane Creature (neither King, nor Cæſar excepted) is ſubject to the Roman High-prieſt.

Subeſſe Romano Pontifici omni humanæ creaturæ declaramus, dicimus, definimus & pronunciamus omnino eſſe de neceſſitate ſalutis. P. Bonif. VIII. in Extrav. com. lib. 1. tit. 38.

Now the myſtery is diſcovered, why Popes, when ſummoned by Emperours, declined to go in Perſon to General Synods; becauſe it was not tolerable that the Emperour (who ſometime would be preſent in Synods) ſhould ſit above the Pope; as in the pride of his heart he might perhaps offer to do. (I cannot forbear to note what an ill conceit Bellarmine had of Leo I. and other Popes, that they did forbear coming at Synods out of their villainous pride and haughtineſs.)

At quamvis utcunque tolerabile ſit, ut Principes ſeculares in Concilio ſedeant ante alios Epiſcopos, tamen nullo modo convenit, ut ante ipſum ſummum Pontificem, &c. Bell. de Conc. 1. 19.

15. One would admire, that Conſtantine, if he had ſmelt this Doctrine, or any thing like it in Chriſtianity, ſhould be ſo ready to embrace it; or that ſo many Emperours ſhould in thoſe times do ſo; ſome Princes then probably being jealous of their honour, and unwilling to admit any Superiour to them.

It is at leaſt much, that Emperours ſhould with ſo much indulgence foſter and cheriſh Popes, being their ſo dangerous rivals for dignity; and that it ſhould be true, which Pope Nicholas doth affirm; that the Emperours had extolled the Roman See with divers privileges, had enriched it with gifts, had enlarged it with benefits; had done I know not how many things more for it: ſurely they were bewitched thus to advance their concurrent Competitour for Honour and Power; one who pretended to be a better man than themſelves. Bellarmine (in his Apology againſt King James) ſaith, that the Pope was (vellet, nollet) conſtrained to be ſubject to the Emperours, becauſe his Power was not known to them; it was well it was not: but how could it be concealed from them, if it were a Doctrine commonly avowed by Chriſtians? it is hard keeping ſo practical a Doctrine from breaking forth into light. But to leave this conſideration.

Quapropter attendat clementia veſtra; quantus fuerit erga ſedis Apoſtolicæ reverentiam Anteceſſorum veſtrorum, piorum duntaxat Imperatorum——amor, & ſtudium; qualiter eam diverſis privilegiis extulerint, donis ditaverint, beneficiis ampliaverint; qualiter eam literis ſuis honoraverint, ejus votis annuerint, &c. P. Nich. I. Epiſt. 8. ad Mich. Imp.

Apol. Bell. p. 202.

Farthermore, We have divers ancient Writings, the ſpecial nature, matter, ſcope whereof did require, or greatly invite giving atteſtation to this Power, if ſuch an one had been known and allowed in thoſe times; which yet do afford no countenance, but rather much prejudice thereto.

16. The Apoſtolical Canons, and the Conſtitutions of Clement, which deſcribe the ſtate of the Church, with its Laws, Cuſtoms and Practices current in the times of thoſe who compiled them (which times are not certain, but ancient, and the leſs ancient the more it is to our purpoſe) wherein eſpecially the Ranks, Duties and Privileges of all Eccleſiaſtical Perſons are declared, or preſcribed, do not yet touch the Prerogatives of this Univerſal Head, or the ſpecial reſpects due to him, nor mention any Laws or Conſtitutions framed by him: Which is no leſs ſtrange, than that there ſhould be a Body of Laws, or deſcription of the ſtate of any Kingdom, wherein nothing ſhould be ſaid concerning the King, or the Royal Authority: It is not ſo in our modern Canon-Law, wherein the Pope doth make utramque paginam; we read little beſide his Authority, and Decrees made by it.

Conſt. Apoſt. 8. 4, &c.

The Apoſtolical Canons, particularly do preſcribe, that the Biſhops of each Nation ſhould know him that is firſt among them, and ſhould eſteem him the Head, and ſhould do nothing conſiderable (or extraordinary) without his advice; as alſo that each one (of thoſe Head-Biſhops) ſhould only meddle with thoſe affairs which concerned his own precinct, and the places under it: alſo, that no ſuch Primate ſhould do any thing without the opinion of all; that ſo there may be concord: Now what place could be more opportune to mention the Pope's Sovereign Power? how could the Canoniſt without ſtrange neglect paſs it over? doth he not indeed exclude it, aſſigning the Supreme diſpoſal (without farther reſort) of all things to the arbitration of the whole body of Paſtours, and placing the maintenance of concord in that courſe?

Τοὺς Ἐπισκόπους ἑκάστου ἔθνους εἰδέναι χρὴ τὸν ἐν αὐτοῖς πρῶτον, καὶ ἡγεῖσθαι αὐτὸν ὡς κεφαλὴν, καὶ μηδέν τι πράττειν περιττὸν ἄνευ τῆς ἐκείνου γνώμης· ἐκεῖνα δὲ μόνα πράττειν ἕκαστον, ὅσα τῇ αὐτοῦ παροικίᾳ ἐπιβάλλει, καὶ ταῖς ὑπ' αὐτὴν χώραις, ἀλλὰ μηδὲ ἐκεῖνος ἄνευ τῆς πάντων γνώμης ποιείτω τι· οὕτω γὰρ ὁμόνοια ἔσται. Apoſt. Can. 34.

17. So alſo the Old Writer, under the name of Dionyſius the Areopagite, treating in ſeveral places about the degrees of the Eccleſiaſtical Hierarchy, was monſtrouſly overſeen in omitting the Sovereign thereof: In the fifth Chapter of his Eccleſiaſtical Hierarchy he profeſſeth carefully to ſpeak of thoſe Orders, but hath not a word of this ſupereminent rank, but averreth Epiſcopacy to be the firſt and higheſt of divine Orders, in which the Hierarchy is conſummated: and in his Epiſtle to Demophilus there is a remarkable place, wherein he could hardly have avoided touching the Pope, had there been then one in ſuch vogue as now: for adviſing that Monk to gentleneſs and obſervance toward his Superiours, he thus ſpeaketh: Let paſſion and reaſon be governed by you; but you by the holy Deacons, and theſe by the Prieſts, and the Prieſts by the Biſhops, and the Biſhops by the Apoſtles, or by their Succeſſors; (that is, ſaith Maximus, thoſe which we now call Patriarchs) and if perhaps any one of them ſhall fail of his duty, let him be corrected by thoſe holy perſons, who are co-ordinate to him; why not in this caſe, let him be corrected by the Pope, his Superiour? but he knew none of an Order ſuperiour to the Apoſtles Succeſſors.

Ἡ θεία τῶν ἱεραρχῶν τάξις πρώτη μέν ἐστι τῶν θεοπτικῶν τάξεων, ἀκροτάτη δὲ καὶ ἐσχάτη ἡ αὐτή· καὶ γὰρ εἰς αὐτὴν ἀποτελεῖται καὶ ἀποπληροῦται πᾶσα τῆς καθ' ἡμᾶς ἱεραρχίας διακόσμησις. Dionyſ. de Hier. Eccl. cap. 5.

Ἐπειδὴ τὰς ἱερατικὰς τάξεις καὶ ἀποπληρώσεις, δυνάμεις τε αὐτῶν καὶ ἐνεργείας εἰρήκαμεν ὡς ἡμῖν ἐφικτόν. De Eccl. Hier. cap. 5.

Αὐτὸς μὲν οὖν ἐπιθυμίᾳ καὶ θυμῷ καὶ λόγῳ τὰ κατ' ἀξίαν ἀφόριζε. σοὶ δὲ οἱ θεῖοι λειτουργοί· καὶ τούτοις οἱ ἱερεῖς· ἱεράρχαι δὲ τοῖς ἱερεῦσι· καὶ τοῖς ἱεράρχαις οἱ Ἀπόστολοι καὶ οἱ τῶν Ἀποστόλων διάδοχοι· καὶ εἴπου τις καὶ ἐν ἐκείνοις τοῦ προσήκοντος ἀποσφαλεῖν, παρὰ τῶν ὁμοταγῶν ἁγίων ἐπανορθωθήσεται, &c. Dionyſ. Ar. Ep. 8.

Ἀποστόλων δὲ διαδόχους τοὺς νῦν Πατριάρχας ἡγοῦμαι εἰπεῖν. Max. Schol. Ib.

18. Likewiſe, Ignatius in many Epiſtles frequently deſcribeth the ſeveral Ranks of the Eccleſiaſtical Hierarchy, extolleth their Dignity and Authority to the higheſt pitch, mightily urgeth the reſpect due to them, yet never doth he ſo much as mention or touch this Sovereign degree, wherein the Majeſty of the Clergy did chiefly ſhine.

In his very Epiſtle to the Romans he doth not yield any deference to their Biſhop, nor indeed doth ſo much as take notice of him; is it not ſtrange he ſhould ſo little mind the Sovereign of the Church? or was it, for a ſly reaſon, becauſe being Biſhop of Antioch he had a pique to his brother Jacob, who had ſupplanted him and got away his birthright?

The counterfeiter therefore of Ignatius did well perſonate him, when he ſaith, that in the Church there is nothing greater than a Biſhop; and that a Biſhop is beyond all rule and authority; for in the time of Ignatius there was no domineering Pope over all Biſhops.

Οὔτε Θεοῦ τις κρείττων, ἢ παραπλήσιος ἐν πᾶσι τοῖς οὖσιν, οὐδὲ ἢ ἐν Ἐκκλησίᾳ Ἐπισκόπου τι μεῖζων. Pſeud. Ignat. ad Smyrn.

Τί γὰρ ἐστιν Ἐπίσκοπος, ἀλλ' ἢ πάσης ἀρχῆς καὶ ἐξουσίας ἐπέκεινα, &c. id ad Trall.

19. We have ſome Letters of Popes, (though not many; for Popes were then not very ſcribatious, or not ſo pragmatical; whence to ſupply that defect, leſt Popes ſhould ſeem not able to write, or to have ſlept almoſt 400 years, they have forged divers for them, and thoſe ſo wiſe ones, that we who love the memory of thoſe good Popes, diſdain to acknowledge them Authors of ſuch idle ſtuff; we have yet ſome Letters of,) and to Popes, to and from divers eminent Perſons in the Church, wherein the former do not aſſume, nor the latter aſcribe any ſuch power; the Popes do not expreſs themſelves like Sovereigns, nor the Biſhops addreſs themſelves like Subjects; but they treat one another in a familiar way like brethren and equals: this is ſo true, that it is a good mark of a ſpurious Epiſtle (whereof we have good ſtore, deviſed by colloguing Knaves, and fathered on the firſt Popes) when any of them talketh in an imperious ſtrain, or arrogateth ſuch a Power to himſelf.

20. Clemens Biſhop of Rome in the Apoſtolical times unto the Church of Corinth, then engaged in diſcords and factions, wherein the Clergy was much affronted (divers Presbyters, who had well and worthily behaved themſelves, were ejected from their Office, in a ſeditious manner) did write a very large Epiſtle; wherein like a good Biſhop, and charitable Chriſtian brother he doth earneſtly by manifold inducements perſwade them to charity and peace; but no-where doth he ſpeak imperiouſly like their Prince: In ſuch a caſe one would think if ever, for quaſhing ſuch diſorders and quelling ſo perverſe folks, who ſpurned the Clergy, it had been decent, it had been expedient, to employ his Authority, and to ſpeak like himſelf, challenging obedience, upon duty to him, and at their peril: How would a moderate Pope have ranted in ſuch a caſe; how thundering a Bull would he have diſpatched againſt ſuch outragious contemners of the Eccleſiaſtick Order? how often would he have ſpoken of the Apoſtolick See and its Authority? we ſhould infallibly have heard him ſwagger in his wonted ſtyle, Whoever ſhall preſume to croſs our will, let him know that he ſhall incur the indignation of Almighty God, and his bleſſed Apoſtles Peter and Paul: but our Popes, it ſeemeth have more wit, or better mettle than Pope Clement; that good Pope did not know his own ſtrength, or had not the heart to uſe it.

Ὁρῶμεν γὰρ ὅτι ἐνίους ὑμεῖς μετηγάγετε καλῶς πολιτευομένους ἐκ τῆς ἀμέμπτως αὐτοῖς τετιμημένης λειτουργίας. Clem. ad Corinth. Ep. 1. p. 58. Jun.

For we ſee that you have removed ſome who behaved themſelves well in their Office, out of their miniſtry blameleſly diſcharged by them.

Στασιάζειν πρὸς τοὺς πρεσβυτέρους.

Πρόσωπα προπετῆ καὶ αὐθάδη. p. 2.

Si quis voluntati noſtræ contraire præſumpſerit, indignationem omnipotentis Dei, ac Beatorum Petri & Pauli Apoſtoli ſe noverit incurſurum: in ſuch terms uſually the Pope's Bulls do end.

21. Among the Epiſtles of St. Cyprian, there are divers Epiſtles of him to ſeveral Popes (to Cornelius, to Lucius, to Stephanus) in the which, although written with great kindneſs and reſpect, yet no impartial Eye can diſcern any ſpecial regard to them, as to his Superiours in Power, or Paſtors in Doctrine, or Judges of Practice; he reporteth matters to them, he conferreth about Points with all freedom; he ſpeaketh his ſenſe and giveth his advice without any reſtraint or awe; he ſpareth not upon occaſion to reprove their practices, and to reject their opinions; he in his Addreſſes to them, and Diſcourſes of them, ſtyleth them Brethren and Collegues; and he continually treateth them as ſuch, upon even terms: When (ſaith he to the Clergy of Rome) dearest Brethren, there was among us an uncertain rumour concerning the deceaſe of the good man my Collegue, Fabianus; upon which words Rigaltius had cauſe to remark, How like an equal and follow-citizen doth the Biſhop of Carthage mention the Biſhop of Rome, even to the Roman Clergy? but would not any man now be deemed rude and ſawcy, who ſhould talk in that ſtyle of the Pope?

Cy.Ep. 41, 42, 43, 45, 47, 49, 54, 55, 57, 58, 67, 72.

Et quamquam ſciam, frater chariſſime, pro mutua dilectione, quam debemus & exhibemus invicem nobis, florentiſſimo illic clero tecum præſidenti, &c. Ep. 55.

And although I know, moſt dear brother, out of the mutual love and reſpect, which we owe and yield one to another, &c.

Cùm de exceſſu boni viri Collegæ mei, rumor apud nos incertus eſſet, Collegæ chariſſimi——Cypr. Ep. 4.

Quàm ex æquo, & civilis mentio Epiſcopi Romani ab Epiſcopo Carthaginis apud Clerum? Rigalt. Ibid.

Pope Cornelius alſo to St. Cyprian hath ſome Epiſtles, wherein no glimpſe doth appear of any Superiority aſſumed by him. But of St. Cyprian's judgment and demeanour toward Popes we ſhall have occaſion to ſpeak more largely, in a way more poſitively oppoſite to the Roman pretences.

Cypr. Ep. 46, 48.

Euſebius citeth divers long paſſages out of an Epiſtle of Cornelius to Fabius Biſhop of Antioch againſt Novatus; wherein no mark of this Supremacy doth appear; although the magnitude and flouriſhing State of the Roman Church is deſcribed, for aggravation of Novatus his Schiſm, and Ambition.

Euſeb. 6. 43.

Pope Julius hath a notable long Epiſtle, extant in one of Athanaſius's Apologies, unto the Biſhops aſſembled at Antioch; wherein he had the faireſt occaſion that could be to aſſert and inſiſt upon this Sovereign Authority, they flatly denying, and impugning it; queſtioning his proceedings as ſingular, ſuppoſing him ſubject to the Laws of the Church no leſs than any other Biſhop; and downrightly affirming each of themſelves to be his equal; about which Point he thought good not to contend with them; but waving pretences to Superiority, he juſtifieth his actions by reaſons, grounded on the merit of the cauſe, ſuch as any other Biſhop might alledge: But this Epiſtle I ſhall have more particular occaſion to diſcuſs.

Pope Liberius hath an Epiſtle to St. Athanaſius, wherein he not only (for his direction and ſatisfaction) doth inquire his opinion about the Point; but profeſſeth, in complement perchance, that he ſhall obediently follow it; Write, ſaith he, whether you do think as we do and juſt ſo about the true faith; that I may be undoubtedly aſſured about what you think good to command me; was not that ſpoken indeed like a courteous Sovereign, and an accompliſhed Judge in matters of Faith? The ſame Pope in the head of the Weſtern, doth write to a knot of Eaſtern Biſhops, whom they call their beloved Brethern and fellow Miniſters; and in a brotherly ſtrain, not like an Emperour.

Γράψον, εἰ οὕτω φρονεῖς καθὸ καὶ ἡμεῖς, καὶ τὰ ἴσα ἐν ἀληθινῇ πίστει· ἵνα κἀγὼ πεποιθὼς ὦ ἀδιακρίτως περὶ ὧν ἀξιοῖς κελεύειν μοι. Liber. ad Ath. Tom. 1. p. 243.

Socr. 4. 12.

In the time of Damaſus, Succeſſor to Liberius, St. Baſil hath divers Epiſtles to the Weſtern Biſhops, wherein having repreſented and bewailed the wretched ſtate of the Eaſtern Churches, then over-born with Hereſies, and unſettled by Factions, he craveth their Charity, their Prayers, their ſympathy, their comfort, their brotherly aid; by affording to the Orthodox and ſound Party, the countenance of their Communion, by joining with them in contention for Truth and Peace; for that the Communion of ſo great Churches would be of mighty weight to ſupport and ſtrengthen their Cauſe; giving credit thereto among the People, and inducing the Emperour to deal fairly with them, in reſpect to ſuch a multitude of adherents; eſpecially of thoſe which were at ſuch a diſtance, and not ſo immediately ſubject to the Eaſtern Emperour; for, If, ſaith he, very many of you do concur unanimouſly in the ſame opinion, it is manifeſt, that the multitude of conſenter's will make the Doctrine to be received without contradiction; and, I know, ſaith he again, writing to Athanaſius about theſe matters, but one way of redreſs to our Churches, the conſpiring with us of the Weſtern Biſhops, the which being obtained, would probably yield ſome advantage to the publick, the ſecular Power revering the credibility of the multitude, and the people all about following them without repugnance: and, You, ſaith he to the Weſtern Biſhops, the farther you dwell from them, the more credible you will be to the people.

Ep. 61. 69. 70, 74, 182.

Ὑμᾶς παρακαλοῦμεν συμπαθῆσαι ἡμῶν τῇ διαιρέσει. Ep. 61.

Εἴτι οὖν παραμύθιον ἀγάπης, εἴτις κοινωνία πνεύματος, εἴτινα σπλάγχνα καὶ οἰκτιρμοὶ, κινήθητε πρὸς τὴν ἀντίληψιν ἡμῶν. Ibid.

> We beſeech you to have a fellow-feeling of our diſtractions.

{ If there be any comfort of love, any fellowſhip of the Spirit, any bowels and mercies, be ye moved with pity and commiſeration to help us.

Δότε χεῖρα τοῖς εἰς γόνυ κλιθεῖσι, συγκινηθήτω ἐφ' ἡμῖν τὰ ἀδελφικὰ ὑμῶν σπλάγχνα, προχυθήτω δάκρυα συμπαθείας Ep. 69.

Ἐπιβοησάμεθα τὴν ὑμετέραν ἀγάπην εἰς τὴν ἀντίληψιν ἡμῶν καὶ συμπάθειαν. Ep. 70.

Ἐλθεῖν τινὰς παρ' ὑμῶν εἰς ἐπίσκεψιν καὶ παραμυθίαν τῶν θλιβομένων. Ibid.

Vide Ep. 74. (εἰ μὴ διορθοῖντο, τοὺς κοινωνικοὺς, &c.

Ἐὰν δὲ καὶ συμφώνως πλείονες ὁμοῦ τὰ αὐτὰ δογματίσητε, δῆλον ὅτι τὸ πλῆθος τῶν δογματισάντων ἀναντίῤῥητον πᾶσι τὴν παραδοχὴν κατασκευάσει τοῦ δόγματος, Ep. 74. (Ep. 293.)

—— μίαν ἐπιγνοὺς ὁδὸν βοηθείας ταῖς καθ' ἡμᾶς Ἐκκλησίαις, τὴν παρὰ τῶν δυτικῶν Ἐπισκόπων σύμπνοιαν. —— Ep. 48.

Τάχα ἄν τι γένοιτο τοῖς κοινοῖς ὄφελος, τῶν τε κρατούντων τὸ ἀξιόπιστον τοῦ πλήθους δυσωπουμένων, καὶ τῶν ἑκασταχοῦ λαῶν ἀκολουθούντων αὐτοῖς ἀναντιῤῥήτως. Ibid.

Ὑμεῖς δὲ ὅσον μακρὰν αὐτῶν ἀπῳκισμένοι τυγχάνετε, τοσοῦτον πλέον παρὰ τοῖς λαοῖς ἀξιόπιστον ἔχετε. Ep. 74.

This indeed was according to the ancient Rule and Practice in ſuch caſes, that any Church being oppreſſed with Errour, or diſtracted with Contentions, ſhould from the Biſhops of other Churches, receive aid to the removal of thoſe inconveniences. That it was the Rule doth appear from what we have before ſpoken, and of the Practice there be many inſtances; for ſo did St. Cyprian ſend two of his Clergy to Rome to compoſe the Schiſm there, moved by Novatian againſt Cornelius; * ſo was St. Chryſoſtme called to Epheſus (although out of his Juriſdiction) to ſettle things there; ſo (to omit divers inſtances occurring in Hiſtory) St. Baſil himſelf was called by the Church of Iconium to viſit it, and to give it a Biſhop; although it did not belong to his ordinary inſpection; and he doth tell the Biſhops of the † Coaſts, that they ſhould have done well in ſending ſome to viſit and aſſiſt his Churches in their diſtreſſes.

---

* Quod ſervis Dei, & maxime Sacerdotibus juſtis & pacificis congruebat, frater chariſſime, miſeramus nuper Collegas noſtros Caldonium & Fortunatum, ut non tantum perſuaſione literarum noſtrarum, ſed præſentia ſua, & conſilio omnium veſtrum eniterentur, quantum poſſent, & elaborarent, ut ad Catholicæ Eccleſiæ unitatem ſciſſi corporis membra componeret —— Cypr. Ep. 42. ad Cornel. Pallad.

As it becomed the Servants of God, eſpecially righteous and peaceable Prieſts, moſt dear Brother, we lately ſent our Collegues Caldonius and Fortunatus, that they might, not only by the perſuaſion of our Letters, but alſo by their preſence, and the advice of you all, endeavour to their utmoſt and ſtrive to reduce the members of that divided Body to the Unity of the Catholick Church.

Αὕτη καλεῖ καὶ ἡμᾶς εἰς ἐπίσκεψιν, ὥστε αὐτῇ δοῦναι Ἐπίσκοπον. Baſ. Ep. 8. † παραλιῶν.

Ἀκόλουθον ἦν παρὰ τῆς ὑμετέρας ἀγάπης καὶ τῶν γνησίων ἀποστέλλεσθαι συνεχῶς, εἰς ἐπίσκεψιν ἡμῶν τῶν καταπονουμένων. Ep. 77.

But now how, I pray, cometh it to paſs, that in ſuch a caſe he ſhould not have a ſpecial recourſe to the Pope? but in ſo many addreſſes ſhould only wrap him up in a community? why ſhould he not humbly petition him to exert his Sovereign Authority for the relief of the Eaſtern Churches, laying his charge, and inflicting cenſures on the diſſenters? why ſhould he lay all the ſtreſs of his hopes on the conſent of the Weſtern Biſhops? why doth he not ſay a word of the dominion reſident in them over all the Church? theſe things are unconceivable, if he did take the Pope to be the man our Adverſaries ſay he is.

But St. Baſil had other notions; for indeed, being ſo wiſe and good a man, if he had taken the Pope for his Sovereign, he would not have taxed him as he doth, and ſo complain of him; when ſpeaking of the Weſtern Biſhops (whereof the Pope was the ringleader, and moſt concerned) he hath theſe words; (occaſioned as I conceive by the Biſhop of Rome's rejecting that excellent perſon, Meletius Biſhop of Antioch;) What we ſhould write, or how to join with thoſe that write, I am in doubt—for I am apt to ſay that of Diomedes, You ought not to requeſt, for he is a haughty man; for in truth obſervance doth render men of proud manners more contemptuous than otherwiſe they are. For if the Lord be propitious to us, what other addition do we need? but if the anger of God continue, what help can we have from the Weſtern Superciliouſneſs? who in truth neither know, nor endure to learn; but being prepoſſeſſed with falſe ſuſpicions, do now do thoſe things, which they did before in the cauſe of Marcellus; affecting to contend with thoſe who report the Truth to them; and eſtabliſhing Hereſie by themſelves: would that excellent Perſon, (the greateſt man of his time in reputation for Wiſdom and Piety) have thus, unbowelling his mind in an Epiſtle to a very eminent Biſhop, ſmartly reflected on the qualities and proceedings of the Weſtern Clergy, charging them with pride and haughtineſs? with a ſuſpicious and contentious humour, with incorrigible ignorance, and indiſpoſition to learn; if he had taken him, who was the leader in all theſe matters, to have been his Superiour and Sovereign? would he have added the following words, immediately touching him; I would in the common name have written to their ringleader, nothing indeed about Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, except only to intimate, that they neither do know the truth of things with us, nor do admit the way by which they may underſtand it; but in general about their being bound not to ſet upon thoſe, who were humbled with afflictions; nor ſhould judge themſelves dignifyed by pride, a ſin which alone ſufficeth to make one God's enemy: ſurely this great man knew better what belonged to government and manners, than in ſuch rude terms to accoſt his Sovereign: nor would he have given him that character, which he doth otherwhere: where ſpeaking of his Brother St. Gregory Nyſſene, he ſaith he was an unfit Agent to Rome; becauſe although his addreſs with a ſober man would find much reverence and eſteem; yet to a haughty, and reſerved man ſitting I know not where above, and thence not able to hear thoſe below ſpeaking the truth to him, what profit can there be to the publick from the converſe of ſuch a man, whoſe diſ-

Vid. Epiſt. 272, 273, 321, 325, 349.

Τῷ ὄντι γὰρ θεραπευόμενα τὰ ὑπερήφανα ἤθη ἑαυτῶν ὑπεροπτικώτερα γίνεσθαι πέφυκε. Baſ. Ep. 10. ad Euſeb. Samoſ. Ep.

—— Ποία βοήθεια ἡμῖν τῆς δυτικῆς ὀφρύος; οἳ τό γε ἀληθὲς οὔτε ἴσασιν οὔτε μαθεῖν ἀνέχονται, ψευδέσι δὲ ὑπονοίαις προειλημμένοι, ἐκεῖνα ποιοῦσι νῦν, ἃ πρότερον ἐπὶ Μαρκέλλῳ· πρὸς μὲν τοὺς τὴν ἀλήθειαν αὐτοῖς ἀπαγγέλλοντας φιλονεικήσαντες, τὴν δὲ αἵρεσιν δι' ἑαυτῶν βεβαιώσαντες. Ibid.

Ἐγὼ μὲν γὰρ αὐτὸς ἀντὶ τοῦ κοινοῦ σχήματος ἐβουλόμην αὐτῶν ἐπιστεῖλαι τῷ κορυφαίῳ, περὶ μὲν τῶν Ἐκκλησιαστικῶν οὐδὲν, εἰ μὴ ὅσον παραινίξασθαι, ὅτι οὔτε ἴσασιν τὴν παρ' ἡμῖν τὴν ἀλήθειαν, οὔτε τὴν ὁδὸν δι' ἧς ἂν μάθοιεν καταδέχονται. καθόλου δὲ περὶ τοῦ μὴ δεῖν τοῖς ὑπὸ τῶν πειρασμῶν ταπεινωθεῖσιν ἐπιτίθεσθαι, μηδὲ ἀξίωμα κρίνειν ὑπερηφανίαν, ἁμάρτημα, καὶ μόνον ἀρκοῦν ἔχθραν ποιῆσαι εἰς Θεόν. Ibid.

Καὶ συγγνώμονι μὲν ἀνδρὶ αἰδέσιμον αὐτοῦ καὶ πολλοῦ ἀξίαν τὴν συντυχίαν. ὑψηλῷ δὲ καὶ μετεώρῳ, ἄνω που καθημένῳ καὶ διὰ τοῦτο ἀκούειν τῶν χαμόθεν αὐτῷ τὴν ἀλήθειαν φθεγγομένων μὴ δυναμένῳ, τί ἂν γένοιτο ὄφελος τοῖς κοινοῖς, παρὰ τῆς τοῦ τοιούτου ἀνδρὸς ὁμιλίας, ὃς ἀλλότριον ἔχει θωπείας ἀνελευθέρου τὸ ἦθος. Baſ. Ep. 250.

Anaſt. ad Joh. Hier. apud Hier.

poſition is averſe from illiberal flattery? But theſe ſpeeches ſute with that conceit, which St. Baſil (as Baronius I know not whence reporteth) expreſſed by ſaying, I hate the pride of that Church; which humour in them that good man would not be guilty of foſtering by too much obſequiouſneſs.

Tom. 7. Epiſt. 122.

Vid. Laun. Epiſt. 1, 3.

St. Chryſtome, having by the practices of envious men combined againſt him, in a packed aſſembly of Biſhops, upon vain ſurmiſes, been ſentenced and driven from his See, did thereupon write an Epiſtle to Pope Innocent I. Biſhop of Rome, together with his Brethren the Biſhops of Italy; therein repreſenting his caſe, complaining of the wrong, vindicating his innocency, diſplaying the iniquity of the proceedings againſt him, together with the miſchievous conſequences of them toward the whole Church, then requiring his ſuccour for redreſs: yet, (although the ſenſe of his caſe, and care of his intereſt were likely to ſuggeſt the greateſt difference that could be) neither the ſtyle, which is very reſpectful, nor the matter, which is very copious, do imply any acknowledgment of the Pope's Supremacy: He doth not addreſs to him as to a Governour of all, who could by his Authority command juſtice to be done, but as to a brother, and a friend of innocence, from whoſe endeavour he might procure relief; He had recourſe not to his Sovereign power, but to his brotherly love; He informed his Charity, not appealed to his bar; He in ſhort did no more than implore his aſſiſtance in an Eccleſiaſtical way; that he would expreſs his reſentment of ſo irregular dealings, that he would avow communion with him, as with an Orthodox Biſhop innocent and abuſed, that he would procure his cauſe to be brought to a fair trial in a Synod of Biſhops, lawfully called and indifferently affected: Had the good man had any conceit of the Pope's Supremacy, he would, one would think, have framed his addreſs in other terms, and ſued for another courſe of proceeding in his behalf; but it is plain enough that he had no ſuch notion of things, nor had any ground for ſuch a one. For indeed Pope Innocent in his anſwer to him, could do no more than exhort him to patience; in another to his Clergy and People could only comfort them, declare his diſlike of the Adverſaries proceedings and grounds; ſignifie his intentions to procure a general Synod, with hopes of a redreſs thence; his Sovereign power, it ſeems, not availing to any ſuch purpoſes, But what (ſaith he) can we do in ſuch caſes? a Synodical cognizance is neceſſary, which we heretofore did ſay ought to be called; the which alone can allay the motions of ſuch tempeſts.

Πρὸς τὴν ὑμετέραν ἀναδραμεῖν ἀγάπην.

Διαλέξομαι ὑμῶν τὴν ἀγάπην.

—— Ἡμᾶς δὲ τοὺς οὐχ ἁλόντας, οὐκ ἐλεγχομένους, οὐκ ἀποδειχθέντας ὑπευθύνους, τῶν γραμμάτων τῶν ὑμετέρων δότε ἀπολαύειν συνεχῶς, καὶ τῆς ἀγάπης, καὶ πάντων τῶν ἄλλων, ὥσπερ καὶ ἔμπροσθεν.

But as for us, we who are not condemned nor convicted, nor proved guilty, let us continually enjoy the benefit of your Letters, and Love, and all other things as before.

Ἀλλὰ τί κατὰ τῶν τοιούτων νῦν ἐν τῷ παρόντι ποιήσωμεν; ἀναγκαία ἐστὶ διάγνωσις συνοδικὴ ἣν καὶ πάλαι ἔφημεν συναθροιστέαν· μόνη γάρ ἐστιν, ἥτις δύναται τὰς κινήσεις τῶν τοιούτων καταστεῖλαι καταιγίδων. —— Soz. 8. 26.

It is true that the later Popes (Siricius, Anaſtaſius, Innocent, Zozimus, Bonifacius, Celeſtinus, &c.) after the Sardican Council in their Epiſtles to the Weſtern Biſhops, over whom they had encroached, and who were over-powered by them, &c. do ſpeak in ſomewhat more lofty ſtrain; but are more modeſt toward thoſe of the Eaſt, who could not bear, &c.

22. Father; It is moſt prodigious that in the diſputes managed by the Fathers againſt Hereticks (the Gnoſticks, Valentinians, Marcionites, Montaniſts, Manichees, Paulianiſts, Arians, &c.) they ſhould not, even in the firſt place alledge and urge the ſentence of the Univerſal Paſtour and Judge, as a moſt evidently concluſive argument, as the moſt efficacious and compendious method of convincing and ſilencing them: Had this point been well proved and preſſed, then without any more concertations from Scripture, tradition, reaſon, all Hereticks had been quite defeated; and nothing then could more eaſily have been proved, if it had been true when the light of tradition did ſhine ſo brightly; nothing indeed had been to ſenſe more conſpicuous, than the continual exerciſe of ſuch an Authority.

We ſee now among thoſe, who admit ſuch an Authority, how ſurely when it may be had it is alledged, and what ſway it hath, to the determination of any controverſie; and ſo it would have been then, if it had been then as commonly known and avowed.

23. Whereas divers of the Fathers purpoſely do treat on methods of confuting Hereticks, it is ſtrange they ſhould be ſo blind or dull, as not to hit on this moſt proper and obvious way of referring debates to the deciſion of him, to whoſe Office of Univerſal Paſtor and Judge it did belong: Particularly one would wonder at Vincentius Lirinenſis; that he on ſet purpoſe, with great care diſcourſing about the means of ſetling points of Faith, and of overthrowing Hereſies, ſhould not light upon this notable way, by having recourſe to the Pope's Magiſterial ſentence; yea, that indeed he ſhould exclude it; for he (after moſt intent ſtudy, and diligent inquiry, conſulting the beſt and wiſeſt men) could find but two ways of doing it: I (ſaith he) did always and from almoſt every one receive this anſwer, That if either I or any other would find out the frauds, and avoid the ſnares of up-ſtart Hereticks, and continue ſound and upright in the true Faith, he ſhould guard and ſtrengthen his Faith, God helping him, by theſe two means, viz. Firſt by the Authority of the Divine Law, and then by the Tradition of the Catholick Church. And again, We before have ſaid, that this hath always been, and is at preſent the Cuſtom of Catholicks, that they prove their Faith by theſe two ways, Firſt by Authority of the Divine Canon, then by the Tradition of the Univerſal Church.

Sæpe igitur magno ſtudio, & ſummâ attentione perquirens à quamplurimis ſanctitate & doctrina præſtantibus viris, &c. p. 316. (in edit. Baluſ.)

Hujuſmodi ſemper reſponſum ab omnibus ferè retuli, quod ſive ego, ſive quis alius vellet exurgentium hæreticorum fraudes deprehendere, laqueóſque vitare, & in fide ſana ſanus atque integer permanere, duplici modo munire fidem ſuam Domino adjuvante deberet; Primo ſcilicet divinæ legis Authoritate, tum deinde Eccleſiæ Catholicæ Traditione. p. 317.

Diximus in ſuperioribus hanc fuiſſe ſemper & eſſe hodie Catholicorum conſuetudinem ut fidem veram duobus his modis adprobent; Primùm divini Canonis Authoritate, deinde Eccleſiæ Catholicæ Traditione. p. 364.

Is it not ſtrange that he (eſpecially being a Weſtern man, living in thoſe parts, where the Pope had got much ſway, and who doth expreſs great reverence to the Apoſtolick See) ſhould omit that way of determining points, which of all, (according to the modern conceits about the Pope) is moſt ready and moſt ſure.

24. In like manner Tertullian profeſſeth the Catholicks in his time to uſe ſuch compendious methods of confuting Hereticks: We (ſaith he) when we would diſpatch againſt Hereticks for the Faith of the Goſpel, do commonly uſe theſe ſhort ways, which do maintain both the order of times preſcribing againſt the lateneſs of impoſtours, and the Authority of the Churches patronizing Apoſtolical tradition;

His ferè compendiis utimur, quum de Evangelii fide adverſus Hæreticos expedimur, defendentibus & temporum ordinem poſteritati falſariorum præſcribentem, & Auctoritatem Eccleſiarum traditioni Apoſtolorum patrocinantem. Tertull. in Marc. 4. 5.

* but why did he skip over a more compendious way, than any of thoſe, namely, ſtanding to the judgment of the Roman Biſhop?

* Solemus hæreticis compendii gratiâ de poſteritate præſcribere. Tertull. contra Hermog. cap. 1.

25. It is true that both he, and St. Irenæus before him, diſputing againſt the Hereticks of their times, who had introduced pernicious novelties of their own deviſing, when they alledge the general conſent of Churches (planted by the Apoſtles, and propagated by continual ſucceſſions of Biſhops from thoſe whom the Apoſtles did ordain) in doctrines and practices oppoſite to thoſe devices, as a good argument (and ſo indeed it then was, next to a demonſtration) againſt them, do produce the Roman Church, as a principal one among them, upon ſeveral obvious accounts; And this indeed argueth the Roman Church to have been then one competent witneſs, or credible retainer of tradition; as alſo were the other Apoſtolical Churches, to whoſe Teſtimony they likewiſe appeal; but what is this to the Roman Biſhop's judicial Power in ſuch caſes? why do they not urge that in plain terms? they would certainly have done ſo, if they had known it, and thought it of any validity.

The like diſcourſe againſt Hereticks doth Clemens Alex. uſe Strom. 7. p. 549.

Do but mark their words, involving the force of their argumentation; When (ſaith Irenæus) we do again (after allegation of Scripture) appeal to that tradition, which is from the Apoſtles, which by ſucceſſions of Presbyters is preſerved in the Church: and, That (ſaith Tertullian) will appear to have been delivered by the Apoſtles, which hath been kept as holy in the Apoſtolical Churches: let us ſee what milk the Corinthians did draw from Paul; what the Philippians, the Theſſalonians, the Epheſians do read: what alſo the Romans our nearer neighbours do ſay, to whom both Peter and Paul did leave the Goſpel ſealed with their Bloud; we have alſo the Churches nurſed by John, &c. Again, It is therefore manifeſt (ſaith he, in his Preſcriptions againſt Hereticks) that every doctrine, which doth conſpire with thoſe Apoſtolical Churches, in which the Faith originally was planted, is to be accounted true; as undoubtedly holding that, which the Churches did receive from the Apoſtles, the Apoſtles from Chriſt, and Chriſt from God; but all other doctrine is to be prejudged falſe, which doth think againſt the truth of the Churches, and of the Apoſtles, and of Chriſt, and of God: their argumentation then in ſhort is plainly this, that the conſpiring of the Churches in doctrines contrary to thoſe, which the Hereticks vented, did irrefragably ſignfie thoſe doctrines to be Apoſtolical; which diſcourſe doth no-wiſe favour the Roman pretences, but indeed, if we do weigh it, is very prejudicial thereto; it thereby appearing, that Chriſtian Doctrines then in the canvaſſing of points and aſſuring tradition had no peculiar regard to the Roman Churches teſtimonies, no deference at all to the Roman Biſhop's Authority; (not otherwiſe at leaſt than to the Authority of one ſingle Biſhop yielding atteſtation to tradition.)

Cùm autem ad eam iterum traditionem, quæ eſt ab Apoſtolis, quæ per ſucceſſores Presbyterorum in Eccleſiis cuſtoditur, provocamus—— Iren. 3. 2.

Conſtabit id eſſe ab Apoſtolis traditum quod apud Eccleſias Apoſtolicas fuerit ſacroſanctum; videamus quod lac à Paulo Corinthii hauſerint; quid legant Philippenſes, Theſſalonicenſes, Epheſii; quid etiam Romani de proximo ſonent; quibus Evangelium & Petrus & Paulus ſanguine quoque ſuo ſignatum reliquerunt; habemus & Johannis alumnas Eccleſias, &c. Adv. Marc. 4. 5.

Conſtat proinde omnem doctrinam, quæ cum illis Eccleſiis Apoſtolicis matricibus & originalibus fidei conſpiret, veritati deputandum, id ſine dubio tenentem quod Eccleſiæ ab Apoſtolis, Apoſtoli à Chriſto, Chriſtus à Deo ſuſcepit; reliquam vero doctrinam de mendacio præjudicandum, quæ ſapiat contra veritatem Eccleſiarum, & Apoſtolorum, & Chriſti, & Dei. Tert. de præſcr. 21.

26. It is odd, that even old Popes themſelves in elaborate tracts diſputing againſt Hereticks, (as Pope Celeſtine againſt Neſtorius and Pelagius, Pope Leo againſt Eutyches——) do content themſelves to urge teſtimo-nies of Scripture, and arguments grounded thereon; not alledging their own definitive Authority, or uſing this perlous argumentation, I, the Supreme Doctour of the Church, and Judge of Controverſies, do aſſert thus; and therefore you are obliged to ſubmit your aſſent.

27. It is matter of amazement, if the Pope were ſuch as they would have him to be, that in ſo many bulky Volumes of ancient Fathers, living through many ages after Chriſt, in thoſe vaſt treaſuries of learning and knowledge, wherein all ſorts of truth are diſplayed, all ſorts of duty are preſſed; this momentous point of doctrine and practice ſhould no-where be expreſſed in clear and peremptory terms; (I ſpeak ſo, for that by wreſting words, by impertinent application, by ſtraining conſequences the moſt ridiculous poſitions imaginable may be deduced from their Writings.)

It is ſtrange that ſomewhere or other, at leaſt incidentally, in their Commentaries upon the Scripture, wherein many places concerning the Church and its Hierarchy do invite to ſpeak of the Pope; in their Treatiſes about the Prieſthood, about the Unity and Peace of the Church, about Hereſie and Schiſm; in their Epiſtles concerning Eccleſiaſtical Affairs; in their Hiſtorical Narrations about occurrences in the Church, in their concertations with heterodox Adverſaries, they ſhould not frequently touch it, they ſhould not ſometimes largely dwell upon it.

Is it not marvellous, that Origen, St. Hilary, St. Cyril, St. Chryſoſtome, St. Hierome, St. Auſtin, in their Commentaries and Tractates upon thoſe places of Scripture [Tu es Petrus. Paſce oves.] whereon they now build the Papal Authority, ſhould be ſo dull and drowſie as not to ſay a word concerning the Pope?

That St. Auſtin in his ſo many elaborate Tractates againſt the Donatiſts, (wherein he diſcourſeth ſo prolixly about the Church, its Unity, Communion, Diſcipline) ſhould never inſiſt upon the duty of Obedience to the Pope, or charge thoſe Schiſmaticks with their rebellion againſt him, or alledge his Authority againſt them?

If we conſider that the Pope was Biſhop of the Imperial City, the Metropolis of the World; that he thence was moſt eminent in rank, did abound in wealth, did live in great ſplendour and reputation; had many dependences, and great opportunities to gratify, and relieve many of the Clergy; that of the Fathers, whoſe Volumes we have, all well affected towards him, divers were perſonally obliged to him, for his ſupport in their diſtreſs (as Athanaſius, Chryſoſtome, Theodoret,) or as to their Patrons and Benefactours (as St. Hierome) divers could not but highly reſpect him as Patron of the cauſe wherein they were engaged (as Baſil, Gregory Nazianzen, Hilary, Gregory Nyſſene, Ambroſe, Auſtin:) ſome were his partizans in a common quarrel (as Cyril:) divers of them lived in places and times wherein he had got much ſway, (as all the Weſtern Biſhops:) that he had then improved his Authority much beyond the old limits: that all the Biſhops of the Weſtern or Latine Churches had a peculiar dependence on him (eſpecially after that by advantage of his Station, by favour of the Court, by colour of the Sardican Canons, by voluntary deferences and ſubmiſſions, by ſeveral tricks he had wound himſelf to meddle in moſt of their chief Affairs:) that hence divers Biſhops were tempted to admire, to court, to flatter him; that divers aſpiring Popes were apt

Τῆς Ῥωμαίων ἐπισκοπῆς ὁμοίως τῇ Ἀλεξανδρέων πέρα τῆς ἱερωσύνης ἐπὶ δυναστείαν ἤδη πάλαι προελθούσης. Socr. 7. 11.

The Biſhoprick of Rome is like to that of Alexandria, having now long ago arrived to that height of Power above and beyond the Prieſthood.

to encourage the commenders of their Authority which they themſelves were apt to magnifie and inculcate; conſidering, I ſay, ſuch things, it is a wonder, that in ſo many voluminous diſcourſes ſo little ſhould be ſaid favouring this pretence, ſo nothing that proveth it, [ſo much that croſſeth it, ſo much indeed (as I hope to ſhew) that quite overthroweth it.]

If it be asked how we can prove this, I anſwer, that (beſide who carefully peruſeth thoſe Old Books, will eaſily ſee it) we are beholden to our Adverſaries for proving it to us, when they leaſt intended us ſuch a favour; for that no clear and cogent paſſages for proof of this pretence can be thence fetched, is ſufficiently evident from the very allegations, which after their moſt diligent raking in old Books they produce; the which are ſo few, and fall ſo very ſhort of their purpoſe, that without much ſtretching they ſignifie nothing.

28. It is monſtrous, that in the Code of the Catholick Church (conſiſting of the decrees of ſo many Synods, concerning Eccleſiaſtical order and diſcipline) there ſhould not be one Canon directly declaring his Authority; nor any mention made of him, except thrice accidentally; Conc. Nic. Can. 6. once upon occaſion of declaring the Authority of the Alexandrine Biſhop, Conc. Conſt. Can. 2. the other upon occaſion of aſſigning to the Biſhop of Conſtantinople the ſecond place of honour, and equal privileges with him. Conc. Chalc. Can. 28.

If it be objected, that theſe Diſcourſes are negative, and therefore of ſmall force; I anſwer, that therefore they are moſt proper to aſſert ſuch a negative propoſition; for how can we otherwiſe better ſhew a thing not to be, than by ſhewing it to have no footſtep there, where it is ſuppoſed to ſtand? how can we more clearly argue a matter of right to want proof, than by declaring it not to be extant in the Laws grounding ſuch right; not taught by the Maſters, who profeſs to inſtruct in ſuch things; not teſtifyed in records concerning the exerciſe of it? ſuch arguments indeed in ſuch caſes are not merely negative, but rather privative; proving things not to be, becauſe not affirmed there, where in reaſon they ought to be affirmed; ſtanding therefore upon poſitive Suppoſitions, that Holy Scripture, that general tradition are not imperfect and lame toward their deſign; that ancient Writers were competently intelligent, faithful, diligent; that all of them could not conſpire in perpetual ſilence about things, of which they had often fair occaſion, and great reaſon to ſpeak: In fine, ſuch conſiderations, however they may be deluded by Sophiſtical Wits, will yet bear great ſway, and often will amount near to the force of demonſtration, with men of honeſt prudence. However we ſhall proceed to other diſcourſes more direct and poſitive againſt the Popiſh Doctrine.

II. Secondly, we ſhall ſhew that this pretence, upon ſeveral accounts, is contrary to the Doctrine of Holy Scripture.

1. This pretence doth thwart the Holy Scripture, by aſſigning to another the Prerogatives and peculiar Titles appropriated therein to our Lord.

1 Cor. 8.6. The Scripture aſſerteth him to be our only Sovereign Lord and King: 12. 5. To us (ſaith it) there is one Lord; and, One King ſhall be King over them; Eph. 4. 5. Ez. 37.22. who ſhall reign over the houſe of David for ever; and of his Kingdom there Luk. 1.33. ſhall be no end; who is the only Potentate; the King of Kings and Lord of 1 Ti. 6. 15. Lords; the One Law-giver, who is able to ſave and to deſtroy. Jam. 4.12.

1 Pet. 5.4. The Scripture ſpeaketh of one Arch Paſtour and great Shepherd of the 2. 25. Sheep; excluſively to any other; for I will (ſaid God in the Pro- Heb. 13.20 Ez. 34.23. phet) ſet up one Shepherd over them; and he ſhall feed the Sheep:

and There (ſaith our Lord himſelf) ſhall be one Fold, and one Shepherd; who that ſhall be, he expreſſeth adding, I am the good Shepherd; the good Shepherd giveth his life for the Sheep (by Pope Boniface his good leave, who maketh Saint Peter or himſelf this Shepherd.)

Joh. 10.16. 11.14. Extrav. Com. lib. 1. tit. 8. c. 1.

The Scripture telleth us, that we have one High Prieſt of our Profeſſion, anſwerable to that one in the Jewiſh Church, his Type.

Heb. 3.1. Heb. 9. 7, 24.

The Scripture informeth us, that there is but one Supreme Doctor, Guide, Father of Chriſtians, prohibiting us to acknowledge any other for ſuch; Ye are all Brethren; and call ye not any one Father upon Earth; for one is your Father, even he that is in Heaven; Neither be ye called Maſters, for one is your Maſter, even Chriſt. Good Pope Gregory (not the Seventh of that name) did take this for a good argument; for What therefore, deareſt Brother, (ſaid he to John of Conſtantinople) wilt thou ſay in that terrible trial of the Judge who is coming; who doſt affect to be called not only Father, but General Father in the World.

Matth. 23. 8, 9.

Quid ergò, frater chariſſime, in illo terribili examine venientis judicis dicturus es, qui non ſolum Pater, ſed etiam generalis Pater in Mundo vocari appetis? Greg. M. Epiſt. 4. 38.

The Scripture repreſenteth the Church as a building whereof Chriſt himſelf is the chief Corner-ſtone; as a Family, whereof he being the Pater-familias, as all others are fellow-ſervants; as one Body, having one Head; whom God hath given to be head over all things to the Church, which is his Body.

Eph. 2.20. 1 Pet. 2.4.

Heb. 3. 6. Mat. 10. 25.
Eph. 4. 4. 2. 16. Rom. 12. 5.
1 Cor. 12. 13. Eph. 1.22. 4. 15. 5. 23.
Col. 1. 18. Hoſ. 1. 11. One Head.

He is the One Spouſe of the Church, which title one would think he might leave peculiar to our Lord; there being no Vice-husbands; yet hath he been bold even to claim that; as may be ſeen in the Conſtit. of Pope Greg. X. in one of their General Synods.

Joh. 3. 29. Eph. 5. 23.
2 Cor. 11. 2. ἑνὶ ἀνδρί.

Sext. Decret. lib. 1. tit 6. cap. 3.

It ſeemeth therefore a Sacrilegious arrogance (derogating from our Lord's Honour) for any man to aſſume or admit thoſe Titles of Sovereign of the Church, Head of the Church, our Lord, Arch-Paſtor, Higheſt-Prieſt, Chief Doctor, Maſter, Father, Judge of Chriſtians; upon what pretence, or under what diſtinction ſoever: theſe pompatick, fooliſh, proud, perverſe, wicked, profane words; theſe names of ſingularity, elation, vanity, blaſphemy; (to borrow the Epithets with which Pope Gregory I. doth brand the Titles of Univerſal Biſhop, and Oecumenical Patriarch, no leſs modeſt in ſound, and far more innocent in meaning, than thoſe now aſcribed to the Pope) are therefore to be rejected; not only becauſe they are injurious to all other Paſtors, and to the People of God's heritage; but becauſe they do encroach upon our only Lord, to whom they do only belong; much more to uſurp the things, which they do naturally ſignify, is a horrible invaſion upon our Lord's Prerogative.

Baron. A. 34. § 208.

Vid. Greg. I. Epiſt. lib. 4. Ep. 32, 34, 36, 38, 39. lib. 6. Ep. 24, 28, 30, 31. lib. 7 Epiſt. 70.

Thus hath that great Pope taught us to argue, in words expreſly condemning ſome, and conſequently all of them, together with the things which they ſignify: What (ſaith he, writing to the Biſhop of Conſtantinople, who had admitted the title of Univerſal Biſhop or Patriarch) wilt thou ſay to Chriſt the Head of the Univerſal Church, in the trial of the laſt Judgment, who by the appellation of UNIVERSAL doſt endeavour to ſubject all his Members to thee? whom I pray doſt thou mean to imitate in ſo perverſe a word, but him who deſpiſing the Legions of Angels

Tu quid Chriſto Univerſalis Eccleſiæ capiti in extremi judicii dicturus examine, qui cuncta ejus Membra tibimet coneris Univerſalis appellatione ſupponere? quis rogo in hoc tam perverſo vocabulo niſi ille ad imitandum proponitur, qui deſpectis Angelorum Legionibus ſecum ſoconſtituted

cialiter conſtitutis ad culmen conatus eſt ſingularitatis erumpere, ut & nulli ſubeſſe, & ſolus omnibus præeſſe videretur: qui etiam dixit, In cœlum conſcendam, ſuper aſtra cœli exaltabo ſolium meum —— quid enim fratres tui omnes Univerſalis Eccleſiæ Epiſcopi, niſi aſtra cœli ſunt? quibus dum cupis temetipſum vocabulo elationis præponere, eorúmq; nomen tui comparatione calcare— Greg. Ep.4.38.

conſtituted in fellowſhip with him, did endeavour to break forth unto the top of Singularity, that he might both be ſubject to none, and alone be over all? who alſo ſaid, I will aſcend into heaven, and will exalt my throne above the ſtars—— for what are thy brethren all the Biſhops of the Univerſal Church, but the ſtars of heaven; to whom while by this haughty word thou deſireſt to prefer thy ſelf, and to trample on their name in compariſon to thee, what doſt thou ſay, but I will climb into heaven? ——

Jactantiam ſumpſit ità ut univerſa ſibi tentet adſcribere, & omnia quæ ſoli uni capiti cohærent, videlicet Chriſto, per elationem pompatici ſermonis ejuſdem Chriſti ſibi ſtudeat membra ſubjugare. Gr. M. Ep.4.36.

The ſame words we have in the Epiſtle of P. Pelagius (Predeceſſor of St. Gregory) to the Biſhops of Conſtantinople (P. Pelagii Ep.8.)

And again, in another Epiſtle to the Biſhops of Alexandria and Antioch, he taxeth the ſame Patriarch for aſſuming to boaſt, ſo that he attempteth to aſcribe all things to himſelf, and ſtudieth by the elation of pompous ſpeech to ſubject to himſelf all the members of Chriſt, which do cohere to One Sole Head, namely, to Chriſt.

Ego autem fidenter dico, quia quiſquis ſe Univerſalem Sacerdotem vocat, vel vocari deſiderat, in elatione ſua Antichriſtum præcurrit quia ſuperbiendo ſe cæteris præponit. (Greg. I. lib.6. Ep 30.) Nec diſpari ſuperbia ad errorem ducitur; quia ſicut perverſus ille Deus videri vult ſuper omnes homines; ità quiſquis eſt, qui ſolus Sacerdos appellari appetit, ſuper cæteros Sacerdotes ſe extollit. (ad Mauric. Aug.)

Again, I confidently ſay, that whoever doth call himſelf Univerſal Biſhop, or deſireth to be ſo called, doth in his elation forerun Antichriſt, becauſe he pridingly doth ſet himſelf before all others.

If theſe Argumentations be ſound, or ſignify any thing, what is the pretence of Univerſal Sovereignty and Paſtorſhip, but a piece of Luciferian arrogance? who can imagine, that even this Pope could approve, could aſſume, could exerciſe it? if he did, was he not monſtrouſly ſenſeleſs and above meaſure impudent to uſe ſuch diſcourſes, which ſo plainly, without altering a word, might be retorted upon him; which are built upon ſuppoſitions that it is unlawful and wicked to aſſume Superiority over the Church, over all Biſhops, over all Chriſtians; the which indeed (ſeeing never Pope was of greater repute, or did write in any caſe more ſolemnly and ſeriouſly) have given to the pretences of his Succeſſors ſo deadly a wound, that no balm of Sophiſtical interpretation can be able to heal it.

Vid. P. Pelag. Ep.3.

We ſee that according to St. Gregory M. our Lord Chriſt is the one only Head of the Church; to whom for company let us adjoin St. Baſil M. (that we may have both Greek and Latin for it,) who ſaith, that (according to Saint Paul) we are the body of Chriſt, and members one of another, becauſe it is manifeſt, that the one and ſole truly head, which is Chriſt, doth hold and connect each one to another unto concord.

Κρατούσης δηλονότι ϗ συναπτούσης ἕκαστον τῷ ἄλλῳ πρὸς ὁμόνοιαν τῆς μιᾶς ϗ μόνης ἀληθῶς κεφαλῆς, ἥτις ἐστὶν ὁ Χριστός. Baſ. M. de Jud. div. Tom.2. p.261.

Totus Chriſtus Caput & Corpus eſt; Caput unigenitus Dei Filius, & corpus ejus Eccleſiæ, Sponſus & Sponſa, duo in carne una. Quicunque de ipſo Capite ab Scripturis Sanctis diſſentiunt, etiamſi in omnibus locis inveniantur in quibus Eccleſia deſignata eſt, non ſunt in Eccleſia, &c. Aug. de Unit. Eccl. cap. 4. Vid. contra Petil. 3. 42.

Whole Chriſt is the Head of the Body; the Head the only begotten Son of God, and his Body the Church, the Bridegroom and the Spouſe, two in one fleſh. Whoever diſagree about the Head it ſelf from the Holy Scriptures though they are found in all places, in which the Church is deſigned, they are not in the Church, &c.

It was unhappily expreſſed by Bellarmine —— Eccleſia ſecluſo etiam Chriſto unum Caput habere debet. De Pont. R. 1. 9. §. Ac nè fortè. The Church even Chriſt himſelf being ſet aſide, ought to have one Head.

To decline theſe allegations of Scripture, they have forged diſtinctions, of ſeveral kinds of Churches, and ſeveral ſorts of Heads; the which evaſions I ſhall not particularly diſcourſe, ſeeing it may ſuffice to obſerve in general, that no ſuch diſtinctions have any place or any ground in Scripture; nor can well conſiſt with it; which ſimply doth repreſent the Church as one Kingdom, a Kingdom of Heaven, a Kingdom not of this world; all the Subjects whereof have their πολίτευμα in heaven, or are conſidered as members of a City there; ſo that it is vain to ſeek for a Sovereign thereof in this world; the which alſo doth to the Catholick Church ſojourning on earth uſually impart the name and attributes properly appertaining to the Church moſt univerſal (comprehenſive of all Chriſtians in heaven and upon earth) becauſe that is a viſible repreſentative of this, and we by joining in offices of piety with that do communicate with this; whence that which is ſaid of one (concerning the Unity of its King, its Head, its Paſtor, its Prieſt) is to be underſtood of the other; eſpecially conſidering that our Lord, according to his promiſe, is ever preſent with the Church here, governing it by the efficacy of his Spirit and Grace, ſo that no other corporeal or viſible Head of this Spiritual Body is needful.

Joh. 18. 36. Phil. 3. 20. Heb. 12. 22.

Act. 20. 28. Matt. 16. 18. 1 Cor. 12. 28. 15. 9. Gal. 1. 13.

Matt. 28. 20.

Chriſtus arbitrio & nutu ac præſentiâ ſuâ & præpoſitos ipſos, & Eccleſiam cum præpoſitis gubernat. Cypr. Ep. 69. Chriſt by his own arbitrement and power, and preſence, governs both the Biſhops themſelves, and the Church with the Biſhops.

It was to be ſure a viſible Headſhip, which St. Gregory did ſo eagerly impugn and exclaim againſt; for he could not apprehend the Biſhop of Conſtantinople ſo wild, as to affect a Juriſdiction over the Church myſtical or inviſible.

2. Indeed upon this very account the Romiſh pretence doth not well accord with Holy Scripture, becauſe it transformeth the Church into another kind of Body, than it was conſtituted by God, according to the repreſentation of it in Scripture; for there it is repreſented as a ſpiritual and heavenly Society, compacted by the bands of one faith, one hope, one Spirit of Charity; but this pretence turneth it into a worldly frame; united by the ſame bands of intereſt and deſign, managed in the ſame manner, by terrour and allurement, ſupported by the ſame props of force, of policy, of wealth, of reputation and ſplendor, as all other ſecular Corporations are.

Joh. 18. 26.

Eph. 4. 4, 5. 2 Cor. 10. 4.

Caput noſtrum, quod Chriſtus eſt, ad hoc ſua eſſe membra nos voluit, ut per compagem cha[illegible]atis & fidei unum nos in ſe corpus efficeret. Greg. M. Ep. 7. 111. Our Head, which is Chriſt, would therefore have us to be his members, that by the conjunction of charity and faith he might make us to be one body.

You may call it what you pleaſe, but it is evident that in truth the Papal Monarchy is a temporal Dominion, driving on worldly ends by worldly means; ſuch as our Lord did never mean to inſtitute; ſo that the Subjects thereof may with far more reaſon, than the People of Conſtantinople had, when their Biſhop Neſtorius did ſtop ſome of their Prieſts from contradicting him, ſay * We have a King, a Biſhop we have not; ſo that upon every Pope we may charge that, whereof Anthimus was accuſed, in the Synod of Conſtantinople, under Menas; that he did account the greatneſs and dignity of the Prieſthood to be not a ſpiritual charge of ſouls, but as a kind of politick rule.

This was that, which ſeeming to be affected by the Biſhop of Antioch, in encroachment upon the Church of Cyprus, the Fathers of the Epheſine Synod did endeavour to nip; enacting a Canon againſt all ſuch invaſions, leſt under pretext of holy diſcipline the pride of worldly autho- rity ſhould creep in; *and what pride of that kind could they mean beyond that which now the Popes do claim and exerciſe? Now, do I ſay, after that the Papal Empire hath ſwollen to ſuch a bulk; whereas ſo long ago, when it was but in its bud and ſtripling age, it was obſerved of it by a very honeſt Hiſtorian, that the Roman Epiſcopacy had long ſince advanced into a high degree of power beyond the Prieſthood.

* Βασιλέα ἔχομεν, Ἐπίσκοπον οὐκ ἔχομεν. Conc. Eph. part. cap. 30.

Τὸ τῆς ἀρχιερωσύνης μέγεθος καὶ ἀξίωμα οὐ πνευματικὴν ψυχῶν ἐπιστασίαν εἶναι λογισάμενος, ἀλλ' οἷον τινὰ πολιτικὴν ἀρχὴν, &c. Conc. ſub Men. Act 1. pag. 9.

Μηδὲ ἐν ἱερουργίαις προσχήματι ἐξουσίας κοσμικῆς τῦφος παρεισδύηται. Can. Eph. 1. Can. 8.

* This was that which, about the ſame time the Fathers of the African Synod do requeſt P. Celeſtine to forbear; ——nec permittere, ut fumoſum mundi faſtum Chriſti Eccleſiæ inducere videamur. Conc. Afr. ad P. Celeſt. 1.

Τῆς Ῥωμαίων Ἐπισκοπῆς ὁμοίως τῇ Ἀλεξανδρέων πέρα τῆς ἱερωσύνης ἐπὶ δυναστείαν πάλαι προελθούσης. Socr. 7. 11.

3. This pretence doth thwart the Scripture by deſtroying that brotherly co-ordination and equality, which our Lord did appoint among the Biſhops, and chief Paſtors of his Church: He did (as we before ſhewed) prohibit all his Apoſtles to aſſume any domination, or authoritative Superiority over one another; the which command, together with others concerning the Paſtoral function, we may well ſuppoſe to reach their Succeſſors; ſo did St. Hierom ſuppoſe, collecting thence that all Biſhops by original Inſtitution are equals, or that no one by our Lord's order may challenge Superiority over another; Where-ever (ſaith he) a Biſhop is, whether at Rome or at Eugubium, at Conſtantinople or at Rhegium, at Alexandria or at Thanis, he is of the ſame worth, and of the ſame Prieſthood; the Power of wealth, or lowneſs of poverty, do not make a Biſhop higher or lower, but all are Succeſſors of the Apoſtles; where, doth not he plainly deny the Biſhop of Eugubium to be inferior to him of Rome, as being no leſs a ſucceſſor of the Apoſtles than he? doth he not ſay theſe words, in way of proof, that the authority of the Roman Biſhop or Church was of no validity againſt the practice of other Biſhops and Churches? (upon occaſion of Deacons there taking upon them more than in other places, as Cardinal Deacons do now) which excludeth ſuch diſtinctions, as Scholaſtical fancies have deviſed to ſhift off his Teſtimony; the which he uttered ſimply, never dreaming of ſuch diſtinctions.

Ubicunque fuerit Epiſcopus ſive Romæ, ſive Eugubii, ſive Conſtantinopoli, ſive Rhegii, ſive Alexandriæ, ſive Thanis, ejuſdem meriti, ejuſdem & Sacerdotii; potentia divitiarum & paupertatis humilitas vel ſublimiorem vel inferiorem Epiſcopum non facit; cæterùm omnes Apoſtolorum Succeſſores ſunt. Hier. Ep. 85. (ad Evagr.)

Si auctoritas quæritur, orbis major eſt urbe; Ubicunque, &c.

This conſequence St. Gregory did ſuppoſe, when he therefore did condemn the Title of Univerſal Biſhop, becauſe it did imply an affectation of Superiority and dignity in one Biſhop above others; of abaſing the name of other Biſhops in compariſon of his own, of extolling himſelf above the reſt of Prieſts, &c.

Illud appetunt unde omnibus digniores videantur. Gr. Ep. 4. 34.

Quia ſuperbiendo ſe cæteris præponit. Ep. 6. 38.

Super cæteros Sacerdotes ſe extollit. Ib.

Cupis Epiſcoporum nomen tui comparatione calcare. Ep. 4. 38.

Cuncta ejus membra tibimet conaris ſupponere. Ib.

This the ancient Popes did remember, when uſually in their compellation of any Biſhop, they did ſtyle them Brethren, Collegues, fellow-Miniſters fellow-Biſhops, not intending thereby complement or mockery, but to declare their ſenſe of the original equality among Biſhops; notwithſtanding ſome differences in order and Privileges, which their See had obtained. And that this was the general ſenſe of the Fathers we ſhall afterward ſhew.

(Invigiletur ergò ut omnibus co-Epiſcopis noſtris & fratribus innoteſcat. P. Corn. apud Cyp. Ep. 48.)

Hence, when it was objected to them, that they did affect Superiority, they did ſometimes diſclaim it; ſo did Pope Gelaſius I. (a zealous man for the honour of his See.)

Hic non tam optamus præponi aliis, (ſicut prædicas) quàm cum fidelibus cunctis ſanctum & Deo placitum habere conſortium. P. Gelaſ. I. Ep. 9. (ad Euphem. Ep. CP.)

Here we do not ſo much deſire to be advanced above others, as together with all the faithful to make up a conſort holy and well-pleaſing to God.

4. This pretence doth thwart the Holy Scripture, not only by trampling down the dignity of Biſhops, (which according to St. Gregory doth imply great pride and preſumption) but as really infringing the Rights granted by our Lord to his Church, and the Governors of it.

—Vobis ſubtrahitur, quod alteri plus quam ratio exigit præbetur. Greg. 7. 30. (*p.*451.) What is yielded to another more than reaſon requires, is taken from you.

Πρᾶγμα —— τῆς πάντων ἐλευθερίας ἀπτόμενον Syn. Eph. I. Can. 8. A thing that entrencheth upon the freedom of all others.

For to each Church our Lord hath impoſed a Duty, and imparted a Power of maintaining divine Truth, and ſo approving it ſelf a pillar and ſupport of truth: Of deciding Controverſies poſſible and proper to be decided with due temper, ultimately without farther reſort; for that he, who will not obey or acquieſce in its Deciſion, is to be as a heathen or publican: Of cenſuring and rejecting Offenders (in Doctrine, or Demeanor;) Thoſe within (ſaith Saint Paul to the Church of Corinth) do not ye judge? But them that are without God judgeth; wherefore put away from among your ſelves that wicked perſon: Of preſerving Order and Decency; according to that Rule, preſcribed to the Church of Corinth, let all things be done decently and in order: Of promoting Edification: Of deciding Cauſes.

Apoc. 2. & 3. 1 Tim. 3. 15. Matt. 18. 17. ἐὰν δὲ παρακούσῃ, &c. Οὐχὶ τοὺς ἔσω ὑμεῖς κρίνετε; 1 Cor. 5. 12. καὶ ἐξαίρετε. Vid. v. 4, 5. Apoc. 2. 20.

1 Cor. 14. 40. 1 Theſſ. 5. 14. Rom. 14. 19. 1 Cor. 6. 1.—

All which Rights and Privileges the Roman Biſhop doth bereave the Churches of, ſnatching them to himſelf; pretending that he is the Sovereign Doctor, Judge, Regulator of all Churches; over-ruling and voiding all that is done by them, according to his pleaſure.

The Scripture hath enjoined and empowered all Biſhops to feed, guide, and rule their reſpective Churches, as the Miniſters, Stewards, Ambaſſadors, Angels of God; for the perfecting of the Saints, for the work of the Miniſtery, for the edification of the Body of Chriſt: To whom God hath committed the care of their People, ſo that they are reſponſible for their Souls.

Act. 20. 28. Heb 13. 17. 1 Pet. 5. 2. 1 Tim. 3. 15. Tit. 1. 7. 1 Cor. 12. 28. Eph. 4. 11. Apoc. 2, &c. Eph. 4. 12. Heb. 13. 17.

All which Rights and Privileges of the Epiſcopal Office the Pope hath invaded, doth obſtruct, cram, fruſtrate, deſtroy; pretending (without any warrant) that their Authority is derived from him; forcing them to exerciſe it no otherwiſe, than as his Subjects, and according to his pleaſure. But of this Point more afterward.

Dei & Apoſtolicæ ſedis gratiâ. Vid. poſt.

Superbum nimis eſt & immoderatum ultra fines proprios tendere, & antiquitate calcatâ alienum jus velle præripere, atque ut unius creſcat dignitas, tot Metropolitanorum impugnare primatus, &c. P. Leo I. Ep. 55.

'Tis too proud and unreaſonable a thing for one to ſtretch himſelf beyond his bounds, and maugre all antiquity to ſnatch away other mens right, and that the dignity of one may be enhanced, to oppoſe the primacies of ſo many Metropolitans.

5. This pretence doth thwart the Scripture, by robbing all Chriſtian People of the Liberties, and Rights, with which by that Divine Charter they are endowed; and which they are obliged to preſerve inviolate.

Sanctæ Eccleſiæ univerſali injuriam facit. Greg. I. Ep. 1. 24.

It does wrong to the Holy Catholick Church.

Plebis Majeſtas. Cypr. Ep. 55. (ad Corn. P.) p. 117.

Saint Paul enjoyneth the Galatians to ſtand faſt in the liberty, wherewith Chriſt hath made us free; and not to be entangled again with the yoke

Gal 5. 1.

of bondage; there is therefore a liberty, which we muſt maintain, and a power to which we muſt not ſubmit; and againſt whom can we have more ground to do this, than againſt him, who pretendeth to dogmatize, to define Points of Faith, to impoſe Doctrines (new and ſtrange enough) on our Conſciences, under a peremptory obligation of yielding aſſent to them? to preſcribe Laws, as divine and neceſſary to be obſerved, without warrant, as thoſe Dogmatiſts did, againſt whom Saint Paul biddeth us to maintain our Liberty: (ſo that if he ſhould declare vertue to be vice, and white to be black, we muſt believe him, ſome of his Adherents have ſaid, conſiſtently enough with his pretences;) for,

Gal. 5.1. Col. 2.16, 18.

Againſt ſuch tyrannical Invaders we are bound to maintain our Liberty, according to that Precept of Saint Paul; the which if a Pope might well alledge againſt the proceedings of a General Synod; with much more reaſon may we thereby juſtify our non-ſubmiſſion to one man's exorbitant domination.

P. Leo I. Ep. 28.

This is a Power, which the Apoſtles themſelves did not challenge to themſelves, for We (ſaith Saint Paul) have not dominion over your faith, but are helpers of your joy.

2 Cor. 1. 24.

They did not pretend, that any Chriſtian ſhould abſolutely believe them, in caſes, wherein they had not Revelation (general, or ſpecial) from God; in ſuch caſes referring their Opinion to the judgment and diſcretion of Chriſtians.

1 Cor. 10. 15. 7.12, 25,40.

Gal. 1.8.

They ſay, Though we or an Angel from heaven preach any other Goſpel unto you, than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accurſed; If any man, &c. which Precept, with many others of the like purport, (injoyning us to examine the truth, to adhere unto the received Doctrine, to decline heterodoxies and novelties) doth ſignify nothing, if every Chriſtian hath not allowed to him a judgment of diſcretion, but is tied blindly to follow the dictates of another.

St. Auſtin (I am ſure) did think this liberty ſuch, that without betraying it no man could be obliged to believe any thing not grounded upon Canonical Authority: for to a Donatiſt his Adverſary, citing the Authority of St. Cyprian againſt him, he thus replieth; But now ſeeing it is not Canonical which thou reciteſt, with that liberty to which the Lord hath called us, I do not receive the opinion, differing from Scripture, of that man whoſe praiſe I cannot reach, to whoſe great learning I do not compare my writings, whoſe wit I love, in whoſe ſpeech I delight, whoſe charity I admire, whoſe martyrdom I reverence.

Nunc vero quoniam Canonicum non eſt quod recitas, eâ libertate ad quam nos vocavit Dominus, ejus viri, cujus laudem conſequi non valeo, cujus multis literis Scripta mea non comparo, cujus ingenium diligo, cujus ore dilector, cujus charitatem miror, cujus martyrium veneror, hoc quod aliter ſapuit non accipio. Aug. contr. Creſc. 2.32.

This Liberty not only the Ancients, but even divers Popes have acknowledged to belong to every Chriſtian; as we ſhall hereafter ſhew, when we ſhall prove, that we may lawfully reject the Pope, as a Patron of Errour and Iniquity.

6. It particularly doth thwart Scripture by wronging Princes in exempting a numerous ſort of People from ſubjection to their Laws, and Judicature; whereas by God's Ordination and expreſs Command every ſoul is ſubject to them; not excepting the Popes themſelves; (in the opinion of St. Chryſoſtom, except they be greater than any Apoſtle.)

Rom. 13.1

By pretending to govern the Subjects of Princes without their leave; to make Laws, without his permiſſion or confirmation; to cite his Subjects out of their Territories, &c. which are encroachments upon the Rights of God's unqueſtionable Miniſters.

III. Farther, becauſe our Adverſaries do little regard any allegation of Scripture againſt them (pretending themſelves to be the only Maſters of its ſenſe, or of common ſenſe, Judges and Interpreters of them) we do alledge againſt them, that this pretence doth alſo croſs Tradition, and the common Doctrine of the Fathers. For,

1. Common uſage and practice is a good interpreter of Right; and that ſheweth no ſuch Right was known in the Primitive Church ——

2. Indeed the ſtate of the Primitive Church did not admit it.

3. The Fathers did ſuppoſe no Order in the Church, by original Right, or divine Inſtitution, ſuperior to that of a Biſhop; whence they commonly did ſtyle a Biſhop the Higheſt Prieſt, and Epiſcopacy the top of Eccleſiaſtical Orders.

Ἀπὸ τȣ̃ Κυρίȣ διδαχθέντες ἀκολουθίαν πραγμάτων τοῖς μὲ Ἐπισκόποις τὰ τῆς ἀρχιερωσύνης ἐνείμαμεν, &c. Conſt. Apoſt. 8. 46.

The chief Prieſt (ſaith Tertullian) that is the Biſhop, hath the right of giving Baptiſm.

Dandi quidem jus habet ſummus Sacerdos qui eſt Epiſcopus. Tert. *de Bapt. c.*17.

Although (ſaith St. Ambroſe) the Presbyters alſo do it, yet the beginning of the Miniſtry is from the higheſt Prieſt.

Licèt enim & Presbyteri faciant, tamen exordium Miniſterii eſt à ſummo Sacerdote. Ambr. *de Sacr.*3.1. *Suſcepiſti gubernacula ſummi Sacerdotii. Id. Ep.*5.

Optatus calleth Biſhops, the tops and Princes of all.

Apices & Principes omnium Sacerdotes. Opt 1. Eccleſiæ ſalus in ſummi Sacerdotis dignitate pendet. Hier. c. Lucif.4. The ſafety of the Church depends upon the dignity of the High prieſt.

*Ego dignus ſummo Sacerdotio decernebar. Id. Ep.*99. (ad Aſell.)

In Epiſcopo omnes ordines ſunt, quia primus Sacerdos eſt, hoc eſt Princeps Sacerdotum, & Propheta & Evangeliſta, & cætera adimplenda officia Eccleſiæ in miniſterio fidelium. Ambr. in Eph.4.11.

In the Biſhop there are all Orders, becauſe he is the firſt Prieſt, (i.e.) the Prince of Prieſts, and Prophet and Evangeliſt, and all other Offices of the Church, to be fulfilled in the miniſtery of the faithful.

The Divine Order of Biſhops (ſaith Dionyſius) is the firſt of Divine Orders; the ſame being alſo the extreme and laſt of them; for into it all the frame of our Hierarchy is reſolved and accompliſhed.

Ἡ θεία τῶν ἱεραρχῶν τάξις, &c. ſupr. Pontifex princeps Sacerdotum eſt, quaſi via ſequentium; Ipſe & ſummus Sacerdos, ipſe & Pontifex maximus nuncupatur. Iſid. Hiſp. apud Grat. *diſt.*21. *cap.*1.

This language is common even among Popes themſelves, complying with the ſpeech then current; for, Presbyters (ſaith Pope Innocent I.) although they are Prieſts, yet have they not the top of High-prieſthood.

Nam Presbyteri, licèt ſint Sacerdotes, pontificatûs tamen apicem non habent. P. Innoc. *I. Ep.*1. (ad Decent.) —— *dum facilè imponuntur manus, dum negligenter ſummus Sacerdos eligitur. Id. Ep.*12. (ad Aurel.)

No man (ſaith P. Zoſimus I.) againſt the precepts of the Fathers ſhould preſume to aſpire to the higheſt Prieſthood of the Church.

Nè quis contra Patrum præcepta —— (ad ſummum Eccleſiæ Sacerdotium aſpirare præſumeret. P.Zoz *I. Ep.*1. ad Heſych.)

It is decreed (ſaith Pope Leo I.) that the Chorepiſcopi or Presbyters, who figure the ſons of Aaron, ſhall not preſume to ſnatch that, which the Princes of the Prieſts (whom Moſes and Aaron did typify) are commanded to do. (Note by the way, that ſeeing according to this Pope's mind (after St. Hierom) Moſes and Aaron did in the Jewiſh Policy repreſent Biſhops, there was none there to prefigure the Pope.)

Ideóque id quod tantùm facere Principibus Sacerdotum juſſum eſt, quorum typum Moſes & Aaron tenuerunt, omnino decretum eſt, ut Chorepiſcopi vel Presbyteri qui filiorum Aaron geſtant figuram, arripere non præſumant. P. Leo. Ep. 88. Pontificatûs apicem non habent. Ibid. Vid. Ep. 84. cap. 5.

S. Hier. ad Evagr. Ut ſciamus traditiones Apoſtolicas ſumptas de veteri Teſtamento, Quod Aaron & filii ejus atque Levitæ in templo fuerunt, hoc ſibi Epiſcopi, Presbyteri & diaconi vindicant in Eccleſia. Or. 19 p. 309.

A Biſhop called ἀρχιερεὺς. Apoſt. Conſt. 8. 10, 12.

Summus Chriſti Pontifex Auguſtinus. (Paulin. apud Aug. Ep. 36.) Aug. Ep. 35.

Beatiſſimo Papæ Auguſtino. Hieron. (Aug. Ep. 11, 13, 14, &c.)

Optamus te beatiſſ. & glorioſiſſime Papa in Domino ſemper valere. Ep. 31.

In thoſe days the Biſhop of Nazianzum (a petty Town in Cappadocia) was an High-prieſt (ſo Gregory calleth his Father.) And the Biſhop of a poor City in Africk is ſtyled Sovereign Pontif of Chriſt, moſt bleſſed Father, moſt bleſſed Pope: and the very Roman Clergy doth call St. Cyprian moſt bleſſed and moſt glorious Pope; which Titles the Pope doth now ſo charily reſerve and appropriate to himſelf.

But innumerable Inſtances of this kind might be produced; I ſhall only therefore add two other paſſages, which ſeem very obſervable, to the enforcement of this diſcourſe.

Apud nos Apoſtolorum locum Epiſcopi tenent, apud eos Epiſcopus tertius eſt; habent enim primos de Pepuſa Phrygiæ Patriarchas, ſecundos quos appellant Cenones; atque itá in tertium, id eſt plenè ultimum locum Epiſcopi devolvuntur; quaſi exindè ambitioſior religio fiat, ſi quod apud nos primum eſt, apud illos noviſſimum ſit. Hier. (ad Marcellam) Ep. 54.

St. Hierome, reprehending the diſcipline of the Montaniſts hath theſe words, With us the Biſhops do hold the places of the Apoſtles; with them, a Biſhop is in the third place; for they have for the firſt rank the Patriarchs of Pepuſa in Phrygia; for the ſecond thoſe whom they call Cenones; ſo are Biſhops thruſt down into the third, that is almoſt the laſt place; as if thence Religion became more ſtately, if that which is firſt with us, be the laſt with them: Now doth not St. Hierom here affirm, that every Biſhop hath the place of an Apoſtle, and the firſt rank in the Church? doth not he tax the advancement of any Order above this? may not the Popiſh Hierarchy moſt patly be compared to that of the Montaniſts, and is it not equally liable to the cenſure of St. Hierom? doth it not place the Roman Pope in the firſt place, and the Cardinals in the ſecond, detruding the Biſhops into a third place? Could the Pepuſian Patriarch, or his Cenones, either more over-top in dignity, or ſway by power over Biſhops, than doth the Roman Patriarch and his Cardinals?

—— actum eſt de Epiſcopatûs vigore, & de Eccleſiæ gubernandæ ſublimi, ac divina poteſtate. Cypr. Ep. 55. (ad P. Cornel.)

Non iſte ad Epiſcopatum ſubitò pervenit, ſed per omnia Eccleſiaſtica officia promotus, & in divinis adminiſtrationibus Dominum ſæpe promeritus, ad Sacerdotii ſublime faſtigium cunctis religionis gradibus aſcendit. Cypr. Ep. 52.

Again, St. Cyprian telleth Pope Cornelius, that in Epiſcopacy doth reſide the ſublime and divine power of governing the Church; it being the ſublime top of the Prieſthood: He (ſaith the Bleſſed man concerning Pope Cornelius) did not ſuddenly arrive to Epiſcopacy, but being through all Eccleſiaſtical Offices promoted, and having in divine Adminiſtrations often merited of God, did by all the ſteps of Religion mount to the ſublimeſt pitch of Prieſthood; where it is viſible, that St. Cyprian doth not reckon the Papacy, but the Epiſcopacy of Cornelius to be that top of Prieſthood, (above which there was nothing eminent in the Church) unto which he paſſing through the inferior degrees of the Clergy had attained.

In fine, it cannot well be conceived, that the Ancients conſtantly would have ſpoken in this manner, if they had allowed the Papal Office to be ſuch, as now it doth bear it ſelf; the which indeed is an Order no leſs diſtant from Epiſcopacy, than the rank of a King differeth from that of the meaneſt Baron in his Kingdom.

The Africans had a particular care, that this Primacy ſhould not degenerate into tyranny.

Neither is it prejudicial to this Diſcourſe (or to any preceeding) that in the primitive Church there were ſome diſtinctions and ſubordinations of Biſhops (as of Patriarchs, Primates, Metropolitans, common Biſhops) for, Theſe were according to prudence conſtituted by the Church it ſelf for the more orderly and peaceable adminiſtration of things.

Theſe did not import ſuch a difference among the Biſhops, that one ſhould domineer over others to the infringing of primitive fraternity, or common liberty: but a precedence in the ſame rank, with ſome moderate advantages for the common good.

Theſe did ſtand under Authority of the Church; and might be changed, or corrected as was found expedient by common agreement.

By virtue of theſe the Superiours of this kind could do nothing over their ſubordinates in an arbitrary manner, but according to the regulation of Canons, eſtabliſhed by conſent in Synods; by which their influence was amplified or curb'd.

Conc. Ant. Can. 9.
Vid. Apoſt. Can. 34.
Conc. Carth. apud Cypr.
Cod. Afr. Can. 39.

When any of theſe did begin to domineer, or exceed his limits, he was liable to account, and correction; he was exclaimed againſt as tyrannical.

Neſtorius, Dioſcorus,
Οἷά τε τυραννίδας τὰς φιλαρχίας ἐκθύμως διεκδικοῦντες. Euſeb. 8. 1.
So Euſebius complaineth of the Biſhops in his time——
So Iſidor. Peluſiot. Ep. 20. 125. 4. 219.

When Primates did begin to ſwell and encroach, good men declared their diſpleaſure at it, and wiſhed it removed; as is known particularly by the famous Wiſh of * Gregory Nazianzene.

* Ὡς ὄφελόν γε μηδὲ ἦν προεδρεία, μηδέ τις τόπου προτίμησις, ϗ τυραννικὴ προνομία. Greg. Naz. Orat. 28.
O that there were not at all any Preſidency, or any preference in place, and tyrannical prerogative.

But we are diſcourſing againſt a Superiority of a different nature, which foundeth it ſelf in the Inſtitution of Chriſt, impoſeth it ſelf on the Church, is not alterable or governable by it, can endure no check or control, pretendeth to be endowed with an abſolute power to act without, or againſt the conſent of the Church, is limited by no certain bounds but its own pleaſure, &c.

So Socrates of the Biſhop (not only of Rome, but) Alexandria. lib. 7. cap. 11.
So St. Chryſoſtom in 1 Tim. 3. 1. in Ep. Orat. 11.
So Greg. Naz. complained of τυραννικὴ προνομία. Ibid.

IV. Farther this pretence may be impugned, by many Arguments ſpringing from the nature and reaſon of things abſtractedly conſidered; according to which the exerciſe of ſuch an Authority may appear unpracticable without much iniquity, and great inconvenience, in prejudice to the rights of Chriſtian States and People, to the intereſts of Religion and Piety, to the peace and welfare of Mankind; whence it is to be rejected as a peſt of Chriſtendom.

1. Whereas all the world in deſign and obligation is Chriſtian; (the utmoſt parts of the earth being granted in poſſeſſion to our Lord; and his Goſpel extending to every creature under heaven) and may in effect become ſuch, when God pleaſeth, by acceptance of the Goſpel: whereas it may eaſily happen, that the moſt diſtant places on the Earth may embrace Chriſtianity: whereas really Chriſtian Churches have been and are diſperſed all about the World; it is thence hugely incommodious, that all the Church ſhould depend upon an Authority reſident in one Place, and to be managed by one Perſon: the Church being ſuch, is too immenſe, boundleſs, uncircumſcribed, unwieldy a bulk to be guided by the inſpection, or managed by the influence of one ſuch Authority or Perſon.

Pſal. 2. 8.
Col. 1. 23.
Luke 24. 47.
Matt. 28. 19.

If the whole World were reduced under the Government of one Civil Monarch, it would neceſſarily be ill governed, as to Policy, to Juſtice, to Peace: The skirts or remoter parts from the Metropolis or centre of the Government would extremely ſuffer thereby; for they would feel little light or warmth from Majeſty ſhining at ſuch a diſtance: They would live under ſmall awe of that Power, which was ſo far out of ſight: They muſt have very difficult recourſe to it for redreſs of grievances, and relief of oppreſſions: for final deciſion of cauſes, and compoſure of differences; for correction of offences, and diſpenſation of juſtice, upon good information, with tolerable expedition: It would be hard to preſerve peace or quell ſeditions, and ſuppreſs inſurrections that might ariſe in diſtant quarters.

What man could obtain the knowledge or experience needful skilfully and juſtly to give Laws, or adminiſter Judgment to ſo many Nations different in Humour, in Language, in Cuſtoms? What mind of man, what induſtry, what leiſure could ſerve to ſuſtain the burthen of that care, which is needful to the wielding ſuch an Office? How and when ſhould one man be able to receive all the addreſſes, to weigh all the caſes, to make all the reſolutions and diſpatches requiſite for ſuch a charge? If the burthen of one ſmall Kingdom be ſo great, that wiſe and good Princes do groan under its weight, what muſt that be of all Mankind?

Cùm tot ſuſtineas, & tanta negotia ſolus, &c. Hor. Ep. .1.

To ſuch an extent of Government there muſt be allowed a Majeſty, and power correſpondent, the which cannot be committed to one hand, without its degeneration into extreme Tyranny. The words of Zozimus to this purpoſe are obſervable; who ſaith, that the Romans by admitting Auguſtus Cæſar to the Government, did do very perillouſly; for, If he ſhould chuſe to manage the Government rightly and juſtly, he would not be capable of applying himſelf to all things as were fit; not being able to ſuccour thoſe, who do lie at greateſt diſtance; nor could he find ſo many Magiſtrates, as would not be aſhamed to defeat the opinion conceived of them; nor could he ſute them to the differences of ſo many manners: Or, if tranſgreſſing the bounds of Royalty, he ſhould warp to Tyranny, diſturbing the Magiſtracies, overlooking miſdemeanors, bartering right for money, holding the Subjects for Slaves, (ſuch as moſt Emperors, or rather near all have been, few excepted) then it is quite neceſſary, that the brutiſh Authority of the Prince ſhould be a publick calamity, for then flatterers being by him dignified with gifts and honours do invade the greateſt commands; and thoſe who are modeſt and quiet, not affecting the ſame life with them, are conſequently diſpleaſed, not enjoying the ſame advantages; ſo that from hence Cities are filled with ſeditions and troubles. And the Civil and Military employments being delivered up to avaritious Perſons, do both render a peaceable life ſad and grievous to men of better diſpoſition, and do enfeeble the reſolution of Soldiers in war.

Εἴτε γὰρ ὀρθῶς, &c. Zoſ. Hiſt. 1. (p. 4. Steph.)

Hence St. Auſtin was of opinion, that it were happy for mankind, if all Kingdoms were ſmall, enjoying a peaceful neighbourhood.

Felicioribus ſic rebus humanis omnia Regna parva eſſent, concordi vicinitate lætantia. Aug. de Civ. D. 4. 15. Ἔστι τι καὶ πόλεσι μεγέθους μέτρον, ὥσπερ καὶ τῶν ἄλλων πάντων, ζώων, φυτῶν, ὀργάνων· καὶ γὰρ τούτων ἕκαστον οὔτε λίαν μικρὸν, οὔτε κατὰ μέγεθος ὑπερβάλλον ἕξει τὴν αὑτοῦ δύναμιν. Ariſt. Pol. 7. 4. There is a certain meaſure of greatneſs fit for Cities and Commonwealths, as well as for all other things, Living Creatures, Plants, Inſtruments, for every one of theſe hath its proper virtue and faculty, when it is neither very little, nor yet exceeds in bigneſs. Τίς γὰρ στρατηγὸς ἔσται τοῦ λίαν ὑπερβάλλοντος πλήθους, ἢ τίς κήρυξ μὴ στεντόρειος; Ibid. For who would be a Captain of an exceſſive huge multitude, &c.

It is commonly obſerved by Hiſtorians, that Rome growing in bigneſs, did labour therewith, and was not able to ſupport it ſelf; many diſtempers and diſorders ſpringing up in ſo vaſt a body, which did throw it into continual pangs, and at length did bring it to ruin; for Then (ſaith St. Auſtin concerning the times of Pompey)

Suis & ipſa Roma viribus ruit. Hor. Ep. 16.

——quæ ab exiguis initiis creverit ut, jam magnitudine laboret ſua. Liv. I.

Ac neſcio an ſatius fuerit populo Romano Sicilia & Africa contentos fuiſſe, aut his etiam ipſis carere dominanti in Italia ſua, quàm eò magnitudinis creſcere, ut viribus ſuis conficeretur. Flor. 3. 12.

pey) Rome had ſubdueed Africk, it had ſubdued Greece; and widely alſo ruling over other parts, as not able to bear it ſelf, did in a manner by its own greatneſs break it ſelf.

Tunc jam Roma ſubjugaverat Africam, ſubjugaverat Græciam, lateq; etiam aliis partibus imperans tanquam ſeipſam ferre non valens ſe ſua quodammodo magnitudine fregerat. Aug.de Civ. D.18.45. Tac. *Hiſt.*2. *p.*476.

Hence that wiſe Prince Auguſtus Cæſar did himſelf forbear to enlarge the Roman Dominion, and did in his Teſtament adviſe the Senate to do the like.

Γνώμην τε αὐτοῖς ἔδωκε τοῖς τε παροῦσιν ἀρκεσθῆναι, καὶ μηδαμῶς ἐπὶ τὸ πλεῖον τὴν ἀρχὴν ἐπαυξῆσαι ἐθελῆσαι· δυσφύλακτόν τε γὰρ αὐτὴν ἔσεσθαι ἔφη· τοῦτο γὰρ καὶ αὐτὸς ὄντως ἀεί ποτε οὐ λόγῳ μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἔργῳ ἐτήρησε· παρὸν γοῦν αὐτῷ πολλὰ ἐκ τοῦ βαρβαρικοῦ προσκτήσασθαι, οὐκ ἠθέλησε. Dion. *lib.*56. Tac. Ann 1.

He adviſed them to be content with what they had, and by no means to endeavour the enlargement of their Empire, for, ſaid he, it will be hardly kept; and this he himſelf obſerv'd not in word only, but in deed: for when he might have gotten more from the barbarous Nations, yet he would not.

Ipſa nocet moles, utinam remeare liceret Ad veteres fines, & mœnia pauperis Anci,&c. Claud de bello Gildon.

To the like inconveniencies (and much greater in its kind; Temporal things being more eaſily ordered than Spiritual, and having ſecular Authority, great advantages of power and wealth to aid it ſelf) muſt the Church be obnoxious, if it were ſubjected to the government of one Sovereign, unto whom the maintenance of Faith, the protection of Diſcipline, the determination of Controverſies, the reviſion of Judgments, the diſcuſſion and final deciſion of Cauſes upon appeal, the ſuppreſſion of Diſorders and Factions, the inſpection over all Governors, the correction of Miſdemeanors, the conſtitution, relaxation and abolition of Laws, the reſolution of all matters concerning Religion and the publick State in all Countries muſt be referred.

Τίς πρὸς ταῦτα ἱκανός; what Shoulders can bear ſuch a charge without perpetual miracle? (and yet we do not find that the Pope hath any promiſe of miraculous aſſiſtance, nor in his demeanor doth appear any mark thereof:) what mind would not the care of ſo many affairs utterly diſtract, and overwhelm? who could find time to caſt a glance on each of ſo numberleſs particulars? what ſagacity of wit, what variety of learning, what penetrancy of judgment, what ſtrength of memory, what indefatigable vigour of induſtry, what abundance of experience would ſuffice for enabling one man to weigh exactly all the controverſies of Faith, and caſes of Diſcipline perpetually ſtarting up in ſo many Regions?

The Synod of Baſil doth well deſcribe the duty of a Pope, but it is infinitely hard to practiſe it in any meaſure. (Conc. Baſ. *Seſſ.23. p.64,&c.*——)

What reach of ſkill and ability would ſerve for accommodation of Laws to different humours and faſhions of ſo many Nations? Shall a decrepit old man in the decay of his age, parts, vigour —— (ſuch as Popes uſually are) undertake this? May we not ſay to him, as Jethro did to Moſes, Ultra vires tuas eſt negotium; The thing thou doeſt is not good; thou wilt ſurely wear away, both thou and this People that is with thee; for this thing is too heavy for thee; thou art not able to perform it thy ſelf alone. Ex.18.18.

If the care of a ſmall Dioceſs hath made the moſt able and induſtrious Biſhops (who had a Conſcience and ſenſe of their duty) to groan under its weight, how inſupportable muſt ſuch a thing be?

The care of his own particular Church, if he would act the part of a Biſhop indeed, would ſufficiently take up the Pope; eſpecially in ſome times; whenas Pope Alex. ſaith, —— Ut inteſtina noſtræ ſpecialis Eccleſiæ negotia vix poſſemus ventilare, nedum longinqua ad plenum extricaae.

P.Alex.II. (Epiſt. ad Ger. Rhem. Bin. p. 284.)

2 Cor. 11. 28.

If it be ſaid, that Saint Paul teſtifyeth of himſelf, that he had a care of all the Churches incumbent on him; I anſwer, that he (and other Apoſtles had the like) queſtionleſs had a pious ſolicitude for the welfare of all Chriſtians, eſpecially of the Churches which he had founded, being vigilant for occaſions to edify them; but what is this to bearing the charge of a ſtanding government over all the Churches diffuſed through the world? that care of a few Churches then was burthenſom to him, what is the charge of ſo many now? to one ſeldom endowed with ſuch Apoſtolical graces and gifts as Saint Paul was.

How weak muſt the influence of ſuch an Authority be upon the circumferential Parts of its Oecumenical Sphere?

How muſt the outward branches of the Churches faint and fade for want of ſap from the root of Diſcipline, which muſt be conveyed through ſo many obſtructions to ſuch a diſtance?

How diſcompoſed muſt things be in each Country, for want of ſeaſonable reſolution, hanging in ſuſpence, till information do travel to Rome, and determination come back thence?

Tanta me occupationum onera deprimunt, ut ad ſuperna animus nullatenus erigatur, &c. Greg. *I. lib.*1. *Ep.*7,25,5.
Such a weight of employment preſſes me down, that my mind can by no means be rais'd to things above.
Si adminiſtratio illius temporis Mare fuit, quid de præſenti Papatu dicendum erit? Calv. *Inſt.*4 *c.*7. 22.
If the ordering of affairs in thoſe times was a boundleſs Sea, what ſhall we ſay of the preſent Papacy?

How difficult, how impoſſible will it be for him there to receive faithful information, or competent teſtimony, whereupon to ground juſt deciſions of Cauſes?

How will it be in the power thence of any malicious and cunning perſon to raiſe trouble againſt innocent perſons? for any like perſon to decline the due Correction laid on him? by transferring the Cauſe from home to ſuch a diſtance?

How much coſt, how much trouble, how much hazard muſt parties concerned be at to fetch light and juſtice thence?

Put caſe a Hereſy, a Schiſm, a Doubt or Debate of great moment ſhould ariſe in China, how ſhould the Gentleman in Italy proceed to confute that Hereſy, to quaſh that Schiſm, to ſatisfy that Doubt, to determine that Cauſe? how long muſt it be e'er he can have notice thereof? to how many croſs accidents of weather and way muſt the tranſmitting of information be ſubject? how difficult will it prove to get a clear and ſure knowledge concerning the ſtate of things?

How hard will it be to get the oppoſite parties to appear, ſo as to confront teſtimonies and probations requiſite to a fair and juſt deciſion? how ſhall witneſſes of infirm ſex or age ramble ſo far? how eaſily will ſome of them prepoſſeſs and abuſe him with falſe ſuggeſtions and miſrepreſentations of the caſe? how ſlippery therefore will the reſult be, and how prone he to award a wrongful ſentence?

Nunquid mirandum eſt de tam longinquis terris Epiſcopos tuos tibi narrare impune quod volunt? Aug. contra Creſcon. 3. 34. What marvel if the Biſhops from ſo remote Countries tell you what they pleaſe without check or control?

How tedious, how expenſive, how troubleſom, how vexatious, how hazardous muſt this courſe be to all parties? Certainly Cauſes muſt needs proceed ſlowly, and depend long; and in the end the reſolution of them muſt be very uncertain.

*Delungas vias luengas mentiras.*Hiſp. Prov. Syn. Baſil. Seſſ. 31. *p.*86.

What temptation will it be for any one (how juſtly ſoever corrected by his immediate Superiors) to complain; hoping thereby to eſcape, to diſguiſe the truth, &c. who being condemned will not appeal to one at a diſtance, hoping by falſe ſuggeſtions to delude him?

This neceſſarily will deſtroy all Diſcipline, and induce impunity, or fruſtration of Juſtice.

*Vid.*Bern. *Ep.*178.de Conſi.

Certainly much more convenient and equal it ſhould be, that there ſhould be near at hand a Sovereign Power, fully capable, expeditely and ſeaſonably to compoſe differences; to decide cauſes, to reſolve doubts, to ſettle things without more ſtir and trouble.

Very equal it is, that Laws ſhould rather be framed, interpreted and executed in every Countrey, with accommodation to the tempers of the People, to the circumſtances of things, to the Civil State there, by perſons acquainted with thoſe particulars, than by ſtrangers ignorant of them, and apt to miſtake about them.

How often will the Pope be impoſed upon, as he was in the caſe of Baſilides, of whom St.Cyprian ſaith, going to Rome he deceived our Collegue Stephen, being placed at diſtance, and ignorant of the fact, and concealed truth, aſpiring to be unjuſtly reſtored to the Biſhoprick, from which he was juſtly removed.

Romam pergens Stephanum Collegam noſtrum longè poſitum, & geſtæ rei, ac tacitæ veritatis ignarum fefellit; ut exambiret reponi ſe injuſtè in Epiſcopatum, de quo fuerat juſtè depoſitus. Cypr. *Ep.*67.

As he was in the caſe of Marcellus, who gull'd Pope Julius by fair profeſſions, as St.Baſil doth often complain.

Ἐκεῖνα ποιοῦσι νῦν ἃ πρότερον· ἐπὶ Μαρκέλλῳ, πρὸς μὲν τὴν ἀλήθειαν αὐτοῖς ἀπαγγέλλοντας φιλονεικήσαντες, &c. Baſil.*Ep.*10.

As he was in aiding that verſatile and troubleſom Biſhop, Euſtathius of Sebaſtia, to the recovery of his Biſhoprick.

Baſ.*Ep.*73. 74.

As he was in rejecting the man of God, and moſt admirable Biſhop, Meletius; and admitting ſcandalous reports about him, which the ſame Saint doth often reſent; blaming ſometimes the fallacious miſinformation, ſometimes the wilful preſumption, negligence, pride of the Roman Church, in the caſe.

Τοῦ ἀνθρώπου τοῦ θεοῦ Μελετίου —— τὸν θαυμασιώτατον ἐπίσκοπον τῆς ἀληθινῆς τοῦ θεοῦ Ἐκκλησίας Μελέτιον —— Baſ. Ep. 349.

Οἱ μὲν γὰρ ἀγνοοῦσι παντελῶς τὰ ἐνταῦθα· οἱ δὲ καὶ δοκοῦντες εἰδέναι φιλονεικότερον μᾶλλον ἢ ἀληθέστερον αὐτοῖς ἐξηγοῦνται. Ibid.

Some are altogether ignorant of what is here done, others that think they know them declare them unto us, more contentiouſly than truly.

Ἐλύπησε ἡμᾶς λέγων τοῖς Ἀρειομανίταις συγκαταριθμεῖσθαι τοὺς θεοφιλεστάτους ἀδελφοὺς ἡμῶν Μελέτιον καὶ Εὐσέβιον. *Epiſt.*321. ad Pet. Alex.

He grieved us when he ſaid, that our godly Brethren, Meletius and Euſebius, were reckoned among the Arians.

Ποία βοήθεια ἡμῖν τῆς δυτικῆς ὀφρύος, οἱ τόγε ἀληθὲς οὔτε ἴσασιν. οὔτε μαθεῖν ἀνέχονται; Baſ. *Ep.*10.

What help can we have from the pride of the Africans, who neither know the truth, nor endure to learn it?

As he was in the caſe of Pelagius and Celeſtius, who did cajole Pope Zoſimus to acquit them, to condemn Eros and Lazarus their accuſers, to reprove the African Biſhops for proſecuting them.

*P.*Zoz. I. *Ep.*3 & 4.

How many proceedings ſhould we have like to that of Pope Zozimus I. concerning that ſcandalous Prieſt, Apiarius; whom being for grievous crimes excommunicated by his Biſhop, that Pope did admit to communion, and undertake to patronize; but was baffled in his enterprize.

Deinde quòd inter tantam hominum, multitudinem adeò pauci ſunt Epiſcopi, & amplæ ſingulorum Parochiæ, ut in ſubjectis plebibus curam Epiſcopalis officii nullatenus exequi, aut ritè adminiſtrare valeant. P. Greg. *VII. Ep.*2.73.

And then becauſe in ſo great a multitude of People there are ſo few Biſhops, and every one's Dioceſe very large, that they are in no-wiſe able to execute or rightly perform the charge of the Epiſcopal office among the People over whom they are ſet.

This hath been the ſenſe of the Fathers, in the caſe.

St. Cyprian therefore ſaith, that ſeeing it was a general ſtatute among the Biſhops, and that it was both equal and juſt, that every one's cauſe ſhould be heard there, where the crime was committed; and that each Paſtor had a portion of the Flock allotted to him, which he ſhould rule and govern, being to render unto the Lord an account of his doing.

Cypr. Ep. 55. (p. 116.)

St. Chryſoſtom thought it improper that one out of Ægypt ſhould adminiſter juſtice to Perſons in Thrace: (and why not as well as one out of Italy?)

Οὐδὲ γὰρ ἀκόλουθον ἦν τοὺς ἐξ Αἰγύπτου τοῖς ἐν Θρᾴκῃ δικάζειν. Chryſ. *Ep.*102. (ad P. Innoc I.) Εἰ γὰρ τοῦτο κρατήσειε τὸ ἔθος, καὶ ἐξὸν γένοιτο τοῖς βουλομένοις; εἰς ἀλλοτρίας ἀπιέναι παροικίας ἐκ τοσούτων διαστημάτων, καὶ ἐκβάλλειν οὓς ἂν ἐθέλοι τις, ἴστε ὅτι πάντα οἰχήσεται, &c.

For if this cuſtom prevail, and if they that will may go to other mens Dioceſes at ſo great a diſtance, and eject whom any man pleaſes, know that all will go to wrack, &c.

The African Synod thought the Nicene Fathers had provided moſt prudently and moſt juſtly, that all affairs ſhould be finally determined there where they did ariſe.

Decreta Nicena ſive inferioris gradus clericos, ſive ipſos Epiſcopos ſuis Metropolitanis apertiſſimè commiſerunt; Prudentiſſimè enim juſtiſſiméque viderunt (providerunt) quæcunque negotia in ſuis locis, ubi orſa ſunt, finienda. Ep. Conc. Afric. ad P. Celeſt. I. (in fine Cod. Afric.) vel apud Dion. Exig.

They thought a tranſmarine judgment could not be firm, becauſe the neceſſary perſons for teſtimony, for the infirmity of ſex or age, or for many other infirmities could not be brought thither.

Aut quomodo ipſum tranſmarinum judicium ratum erit, ad quod teſtium neceſſariæ perſonæ vel propter ſexûs, vel propter ſenectutis infirmitatem, vel multis aliis impedimentis adduci non poterunt. Ibid.

Pope Leo himſelf ſaw how dilatory this courſe would be; and that longinquity of region doth cauſe the examination of truth to become over dilatory.

Ne ergo (quod inter longinquas regiones accidere ſolet) in nimias dilationes tenderent veritatis examina—— P. Leo I. *Ep.*34.

Pope Liberius for ſuch reaſon did requeſt Conſtantius, that Athanaſius his cauſe ſhould be tryed at Alexandria; where ---- he (ſaith he) that is accuſed, and the accuſers are, and the defender of them, and ſo we may upon examination had agree in our ſentence about them.

Τότε ἐπὶ τῆς Ἀλεξανδρέων οἱ πάντες ἀπαντήσαντες. ἔνθα ὁ ἐγκαλούμενος καὶ οἱ ἐγκαλοῦντές εἰσι, καὶ ὁ ἀντιποιούμενος αὐτῶν, ἐξετάσαντες τὰ περὶ αὐτῶν συμπεριενεχθῶμεν. Theod. 2. 16.

Therefore divers ancient Canons of Synods did prohibit, that any Cauſes ſhould be removed out of the bounds of Provinces, or Dioceſes; as otherwhere we ſhew.

Inoleverunt autem hactenus intolerabilium vexationum abuſus permulti, dum nimium frequenter à remotiſſimis etiam partibus ad Romanam curiam, & interdum pro parvis & minutis rebus ac negotiis quamplurimi citari ac evocari conſueverunt, &c. Vid. Conc. Baſ. Seſſ. 31. (p. 86.)

But hitherto very many intolerable vexatious abuſes have prevailed, while too often men have been uſed to be cited and call'd out even from the remoteſt parts to the Court of Rome, and ſometimes for ſlight and trivial buſineſſes and occaſions.

2. Such an Authority, as this pretence claimeth, muſt neceſſarily (if not withheld by continual Miracle) throw the Church into ſad bondage. All the World muſt become ſlaves to one City, its wealth muſt be derived thither, its quiet muſt depend on it. For it (not being reſtrained within any bounds of place or time, having no check upon it of equal or co-ordinate power, ſtanding upon Divine Inſtitution, and therefore immutably ſetled) muſt of its own nature become abſolute, and unlimited.

Vid. Hiſt. Conc. Trid. *p.*61. Privilegia iſtius ſedis perpetua ſunt, divinitùs radicata, atque plantata, impingi poſſunt, transferri non poſſunt; trahi poſſunt, evelli non poſſunt. P. Nic. I. ad Mich. Imp.

The privileges of this See are perpetual, rooted and founded upon Divine Authority, they may be daſht againſt, they cannot be removed, they may be drawn aſide, they cannot be pluck'd up.

Let it be however of right limited by Divine Laws, or Humane Canons, yet will it be continually encroaching, and ſtretching its power, until it grows enormous, and boundleſs. It will not endure to be pinched by any reſtraint. It will draw to it ſelf the collation of all preferments, &c.

Vid. Conc. Baſ. Seſſ. 31. p 87.

It will aſſume all things to it ſelf; trampling down all oppoſite claims of right and liberty; ſo that neither Paſtor nor People ſhall enjoy or do any thing otherwiſe than in dependence on it, and at its pleaſure.

It will be always forging new prerogatives, and interpreting all things in favour of them, and enacting ſanctions to eſtabliſh them; which none muſt preſume to conteſt.

Licèt Apoſtolica prærogativa poſſimus de qualibet Eccleſia clericum ordinare. P. Steph. apud Grat. *cauſ.*9. *qu.*3. *cap.*20. Though by our Apoſtolical prerogative we may ordain a Clergy-man of any Church.

It will draw to it ſelf the diſpoſal of all places; the exaction of goods. All Princes muſt become his Miniſters, and executors of his Decrees.

Hiſt. Conc. Trid. p. 60. ſo they pretend.
Conc. Later. 4. (ſub Innoc. 3.)

It will mount above all Law, and Rule; not only challenging to be uncontrollable, and unaccountable, but not enduring any reproof of its proceedings, or contradiction of its dictates: a blind Faith muſt be yielded to all its Aſſertions as infallibly true, and a blind obedience to all its Decrees, as unqueſtionably holy: whoſoever ſhall any-wiſe croſs it in word or deed, ſhall certainly be diſcountenanced, condemned; ejected from the Church; ſo that the moſt abſolute tyranny, that can be imagined, will enſue: All the World hath groaned and heavily complained of their exactions, particularly our poor Nation; it would raiſe indignation in any man to read the complaints*.

Sitq; alienus à divinis & Pontificalibus officiis, qui noluit præceptis Apoſtolicis obtemperare. Greg. IV. (*diſt.*19. *c.*5.) And let him have nothing at all to do with Divine and Pontifical Offices, who would not obey Apoſtolical Precepts

* Vid. Mat. Paris.

Oportet autem gladium eſſe ſub gladio, & Temporalem Authoritatem Spirituali ſubjici poteſtati. Bonif *VIII. Extrav. Com.*1. 8. 1.
But there muſt be a ſword under a ſword, and Temporal Authority ſubject to Spiritual.

This is conſequent on ſuch a pretence according to the very nature of things; and ſo in experience it hath happened. For, —chefia piu officio di Pontefici aggiurgere con l'armi, & col ſorgue de Chriſtiani,&c. Guicc. *l.*11. *p.*858.

It is evident, that the Papacy hath devoured all the privileges and rights of all Orders in the Church, either granted by God, or eſtabliſhed in the ancient Canons.

Quid hodie erant Epiſcopi, niſi umbra quædam? quid plus eis reſtabat quàm baculus & mitra,&c. An. Sylv. de geſtis Syn. Baſ. *lib.*1.
What were Biſhops now, but a kind of ſhadows? what had they left more than a Staff and a Mitre? &c.

The Royalties of Peter are become immenſe; and conſiſtently to his practice the Pope doth allow men to tell him to his face, that all Power in Heaven and in Earth is given unto him.

Conc. Lat. 5. Seſſ. 11. *p.*129.

It belongeth to him to judge of the whole Church.

De omni Eccleſia jus habet judicandi. P. Gelaſ Grat. *Cauſ.*9. *q.*3. *cap.*18.

He hath a plenitude (as he calleth it) of Power, by which he can infringe any Law, or do any thing that he pleaſeth.

Secundum plenitudinem poteſtatis de jure poſſumus ſupra jus diſpenſare. Greg *decret. lib.*3. *tit.*8. *cap.*4.

It is the tenor of his Bulls; that whoever raſhly dareth to thwart his will, ſhall incur the indignation of Almighty God; and (as if that were not enough) of St. Peter, and St. Paul alſo.

No man muſt preſume to tax his faults; or to judge of his judgment.

Hujus culpas iſthîc redarguere præſumit mortalium nullus. Grat. *diſt.*40. *cap.*6. (Si Papa—) *Neque cuiquam licere de ejus judicare judicio. Cauſ.*9.*qu.*3. *cap.*10.

It is Idolatry to diſobey his commands, againſt their own Sovereign Lord.

Cùm enim obedire Apoſtolicæ ſedi ſuperbè contemnunt, ſcelus idololatriæ, teſte Samuele, incurrunt. Greg. *VII. Ep.*4.2. Nulli fas eſt vel velle, vel poſſe tranſgredi Apoſtolicæ ſedis præcepta. Greg. IV. apud Grat. *diſt.*19. *cap.*5.
No man may nor can tranſgreſs the commands of the Apoſtolick See.
—— *Ab omnibus quicquid ſtatuit, quicquid ordinat, perpetuo & irrefragabiliter obſervandum eſt. Ibid, cap.*4. (P. Steph.)
—— Whatever he decrees, whatever he ordains, muſt always and inviolably be obſerved by all.

There are who dare in plain terms call him Omnipotent, and who aſcribe infinite power to him. And that he is infallible, is the moſt common and plauſible opinion; ſo that at Rome the contrary is erroneous, and within an inch of being heretical.

Erronea, & hæreſi proxima. Bell. de P. 4. 2.

We are now told, that If the Pope ſhould err by enjoining vices, or forbidding vertues, the Church ſhould be bound to believe vices to be good, and vertues evil, unleſs it would ſin againſt Conſcience.

Si autem Papa erraret præcipiendo vitia, vel prohibendo virtutes, teneretur Eccleſia credere vitia eſſe bona, & virtutes malas, niſi vellet contra conſcientiam peccare. Bell. de Pont. 4.5.

The greateſt Princes muſt ſtoop to his will; otherwiſe he hath power to caſhier, and depoſe them.

Now what greater inconvenience, what more horrible iniquity, can there be, than that all God's people (that free people, who are called to freedom) ſhould be ſubject to ſo intolerable a yoke, and miſerable a ſlavery?

Gal. 5. 1. 13. 1 Pet. 2. 16.

That tyranny ſoon had crept into the Roman Church Socrates telleth us.

Papa occupavit omnia jura inferiorum Eccleſiarum, ità quòd inferiores Prælati ſunt pro nihilo. Card. Zab. de Sch. Innoc. VII. p. 560.
The Pope hath invaded all the rights of inferior Churches, ſo that all inferior Prelates are nothing ſet by.

They have rendred true that definition of Scioppius. The Church is a ſtall, or herd, or multitude of Beaſts, or Aſſes.

They bridle us, they harneſs us, they ſpur us, they lay Yokes and Laws upon us.

Eccleſia eſt mandra ſive grex aut multitudo jumentorum ſive aſinorum. Eccl. c. 47.

Illi nos frænant, nos loræ alligant, nos ſtimulant, nobis jugum & onus imponunt. Ib.

The greateſt tyranny that ever was invented in the world is the pretence of Infallibility: for Dionyſius and Phalaris did leave the mind free, (pretending only to diſpoſe of body and goods according to their will:) but the Pope not content to make us do and ſay what he pleaſeth, will have us alſo to think ſo; denouncing his imprecations and ſpiritual menaces if we do not.

3. Such an Authority will inevitably produce a depravation of Chriſtian Doctrine, by diſtorting it in accommodation of it to the promoting its deſigns and intereſts. It will blend Chriſtianity with worldly notions and policies.

It certainly will introduce new Doctrines, and interpret the old ones ſo as may ſerve to the advancement of the power, reputation, pomp, wealth, and pleaſure of thoſe who manage it, and of their dependents.

That which is called καπηλεύειν τ̃ λόγον τȣ̃ Θεȣ̃ to make a trade of Religion, will be the great work of the Teachers of the Church. It will turn all Divines into mercenary, ſlaviſh, deſigning Flatterers.

2 Cor. 2. 17. 1 Tim. 6. 5. Νομιζόντων πορισμὸν εἶ) τ̃ εὐσέβειαν. Suppoſing that gain is godlineſs. Ἐν προφάσει πλεονεξίας. Theſſ. 2. 5. A cloke of Covetouſneſs Κυβεία. Eph. 4. 4.

This we ſee come to paſs, Chriſtianity by the Papal influence being from its original ſimplicity transformed into quite another thing than it was; from a divine Philoſophy deſigned to improve the reaſon, to moderate the paſſions, to correct the manners of men, to prepare men for converſation with God and Angels; modelled to a ſyſteme of politick devices (of notions, of precepts, of rights,) ſerving to exalt and enrich the Pope, with his Court and Adherents, Clients and Vaſſals.

Paſce, id eſt regio more impera. Ecce duos Gladios.—— Oravi nè deficeret.—— Feed (i.e.) rule as a King. Behold two Swords.

What Doctrine of Chriſtian Theology, as it is interpreted by their Schools, hath not a direct aſpect, or doth not ſquint that way? eſpecially according to the opinions paſſant and in vogue among them.

To paſs over thoſe concerning the Pope, (his Univerſal Paſtorſhip, Judgſhip in controverſies, Power to call Councils, Preſidency in them, Superiority over them; Right to confirm, or annul them; his Infallibility; his double Sword, and Dominion (direct or indirect) over Princes; his diſpenſing in Laws, in Oaths, in Vows, in Matrimonial caſes, with all other the monſtrous prerogatives, which the ſound Doctors of Rome, with encouragement of that Chair, do teach.)

What doth the Doctrine concerning the exempting of the Clergy from ſecular juriſdiction, and immunity of their goods from taxes ſignify, but their entire dependence on the Pope, and their being cloſely tyed to his intereſts?

What is the exemption of Monaſtical places from the juriſdiction of Biſhops, but liſting ſo many Soldiers and Advocates to defend and advance the Papal Empire?

What meaneth the Doctrine concerning that middle Region of Souls, or Cloiſter of Purgatory, whereof the Pope holdeth the Keys; opening and ſhutting it at his pleaſure, by diſpenſation of pardons and indulgences; but that he muſt be Maſter of the Peoples condition, and of their purſe?

What meaneth the treaſure of Merits, and ſuperrogatory works, whereof he is the Steward, but a way of driving a trade, and drawing money from ſimple People, to his treaſury?

Whither doth the entangling of Folks in perpetual Vows tend, but to aſſure them in a ſlaviſh dependence on their intereſts, eternally, without evaſion or remedy; except by favourable diſpenſation from the Pope?

Why is the opus operatum in Sacraments taught to confer grace, but to breed a high opinion of the Prieſt, and all he doth?

Whence did the monſtrous Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation (urged with ſo furious zeal) iſſue, but from deſign to magnify the credit of thoſe, who by ſaying of a few words can make Our God and Saviour? and withal to exerciſe a notable inſtance of their power over men, in making them to renounce their Reaſon, and Senſes?

Whither doth tend the Doctrine concerning the Maſs being a propitiatory Sacrifice for the Dead, but to engage men to leave in their Wills good ſums to offer in their behalf?

Why is the Cup withholden from the Laity, but to lay it low by ſo notable a diſtinction, in the principal myſtery of our Religion, from the Prieſthood?

Why is ſaying private Maſs (or celebrating the Communion in ſolitude) allowed, but becauſe Prieſts are pay'd for it, and live by it?

At what doth the Doctrine concerning the neceſſity of auricular Confeſſion aim, but that thereby the Prieſts may have a mighty awe on the Conſciences of all People, may dive into their Secrets, may manage their Lives as they pleaſe?

And what doth a like neceſſary particular Abſolution intend, but to ſet the Prieſt in a lofty ſtate of Authority above the People, as a Judge of his Condition, and Diſpenſer of his Salvation?

Why do they equal Eccleſiaſtical Traditions with Scripture, but that on the pretence of them they may obtrude whatever Doctrines, advantageous to their deſigns?

What drift hath the Doctrine concerning the Infallibility of Churches or Councils, but that when opportunity doth invite, he may call a company of Biſhops together to eſtabliſh what he liketh, which ever after muſt paſs for certain truth, to be contradicted by none; ſo enſlaving the minds of all men to his dictates, which always ſute to his intereſt.

What doth the prohibition of Holy Scripture drive at, but a monopoly of knowledge to themſelves, or a detaining of People in ignorance of truth and duty; ſo that they muſt be forced to rely on them for direction, muſt believe all they ſay, and blindly ſubmit to their dictates; being diſabled to detect their errours, or conteſt their opinions.

Why muſt the Sacraments be celebrated, and publick devotions exerciſed in an unknown Tongue, but that the Prieſts may ſeem to have a peculiar intereſt in them, and ability for them?

Why muſt the Prieſthood be ſo indiſpenſably forbidden Marriage, but that it may be wholly untacked from the State, and reſt addicted to him, and governable by him; that the Perſons and Wealth of Prieſts may be purely at his devotion?

To what end is the clogging Religion by multiplication of Ceremonies and Formalities, but to amuſe the People, and maintain in them a blind reverence toward the *Interpreters of the dark myſteries couched in them; and by ſeeming to encourage an exterior ſhew of Piety (or form of godlineſs) to gain reputation and advantage, whereby they might oppreſs the interior virtue and reality of it, as the Scribes and Phariſees did, although with leſs deſigns.

Vid.* Sleid. p. 673.

Why is the veneration of Images and Reliques, the credence of Miracles and Legends, the undertaking of Pilgrimages, and voyages to Rome, and other places, more holy than ordinary; ſprinklings of Holy-water, conſecrations of baubles, (with innumerable foppiſh knacks and trinkets) ſo cheriſhed; but to keep the People in a ſlaviſh credulity and dotage; apt to be led by them whither they pleaſe, by any ſleeveleſs pretence; and in the mean while to pick various gains from them by ſuch trade?

What do all ſuch things mean, but obſcuring the native ſimplicity of Chriſtianity, whereas it being repreſented intelligible to all men, would derogate from that high admiration, which theſe men pretend to from their peculiar and profound wiſdom? And what would men ſpend for theſe toys, if they underſtood they might be good Chriſtians, and get to Heaven without them?

What doth all that pomp of Religion ſerve for, but for oſtentation of the dignity of thoſe who adminiſter it? It may be pretended for the honour of Religion, but it really conduceth to the glory of the Prieſthood; who ſhine in thoſe Pageantries.

Why is Monkery (although ſo very different from that which was in the ancient times) ſo cryed up as a ſuperlative ſtate of perfection; but that it filleth all places with ſwarms of luſty People, who are vowed Servants to him, and have little elſe to do but to advance that Authority, by which they ſubſiſt in that droniſh way of life?

In fine, peruſing the Controverſies of Bellarmine, or any other Champion of Romaniſm, do but conſider the nature and ſcope of each Doctrine, maintained by them; and you may eaſily diſcern, that ſcarce any of them but doth tend to advance the intereſt of the Pope, or of his ſworn Vaſſals.

Whereas indeed our Lord had never any ſuch deſign, to ſet up a ſort of men in ſuch diſtance above their brethren; to perk over them, and ſuck them of their goods by tricks; it only did charge People to allow their Paſtors a competent maintenance for a ſober life, with a moderate reſpect, as was needful for the common benefit of God's People; whom they were, with humility and meekneſs, to inſtruct and guide in the plain and ſimple way of Piety.

This is a grievous inconvenience; there being nothing wherein the Church is more concerned than in the preſervation of its Doctrine pure and incorrupt from the leaven of hurtful errors, influential on practice.

4. The errors in Doctrine, and miſcarriages in practice, which this Authority in favour to it ſelf would introduce, would be eſtabliſhed immovably, to the irrecoverable oppreſſion of Truth and Piety; any reformation becoming impoſſible, while it ſtandeth, or ſo far as it ſhall be able to oppoſe and obſtruct it.

While particular Churches do retain their liberty, and Paſtors their original co-ordination in any meaſure, if any Church or Biſhop ſhall offer to broach any novel Doctrine or Practice of bad import, the others may endeavour to ſtop the ſettlement or progreſs of them; each Church at leaſt may keep it ſelf ſound from contagion.

But when all Churches and Biſhops are reduced into ſubjection to one Head, ſupported by the guards of his Authority, who will dare to conteſt, or be able to withſtand, what he ſhall ſay or do? It will then be deemed high preſumption, contumacy, rebellion, to diſſent from his determinations, how falſe ſoever, or tax the practices countenanced by him however irregular and culpable.

He will aſſume to himſelf the privilege not to be croſſed in any thing; and ſoon will claim infallibility, the mother of incorrigibility.

No error can be ſo palpable, which that Authority will not protect and ſhroud from confutation; no practice ſo enormous, which it will not palliate, and guard from reproof.

There will be Legions of mercenary Tongues to ſpeak, and ſtipendiary Pens to write in defence of its Doctrines and Practices; ſo that whoever will undertake to oppoſe it ſhall be voted down and overwhelmed with noiſe; and ſhall incur all the diſcouragement and perſecution imaginable. So poor Truth will become utterly defenceleſs, wretched Vertue deſtitute of ſuccour or patronage.

Sleid. *lib.*4. *p.*82. *lib.*12. *p.*322. Hiſt. Conc. Trid. *p.*24. Vid. Riv. *in Caſtig. Nol. p.*525.

This is ſo in ſpeculation, and we ſee it confirmed by experience; for when from the influence of this Power (as P. Adrian VI. did ingenuouſly confeſs) an apparent degeneracy in Doctrine, in Diſcipline, in Practice had ſeiſed on Chriſtendom, all the world feeling it, and crying out loudly for reformation, yet how ſtiff a repugnance did the adherents to this intereſt make thereto? with what induſtry and craft did Popes endeavour to decline all means of remedy?

Centum gravamina.

What will not this Party do rather than acknowledge themſelves miſtaken or liable to error? what palliations, what ſhifts do not they uſe? what evidence of light do they not outface?

5. The ſame will induce a general corruption of manners.

For the chief Clergy partaking of its growth, and protected by its intereſt, (reciprocally ſupporting it, and being ſheltred by it from any curb or control) will ſwell into great pride and haughtineſs; will be tempted to ſcrape and hoard up wealth, by rapine, extortion, ſimony; will come to enjoy eaſe and ſloth; will be immerſed in ſenſuality and luxury, and will conſequently neglect their charge.

The inferiors will become enamoured and ambitious of dignity, and will uſe all means and arts to attain it.

Vid. ipſum Greg. *VII. Ep.*1 42 2. 45.

Thence emulation, diſcord, ſycophantry will ſpring.

Thence all Eccleſiaſtical Offices will become venal; to be purchaſed by bribes, flattery, favour.——

The higher ranks will become faſtuous, ſupercilious and domineering. The lower will baſely crouch, cogg——

See the deſcription of them in S. Bernard. in Cant. Serm. Guicciard. in Suppl.

What then muſt the People be, the Guides being ſuch?

Adv. Pelag. in Riv. Caſtig. N. cap. 8. Vid Ber- Converſ. St. Paul. *Serm.*1. p 87.

Were ſuch Guides like to edify the People by their Doctrine? Were they not like to damnify them by their Example?

That thus it hath happened Experienee doth ſhew; and Hiſtory doth abundantly teſtify. This was ſoon obſerved by a Pagan Hiſtorian, Am. Marcellin. By St. Baſil ὀφρυς δυτική.

What miſchief this, what ſcandal to Religion, what detriment to the Church, what ruins of Souls it produceth is viſible.

The deſcriptions of Rome, and of that Church by Mantuan, do in a lively manner repreſent the great degeneracy and corruptions of it.

6. This Authority as it would induce corruption of manners, ſo it would perpetuate it; and render the ſtate of things incorrigible.

For this Head of the Church, and the Supporters of his Authority will often need reformation, but never will endure it.

That will happen of any Pope, which the Fathers of Baſil complained of in Pope Eugenius.

—Nulla unquam monitione, nulla exhortatione induci jam largo tempore potuit, ut aliquam errorum emendationem Chriſto placentem, aut notiſſimorum abuſuum correctionem in Eccleſia Sancta Dei efficere ſatageret. Conc. Baſ Seſſ. 23. (p. 76.) Seſſ. 31. p. 89.

He could never be brought in this long time by any advice or exhortation, ſeriouſly to ſet upon any amendment of errors or correction of the moſt groſs abuſes in the Holy Church of God.

Vid Conc. Trid *p.*22.

If the Pope would (as Pope Adrian VI.) yet he will not be able to reform; the intereſts of his dependents croſſing it.

If there hath happened a good Pope, who deſired to reform; yet he hath been ridiculous when he endeavoured it; and found it impoſſible to reform even a few particulars in his own houſe, the incorrigible Roman Court.

The nature and pretended foundation of this ſpiritual Authority doth encourage it with inſuperable obſtinacy to withſtand all reformation: for whereas if any temporal Power doth grow intolerable, God's Providence by Wars and Revolutions of State, may diſpenſe a redreſs, they have prevented this; by ſuppoſing that in this caſe God hath tied his own hands; this Authority being immovably fixed in the ſame hands, from which no revolution can take it; whence from its exorbitances there can be no reſcue or relief.

7. This Authority will ſpoil him in whom it is ſeated; corrupting his mind and manners; rendring him a Scandal to Religion, and a pernicious Inſtrument of wickedneſs by the influence of his example.

It will certainly render him a Tyrant, according to the definition of Ariſtotle, Pol. 4. 10. Cui plus licet quàm par eſt, plus vult quàm licet. Unde ſicut langueſcente capite, reliquum poſtea corpus morbus invadat. Conc. Baſ. Seſſ. 23. (p. 64.) Whence it comes to paſs that if the Head be ſick, the reſt of the Body afterwards grows diſeaſed Vid. Conc. Baſ. p. 87. Conc. Conſt. p. 1110.

To this an uncontrollable power (bridled with no reſtraint) and impunity doth naturally tend, and accordingly hath it been——

How many notorious Reprobates, Monſters of wickedneſs, have been in that See?

Vid. diſt. 40. cap. 6. (hujus culpas, etſi.) Vid. Alv. Pelag. apud. Riv. Cath. Orth. p. 141. Baron. Pope Marcellus II. doubted whether a Pope could be ſaved. Thuan. lib. 15. (p. 566) From John VIII to Leo XI. what a rabble of Rake-hells and Sots did ſit in that Chair! Machiavel. Hiſt. lib. 16. p. 1271. Baron. Ann. 912. §. 8.

If we ſurvey the Lives of Popes, written by Hiſtorians moſt indifferent, or (as moſt have been) partial in favour to them, we ſhall find, at firſt good ones, Martyrs, Confeſſors, Saints — but after this exorbitant power had grown, how few good ones? how many extremely bad? The firſt Popes before Conſtantine were Holy men? the next were tolerable, while the Papacy kept within bounds of modeſty; but when they having ſhaken off their Maſter, and renounced allegiance to the Emperor, (i. e. after Gregory II.) few tolerable; generally they were either Rake-hells, or intolerably arrogant, inſolent, turbulent and ravenous.

Bellarmine and Baronius do bobb off this, by telling us that hence the providence of God is moſt apparent.

Baron. An. 897. § 5. It was ſaid of Veſpaſian, ſolus imperantium melior—— ſo apt is power to corrupt men. Solus omnium ante ſe Principum in melius mutatus eſt. Tac. Hiſt. 1. (p. 451.)

But do they call this preſerving the Church; the permiſſion of it to continue ſo long in ſuch a condition, under the prevalence of ſuch miſchiefs? when hath God deſerted any People if not then? when ſuch Impiety more than Pagan doth reign in it.

How vain is that which P. Greg. VII. citeth out of P. Symmachus, B. Petrus perennem meritorum dotem cum hæreditate innocentiæ miſit ad poſteros. Greg. VII. Ep. 8. 21.

But what in the mean time became of thoſe Souls, which by this means were ruined; what amends for the vaſt damage which Religion ſuſtained? for the introducing ſo pernicious Cuſtoms hardly to be extirpated? ——

Quòd Romanus Pontifex, ſi canonicè fuerit ordinatus, meritis B. Petri indubitanter efficitur ſanctus; was one of P. Greg. VII. his dictates. That the Roman Pontif, if canonically elected, is undoubtedly made holy by the merits of Bleſſed Peter.

To what a paſs of ſhameleſs wickedneſs muſt things have come, when ſuch men as Alexander VI. having viſibly ſuch an impure brood, ſhould be placed in this Chair?

Even after the Reformation began to curb their impudence, and render them more wary, yet had they the face to ſet Paul the Third there.

How unfit muſt ſuch men be, to be the Guides of all Chriſtendom; to breathe Oracles of Truth, to enact Laws of Sanctity?

Sap. 1. 5.

How improper were thoſe Veſſels of Satan to be Organs of that Holy Spirit of diſcipline, which will flee deceit, and remove from thoughts that are without underſtanding, and will not abide where unrighteouſneſs cometh in.

It will engage the Popes to make the Eccleſiaſtical Authority an Engine of advancing the Temporal concerns of his own Relations, (his Sons, his Nephews.)

What indeed is the Popedom now, but a Ladder for a Family to mount unto a great Eſtate?

Vid. Guicciard. Machiav. Hiſt. Fl. p. 19. Conc. Baſ. (p. 65.)

What is it, but introducing an old man into a place, by advantage whereof, a Family muſt make Hay while the Sun ſhines?

—Cùm non ob religionem, & Dei cultum appetere Pontificatum noſtri Sacerdotes videantur, ſed ut fratrum vel nepotum, vel familiarium ingluviem & avaritiam expleant. Plat. in Joh. XVI. (*p.*298.) Whereas our Prieſts ſeem to deſire the Popedom, not for Religion and the worſhip of God, but that they may fill the ravening appetite and covetouſneſs of their brethren, or nephews, or familiars.

This Pretence, upon divers obvious accounts, is apt to create great miſchief in the world, to the diſturbance of Civil Societies, and deſtruction or debilitation of temporal Authority, which is certainly God's Ordinance, and neceſſary to the well-being of mankind; ſo that ſuppoſing it, we may in vain pray for Kings, and all that are in authority, that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godlineſs and honeſty.

1 Tim. 2. 1, 2.

For ſuppoſe the two powers (Spiritual and Temporal) to be coordinate, and independent each of other; then muſt all Chriſtians be put into that perplexed ſtate of repugnant and incompatible obligations; concerning which our Lord ſaith; No man can ſerve two Maſters; for either he will hate the one and love the other, or elſe he will hold to the one and deſpiſe the other.

Matt. 6. 24.

They will often draw ſeveral ways, and claſh in their deſigns, in their laws, in their deciſions; one willing and commanding that, which the other diſliketh and prohibiteth.

Bell. 5. 6. (p. 1415.)

It will be impoſſible by any certain bounds to diſtinguiſh their Juriſdiction, ſo as to prevent conteſt between them; all temporal matters being in ſome reſpect ſpiritual (as being referrible to ſpiritual ends, and in ſome manner allied to Religion) and all ſpiritual things becoming temporal, as they conduce to the ſecular peace and proſperity of States; there is nothing, which each of theſe Powers will not hook within the verge of its cognizance and juriſdiction; each will claim a right to meddle in all things; one pretending thereby to further ther the good of the Church, the other to ſecure the intereſt of the State: and what end or remedy can there be of the differences hence ariſing; there being no third Power to arbitrate or moderate between them?

Each will proſecute its cauſe by its advantages; the one by inſtruments of temporal power, the other by ſpiritual arms of cenſures and curſes.

And in what a caſe muſt the poor People then be? how diſtracted in their conſciences, how divided in their affections, how diſcordant in their practices? according as each pretence hath influence upon them, by its different arguments or peculiar advantages?

How can any man ſatisfy himſelf in performing or refuſing obedience to either? How many (by the intricacy of the point, and contrary pulling) will be withdrawn from yielding due compliance on the one hand or the other?

What ſhall a man do, while one in caſe of diſobedience to his Commands doth brandiſh a Sword, the other thundreth out a Curſe againſt him; one threatneth death, the other exciſion from the Church; both denounce damnation?

What animoſities and contentions, what diſcompoſures and confuſions muſt this Conſtitution of things breed in every place? and how can a Kingdom ſo divided in it ſelf ſtand, or not come into deſolation.

Matt. 12. 25.

Such an advantage infallibly will make Popes affect to invade the temporal Power.

It was the reaſon, which Pope Paſchal alledged againſt Henry IV. becauſe he did Eccleſiæ regnum auferre.

P.Paſch.II. Ep. 7.

It is indeed impoſſible, that a co-ordination of theſe Powers ſhould ſubſiſt; for each will be continually encroaching on the other; each for its own defence and ſupport will continually be ſtruggling and clambring to get above the other: there will never be any quiet till one come to ſubſide and truckle under the other; Whereby the Sovereignty of the one or the other will be deſtroyed. Each of them ſoon will come to claim a Supremacy in all cauſes, and the power of both Swords; and one ſide will carry it.

It is indeed neceſſary, that men for a time continuing poſſeſſed with a reverence to the Eccleſiaſtical Authority, as independent and uncontrollable, it ſhould at laſt overthrow the temporal: by reaſon of its great advantages above it; for,

The Spiritual Power doth pretend an Eſtabliſhment purely Divine; which cannot by any accidents undergo any change, diminutions or tranſlation, to which Temporal dominions are ſubject: Its power therefore, being perpetual, irreverſible, depending immediately of God, can hardly be checked, can never be conquered.

Vid. Mach. *Hiſt. Flor. p.*18.— Impeti poſſunt humanis præſumptionibus quæ divino ſunt judicio conſtituta, vinci autem quorumlibet poteſtate non poſſunt. P. Gel. *Ep.*8. Felix P. *Ep.*1. (*p.*597.)

It fighteth with Tongues and Pens, which are the moſt perillous Weapons.

It can never be diſarmed, fighting with Weapons that cannot be taken away, or deprived of their edge and vigour.

It worketh by moſt powerful conſiderations upon the Conſciences and Affections of men upon pain of damnation, promiſing heaven, and threatning hell; which upon ſome men have an infinite ſway, upon all men a conſiderable influence; and thereby will be too hard for thoſe who only can grant Temporal Rewards, or inflict Temporal Puniſhments. It is ſurely a notable advantage that the Pope hath above all Princes, that he commandeth not only as a Prince, but as a Guide; ſo that whereas we are not otherwiſe bound to obey the commands of Princes, than as they appear concordant with God's Law, we muſt obſerve his commands abſolutely, as being therefore lawful, becauſe he commandeth them, that involving his aſſertion of their lawfulneſs, to which (without farther inquiry or ſcruple) we muſt ſubmit our underſtanding, his words ſufficiently authorizing his commands for juſt. We are not only obliged to obey his commands but to embrace his doctrines.

It hath continual opportunities of converſing with men; and thereby can inſinuate and ſuggeſt the obligation to obey it, with greateſt advantage, in ſecrecy, in the tendereſt ſeaſons.

It claimeth a power to have its inſtruction admitted with aſſent; and will it not inſtruct them for its own advantage? All its Aſſertions muſt be believed ---- is not this an infinite advantage?

By ſuch advantages the Spiritual Power (if admitted for ſuch as it pretendeth) will ſwallow and devour the Temporal; which will be an extreme miſchief to the world.

The very pretence doth immediately crop and curtail the natural Right of Princes; by exempting great numbers of Perſons (the participants and dependents of this Hierarchy) from ſubjection to them. By withdrawing Cauſes from their Juriſdiction. By commanding in their Territories, and drawing People out of them to their Judicatories. By having influence on their Opinions. By draining them of Wealth, &c.

Non enim volumus aut propter principum potentiam Eccleſiaſticam minui dignitatem, aut pro Eccleſiaſtica dignitate Principum potentiam mutilari. P. Paſch. II. Ep. 28, & 29. For we will not that either the Eccleſiaſtical dignity ſhould be diminiſhed, by reaſon of the Prince's power, or that the Prince's power ſhould be curtail'd for the Eccleſiaſtical dignity.

To this diſcourſe Experience abundantly doth yield its Atteſtation; for, How often have the * Popes thwarted Princes in the exerciſe of their Power; challenging their Laws and Adminiſtrations as prejudicial to Religion? as contrary to Eccleſiaſtical Liberty?

In vain did St. Bernard, (de Conſid. I.) cry, Quid fines alienos invaditis? quid falcem veſtram in alienam meſſem extenditis? Why do you invade other mens territories? why thruſt you your ſickle into other Mens harveſt? * Arietes furioſos. Bell. 5. 7.

Bodin (l. 9.) obſerveth, that if any Prince were a Heretick, (that is, if the Pope could pick occaſion to call him ſo) or a Tyrant (that is, in his opinion) or any-wiſe ſcandalous, the Pope would excommunicate him; and would not receive him to favour, but upon his acknowledging himſelf a feudatory to the Pope: So he drew in moſt Kingdoms to depend on him.

Vid. Tort. T. p. 216. Greg. VII. Ep. 1. 7. 112. 13, 63.

How often have they excommunicated them, and interdicted their People from entertaining communion with them?

How many Commotions, Conſpiracies, Rebellions and Inſurrections againſt Princes have they raiſed in ſeveral Countries?

How have they inveigled People from their Allegiance? How many Maſſacres and Aſſaſſinations have they cauſed? How have they depreſſed and vilified the Temporal Power.

Vid. Plat. de Bonif. VIII. p. 467. Jul. 2. Non fine ſuſpicione, quòd illorum temporum Pontifices, qui bella extinguere, diſcordias tollere debuiſſent, ſuſcitarent ea potiùs atque nutrirent. Epiſc. Modruſ. in Conc. Lat. V. Seſſ. 6. (p. 72.)

Not without ſuſpicion, that the Popes of thoſe times, who ought to have extinguiſhed wars, and put an end to diſſenſions, did rather raiſe them up, and cheriſh them.

See Greg. VII. Ep. 4. 2 8. 21.

Have they not aſſumed to themſelves Superiority over all Princes? The Emperor himſelf (the chief of Chriſtian Princes) they did call their Vaſſal, exacting an Oath from them, whereof you have a Form in the Canon Law, and a declaration of Pope Clement V. that it is an Oath of Fealty.

Vid. Conc. Lugd. p. 851.

Have they not challenged propriety in both Swords, Ecce duo Gladii?

How many Princes have they pretended to depoſe, and diſpoſſeſs of their Authority?

Auctoritate Apoſtolica de fratrum noſtrorum conſilio declaramus illa juramenta prædicta fidelitatis exiſtere & cenſeri debere. Clement. lib. 2. Tit. 9 cap. unicum.

We declare out of our Apoſtolical authority, by the advice of our Brethren, that the foreſaid oaths of fealty ought to be, and be ſo eſteemed.

Conſider the Pragmatical Sanctions, Proviſors, Compoſitions, Concordats, &c. which Princes have been forced to make againſt them, or with them to ſecure their Intereſt.

Many good Princes have been forced to oppoſe them, as Henry the Second of England, King Lewis the Twelfth of France, (that Juſt Prince, Pater Patriæ) Perdam Babylonis nomen.

Thuan. lib. 1.

How often have they uſed this as a pretence of raiſing and fomenting Wars? confiding in their Spiritual Arms; interdicting Princes, that would not comply with their deſigns, for advancing the intereſts not only of their See, but of their private Families?

Abutente Chriſtianorum Paſtore Chriſtianorum Principum viribus, ut privatæ ambitioni, & ſuorum libidini inſerviret. Thuan. lib. 1. p. 42. The Paſtor of Chriſtians abuſing the Power of Chriſtian Princes that he might gratify his private ambition, and the will and luſt of his Friends.

Bodin obſerveth that Pope Nicholas I. was the firſt who excommunicated Princes. Platina doth mention ſome before him: But it is remarkable, that although Pope Leo I. (a high ſpirited Pope (Fortiſſimus Leo) as Liberatus calleth him) was highly provoked againſt Theodoſius Junior; Pope Gelaſius, and divers of his Predeceſſors and Followers —— Pope Gregory II. againſt Leo--- Vigilius againſt Juſtinian, &c. yet none of them did preſume to excommunicate the Emperors.

Obſerv.

All theſe dealings are the natural reſult of this Pretence; and, ſuppoſing it well-grounded, are capable of a plauſible juſtification: for is it not fit, (ſeeing one muſt yield) that Temporal ſhould yield to Spiritual?

Indeed, granting the Papal Supremacy in Spirituals, I conceive the high flying Zelots of the Roman Church, who ſubject all Temporal Powers to them, have great reaſon on their ſide, for co-ordinate Power cannot ſubſiſt, and it would be only an eternal Seminary of perpetual diſcords.

The quarrel cannot otherwiſe be well compoſed than by wholly diſclaiming the fictitious and uſurped power of the Pope: for,

Two ſuch Powers (ſo inconſiſtent and croſs to each other, ſo apt to interfere, and conſequently to breed everlaſting miſchiefs to mankind between them) could not be inſtituted by God. ——

He would not appoint two different Vicegerents in his Kingdom at the ſame time. ——

But

Tort. T. p. 210.

But it is plain, that he hath inſtituted the civil Power; and endowed it with a Sword. That Princes are his Lieutenants *.

* P. Anaſt. calleth the Emperor Anaſt. Vicarium. Epiſt. (*p.*670.)

That in the ancient times the Popes did not claim ſuch Authority, but avowed themſelves Subjects to Princes.

Eccl. Leod. p. 522.

9. Conſequently this Pretence is apt to engage Chriſtian Princes againſt Chriſtianity; for they will not endure to be croſſed, to be depreſſed, to be trampled on.

This Popes often have complained of; not conſidering it was their own inſolence that cauſed it.

18. Whereas now Chriſtendom is ſplit into many parcels, ſubject to divers civil Sovereignties, it is expedient that correſpondently there ſhould be diſtinct Eccleſiaſtical Governments, independant of each other, which may comply with the reſpective civil Authorities in promoting the good and peace both of Church and State.

Secundum mutationes temporum transferuntur etiam regna terrarum; unde etiam Eccleſiaſticarum parochiarum fines in pleriſque provinciis mutari expedit & transferri. P. Paſch. II. Ep. 19.

It is fit, that every Prince, ſhould in all things govern all his Subjects; and none ſhould be exempted from ſubordination to his Authority: As Philoſophers, and Phyſicians of the Body; ſo Prieſts, and Phyſicians of the Soul; not in exerciſing their Function, but in taking care that they do exerciſe it duly for the honour of God, and in conſiſtence with publick good: otherwiſe many grievous inconveniences muſt enſue.

It is of perillous conſequence, that foreigners ſhould have authoritative influence upon the Subjects of any Prince; or have power to intermeddle in affairs.

Princes have a natural Right to determine with whom their Subjects ſhall have intercourſe; which is inconſiſtent with a right of Foreigners to govern or judge them in any caſe, without their leave.

Every Prince is obliged to imploy the Power entruſted to him, to the furtherance of God's Service, and encouragement of all good Works; as a Supreme power, without being liable to obſtruction from any other power.

It would irritate his power, if another ſhould be beyond his coercion.

Vid. Bod. de Rep. 1. 9. (*p.*195.)

It is obſervable, that the Pope by intermeddling in the affairs of Kingdoms did ſo wind himſelf into them, as to get a pretence to be Maſter of each; Princes being his Vaſſals and Feudatories.

Car les Princes Chriſtien avoient preſque tous opinion, que le Pape eſtoit abſolvement ſeigneur ſovereigne de tous les Royaumes de la Chreſtiente. Bod. *ib. p.*196. *Tort. Tort.p.*216, &c.—— Greg. *VII. Ep.*1.7.2.13. Alex. *II. Ep.*8.

Ἡ τοσαύτη διαφωνία καὶ μάχη τῶν ἐν τῇ Ἐκκλησίᾳ γίνεται, ἑκάστου τῆς μὲν τοῦ κυρίου ἡμῶν Ι. Χ. διδασκαλίας ἀφισταμένου, λογισμοὺς δέ τινας καὶ ὅρους ἰδίους ἐκδικοῦντος ἐξ αὐθεντίας, καὶ μᾶλλον ἄρχειν ἀπ' ἐναντίας τοῦ κυρίου, ἢ ἄρχεσθαι ὑπὸ τοῦ κυρίου βουλομένου. Baſ. *de Jud. Dei, T.*2.*p.*259.

So great a diſſonancy and jarring there is among men in the Church, while every one ſwerves from the Doctrine of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and aſſerts certain conceits and rules of his own by his own authority, and had rather rule contrary to the Lord, than be rul'd by the Lord.

11. Such an Authority is needleſs and uſeleſs; it not ſerving the ends which it pretendeth; and they being better compaſſed without it.

It pretendeth to maintain Truth; but indeed it is more apt to oppreſs it.

Truth is rather (as St. Cyprian wiſely obſerveth) preſerved by the multitude of Biſhops, whereof ſome will be ready to relieve it, when aſſaulted by others.

Truth cannot be ſupported merely by humane Authority; eſpecially that Authority is to be ſuſpected, which pretendeth dominion over our minds. What Controverſy, being doubtful in it ſelf, will not after his Deciſion continue doubtful? his Sentence may be eluded by interpretation as well as other Teſtimonies or Authorities.

The opinion of a man's great wiſdom or skill may be the ground of aſſent, in defect of other more cogent Arguments; but Authority of Name or Dignity is not proper to convince a man's underſtanding. Men obey, but not believe Princes more than others, if not more learned than others.

It pretendeth to maintain Order: but how? by introducing Slavery; by deſtroying all Rights; by multiplying Diſorders; by hindring Order to be quietly adminiſtred in each Country.

It pretendeth to be the only means of Unity and Concord in Opinion, by determining Controverſies: which its Advocates affirm neceſſary.

Neceſſe eſt, ut omnes fideles idem ſentiant. Bell. 1. 9. It is neceſſary that all the Faithful ſhould be of the ſame Opinion.

But how can that be neceſſary which never was de facto? not even in the Roman Church?

Hath the Pope effected this? do all his Followers agree in all points? Do they agree about his Authority? Do not they differ and diſpute about infinity of Queſtions? Are all the points frivolous, about which their Divines and Schoolmen diſpute? Why did not the Council of Trent it ſelf, without more ado, and keeping ſuch a diſputing, refer all to his Oracular Deciſion?

Neceſſary points may and will, by all honeſt people, be known and determined without him, by the clear Teſtimony of Scripture, by conſent of Fathers, by general Tradition. —— And other points need not to be determined.

ἱκανωτέρα ἡ θεία γραφή. Ath.

That he may be capable of that Office, he muſt be believed appointed by God thereto; which is a queſtion it ſelf to be decided without him, to ſatisfaction. His power is apt no otherwiſe to knock down Controverſies, than by depreſſing Truth; not ſuffering any Truth to be aſſerted, which doth not favour its Intereſts.

Concord was maintained and Controverſies decided without them in the ancient Church; in Synods, wherein he was not the ſole Judge, nor had obſervable influence.

The Fathers did not think ſuch Authority needful, otherwiſe they would have made more uſe of it.

Nemini præſcribentes.

A more ready way to define Controverſies, is for every one not to preſcribe to others, or to proſecute; for then men would more calmly ſee the Truth, and conſent.

It pretendeth to maintain Peace and Unity. But nothing hath raiſed more fierce Diſſenſions, or ſo many bloody Wars in Chriſtendom as it.

It is apt by tyrannical adminiſtration to become intolerable, and ſo to break the Eccleſiaſtical State; to raiſe Schiſms and Troubles.

It is like to extinguiſh genuine Charity, which is free and uncompelled.

All the Peace and Charity which it endureth, is by force and compulſion, not out of choice and good affection.

V. The Ancients did aſſert to each Biſhop a free, abſolute, independent Authority, ſubject to none, directed by none, accountable to none on Earth, in the adminiſtration of affairs properly concerning his particular Church.

This is moſt evident in St. Cyprian's Writings; out of which it will not be amiſs to ſet down ſome paſſages, manifeſting the ſenſe and practice in the Church in his time, to the ſatisfaction of any ingenuous mind.

Manente concordiæ vinculo, & perſeverante Catholicæ Eccleſiæ individuo Sacramento, actum ſuum diſponit & dirigit unuſquiſq; Epiſcopus, rationem propoſiti ſui Domino redditurus. Cypr. Ep. 52. (ad Antonianum.)

The Bond of concord abiding, and the Sacrament (or Doctrine) of the Catholick Church perſiſting undivided, every Biſhop diſpoſeth and directeth his own acts, being to render an account of his purpoſe to the Lord: this he writeth, when he was pleading the cauſe of Pope Cornelius againſt Novatian; but then, it ſeemeth, not dreaming of his Supremacy over others.

Cæterùm ſcimus quoſdam quod ſemel imbiberint nolle deponere, nec propoſitum ſuum facilè mutare, ſed ſalvo inter Collegas, pacis & concordiæ vinculo quædam propria, quæ apud ſe ſemel ſint uſurpata, retinere; qua in re nec nos vim cuiquam facimus, aut legem damus, cùm habeat in Eccleſiæ adminiſtratione voluntatis ſuæ liberum arbitrium unuſquiſque præpoſitus, rationem actûs ſui Domino redditurus. Cypr. *Ep.*72. (ad Stephanum.)

Hæc ad conſcientiam tuam, frater chariſſime, & pro honore communi & pro ſimplici dilectione pertulimus, &c.

Conſenſu & auctoritate communi.

But we know that ſome will not lay down what once they have imbibed, nor will eaſily change their mind; but, the bond of peace and concord with their Collegues being preſerved, will retain ſome peculiar things, which have once been uſed by them; in which matter neither do we force any, or give law; whenas every Prelate hath in the adminiſtration of his Church the free power of his will, being to render unto the Lord an account of his acting: this, ſaith he, writing to Pope Stephanus, and in a friendly manner, out of common reſpect and ſingle love, (not out of ſervile obeiſance) acquainting him what he and his brethren in a Synod, by common conſent and authority, had eſtabliſhed concerning the degradation of Clergy-men, who had been ordained by Hereticks, or had lapſed into Schiſm.

Nam cùm ſtatutum ſit omnibus nobis, & æquum ſit pariter ac juſtum, ut uniuſcujuſque cauſa illic audiatur, ubi eſt crimen admiſſum, & ſingulis Paſtoribus portio gregis ſit adſcripta, quam regat unuſquiſque & gubernet, rationem actûs ſui Domino redditurus, oportet utiq; eos quibus præſumus, non circumcurſare, &c. Cypr. *Ep.*55. (ad Cornelium.)

For ſeeing it is ordained by us all, and it is likewiſe equal and juſt, that each man's cauſe ſhould be there heard where the crime is committed; and to each Paſtor a portion of the Flock is aſſigned, which each ſhould rule and govern, being to render an account to his Lord; thoſe indeed over whom we preſide ought not to ramble about: this, ſaith he, in his Epiſtle to Pope Cornelius, upon occaſion of ſome factious Clergy-men addreſſing themſelves to him with factious ſuggeſtions, to gain his Countenance.

Hæc tibi breviter pro noſtra mediocritate reſcripſimus, frater chariſſime; nemini præſcribentes, aut præjudicantes, quo minùs unuſquiſq; Epiſcoporum quod putat faciat, habens arbitrii ſui liberam poteſtatem. Cypr. *Ep.*73. (ad Jubabaianum.)

These things I have briefly written back according to our meanneſs, dear brother; preſcribing to none, nor prejudging, that every Biſhop ſhould not do what he thinks good, having a free power of his will.

Quâ in parte nemini verecundia & modeſtia noſtra præjudicat, quo minùs unuſquiſq; quod putat ſentiat, & quod ſenſerit faciat. Cypr. *Ep.*76 (ad Magnum.)

Nemini præſcribentes, quò minùs ſtatuat quod putat unuſquiſque Præpoſitus, actûs ſui rationem Domino redditurus; ſecundum quod Apoſtolus, &c. Ibid.

In which matter our baſhfulneſs and modeſty doth not prejudice any one; ſo that every one may not judge he thinketh, and act as he judgeth: Preſcribing to none, ſo that every Biſhop may not reſolve what he thinks good, being to render an account to the Lord, &c.

Supereſt ut de hac re ſinguli quid ſentiamus proferamus, neminem judicantes, aut à jure communionis aliquem ſi diverſum ſenſerit amoventes; neque enim quiſ-

It remaineth that each of us do utter his opinion about this matter, judging no man, nor removing any man, if he diſſenteth, from the right of communion;

nion; for neither doth any of us conſtitute himſelf Biſhop of Biſhops, or by tyrannical terrour driveth his Collegues to a neceſſity of obeying; whenas every Biſhop hath upon account of his liberty and authority his own free choice, and is no leſs exempted from being judged by another, than he is uncapable to judge another; but let us all expect the judgment of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who, and who alone, hath power both to prefer us to the government of his Church, and to judge of our acting: theſe words did St. Cyprian ſpeak as Proloquutor of the great Synod of Biſhops at Carthage; and what words could be more expreſs, or more full, in aſſertion of the Epiſcopal Liberties and Rights, againſt almoſt every branch of Romiſh pretences?

quam noſtrum Epiſcopum ſe eſſe Epiſcoporum conſtituit, aut tyrannico terrore ad obſequendi neceſſitatem Collegas ſuos adigit; quando habeat omnis Epiſcopus pro licentia libertatis & poteſtatis ſuæ arbitrium proprium, tàmque judicari ab alio non poſſit, quàm nec ipſe poteſt alterum judicare; ſed expectemus univerſi judicium Domini noſtri Jeſu Chriſti, qui unus & ſolus habet poteſtatem & præponendi nos in Eccleſiæ ſuæ gubernatione, & de actu noſtro judicandi. Cypr. in præf. Conc. Carthag.

He diſavoweth the practice of one Biſhop excluding another from communion for diſſent in opinion about diſputable points: He rejecteth the pretence that any man can have to be a Biſhop of Biſhops, or ſuperior to all his Brethren: He condemneth the impoſing opinions upon Biſhops, and conſtraining them to obedience; He diſclaimeth any power in one Biſhop to judge another; He aſſerteth to each Biſhop a full liberty and power to manage his own concerns according to his diſcretion; He affirmeth every Biſhop to receive his power only from Chriſt, and to be liable only to his judgment.

We may obſerve, that St. Auſtin, in his Reflections upon the Paſſages in that Synod, doth approve, yea admire that Preface, paſſing high commendations on the ſmarteſt paſſages of it which aſſert common liberty, profeſſing his own conformity in practice to them; In this conſultation (ſaith he) is ſhewed a pacifick ſoul, overflowing with plenty of charity; and, We have therefore a free choice of inquiry granted to us by the moſt mild and moſt veracious ſpeech of Cyprian himſelf; and, Now if the proud and tumid minds of Hereticks dare to extol themſelves againſt the holy humility of this ſpeech— than which what can be more gentle, more humble?

Aug. de Bapt. cont. Donat. lib. 2. 3, &c.

Habemus ergo quærendi liberum arbitrium ipſius Cypriani nobis mitiſſimo & veraciſſimo ſermone conceſſum. Lib. 3. cap. 3.

Nunc ſi ſe audent ſuperbæ & tumidæ cervices hæreticorum adverſus ſanctam humilitatem hujus ſententiæ extollant. Lib. 2. cap. 3.

Quid manſuetius, quid humilius? Lib. 3. cap 3.

Would St. Auſtin have ſwallowed thoſe Sayings, could he have ſo much applauded them, if he had known a juſt power then extant and radiant in the World, which they do impeach and ſubvert? No, I trow; he did not know, nor ſo much as dream of any ſuch; although the Pope was under his noſe while he was diſcuſſing that point, and he could hardly talk ſo much of St. Cyprian without thinking of Pope Stephen.

However let any man of ſenſe honeſtly read and weigh thoſe paſſages, conſidering who did write them, to whom he writ them, upon what occaſions he writ them, when he writ them; that he was a great Primate of the Church, a moſt holy, moſt prudent, moſt humble and meek Perſon; that he addreſſed divers of them to Biſhops of Rome; that many of them were touching the concerns of Popes, that he writ them in times of perſecution and diſtreſs, which produce the moſt ſober and ſerious thoughts; then let him if he can, conceive, that all Chriſtian Biſhops were then held ſubject to the Pope, or owned ſuch a power due to him as he now claimeth.

We may add a contemporary Teſtimony of the Roman Clergy, addreſſing to St. Cyprian in theſe words; Although a mind well conſcious to it ſelf, and ſupported by the Quanquam benè ſibi conſcius animus, & Evangelicæ diſciplinæ vigore ſubnixus, vigor of Evangelical diſcipline, and having in heavenly doctrines become a true witneſs to it ſelf, is wont to be content with God for its only judge; and not to deſire the praiſes, nor to dread the accuſations of another; yet they are worthy of double praiſe, who when they know they owe their conſciences to God only as judge, yet deſire alſo their actions to be approved by their brethren themſelves; the which it is no wonder that you, brother Cyprian, ſhould do, who according to your modeſty and natural induſtry would have us not ſo much judges as partakers of your Counſels—— Then it ſeems the College of Cardinals, not ſo high in the inſtep as they are now, did take St. Cyprian to be free, and not accountable for his actions to any other Judge but God.

& verus ſibi in decretis cœleſtibus teſtis effectus, ſoleat ſolo Deo judice eſſe contentus, nec alterius aut laudes petere, aut accuſationes pertimeſcere; tamen geminatâ ſunt laude condigni, qui cum conſcientiam ſciant Deo ſoli debere ſe judici, actus tamen ſuos deſiderant etiam ab ipſis ſuis fratribus comprobari: quod te, frater Cypriane, facere non mirum eſt, qui pro tua verecundia, & ingenita induſtria conſiliorum tuorum nos non tam judices voluiſti, quàm participes inveniri—— Cler. Rom. ad Cypr. Ep 31.

That this notion of liberty did continue a good time after in the Church, we may ſee by that Canon of the Antiochene Synod; ordaining that every Biſhop have power of his own Biſhoprick, govern it according to the beſt of his care and diſcretion, and provide for all the Country belonging to his City, ſo as to ordain Prieſts and Deacons, and diſpoſe things aright.

Ἕκαστον γὰρ Ἐπίσκοπον ἐξουσίαν ἔχειν τῆς ἑαυτοῦ παροικίας, διοικεῖν κατὰ τὴν ἑκάστῳ ἐπιβάλλουσαν εὐλάβειαν, καὶ πρόνοιαν ποιεῖσθαι πάσης τῆς χώρας τῆς ὑπὸ τὴν ἑαυτοῦ πόλιν; ὡς καὶ χειροτονεῖν πρεσβυτέρους καὶ διακόνους, καὶ μετὰ κρίσεως ἕκαστα διαλαμβάνειν.—Syn. Ant. Can. 9.

The Monks of Conſtantinople in the Synod of Chalcedon, ſaid thus; We are Sons of the Church, and have one Father, after God, our Archbiſhop: they forgot their Sovereign Father the Pope.

Ἡμεῖς δὲ καὶ τέκνα τῆς Ἐκκλησίας ἐσμὲν, καὶ ἕνα πατέρα μετὰ τὸν Θεὸν, τὸν ἀρχιεπίσκοπον ἔχομεν. Syn. Chalc. Act. 1. p. 114.

The like notion may ſeem to have been then in England, when the Church of Canterbury was called the common Mother of all under the diſpoſition of its Spouſe Jeſus Chriſt.

Omnium noſtrum mater communis ſub Sponſi ſui Jeſu Chriſti diſpoſitione. Gervaſ. Dorob. (p. 1663) apud Twiſd. p. 72.

Vid. Ep. P. Celeſt. I. in Conc. Eph. Act. 2. (p. 324.)

VI. The Ancients did hold all Biſhops, as to their Office, originally according to Divine Inſtitution, or abſtracting from humane Sanctions framed to preſerve Order and Peace, to be equal; for that all are Succeſſors of the Apoſtles, all derive their Commiſſion and Power in the ſame tenor from God, all of them are Ambaſſadors, Stewards, Vicars of Chriſt; entruſted with the ſame divine Miniſteries of inſtructing, diſpenſing the Sacraments, ruling and exerciſing Diſcipline; to which Functions and Privileges the leaſt Biſhop hath right, and to greater the biggeſt cannot pretend.

One Biſhop might exceed another in Splendor, in Wealth, in Reputation, in extent of Juriſdiction, as one King may ſurpaſs another in amplitude of Territory; but as all Kings, ſo all Biſhops, are equal in Office and eſſentials of Power, derived from God.

Baron. An. 57. § 30. Pſ. 45. 16.

Hence they applied to them that in the Pſalm, Inſtead of thy Fathers ſhall be thy Children, whom thou maiſt make Princes in all the earth.

Ubicunq; fuerit Epiſcopus, ſive Romæ ſive Eugubii, &c. Hieron. ad Evagr. Ep. 85.

This was St. Hierom's Doctrine in thoſe famous words; Whereever a Biſhop be, whether at Rome or at Eugubium, at Conſtantinople or at Rhegium, at Alexandria or at Thanis, he is of the ſame worth, and of the ſame Prieſthood; the force of wealth, and lowneſs of poverty doth not render a Biſhop more high, or more low; for that all of them are Succeſſors of the Apoſtles: to evade which plain aſſertion, they have forged diſtinctions, whereof St. Hierom ſurely did never think, he ſpeaking ſimply concerning Biſhops, as they ſtood by Divine Inſtitution, not according to humane Models, which gave ſome advantages over other.

That this notion did continue long in the Church, we may ſee by the Elogies of Biſhops in later Synods; for inſtance, that in the Synod of Compeigne; It is convenient all Chriſtians ſhould know what kind of Office the Biſhop is---- who 'tis plain are the Vicars of Chriſt, and keep the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven.

Omnibus in Chriſtiana religione conſtitutis ſcire convenit quale ſit miniſterium Epiſcoporum — quos conſtat eſſe Vicarios Chriſti, & Clavigeros Regni Cœlorum, &c. Syn. Compend. An. Dom. 833. (apud Bin. Tom 6. *p.*361.)

And that of the Synod of Melun; And though all of us unworthy, yet are the Vicars of Chriſt, and Succeſſors of his Apoſtles.

Nos omnes licèt indigni, Chriſti tamen Vicarii, & Apoſtolorum ipſius Succeſſores. Syn. Meldenſ. An. Dom. 845. (apud Bin. *Tom.*6. p 402.)

In contemplation of which verity, St. Gregory Nazianzene obſerving the declenſion from it introduced in his times, by the ambition of ſome Prelates, did vent that famous exclamation: O that there were not at all any preſidency, or any preference in place, and tyrannical enjoyment of prerogatives---- which earneſt wiſh he ſurely did not mean to level againſt the Ordinance of God, but againſt that which lately began to be intruded by men: And what would the good man have wiſhed, if he had been aware of thoſe pretences about which we diſcourſe; which then did only begin to bud and peep up in the World?

Ὡς ὄφελον γε μηδὲ ἦν προεδρεία, μηδὲ τις τόπου προτίμησις, καὶ τυραννικὴ προνομία---- Greg. Naz. *Orat.*28.

1. Common practice is a good interpreter of common ſentiments in any caſe; and it therefore ſheweth, that in the primitive Church the Pope was not deemed to have a right of Univerſal Sovereignty; for if ſuch a thing had been inſtituted by God, or eſtabliſhed by the Apoſtles, the Pope certainly with evident clearneſs would have appeared to have poſſeſſed it; and would have ſometimes (I might ſay frequently, yea continually) have exerciſed it in the firſt Ages; which that he did not at all, we ſhall make, I hope, very manifeſt by reflecting on the chief paſſages occurring then; whereof indeed there is ſcarce any one, which duly weighed, doth not ſerve to overthrow the Roman pretence; but that matter I reſerve to another place; and ſhall propound other conſiderations, declaring the ſenſe of the Fathers; only I ſhall add, that indeed,

2. The ſtate of the moſt primitive Church did not well admit ſuch an Univerſal Sovereignty. For that did conſiſt of ſmall bodies incoherently ſituated and ſcattered about in very diſtant places, and conſequently unfit to be modelled into one political Society, or to be governed by one Head. Eſpecially conſidering their condition under Perſecution and Poverty. What convenient reſort for Direction or Juſtice could a few diſtreſſed Chriſtians in Egypt, Ethiopia, Parthia, India, Meſopotamia, Syria, Armenia, Cappadocia, and other parts, have to Rome? what trouble, what burthen had it been to ſeek Inſtruction, Succour, Deciſion of Caſes thence? Had they been obliged or required to do ſo, what offences, what clamours would it have raiſed? ſeeing that afterward, when Chriſtendom was connected, and compacted together; when the ſtate of Chriſtians was flouriſhing and proſperous, when paſſages were open, and the beſt of opportunities of correſpondence were afforded, yet the ſetting out of theſe pretences did cauſe great oppoſitions and ſtirs; ſeeing the exerciſe of this Authority, when it had obtained moſt vigor, did produce ſo many grievances, ſo many complaints, ſo many courſes to check and curb it, in Countries feeling the inconveniences and miſchiefs ſpringing from it?

The want of the like in the firſt Ages is a good Argument, that the cauſe of them had not yet ſprung up; Chriſtendom could not have been ſo ſtill, if there had been then ſo meddleſom a body in it, as the Pope now is.

Nobis, poſt exceſſum nobiliſſimæ memoriæ viri Fabiani, nondum eſt Epiſcopus propter rerum & temporum difficultatem conſtitutus, qui omnia iſta moderetur— Cl. Rom. ad Cypr. *Ep.*31.

The Roman Clergy in their Epiſtle to St. Cyprian told him, that becauſe of the difficulty of things and times, they could not conſtitute a Biſhop who might moderate things immediately belonging to them in their own precincts: how much more in that ſtate of things would a Biſhop there be fit to moderate things over all the World; when (as Rigaltius truly noteth) the Church being then oppreſſed with various vexations, the communication of Provinces between themſelves was difficult and unfrequent.

Variis tunc Eccleſiâ vexationibus oppreſſâ, difficilis & infrequens erat Provinciarum inter ſeſe communicatio. Rigalt. in Cypr. *Ep.*67.

Verum enim eſt impeditam fuiſſe eo tempore non parùm Pontificis auctoritatem —— propter perſecutiones continuas non potuiſſe Romanos Pontifices liberè exercere eam, quàm à Chriſto acceperant auctoritatem,&c. Bell. *de R. P.*2.17.

Wherefore Bellarmine himſelf doth confeſs, that in thoſe times, before the Nicene Synod the authority of the Pope was not a little hindered, ſo that becauſe of continual perſecutions he could not freely exerciſe it.

The Church therefore could ſo long ſubſiſt without the uſe of ſuch Authority, by the vigilance of Governors over their Flocks, and the friendly correſpondence of neighbour Churches: And if he would let it alone it might do ſo ſtill.

That could be no Divine Inſtitution, which had no vigor in the firſt and beſt times; but an Innovation raiſed by Ambition.

VII. The Ancients, when occaſion did require, did maintain their equality of Office and Authority particularly in reſpect to the Roman Biſhops; not only interpretatively by practice, but directly and formally in expreſs terms aſſerting it.

Niſi ſi paucis deſperatis & perditis minor eſſe videtur auctoritas Epiſcoporum in Africa conſtitutorum, qui jam de illis judicaverunt——

Thus when Feliciſſimus and his Complices, being rejected by St. Cyprian, did apply themſelves to Pope Cornelius for his communion and countenance, St. Cyprian affirmed that to be an irregular and unjuſt courſe; ſubjoining, Except to a few deſperate and wicked Perſons, the authority of the Biſhops conſtituted in Africk, who have already judged of them, do ſeem leſs; that is, inferior to any other Authority, particularly to that of Rome, unto which they had recourſe; what other meaning could he have? doth not his Argument require this meaning?

* Fides quam expoſuerunt qui affuerunt Epiſcopi 97 —— Hilar. de Synodis. (*p.*367.)

Congregatam Sanctorum Synodum. Hilar. ibid.

Venerabiles Antiocheni Canones. P. Nicol.*I. Ep.*9 (*p.*519)

Another inſtance is that of the Fathers of the Antiochene Synod, * (being 97 Biſhops) the which St. Hilary calleth, a Synod of Saints congregated, (the Decrees whereof the Catholick Church did admit into its Code, and the Canons whereof Popes have called Venerable) theſe in their Epiſtle to Pope Julius, complaining of his demeanour in the caſe of Athanaſius, did flatly aſſert to themſelves an equality with him; They did not (as Sozomen reciteth out of their Epiſtle) therefore think it equal, that they ſhould be thought inferiors, becauſe they had not ſo big and numerous a Church.

Οὐ παρὰ τοῦτο τὰ δεύτερα φέρειν ἠξίουν, ὅτι μὴ μεγέθει, ἢ πλήθει Ἐκκλησίας πλεονεκτοῦσιν. Soz. 3. 8.

That Pope himſelf teſtifieth the ſame in his Epiſtle to them, extant in the ſecond Apology of Athanaſius; If, ſaith he, ye do truly conceive the honour of Biſhops to be equal, and the ſame; and ye do not, as ye write, judge of Biſhops according to the magnitude of Cities; which aſſertion of theirs ſo flatly thwarting Papal Supremacy he doth not at all confute, yea not ſo much as contradict; and therefore reaſonably may be interpreted to yield conſent thereto; the rule, He that holdeth his peace ſeemeth to conſent, never holding better than in this caſe, when his Copyhold was ſo nearly touched; indeed he had been very blameable to wave ſuch an occaſion of defending ſo important a Truth; or in letting ſo peſtilent an Errour to paſs without correction or reproof.

Εἰ οὖν ἀληθῶς ἴσην καὶ τὴν αὐτὴν ἡγεῖσθε τιμὴν τῶν Ἐπισκόπων, καὶ μὴ ἐκ τοῦ μεγέθους τῶν πόλεων, ὡς γράφετε, κρίνετε τοὺς Ἐπισκόπους. P. Jul. I. apud Athan. in Apol. 2. (p. 744.)

Qui tacet conſentiri videtur.

After the Pope had climbed higher than at that time (upon the ladders of diſſenſion and diſſorders in the Church) yet he was reproved by Euphemius Biſhop of Conſtantinople, for preferring himſelf before his Brethren; as we may collect from thoſe words of a zealous Pope, We deſire not to be placed above others (as you ſay) ſo much as to have fellowſhip holy and well-pleaſing to God with all the faithful.

Hic non tam optamus præponi aliis (ſicut prædicas) quàm cum fidelibus cunctis ſanctum & Deo placitum habere conſortium. P.Gelaſ. I. *Ep.*1 (ad Euphemium)

That Pope Gregory I. did not hold himſelf ſuperior to other Biſhops, many Sayings of his do infer; for in this he placeth the fault of the Biſhop of Conſtantinople, which he ſo often and ſo ſeverely reprehendeth, that he did prefer himſelf before, and extol himſelf above other Biſhops.

—In elatione ſuâ Antichriſtum præcurrit, quia ſuperbiendo ſe cæteris præponit. P. Greg. I. Ep.6.30. Super cæteros Sacerdotes ſe extollit. ibid. Chriſti ſibi ſtudent membra judicare. P. Greg. I. Ep.4.36. Solus omnibus præeſſe. Id. Ep.4.38. ——quibus (Epiſcopis) cupis temetipſum vocabulo elationis præponere. ibid.

And would he directly aſſume that to himſelf, which he chargeth on another, although only following his poſition by conſequence?

And when Eulogius the Biſhop of Alexandria had complementally ſaid, Sicut juſſiſtis, As ye commanded; He doth thus expreſs his reſentment; That word of command I deſire you let me not hear; becauſe I know who I am, and who ye are; by place ye are my brethren, in goodneſs fathers; I did not therefore command, but what ſeem'd profitable, I hinted to you.

Quòd verbum juſſionis peto à meo auditu removeri; quia ſcio quis ſum, qui eſtis; loco enim mihi fratres eſtis, moribus patres, non ergo juſſi, ſed quæ utilia viſa ſunt, indicare curavi,&c. Greg. I. Ep. 7. 30. (ad Eulog. Alex.

That many ſuch Inſtances may not be alledged out of Antiquity, the reaſon is, becauſe the Ancient Popes did not underſtand this Power to belong to them, and therefore gave no occaſion for Biſhops to maintain their honour; or were more juſt, prudent and modeſt, than to take ſo much upon them as their Succeſſors did, upon frivolous pretences.

VIII. The ſtyle uſed by the primitive Biſhops in their applications to the Roman Biſhop doth ſignify, that they did not apprehend him their Sovereign, but their equal.

Brother, Collegue, Fellow-biſhop, are the terms which St. Cyprian doth uſe in ſpeaking about the Roman Biſhops, his contemporaries, Fabianus, Cornelius, Lucius, Stephanus; and in his Epiſtles to the three laſt of them; nor doth he ever uſe any other, importing higher reſpect due to them; as indeed his practice demonſtrateth he did not apprehend any other due; or that he did take them for his Superiors in Office. Know now brother, was the compellation of Dionyſius (Biſhop of Alexandria) to Pope Stephanus. The Synod of Antioch, which rejected Paulus Cypr Ep. 4. 41. 58 67. 68 45. 49. &c.

Ἴσθι νῦν ἀδελφὲ, -- Euſeb 7. 5.

lus Samoſatenus, inſcribeth its Epiſtle to Dionyſius (then Biſhop of Rome) and Maximus, and all our Fellow-miniſters through the world.

The old Synod of Arles directeth their Epiſtle to Signiour Sylveſter, their brother. Athanaſius ſaith, Theſe things may ſuffice, which have been written by our beloved and Fellow-miniſter Damaſus Biſhop of great Rome. Marcellus inſcribed to Pope Julius, to his Moſt bleſſed Fellow-miniſter. So Cyril ſpake of Pope Celeſtine I. Our brother and Fellow-miniſter the Biſhop of Rome. So St. Baſil, and his Fellow-biſhops of the Eaſt, did inſcribe their Epiſtle, To the beloved of God, and our moſt holy brethren and Fellow-miniſters, the unanimous Biſhops through Italy and France. In this ſtyle do the Fathers of Sardica ſalute Pope Julius; thoſe of Conſtantinople Pope Damaſus; thoſe of Epheſus Pope Celeſtine I. our brother and Fellow-miniſter Celeſtine; thoſe of Carthage Pope Celeſtine I. in the very ſame terms wherein St. Auſtin doth ſalute Maximinus, a Donatiſt Biſhop, Signiour my beloved and moſt honoured brother. The Oriental Biſhops, Euſtathius, Theophilus and Sylvanus, did inſcribe their Remonſtrance to Pope Liberius, To Signiour our brother and Fellow-miniſter Liberius. So John of Antioch to Neſtorius writeth, to my Maſter. The Synod of Illyricum call Elpidius, Our Seniour and Fellow-miniſter.

In which Inſtances, and ſome others of later date, we may obſerve that the word κύριος, or Dominus, was then (as it is now) barely a term of civility, being then uſually given to any perſon of Quality, or to whom they would expreſs common reſpect; ſo that St. Chryſoſtom in his Epiſtles commonly doth give it not only to meaner Biſhops, but even to Prieſts; and St. Auſtin doth thus ſalute even Donatiſt Biſhops; reflecting thereon thus, Since therefore by charity I ſerve you in this Office of writing Letters to you, I do not improperly call you Maſter, for the ſake of our one true Maſter who has commanded us ſo to do. ---- my moſt honour'd Maſter. ---- now therefore having with me my moſt honour'd Signiour and moſt reverend Presbyter, &c. ----- my moſt honour'd Maſter Aſyncritus the elder.

Pope Celeſtine himſelf did ſalute the Epheſine Fathers, κύριοι ἀδελφοὶ, maſters, brethren. Even in the VI. Council, Thomas Biſhop of Conſtantinople did inſcribe according to the old ſtyle, to Pope Vitalianus, his brother and Fellow-miniſter.

The French Biſhops had good reaſon to expoſtulate with Pope Nicholas I. You may know, that we are not, as you boaſt and brag, your Clerks; whom, if pride would ſuffer, you ought to acknowledge for your brethren and Fellow-biſhops.

Such are the terms and titles which primitive integrity when they meant to ſpeak moſt kindly and reſpectfully did allow the Pope, being the Διονυσίῳ καὶ Μαξίμῳ καὶ τοῖς κατὰ τὴν οἰκουμένην πᾶσι συλλειτουργοῖς ἡμῶν. Euſeb. 7. 30.

Ἱκανὰ μὲν τὰ γραφέντα παρά τε τοῦ ἀγαπητοῦ καὶ συλλειτουργοῦ Δαμάσου. Athan. Ep. ad Afr. (p.931.)

Τῷ μακαριωτάτῳ συλλειτουργῷ Ἰουλίῳ. Marcell. ad P Jul. Epiph. hær.72.

Ἀδελφοῦ καὶ συλλειτουργοῦ ἡμῶν τοῦ τῆς Ῥωμαίων Ἐκκλησίας Ἐπισκόπου——— Cyril ad Neſt. in Syn. Eph. p. 207.

Τοῖς θεοφιλεστάτοις καὶ ὁσιωτάτοις ἀδελφοῖς συλλειτουργοῖς κατὰ τὴν Ἰταλίαν καὶ Γαλλίαν ὁμοψύχοις Ἐπισκόποις. Baſ. Ep.69.

Athanaſ. Apol. 2. (p.761. 756.)

Theod. 5. 9.

Τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ καὶ συλλειτουργοῦ ἡμῶν Κελεστίνου. Syn. Eph. p.217.

Domino dilectiſſimo & honoratiſſimo fratri.—— Conc. Afr.

Domino dilectiſſimo & honorabili fratri Maximino. Aug. Ep.203.

Κυρίῳ ἀδελφῷ, καὶ συλλειτουργῷ Λιβερίῳ Εὐστάθιος, Θεόφιλος, Σιλβανὸς ἐν Κυρίῳ χαίρειν ——— Socr.4.12.

Τῷ δεσπότῃ μου. Conc. Eph. p.202.

Τὸν κύριον ἡμῶν καὶ συλλειτουργόν. Theod. 4. 9.

Cùm ergò vel hoc ipſo officio literarum per charitatem tibi ſerviam, non abſurdè te Dominum voco, propter unum & verum Dominum noſtrum qui nobis iſta præcepit. Aug. Ep.103.

Δέσποτά μου τιμιώτατε. Chryſ. Ep 26.

Νῦν γοῦν ἐπιλαβόμενοι τοῦ Κυρίου μου τιμιωτάτου καὶ εὐλαβεστάτου Πρεσβυτέρου. Chryſ. Ep.26.

Δεσπότην μου τιμιώτατον Ἀσύγκριτον τὸν Πρεσβύτερον. Ep.68 (71,75,77,84,91,&c.)

Κύριοι ἀδελφοί. P. Celeſt. I. Ep. ad Syn. Eph. Act.2. (p.324.)

Conc. 6. Act.13. p. 224.

Scias nos non tuos eſſe, ut te jactas & extollis, Clericos, quos ut fratres & Coepiſcopos recognoſcere, ſi elatio permitteret, debueras. An. Franc. Pith. (An.858.)

the ſame which all Biſhops did give to one another; (as may be ſeen in all ſolemn addreſſes, and reports concerning them:) which is an Argument ſufficiently plain, that Biſhops in thoſe times did not take themſelves to be the Pope's Subjects, or his inferiors in Office; but his Fellows and Mates, co-ordinate in rank.

Were not theſe improper terms for an ordinary Gentleman, or Nobleman to accoſt his Prince in? yet hardly is there ſuch a diſtance between any Prince and his Peers, as there is between a modern Pope and other Biſhops.

It would now be taken for a great arrogance and ſawcineſs, for an underling Biſhop to addreſs to the Pope in ſuch language, or to ſpeak of him in that manner; which is a ſign that the World is altered in its notion of him, and that he beareth a higher conceit of himſelf than his primitive Anceſtors did. Now nothing but Beatiſſimus Pater, moſt bleſſed Father, and Dominus noſter Papa, our Lord the Pope, in the higheſt ſenſe will ſatisfy him.

Now a Pope in a General Synod, in a ſolemn Oration, could be told to his Face, that the moſt Holy Senate of Cardinals had choſen a Brother into a Father, a Collegue into a Lord. Verily ſo it is now, but not ſo anciently.

Verè divinâ providentiâ factum cenſendum eſt, quòd te ſacerrimus iſte Senatus—— Fratrem, & ità dixerim Filium in Patrem, Collegam in Dominum— elegerint, aſſumpſerint, adoraverint. Balt. Delrio. in Conc. Later. ad Leonem *X. Seſſ.*8. (*p.*85.)

In the ſame ancient times, the ſtyle of the Roman Biſhops writing to other Biſhops was the ſame; he calling them Brethren and Fellow-miniſters.

So did Cornelius write to Fabius of Antioch, beloved brother; ſo did he call all other Biſhops, ---- be it known to all our Fellow-biſhops and brethren. So Julius to the Oriental Biſhops, To our beloved brethren. So Liberius to the Macedonian Biſhops, To our beloved brethren and Fellow-miniſters: and to the Oriental Biſhops, To our brethren and Fellow-biſhops. So Damaſus to the Biſhops of Illyricum. So Leo himſelf frequently in his Epiſtles. So Pope Celeſtine calleth John of Antioch, Moſt honoured brother; to Cyril and to Neſtorius himſelf, Beloved brother; to the Fathers of Epheſus, Signiours brethren. Pope Gelaſius to the Biſhops of Dardania, Your brotherhood. St. Gregory to Cyriacus, Our brother and Fellow-prieſt, Cyriacus.

Ἀδελφὲ ἀγαπητέ. Euſeb 6.43.

Omnibus Co-epiſcopis noſtris & fratribus innoteſcat. P. Corn. apud Cypr. Epiſt. 48.

Ἀγαπητοῖς ἀδελφοῖς. Athan. *p.*739.

Ἀγαπητοῖς ἀδελφοῖς καὶ συλλειτουργοῖς. Socr. 4. 12.

Fratribus & Co-epiſcopis. Hil. frag. p. 450.

Soz. 6. 23.

Τιμιώτατε ἀδελφέ. Conc. Eph. *p.*196.

Τῷ ἀγαπητῷ ἀδελφῷ. *p.*179, 183.

Κύριοι ἀδελφοί. *Act.*2. *p.*324.

Fraternitas Veſtra. P. Gelaſ. Ep. 12.

Greg. — *Epiſt.*6.24. Fratris & Conſacerdotis noſtri Cyriaci.——

If it be ſaid the Popes did write ſo then out of condeſcenſion, or humility and modeſty; it may be replied, that if really there was ſuch a difference as is now pretended, it may ſeem rather affectation, and indecency or mockery: for it would have more become the Pope to maintain the majeſty and authority of his place, by appellations apt to cheriſh their reverence, than to collogue with them in terms void of reality; or ſignifying that equality which he did not mean.

But Bellarmine hath found out one inſtance (which he maketh much of) of Pope Damaſus, who writing (not as he alledgeth, to the Fathers of Conſtantinople, * but) to certain Eaſtern Biſhops, calleth them moſt honoured Sons. That whole Epiſtle I do fear to be foiſted into Theodoret; for it cometh in abruptly; and doth not much become ſuch a man: and Bell. 2. 14. Theod. 5. 10.

* Valeſ. in Theod. ib υἱοὶ τιμιώτατοι.

and if it be ſuppoſed genuine, I ſhould ſuſpect ſome corruption in the place; for why, if he writ to Biſhops, ſhould he uſe a ſtyle ſo unſutable to thoſe times, and ſo different from that of his Predeceſſors, and Succeſſors? why ſhould there be ſuch a diſparity between his own ſtyle now and at other times? for writing to the Biſhops of Illyricum he calleth them, beloved brethren; why then is he ſo inconſtant and partial, as to yield theſe Oriental Biſhops leſs reſpect? wherefore perhaps υἱοὶ was thruſt in for ἀδελφοί or perhaps the word Ἐπισκόποις was intruded, and he did write to Lay-men; * thoſe who governed the Eaſt, who well might be called moſt honoured Sons; otherwiſe the Epithet doth not ſeem well to ſute; but however, a ſingle example of arrogance or ſtatelineſs, (or of what ſhall I call it?) is not to be ſet againſt ſo many modeſt and mannerly ones.

Ἀγαπητοῖς ἀδελφοῖς. Soz. 6.23.

* Τοῖς τῆς ἑώας ἰθύνουσι.

In fine, that this Salutation doth not always imply Superiority, we may be aſſured by that inſcription of Alexander, Biſhop of Theſſalonica, to Athanaſius of Alexandria, To my beloved Son and unanimous Collegue Athanaſius.

Ἀγαπητῷ υἱῷ καὶ ὁμοψύχῳ συλλειτουργῷ Ἀθανασίῳ. Apud Athan. Apol. 2. p. 783.

IX. The ground of that eminence, which the Roman Biſhop did obtain in the Church, ſo as in order to precede other Biſhops, doth ſhake this pretence.

The Church of Rome was indeed allowed to be the principal Church, as St. Cyprian calleth it; but why? was it preferred by Divine Inſtitution? no ſurely, Chriſtianity did not make Laws of that nature, or conſtitute differences of places. Was it in regard to the ſucceſſion of St. Peter? no; that was a ſlim upſtart device; that did not hold in Antioch, nor in other Apoſtolical Churches.

Eccleſia principalis. Cypr. Ep. 55.

But it was for a more ſubſtantial reaſon; the very ſame, on which the dignity and preeminency of other Churches was founded; that is, the dignity, magnitude, opulency, opportunity of that City in which the Biſhop of Rome did preſide; together with the conſequent numerouſneſs, quality and wealth of his flock; which gave him many great advantages above other his Fellow-biſhops: It was (ſaith Rigaltius) called by St. Cyprian the principal Church, becauſe conſtituted in the principal City.

Eccleſia principalis, id eſt in urbe principali conſtituta. Rigalt. in Cypr. Ep. 55.

That Church in the very times of ſevereſt Perſecutions, by the providence of God (as Pope Cornelius ſaid in his Epiſtle to Fabius) had a rich and plentiful number, with a moſt great and innumerable people; ſo that he reckoneth forty four Presbyters, ſeven Deacons, (in imitation of the number in the Acts,) ſeven Sub-deacons, forty two Acoluthi, fifty two others of the inferior Clergy, and above fifteen hundred Alms-people.

Διὰ τὴν τοῦ Θεοῦ πρόνοιαν πλούσιός τε καὶ πληθύων ἀριθμὸς μετὰ μεγίστου καὶ ἀναριθμήτου λαοῦ. Euſeb. 6.43.

Et quanquam ſciam, frater, pro mutua dilectione quam debemus & exhibemus invicem nobis florentiſſimo illic Clero tecum præſidenti, & ſanctiſſimæ atque ampliſſimæ plebi, legere te ſemper literas noſtras—— Cypr. Ep. 55. (ad Corn.)

To that Church there muſt needs have been a great reſort of Chriſtians, going to the ſeat of the Empire in purſuit of buſineſs; as in proportion there was to each other Metropolis; according to that Canon of the Antiochene Synod, which ordered, that the Biſhop of each Metropolis ſhould take care of the whole Province, becauſe all that had buſineſs did reſort to the Metropolis.

Καὶ τὴν φροντίδα ἀναδέχεσθαι πάσης τῆς ἐπαρχίας.

Διὰ τὸ ἐν τῇ Μητροπόλει πανταχόθεν συντρέχειν πάντας τοὺς τὰ πράγματα ἔχοντας. Syn. Ant. Can. 9.

That Church was moſt able to yield help and ſuccour to them who needed it; and accordingly did uſe to do it; according to that of Dionyſius (Biſhop of Corinth) in his Epiſtle to Biſhop Soter of Rome; This (ſaith he) is your cuſtom from the beginning, in divers ways to do good to the brethren, and to ſend ſupplies to many Churches in every City, ſo refreſhing the poverty of thoſe who want ——

Ἐξ ἀρχῆς γὰρ ὑμῖν ἔθος ἐστὶ τοῦτο, πάντας μὲν ἀδελφοὺς ποικίλως εὐεργετεῖν, Ἐκκλησίαις τε πολλαῖς ταῖς κατὰ πᾶσαν πόλιν ἐφόδια πέμπειν, ὧδε μὲν τὴν τῶν δεομένων πενίαν ἀναψύχοντας, &c. Dionyſ. Corinth. apud Euſeb. 4. 23.

Whence it is no wonder, that the Head of that Church did get moſt reputation, and the privilege of precedence without competition.

To this Church (ſaid Irenæus) it is neceſſary that every Church (that is, the faithful who are all about) ſhould reſort, becauſe of its more powerful principality; what is meant by that reſort, will be eaſy to him, who conſidereth how men here are wont to go up to London, drawn thither by intereſts of Trade, Law, &c. What he did underſtand by more powerful principality, the words themſelves do ſignify, which exactly do agree to the Power and Grandure of the Imperial City; but do not well ſute to the Authority of a Church; eſpecially then when no Church did appear to have either Principality or Puiſſance. And that ſence may clearly be evinced by the context, wherein it doth appear, that St. Irenæus doth not alledge the judicial Authority of the Roman Church, but its credible Teſtimony, which thereby became more conſiderable, becauſe Chriſtians commonly had occaſions of recourſe to it.

Ad hanc Eccleſiam, propter potentiorem principalitatem, neceſſe eſt omnem convenire Eccleſiam, hoc eſt, eos qui ſunt ubiq; fideles. Iren. 3. 3.

(Δυνατωτέραν ἀρχὴν, I conjecture he ſaid.)

Such a reaſon of precedence St. Cyprian giveth in another caſe, Becauſe (ſaith he) Rome for its magnitude out to precede Carthage.

Quoniam pro magnitudine ſua debeat Carthaginem Roma præcedere. Cypr. Ep. 49.

For this reaſon a Pagan Hiſtorian did obſerve the Roman Biſhop had a greater authority (that is, a greater intereſt and reputation) than other Biſhops.

Authoritate qua potiores æternæ urbis Epiſcopi. Amm. Marcell. lib. 15. (p. 47.)

This reaſon Theodoret doth aſſign in his Epiſtle to Pope Leo, wherein he doth highly complement and cajole him; for this City (ſaith he) is the greateſt, and moſt ſplendid, and preſiding over the world; and flowing with multitude of people; and which moreover hath produced the Empire now governing. ----

Ἡ γὰρ αὐτὴ πασῶν μεγίστη, καὶ λαμπροτάτη, καὶ τῆς οἰκουμένης προκαθημένη, καὶ τῷ πλήθει τῶν οἰκητόρων κυμαίνουσα· πρὸς δὲ τούτοις καὶ νῦν κρατοῦσαν ἡγεμονίαν ἐβλάστησε —— Theod. Ep. 113.

This is the ſole ground upon which the greateſt of all ancient Synods, that of Chalcedon, did affirm the Papal eminency to be founded; for to the throne (ſay they) of ancient Rome, becauſe that was the royal City, the Fathers reaſonably conferred the privileges: the fountain of Papal eminence was in their judgment not any divine Inſtitution, not the Authority of Saint Peter deriving it ſelf to his Succeſſors; but the conceſſion of the Fathers, who were moved to grant it upon account that Rome was the Imperial City.

Τῷ θρόνῳ τῆς πρεσβυτέρας Ῥώμης διὰ τὸ βασιλεύειν πόλιν ἐκείνην οἱ Πατέρες οἰκότως ἀποδεδώκασι τὰ πρεσβεῖα. Syn. Chalc. Act. 16 Can. 28.

To the ſame purpoſe the Empreſs Placidia, in her Epiſtle to Theodoſius in behalf of Pope Leo, ſaith, It becometh us to preſerve to this City (the which is miſtreſs of all lands) a reverence in all things.

Πρέπει ἡμᾶς ταύτῃ τῇ μεγίστῃ πόλει, ἥτις δέσποινα πασῶν ὑπάρχει τῶν γῶν, ἐν πᾶσι τὸ σέβας περιφυλάξαι. Placid. in Syn. Chalc. p. 27.

This reaſon had indeed in it much of equity, of decency, of conveniency; it was equal that he ſhould have the preference, and more than common reſpect, who was thence enabled and engaged to do moſt ſervice to Religion. It was decent, that out of conformity to the State, and in reſpect to the Imperial Court and Senate, the Paſtor of that place ſhould be graced with repute; it was convenient, that he who reſided in the centre of all buſineſs, and had the greateſt influence upon affairs, who was the Emperor's chief Councellor for direction, and Inſtrument for execution of Eccleſiaſtical affairs, ſhould not be put behind others.

Hence did the Fathers of the Second General Synod advance the Biſhop of Conſtantinople to the next privileges of honour after the Biſhop of Rome, becauſe it was new Rome, and a Seat of the Empire.

Τὸν μέντοι Κωνσταντινουπόλεως Ἐπίσκοπον ἔχειν τὰ πρεσβεῖα τῆς τιμῆς μετὰ τὸν τῆς Ῥώμης Ἐπίσκοπον διὰ τὸ εἶναι αὐτὴν νέαν Ῥώμην —— Syn. Conſt. *Can.*3.

And the Fathers of Chalcedon aſſigned equal privileges to the moſt Holy See of Rome, with good reaſon (ſay they) judging, that the City, which was honoured with the Royalty and Senate, and which(otherwiſe) did enjoy equal privileges with the ancient Royal Rome, ſhould likewiſe in Eccleſiaſtical affairs be magnified as it, being ſecond after it.

Τὰ ἴσα πρεσβεῖα ἐπένειμαν τῷ τῆς νέας Ῥώμης ἁγιωτάτῳ θρόνῳ, εὐλόγως κρίναντες τὴν βασιλείᾳ καὶ συγκλήτῳ τιμηθεῖσαν πόλιν, καὶ τῶν ἴσων ἀπολαύουσαν πρεσβείων τῇ πρεσβυτέρᾳ βασιλίδι Ῥώμῃ, καὶ ἐν τοῖς Ἐκκλησιαστικοῖς ὡς ἐκείνην μεγαλύνεσθαι πράγμασι, δευτέραν μετ᾽ ἐκείνην ὑπάρχουσαν. Syn. Chal. *Can.*28.

Indeed upon this ſcore the Church of Conſtantinople is ſaid to have aſpired to the ſupreme Principality, when it had the advantage over old Rome, the Empire being extinguiſhed there; and ſometime was ſtyled, the Head of all Churches.

Sacroſanctam quoque hujus religioſiſſimæ civitatis Eccleſiam, & matrem noſtræ pietatis, & Chriſtianorum Orthodoxæ religionis omnium, & ejuſdem Regiæ urbis ſanctiſſimam ſedem,&c. Imp. Leo. *Cod. Lib.*1. *Tit.*2. § 16.

The Holy Cqurch of this moſt religious City, the Mother of our devotion, and of all orthodox Chriſtians, and the moſt holy See of that imperial City.

Bonifacius III. à Phoca Imperatore obtinuit, magnâ tamen contentione, ut ſedes B. Petri Apoſtoli, quæ caput eſt omnium Eccleſiarum, ità & diceretur, & haberetur ab omnibus; quem quidem locum Eccleſia Conſtantinopolitana ſibi vendicare conabatur; faventibus interdum Principibus, affirmantibúſq; eo loci primam ſedem eſſe debere, ubi Imperii caput eſſet. Plat. in Bonif. III. (*p.*161.)

Boniface III. (though with a great deal of ſtir) obtained of the Emperor Phocas, that the See of Saint Peter the Apoſtle, which is the head of all Churches, ſhould be ſo called and accounted by all; which dignity the Church of Conſtantinople did indeed endeavour to aſſert to it ſelf, Princes ſometimes favouring them, and affirming that there the chief See ought to be where the head of the Empire was.

Phocas rogante Papâ Bonifacio ſtatuit ſedem Romanæ Eccleſiæ caput eſſe omnium Eccleſiarum, quia Eccleſia Conſtantinopolitana primam ſe omnium Eccleſiarnm ſcribebat. Anaſtaſ. in Bonif. III. Idem Sabellicus, Blondus, Lætus, &c. tradunt.

Phocas at the entreaty of Pope Boniface appointed that the Roman See ſhould be the head of all Churches, becauſe the Church of Conſtantinople wrote her ſelf the chief of all Churches.

It is alſo natural and can hardly be otherwiſe, but that the Biſhop of a chief City, finding himſelf to exceed in wealth, in power, in advantages of friendſhips, dependencies, &c. ſhould not affect to raiſe himſelf above the level: it is an ambition, that eaſily will ſeize on the moſt moderate, and otherwiſe religious minds. Pope Leo objected it to Anatolius, and Pope Gregory to John (from his auſtere life called the Faſter.)

Upon the like account it was, that the Biſhops of other Cities did mount to a preeminency, Metropolitane, Primatical, Patriarchal.

Thence it was that the Biſhop of Alexandria before Conſtantine's time, did acquire the honour of ſecond place to Rome; becauſe that City, being head of a moſt rich and populous Nation, did in magnitude and opulency (as Gregory Nazianzene ſaith) approach next to Rome, ſo as hardly to yield the next place to it.

Ὑμεῖς ἡ μεγάλη πόλις, οἱ μετὰ τὴν πρώτην εὐθέως, ἢ μηδὲ τοῦτο παραχωροῦντες. Greg. Naz. Orat. 27. Ἡ Ἀλεξανδρέων μεγαλόπολις. Evagr. 2. 4. & paſſim.

Upon that account alſo did Antioch get the next place; as being the moſt large, flouriſhing, commanding City of the Eaſt; the which (as Joſephus ſaith) for bigneſs and for other advantages had without controverſy the third place in all the world ſubject to the Romans; and the which *St. Chryſoſtom calleth the head of all Cities ſeated in the Eaſt.

Ἡ μητρόπολις ἐστὶ τῆς Συρίας, μεγέθους ἕνεκα καὶ τῆς ἄλλης εὐδαιμονίας τρίτον ἀδηρίτως ἐπὶ τῆς ὑπὸ Ῥωμαίοις οἰκουμένης ἔχουσα τόπον. Joſeph de Bello Jud. 3. 3.

* Πόλις αὕτη μεγάλη, καὶ τῶν ὑπὸ τὴν ἕω κειμένων ἡ κεφαλή. Chryſ. ἀνδρ. β′.

St. Baſil ſeemeth to call the Church thereof the principal in the world; for what (ſaith he) can be more opportune to the Churches over the world than the Church of Antioch? the which if it ſhould happen to be reduced to concord, nothing would hinder, but that as a ſound head it would ſupply health to the whole body.

Τί δ' ἂν γένοιτο τῶν κατὰ τὴν οἰκουμένην Ἐκκλησίαις τῆς Ἀντιοχείας καιριώτερον; ἣν εἰ συνέβη πρὸς ὁμόνοιαν ἐπανελθεῖν, οὐδὲν ἐκώλυεν, ὥσπερ κεφαλὴν ἐρρωμένην, παντὶ τῷ σώματι ἐπιχορηγεῖν τὴν ὑγίειαν. Baſ. Ep. 48. (ad Athanaſ.)

Upon the ſame account the Biſhop of Carthage did obtain the privilege to be ſtanding Primate of his Province (although other Primacies there were not fixed to places, but followed Seniority) and a kind of Patriarch over all the African Provinces.

Hence did Cæſarea, as exceeding in temporal advantages, and being the Political Metropolis of Paleſtine, o'ertop Jeruſalem, that moſt ancient, noble, and venerable City, the ſource of our Religion.

It was indeed the general Rule and Practice to conform the privileges of Eccleſiaſtical dignity in a proportion convenient to thoſe of the ſecular Government; as the Synod of Antioch in expreſs terms did ordain; the ninth Canon whereof runneth thus; The Biſhops in every Province ought to know, that the Biſhop preſiding in the Metropolis doth undertake the care of all the Province; becauſe all that have buſineſs do meet together in the Metropolis; whence it hath been ordained, that he ſhould precede in honour, and that the Biſhops ſhould do nothing extraordinary without him; according to a more ancient Canon holding from our Fathers; (that is, according to the 34th. Canon of the Apoſtles.)

Τοὺς ἐν ἑκάστῃ ἐπαρχίᾳ Ἐπισκόπους εἰδέναι χρὴ τὸν ἐν τῇ Μητροπόλει προεστῶτα Ἐπίσκοπον, (καὶ) τὴν φροντίδα ἀναδέχεσθαι πάσης τῆς ἐπαρχίας· διὰ τὸ ἐν τῇ Μητροπόλει συντρέχειν πάντας τοὺς τὰ πράγματα ἔχοντας· ὅθεν ἔδοξε καὶ τῇ τιμῇ προηγεῖσθαι αὐτόν, μηδέν τε πράττειν περιττὸν τοὺς λοιποὺς Ἐπισκόπους ἄνευ αὐτοῦ, κατὰ τὸν ἀρχαιότερον κρατήσαντα ἐκ τῶν πατέρων ἡμῶν Κανόνα. Syn. Ant. Can. 9. Syn. Chalc. 17.

It is true, that the Fathers do ſometimes mention the Church of Rome being founded by the two great Apoſtles, or the ſucceſſion of the Roman Biſhop to them in Paſtoral charge, as a ſpecial ornament of that Church, and a congruous ground of reſpect to that Biſhop, whereby they did honour the memory of Saint Peter: but even ſome of thoſe, who did acknowledge this, did not avow it as a ſufficient ground of preeminence, none did admit it for an argument of authoritative Superiority.

Sedis Apoſtolicæ primatum S Petri meritum, (qui Princeps eſt Epiſcopalis coronæ) Romanæ dignitas Civitatis, ſacræ etiam Synodi firmavit authoritas. Valent. Nov. 24. in fin. Cod. Theod.

St. Cyprian did call the Roman See the chair of Saint Peter, and the principal Church; yet he diſclaimed any authority of the Roman Biſhops above his Brethren. Cypr. Ep. 55. 52.

Firmilian did take notice, that Pope Stephanus did glory in the place of his Biſhoprick, and contend that he held the ſucceſſion of Peter; yet did not he think himſelf thereby obliged to ſubmit to his authority, or follow his judgment; but ſharply did reprehend him as a favourer of Hereticks, an author of Schiſms, and one who had cut himſelf off from the communion of his brethren.

Atque ego in hac parte juſtè indignor ad hanc tam apertam & manifeſtam Stephani ſtultitiam, quòd qui ſic de Epiſcopatûs ſui loco gloriatur, & ſe ſucceſſionem Petri tenere contendit—— Stephanus qui per ſucceſſionem Cathedram Petri habere ſe prædicat—— Firmil. apud Cypr. Ep 75.

Φέρειν μὲν γὰρ πᾶσι φιλοτιμίαν τὴν Ῥωμαίων Ἐκκλησίαν ἐν τοῖς γράμμασιν ὡμολόγουν, ὡς Ἀποστόλων φροντιστήριον καὶ εὐσεβείας Μητρόπολιν ἐξ ἀρχῆς γεγενημένην· εἰ καὶ ἐξ ἕω ἐνεδήμησαν αὐτῇ οἱ τοῦ δόγματος ἐξηγηταί· οὐ παρὰ τοῦτο δὲ τὰ δευτερεῖα φέρειν ἠξίουν ὅτι μὴ μεγέθει ἢ πλήθει Ἐκκλησίας πλεονεκτοῦσιν. Soz. 3. 8.

The Fathers of the Antiochene Synod did confeſs, that in writings all did willingly honour the Roman Church, as having been from the beginning the School of the Apoſtles, and the Metropolis of Religion; although yet from the Eaſt the inſtructors of the Chriſtian Doctrine did go and reſide there; but from hence they deſired not to be deemed inferiors; becauſe they did not exceed in the greatneſs and numerouſneſs of their Church. They allowed ſome regard (though faintly and with reſervation) to the Roman Church upon account of their Apoſtolical foundation; they implied a ſtronger ground of pretence from the grandeur of that City; yet did not they therefore grant themſelves to be inferiors; at leaſt as to any ſubſtantial Privilege, importing Authority.

If by Divine right, upon account of his ſucceſſion to Saint Peter, he had ſuch preeminence, why are the other cauſes reckoned, as if they could add any thing to God's Inſtitution, or as if that did need humane confirmation? The pretence to that ſurely was weak, which did need corroboration, and to be propp'd by worldly conſiderations.

Indeed, whereas the Apoſtles did found many Churches, exerciſing Apoſtolical authority over them (eminently containing the Epiſcopal) why in conſcience ſhould one claim privileges on that ſcore rather than, or above the reſt?

Τῆς πρεσβυτάτης καὶ ὄντως Ἀποστολικῆς Ἐκκλησίας---

Why ſhould the See of Antioch, that moſt ancient and truly Apoſtolical Church, where the Chriſtian name began, where Saint Peter at firſt (as they ſay) did ſit Biſhop for ſeven years, be poſtponed to Alexandria?

Ep. Synod. Conſt. Theodoret. hiſt. l. 5. c. 9. p. 211. Quæ quantumlibet à Petro ante Alexandrinam fuerat inſtituta, tamen quoniam præfecturâ Alexandrina Auguſtalis dicta —— longè præſtabat Syriæ præfecturæ, &c. Baron. Ann. 39. §. 10.

Epiph. Synod. Conſtant. ibid. Τῆς δέ γε μητρὸς ἁπασῶν τῶν Ἐκκλησιῶν ἡ ἐν Ἱεροσολύμοις.

Eſpecially why ſhould the Church of Jeruſalem, the Seat of our Lord himſelf, the mother of all Churches, the fountain of Chriſtian Doctrine, the firſt Conſiſtory of the Apoſtles, ennobled by ſo many glorious performances (by the Life, Preaching, Miracles, Death, Burial, Reſurrection, Aſcenſion of our Saviour; by the firſt preaching of the Apoſtles, the effuſion of the Holy Spirit, the Converſion of ſo many People, and Conſtitution of the firſt Church, and Celebration of the firſt Synods) upon theſe conſiderations not obtain preeminence to other Churches, but in honour be caſt behind divers others; and as to Power be ſubjected to Cæſarea, the Metropolis of Paleſtine?

Optat. l. 6. (p 169.) Hier. Ep. 61. Conc. Nic. Can. 7.

Majores enim in inſtituendis ſedibus Eccleſiarum non aliam iniiſſe rationem, quam ſecundum diviſionem Provinciarum, & Prærogativas à Romanis anteà ſtabilitas, quàm plurima ſunt exempla. Baron. Anno 39. 10.

The true reaſon of this even Baronius himſelf did ſee and acknowledge; for that (ſaith he) the Ancients obſerv'd no other rule in inſtituting the Eccleſiaſtical Sees, than the diviſion of Provinces, and the Prerogative before eſtabliſhed by the Romans, there are very many examples.

Of which examples, that of Rome is the moſt obvious and notable; and what he ſo generally aſſerteth may be ſo applied thereto, as to void all other grounds of its preeminence.

X. The truth is, all Eccleſiaſtical preſidencies and ſubordinations, or dependencies of ſome Biſhops on others in adminiſtration of ſpiritual affairs were introduced merely by humane Ordinance, and eſtabliſhed by Law or Cuſtom, upon prudential accounts, according to the exigency of things: Hence the Prerogatives of other Sees did proceed; and hereto whatever Dignity, Privilege, or Authority the Pope with equity might at any time claim, is to be imputed.

To clear which point, we will ſearch the matter nearer the quick; propounding ſome obſervations concerning the ancient forms of Diſcipline, and conſidering what intereſt the Pope had therein.

At firſt each Church was ſettled apart under its own Biſhop and Preſbyters; ſo as independently and ſeparately to manage its own concernments; each was ἀυτοκέφαλος, and ἀυτόνομος, governed by its own head, and had its own Laws. Every Biſhop as a Prince in his own Church, did act freely according to his will and diſcretion, with the advice of his Eccleſiaſtical Senate, and * with the conſent of his people (the which he did uſe to conſult) without being controllable by any other, or accountable to any, farther than his obligation to uphold the verity of Chriſtian profeſſion, and to maintain fraternal communion in charity and peace with neighboring Churches did require, in which regard if he were notably peccant, he was liable to be diſclaimed by them, as no good Chriſtian, and rejected from communion, together with his Church, if it did adhere to him in his miſdemeanors. This may be collected from the remainders of State in the times of St. Cyprian.

But becauſe little, disjointed and incoherent Bodies were like duſt, apt to be diſſipated by every wind of external aſſault, or inteſtine faction; and peaceable union could hardly be retained without ſome ligature of diſcipline; and Churches could not mutually ſupport and defend each other without ſome method of entercourſe and rule of confederacy, engaging them: Therefore for many good purpoſes (for upholding and advancing the common intereſts of Chriſtianity, for protection and ſupport of each Church from inbred diſorders and diſſenſions; for preſerving the integrity of the Faith, for ſecuring the concord of divers Churches, for providing fit Paſtors to each Church, and correcting ſuch as were ſcandalouſly bad * or unfaithful) it was ſoon found needful, that divers Churches ſhould be combined and linked together in ſome regular form of Diſcipline; † that if any Church did want a Biſhop, the neighbour Biſhops might ſtep in to approve

and

---

* Cypr. Ep. 52. 55. 72. 73. 76.

Omnis hic actus populo erat inſinuandus. P. Corn. apud Cypr. Ep. 46.

All this buſineſs was to have been imparted to the people.

Secundum arbitrium quoque veſtrum, & omnium noſtrum commune conſilium— ea quæ agenda ſunt diſponere. Cypr. Ep 40. (Plebi Univ.)

To order what was to be done according to your judgment, and the common advice of us all.

Et limanda plenius ratio non ſolùm cùm Collegis meis, ſed & cum plebe ipſa univerſa. Cypr. *Ep.*28.

And the reaſon is more throughly to be examined not only with my Collegues, but with the whole people.

Præjudicare ego & ſoli mihi rem communem vindicare non audeo. Ep 18.

I dare not therefore prejudge, nor aſſume to my ſelf alone a matter which is common to all.

*Hoc enim & verecundiæ & diſciplinæ & vitæ ipſi omnium noſtrûm convenit, ut Epiſcopi plures in unum convenientes, præſente & ſtantium plebe, (quibus & ipſis pro fide & timore ſuo honor habendus eſt) diſponere omnia conſilia communi religione poſſimus. Ep.*14.

For it becomes the modeſty, the diſcipline, and the manner of our living, that many Biſhops meeting together, the people being alſo preſent, (to whom reſpect ought to be had for their faith and fear) we may order all things with the common advice.

——— quoniam non paucorum, nec Eccleſiæ unius aut unius Provinciæ, ſed totius orbis hæc cauſa eſt.——— Cypr. *Ep.*14.

——— becauſe this is the concern not of a few men or one Church, or one Province, but of the whole world.

Idcirco copioſum corpus eſt Sacerdotum——ut ſi quis ex Collegio noſtro hæreſin facere, & gregem Chriſti lacerare & vaſtare tentaverit, ſubveniant cæteri——— Cypr. *Ep.*76.

Therefore the Clergy is a large body —— that if any one of our own ſociety ſhould vent an hereſy, and attempt to rent and waſte the flock of Chriſt, the reſt might come in to their help.

* Particularly in the diſpenſation of Church goods. Conc. Ant. *Can.*25.

† Nov. 137. cap. 4. }
123. cap. 10. }

* Vid. Can. Apoſt. 38. (al. 30.) de Synodis.

and ordain a fit one; * that if any Biſhop did notoriouſly ſwerve from the Chriſtian rule, the others might interpoſe to correct or void him: that if any errour, or ſchiſm did peep up in any Church, the joynt concurrence of divers Biſhops might avail to ſtop its progreſs, and to quench it; by convenient means of inſtruction, reprehenſion and cenſure: that if any Church were oppreſſed by perſecution, by indigency, by faction; the others might be engaged to afford effectual ſuccour and relief; for ſuch ends it was needful, that Biſhops in certain precincts ſhould convene, with intent to deliberate and reſolve about the beſt expedients to compaſs them; And that the manner of ſuch proceeding, (to avoid uncertain diſtraction, confuſion, arbitrarineſs, diſſatisfaction and mutinous oppoſition) ſhould be ſettled in an ordinary courſe; according to rules known and allowed by all.

(οἰκονομίαι Ἐκκλησιαστικαί. Syn. Conſt. Can. 2.)

In defining ſuch precincts it was moſt natural, moſt eaſy, moſt commodious to follow diviſions of Territory, or Juriſdiction already eſtabliſhed in the Civil State; that the Spirtual adminiſtrations being in ſuch circumſtances aptly conformed to the Secular might go on more ſmoothly and expeditely, the wheels of one not claſhing with the other: according to the judgment of the two great Synods, that of Chalcedon, and the Trullane; which did ordain, that if by Royal authority any City be or ſhould hereafter be re-eſtabliſhed, the order of the Churches ſhall be according to the civil and publick form.

Εἰ δὲ καὶ τις ἐκ Βασιλικῆς ἐξουσίας ἐκαινίσθη πόλις, ἢ αὖθις καινισθείη, τοῖς πολιτικοῖς καὶ δημοσίοις τόποις καὶ τῶν ἐκκλησιαστικῶν παροικιῶν ἡ τάξις ἀκολουθείτω. Conc. Chalced. Can. 17. & Conc. Trull. Can. 38.

Whereas therefore in each Nation or Province ſubject to one Political Juriſdiction there was a Metropolis or Head-city, to which the greateſt reſort was for diſpenſation of Juſtice, and diſpatch of principal Affairs emergent in that Province; it was alſo moſt convenient, that alſo the determination of Eccleſiaſtical matters ſhould be affixed thereto; eſpecially conſidering that uſually thoſe places were opportunely ſeated; that many perſons upon other occaſions did meet there; that the Churches in thoſe Cities did exceed the reſt in number, in opulency, in ability and opportunity to promote the common intereſt in all kinds of advantages.

P. Anacl. diſt. 99 cap. 1. P. Greg. VII. Ep. 6. 35.

Moreover becauſe in all Societies and Confederacies of men for ordering publick affairs, (for the ſettling things in motion, for effectual diſpatch, for preventing endleſs diſſentions and confuſions both in reſolving upon and executing things) it is needful that one perſon ſhould be authorized to preſide among the reſt, unto whom the power and care ſhould be entruſted to convoke Aſſemblies in fit ſeaſon, to propoſe matters for conſultation, to moderate the debates and proceedings, to declare the reſult, and to ſee that what is agreed upon may be duly executed; Such a charge then naturally would devolve it ſelf upon the Prelate of the Metropolis, as being ſuppoſed conſtantly preſent on the place; as being at home in his own ſeat of preſidence, and receiving the reſt under his wing; as inconteſtably ſurpaſſing others in all advantages anſwerable to the ſecular advantages of his City; for that it was unſeemly and hard, if he at home ſhould be poſtponed in dignity to others repairing thither; for that alſo commonly he was

Ad hoc divinæ diſpenſationis proviſio gradus & diverſos conſtituit ordines in ſe diſtinctos, ut dum reverentiam minores potioribus exhiberent, & potiores minoribus diligentiam impenderent, una concordiæ fieret à diverſitate contentio & rectè officiorum gereretur adminiſtratio ſingulorum. Joh VIII. Ep. 95.

To this end divine providence hath appointed degrees and divers orders diſtinct from one another, that while the leſs reverence the greater, and the greater take care of the leſs, from this diverſity there might ariſe one frame of concord, and all offices be daily adminiſtred.

was in a manner the ſpiritual Father of the reſt, (Religion being firſt planted in great Cities, and thence propagated to others) ſo that the reverence and dependence on Colonies to the mother City was due from other Churches to his See.

Wherefore by conſent of all Churches, grounded on ſuch obvious reaſon of things, the preſidency in each Province was aſſigned to the Biſhop of the Metropolis, who was called the firſt Biſhop, the Metropolitan, (in ſome places the * Primate, the Archbiſhop, the Patriarch, the Pope) of the Province. The Apoſtolical Canons call him the firſt Biſhop (which ſheweth the Antiquity of this Inſtitution:) the African Synods did appoint that name to him as moſt modeſt, and calling him Primate in that ſenſe; other ancient Synods ſtyle him the Metropolite ; and to the Metropolites of the principal Cities they gave the Title of Archbiſhop. The Biſhops of Rome and Alexandria peculiarly were called Popes ; although that name was ſometimes deferred to any other Biſhop.

* Primas Provinciæ. Cod. Afr. Can. 19.

Τοὺς Ἐπισκόπους ἑκάστου ἔθνους εἰδέναι χρὴ τὸν ἐν αὐτοῖς πρῶτον. Can. Apoſt. 27.

The Biſhops of each Nation ought to know who is chief among them.

Cod. Afr. Can. 39. Diſt. 99. cap. 3.

During this ſtate of things the whole Church did conſiſt of ſo many Provinces, being αὐτοκέφαλοι, independent on each other in Eccleſiaſtical adminiſtrations; each reſerving to it ſelf the conſtitution of Biſhops, the convocation of Synods, the enacting of Canons, the deciſion of Cauſes, the definition of Queſtions; yet ſo that each Province did hold peaceful and amicable correſpondence with others; upon the like terms as before each παροικία, or Epiſcopal precinct did hold intercourſe with its neighbours.

And whoever in any Province did not comply with, or ſubmit to the Orders and Determinations reſolved upon in thoſe Aſſemblies, was deemed a ſchiſmatical, contentious and contumelious perſon; with good reaſon, becauſe he did thwart a Diſcipline plainly conducible to publick good; becauſe declining ſuch judgments he plainly ſhewed that he would admit none, (there not being any fairer way of determining things than by common advice and agreement of Paſtors) becauſe he did in effect refuſe all good terms of communion and peace.

Παράταξις Syn. Nic. Can. 18.

Thus I conceive the Metropolitical governance was introduced, by humane prudence following conſiderations of publick neceſſity or utility: There are indeed ſome, who think it was inſtituted by the Apoſtles; but their Arguments do not ſeem convincing, and ſuch a conſtitution doth not (as I take it) well ſute to the ſtate of their times, and the courſe they took in founding Churches.

Into ſuch a Chanel, through all parts of Chriſtendom (though with ſome petty differences in the methods and meaſures of acting) had Eccleſiaſtical adminiſtrations fallen of themſelves; plain community of reaſon, and immitation inſenſibly propagating that courſe; and therein it ran for a good time, before it was by general conſent and ſolemn ſanction eſtabliſhed.

The whole Church then was a Body conſiſting of ſeveral confederations of Biſhops, acting in behalf of their Churches under their reſpective Metropolitans, who did manage the common affairs in each Province; convoking Synods at ſtated times, and upon emergent occaſions; in them deciding Cauſes and Controverſies incident, relating to faith or practice; framing Rules ſerviceable to common Edification, and decent Uniformity in God's ſervice; quaſhing Hereſies

Can. Apoſt. 38.
Tertull. de Jej. cap. 13.
Syn. Nic. Can. 5.

Διὰ τὰς Ἐκκλησιαστικὰς χρείας καὶ τὰς τῶν ἀμφισβητουμένων διαλύσεις —— Syn. Ant. Can. 20.

ſies and Schiſms, declaring truths impugned or queſtioned; maintaining the harmony of communion and concord with other Provinces adjacent or remote.

Such was the ſtate of the Church, unto which the Apoſtolical Canons and Conſtitutions do refer, anſwerable to the times in which they were framed; and which we may diſcern in the practice of ancient Synods.

Such it did continue, when the great Synod of Nice was celebrated, which by its authority (preſumed to repreſent the authority of all Biſhops in the World, who were ſummoned thereto (backed by the Imperial Authority and Power, did confirm thoſe Orders, as they found them ſtanding by more general cuſtom, and received Rules in moſt Provinces; reducing them into more uniform practice; ſo that what before ſtood upon reaſon, cuſtomary uſage, particular conſent, by ſo auguſt ſanction did become univerſal Law; and did obtain ſo great veneration, as by ſome to be conceived everlaſtingly and immutably obligatory; according to thoſe maxims of Pope Leo.

Παλαιός τε ὡς ἴςε θεσμὸς κεκράτηκε, ϗ τῶν ἁγίων ἐν Νικαίᾳ Πατέρων ὅρος —— Syn. Conſtant. Theod. 5. 9.

Ὑπὲρ τοῦ πάντα ἐν πάσῃ παροικίᾳ ὁμοίως φυλάττεσθαι. Can. 20.

It is here farther obſervable, that whereof divers Provinces did hold communion and entercourſe; ſo that upon occaſion they did (by their formed Letters) render to one another an account of their proceedings, being of great moment, eſpecially of thoſe which concerned the general ſtate of Chriſtianity, and common Faith; calling, when need was, for aſſiſtance one of another to reſolve points of faith, or to ſettle order and peace; there was in ſo doing a ſpecial reſpect given to the Metropolites of great Cities: and to prevent diſſenſions, which naturally ambition doth prompt men to, grounded upon degrees of reſpect, an Order was fixed among them, according to which in ſubſcriptions of Letters, in accidental congreſſes, and the like occaſions, ſome ſhould precede others; (that diſtinction being chiefly and commonly grounded on the greatneſs, ſplendor, opulency of Cities; or following the ſecular dignity of them:) whence Rome had the firſt place, Alexandria the ſecond, Antioch the third, Hieruſalem the fourth, &c.

Afterward, Conſtantine having introduced a new partition of the Empire, whereby divers Provinces were combined together into one Territory, under the regiment of a Vicar, or a Lieutenant of a Præfectus-prætorio, which Territory was called a Dioceſe; the Eccleſiaſtical ſtate was adapted in conformity thereto; new Eccleſiaſtical Syſtems, and a new ſort of ſpiritual Heads thence ſpringing up; ſo that in each Dioceſe, conſiſting of divers Provinces an Eccleſiaſtical Exarch (otherwiſe ſometimes called a Primate, ſometimes a Diočeſan, ſometimes a Patriarch) was conſtituted, anſwerable to the Civil Exarch of a Dioceſe; who by ſuch conſtitution did obtain a like Authority over the Metropolitans of Provinces, as they had in their Province over the Biſhops of Cities; ſo that it appertained to them to call together the Synods of the whole Dioceſe, to preſide in them, and in them to diſpatch the principal affairs concerning that precinct, to ordain Metropolitans, to confirm the Ordinations of Biſhops, to decide Cauſes and Zoſ. lib. 2. p. 63. Sextus Rufus, Brev.

Ἐπηκολούθησα τῷ ἐξάρχῳ μου. Syn. Chalc. Act. 10. p. 388.

Διοικητής. Epiſt. Orient. ad Rufum, in Syn. Eph. p. 396.

Diſt. 99. cap. 1, 2.

Οἱ ὁσιώτατοι Πατριάρχαι διοικήσεως ἑκάστης. Syn. Chalc. Act. 2 (p. 211.)

Epheſi δίκαιον Πατριαρχικόν. Ev. 3. 6.

Τινὲς μὲν ἐξάρχους τῶν διοικήσεων τοὺς Πατριάρχας φασί. Zon. ad 28. Can. Chalc Novell. 137. cap. 5. & 123. cap. 10.

P. Greg. I. Ep. 11, 56.

Ordo Epiſcoporum quadripartitus eſt, id eſt, in Patriarchis, Archiepiſcopis, Metropolitanis, atque Epiſcopis. Iſid. diſt. 21. cap. 1.

Dionyſius Ex. tranſlates ἔξαρχον, Primatem, in Syn. Chalc. Can. 9, & 17.

and Controverſies between Biſhops upon appeal from Provincial Synods.

Some conceive the Synod of Nice did eſtabliſh it; but that can hardly well be; for that Synod was held about the time of that diviſion, (after that Conſtantine was ſettled in a peaceful enjoyment of the Empire) and ſcarce could take notice of ſo freſh a change in the State; that doth not pretend to innovate, but profeſſeth in its ſanctions ſpecially to regard ancient cuſtom, ſaving to the Churches their privileges of which they were poſſeſſed; that only mentioneth Provinces, and repreſenteth the Metropolitans in them as the chief Governors Eccleſiaſtical then being; that conſtituteth a peremptory deciſion of weighty cauſes in Provincial Synods, which is conſiſtent with the Dioceſan Authority; that taketh no notice of Conſtantinople, the principal Dioceſe in the Eaſt, as ſeat of the Empire; (and the Synod of Antioch, inſiſting in the footſteps of the Nicene, doth touch only Metropolitans (Can.19.) and the Synod of Laodicea doth only ſuppoſe that Order.) In fine, that Synod is not recorded by any old Hiſtorian to have framed ſuch an alteration; which indeed was ſo conſiderable, that Euſebius who was preſent there could not well have paſſed it over in ſilence.

Οὐ γὰρ οὔτε ὁ κανὼν, οὔτε ἡ συνήθεια παρέδωκεν — Can. 18.

Τὰ ἀρχαῖα ἔθη κρατείτω. Can. 6.

Ἐπειδὴ συνήθεια κεκράτηκε καὶ παράδοσις ἀρχαία — Can 7.

Ὁμοίως δὲ καὶ κατὰ τὴν Ἀντιόχειαν, καὶ ἐν ταῖς ἄλλαις ἐπαρχίαις τὰ πρεσβεῖα σώζεσθαι ταῖς Ἐκκλησίαις. Ibid.

Τοὺς Ἐπισκόπους κρίσει τῶν Μητροπολιτῶν, καὶ τῶν πέριξ Ἐπισκόπων καθίστασθαι —— Syn. Laod. Can. 12.

The Biſhops ſhould be conſtituted by the judgment of the Metropolitans and the neighbouring Biſhops.

Of this opinion was the Synod of Carthage in their Epiſtle to Pope Celeſtine I. who underſtood no juriſdiction but that of Metropolitans to be conſtituted in the Nicene Synod.

Some think the Fathers of the Second General Synod did introduce it, ſeeing it expedient that Eccleſiaſtical adminiſtrations ſhould correſpond to the Political; for they did innovate ſomewhat in the form of Government; they do expreſly uſe the new word Dioceſe, according to the Civil ſenſe, as diſtinct from a Province; they do diſtinctly name the particular Dioceſes of the Oriental Empire, as they ſtood in the Civil eſtabliſhment; they do preſcribe to the Biſhops in each Dioceſe to act unitedly there, not ſkipping over the bounds of it; they order a kind of appeal to the Synod of the Dioceſe, prohibiting other appeals: The Hiſtorians expreſly do report of them, that they did diſtinguiſh and diſtribute Dioceſes, that they did conſtitute Patriarchs, that they did prohibit that any of one Dioceſe ſhould intrude upon another.

Εἰ δὲ συμβαίνῃ ἀδυνατῆσαι τοὺς ἐπαρχιώτας πρὸς διόρθωσιν ἐπιφερομένων ἐγκλημάτων τῷ Ἐπισκόπῳ, τότε αὐτοὺς προσιέναι μείζονι συνόδῳ τῶν τῆς διοικήσεως Ἐπισκόπων ἐκείνης ὑπὲρ τῆς αἰτίας ταύτης συγκαλουμένων —— Syn Conſt. *Can.*6.

But if it ſo happen that the Biſhops of any Province cannot rectify thoſe things which are laid to the charge of a Biſhop, they ſhall then go to a greater Synod of the Biſhops of that Dioceſe, met together for that purpoſe.

The Fathers of Conſtantinople in their Synodick Epiſtle diſtinguiſh the Province and Dioceſe of Antioch, οἵ τε τῆς ἐπαρχίας, καὶ τῆς ἀνατολικῆς διοικήσεως συνδραμόντες —— Theod. 5.9.

Καὶ Πατριάρχας κατέστησαν διανειμάμενοι τὰς ἐπαρχίας. Socr. 5.8.

Ἐν ἐκείνῃ γὰρ τῇ βασιλευούσῃ πόλει συνελθόντες οἱ μακάριοι Πατέρες συμφώνως τοῖς ἐν τῇ Νικαίᾳ συναθροισθεῖσι τὰς διοικήσεις διέκριναν, καὶ ἑκάστῃ διοικήσει τὰ ἑαυτῆς ἀπένειμαν, ἄντικρυς ἀπαγορεύοντες ἐξ ἑτέρας τινὰς διοικήσεως ἑτέρᾳ μὴ ἐπιέναι. Theodor. *Ep.*86. (ad Flavianum.)

For, ſays Theodoret, the Bleſſed Fathers meeting together in the Imperial City, diſtinguiſhed Dioceſes agreeably to what the Nicene Fathers had done, and allotted to every Dioceſe what belonged to it: on the contrary charging that no one of one Dioceſe ſhould encroach upon another.

But if we ſhall attently ſearch and ſcan paſſages, we may perhaps find reaſon to judge, that this form did ſoon after the Synod of Nice creep in without any ſolemn appointment by ſpontaneous aſſumption and ſubmiſſion, accommodating things to the Political courſe; the great Biſhops (who by the amplification of their City in power, wealth and concourſe of people were advanced in reputation and intereſt) aſſuming ſuch authority to themſelves; and the leſſer Biſhops eaſily complying; And of this we have ſome Arguments. Cyril Biſhop of Jeruſalem being depoſed and extruded by Acacius, Metropolitan of Paleſtine, did appeal to a greater Judicatory; being the firſt, (as Socrates noteth) who ever did uſe that courſe; becauſe, it ſeemeth, there was no greater in being till about that time; which was ſome years before the Synod of Conſtantinople; in which there is mention of a greater Synod of the Dioceſe——

Theod. 2. 26. Soz 4. 25.

Βιβλίον τῶν καθελοῦσι διαπεμψάμενος μεῖζον ἐπικαλέσατο δικαστήριον —— τοῦτο μὲν οὖν μόνος καὶ πρῶτος παρὰ τὸ συνηθὲς Ἐκκλησιαστικῷ κανόνι Κύριλλος ἐποίησεν —— Socr. 2. 40.

There was a convention of Biſhops of the Pontick Dioceſe at Tyana; (diſtinguiſhed from the Aſian Biſhops) whereof Euſebius of Cæſarea is reckoned in the firſt place, as Preſident; in the time of Valens.

Soz. 6. 12.

Nectarius Biſhop of Conſtantinople is ſaid by the Synod of Chalcedon to have preſided in the Synod of Conſtantinople.

Τῶν δὲ Νεκτάριος σὺν Γρηγορίῳ ἡγεμονίαν ἤρατο. (in proſphonetico ad Imper.)

A good Argument is drawn from the very Canon of the Synod of Conſtantinople it ſelf; which doth ſpeak concerning Biſhops over Dioceſes as already conſtituted, or extant; not inſtituting that Order of Biſhops, but ſuppoſing it, and together with an implicit confirmation regulating practice according to it, by prohibiting Biſhops to leap over the bounds of their Dioceſe, ſo as to meddle in the affairs of other Dioceſes; and by ordering appeals to the Synod of a Dioceſe.

Τοὺς ὑπὲρ διοίκησιν Ἐπισκόπους —— Can. 2.

Προσιέναι μείζονι συνόδῳ τῶν τῆς διοικήσεως Ἐπισκόπων —— Can. 6.

Of Authority gained by ſuch aſſumption, and conceſſion without law, there might be produced divers inſtances.

As particularly that the See of Conſtantinople did aſſume to it ſelf Ordination and other acts of Juriſdiction, in three Dioceſes, before any ſuch power was granted to it by any Synodical Decree; the which to have done divers inſtances ſhew; ſome whereof are alledged in the Synod of Chalcedon; as St. Chryſoſtom, of whom it is there ſaid, That going into Aſia he depoſed fifteen Biſhops, and conſecrated others in their room.

Syn. Chalc. Act. 16. (p. 463)

Ἰωάννης δεκαπέντε Ἐπισκόπους καθεῖλεν, ἐπελθὼν ἐν Ἀσίᾳ, καὶ ἐχειροτόνησεν ἄλλους ἀντ' αὐτῶν. Syn. Chalc. Act. 11. (p. 411.)

He alſo depoſed Gerontius Biſhop of Nicomedia, belonging to the Dioceſe of Pontus.

Soz. 8. 6.

Whence the Fathers of Chalcedon did aver, That they had in a Synod confirmed the ancient cuſtom which the Holy Church of God in Conſtantinople had, to ordain Metropolitans in the Aſian, Pontic, and Thracian Dioceſes.

Τὸ γὰρ ἐκ πολλοῦ κρατῆσαν ἔθος ὅπερ εἶχεν ἡ Κωνσταντινουπολιτῶν ἁγία Θεοῦ Ἐκκλησία εἰς τὸ χειροτονεῖν μητροπολίτας τῶν διοικήσεων τῆς τε Ἀσιανῆς, καὶ Ποντικῆς, καὶ Θρᾳκικῆς καὶ νῦν κατὰ συνοδικὴν ἐκυρώσαμεν ψῆφον. Syn. Chalc. in Epiſt. ad P. Leonem.

The which cuſtom, (conſiſtent with reaſon, and becoming the dignity of the Empire, and grateful to the Court) that great Synod did eſtabliſh, although the Roman Church out of jealouſy did conteſt and proteſt againſt it.

Syn. Chalc. Act. 16. (p. 462.)

But the moſt pertinent inſtances are thoſe of the Roman, Alexandrine, and Antiochene Churches, having by degrees aſſumed to themſelves ſuch power over divers Provinces; in imitation of which Churches the other Dioceſan Biſhops may well be thought to have enlarged their Juriſdiction.

This form of government is intimated in the Synod of Epheſus; by thoſe words in which Dioceſes and Provinces are diſtinguiſhed; and the ſame ſhall be obſerved in all Dioceſes and all Provinces every where.

Τὸ δὲ αὐτὸ καὶ ἐπὶ τῶν ἄλλων διοικήσεων καὶ τῶν ἁπανταχοῦ ἐπαρχιῶν παραφυλαχθήσεται. Syn. Eph. Can. 8.

[There is mention of Dioceſes in Strabo.]

However that this form of Diſcipline was perfectly ſettled in the times of the Fourth General Synod is evident by two notable Canons thereof, wherein it is decreed, that if any Biſhop have a controverſy with his Metropolitan of his Province, he ſhall reſort to and be judged by the Exarch of the Dioceſe, or by the See of Conſtantinople.

Εἰ δὲ πρὸς τὸν τῆς αὐτῆς ἐπαρχίας Μητροπολίτην Ἐπίσκοπος ἢ κληρικὸς ἀμφισβητοίη, καταλαμβανέτω ἢ τὸν ἔξαρχον τῆς διοικήσεως, ἢ τὸν τῆς βασιλευούσης Κωνσταντινουπόλεως θρόνον, καὶ ἐπ᾽ αὐτῷ δικαζέσθω. Syn. Chalc. Can. 19, & 17.

This was a great privilege conferred on the Biſhop of Conſtantinople; the which perhaps did ground (to be ſure it did make way for) the plea of that Biſhop to the Title of Oecumenical Patriarch, or Univerſal Biſhop, which Pope Gregory did ſo exagitate; and indeed it ſoundeth ſo fairly toward it, that the Pope hath nothing comparable to it to alledge in favour of his pretences; this being the Decree of the greateſt Synod that ever was held among the Ancients, where all the Patriarchs did concur in making theſe Decrees; which Pope Gregory did reverence as one of the Goſpels. — If any ancient Synod did ever conſtitute any thing like to Univerſal Monarchy, it was this; wherein a final determination of greateſt Cauſes was granted to the See of Conſtantinople, without any exception or reſervation: I mean as to ſemblance, and the ſound of words; for as to the true ſenſe I do indeed conceive that the Canon did only relate to cauſes emergent in the Eaſtern parts; and probably it did only reſpect the three Dioceſes (of Aſia, Pontus, and Thrace) which were immediately ſubjected to his Patriarchal Juriſdiction.

Pope Nicholas I. doth very jocularly expound this Canon; affirming that by the Primate of the Dioceſe is underſtood the Pope (Dioceſe being put by a notable figure for Dioceſes) and that an appeal is to be made to the Biſhop of Conſtantinople, only by permiſſion, in caſe the party will be content therewith.

Quem autem Primatem Diœceſeos S. Synodus dixerit, præter Apoſtoli primi Vicarium, nullus penitus intelligitur——— None can underſtand whom the Holy Synod ſhould call Primate of a Dioceſe, except the Vicar of the prime Apoſtle.

Tantundem valet dixiſſe Primatem Diœceſeos, quantum ſi perhibuiſſet Diœceſeon. P.Nich. I. Ep. 8. (p. 507.) To ſay the Primate of a Dioceſe is as much as to ſay of Dioceſes.

We may note, that ſome Provincial Churches were by ancient cuſtom exempted from dependence on any Primacy or Patriarchate.

Such an one the Cyprian Church was adjudged to be in the Epheſine Synod; wherein the privileges of ſuch Churches were confirmed againſt the invaſion of greater Churches; and to that purpoſe this general Law enacted, Let the ſame be obſerved in all Dioceſes and Provinces every where — that none of the Biſhops moſt beloved of God invade another Province which did not formerly belong to him or his Predeceſſors; and if any one have invaded one, and violently ſeiz'd it, that he reſtore it.

Τῷ δὲ αὐτὸ καὶ ἐπὶ τῶν ἄλλων διοικήσεων καὶ τῶν ἁπανταχοῦ ἐπαρχιῶν παραφυλαχθήσεται —— ὥστε μηδένα τῶν θεοφιλεστάτων Ἐπισκόπων ἐπαρχίαν ἑτέραν οὐκ οὖσαν ἄνωθεν καὶ ἐξ ἀρχῆς ὑπὸ τὴν αὐτοῦ ἤγουν τῶν πρὸ αὐτοῦ χεῖρα καταλαμβάνειν, ἀλλ᾽ εἰ καί τις κατέλαβεν, καὶ ὑφ᾽ ἑαυτῷ πεποίηται, βιασάμενος, τοῦτον ἀποδιδόναι, &c. Conc. Eph. Can. 8.

Such a Church was that of Britain anciently, before Auſtin did introduce the Papal Authority here, againſt that Canon: as by divers learned Pens hath been ſhewed.

Such was the Church of Africk, as by their Canons againſt tranſmarine appeals, and about all other matters doth appear.

Iſid.*diſt.*2. *cap.*1.

It is ſuppoſed, by ſome, that Diſcipline was ſcrued yet one peg higher, by ſetting up the Order of Patriarchs higher than Primates, or Dioceſan Exarchs; but I find no ground of this ſuppoſal except in one caſe; that is, of the Biſhop of Conſtantinople being ſet above the Biſhops of Epheſus, Cæſarea and Heraclea, which were the Primates of the three Dioceſes.

Omnes ſive Patriarchæ cujuſlibet apices, ſive Metropoleωn Primatus, aut Epiſcopatuum Cathedras, vel Eccleſiarum cujuſlibet Ordinis Dignitates inſtituit Romana Eccleſia, P.Nic.*II. Diſt.*22: *cap.*1.

It is a notable Fib which Pope Nicholas II. telleth, as Gratian citeth him; That the Church of Rome inſtituted all Patriarchal Supremacies, all Metropolitan Primacies, Epiſcopal Sees, all Eccleſiaſtical Orders and Dignities whatſoever.

Now things ſtanding thus in Chriſtendom, we may, concerning the intereſt of the Roman Biſhop, in reference to them, obſerve,

1. In all theſe tranſactions about modelling the ſpiritual Diſcipline, there was no Canon eſtabliſhed any peculiar Juriſdiction to the Biſhop of Rome, only the

2. Synod of Nice did ſuppoſe that he by cuſtom did enjoy ſome Authority within certain precincts of the Weſt, like to that which it did confirm to the Biſhop of Alexandria in Ægypt, and the Countries adjacent thereto.

Πρεσβεῖα τιμῆς. Can. 3. Τὰ πρεσβεῖα καὶ ἐξαίρετος τιμή. Syn. Ch. Act. 16.

3. The Synods of Conſtantinople did allow him honorary privileges or precedence before all other Biſhops, aſſigning the next place after him to the Biſhop of Conſtantinople.

Ἴσα πρεσβεῖα.

4. In other privileges the Synod of Chalcedon did equal the See of Conſtantinople to the Roman.

5. The Canons of the two Firſt and Fourth General Synods, ordering all affairs to be diſpatched, and cauſes to be determined in Metropolitan or Dioceſan Synods, do exclude the Roman Biſhop from meddling in thoſe concerns.

6. The Popes (out of a humour natural to them, to like nothing but what they did themſelves, and which ſerved their Intereſts) did not reliſh thoſe Canons, although enacted by Synods which themſelves admitted for Oecumenical: That ſubſcription of ſome Biſhops made above ſixty years ſince as you boaſt, does no whit favour your perſuaſion; a ſubſcription never tranſmitted to the knowledge of the Apoſtolick See by your Predeceſſors, which from its very beginning being weak, and long ſince ruinous, you endeavour now too late and unprofitably to revive.

Perſuaſioni enim tuæ in nullo penitus ſuffragatur quorundam Epiſcoporum ante ſexaginta, ut jactas, annos facta ſubſcriptio, nunquámq; à prædeceſſoribus tuis ad Apoſtolicæ Sedis tranſmiſſa notitiam, cui ab initio ſui caducæ, dudúmq; collapſæ ſera nunc & inutilia ſubjicere fomenta voluiſti — P. Leo. *Ep.*53. (ad Anatol) *Vid. Ep.*54, & 55, & 61.

Romana autem Eccleſia ejuſdem Canones vel geſta Synodi illius hactenus non habet, nec accepit. Greg. M. *Ep.*6.31. (ad Eulog. Alex.)

So doth Pope Leo I. treat the Second Great Synod, writing to Anatolius: and Gregory ſpeaking of the ſame ſays, That the Roman Church has not the acts of that Synod, nor received its Canons.

7. Wherefore in the Weſt they did obtain no effect, ſo as to eſtabliſh Dioceſan Primacies there.

The Biſhops of Cities, which were Heads of Dioceſes, either did not know of theſe Canons (which is probable, becauſe Rome did ſmother the notice of them:) or were hindred from uſing them; the Pope having ſo winded himſelf in, and got ſuch hold among them, as he would not let go.

N A Roman Synod, Anno 378. conſiſting of Italian Biſhops did give the Pope ſuch a privilege as the Synod of Conſtantinople did to the Biſhop of that See. (Marc. *de Primat. p.*103. ex app. Cod. Thodoſ. Vide Baron.)

But there is difference between a General Synod, and an Italian Synod: and what had an Italian Synod to preſcribe to all the Provinces of the Roman Empire, or rather of the Weſt? P. Greg *I. Ep.*7,8.

8. It indeed turned to a great advantage of the Pope, in carrying on his Encroachments, and enlarging his worldly Intereſts, that the Weſtern Churches did not, as the Eaſtern, conform themſelves to the Political frame in embracing Dioceſan Primacies; which would have engaged and enabled them better to protect the Liberties of their Churches from Papal Invaſions.

Baluſius thinketh, that Hilarius of Arles did pretend and offer at his Primatical power apud Marc. 5. 32. but P. Leo did mainly check and quaſh his attempt.

9. For hence, for want of a better, the Pope did claim to himſelf a Patriarchal authority over the Weſtern Churches; pretending a right of calling Synods, of meddling in Ordinations, of determining Cauſes by appeal to him; of dictating Laws and Rules to them, againſt the old rights of Metropolitans, and the later Conſtitutions for Primacies.

Of this we have an Inſtance in St. Gregory; where he alledging an Imperial Conſtitution importing that in caſe a Clergy-man ſhould appeal from his Metropolitan, the cauſe ſhould be referred to the Archbiſhop and Patriarch of that Dioceſe, who judging according to the Canons and Laws ſhould give an end thereto; doth conſequentially aſſume an appeal from a Biſhop to himſelf, adjoyning, If againſt theſe things it be ſaid, that the Biſhop had neither Metropolitan nor Patriarch, it is to be ſaid that this cauſe was to be heard and decided by the Apoſtolical See, which is the head of all Churches.

Contra hæc ſi dictum fuerit, quia nec Metropolitam habuit nec Patriarcham; dicendum eſt quia à Sede Apoſtolica, quæ omnium Eccleſiarum caput eſt, cauſa hæc audienda ac dirimenda fuerat. Greg. I. Ep. 11. 56.

10. Having got ſuch advantage, and as to extent ſtretched his Authority beyond the bounds of his ſub-urbicarian precincts, he did alſo intend it in quality far beyond the privileges by any Eccleſiaſtical Law granted to Patriarchs; or claimed or exerciſed by another Patriarch; till at length by degrees he had advanced it to an exorbitant omnipotency, and thereby utterly enſlaved the Weſtern Churches.

Ruffin. Hiſt. 1. 6.

The ancient Order did allow a Patriarch or Primate to call a Synod of the Biſhops in his Dioceſe, and with them to determine Eccleſiaſtical Affairs by majority of Suffrages; but he doth not do ſo, but ſetting himſelf down in his Chair, with a few of his Courtiers about him, doth make Decrees and Dictates, to which he pretendeth all muſt ſubmit.

The ancient Order did allow a Patriarch to ordain Metropolitans duly elected in their Dioceſes; leaving Biſhops to be ordained by the Metropolitans in their Provincial Synods; but he will meddle in the Ordination of every Biſhop, ſuffering none to be conſtituted without his confirmation, for which he muſt ſoundly pay.

The ancient Order did allow a Patriarch, with the advice and conſent of his Synod, to make Canons for the well-ordering his Dioceſe; but he ſendeth about his Decretal Letters, compoſed by an infallible Secretary, which he pretendeth muſt have the force of Laws, equal to the higheſt Decrees of the whole Church.

The ancient Order did ſuppoſe Biſhops by their Ordination ſufficiently obliged to render unto their Patriarch due obſervance, according to the Canons, he being liable to be judged in a Synod for the tranſgreſſion of his duty; but he forceth all Biſhops to take the moſt ſlaviſh oaths of obedience to him that can be imagined.

The ancient Order did appoint that Biſhops accuſed for offences ſhould be judged in their Provinces; or upon appeal from them in Patriarchal Synods: but he receiveth appeals at the firſt hand, and determineth them in his Court, without calling ſuch a Synod in an age for any ſuch purpoſe.

The ancient Patriarchs did order all things, as became good Subjects, with leave and under ſubmiſſion to the Emperour, who as he pleaſed did interpoſe his confirmation of their Sanctions: but this man pretendeth to decree what he pleaſeth without the leave, and againſt the will of Princes.

Wherefore he is not a Patriarch of the Weſtern Churches, (for that he acteth according to no Patriarchal Rule) but a certain kind of Sovereign Lord, or a tyrannical Oppreſſor of them.

Iſid. in diſt. 21. cap. 1. 11. In all the tranſactions for modelling the Church there never was allowed to the Pope any dominion over his Fellow-patriarchs, or of thoſe great Primates who had aſſumed that name to themſelves; among whom indeed, for the dignity of his City, he had obtained a priority of honour or place; but never had any power over them ſettled by a title of Law, or by clear and uncontested practice.

Inſomuch, that if any of them had erred in Faith, or offended in Practice, it was requiſite to call a General Synod to judge them; as in the caſes of Athanaſius, of Gregory Nazianzene and Maximus, of Theophilus and St. Chryſoſtom, of Neſtorius and of Dioſcorus—— is evident.

12. Indeed all the Oriental Churches did keep themſelves pretty free from his encroachments, although, when he had ſwollen ſo big in the Weſt, he ſometimes did take occaſion to attempt on their Liberty; which they ſometimes did warily decline, ſometimes ſtoutly did oppoſe.

Vid. de Marc. lib. 7. cap. 4. & 5. But as to the main, thoſe flouriſhing Churches conſtantly did maintain a diſtinct adminiſtration from the Weſtern Churches, under their own Patriarchs and Synods, not ſuffering him to interlope in prejudice to their Liberty.

They, without his leave or notice, did call and celebrate Synods (whereof all the firſt great Synods are inſtances) there Ordinations were not confirmed or touched by him; Appeals were not (with publick regard or allowance) thence made to him in cauſes great or little, but they decided them among themſelves: they quaſhed Hereſies ſpringing up among them, as the Second General Synod, the Macedonians, Theophilus the Origeniſts, &c. Little in any caſe had his Worſhip to do with them, or they with him, beyond what was needful to maintain general communion and correſpondence with him; which they commonly, as piety obliged, were willing to do.

And ſometimes, when a pert Pope, upon ſome incidental advantage of differences riſen among them, would be more buſy than they deemed convenient in tampering with their affairs they did rap his fingers: ſo Victor, ſo Stephanus, ſo Julius and Liberius of old did feel to their ſmart: ſo afterwards Damaſus and other Popes in the caſe of Flavianus; Innocent in the caſe of St. Chryſoſtom; Felix and his Succeſſors in the caſe of Acacius did find little regard had to their interpoſals.

So things proceeded, till at length a final rupture was made between them, and they would not ſuffer him at all to meddle with their affairs.

Before I proceed any farther, I ſhall briefly draw ſome Corollaries from this Hiſtorical account which I have given of the original and growth of Metropolitical, Primatical, and Patriarchal Juriſdiction.

1. Patriarchs are an humane Inſtitution.

2. As they were erected by the power and prudence of men, ſo they may be diſſolved by the ſame.

3. They were erected by the leave and confirmation of Princes; and by the ſame they may be dejected, if great reaſon do appear.

4. The Patriarchate of the Pope beyond his own Province or Dioceſe doth not ſubſiſt upon any Canon of a General Synod.

5. He can therefore claim no ſuch power otherwiſe than upon his invaſion or aſſumption.

6. The Primates and Metropolitans of the Weſtern Church cannot be ſuppoſed otherwiſe than by force, or out of fear, to have ſubmitted to ſuch an authority as he doth uſurp.

7. It is not really a Patriarchal Power (like to that which was granted by the Canons and Princes) but another ſort of power which the Pope doth exerciſe.

6. The moſt rightful Patriarch, holding falſe Doctrine, or impoſing unjuſt Laws, or tyrannically abuſing his power, may and ought to be rejected from communion.

9. Such a Patriarch is to be judged by a free Synod, if it may be had.

10. If ſuch a Synod cannot be had by conſent of Princes, each Church may free it ſelf from the miſchiefs induced by his perverſe doctrine or practice.

11. No Eccleſiaſtical Power can interpoſe in the management of any affairs within the Territory of any Prince without his conceſſion.

12. By the Laws of God, and according to ancient Practice, Princes may model the bounds of Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction, erect Biſhopricks, enlarge, diminiſh, or transfer them as they pleaſe.

13. Wherefore each Prince (having Supreme Power in his own Dominions, and equal to what the Emperor had in his) may exclude any foreign Prelate from Juriſdiction in his Territories.

14. It is expedient for peace and publick Good that he ſhould do thus.

15. Such Prelate, according to the rules of Chriſtianity, ought to be content with his doing ſo.

16. Any Prelate, exerciſing Power in the Dominion of any Prince eatenus, his Subject; as the Popes and all Biſhops were to the Roman Emperors.

17. Thoſe joints of Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, eſtabliſhed in the Roman Empire by the confirmation of Emperors, were (as to neceſſary continuance) diſſolved by the diſſolution of the Roman Empire.

18. The power of the Pope in the Territories of any Prince did ſubſiſt by his authority and favour.

19. By the ſame reaſon as Princes have curbed the exorbitancy of Papal power in ſome caſes (of entertaining Legates, making appeals, diſpoſing of Benefices, &c.) by the ſame they might exclude it.

20. The practice of Chriſtianity doth not depend upon the ſubſiſtence of ſuch a form inſtituted by man.

Having ſhewed at large that this Univerſal Sovereignty and Juriſdiction of the Biſhop of Rome over the Chriſtian Church hath no real Foundation either in Scripture or elſewhere, it will be requiſite to ſhew by what ways and means ſo groundleſs a claim and pretence ſhould gain belief and ſubmiſſion to it from ſo conſiderable a part of Chriſtendom; and that from ſo very ſlender roots (from ſlight beginnings and the ſlimmeſt pretences one can well imagine) this bulk of exorbitant power did grow, the vaſteſt that ever man on earth did attain, or did ever aim at, will be leſs wonderful, if we do conſider the many cauſes which did concur and contribute thereto; ſome whereof are propoſed in the following Obſervations.

De puſillo creſcere. P. Leo. Ep. 55.

1. Eminency of any kind (in wealth, in honour, in reputation, in might, in place, or mere order of dignity,) doth eaſily paſs into advantages of real power and command over thoſe who are inferior in thoſe reſpects, and have any dealings or common tranſactions with ſuch Superiors.

For to perſons endowed with ſuch eminency by voluntary deference the conduct of affairs is wont to be allowed; none preſuming to ſtand in competition with them, every one rather yielding place to them than to their equals.

The ſame conduct of things, upon the ſame accounts, and by reaſon of their poſſeſſion, doth continue faſt in their hands, ſo long as they do retain ſuch advantages.

Then from a cuſtom of managing things doth ſpring up an opinion or a pretence of right thereto; they are apt to aſſume a title, and others ready to allow it.

Men naturally do admire ſuch things, and ſo are apt to defer extraordinary reſpect to the poſſeſſors of them.

Advantages of wealth and might are not only inſtruments to attain, but incentives ſpurring men to affect the getting authority over their poorer and weaker neighbours: for men will not be content with bare eminency, but will deſire real power and ſway, ſo as to obtain their wills over others, and not to be croſſed by any. Pope Leo had no reaſon to wonder that Anatolius Biſhop of Conſtantinople was not content with dry honour. Men are apt to think their honour is precarious and ſtandeth on an uncertain foundation, if it be not ſupported with real power; and therefore they will not be ſatisfied to let their advantages lie dead, which are ſo eaſily improvable by power, by inveigling ſome, and ſcaring or conſtraining others to bear their yoke: and they are able to benefit and gratify ſome, and thereby render them willing to ſubmit, thoſe afterwards become ſerviceable to bring others under, who are diſaffected or refractary.

Quid illi Satisfaciet, ſi tantæ urbis magnificentia & claritudo non ſufficit? Leo Ep. 55.

So the Biſhops of Conſtantinople and of Jeruſalem, at firſt had only privileges of honour; but afterward they ſoon hooked in power.

Now the Roman Biſhops from the beginning were eminent above all other Biſhops, in all kinds of advantages.

Euſeb. 6. 43. (Anno 254.)

Oblationibus matronarum ditati. Circumſpectè veſtiti. Amm. Marc. l. 27. (p. 337.) Anno 367.

He was ſeated in the Imperial City, the place of general reſort; thence obvious to all eyes, and his name ſounding in all mouths. He had a moſt numerous, opulent, ſplendid flock and Clergy. He had the greateſt income (from liberal oblations) to diſpoſe of. He lived in greateſt ſtate and luſtre. He had opportunities to aſſiſt others in their buſineſs, and to relieve them in their wants. He neceſſarily thence did obtain great reſpect and veneration. Hence in all common affairs, the conduct and preſidence were naturally devolved on him, without conteſt.

Euſeb.

No wonder then, that after ſome time the Pope did arrive to ſome pitch of authority over poor Chriſtians, eſpecially thoſe who lay neareſt to him; improving his eminency into power, and his paſtoral charge nto a kind of Empire; according to that obſervation of Socrates, that long before his time the Roman Epiſcopacy had advanced it ſelf beyond the Prieſthood into a Potentacy.

Τῆς Ῥωμαίων Ἐπισκοπῆς πέρα τῆς ἱερωσύνης ἐπὶ δυναστείαν ἤδη πάλαι προελθούσης. Socr. 7. 11.

And the like he obſerveth to have happen'd in the Church of Alexandria, upon the like grounds, or by imitation of ſuch a pattern.

Socr. 7. 7.

2. Any ſmall power is apt to grow and ſpread it ſelf; a ſpark of it ſoon will expand it ſelf into a flame: it is very like to the grain of muſtard ſeed, which indeed is the leaſt of all ſeeds; but when it is grown, it is the greateſt among herbs, and becometh a tree, ſo that the birds of the air come and lodge in the branches thereof. Encroaching (as Plutarch ſaith) is an innate diſeaſe of Potentacies. Whoever hath any pittance of it, will be improving his ſtock, having taſted

Matth. 13. 32.

Τὸ σύμφυτον νόσημα τῆς δυναστείας, ἡ πλεονεξία. Plut. in Pyrrh.

taſted the ſweetneſs of having his will which extremely gratifieth the nature of man) he will not be ſatisfied without having more; he will take himſelf to be ſtraitned by any bounds; and will ſtrive to free himſelf of all reſtraints.

Any pretence will ſerve to ground attempts of enlarging power, and none will be balked. For Power is bold, enterprizing, reſtleſs: it always watcheth, or often findeth, never paſſeth opportunities of dilating it ſelf. Every acceſſion doth beget farther advantages to amplify it; as its ſtock groweth, ſo it with eaſe proportionably doth encreaſe; being ever out at uſe. As it groweth, ſo its ſtrength to maintain and enlarge it ſelf doth grow: it gaining more wealth, more friends, more aſſociates and dependents.

Subrependi occaſiones non prætermittit ambitio— [illegible] I. Ep 62.

Faciliùs creſcit dignitas quàm incipit. Sen. *Ep.*101.

Prima dominandi ſpes in arduo; ubi ſit ingreſſus, adſunt ſtudia & miniſtri. Tacit. *Ann.*4. (*p.*143.)

None can reſiſt or obſtruct its growth without danger and manifold diſadvantages; for as its adherents are deemed loyal and faithful, ſo its oppoſers are branded with the imputations of rebellion, contumacy, diſloyalty; and not ſucceeding in their reſiſtence they will be undone.

None ever doth enterprize more than to ſtop its carriere; ſo that it ſeldom loſeth by oppoſition; and it ever gaineth by compoſition. If it be checked at one time, or in one place, it will, like the Sea, at another ſeaſon, in another point, break in. If it is ſometimes overthrown in a Battle, it is ſeldom conquered in the War.

It is always on its march forward, and gaineth ground; for one encroachment doth countenance the next, and is alledged for a precedent to authorize or juſtify it. It ſeldom moveth backward; for every Succeſſor thinketh he may juſtly enjoy what his Predeceſſor did gain, or which is tranſmitted into his poſſeſſion; ſo that there hardly can ever be any reſtitution of ill-gotten-power.

Thus have many abſolute Kingdoms grown; the firſt Chief was a Leader of Volunteers; from thence he grew to be a Prince with ſtated Privileges; after he became a Monarch inveſted with high Prerogatives; in fine, he creepeth forward to a Grand Seigniour, uſurping abſolute dominion; ſo did Auguſtus Cæſar firſt only aſſume the ſtyle of Prince of the Senate, demeaning himſelf modeſtly as ſuch; but he ſoon drew to himſelf the adminiſtration of all things; and upon that foundation his Succeſſors very ſuddenly did erect a boundleſs power. If you trace the footſteps of moſt Empires to the beginning you may perceive the like.

So the Pope, when he had got a little power, continually did ſwell it. The puny pretence of the ſucceeding Saint Peter, and the name of the Apoſtolical See; the precedence by reaſon of the Imperial City; the honorary privileges allowed him by Councils; the Authority deferred to him by one Synod of reviſing the Cauſes of Biſhops; the countenance given to him in repreſſing ſome Hereſies, he did improve to conſtitute himſelf Sovereign Lord of the Church.

3. Spiritual power eſpecially is of a growing nature, and more eſpecially that which deriveth from Divine Inſtitution; for it hath a great awe upon the hearts and conſciences of men; which engageth them to a firm and conſtant adherence. It uſeth the moſt ſubtile arms, which it hath always ready, which needeth no time or coſt to furniſh, which cannot be extorted from its hand; ſo that it can never be diſarmed. And its weapons make ſtrong impreſſion, becauſe it propoſeth the moſt effectual encouragements to its abettors, and diſcouragements to its adverſaries; alluring the one with promiſes of God's favour and eternal happineſs, terrifying the other with menaces of vengeance from heaven and endleſs miſery; the which do ever quell religious, ſuperſtitious, weak people; and often daunt men of knowledge and courage.

It is preſumed unchangeable and unextinguiſhable by any humane power, and thence is not (as all other power) ſubject to revolutions. Hence like Achilles it is hardly vincible, becauſe almoſt immortal. If it be ſometimes rebuffed or impaired; it ſoon will recover greater ſtrength and vigour.

*Diſt.*21. *cap.*2,3. The Popes derive their Authority from Divine Inſtitution; and their weapons always are ſentences of Scripture; they pretend to diſpenſe remiſſion of ſins; and promiſe heaven to their abettors. They excommunicate, curſe and damn the oppoſers of their deſigns.

They pretend they never can loſe any power that ever did belong to their See: they are always ſtiff, and they never recede or give back. The privileges of the Roman Church can ſuſtain no detriment.

Privilegia Romanæ Eccleſiæ nullum poſſunt ſuſtinere detrimentum—— P. Nic. I. *Ep.*36. (32——)

4. Power is eaſily attained and augmented upon occaſion of diſſenſions. Each faction uſually doth make it ſelf a Head, the chief in ſtrength and reputation which it can find inclinable to favour it; and that Head it will ſtrive to magnify, that he may be the abler to promote its cauſe; and if the cauſe doth proſper he is rewarded with acceſſion of Privileges and Authority: eſpecially thoſe who were oppreſſed, and find relief by his means, do become zealouſly active for his aggrandiſement.

Thus uſually in civil broils the Captain of the prevalent Party groweth a Prince, or is crowned with great Privileges (as Cæſar, Octavian, Cromwell, &c.)

So upon occaſion of the Arian faction, and the oppreſſion of Athanaſius, Marcellus, Paulus, and other Biſhops, the Pope (who by their application to him had occaſion to head the Catholick Party did grow in power;) for thereupon the Sardican Synod did decree to him that Privilege, which he infinitely enhanced, and which became the main engin of rearing himſelf ſo high.

And by his interpoſal in the diſſenſions raiſed by the Neſtorians, the Pelagians, the Eutychians, the Acacians, the Monothelites, the Image-worſhippers, and Image-breakers, &c, his authority was advanced; for he, adhering in thoſe cauſes to the prevailing Party, was by them extolled, obtaining both reputation and ſway.

5. All power is attended by dependencies of perſons ſheltered under it, and by it enjoying ſubordinate advantages; the which proportionably do grow by its encreaſe.

Such perſons therefore will ever be inciting their Chief and Patron to amplify his power; and in aiding him to compaſs it, they will be very induſtriouſly, reſolutely and ſteadily active; their own intereſt moving them thereto.

Wherefore their mouths will ever be open in crying him up, their heads will be buſy in contriving ways to further his intereſts, their care and pains will be employed in accompliſhing his deſigns; they with their utmoſt ſtrength will contend in his defence againſt all oppoſitions.

Thus the Roman Clergy firſt, then the Biſhops of Italy, then all the Clergy of the Weſt became engaged to ſupport, to fortifie, to enlarge the Papal authority; they all ſharing with him in domination over the Laity; and injoying wealth, credit, ſupport, privileges and immunities thereby. Some of them eſpecially were ever putting him on higher pretences, and furthering him by all means in his acquiſt and maintenance of them.

6. Hence if a Potentate himſelf ſhould have no ambition, nor much ability to improve his power; yet it would of it ſelf grow, he need only be paſſive therein; the intereſt of his partiſans would effect it; ſo that often power doth no leſs thrive under ſluggiſh and weak Potentates, eſpecially if they are void of goodneſs, than under the moſt active and able: Let the Miniſters alone to drive on their intereſt.

7. Even perſons otherwiſe juſt and good do ſeldom ſcruple to augment their power by undue encroachment, or at leaſt to uphold the uſurpations of their foregoers; for even ſuch are apt to favour their own pretences, and afraid of incurring cenſure and blame, if they ſhould part with any thing left them by their Predeceſſors. They apprehend themſelves to owe a dearneſs to their place, engaging them to tender its own weal and proſperity, in promoting which they ſuppoſe themſelves not to act for their own private intereſt; and that it is not out of ambition or avarice, but out of a regard to the grandeur of their Office that they ſtickle and buſtle; and that in ſo doing they imitate Saint Paul who did magnify his office. They are encouraged hereto by the applauſe of men, eſpecially of thoſe who are allied with them in intereſt, and who converſe with them; who take it for a Maxime, Boni Principis eſt ampliare imperium: The extenders of Empire are admired and commended however they do it, although with cruel Wars, or by any unjuſt means.

Hence uſually the worthieſt men in the world's eye are greateſt enlargers of power; and ſuch men bringing appearances of vertue, ability, reputation to aid their endeavours, do moſt eaſily compaſs deſigns of this nature, finding leſs obſtruction to their attempts; for men are not ſo apt to ſuſpect their integrity, or to charge them with ambition and avarice; and the few, who diſcern their aims and conſequences of things, are overborn by the number of thoſe who are favourably conceited and inclined toward them.

Thus Julius I. Damaſus I. Innocent I. Gregory I. and the like Popes, whom Hiſtory repreſenteth as laudable perſons, did yet confer to the advancement of Papal grandeur. But they who did moſt advance that intereſt, as Pope Leo I. Gelaſius I. Pope Nicholas I. Pope Gregory VII. in the eſteem of true zealots paſs for the beſt Popes. Hence the diſtinction between a good Man, a good Prince, a good Pope. Sixtus V.

8. Men of an inferior condition are apt to expreſs themſelves highly in commendation of thoſe who are in a ſuperior rank, eſpecially upon occaſion of addreſs and intercourſe; which commendations are liable to be interpreted for acknowledgments or atteſtations of right, and thence do ſometimes prove means of creating it.

Of the generality of men it is truly ſaid, that it doth fondly ſerve fame, and is ſtonn'd with titles and images; readily aſcribing to Superiors whatever they claim, without ſcanning the grounds of their title. Simple and weak men out of abjectedneſs or fear are wont to crouch, and ſubmit to any thing upon any terms. Wiſe men do not love brangling, nor will expoſe their quiet and ſafety without great reaſon; thence being inclinable to comply with greater perſons. Bad men out of deſign to procure advantages or impunity are prone to flatter and gloze with them. Good men out of due reverence to them, and in hope of fair uſage from them, are ready to complement them, or treat them with the moſt reſpectful terms. Thoſe who are obliged to them will not ſpare to extol them; paying the eaſy return of good words for good deeds.

——qui famæ ſervit ineptus,
Ac ſtupet in titulis & imaginibus——
Hor.

Thus all men conſpire to exalt power; the which ſnatcheth all good words as true, and conſtrueth them to the moſt favourable ſenſe; and alledgeth them as verdicts and arguments of unqueſtionable right. So are the complements or terms of reſpect uſed by Hierom, Auſtin, Theodoret, and divers others toward Popes, drawn into an Argument for Papal Authority; whenas the actions of ſuch Fathers, and their diſcourſes upon other occaſions do manifeſt their ſerious judgment to have been directly contrary to his pretences: wherefore the Emperor of Conſtantinople in the Florentine Synod had good reaſon to decline ſuch ſayings *for arguments, for if (ſaith he) any of the Saints doth in an Epiſtle honour the Pope, ſhall he take that as importing privileges.

* Κατὰ ῥητὰ τῶν ἁγίων.
Μήπως, φησί, τις τῶν ἁγίων ἐν ἐπιστολῇ τιμᾷ τὸν πάπαν, καὶ ἐκλάβῃ τοῦτο ἀντὶ προνομίων. Syn. Flor. *Seſſ.*25. (*p.*848.)

9. Good men commonly (out of charitable ſimplicity, meekneſs, modeſty and humility, love of peace, and averſneſs from contention) are apt to yield to the encroachments of thoſe who any-wiſe do excel them; and when ſuch men do yield, others are ready to follow their example. Bad men have little intereſt to reſiſt, and no heart to ſtand for publick good; but rather ſtrike in preſently, taking advantage by their compliance to drive a good market for themſelves. Hence ſo many of all ſorts in all times did comply with Popes, or did not obſtruct them; ſuffering them without great obſtacle to raiſe their power.

10. If in ſuch caſes a few wiſe men do apprehend the conſequences of things, yet they can do little to prevent them. They ſeldom have the courage with ſufficient zeal to buſtle againſt encroachments; fearing to be overborn by its ſtream, to loſe their labour, and vainly to ſuffer by it: If they offer at reſiſtence, it is uſually faint and moderate: whereas power doth act vigorouſly, and puſh it ſelf forward with mighty violence; ſo that it is not only difficult to check it, but dangerous to oppoſe it.

Ambiguity of words (as it cauſeth many debates, ſo) yieldeth much advantage to the foundation and amplification of power: for whatever is ſaid of it, will be interpreted in favour of it, and will afford colour to its pretences. Words innocently or careleſly uſed are by interpretation extended to ſignify great matters, or what you pleaſe. For inſtance, Ità de vocabulorum occaſionibus plurimùm quæſtiones ſubornantur, ſicut & de verborum in communionibus. Tertull. de Reſur. Carn. 54.

The word Biſhop may import any kind of ſuperintendency or inſpection; hence Saint Peter came to be reckoned Biſhop of Rome, becauſe in virtue of his Apoſtolical Office he had inſpection over that Church founded by him, and might exerciſe ſome Epiſcopal acts.

The word Head doth ſignify any kind of eminency, the word Prince any priority, the word to preſide any kind of ſuperiority or preeminence; hence ſome Fathers attributing thoſe names to Saint Peter, they are interpreted to have thought him Sovereign in power over the Apoſtles. And becauſe ſome did give like terms to the Pope, they infer his Superiority in power over all Biſhops; notwithſtanding ſuch Fathers did expreſs a contrary judgment.

Καὶ ἡγεῖσθαι κεφαλήν. Can. Apoſt. 34.

The word Succeſſour may import any derivation of power; hence becauſe Saint Peter is ſaid to have founded the Church of Rome, and to have ordain'd the firſt Biſhop there, the Pope is called his Succeſſor.

The word Authority doth often import any kind of influence upon the opinions or actions of men (grounded upon eminence of place, worth, reputation, or any ſuch advantage.) Hence becauſe the Pope of old ſometimes was deſired to interpoſe his authority, they will underſtand him to have had right to command or judge in ſuch caſes; although authority is ſometimes oppoſed to command, as where Livy ſaith, that Evander did hold thoſe places by authority rather than by command; and Tacitus of the German Princes ſaith, They are heard rather according to their authority of perſuading, than power of commanding.

Quia duobus Epiſcopis, quorum eâ tempeſtate ſumma authoritas erat, non illuſerat——Sulp. Sev. 2. 63.

Becauſe he had not deluded the two Biſhops who had the greateſt authority in thoſe times.

Non Mediocris authoritatis Epiſcopus Carthag. Aug. Ep. 162.

The Biſhop of Carthage was of no mean Authority.

——audiuntur authoritate ſuadendi potiùs quàm jubendi poteſtate. Tac. de Mor.Ger. (*p.*640.)

commanding. The word Judge (ſaith Canus) is frequently uſed to ſignify no more than I do think or conceive; whereby he doth excuſe divers Popes from having decreed a notable errour (for Alexander III. ſays of them, that they judged that after a matrimony contracted, not conſummated; another may be valid, that being diſſolved.) Yet if the Pope is ſaid to have judged ſo or ſo in any caſe, it is alledged for a certain argument of proper Juriſdiction.

Evander —— ea authoritate magis quàm imperio retinebat loca. Liv. 1.

Verbum Judico frequenter in ea ſignificatione uſurpatur, ut idem ſit quod ſentio ſeu opinor. Can. loc. 6. cap. 8. (comp. lib. 6. 1.)

11. There is a ſtrange inchantment in words; which being (although with no great colour of reaſon) aſſumed, do work on the fancies of men, eſpecially of the weaker ſort. Of theſe power doth ever arrogate to it ſelf ſuch as are moſt operative, by their force ſuſtaining and extending it ſelf.

So divers prevalent Factions did aſſume to themſelves the name of Catholick; and the Roman Church particularly hath appropriated that word to it ſelf, even ſo as to commit a Bull, implying Rome and the Univerſe to be the ſame place; and the perpetual canting of this Term hath been one of its moſt effectual charms to weak people. I am a Catholick, that is, an Univerſal, therefore all I hold is true; this is their great argument.

The words Succeſſor of Peter, Apoſtolick See, Prima Sedes, have been ſtrongly urged for Arguments of Papal Authority; the which have beyond their true force (for indeed they ſignify nothing) had a ſtrange efficacy upon men of underſtanding and wiſdom.

12. The Pope's power was much amplified by the importunity of perſons condemned or extruded from their places, whether upon juſt accounts, or wrongfully and by faction; for they finding no other more hopeful place of refuge and redreſs did often apply to him: for what will not men do, whither will not they go in ſtraits?

——ut ad Domini mei tanti Pontificis & piiſſimi Patris, omnium ad ſe confugientium tutiſſimi defenſoris ac protectoris, &c. Rothaldi appell. (in P. Nich. I. Ep. 37. p. 563.

——my Lord ſo great a Pontiff, and moſt pious a Father, the ſafe defender and protector of all thoſe that flee unto him for ſuccour.

Thus did Marcion go to Rome, and ſue for admiſſion to communion there. So Fortunatus and Feliciſſimus in St. Cyprian, being condemned in Africk did fly to Rome for ſhelter, of which abſurdity St. Cyprian doth ſo complain. So likewiſe Martianus and Baſilides, in St. Cyprian, being outed of their Sees, for having lapſed from the Chriſtian profeſſion, did fly to Stephen for ſuccour, to be reſtored. So Maximus (the Cynick) went to Rome, to get a confirmation of his election at Conſtantinople. So Marcellus, being rejected for Heterodoxy, went thither to get atteſtation to his Orthodoxy (of which St. Baſil complaineth.) So Apiarius, being condemned in Africk for his crimes, did appeal to Rome.

Cyp. Ep. 68.

Ep. 55.

And on the other ſide, Athanaſius being with great partiality condemned by the Synod of Tyre, Paulus and other Biſhops being extruded from their Sees for Orthodoxy; St. Chryſoſtom being condemned, and expelled by Theophilus and his complices; Flavianus being depoſed by Dioſcorus, and the Epheſine Synod; Theodoret being condemned by the ſame, ---did cry out for help from Rome. Chelidonius, Biſhop of Reſanon, being depoſed by Hilarius of Arles, (for crimes) did fly to Pope Leo. Ignatius Patriarch of Conſtantinople, being extruded from his See by Photius, did complain to the Pope.

Calendion of Antioch, Liber. cap. 18.

P. Leo, Ep. 89.

Marc. 5. 32.

P. Nich. I. Ep. 38. (p. 564.) Rothaldus.

13. All Princes are forward to heap honour on the Biſhop of their Imperial City; it ſeeming a diſgrace to themſelves, that ſo near a relation be an inferior to any other: who is as it were their Spiritual Paſtor, who is uſually by their ſpecial favour advanced. The City it ſelf and the Court will be reſtleſs in aſſiſting him to climb.

Thus did the Biſhop of Conſtantinople ariſe to that high pitch of honour, and to be Second Patriarch; who at firſt was a mean Suffragan to the Biſhop of Heraclea; this by the Synods of Conſtantinople and Chalcedon is aſſigned for the reaſon of his advancement. And how ready the Emperors were to promote the dignity of that Biſhop, we ſee by many of their Edicts to that purpoſe; as particularly that of Leo.

Cod. Lib. 1. *tit.*2. *cap.*16.

So, for the honour of their City, the Emperors uſually did favour the Pope, aſſiſting him in the furtherance of his deſigns, and extending his Privileges by their Edicts at home, and Letters to the Eaſtern Emperors, recommending their affairs.

So in the Synod of Chalcedon we have the Letters of Valentinian, together with thoſe of Placidia and of Eudoxia the Empreſſes to Theodoſius, in behalf of Pope Leo, for retractation of the Epheſine Synod; wherein they do expreſs themſelves engaged to maintain the honour of the Roman See; Seeing that (ſaith Placidia, Mother of Theodoſius) it becometh us in all Things to preſerve the honour and dignity of this chief City, which is the Miſtreſs of all others.

Ὁπότε πρέπει ἡμᾶς ταύτῃ τῇ μεγίστῃ πόλει, ἥτις δέσποινα πασῶν ὑπάρχει τῶν γεῶν, ἐν πᾶσι τὸ σέβας διαφυλάξαι. Syn. Chalc. (p 27.)

So Pope Nicholas confeſſeth, that the Emperors had extolled the Roman See with divers privileges, had enriched it with gifts, had enlarged it with benefits (or benefices,) &c.

Qualiter (Imperatores) eam diverſis beneficiis extulerint, donis ditaverint, beneficiis ampliaverint, qualiter illam,&c. P. Nic.I. Ep.8. (p.513.)

——Romanus tempore priſco
Pauper erat Præſul, Regali munere crevit,&c.
Gunth. Lig. lib.6.

14. The Popes had the advantage of being ready at hand to ſuggeſt what they pleaſed to the Court, and thereby to procure his Edicts (directed or dictated by themſelves) in their favour, for extending their power, or repreſſing any oppoſition made to their encroachments.

Baronius obſerveth that the Biſhops of Conſtantinople did uſe this advantage for their ends; for thus he reflecteth on the Edict of the Emperor Leo in favour of that See: Theſe things Leo, but queſtionleſs conceived in the words of Acacius, ſwelling with pride.

Hæc Leo, ſed Acacii faſtu tumentis proculdubio verbis concepta, & ſtylo ſuperbiæ exarata. Baron. *Ann.*473 §.4.

And no leſs unqueſtionably did the Popes conceive words for the Emperor in countenance of their Authority.

Apud Marc.5. 32.

Such was the Edict of Valentinian in favour of Leo againſt Hilarius Biſhop of Arles,* (in an unjuſt cauſe as Binius confeſſeth) who conteſted his Authority to undo what was done in a Gallicane Synod. And we may thank Baronius himſelf for this Obſervation, By this, Reader, thou underſtandeſt, that when the Emperours ordained Laws concerning Religion, they did it by tranſcribing and enacting the Laws of the Church upon the admonition of the Holy Biſhops requiring them to do their duty. It was a notable Edict, which Pope Hilarius alledgeth, It was alſo decreed by the Laws of Chriſtian Princes, that whatſoever the Biſhop of the Apoſtolick See ſhould upon examination pronounce concerning Churches and their Governours, &c. ſhould with reverence be received and ſtrictly obſerved, &c.

* Bin. ad P. Hill. Ep. 11. (p.576.)

Ex his intelligis, Lector, cùm de rebus ſacris Imperatores leges ſanxivere, id ipſum admonitione ſſ. Præſulum requirentium eorum officium ex ſcriptis legibus ſtatuiſſe. Baron. *An.*458. §.4.

Chriſtianorum quoque Principum lege decretum eſt, &c. P. Hilarius, *Ep.*11. (p. 576)

Such Edicts by crafty ſuggeſtions being at opportune time from eaſy and unwary Princes procured, did hold, not being eaſily reverſed: and the Power which the Pope once had obtained by them, he would never part with; fortifying it by higher pretences of Divine immutable right. P.Nich.I. Ep. 36.

The Emperor Gratian, having gotten the World under him, did order the Churches to thoſe who would communicate with Pope Damaſus. This and the like countenances did bring credit and authority to the Roman See. Theod. 5. 2.

15. It is therefore no wonder, that Popes being ſeated in the Metropolis of the Weſtern Empire (the head of all the Roman State) ſhould find intereſt ſufficient to make themſelves by degrees what they would be; for they not only ſurpaſſing the Provincial Biſhops in wealth and repute, but having power in Court, who dared to pull a feather with them, or to withſtand their encroachments? What wiſe man would not rather bear much, than conteſt upon ſuch diſadvantages, and without probable grounds of ſucceſs?

16. Princes who favoured them with ſuch conceſſions, and abetted their undertakings, did not foreſee what ſuch increaſe of power in time would ariſe to; or ſuſpect the prejudice thence done to Imperial Authority. They little thought that in virtue thereof Popes would check, and mate Princes; or would claim ſuperiority over them; for the Popes at that time did behave and expreſs themſelves with modeſty and reſpect to Emperors.

17. Power once rooted doth find ſeaſons and favourable junctures for its growth; the which it will be intent to embrace.

The confuſions of things, the eruptions of Barbarians, the ſtraits of Emperors, the contentions of Princes, &c. did all turn to account for him; and in confuſion of things he did ſnatch what he could to himſelf.

The declination and infirmity of the Roman Empire gave him opportunity to ſtrengthen his intereſts, either by cloſing with it, ſo as to gain ſomewhat by its conceſſion; or by oppoſing it, ſo as to head a Faction againſt it. As he often had opportunity to promote the deſigns of Emperors and Princes, ſo thoſe did return to him encreaſe of Authority; ſo they trucked and bartered together. For when Princes were in ſtraits, or did need aſſiſtence (from his reputation at home) to the furtherance of their deſigns, or ſupport of their intereſt in Italy, they were content to honour him, and grant what he deſired: as in the caſe of Acacius, which had cauſed ſo long a Breach, the Emperor to engage Pope Hormiſdas, did conſent to his will. And at the Florentine Synod, the Emperor did bow to the Pope's terms, in hopes to get his aſſiſtence againſt the Turks.

When the Eaſtern Emperors, by his means chiefly, were driven out of Italy, he ſnatched a good part of it to himſelf, and ſet up for a Temporal Prince.

Δρυὸς πεσούσης πᾶς ἀνὴρ ξυλίζεται——
When the Oak is fallen every one gets ſome wood.

When Princes did claſh, he by yielding countenance to one ſide, would be ſure to make a good market for himſelf: for this pretended Succeſſor to the Fiſherman, was really skilled to angle in troubled Waters.

They have been the incendiaries of Chriſtendom, the kindlers and fomenters of War. And would often ſtir up Wars, and inclining to the ſtronger part, would ſhare with the Conqueror; as when he ſtirr'd up Anaſt. in Vit. Zach. *P.*Nich.I. Ep. 25. 30, &c.

up Charles againſt the Lombards. They would, upon ſpiritual pretence, be interpoſing in all affairs.

Non ſine ſuſpicione, quod illorum temporum Pontifices, qui bella extinguere, diſcordias tollere debuiſſent, ſuſcitarent ea potiùs atq; nutrirent. Modruvienſis Epiſc. in Conc. Lat. ſub Leone *X. Seſſ.*6. (p. 72.)

He did oblige Princes by abetting their Cauſe when it was unjuſt or weak; his ſpiritual Authority ſatisfying their Conſcience: whence he was ſure to receive good acknowledgment and recompence. As An. 752. when he did allow Pepin's uſurpation.

He pretended to diſpoſe of Kingdoms, and to conſtitute Princes; An. 1060. reſerving obeiſance to himſelf. Gregory VII. granted to Robert Guiſtard An. 1139. Naples and Sicily beneficiario jure. Innocent II. gave to Roger the title of King.

There is ſcarce any Kingdom in Europe which he hath not claimed the Sovereignty of, by ſome pretence or other. Princes ſometime for quiet ſake have deſired the Pope's conſent and allowance of things appertaining of right to themſelves, whence the Pope took advantage to claim an original right of diſpoſing ſuch things.

The proceeding of the Pope upon occaſion of Wars is remarkable; when he did enter League with a Prince to ſide with him in a War againſt another, he did covenant to proſecute the Enemy with Spiritual Arms (that is, with Excommunications and Interdicts) engaging his Confederates to uſe Temporal Arms. So making Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures tools of Intereſt.

When Princes were in difficulties, (by the mutinous diſpoſition of Princes, the emulation of Antagoniſts) he would, as ſerved his intereſt interpoſe; hooking in ſome advantage to himſelf.

In the tumults againſt our King John, he ſtruck in, and would have drawn the Kingdom to himſelf.

He would watch opportunity to quarrel with Princes, upon pretence they did intrench on his Spiritual Power: as about the point of the inveſtiture of Biſhops, and receiving homage from them.

Gregory VII. did excommunicate Henry III. (Anno 1076.)
Calixtus II. ——————— Henry IV. (Anno 1120.)
Adrian IV. ——————— Frederick, (Anno 1160.)
Celeſtinus III. ——————— Henry V. (Anno 1195.)
Innocent III. ——————— Otho (Anno 1219.)
Honorius III. and Gregory IX. --- } Frederick II. (Anno 1220.) Innocent IV. in the Ludg. Conc. } 1245.)

18. The ignorance of times did him great ſervice; for then all the little Learning which was, being in his Clients and Factors, they could inſtill what they pleaſed into the credulous People. Then his Dictates would paſs for infallible Oracles, and his Decrees for inviolable Laws: whence his veneration was exceedingly encreaſed.

Anſelme Anno 1109. } Eadmer.
Becket Anno 1154 } Matt. Par.

19. He was forward to ſupport factious Church-men againſt Princes, upon pretence of ſpiritual Intereſt and Liberty. And uſually by his importunity and arts getting the better in ſuch conteſts, he thereby did much ſtrengthen his Authority.

20. He maketh himſelf the head of all the Clergy, and carrying himſelf as its Protector and Patron, did ingage thereby innumerable moſt able Heads, Tongues and Pens; who were devoted to maintain whatever he did, and had little elſe to do.

21. So great a party he cheriſhed with exorbitant Liberties, ſuffering none to rule over them or touch them beſide himſelf.

22. He did found divers Militias and bands of ſpiritual Janiſaries, to be Combatants for his Intereſts; who depending immediately upon him, ſubſiſting by his Charters, enjoying exemptions by his Authority from other Juriſdictions, being ſworn to a ſpecial obeiſance of him, were entirely at his devotion, ready with all their might to advance his Intereſts, and to maintain all the pretences of their Patron and Benefactor.

Theſe had great ſway among the People, upon account of their religious guiſes and pretences to extraordinary heights of ſanctimony, auſterity, contempt of the World. And learning being moſtly confined to them, they were the chief Teachers and Guides of Chriſtendom; ſo that no wonder, if he did challenge and could maintain any thing by their influence.

They did cry up his Power as ſuperiour to all others. They did attribute to him titles ſtrangely high, Vice-god, Spouſe of the Church, &c. ſtrange attributes of Omnipotency, Infallibility, &c.

23. Whereas Wealth is a great ſinew of Power, he did invent divers ways of drawing great ſtore thereof to himſelf.

Pro pallio omninò aliquid dare prohibeo. Greg. I. Ep. 4. 44.

By how may tricks did he proll Money from all parts of Chriſtendom? as by Diſpenſations for Marriage within degrees prohibited, or at uncanonical times,--- for Vows and Oaths; for obſervance of Faſts and Abſtinences; for Pluralities and incompatible Benefices, Non-reſidences, &c.

Indulgences, and Pardons, and freeing Souls from the pains of Purgatory.

Reſervations, and Proviſions of Benefices, not beſtowed gratis.

Conſecrated Preſents; Agnus Dei's, Swords, Roſes, &c.

Confirmations of Biſhops; * ſending Palls.

Vendit plumbum pro auro Taxa Camerariæ.

Appeals to his Court.

Tributes of Peter-pence, Annates, Tithes,---- introduced upon occaſion of Holy Wars, and continued.

Peter-pence. Plat. p. 257.

Playing faſt and looſe, tying knots, and undoing them for gain.

Sending Legates to drein places of Money.

Commutations of Penance for Money.

Inviting to Pilgrimage at Rome.

Hooking in Legacies. What a maſs of Treaſure did all this come to? what a Trade did he drive?

Quantas nobis divitias peperit hæc fabula Chriſti?

24. He did indeed eaſily by the help of his mercenary Divines transform moſt Points of Divinity in accommodation to his intereſts of Power, Reputation and Gain.

25. Any pretence, how ſlender ſoever, will in time get ſome validity; being fortified by the conſent of divers Authors, and a current of ſutable practice.

Any ſtory ſerving the deſigns of a Party, will get credit by being often told, eſpecially by Writers bearing a ſemblance of gravity; whereof divers will never be wanting to abet a flouriſhing Party.

26. The Hiſtories of ſome Ages were compoſed only by the Popes Clients, Friars and Monks, and ſuch People; which therefore are partial to him, addicted to his Intereſts, and under awe of him.

---

* In the times of Henry I. the Biſhop of York did pay 10000 l. Sterling for his Pall. Matt. Par. (p. 274.)

For a long time none dared open his mouth to queſtion any of his pretences, or reprehend his practices, without being called Heretick, and treated as ſuch.

27. Whereas the Pope had two ſorts of Oppoſites to ſubdue, temporal Princes and Biſhops; his buſineſs being to o'ertop Princes, and to enſlave all Biſhops; or to invade and uſurp the rights of both; he uſed the help of each to compaſs his deſigns on the other; by the Authority of Princes oppreſſing Biſhops, and by the aſſiſtance of Biſhops mating Princes.

28. When any body would not do as he would have them, he did inceſſantly clamour or whine, that Saint Peter was injured.

Quando & Apoſtolica præceptio ad injuriam B. Petri in illis partibus non obſervatur, & à te ſpernitur & violatur. P. Nich. I. Ep. 37.

29. The forgery of the Decretal Epiſtles (wherein the ancient Popes are made expreſly to ſpeak and act according to ſome of his higheſt pretences, deviſed long after their times, and which they never thought of, good men) did hugely conduce to his purpoſe; authoriſing his Encroachments by the ſuffrage of ancient Doctrine and Practice: a great part of his Cannon-law is extracted out of theſe, and grounded on them.

The Donation of Conſtantine, fictitious Acts of Councils, and the like counterfeit ſtuff did help thereto; the which were ſoon embraced, as we ſee in Pope Gregory II. ——

As alſo Legends, Fables of Miracles, and all ſuch deceivableneſs of unrighteouſneſs.

Ἀπάτη τ̃ ἀδικίας. 2 Theſſ. 2.

30. Popes were ſo cunning as to form Grants, and impute that to Privileges derived from them, which Princes did enjoy by right or cuſtom.

Twiſd. p. 17.

31. Synods of Biſhops called by him at opportune ſeaſons, conſiſting of his Votaries or Slaves. None dared therein to whiſper any thing to the prejudice of his Authority. He carried whatever he pleaſed to propoſe, without check or contradiction. Who dared to queſtion any thing done by ſuch numbers of Paſtors ſtyling themſelves the Repreſentative of Chriſtendom.

Non neceſſitatis, ſed honoris cauſâ peto. Extortis aſſentationibus. P. Leo Epiſt. (ad Syn. Chalc)

32. The having hampered all the Clergy with ſtrict Oaths of univerſal obedience to him (beginning about the times of Pope Gregory VII.) did greatly aſſure his Power.

33. When intolerable Oppreſſions and Exactions did conſtrain Princes to ſtruggle with him, if he could not utterly prevail, things were brought to compoſition; whereby he was to be ſure for that time a gainer, and gained eſtabliſhment in ſome Points, leaving the reſt to be got afterward in more favourable junctures.

Witneſs the Concordates between { Henry II. and P. Alex. III. Anno 1172.
Edw. III. and P. Greg. XI. Anno 1373.
Henry V. and P. Mart. V. Anno 1418.

34. When Princes were fain to curb their exorbitances by Pragmatical Sanctions, they were reſtleſs till they had got thoſe Sanctions revoked. And when they found weak Princes, or any Prince in circumſtances advantaging their deſign, they did obtain their end. So Pope Leo X. got Lewis XI. to repeal the Pragmatical Sanctions of his Anceſtors.

35. The Power he did aſſume to abſolve Men from Oaths and Vows, to diſpence with prohibited Marriages, &c. did not only bring much griſt to his Mill; but did enable him highly to oblige divers perſons (eſpecially great ones) to himſelf. For to him they owed the quiet of their Conſcience from ſcruples. To him they owed the ſatisfaction of their deſires, and legitimation of their iſſue, and title to their Poſſeſſions.

36. So the device of Indulgences did greatly raiſe the veneration of him; for who would not adore him, that could looſe bands, and free his Soul from long and grievous pains?

SUPPO-

SUPPOSITION VI.

The next Suppoſition is this, That in Fact the Roman Biſhops continually from Saint Peter's time have enjoyed and exerciſed this Sovereign Power.

THIS is a Queſtion of Fact which will beſt be decided by a particular conſideration of the ſeveral Branches of Sovereign Power, that ſo we may examine the more diſtinctly whether in all Ages the Popes have enjoyed and exerciſed them, or not.

And if we ſurvey the particular Branches of Sovereignty, we ſhall find that the Pope hath no juſt title to them, in reaſon, by valid Law, or according to ancient Practice, whence each of them doth yield a good argument againſt his pretences.

I. If the Pope were Sovereign of the Church, he would have power to convocate its ſupreme Councils and Judicatories; and would conſtantly have exerciſed it.

This power therefore the Pope doth claim; and indeed did pretend to it a long time ſince, before they could obtain to exerciſe it: It is manifeſtly apparent (ſaith Pope Leo X. with approbation of his Lateran Synod) that the Roman Biſhop for the time being (as who hath authority over all Councils) hath alone the full right and power of indicting, tranſlating and diſſolving Councils: and long before him, To the Apoſtolical authority (ſaid Pope Adrian I.) by our Lord's command, and by the merits of Saint Peter, and by the decrees of the Holy Cannons and of the venerable Fathers, a right and ſpecial power of convocating Synods hath many-wiſe been committed; and yet before him, The authority (ſaith Pope Pelagius II.) of convocating Synods hath been delivered to the Apoſtolical See by the ſingular privilege of Saint Peter.

Diſtinct. 17.
Cùm etiam ſolum Rom. Pontificem prò tempore exiſtentem, tanquam auctoritatem ſuper omnia Concilia habentem, Conciliorum indicendorum, transferendorum ac diſſolvendorum plenum jus & poteſtatem habere——manifeſtè conſtet. Con. Later. Seſſ. 11. (p. 152.) Ann.
——Cui juſſione Domini, & meritis B. Petri Apoſtoli, ſingularis congregandarum Synodorum authoritas, & Sanctorum Canonum ac Venerandorum Patrum decretis multipliciter privata tradita eſt poteſtas. P. Hadrian I. apud Bin. Tom. 5. p. 565. (Anno 785.)
Cùm generalium Synodorum convocandi auctoritas Apoſtolicæ Sedi B. Petri ſingulari privilegio ſit tradita——P. Pelag. II. Epiſt. 8. (Bin. Tom. 4. p 476.) Anno 587.
qu An hæc Epiſtola ſit Pelagii II. Negat Launoius.

But it is manifeſt, that the Pope cannot pretend to this power by vertue of any old Eccleſiaſtical Canon; none ſuch being extant or produced by him: Nor can he alledge any ancient Cuſtom; there having been no General Synod before Conſtantine: and as to the practice from that time, it is very clear, that for ſome Ages the Popes did not aſſume or exerciſe ſuch a power, and that it was not taken for their due. Nothing can be more evident and it were extreme impudence to deny that the Emperors at their pleaſure, and by their authority did congregate all the firſt General Synods; for ſo the oldeſt Hiſtorians in moſt expreſs terms do report, ſo thoſe Princes in their Edicts did aver, ſo the Synods themſelves did declare. The moſt juſt and pious Emperors, who did bear greateſt love to the Clergy, and had much reſpect for the Pope, did call them without ſcruple; it was deemed their right to do it, none did remonſtrate againſt their practice, the Fathers in each Synod did refer thereto, with allowance, and commonly with applauſe; Popes themſelves did not conteſt their right, yea commonly did petition them to exerciſe it.

Theſe things are ſo clear and ſo obvious, that it is almoſt vain to prove them; I ſhall therefore but touch them.

In general Socrates doth thus atteſt to the ancient practice; We (ſaith he) do continually include the Emperors in our Hiſtory, becauſe upon them, ever ſince they became Chriſtians, Eccleſiaſtical affairs have depended, and the greateſt Synods have been and are made by their appointment: and Juſtinian in his prefatory type to the Fifth General Council beginneth thus: It hath been ever the care of Pious and Orthodox Emperors by the aſſembling of the moſt religious Biſhops to cut off Hereſies, as they did ſpring up, and by the right faith ſincerely preach'd, to keep the Holy Church of God in peace: and to do this was ſo proper to the Emperours: that when Ruffin did affirm St. Hilary to have been excommunicated in a Synod, St. Hierome to confute him, did aſk; tell me, What Emperor did command this Synod to be congregated; implying it to be illegal or impoſſible that a Synod ſhould be congregated without the Imperial command.

Συνεχῶς καὶ τοὺς βασιλεῖς τῇ ἱστορίᾳ περιλαμβάνομεν, διότι ἀφ' οὗ Χριστιανίζειν ἤρξαντο, τὰ τῆς Ἐκκλησίας πράγματα ἤρτητο ἐξ αὐτῶν, καὶ αἱ μέγισται σύνοδοι τῇ αὐτῶν γνώμῃ γεγόνασί τε καὶ γίνονται. Socr. 5. proœm.

Semper ſtudium fuit Orthodoxis, & piis imperatoribus, pro tempore exortas Hæreſes per congregationem religioſiſſimorum Epiſcoporum amputare, & recta fide ſincerè prædicata, in pace Sanctam Dei Eccleſiam cuſtodire —— Juſtin. in Syn. 5. Collat. 1. (p. 209) Græce p. 368. magis Emphaticè.

Doce —— quis Imperator hanc Synodum juſſerit congregari. Hier.

Particularly Euſebius ſaith of the firſt Chriſtian Emperor, that as a common Biſhop appointed by God he did ſummon Synods of God's Miniſters; ſo did he command a great number of Biſhops to meet at Arles, (for deciſion of the Donatiſts cauſe;) ſo did he alſo command the Biſhops from all quarters to meet at Tyre for examination of the affairs concerning Athanaſius; and that he did convocate the great Synod of Nice (the firſt and moſt renowned of all General Synods) all the Hiſtorians do agree, he did himſelf affirm, the Fathers thereof in their Synodical remonſtrances did avow; as we ſhall hereafter, in remarking on the paſſages of that Synod ſhew.

Οἷά τις κοινὸς Ἐπίσκοπος ἐκ Θεοῦ καθεσταμένος συνόδους τῶν τοῦ Θεοῦ λειτουργῶν συνεκρότει. Euſeb de Vit Conſt. I. 44

Πλείστους ἐκ διαφόρων καὶ ἀμυθήτων τόπων Ἐπισκόπους εἰς τὴν Ἀρελατησίων πόλιν συνελθεῖν ἐκελεύσαμεν. Euſeb. Hiſt. 10. 5. Ep. ad Chreſtum. Ad Arelatenſium civitatem piiſſimi Imperatoris voluntate adducti, ſay the Fathers in their Epiſtle to P. Sylveſter himſelf.

Vid. Euſeb. de Vit. Conſt. lib. 4. cap. 41, 42, 43. & Socr. 1. 28.

The ſame courſe did his Son Conſtantius follow, without impediment; for although he was a favourer of the Arian Party, yet did the Catholick Biſhops readily at his call aſſemble in the great Synods of * Sardica, of † Ariminum, of ‖ Seleucia, of * Sirmium, of † Milan, &c. Which he out of a great zeal to compoſe diſſenſions among the Biſhops did convocate.

*Προσέταξεν εἰς Σαρδικὴν συνδραμεῖν Ἐπισκόπους. Theod 2. 4. Soz. 3. 11. Socr. 2. 16, 20. Athan. Tom. 1. p. 761. Hil. in fragm. p. Jubet ex toto orbe apud Sardicam Epiſcopos congregari. Sulp 2. 52. † Ἔκ τε τῆς τοῦ Θεοῦ κελεύσεως, καὶ τῆς σῆς εὐσεβείας προστάγματος, &c. Syn. Arim Ep ad Conſt Socr. 2. 37. ‖ Socr. 2. 39 ἣν — γενέσθαι τὸ βασιλέως ἐκέλευσε πρόσταγμα. Ann. 381. * Ὁ βασιλεὺς σύνοδον Ἐπισκόπων ἐν τῷ Σιρμίῳ γενέσθαι ἐκέλευσε. Socr 2. 99. Soz. 4. 6. † Πρόσταγμα ἦν τοῦ βασιλέως ἐν Μεδιολάνῳ πόλει ποιεῖσθαι τὴν σύνοδον. Socr. 1. 36. Soz. 4. 9.

After him the Emperor Valentinian, underſtanding of diſſenſions about divine matters to compoſe them, did indict a Synod in Illyricum.

Ἐν μὲν τῷ Ἰλλυρικῷ σύνοδον γενέσθαι προσέταξε. Theod. 4. 7.

A while after, for ſettlement of the Chriſtian State (which had been greatly diſturbed by the Perſecution of Julian and of Valens, and by divers Factions.) Theodoſius I. did command (ſaith Theodoret) the Biſhops of his Empire to be aſſembled together at Conſtantinople; the which meeting accordingly did make the Second General Synod; in the congregation of which the Pope had ſo little to do, that Baronius ſaith, it was celebrated againſt his will.

Σύνοδον ὁμοδόξων αὐτῷ συνεκάλεσε. Soz. 7. 7. Socr. 5. 8.

Μόνης τῆς οἰκείας βασιλείας τοὺς Ἐπισκόπους εἰς τὴν Κωνσταντινούπολιν συναθροισθῆναι προσέταξεν. Theod. 5. 7.

Repugnante Damaſo celebrata, &c. Baron. Anno 553. § 224.

Afterwards, when Neſtorius, Biſhop of Conſtantinople, affecting to ſeem wiſer than others in explaining the myſtery of Chriſt's Incarnation, had raiſed a jangle to the diſturbance of the Church. For removing it, the Emperor Theodoſius II. did by his edict command the Biſhops to meet at Epheſus; who there did celebrate the Third General Council: in the beginning Πρόσταγμα τοῦ βασιλέως εἰς τὴν σύνοδον συνιέναι ἐκέλευσεν. Socr 7. 34. Evagr. 1. 3.

ning of each Action it is affirm'd, that the Synod was convocated by the Imperial degree; the Synod it ſelf doth often profeſs it; the Pope's own Legate doth acknowledge it; and ſo doth Cyril the Preſident thereof.

Ἐκ θεσπίσματος τῶν βασιλέων συγκροτηθεῖσα.

Ἡ ἁγία σύνοδος, ἡ χάριτι Θεοῦ κατὰ τὸ θέσπισμα τῶν εὐσεβεστάτων καὶ φιλοχρίστων ἡμῶν βασιλέων συγκροτηθεῖσα. Syn. Eph. *Act.*1. *p.*291.
The holy Synod aſſembled by the grace of God, according to the Decree of our moſt Religious Emperors, &c.
—— ἡ χάριτι Θεοῦ καὶ πνεύματι τοῦ ὑμετέρου κράτους συναχθεῖσα. p. 297.
Τὰ προστεταγμένα τῇ ἁγίᾳ συνόδῳ παρὰ τοῦ ὑμετέρου κράτους, *&c. Act.*5. *p.*347.
Τοῖς ἀθροισθεῖσι κατὰ πρόσταγμα τῶν βασιλέων. p 404.
Ἥντινα σύνοδον οἱ χριστιανικώτατοι καὶ φιλανθρωπότατοι βασιλεῖς ὥρισαν.
Which Synod our moſt Chriſtian and gracious Emperors appointed, ſaith Philip, the Pope's Legate. *Act.*3.*p.*330.
Τῇ ἁγίᾳ συνόδῳ τῇ κατὰ Θεοῦ χάριν καὶ θέσπισμα τῶν θεοφιλεστάτων καὶ φιλοχρίστων βασιλέων συναχθείσῃ——
To the holy Synod aſſembled by the grace of God, and the command of our Emperors, &c. So do Cyril and Memnon inſcribe in there Epiſtle. Act 4. p. 337.

The ſame Emperor, upon occaſion of Eutyches being condemned at Conſtantinople, and the ſtirs thence ariſing, did indict the Second General Synod of Epheſus, (which proved abortive by the miſcarriages of Dioſcorus, Biſhop of Alexandria) as appeareth by his Imperial Letters to Dioſcorus, and the other Biſhops, ſummoning them to that Synod:---We have decreed that the moſt holy Biſhops meeting together, &c. After the ſame manner the other moſt reverend Biſhops were written to, to come to the Synod. And as Pope Leo doth confeſs; calling it the Council of Biſhops which you (Theodoſius) commanded to be held at Epheſus.

Ἐθεσπίσαμεν κατὰ ταὐτὸ συνελθόντων ὁσιωτάτων, &c.

Τῷ αὐτῷ τύπῳ ἐγράφη καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις εὐλαβεστάτοις Ἐπισκόποις ὥστε παραγενέσθαι εἰς τὴν σύνοδον Syn. Chalc. pars 1. p. 53.

Epiſcopale conſilium, quod haberi apud Epheſum præcepiſtis. P. Leo. I. Ep. 25. (& 24.) ad Theod.

The next General Synod of Chalcedon was convocated by the authority of the Emperor Marcian; as is expreſſed in the beginning of each Action, as the Emperor declareth, as the Synod it ſelf in the front of its definition doth avow; the holy, great and Oecumenical Synod gather'd together by the grace of God and the command of our moſt dread Emperors, &c. has determin'd as follows. Ann. 451.

Κατὰ θεῖον θέσπισμα συναθροισθεῖσα.

Τὴν ἁγίαν ὑμῶν ἠθροίσαμεν σύνοδον. (*Act.*6. p 345.)

Ἡ ἁγία καὶ μεγάλη καὶ οἰκουμενικὴ σύνοδος ἡ κατὰ Θεοῦ χάριν, καὶ θέσπισμα τῶν εὐλαβεστάτων καὶ φιλοχρίστων ἡμῶν βασιλέων συναχθεῖσα —— ὥρισε τὰ ὑποτεταγμένα. Act. 6. 346.

The Fifth General Synod was alſo congregated by the authority of Juſtinian I. and the Emperor's Letter authorizing it, beginning (as we ſaw before) with an aſſertion (backed with a particular enumeration) that all former great Synods were called by the ſame power: the Fathers themſelves do ſay, that they had come together according to the will of God, and the command of the moſt pious Emperor. So little had the Pope to do in it, that, as Baronius himſelf telleth us, it was congregated againſt his will, or with his reſiſtance. Ann. 533. *Act.p.*368. *Gr. p.*309. Lat.

Pro Dei voluntate, & juſſione piiſſimi Imperatoris ad hanc urbem convenimus. Collat. 8.

Ut quæ reſiſtente Romano Pontifice fuerit congregata. Baron Ann 553.§.219.

The Sixth General Synod at Conſtantinople was alſo indicted by the Emperor Conſtantine Pogonatas; as doth appear by his Letters, as is intimated at the entrance of each Action, as the Synod doth acknowledge, as Pope Leo II. (in whoſe time it was concluded) doth affirm. The Synod in its definition, as alſo in its Epiſtle to Pope Agatho doth inſcribe it ſelf The Holy and Oecumenical Synod, congregated by the grace of God, and the altogether religious Sanction of the moſt pious, and moſt faithful great Emperor Conſtantine; and, in their definition they ſay, By this doctrine of peace dictated by God, our moſt gracious Emperor through the divine Wiſdom being guided, as a defender of the true Faith, and an enemy to the falſe, having gather'd us together in this holy and Oecumenical Synod, has united the whole frame of the Church, &c. In its accla-

Ἡ ἁγία καὶ μεγάλη, καὶ οἰκουμενικὴ σύνοδος, ἡ κατὰ Θεοῦ χάριν καὶ πανευσεβὲς θέσπισμα τοῦ εὐσεβεστάτου καὶ πιστοτάτου μεγάλου βασιλέως Κωνσταντίνου συναχθεῖσα. Act. 18. *p.*255. & p. 285. (in Epiſt. ad P. Agath.)

Ταύτῃ τῇ θεολέκτῳ τῆς εἰρήνης διδασκαλίᾳ θεοσόφως ὁ πρᾳότατος ἡμῶν βασιλεὺς ὁδηγούμενος, ὁ τῆς μὲν ὀρθοδοξίας ὑπέρμαχος, τῆς δὲ κακοδοξίας ἀντίμαχος, τὴν καθ' ἡμᾶς ἁγίαν ταύτην καὶ οἰκουμενικὴν ἀθροίσας ὁμήγυριν, τὸ τῆς Ἐκκλησίας ἅπαν ἥνωσε σύγκριμα. *Act.*18. *p.*256. in definitione Synodica.

matory Oration to the Emperour it ſaith, ταῖς θειοτάταις ὑμῶν προστάξεσιν εἴκοντες ὅ τε τῆς πρεσβυτάτης ϗ Ἀποστολικῆς ἀκροπόλεως ἀρχιερατικώτατος πρόεδρος ϗ ἡμεῖς ἐλάχιστοι, &c. Act. 18. p. 271. We all acquieſcing in your moſt ſacred commands; both the moſt holy Preſident of (Rome) the moſt Ancient and Apoſtolical City, and we the leaſt, &c.

Καὶ γὰρ ἐπεγνώκαμεν ὅτι ἡ ἁγία ϗ μεγάλη ϗ οἰκουμενικὴ ἕκτη σύνοδος, ἥτις κατὰ Θεοῦ χάριν, τῷ βασιλικῷ προστάγματι ἔναρχος ἐν τῇ βασιλίδι Κωνσταντίνου πόλει —— P. Leo II. in Ep ad Con. Imp. p. 305.

Theſe are all the great Synods, which Poſterity with clear conſent did admit as General; for the next two have been diſclaimed by great Churches (the Seventh by moſt of the Weſtern Churches, the Eighth by the Eaſtern) ſo that even † divers Popes after them did not reckon them for General Councils; and all the reſt have been only Aſſembles of Weſtern Biſhops, celebrated after the breach between the Oriental and Occidental Churches.

† P. John VIII. Ep. 247. P. Nic I. Ep. 7, 8, 10. P. Hadr II. Ep. 26.

Yet even that Second Synod of Nice, which is called the Seventh Synod, doth avow it ſelf to have convened by the Emperours command; and in the front of each Action, as alſo of the Synodical definition, the ſame ſtyle is retained.

Πᾶσα ἡ ἁγία σύνοδος ἡ κατ' εὐδοκίαν Θεοῦ, προστάξει τε τῆς φιλοχρίστου ὑμῶν βασιλείας συνελθοῦσα. Act. 7. p. 831. Act. 1. p. 519. Act. 2. p. 551. Act. 3 p. 586 Act. 4. p. 609. Act. 5. p. 696. Act 6. p. 722. Act. 7. p. 812. Defin. Synod. Act. 7. p. 817.

Hitherto it is evident, that all General Synods were convocated by the Imperial Authority; and about this matter divers things are obſervable.

It is obſervable in how peremptory a manner the Emperours did require the Biſhops to convene at the time and place appointed by them. Conſtantine in his Letter indicting the Synod of Tyre hath theſe words; If any one preſuming to violate our command and ſenſe, &c.

Euſeb. de Vit. Conſt. 4. 42. (Vid. in 5. p. 30.)

Theodoſius II. ſummoneth the Biſhops to the Epheſine Synod in theſe terms; We taking a great deal of care about theſe things will not ſuffer any one if he be abſent to go unpuniſh'd; nor ſhall he find excuſe either with God or us, who preſently without delay does not by the time ſet, appear in the place appointed.

Καὶ ἡμεῖς δὲ τοῦτον πολλὴν ποιούμενοι φροντίδα ἀπολεμπάνεσθαι οὐδένα φορητῶς ἀνεξόμεθα· οὐδεμίαν τε ἕξει πρὸς Θεὸν, οὐδὲ πρὸς ἡμᾶς ἀπολογίαν, ὁ μὴ παραχρῆμα κατὰ τὸν προειρημένον καιρὸν, εἰς τὸν ἀφορισθέντα τόπον σπουδαίως παραγινόμενος. Theod. Jun. Ep. ad Cyril. Conc. Eph. pars 1. p. 2 6.

In like terms did he call them to the Second Epheſine Synod, If any one ſhall chuſe to neglect meeting in a Synod ſo neceſſary and grateful to God, and by the ſet time do not withal diligence appear in the place appointed, he ſhall find no excuſe, &c.

Εἰ δέ τις τὴν οὕτως ἀναγκαίαν ϗ τῷ Θεῷ φίλην παριδεῖν ἕλοιτο σύνοδον, ϗ μὴ πάσῃ δυνάμει κατὰ τὸν προειρημένον καιρὸν τὸν ἀφορισθέντα καταλάβοι τόπον, οὐδεμίαν ἕξει πρὸς τὸ κρεῖττον, ἢ πρὸς τὴν ἡμετέραν εὐσέβειαν ἀπολογίαν Theod. in Ep. ad Dioſc. in Conc. Chalc. Act. 1. p. 53.

Marcian thus indicteth the Synod of Nice (after by him tranſlated to Chalcedon) It properly ſeemeth good to our clemency that an holy Synod meet in the City of Nice, in the Province of Bithynia.

Τοῦτο ἰδικῶς τῇ ἡμετέρᾳ ἤρεσεν ἡμερότητι, ἵνα ἁγία σύνοδος ἐν τῇ Νικαιέων πόλει τῆς Βιθυνῶν ἐπαρχίας συγκροτηθῇ. In Epiſt. ad Epiſc. Syn. Chalc. pars 1. p. 34.

Again we may obſerve, that in the Imperial Edicts or Epiſtles whereby Councils effectually were convened, there is nothing ſignified concerning the Pope's having any authority to call them; it is not as by licence from the Pope's Holineſs, but in their own Name and Authority they Act: which were very ſtrange if the Popes had any plea then commonly approved for ſuch a power.

As commonly Emperors did call Synods by the ſuggeſtion of other Biſhops *, ſo again, there be divers Inſtances of Popes applying themſelves to the Emperors with petitions to indict Synods; wherein ſometimes they prevailed, ſometimes they were diſappointed: ſo Pope Liberius did requeſt of Conſtantius to indict a Synod for deciding the Cauſe of Athanaſius: Eccleſiaſtical judgment (ſaid

* Κύριλλος —— εἰκότως ἐδέησε νεύμασι τοῦ νέου Θεοδοσίου τὰ σκῆπτρα τῆς ἕω διέποντος τὴν ἐν Ἐφέσῳ προτέραν σύνοδον ἀθροισθῆναι. Evagr. 1. 3.

(ſaid he, as Theodoret reports) ſhould be made with great equity; wherefore if it pleaſe your Piety, command a Judicatory to be conſtituted; and in his Epiſtle to Hoſius, produced by Baronius, he ſaith, Many Biſhops out of Italy met together, who together with me had beſeecht the moſt Religious Emperor, that he would command, as he had thought fit, the Council of Aquileia to meet.

Διόπερ εἴ σοι δοκεῖ τῇ εὐσεβείᾳ, κριτήριον συσταθῆναι κέλευσον. Theod. 2. 16.

Multi ex Italia Epiſcopi convenerunt, qui mecum religioſiſſimum Imperatorem fuerant deprecati, ut juberet ſicut ipſi placuerat, dudum concilium Aquileienſe congregari. Baron. Ann. 353 § 19.

So Pope Damaſus, having a deſire that a General Synod ſhould be celebrated in Italy for repreſſing Hereſies and Factions then in the Church did obtain the Imperial Letters for that purpoſe directed to the Eaſtern Biſhops, as they in their Epiſtle to the Weſtern Biſhops do intimate: But becauſe expreſſing a brotherly affection toward us, ye have called us as your own Members by the moſt pious Emperor's Letters to that Synod which by the will of God ye are gathering at Rome.

Ἐπειδὴ μέντοι τὴν ἀδελφικὴν περὶ ἡμᾶς ἀγάπην ἐπιδεικνύμενοι, σύνοδον ἐπὶ τῆς Ῥώμης Θεοῦ βουλήσει συγκροτοῦντες, καὶ ἡμᾶς ὡς οἰκεῖα μέλη προσεκαλέσασθε, διὰ τῶν τοῦ θεοφιλεστάτου βασιλέως γραμμάτων. Theod. 5. 9.

It is a wonder that Bellarmine ſhould have the confidence to alledge this paſſage for himſelf.

Bell de Pont. R. 2. 13.

So again Pope Innocent I. being deſirous to reſtore St. Chryſoſtom, did (as Sozomen telleth us) ſend five Biſhops and two Prieſts of the Roman Church to Honorius and to Arcadius the Emperor, requeſting a Synod, with the time and the place thereof; in which attempt he ſuffered a repulſe; for the Courtiers of Arcadius did repel thoſe Agents, as troubling another Government, which was beyond their bounds, or wherein the Pope had nothing to do, that they knew of.

Πέπομφεν Ἐπισκόπους πέντε καὶ πρεσβυτέρους δύο τῆς Ῥωμαίων Ἐκκλησίας πρὸς Ὁνώριον, καὶ Ἀρκάδιον τὸν βασιλέα, σύνοδον αἰτήσοντας, καὶ καιρὸν ταύτης καὶ τόπον. Soz. 8. 28.

Ὡς ὑπερορίαν ἀρχὴν ἐνοχλήσαντας. Ibid.

So alſo Pope Leo I. (whom no Pope could well exceed in zeal to maintain the Privileges and advance the Eminence of his See) did in theſe terms requeſt Theodoſius to indict a Synod; whence if your piety ſhall vouchſafe conſent to our ſuggeſtion and ſupplication, that you would command an Epiſcopal Council to be held in Italy; ſoon, God aiding, may all ſcandals be cut off: upon this occaſion the Emperor did appoint a Council (not in Italy according to the Popes deſire, but) at Epheſus; the which not ſucceeding well, Pope Leo again did addreſs to Theodoſius in theſe words, All the Churches of our parts, all Biſhops with groans and tears do ſupplicate your Grace, that you would command a General Synod to be celebrated within Italy; to which requeſt (although back'd with the deſire of the Weſtern Emperor) Theodoſius would by no means conſent; for, as Leontius reporteth, when Valentinian being importuned by Pope Leo, did write to Theodoſius II, that he would procure another Synod to be held for examining whether Dioſcorus had judged rightly or no, Theodoſius did write back to him ſaying, I ſhall make no other Synod.

Humiliter ac ſapienter expoſite, ut petitioni noſtræ, quâ plenariam indici Synodum poſtulamus, clementiſſimus Imperator dignetur annuere, (ſaith Pope Leo, to the Clergy and People of Conſtantinople. Ep. 23.)

Unde ſi pietas veſtra ſuggeſtioni ac ſupplicationi noſtræ dignetur annuere, ut intra Italiam haberi jubeatis Epiſcopale Concilium, citò auxiliante Deo poterunt omnia ſcandala reſecari. P. Leo I. Ep. 9.

Omnes partium Eccleſiæ noſtrarum, omnes manſuetudini veſtræ cum gemitibus & lacrymis ſupplicant ſacerdotes, ut generalem Synodum jubeatis intra Italiam celebrari. P. Leo I. Ep. 42.

Οὐαλεντινιανὸς ὀχλούμενος ὑπὸ Λέοντος τοῦ πάπα γράφει Θεοδοσίῳ τῷ μικρῷ, ἵνα ἐπιτρέψῃ σύνοδον γενέσθαι, εἰς τὸ γνῶναι εἰ καλῶς ἔκρινεν ὁ Διόσκορος ἢ οὔ· ὁ δὲ Θεοδόσιος ἀντέγραψεν αὐτῷ λέγων, ὅτι οὐ ποιῶ ἄλλην σύνοδον. Leont. de Sect. Act. 4.

The ſame Pope did again of the ſame Emperor petition for a Synod to examine the cauſe of Anatolius, Biſhop of Conſtantinople: Let your clemency (ſaith he) be pleaſed to grant an Univerſal Council to be held in Italy; as with me the Synod, which for this cauſe did meet at Rome, doth requeſt; Thus did that Pope continually harp upon one ſtring to get a General Synod to be celebrated at his own doors; but never could obtain his purpoſe, the Emperor being ſtiff in refuſing it.

The ſame Pope, with better ſucceſs, (as * to the thing, though not as to the place) did requeſt of the Emperor Marcian a Synod; for he (concurring in opinion that it was needful) did (ſaith Liberatus) at the petition of the Pope and the Roman Princes command a General Council to be congregated at Nice.

Sanctum clementiæ veſtræ ſtudium, quo ad reparationem pacis Eccleſiaſticæ Synodum habere voluiſtis, adeò libenter accepi, ut quamvis eam fieri intra Italiam popoſciſſem, &c.* Leo Ep. 50.

Popoſceram quidem à glorioſiſſima clementia veſtra, ut Synodum, quam pro reparanda Orientalis Eccleſiæ pace à nobis etiam petitam neceſſariam judicaſtis, aliquantiſper differri ad tempus opportunius juberetis ——— P. Leo Ep. 43. 44. 50.

Sed eo defuncto, cùm Martianus Imperii culmen fuiſſet adeptus, pro illa Papæ & Principum Romanorum petitione Univerſale Concilium in Nicena congregari juſſit. Lib. Brev. cap. 13.

Now, if the Pope had himſelf a known right to convocate Synods, what needed all this ſupplication, or this application to the Emperors? would not the Pope have endeavoured to exerciſe his Authority? would he not have clamoured or whined at any interruption thereof? would ſo ſpiritful and ſturdy a Pope as Leo * have begged that to be done by another, which he had authority to do of himſelf, when he did apprehend ſo great neceſſity for it, and was ſo much provoked thereto? would he not at leaſt have remonſtrated againſt the injury therein done to him by Theodoſius.

* Fortiſſimus Leo Liber. cap. 12.

All that this daring Pope could adventure at, was to wind in a pretence that the Synod of Chalcedon was congregated by his conſent; for, it hath been the pleaſure (of whom I pray) that a General Council ſhould be congregated, both by the command of the Chriſtian Princes, and with the conſent of the Apoſtolick See, ſaith he very cunningly; yet not ſo cunningly, but that any other Biſhop might have ſaid the ſame for his See.

——in cauſa fidei, propter quam Generale Concilium & ex præcepto Chriſtianorum Principum, & ex conſenſu Apoſtolicæ Sedis placuit congregari. Ep. 61.

This power indeed upon many juſt accounts peculiarly doth belong to Princes; It ſuteth to the dignity of their ſtate, it appertaineth to their duty, they are moſt able to diſcharge it. They are the Guardians of publick tranquillity, which conſtantly is endangered, which commonly is violated by diſſentions in religious matters; (whence we muſt pray for them, that by their care we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godlineſs 1 Tim. 2.2. and honeſty,) they alone can authorize their Subjects to take ſuch Journeys, or to meet in ſuch Aſſemblies; they alone can well cauſe the expences needful for holding Synods to be exacted and defrayed; they alone can protect them, can maintain Order and Peace in them, can procure Obſervance to their Determinations; they alone have a Sword to conſtrain reſty and refractary Perſons (and in no caſes are Men ſo apt to be ſuch as in debates about theſe matters) to convene, to confer peaceably, to agree, to obſerve what is ſettled: They, as nurſing Fathers of the Iſa. 49 23. Church, as Miniſters of God's Kingdom, as encouragers of good Works; as the Sap. 6. 4. Stewards of God, entruſted with the great Talents of Power, Dignity, Rom. 13.3. Wealth, enabling them to ſerve God, are obliged to cauſe Biſhops in ſuch caſes to perform their duty; according to the example of good Princes in Holy Scripture, who are commended for proceedings of this nature; for ſo King Joſias did convocate a General Synod of the Church in his time, then (ſaith the Text) the King ſent, and gathered together all the Elders 2 Chron. 34.29, &c. of Judah and Jeruſalem; In this Synod he preſided, ſtanding in his place; and making a Covenant before the Lord; its Reſolutions he confirmed, cauſing all that were preſent in Jeruſalem and Benjamin to ſtand to that Covenant; and he took care of their Execution, making all preſent in Iſrael effectually to ſerve the Lord their God.

So alſo did King Hezekiah gather the Prieſts and Levites together, did warn, did command them to do their duty, and reform things in the Church: My Sons (ſaid he) be not now negligent, for the Lord hath choſen you to ſtand before him, to ſerve him, and that ye ſhould miniſter unto him, and burn incenſe.

2 Chron. 29. 4, 15, 20, 21, &c. Verſ. 11.

Beſide them none other can have reaſonable pretence to ſuch a Power, or can well be deemed able to manage it: ſo great an Authority cannot be exerciſed upon the Subjects of any Prince without eclipſing his Majeſty, infringing his natural right, and endangering his State. He that at his pleaſure can ſummon all Chriſtian Paſtours, and make them trot about, and hold them when he will, is in effect Emperor, or in a fair way to make himſelf ſo. It is not fit therefore that any other perſon ſhould have all the Governours of the Church at his beck, ſo as to draw them from remote places whither he pleaſeth; to put them on long and chargeable Journeys; to detain them from their charge; to ſet them on what deliberations and debates he thinketh good. It is not reaſonable that any one without the leave of Princes ſhould authorize ſo great conventions of Men, having ſuch intereſt and ſway; it is not ſafe, that any one ſhould have ſuch dependencies on him, by which he may be tempted to claſh with Princes, and withdraw his Subjects from their due obedience. Neither can any ſucceſs be well expected from the uſe of ſuch authority by any, who hath not power, by which he can force Biſhops to convene, to reſolve, to obey; whence we ſee that Conſtantine, who was a Prince ſo gentle and friendly to the Clergy, was put to threaten thoſe Biſhops, who would abſent themſelves from the Synod indicted by him at Tyre; and Theodoſius (alſo a very mild and religious Prince) did the like in his ſummoning the two Epheſine Synods. We likewiſe may obſerve, that when the Pope and Weſtern Biſhops, in a Synodical Epiſtle, did invite thoſe in the Eaſt to a great Synod indicted at Rome, theſe did refuſe the Journey, alledging that it would be to no good purpoſe; ſo alſo when the Weſtern Biſhops did call thoſe of the Eaſt, for reſolving the difference between Flavianus and Paulinus, both pretending to be Biſhops of Antioch, what effect had their ſummons? and ſo will they always or often be ready to ſay, who are called at the pleaſure of thoſe who want force to conſtrain them; ſo that ſuch Authority in unarmed hands (and God keep Arms out of the Pope's hands) will be only a ſource of diſcords.

Τῇ πρᾳότητι καὶ πάντας τοὺς ἀληθῶς ἱερωμένους ἐνίκα. —— ὁ βασιλεὺς Θεοδόσιος πρᾳὺς σφόδρα παρὰ πάντας τοὺς ἀνθρώπους, τοὺς ὄντας ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς. Socr. 7. 42.

Τὴν ἀποδημίαν παρῃτήσαντο ὡς οὐδὲν ἔχουσαν κέρδος. Theod. 5. 8.

Ἔγραψεν αὐτοίτε, καὶ Γρατιανὸς ὁ βασιλεὺς, συγκαλοῦντες εἰς τὴν δύσιν τοὺς ἀπὸ τῆς ἀνατολῆς Ἐπισκόπους. Soz 7. 11.

Both they and Gratian the Emperor wrote, calling the Eaſtern Biſhops into the Weſt.

Either the Pope is a Subject, as he was in the firſt times, and then it were too great a preſumption for him to claim ſuch a power over his fellow-Subjects in prejudice to his Sovereign; (nor indeed did he preſume ſo far, untill he had in a manner ſhaken off ſubjection to the Emperor) or he is not a Subject; and then it is not reaſonable that he ſhould have ſuch power in the Territories of another Prince.

The whole buſineſs of General Synods, was an expedient for Peace, contrived by Emperors, and ſo to be regulated by their order. Hence even in times and places where the Pope was moſt reverenced, yet Princes were jealous of ſuffering the Pope to exerciſe ſuch a power over the Biſhops their Subjects; and to obviate it, did command all Biſhops not to ſtir out of their Territories without licence; particularly our own Nation, in the Council at Clarendon, where it was decreed, that they ſhould not go out of the Kingdom without the King's leave.

Philip of France. Bin. Tom. 7. p. 906. (Ann. 1302.)

Decretum eſt——non licere——exire Regnum abſque licentia Regis. Conc. Clarend. vid. Matt. Par. Ann. 1164.

Syn. Sext. Act. 18. p. 272. Κωνσταντῖνος ὁ ἀεισέβαστος, καὶ Σίλβεστρος ὁ ἀοίδιμος τὴν ἐν Νικαίᾳ μεγάλην τε καὶ περίβλεπτον συνέλεγον σύνοδον. —— ἀλλ' ὁ μέγιστος βασιλεὺς Θεοδόσιος, καὶ Δάμασος ὁ ἀδάμας τῆς πίστεως —— Γρηγόριός τε καὶ Νεκτάριος τὴν ἐν ταύτῃ τῇ βασιλίδι πόλει συνήθροιζον σύλλογον. Πάλιν Νεστόριος, καὶ πάλιν Κελεστῖνος, καὶ Κύριλλος, ὁ μὲν γὰρ τὸν Χριστὸν διῄρει, καὶ κατεδίκαζεν, οἱ δὲ τῷ δεσπότῃ συλλαμβανόμενοι σὺν τῷ τῶν σκήπτρων δεσπόζοντι τὸν κλατομέα κατέβαλλον ——

To ſome things above ſaid a paſſage may be objected which occurreth in the acclamation of the Sixth Synod to the Emperor Conſtantine Pogonatus; wherein 'tis ſaid, that Conſtantine and Sylveſter did collect the Synod of Nice, Theodoſius I. and Damaſus (together with Gregory and Nectarius) the Synod of Conſtantinople; Theodoſius II. with Celeſtine and Cyril the Epheſine Synod, and ſo of the reſt: To which I anſwer, that the Fathers mean only for the honour of thoſe Prelates to ſignifie, that they in their places and ways did concur and co-operate to the celebration of thoſe Synods; otherwiſe we might as to matter of Fact and Hiſtory conteſt the accurateneſs of their relation; and 'tis obſervable, that they joyn other great Biſhops then flouriſhing, with the Popes; ſo that if their ſuffrage prove any thing, it proveth more than our Adverſaries would have, viz. that all great Biſhops and Patriarchs have a power or right to convocate Synods.

Ἀναγνωσθέντων τινῶν συνοδικῶν τῶν διαγορευόντων μὴ δεῖν γίνεσθαι ποτὲ σύνοδον οἰκουμενικὴν παρεκτὸς συμφωνίας τῶν λοιπῶν ἁγιωτάτων Πατριάρχων. Anteacta Syn. Nic. II. p. 518.

Οὐκ ἔσχε συνεργὸν τὸν τηνικαῦτα τῶν Ῥωμαίων Πάπαν —— καθὼς νόμος ἐστὶ ταῖς συνόδοις· ἀλλ' οὔτε συμφρονοῦντας αὐτῇ τοὺς Πατριάρχας τῆς ἕω. Syn. 7. Act 6. p. 725.

Διὰ τοῦτο τὰς Πατριαρχικὰς κεφαλὰς ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ ἔθετο τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον, ἵνα τὰ ἐν τῇ Ἐκκλησίᾳ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἀναφυόμενα σκάνδαλα δι' αὐτῶν ἀναρριζῶνται. Syn 8. Act. 1. p. 930.

Ἀπροσωπόληπτος ἡ κρίσις, ὡς οὐκ ἐξ ἑνὸς μόνου θρόνου, ἀλλὰ τῶν τεσσάρων Πατριαρχικῶν γινομένη, Act. 5. p 945.

As for paſſages alledged by our Adverſaries, that no Synod could be called, or Eccleſiaſtical Law enacted, without conſent of the Pope, they are no-wiſe pertinent to this queſtion; for we do not deny that the Pope had a right to ſit in every General Synod; and every other Patriarch at leaſt had no leſs; as all reaſon and practice do ſhew; and as they of the Seventh Synod do ſuppoſe, arguing the Synod of Conſtantinople, which condemned the worſhip of Images, to be no General Council, becauſe it had not the Pope's co-operation, nor the conſent of the Eaſtern Patriarchs. Syncellus the Patriarch of Jeruſalem's Legate in the Eighth Synod, ſays, for this reaſon did the Holy Spirit ſet up Patriarchs in the World, that they might ſuppreſs Scandals ariſing in the Church of God: And Photius is in the ſame Synod told that the judgment paſt againſt him was moſt equal and impartial, as proceeding not from one but all the four Patriarchs.

Seſſ. 39. (p. 1109.) That a General Synod doth not need a Pope to call it, or preſide in it, appeareth by what the Synods of Piſa and Conſtance define, for proviſion in time of Schiſms.

II. It inſeparably doth belong to Sovereigns in the General Aſſemblies of their States to preſide, and moderate affairs; propoſing what they judge fit to be conſulted or debated; ſtopping what ſeemeth unfit to be moved; keeping proceedings within order and rule, and ſteering them to a good iſſue; checking diſorders aud irregularities, which the diſtemper or indiſcretion of any perſons may create in deliberations or diſputes.

Catholici omnes id munus proprium eſſe docent ſummi Pontificis, ut per ſe, vel per Legatos præſideat, & tanquam ſupremus judex omnia moderetur. Bell. de Conc. 119.

This privilege therefore the Pope doth claim; not allowing any General Council to be legitimate, wherein he in perſon, or by his Legates, doth not preſide and ſway. All Catholicks, ſays Bellarmine, teach this to be the chief Pontif's proper Office, that either in perſon or by his Legate he preſide, and as a chief Judge moderate all.

But for this Prerogative no expreſs Grant from God, no ancient Canon of the Church, no certain Cuſtom can be produced.

Nor doth ancient practice favour the Pope's claim to ſuch a Prerogative, it appearing that he did not exerciſe it in the firſt General Synods.

Saint Peter himſelf did not preſide in the Apoſtolical Synod at Jeruſalem, where he was preſent; but rather St. James, as we before have ſhewed. Act. 15.

In all the firſt Synods, convocated by Emperors, they did either themſelves in perſon, or by honourable perſons authorized by them, in effect preſide, governing the proceedings.

In the Synod of Nice, Conſtantine was the chief Manager, Director, and Moderator of the Tranſactions; and under him other chief Biſhops did preſide; but that the Pope's Legates had any conſiderable influence or ſway there, doth by no evidence appear; as we ſhall hereafter out of Hiſtory declare.

Παρεδίδου τὸν λόγον τοῖς προέδροις. Euſeb. 3. 13.

In the Synod of Sardica, (which in deſign was a General Council, but in effect did not prove ſo, being divided by a Schiſm into two great parts) Hoſius Biſhop of Corduba did preſide, (or by reaſon of his age and venerable worth) had the firſt place aſſigned to him, and bore the Office of Proloquutor; ſo the Synod it ſelf doth imply; All we Biſhops (ſay they in their Catholick Epiſtle) meeting together, and eſpecially the moſt ancient Hoſius, who for his age, and for his confeſſion, and for that he hath undergone ſo much pains, is worthy all reverence; ſo Athanaſius expreſly doth call him; The holy Synod (ſaith he) the Proloquutor of which was the great Hoſius, preſently ſent to them, &c. The Canons of the Synod intimate the ſame, wherein he propoſeth matters, and asketh the pleaſure of the Synod; the ſame is confirmed by the ſubſcriptions of their General Epiſtle; wherein he is ſet before Pope Julius himſelf. (Hoſius from Spain, Julius of Rome, by the Presbyters, Archidamus and Philoxenus.) In this all Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtories do agree; none ſpeaking of the Pope's preſiding there by his Legates.

Πάντων ἡμῶν συνελθόντων Ἐπισκόπων, καὶ μάλιστα τοῦ εὐγηροτάτου Ὁσίου, τοῦ καὶ διὰ τὸν χρόνον, καὶ διὰ τὴν ὁμολογίαν, καὶ διὰ τὸ τοσοῦτον κάματον ὑπομεμενηκέναι, πάσης αἰδοῦς ἄξιον τυγχάνοντος, &c. Athan. Apol. 2. p. 761

Εὐθὺς ἡ ἁγία σύνοδος, ἧς προήγορος ἦν ὁ μέγας Ὅσιος, ἔγραψεν αὐτοῖς, &c. Athan. ad Solit 819.

Ἀμέλει Ὅσιος, καὶ Πρωτογένης, οἳ τότε ὑπῆρχον ἄρχοντες τῶν ἀπὸ τῆς δύσεως ἐν Σαρδικῇ συνεληλυθότων. —— Soz. 12. 13.

Τῶν ἐν Σαρδικῇ συνεληλυθότων προστάντας. Theod 2. 15.

Τῶν μὲν Ὅσιος ἐξῆρχε τῆς γνώμης. —— Syn. Chalc. ad Imp. Marc. *p.*468.

Ὅσιος ἀπὸ Σπανίας, Ἰούλιος Ῥώμης διʼ Ἀρχιδάμου, καὶ Φιλοξένου πρεσβυτέρων, &c. apud Athan. *p.*767.

In the Second General Synod at Conſtantinople the Pope had plainly no ſtroke; the Oriental Biſhops alone did there reſolve on matters, being headed by their Patriarchs; (of Alexandria, Antioch, and Jeruſalem,) as Sozomen ſaith; being guided by Nectarius and Saint Gregory Nazianzene, as the Council of Chalcedon in its Epiſtle to the Emperor doth aver.

Baron. An. 553. §. 224.

Ἡγοῦντο. Soz. 7. 7.

Τῶν δὲ Νεκτάριος σὺν Γρηγορίῳ τὴν ἡγεμονίαν ἤγετο. Conc. Chalc. in Epiſt. ad Imp. Marc. (*p.*469)

In the Third General Synod at Epheſus, Cyril Biſhop of Alexandria did preſide; as Pope Leo himſelf doth teſtify; he is called the Head of it, in the Acts.

Prioris Epheſinæ Synodi, cui ſanctæ memoriæ Cyrillus Epiſcopus tunc præſedit. P. Leo I. Ep. 47. Κεφαλὴ τῶν συνειλεγμένων ἁγιωτάτων Ἐπισκόπων Κύριλλος. Relat. Act. Eph. cap 60

We may note, that the Biſhop of the place where the Synod is held, did bear a kind of preſidency in all Synods; ſo did Saint James Biſhop of Jeruſalem in the Firſt Synod, as St. Chryſoſtom noteth; ſo did Protogenes at Sardica, and Nectarius at Conſtantinople, and Memnon in this of Epheſus. Digreſſ.

It is true, that according to the Acts of that Synod, and the reports of divers Hiſtorians, Pope Celeſtine (according to a new politick device of Popes) did authorize Cyril to repreſent his perſon, and act as his Proctor in thoſe affairs; aſſigning to him (as he ſaith) jointly both the authority of his throne (that is, his right of voting) and the order of his place (the firſt place in ſitting;) but it is not conſequent thence, that Cyril upon that ſole account did preſide in the Synod. He thereby had the diſpoſal of one ſo conſiderable ſuffrage, or a legal concurrence of the Pope with him in his actings; He thereby might pretend to the firſt place of ſitting and ſubſcribing (which kind of advantages it appeareth that ſome Biſhops had in Synods by the virtue of the like ſubſtitution in the place of others) but he thence could have no authoritative Preſidency; for that the Pope himſelf could by no delegation impart, having himſelf no title thereto, warranted by any Law, or by any Precedent; that depended on the Emperor's will, or on the Election of the Fathers, or on a tacit regard to perſonal eminence in compariſon to others preſent: This diſtinction Evagrius ſeemeth to intimate, when he ſaith, that the divine Cyril did adminiſter it, and the place of Celeſtine (where a word ſeemeth to have fallen out) and Zonoras more plainly doth expreſs; ſaying, that Cyril Pope of Alexandria did preſide over the Orthodox Fathers, and alſo did hold the place of Celeſtine: and Photius; Cyril did ſupply the ſeat, and the perſon of Celeſtine. If any latter Hiſtorians do confound theſe things, we are not obliged to comply with their ignorance or miſtake.

Συναφθείσης σοι τῆς αὐθεντίας τοῦ ἡμετέρου θρόνου, καὶ τῇ ἡμετέρᾳ τοῦ τόπου διαδοχῇ. Celeſt. ad Cyril. Relat. cap. 16.

N. Yet the Fathers in their Epiſtle to Pope Celeſtine do only take notice of Arcadius, Projectus, and Philippus ſupplying his place. Act. p. 353.

Κυρίλλου τοῦ θεσπεσίου διέποντος καὶ τὸν Κελεστίνου τόπον. Evagr 1. 4.

Προϊσταμένου τῶν Ὀρθοδόξων Πατέρων τοῦ ἐν ἁγίοις Κυρίλλου Πάπα Ἀλεξανδρείας, ἐπέχοντος δὲ καὶ τὸν τόπον Κελεστίνου. Zon. in Syn. Eph. Can. 1.

Τοῦ Ῥώμης Κελεστίνου ἐπλήρου τὴν καθέδραν καὶ πρόσωπον.

Indeed as to Preſidency there we may obſerve, that ſometime it is attributed to Cyril alone, as being the firſt Biſhop preſent, and bearing a great ſway; ſometimes to Pope Celeſtine, as being in repreſentation preſent, and being the firſt Biſhop of the Church in Order; ſometimes to both Cyril and Celeſtine; ſometimes to Cyril and Memnon Biſhop of Epheſus, who as being very active, and having great influence on the proceedings, are ſtyled the Preſidents and Rulers of the Synod. The which ſheweth, that Preſidency was a lax thing, and no peculiarity in right or uſage annexed to the Pope; nor did altogether depend on his grant or repreſentation, to which Memnon had no title.

Ἧς ἡγεῖτο μακάριος Πατὴρ ἡμῶν Κύριλλος. Con. Chalc. Act. 4. p. 302. Συνόδου καθηγητής. Cler. Conſt. in Syn Eph. p. 418. Cui præfuit Cyrillus Syn. Chalc. Act. 1. p 173. Ἧς ἡγεμόνες οἱ ἁγιώτατοι Κελεστῖνος καὶ Κύριλλος. Syn. Chalc. defin. in Act. 5. p. 338. & Act. 4. p. 300.

The Biſhops of Iſauria to the Emperor Leo, ſay, that Cyril was partaker with Pope Celeſtine, &c. Dum B. Celeſtino incolumis Eccleſiæ Romanorum particeps—— Part. 3. Syn. Chalc. p. 522.

Τῆς συνόδου πρόεδροι. Eph. Act. 4. p. 338. (p. 420. & 422.)

Πρόεδροι τῆς Ἐκκλησίας. Act. 5. p. 347.

Ἡμέτεροι πρόεδροι. Relat. Syn. p. 406. Ἔξαρχοι τῆς Συνόδου. Relat. p 411.

The Pope himſelf and his Legates are divers times in the Acts ſaid συνεδρεύειν, to ſit together with the Biſhops; which confidence doth not well comport with his ſpecial right to Preſidency.

Σύνοδος, ἡ συνεδρεύει καὶ ὁ τῆς μεγάλης Ῥώμης ἀρχιεπίσκοπος. Relat. ad Imp. p. 422. Συνεδρευσάντων ἀπὸ τῆς ἑσπέρας, &c. Act. 2. p. 322. Τὸν Ἀποστολικὸν θρόνον συνεδρεύοντα ἡμῖν. Act. 4. p. 340.

Yea it is obſervable that the Oriental Biſhops, which with John of Antioch did oppoſe the Cyrillian Party in that Synod, did charge on Cyril, that he, (as if he lived in a time of Anarchy) did proceed to all irregularity; and that ſnatching to himſelf the Authority, which neither was given him by the Canons, nor by the Emperors Sanctions, did

Ὡς ἐν ἀβασιλεύτοις καιροῖς χωρεῖ πρὸς πᾶσαν παρανομίαν——

Ἁρπάσας ἑαυτῷ τὴν αὐθεντίαν τὴν μήτε παρὰ τῶν Κανόνων αὐτῷ δεδομένην, μήτε ἀπὸ τῶν ὑμετέρων θεσπισμάτων, ὁρμᾷ did ruſh on to all kind of diſorder, and unlawfulneſs; whence it is evident, that in the judgment of thoſe Biſhops, (among whom * were divers worthy and excellent perſons) the Pope had no right to any authoritative Preſidency.

πρὸς πᾶν εἶδος ἀταξίας καὶ παρανομίας. Relat. ad Imper. Act. Eph. p. 380.

* The Biſhops of Syria being then the moſt learned in the World; as John of Antioch doth imply. *p.*377.

This word Preſidency indeed hath an ambiguity, apt to impoſe on thoſe who do not obſerve it; for it may be taken for a privilege of Precedence, or for authority to govern things; the firſt kind of preſidence the Pope without diſpute, when preſent at a Synod, would have had among the Biſhops (as being the Biſhop of the firſt See, as the Sixth Synod calleth him; and the firſt of Prieſts, as Juſtinian called him) and in his abſence his Legates might take up his Chair (for in General Synods each See had its Chair aſſigned to it, according to its order of dignity by cuſtom.) And according to this ſence the Patriarchs, and chief Metropolitans, are alſo often (ſingly or conjunctly) ſaid to preſide: as ſitting in one of the firſt Chairs.

Πρωτόθρονος τῆς Ἐκκλησίας. Syn. 6. p. 285.

Τῶν τε συνθρόνων αὐτῇ μετ' αὐτὴν ἁγιωτάτων Πατριαρχῶν. *Ibid. p.*297.

Πρῶτος ἱερέων. Juſtin Cod. Tit. 1.

But the other kind of Preſidency was (as thoſe Biſhops in their complaint againſt Cyril do imply, and as we ſhall See in practice) diſpoſed by the Emperor, as he ſaw reaſon; although uſually it was conferred on him, who among thoſe preſent, in dignity did preceed the reſt: This is that authority, αὐθεντία, which the Syrian Biſhops complained againſt Cyril for aſſuming to himſelf, without the Emperor's Warrant and whereof we have a notable Inſtance in the next General Synod at Epheſus. For,

In the Second Epheſine Synod, (which in deſign was a General Synod, lawfully convened, for a publick cauſe of determining truth, and ſettling peace in the Church; but which by ſome miſcarriages proved abortive:) although the Pope had his Legates there, yet by the Emperor's order Dioſcorus Biſhop of Alexandria did preſide, We (ſaid Theodoſius in his Epiſtle to him) do alſo commit to thy godlineſs the authority, and the preeminency of all things appertaining to the Synod now aſſembled; and in the Synod of Chalcedon it is ſaid of him, that he had received the authority of all affairs, and of judgment; and Pope Leo I. in this Epiſtle to the Emperor ſaith, that Dioſcorus did challenge to himſelf the principal place; (inſinuating a complaint, that Dioſcorus ſhould be preferred before him, although not openly conteſting his right.)

Καὶ μὲν (συνῆν) καὶ Ἰούλιος Ἐπίσκοπος τόπον πληρῶν Λέοντος, τοῦ τῆς πρεσβυτέρας Ῥώμης Ἐπισκόπου. Evag. 1. 10.

Ἀλλὰ καὶ τὴν ἄλλων πάντων τῶν ἀνηκόντων τῇ νῦν συναθροιζομένῃ συνόδῳ τὴν αὐθεντίαν, καὶ τὰ πρωτεῖα τῇ σῇ θεοσεβείᾳ παρέχομεν. Syn. Chalc. *Act.*1. *p.*59.

Τὴν ἐξουσίαν πάντων εἰληφὼς πραγμάτων καὶ τῆς κρίσεως. Syn. Chalc Act 1. *p.*160.

Ἧς ἔξαρχος καθειστήκει Διόσκορος. Evag. 1. 10.

—Si is qui ſibi locum principalem vindicabat, Sacerdotalem moderationem cuſtodire voluiſſet —— Leo I. *Ep.*25,26, &c.

The Emperor had indeed ſome reaſon not to commit the Preſidency to Pope Leo, becauſe he was looked upon as prejudiced in the cauſe, having declared in favour of Flavianus, againſt Eutyches; whence Eutyches declined his Legate's intereſſing in the judgment of his cauſe, ſaying, they were ſuſpected to him, becauſe they were entertained by Flavianus with great regard. And Dioſcorus, being Biſhop of the next See, was taken for more indifferent, and otherwiſe a perſon (however afterward it proved) of much integrity and moderation; He did (ſaith the Emperor) ſhine by the Grace of God, both in honeſty of life, and orthodoxy of faith; and Theodoret himſelf, before thoſe differences aroſe, doth ſay of him, that he was Ὕποπτοί μοι γεγόνασι, &c. Syn. Chalc. *Act.*1. *p.*80.

—τῇ σῇ ἁγιωσύνῃ ἐκλαμπούσῃ διὰ τὴν τοῦ Θεοῦ χάριν ἔν τε τῇ τοῦ βίου σεμνότητι, καὶ τῇ ὀρθοτάτῃ πίστει. Theod. Ep. ad Dioſc. in Syn. Chalc. Act. 1. *p.*59.

by common fame reported a man adorned with many other kinds of vertue, and that eſpecially he was celebrated for his moderation of mind.

Πολλοῖς μὲν καὶ ἄλλοις εἴδεσιν ἀρετῆς κοσμεῖσθαι τὴν σὴν ἁγιωσύνην ἀκούομεν — οὐχ ἥκιστα δὲ ἅπαντες ᾄδουσι τὸ τοῦ φρονήματος μέτριον. Theod. Ep 60.

It is true, that the Legates of Pope Leo did take in dudgeon this preferment of Dioſcorus; and (if we may give credence to Liberatus) would not ſit down in the Synod, becauſe the preſeſſion was not given to their Holy See; and afterwards in the Synod of Chalcedon the Pope's Legate Paſchaſinus (together with other Biſhops) did complain, that Dioſcorus was preferred before the Biſhop of Conſtantinople; but notwithſtanding thoſe ineffectual mutinies, the Emperor's will did take place, and according thereto Dioſcorus had, (although he did not uſe it ſo wiſely and juſtly as he ſhould) the chief managery of things.

Eccleſiæ Romanæ Diaconi, vices habentes P. Leonis aſſidere non paſſi ſunt, eò quòd non data fuerit præſeſſio ſanctæ Sedi eorum. Liber cap. 12.

Πασχασῖνος εἶπεν — ἤδη ἡμεῖς Θεοῦ θέλοντος Κύριον τὸν Ἀνατόλιον πρῶτον ἔχομεν· οὗτοι πέμπτον ἔταξεν τὸν μακάριον Φλαυιανόν. Syn. Chalc. Act. 1. p. 62.

It is to be obſerved, that to other chief Biſhops the Preſidency in that Synod is alſo aſcribed, by virtue of the Emperor's appointment; Let the moſt reverend Biſhops (ſay the Imperial Commiſſaries in the Synod of Chalcedon) to whom the authoritative management of affairs was by the Royal Sovereignty granted, ſpeak why the Epiſtle of the moſt Holy Archbiſhop Leo was not read: and, You (ſay they again) to whom the power of judging was given; and of Dioſcorus, Juvenalis (Biſhop of Jeruſalem) Thalaſſius (of Cæſarea) Euſebius (of Ancyra) Euſtathius (of Beriſtus) Baſilius (of Seleucia) it is by the ſame Commiſſioners ſaid that they had received the authority, and did govern the Synod which was then; and Elpidius, the Emperor's Agent in the Epheſine Synod it ſelf did expreſly ſtyle them Preſidents; and Pope Leo himſelf calleth them Preſidents and Primates of the Synod.

Οἱ εὐλαβέστατοι Ἐπίσκοποι, οἷς ἡ αὐθεντία τότε τῶν πραττομένων παρὰ τῆς βασιλικῆς ἐδέδοτο κορυφῆς, λεγέτωσαν. —— Syn. Chalc. Act. 1. p. 65.

Ὑμεῖς, οἷς ἡ ἐξουσία τοῦ δικάζειν ἐδέδοτο —— Ibid p 77.

Τοὺς ἐξουσίαν εἰληφότας, καὶ ἐξάρχοντας τῆς τότε συνόδου —— Act 2. p. 202 & Act. 4. p. 288. (Evagr. 2 4 ἔξαρχοι)

Κοινῆς ἁπάντων φωνῆς συνθεμένης τε καὶ εὐφημησάσης τὴν ὑμῶν τῶν προεδρευσάντων ψῆφον —— Ibid. p. 70.

Siquidem penè omnes, qui in conſenſum, Præſidentium aut traducti fuerant, aut coacti. Leo. Ep. 51.

Ibi Primates Synodi nec reſiſtentibus, &c. P. Leo. I. Ep.

Whence it appeareth, that at that time according to common opinion and practice, authoritative Preſidency was not affixed to the Roman Chair.

In the Synod of Chalcedon, Pope Leo did indeed aſſume to himſelf a kind of Preſidency by his Legates; and no wonder that a man of a ſtout and ardent Spirit (impregnated with high conceits of his See, and reſolved with all his might to advance its intereſts, as his Legates themſelves did in effect declare to the world) ſhould do ſo; having ſo favourable a time, by the miſbehaviour of Dioſcorus and his adherents; againſt whom the Clergy of Conſtantinople, and other Fathers of the Synod, being incenſed, were ready to comply with Leo (who had been the Champion and Patron of their Cauſe) in allowing him extraordinary reſpect, and whatever advantages he could pretend to.

In his fratribus — me Synodo veſtræ fraternitas exiſtimet præſidere. P Leo. I. Ep. 47.

Ὧν σὺ μὲν ὡς κεφαλὴ μελῶν ἡγεμόνευες, ἐν τοῖς τὴν σὴν τάξιν ἐπέχουσι. Syn. Chalc. Epiſt. ad Leon p 473.

Act 1. p. 50. & p. 202. Act. 2. p. 211. Yet in effect the Emperor by his Commiſſioners did preſide there; they propounding and allowing matters to be diſcuſſed; moderating debates by their interlocution and driving them to an iſſue; maintaining order and quiet in proceedings; performing thoſe things, which the Pope's Legates at Trent, or otherwhere in the height of his power did undertake.

To them ſupplicatory addreſſes were made for ſuccour and redreſs by perſons needing it; (as for inſtance) Command (ſaid Euſebius of Dorylæum) that my ſupplications may be read.

Κελεύσατε τὰς δεήσεις τὰς ἐμὰς ἀναγνωσθῆναι. Act. 1. p. 50.

Of them leave is requeſted for time to deliberate; Command (ſaith Atticus in behalf of other Biſhops) that reſpite be given, ſo that within a few days, with a calm mind, and undiſturbed reaſon, thoſe things may be formed which ſhall be pleaſing to God and the Holy Fathers.

Κελεύσατε ἐνδοθῆναι ἡμῖν, ὥστε ἐντὸς ὀλίγων ἡμερῶν ἀκυμάντῳ διανοίᾳ καὶ ἀταράχῳ λογισμῷ τὰ τῷ Θεῷ δοκοῦντα καὶ τοῖς ἁγίοις πατέρασι τυπωθῆναι. Act. 1. p. 219.

Accordingly they order the time for conſultation; Let (ſaid they) the hearing be deferred for five days, that in the mean time your Holineſs may meet at the houſe of the moſt Holy Archbiſhop Anatolius, and deliberate in common about the faith, that the doubtful may be inſtructed.

Ὑπερτεθήσεται ἡ ἀκρόασις ἕως ἡμερῶν πέντε, ὥστε ἐν τῷ μεταξὺ συνελθεῖν τὴν ὑμετέραν ἁγιωσύνην εἰς τὸ τοῦ ἁγιωτάτου Ἀρχιεπισκόπου Ἀνατολίου, καὶ κοινῶς περὶ τῆς πίστεως βουλεύσασθαι, ἵνα οἱ ἀμφιβάλλοντες διδαχθῶσι. Act. 4 p. 289.

They were acknowledged Judges; and had thanks given them for the iſſue by perſons concerned; I (ſaid Eunomius Biſhop of Nicomedia) do thank your Honour for your right judgment. And in the cauſe between Stephanus and Baſſianus concerning their title to the Biſhoprick of Epheſus; they having declared their ſenſe, the Holy Synod cryed this is right judgment; Chriſt hath decided the caſe, God judgeth by you: And in the reſult, upon their declaring their opinion; the whole Synod exclaimed, This is a right judgment, this is a pious order.

Εὐχαριστῶ τῇ δικαιοκρισίᾳ τῆς μεγαλοπρεπείας ὑμῶν. Act. 13. p. 420.

Ἡ ἁγία σύνοδος ἐβόησεν, αὕτη δικαία κρίσις. ὁ Χριστὸς ἐδίκασε τῇ ὑποθέσει, ὁ Θεὸς δι' ὑμῶν δικάζει. Act. 12. p. 409.

Πᾶσα ἡ ἁγία σύνοδος ἐβόησεν, αὕτη δικαία κρίσις, οὗτος εὐσεβὴς τύπος. Ibid. p. 414.

When the Biſhops, tranſported with eagerneſs and paſſion, did tumultuouſly clamour, they gravely did check them, ſaying, Theſe vulgar exclamations neither become Biſhops, nor ſhall advantage the parties.

Αἱ ἐκβοήσεις αἱ δημοτικαὶ οὔτε Ἐπισκόποις πρέπουσιν, οὔτε τὰ μέρη ὠφελήσουσιν. Act. 1. p. 55.

In the great conteſt about the privileges of the Conſtantinopolitan See, they did arbitrate and decide the matter, even againſt the ſenſe and endeavours of the Pope's Legates; the whole Synod concurring with them in theſe acclamations; this is a right ſentence, we all ſay theſe things, theſe things pleaſe us all, things are duly ordered; let the things ordered be held.

——κατὰ συνοδικὴν ἐκυρώσαμεν ψῆφον. Syn. Chal. ad Leon. Ep. p. 475.

Οἱ εὐλαβέστατοι Ἐπίσκοποι ἐβόησαν, αὕτη δικαία ψῆφος, ταῦτα πάντες λέγομεν, ταῦτα πᾶσιν ἀρέσκει, πάντα δεόντως ἐτυπώθη, τὰ τυπωθέντα κρατείτω. Act. 16. p. 464.

The Pope's Legates themſelves did avow this authority in them; for, If (ſaid Paſchaſinus, in the caſe of the Egyptian Biſhops) your authority doth command, and ye injoin that ſomewhat of humanity be granted to them, &c.

Εἰ προστάττει ἡ ὑμετέρα ἐξουσία, καὶ κελεύετε τί ποτε αὐτοῖς παρασχεθῆναι φιλανθρωπίας ἐχόμενον—— Act. 4. p. 315.

And in another caſe, If, ſaid the Biſhops, ſupplying the place of the Apoſtolical See, your Honours do command, we have an information to ſuggeſt.

Οἱ εὐλαβέστατοι Ἐπίσκοποι ἐπέχοντες τὸν τόπον τοῦ Ἀποστολικοῦ θρόνου εἶπον· εἰ προστάττει ἡ ὑμετέρα μεγαλειότης, ἔχομεν διδασκαλίαν ὑποβαλεῖν. Act. 16 p. 451.

Neither is the Preſidency of theſe Roman Legates expreſſed in the Conciliar Acts; but they are barely ſaid *συνελθεῖν (to concur) and † συνεδρεύειν (to ſit together) with the other Fathers; and accordingly although they ſometimes talked high, yet it is not obſervable that they did much there; their Preſidency was nothing like that at Trent, and in other like Papal Synods. It may be noted, that the Emperor's Deputies are always named in the firſt place, at the entrance of the Acts, before the Pope's Legates, ſo that they who directed the Notaries were not Popiſh. In effect the Emperor was Preſident, though not as a Judge of Spiritual matters, yet as an Orderer of the Conciliar tranſactions; as the Synod doth report it to Leo; the faithful Emperors (ſaid they) did preſide, (or govern it) for good order ſake.

* Act. 5. Act. 7. Act. 8. p. 366. Act. 9. Act. 11. Act. 13. 14.
† Act. 3. (p. 230.)

Βασιλεῖς γὰρ πρὸς εὐκοσμίαν ἐξῆρχον. Relat. Syn. ad Leon. 473.

In the Fifth General Synod, Pope Vigilius indeed was moved to be preſent, and (in his way) to preſide; but he out of ſtate or policy declined it; wherefore the Patriarch of Conſtantinople was the Eccleſiaſtical Preſident, as in the beginning of every Collation doth appear; whence clearly we may infer that the Pope's Preſidency is no-wiſe neceſſary to the being of a General Council.

Ideò petimus Præſidente nobis veſtrâ beatitudine, ſub tranquillitate, & manſuetudine Sacerdotali, ſanctis propoſitis Evangeliis, communi tractatu, &c. Coll. 1. p. 212. (& in Conſt. Vigil.)

In the Sixth General Synod the Emperor in each Act is expreſly ſaid to preſide, in Perſon or by his Deputies; although P. Agatho had his Legats there.

Προκαθημένου τοῦ εὐσεβεστάτου βασιλέως, Κωνσταντίνου, &c.

In the Synod of Conſtance ſometimes the Cardinal of Cambray ſometimes of Hoſtia did preſide (by order of the Synod it ſelf) and ſometime the King of the Romans did ſupply that place; ſo little eſſential was the Pope's Preſidency to a Council deemed even then, when Papal Authority had mounted to ſo high a pitch.

Dominus Rom. Rex indutus veſtibus Regalibus receſſit de Sede ſua ſolita, & tranſivit ad aliam Sedem poſitam in fronte Altaris, tanquam Præſidens pro tunc in Concilio. Syn. Conſt. Seſſ. 14. (p. 1044)

Nor is there good reaſon why the Pope ſhould have this privilege, or why this Prerogative ſhould be affixed to any one See; ſo that (if there be cauſe; as if the Pope be unfit, or leſs fit; if Princes, or the Church cannot confide in him; if he be ſuſpected of prejudice or partiality: if he be party in cauſes or controverſies to be decided; if he do himſelf need correction) Princes may not aſſign, or the Church with allowance of Princes may not chuſe any other Preſident, more proper in their judgment for that charge; in ſuch caſes the publick welfare of Church and State is to be regarded.

Were an Erroneous Pope (as Vigilius or Honorius) fit to govern a Council, gathered to conſult about defining Truth in the matter of their Error.

Were a Lewd Pope (as Alexander VI. John XII. Paul III. innumerable ſuch, ſcandalouſly vicious) worthy to preſide in a Synod convocated to preſcribe ſtrict Laws of Reformation?

Were a Furious, Pugnacious Pope (as Julius II——) apt to moderate an Aſſembly drawn together for ſettlement of Peace?

Were a Pope engaged in Schiſm (as many have been) a proper Moderator of a Council, deſign'd to ſuppreſs Schiſm?

Were a Gregory VII. or an Innocent IV. or a Boniface VIII. an allowable manager any where of Controverſies about the Papal Authority?

Were now indeed any Pope fit to preſide in any Council wherein the Reformation of the Church is concerned, it being notorious that Popes as ſuch do moſt need Reformation, that they are the great obſtructors of it, that all Chriſtendom hath a long time a Controverſie with them for their detaining it in bondage?

In this and many other caſes we may reject their Preſidency, as implying iniquity; according to the Rule of an old Pope; I would know of them where they would have that judgment they pretend, examin'd, what by themſelves, that the ſame may be Adverſaries, Witneſſes and Judges? to ſuch judgment as this even humane affairs are not to be truſted, much leſs the integrity of the divine Law.

Quæro tamen ab his, judicium quod prætendunt, ubinam poſſit agitari, an apud ipſos, ut iidem ſint inimici, & teſtes, & judices? Sed tali judicio nec humana debent committi negotia, nedum divinæ legis integritas. P. Gel. Ep. 4.

It is not reaſonable that any perſon ſhould have ſuch a Prerogative which would be an engine of miſchief: for thereby (bearing ſway in general Aſſembles of Biſhops) he would be enabled and irreſiſtibly tempted to domineer over the World, to abuſe Princes, and diſturb

States; to oppreſs and enſlave the Church; to obſtruct all Reformation; to enact Laws; to promote and eſtabliſh Errors ſerviceable to his Intereſt; the which effects of ſuch power exerciſed by him in the Synod of Trent, and in divers other of the later General Synods, experience hath declared.

Nic. II. Ludg. Lat. IV. & V.

III. If the Pope were Sovereign of the Church, the Legiſlative power wholly or in part would belong to him; ſo far at leaſt, that no Synod, or Eccleſiaſtical Conſiſtory could without his conſent determine or preſcribe any thing; His approbation would be required to give life and validity to their Decrees; He ſhould at leaſt have a negative, ſo that nothing might paſs againſt his will: This is a moſt eſſential ingredient of Sovereignty; and is therefore claimed by the Pope, who long hath pretended that no Decrees of Synods are valid without his conſent, and confirmation.

But the Decrees made by the Holy Popes, of the chief See of the Roman Church, by whoſe authority and ſanction all Synods and holy Councils are ſtrengthened and eſtabliſhed, why do you ſay, that you do not receive and obſerve them.

Laſtly, as you know nothing is accounted valid or to be receiv'd in univerſal Councils but what the See of Saint Peter has approv'd: ſo on the other ſide whatever ſhe alone has rejected that only is rejected.

We never read of any Synod that was valid, unleſs it were confirm'd by the Apoſtolick Authority.

We truſt no true Chriſtian is now ignorant that no See is above all the reſt more oblig'd to obſerve the Conſtitution of each Council which the conſent of the univerſal Church hath approv'd, than the prime See which by its authority confirms every Synod, and by continued moderating preſerves them according to its principality, &c.

But this pretence, as it hath no ground in the Divine Law, or in any old Canon, or in primitive Cuſtom; ſo it doth croſs the ſentiments and practice of Antiquity; for that in ancient Synods divers things were ordained without the Pope's conſent, divers things againſt his pleaſure.

Decretalia autem, quæ à ſanctis Pontificibus primæ Sedis Romanæ Eccleſiæ ſunt inſtituta, cujus auctoritate atque ſanctione omnes Synodi, & ſancta Concilia roborantur, & ſtabilitatem ſumunt, cur vos non habere, vel obſervare dicitis? Papa Nic. I. Ep. 6. (ad Photium)

Denique ut in univerſalibus Conciliis, quid ratum vel quid prorſus acceptum niſi quod Sedes B. Petri probavit (ut ipſi ſcitis) habetur; ſicut è contrario quod ipſa ſola reprobavit, hoc ſolummodo conſiſtat hactenus reprobatum. P. Nich. I. Ep. 7.

——Nulla unquam Synodus rata legatur, quæ Apoſtolicâ auctoritate non fuerit fulta. P. Pelag. II. Ep. 8. (Diſt. 17.)

Confidimus quòd nullus jam veraciter Chriſtianus ignoret uniuſcujuſque Synodi conſtitutum, quod univerſalis Eccleſiæ probavit aſſenſus, non aliquam magìs exequi Sedem præ cæteris oportere, quàm primam; quæ & unamquamque Synodum ſua auctoritate confirmat, & continuatâ moderatione cuſtodit, pro ſuo ſcilicet principatu, &c. P. Gelaſ. I. Ep. 13. (ad Epiſc. Dard.) vid. p. 647. tract de Anath.

God hath promiſed to bleſs particular Synods. Matt. 18. 19.

What particular or formal confirmation did Saint Peter yield to the Aſſembly at Jeruſalem?

That in ſome of the firſt General Synods he was not apprehended to have any negative voice, is by the very tenour and air of things, or by the little regard expreſſed toward him, ſufficiently clear. There is not in the Synodical Epiſtles of Nice, or of Sardica any mention of his confirmation.

Interpretatively all thoſe Decrees may be ſuppoſed to paſs without his conſent, which do thwart theſe pretences; for if theſe are now good, then of old they were known and admitted for ſuch; and being ſuch we cannot ſuppoſe the Pope willingly to have conſented in derogation to them.

Wherefore the Nicene Canons eſtabliſhing Eccleſiaſtical adminiſtrations without regard to him, and in authority equalling other Metropolitans with him, may be ſuppoſed to paſs without his conſent.

The

Perſuaſioni tuæ in nullo penitus ſuffragatur, quorundam Epiſcoporum ante 60, ut jactas, annos, nunquámque à prædeceſſoribus tuis ad Apoſtolicæ Sedis tranſmiſſa notitiam.——Leo *Ep.*53. (ad Anat.)Conc. Conſtant. Can. 3.

Concil. Chalc. Can. 9, 17,28. Syn. Trull. Can. 36.

The Canons of the Second General Council, and of all others confirming thoſe; as alſo the Canons of all Synods, which advanced the See of Conſtantinople, his Rival for Authority, above its former ſtate, firſt to a proximity in Order, then to an equality of Privileges with the See of Rome, may, as plainly contrary to his intereſt and ſpirit, be ſuppoſed to paſs without his conſent: And ſo divers Popes have affirmed; if we may believe Pope Leo, (as I ſuppoſe) the Canons of the Second Council were not tranſmitted to Rome, they did therefore paſs, and obtain in practice of the Catholick Church, without its conſent or knowledge.

Pope Gregory I. ſaith, that the Roman Church did not admit them, wherein it plainly diſcorded with the Catholick Church, which with all reverence did receive and hold them; and in deſpight to the Canon of that Synod, advancing the Royal City to that eminency, Pope Gelaſius I. would not admit it for ſo much as a Metropolitan See; O proud inſolency, O contentious frowardneſs, O rebellious contumacy againſt the Catholick Church and its peace? (Such was the humour of that See, to allow nothing which did not ſute with the intereſt of its Ambition.

Romana autem Eccleſia eoſdem Canones vel geſta Synodi illius hactenus non habet nec accipit; in hoc autem eandem Synodum accepit quod eſt per eam contra Macedonium definitum. P. Greg.*M Ep.*6. 31.

The ſame Pope Leo I. doth affirm Ep 53.

——ejus civitatis quæ non ſolùm inter Sedes numeratur, ſed nec inter Metropolitanorum jura cenſetur, &c. P. Gelaſ I. Ep. 13 (ad Ep. Dard.)

But farther, divers Synodical Decrees did paſs expreſly againſt the Pope's mind and will: I paſs over thoſe at Tyre, at Antioch, at Ariminum, at Conſtantinople, in divers places of the Eaſt, (the which do yet evince that commonly there was no ſuch Opinion entertain'd of this privilege belonging to the Pope) and ſhall inſtance only in General Synods.

Ἴσα πρεσβεῖα. Πάντα ἡ σύνοδος ἐκύρωσε. (in fine Actorum. p. 464.)

In the Synod of Chalcedon equal privileges were aſſigned to the Biſhop of Conſtantinople, as the Biſhop of Rome had; this with a general concurrence was decreed and ſubſcribed, although the Pope's Legates did earneſtly reſiſt, clamour and proteſt againſt it; The Imperial Commiſſioners, and all the Biſhops not underſtanding, or not allowing the Pope's negative voice.

Inde enim fratres noſtri, ab Apoſtolica Sede directi qui vice meâ Synodo præſidebant, probabiliter atque conſtanter illicitis auſibus obſtiterunt, apertè reclamantes, &c. Leo I.Ep. 53, 54.

Οἱ εὐλαβέςατοι Ἐπίσκοποι ἐβόησαν, οὐδεὶς ἐναγκάσθη. (Act. 16. p. 469. againſt P. Leo's aſſertion, that the conſent was extorted.)

Τὸ ἐκ πολλοῦ κρατῆσαν ἔθος——κατὰ συνοδικὴν ἐκυρώσαμεν ψῆφον, (ſay the Fathers to Pope *Leo p.*475.) By a Synodical vote we have confirmed this ancient Cuſtom.

And whereas Pope Leo (moved with a jealouſie, that he who thus had obtained an equal rank with him, ſhould aſpire to get above him) did fiercely diſpute, exclaim, inveigh, menace againſt this Order, ſtriving to defeat it, pretending to annull it, labouring to depreſs the Biſhop of Conſtantinople from that degree, which both himſelf, and his Legates in the Synod had acknowledged due to him: In which endeavour divers of his Succeſſors did imitate him: Euſebius, Biſhop of Dorylæum, ſaid, I have willingly ſubſcrib'd, becauſe I have read this Canon to the moſt holy Pope of Rome, the Clergy of Conſtantinople being preſent, and he receiv'd it.

*Ep.*53,54, 55,61, 62,

Εὐσέβιος Ἐπίσκοπος Δορυλαίου εἶπεν ἑκὼν ὑπέγραψα· ἐπειδὴ καὶ τὸν Κανόνα τοῦτον τῷ ἁγιωτάτῳ Πάπᾳ ἐν Ῥώμῃ ἐγὼ ἀνέγνων, παρόντων κληρικῶν Κωνσταντινουπόλεως, καὶ ἀπεδέξατο αὐτόν. Syn. Chalc. Act. 16. (*p.*462.) ſupra.

Yet could not he or they accompliſh their deſign; the veneration of that Synod and conſent of Chriſtendom overbearing their oppoſition; the Biſhop of Conſtantinople ſitting in all the ſucceeding General Synods in the ſecond place, without any contraſt; ſo that at length Popes were fain to acquieſce in the Biſhop of Conſtantinople's poſſeſſion of the ſecond place in dignity among the Patriarchs.

In the Fifth General Synod Pope Vigilius did make a Conſtitution, in moſt expreſs terms prohibiting the condemnation of the three Chapters (as they are called) and the anathematization of perſons deceaſed in peace of the Church; We dare not our ſelves, ſays he, condemn Theodorus, neither do we yield to have him condemn'd by any other; and in the ſame Conſtitution he orders and decrees, That nothing be ſaid or done by any to the injury or diſcredit of Theodoret Biſhop of Cyrus, a Man moſt approv'd in the Synod of Chalcedon; and the ſame, ſays he, have the Decrees of the Apoſtolical See determined, that no man paſs a new judgment upon perſons dead, but leave them as death found them. Laſtly by that Conſtitution he ſpecially provides that (as he had before ſaid) nothing might be derogated from perſons dying in the Peace and Communion of the Univerſal Church, by his condemning that perverſe opinion.

Eum (Theodorum) noſtrâ non audemus damnare ſententiâ, ſed nec ab alio quopiam condemnari concedimus. Vig. Conſt. p. 186.

Statuimus atque decernimus nihil injuriam atque obtrectationem probatiſſimi in Chalcedonenſi Synodo viri, hoc eſt Theodoreti Epiſcopi Cyri, ſub taxatione nominis ejus à quoquam fieri vel proferri. Ibid.

Idémque regulariter Apoſtolicæ Sedis definiunt conſtituta, nulli licere noviter aliquid de mortuorum judicare perſonis; ſed in hoc relinqui, in quo unumquemque ſupremus dies invenit. ——

Hac præſentis Conſtitutionis diſpoſitione quàm maximè providemus, nè (ſicut ſuprà diximus) perſonis, quæ in pace & communione univerſalis Eccleſiæ quieverunt, ſub hac damnati à nobis perverſi dogmatis occaſione aliquid derogetur. Ibid.

Yet did the Synod (in ſmart terms reflecting on the Pope, and giving him the lye, not regarding his opinion or authority) decree, that perſons deceaſed were liable to be anathematized; they did anathematize Theodorus, they did expreſly condemn each of the Chapters; they threatned depoſition or excommunication on whoever ſhould oppoſe their Conſtitutions; * they anathematize whoever doth not anathematize Theodorus.

Quoniam autem poſt hæc omnia impietatis illius defenſoris injuriis contra creatorem ſuum dictis glorianteſ dicebant non oportere eum poſt mortem anathematizare—qui hæc dicunt nullam curam Dei judicatorum faciunt, nec Apoſtolicarum pronunciationum, nec paternarum traditionum. Coll. 8. p. 289.

Condemnamus autem & anathematizamus unà cum omnibus aliis hæreticis & Theodorum. Coll. 8. p. 291.

Quod dicitur à quibuſdam quòd in communicatione & pace, defunctus eſt Theodorus, mendacium eſt, & calumnia magis adverſus Eccleſiam. Coll. 5. p. 250.

Si quis conatus fuerit contra hæc quæ piè diſpoſuimus, vel tradere, vel docere, vel ſcribere, ſiquidem Epiſcopus vel Clericus ſit iſte tanquam aliena à Sacerdotibus & ſtatu Eccleſiaſtico faciens, denudabitur Epiſcopatu vel Clericatu: ſi autem Monachus vel Laicus ſit, anathematizabitur. (Coll. 8. p. 293.)

 Si quis defendit—— & non anathematizat eum——anathema ſit. Ibid.*

But Pope Vigilius did refuſe to approve their Doctrine and Sentence; and therefore (which was the caſe of many other Biſhops, * as Baronius himſelf doth confeſs and argue) was driven into baniſhment; wherein he did expire.

—contra ipſius (Pontificis Rom.) decreta ab ea (Synodo) pariter ſententia dicta. Baron. Ann. 553. § 219 Non conſentientes depoſiti in exilium miſſi ſunt. Lib. cap. 24. * Baron. Ann. 553. § 223.

Yet Poſterity hath embraced this Synod as a legitimate and valid General Synod; and the Popes following did profeſs the higheſt reverence thereto, equally with the preceding General Synods: ſo little neceſſary is the Pope's conſent or concurrence to the validity of Synodical definitions.

Greg. Ep. 1. 24. Quintam quoque Synodum pariter veneror, &c. 1. 24.
Pelag. II. Ep.——
Agatho Syn. 6. Act. 4.
Leo. Syn. 6. Act. 18.
Hadrian. ad Nectar.

Upon this Baronius hath an admirable reflexion: Here ſtay (ſaith he) O Reader, and conſider the matter attently (Ay, do ſo I pray) That it is no new thing, that ſome Synod, in which the Pope was not even preſent by his Legates, but did oppoſe it, ſhould yet obtain the title of an Oecumenical Synod; whenas afterward the Pope's will did come in, that it ſhould obtain ſuch a title.

Hic ſiſte, Lector, atque rem attentè conſidera; non eſſe hoc novum, ut aliqua Synodus, cui nec per Legatos ipſe Pontifex interfuerit, ſed adverſatus fuerit, titulum tamen obtinuerit Oecumenicæ, cùm poſtea ut hujuſmodi titulum obtineret, Romani Pontificis voluntas acceſſit. Baron. Ann. 553. § 224.

So in the opinion of this Doctor, the Pope can eaſily change the nature of things, and make that become a General Synod which once was none; yea which, as it was held, did not deſerve the name of any Synod at all. O the Virtue of Papal Magick*!* or rather O the Impudence of Papal Advocates*!*

Si ad numeros omnes, &c. Plenè conſenties ipſam non Oecumenicæ tantùm, ſed nec privatæ Synodi mereri nomen. Id. Ann. 553. § 219.

Can. 2, 7, 13, 36, 55, 58, 67.

The Canons of the Sixth General Council, exhibited by the Trullane (or Quiniſext) Synod clearly and expreſly do condemn ſeveral Doctrines and Practices of Rome; I ask whether the Pope did confirm them? they will to be ſure, as they are concerned to do, anſwer No: and indeed Pope Sergius, as Anaſtaſius in his Life reporteth, did refuſe them; yet did they paſs for legitimate in the whole Church; for in their General Synod (the ſecond Nicene) without contradiction, one of them is alledged (out of the very original Paper, wherein the Fathers had ſubſcribed) as a Canon of the Holy General Sixth Synod; and avowed for ſuch by the Patriarch Taraſius, both in way of argument of defence and of profeſſion in his Synodical Epiſtle to the Patriarchs; (where he ſaith, that together with the divine Doctrines of the Sixth Synod he doth alſo embrace the Canons enacted by it;) of which Epiſtle Pope Adrian in his Anſwer thereto doth recite a part containing thoſe words, and * applaud it for Orthodox; ſignifying no offence at his embracing the Trullane Canons. And all thoſe 102 Canons are again avowed by the Synod in their Antitheſis to the Synod of Conſtantinople. In fine, if we believe Anaſtaſius, Pope John VII. did, being timorous, out of humane frailty direct theſe Canons, without amendment, by two Metropolites, to the Emperor, that is he did admit them ſo as they ſtand.

——in quibus diverſa capitula Romanæ Eccleſiæ contraria ſcripta inerant. Anaſt. in Vit. Joh. VII.

Κανὼν τῆς ἁγίας καὶ οἰκουμενικῆς ἕκτης Συνόδου. Syn. Nic. II. Act. 4. (631.)

Πρωτότυπος χάρτης ἐστὶν, ἐν ᾧ ὑπέγραψαν οἱ πατέρες. Ibid.

Τῆς δὲ αὐτῆς ἁγίας ἕκτης Συνόδου, μετὰ πάντων τῶν ἐνθέσμως καὶ θεωδῶς ἐκφωνηθέντων δογμάτων παρ' αὐτῆς, καὶ τοὺς ἐκδοθέντας Κανόνας ἀποδέχομαι. Act. 3. p. 592.

* Ταύτῃ τῇ μαρτυρίᾳ τῆς ὀρθοδόξου πίστεως, &c. ib. (*p.*363.).

Act. 6. p. 732. (Diſt. 16. cap. 5, &c.)

Sed hic humana fragilitate timidus hos nequaquam tomos emendans per ſuprafatos Metropolitas direxit ad Principem. Anaſt. in Vit. Joh. VII.

But it may be inſtanced that divers Synods have asked the Pope's conſent for ratification of their Decrees and Acts.

So the Fathers of the Second General Synod, having in an Epiſtle to Pope Damaſus and the Weſtern Biſhops, declared what Conſtitutions they had made, in the cloſe ſpeak thus---In which things, being legally and canonically ſettled by us, we do exhort your reverence to acquieſce out of ſpiritual charity and fear of the Lord---

Οἷς ὡς ἐνθέσμως καὶ κανονικῶς παρ' ἡμῖν κεκρατηκόσι καὶ τὴν ὑμετέραν συγχαίρειν παρακαλοῦμεν εὐλάβειαν, τῆς πνευματικῆς μεσιτευούσης ἀγάπης, καὶ τοῦ κυριακοῦ φόβου, &c. Theod 5.9.

So the Synod of Chalcedon did, with much reſpect, ask from Pope Leo the confirmation of its Sanctions. That you may know how that we have done nothing for favour or out of ſpite, but as guided by the divine direction, we have made known to you the force of all that has been done, for your concurrence and for the confirmation and approbation of the things done.

Ἵνα δὲ γνῶτε ὡς οὐδὲν πρὸς χάριν, ἢ πρὸς ἀπέχθειαν πεποιήκαμεν, ἀλλ' ὡς θείῳ κυβερνώμενοι πνεύματι, πᾶσιν ὑμῖν τῶν πεπραγμένων τὴν δύναμιν ἐγνωρείσαμεν εἰς σύστασιν ἡμετέραν, καὶ τῶν πεπραγμένων βεβαίωσίν τε καὶ συγκατάθεσιν. Syn. Chalc. *ad P.*Leon. *I. p.*476.

Of the Fifth Synod Pope Leo II. ſaith, ---that he agreed to what was determin'd in it, and confirms it with the authority of the Bleſſed Saint Peter.

Τοῖς παρ' αὐτῆς ὁρισθεῖσι συναινεῖ, καὶ τῇ αὐθεντίᾳ τοῦ μακαρίου Πέτρου βεβαιοῖ. *P.*Leo.II. Ep. (*p.*306.)

To theſe allegations we reply, That it was indeed the manner of all Synods, (for notification of things, and promulgation of their Orders; for demonſtration and maintenance of concord, for adding weight and authority to their determinations, for engaging all Biſhops to a willing compliance in obſerving them, for atteſtation to the common intereſt of all Biſhops in the Chriſtian Truth, and in the governance and edification of the Church) having framed Decrees concerning the publick State, to demand in faireſt terms the conſent to them of all Catholick Biſhops, who were abſent from them, to be atteſted by their ſubſcription.

So did Conſtantine recommend the Nicene Decrees to all Biſhops, undertaking that they would aſſent to them.

Ἀσμένως δέχεσθε τὴν τοῦ Θεοῦ χάριν καὶ θείαν ὡς ἀληθῶς ἐντολήν— *de Vit.*Conſt.3.20. Καὶ αὐτὸς δὲ τῇ ὑμετέρᾳ ἀγχινοίᾳ ἀρέσαι ὑπεσχόμην. *Ib.*3.19.

So (more expreſly) the Synod of Sardica, in their Epiſtle to all Biſhops of the Catholick Church; Do ye alſo, our Brethren and Fellow-miniſters, the more uſe diligence, as being preſent in ſpirit with our Synod, to yield conſent by your ſubſcription, that concord may be preſerved every where by all the Fellow-miniſters.

Σπουδάσατε δὲ μᾶλλον καὶ ὑμεῖς, ἀδελφοὶ καὶ συλλειτουργοὶ, ὡς τῷ πνεύματι συνόντες τῇ συνόδῳ ἡμῶν συνεπιψηφίζεσθαι δι' ὑπογραφῆς ὑμετέρας, ὑπὲρ τοῦ παρὰ πάντων τῶν πανταχοῦ συλλειτουργῶν τὴν ὁμοφωνίαν διασώζεσθαι. Syn. Sard. Epiſt. apud Athan. in Apol. 2. p. 766.

So did Pope Liberius requeſt of the Emperor Conſtantius, that the faith delivered at Nice might be confirmed by the ſubſcription of all Biſhops.

Ἐζήτει δὲ τὴν μὲν ἐν Νικαίᾳ παραδοθεῖσαν πίστιν ὑπογραφαῖς τῶν πάντων Ἐπισκόπων κρατύνεσθαι. Soz.4.11.

So did Athanaſius procure a Synod at Alexandria to confirm the Decrees at Sardica, and in Paleſtine concerning him.

Σύνοδον γενέσθαι παρεσκεύαζε τῶν ἐξ Αἰγύπτου Ἐπισκόπων, καὶ ἐπισφραγίσαι τοῖς ἐν Σαρδικῇ καὶ Παλαιστίνῃ περὶ αὐτοῦ δεδογμένοις. Soz. 4. 1.

So the Macedonian Biſhops are ſaid to have authorized their Agents to ratifie the faith of Conſubſtantiality.

Ἐντειλάμενοι —— κυρῶσαι τὴν τοῦ ὁμοουσίου πίστιν. Socr. 4. 12.

Many ſuch Inſtances occur in ſtory, by which it may appear, that the Decrees of Synods concerning Faith, or concerning any matters of common intereſt were preſented to all Biſhops, and their conſent requeſted or required; becauſe, ſay the Roman Clergy in St. Cyprian, a decree cannot be firm which has not the conſent of many.

——quoniam nec firmum decretum poteſt eſſe, quod non plurimorum videbitur habere conſenſum. Cler. Rom. apud Cyp. Ep. 31.

Whence it is no wonder, if any Synods did thus proceed toward ſo eminent a Biſhop as was he of Rome, that they ſhould endeavour to give him ſatisfaction; that they ſhould deſire to receive ſatisfaction from him of his conſpiring with them in Faith, of his willingneſs to comply in obſerving good Rules of Diſcipline; that (as every vote had force, ſo) the ſuffrage of one in ſo great dignity and reputation might adjoin ſome regard to their judgment.

Παρακαλοῦμεν τοίνυν τίμησον ταῖς σαῖς ψήφοις τὴν κρίσιν. Syn. Chalc. ad Leon. *p.*476.

The Pope's confirmation of Synods, what was it in effect but a declaration of his approbation and aſſent, the which did confirm by addition of Suffrage; as thoſe who were preſent by their Vote, and thoſe who were abſent by their Subſcription are ſaid to confirm the Decrees of Councils; every ſuch conſent being ſuppoſed to encreaſe the authority; whence the number of Biſhops is ſometimes reckoned according to the ſubſcriptions of Biſhops abſent; as the Council of Sardica, is ſometimes related to conſiſt of three hundred Biſhops, although not two hundred were preſent, the reſt concurring by ſubſcription to its definitions.

Κατὰ τὴν συνοδικὴν ἐκυρώσαμεν ψῆφον— Epiſt. Syn. Chalc. ad Leon. *p.*475.

Socr. 2. 20. & Valeſ. Ann. ibid.

Other Biſhops in yielding their ſuffrage, do expreſs it by I confirm, I define, I decree.

Sententias fratrum omnes ſequimur, omnes confirmamus, omnes obſervandas eſſe decernimus. Conc. Rom. P. Hill p. 579.

But the effectual confirmation of Synods, which gave them the force of Laws, was in other hands, and depended on the Imperial Sanction.

So Juſtinian affirmeth generally: All theſe things at diverſe times following, our above named Predeceſſors of pious memory, corroborated and confirm'd by their Laws what each Council had determin'd, and expell'd thoſe Hereticks who attempted to reſiſt the definitions of the aforeſaid four Councils and diſturb the Churches.

His itaque omnibus per diverſa tempora ſubſecutis, prædicti piæ recordationis noſtri Patres ea quæ in unoquoque Concilio judicata ſunt, legibus ſuis corroboraverunt, & confirmaverunt; & hæreticos qui definitionibus prædictorum S. quatuor Conciliorum reſiſtere, & Eccleſias conturbare conati ſunt, expulerunt. Juſtin. in Conc. V. Coll. 1. (p. 210.)

So particularly Conſtantine (as Athanaſius himſelf reporteth) did by Law confirm the decrees of the great Synod of Nice; and Euſebius aſſureth the ſame, He (ſaith he) did ratifie the decrees of the Synod by his authority; His Letters are extant, which he ſent about the World exhorting and requiring all to conform to the conſtitutions of that Synod.

Τὰ παρ' ἐκείνων γραφέντα, τῶ συνεδρεὶς κοινωνῶν. ἐκράτυνε νόμῳ. Athan. apud Theod. 1. 4.

Τὰ τῆς συνόδου δόγματα κυρῶν ἐπισφραγίζετ. Euſeb. de Vit. Conſt 3. 23.

Ὑποδέχεσθαι καὶ διατάττειν ὀφείλετε. Euſ. ibid. 3. 20.

So Theodoſius did confirm the Decrees of the Second General Synod; adding (ſaith Sozomen) his confirmatory Suffrage to their Decree; the which he did at the ſupplication of the Fathers, addreſſed to him in theſe terms; We therefore do beſeech your Grace, that by your pious Edict the ſentence of the Synod may be authorized; that as by the Letters of convocation you did honour the aſſembly, ſo you would alſo confirm the reſult of things decreed.

Καὶ τὰ μὲν ὧδε τῇ συνόδῳ ἔδοξε, καὶ ὁ βασιλεὺς ἐπεψηφίσατο. Soz. 7. 9.

Δεόμεθα τοίνυν τῆς σῆς ἡμερότητος γράμμασι τῆς σῆς εὐσεβείας ἐπικυρωθῆναι τῆς συνόδου τὴν ψῆφον, ἵν' ὥσπερ τοῖς τῆς κλήσεως γράμμασι τὴν Ἐκκλησίαν τετίμηκας, οὕτω καὶ τῶν δοξάντων ἐπισφραγίσῃς τὸ τέλος. Præf. ad Can. Conc. Conſt. (apud Bin. p. 660.)

The Third General Synod was alſo confirmed by Theodoſius II. as Juſtinian telleth us; The abovenamed Theodoſius of pious memory, maintaining what had been ſo juſtly determined againſt Neſtorius and his impiety made his condemnation valid.

Sed prædictus piæ recordationis Theodoſius vindicans ea, quæ ità rectè contra Neſtorium, & ejus impietatem fuerant judicata, fecit firmiter obtinere contra eum factam condemnationem. Juſtin. in Quinto Conc. Coll. 1.

And this Emperor aſſerted this privilege to himſelf, as of right and cuſtom belonging to him; writing to the Synod in theſe word; for all things, ſo as may pleaſe God, without contentiouſneſs and with truth being examined ought ſo to be eſtabliſhed by our religiouſneſs.

Χρὴ γὰρ πάντα κατὰ τὸ τῷ Θεῷ μέλλον ἀρέσκειν δίχα φιλονεικίας καὶ μετὰ ἀληθείας ἐξετασθέντα οὕτω παρὰ τῆς ἡμετέρας θεοσεβείας βεβαιωθῆναι. Epiſt. Theod. ad Syn. Eph. in Actis Conc. p. 375.

The other abortive Synod at Epheſus was alſo confirmed by Theodoſius Junior, as Dioſcorus in his defence alledged in theſe words, which ſhew the manner of practice in this caſe; We then indeed did judge the things, which were judged; the whole Synod did accord with us, and gave verdict by their own votes, and ſubſcribed; and they were referred to the moſt religious Emperor Theodoſius of happy memory; and he did by a general Law confirm all things judged by the Holy and Oecumenical Synod.

Ἡμεῖς τοίνυν ἐκείνα μὲν τὰ κεκειμένα· συνῄνεσεν ἡμῖν πᾶσα ἡ σύνοδος, καὶ κατέθετο οἰκείαις φωναῖς, καὶ ὑπέγραψε καὶ ἀνηνέχθη τῷ εὐσεβεστάτῳ βασιλεῖ τῆς θείας λήξεως Θεοδοσίῳ καὶ ἐβεβαίωσε πάντα τὰ κεκριμένα παρὰ τῆς ἁγίας καὶ οἰκουμενικῆς συνόδου νόμῳ γενικῷ. Syn. Chalc. Act. 1. p. 59.

So alſo did the Emperor Marcian confirm the Synod of Chalcedon; as himſelf telleth us in his Royal Edict: We (ſaith he) having by the ſacred Edict of our ſerenity confirmed the Holy Synod, did warn all to ceaſe from diſputes about Religion: with which Pope Leo ſignifieth his compliance in theſe terms; But becauſe by all means your piety and moſt religious will muſt be obeyed, I have willingly approv'd the Synodical Conſtitutions about confirming the Catholick Faith and condemning Hereticks, which pleaſed me.

Ἱερῷ τῷ ἡμετέρας ἡμερότητος διατάγματι τὴν ἁγίαν βεβαιώσαντες σύνοδον ὑπεμνήσαμεν ἅπαντας, ὥστε τῶν περὶ θρησκείας παύσασθαι διαλέξεων. Conc. Chalc. Part. 3. 478.

Quia verò omnibus modis obediendum eſt pietati veſtræ, religioſiſſimæque voluntati, Conſtitutionibus Synodalibus, quæ mihi de confirmatione fidei Catholicæ & hæreticorum damnatione placuerunt, libens adjeci ſententiam meam. P. Leo. I. Ep. 59. (ad Mart. Aug.)

Juſtinian did with a witneſs confirm the Fifth Synod, puniſhing with baniſhment all who would not ſubmit to its determinations.

In the Sixth Synod the Fathers did requeſt the Emperor, according to cuſtom, to confirm its definitions, in theſe very words; To what we have determined ſet your Seal, your Royal ratification by writing, and confirmation of them all by your ſacred Edicts and holy Conſtitutions according to cuſtom.

Καὶ τοῖς παρ' ἡμῶν ὁρισθεῖσι σφραγῖδα παράσχου τὴν ὑμῶν ἔγγραφον βασιλικὴν ἐπικύρωσιν, καὶ διὰ θείων ἠδίκτων, καὶ τὴν ἐξ ἔθους εὐσεβῶν διατάξεων τὴν τούτων ἁπάντων βεβαίωσιν. Syn. VI. Act. 18. p. 275.

We beg that by your ſacred ſigning of it you would give force to what we have defined and ſubſcribed.

Αἰτοῦμεν διὰ θείας ὑμῶν ὑποσημειώσεως τὸ κῦρος παρασχέσθαι τῷ παρ' ἡμῶν ἐκφωνηθέντι ἐνυπογράφῳ ὅρῳ. Ibid. p. 283.

We intreat the power of our Lord guided by God's wiſdom to confirm, for the great ſtrength and ſecurity of the Orthodox Faith, the copies of our determination read in the hearing of your moſt ſerene Majeſty, and ſubſcribed by us, that they may be delivered to the five Patriarchal Sees with your pious confirmation.

Αἰτοῦμεν τὸ θεόσοφον τοῦ δεσπότου κράτος πρὸς μείζονα τῆς ὀρθοδόξου πίστεως ἀσφάλειάν τε καὶ βεβαίωσιν ἰσοτύπους ἐναπογράφους ὅρους τοῦ ἀναγνωσθέντος κατὰ παρουσίαν τοῦ γαληνοτάτου ὑμῶν κράτους ὅρου ἐκδοθῆναι τοῖς πέντε Πατριαρχικοῖς θρόνοις κατὰ τῆς εὐσεβοῦς ὑμῶν ὑποσημειώσεως. Ibid. p. 284.

Accordingly he did confirm that Synod by his Edict; All theſe things being thus ordered by this Sixth Holy and Oecumenical Synod; We decree that none whoſoever trouble himſelf farther about this Faith, or advance any new inventions about it.

Τούτων οὕτως ἁπάντων ὑπὸ τῆς ἁγίας ταύτης καὶ οἰκουμενικῆς ἕκτης Συνόδου διατυπωθέντων, Sancimus, ὥστε μηδένα τῶν πάντων ἕτερόν τι περὶ τὴν πίστιν ἐργάσασθαι, ἢ καινότερον δόγματος ἐφεύρεμα μηχανήσασθαι, &c. Ibid. Edict. Conſt. p. 294.

So he told Pope Leo II. in his Epiſtle to him; This divine and venerable determination the Holy Synod has made, to which we alſo have ſubſcribed, and confirmed it by our Religious Edicts, exhorting all our People who have any love for Chriſt, to follow the Faith there written.

Θεῖον δὲ σεβάσμιον ὅρον ἡ ἁγία σύνοδος ἐξεβόησεν, ᾧ καὶ συνυπεγράψαμεν, καὶ δι' εὐσεβῶν ἡμῶν ἠδίκτων τοῦτον ἐπεκυρώσαμεν προτρέψαντες ἅπαντα τὸν φιλόχριστον ἡμῶν λαὸν τῇ ἐν αὐτοῖς ἐγγεγραμμένῃ πίστει συνέπεσθαι, &c. Ibid. p. 298. & p. 302.

Pope Leo tells his name-ſake Leo the Emperor, That he muſt always remember that the Imperial power was given him not only to rule the World, but more eſpecially to protect the Church.

Debes incunctanter advertere Regiam poteſtatem tibi non ſolùm ad mundi Regimen, ſed maximè ad Eccleſiæ præſidium eſſe collatam, &c. Leo M. Ep. 75.

So by long preſcription, commencing with the firſt General Synod, did the Emperor enjoy this Prerogative; and with good reaſon, He having an unqueſtionable warrant and obligation to promote the welfare of the Church, deſigned by thoſe Conventions; He being the Guardian of Concord among his Subjects, and Protector of their Liberties, which might be nearly concerned in Conciliar Proceedings; the power of enacting Laws being an incommunicable branch of Sovereign Majeſty; He alone having power committed to him, able to enforce the obſervance of Decrees, without which they would in effect ſignifie little.

Becauſe alſo commonly the Decrees of Synods did in a manner retrench ſome part of the Royal Prerogative, tranſlating or imparting to others Cauſes before appropriate to his Juriſdiction (as in the caſe of Appeals, and of prohibiting Addreſſes to Court, ordered in the Sardican and other Synods; of exempting Clergymen from ſecular Juriſdiction, from taxes and common burthens, &c.) which ought not to be done without his licence and authority.

Ἀδύνατον γὰρ ὡς ἡγούμεθα δίχα τοῦ ὑμετέρου κράτους εὐτάκτως καὶ ἐνθέσμως τὰ προκείμενα τυπωθῆναι. Rel. Orient. ad imp. Act. Syn. Eph. p. 372.

So that the Oriental Biſhops had good reaſon to tell the Emperor, that it was impoſſible without his authority to order the matters under conſideration with good law and order.

It is no-wiſe reaſonable that any other ſhould have this power, it being inconſiſtent with publick peace that in one State there ſhould be two Legiſlative powers; which might claſh the one with the other, the one enacting Sanctions prejudical to the intereſt and will of the other: wherefore the Pope being then a Citizen of Rome, and a Subject to the Emperor, could not have a Legiſlative power, or a negative vote in Synods, but that wholly did belong to the Imperial authority.

Τῶν ἐν Ἀριμίνῳ ὑπεναντίων τούτοις ἀκύρων ὄντων, ὡς μήτε Ῥωμαίων Ἐπισκόπου, μήτε τῶν ἄλλων συντεθεμένων αὐτοῖς, καὶ ὡς πολλῶν τῶν αὐτόθι συνελθόντων ἀπαρεσθέντων τοῖς τότε παρ' αὐτῶν δεδογμένοις. Soz. 6. 23.

Οὐδὲ γὰρ πρόκριμά τι ἠδυνήθη γενέσθαι ἀπὸ τοῦ ἀριθμοῦ τῶν ἐν Ἀριμίνῳ συναχθέντων, ὁπότε συνέστηκε, μήτε τοῦ Ῥωμαίων Ἐπισκόπου, οὗ πρὸ πάντων ἔδει τὴν γνώμην ἐκδέξασθαι, οὔτε Οὐικεντίου ὃς ἐπὶ τοσούτοις ἔτεσι τὴν Ἐπισκοπὴν ἀσπίλως ἐφύλαξεν, οὔτε τῶν ἄλλων τοῖς τοιούτοις συγκαταθεμένων.—— Theod. 2. 22.

But it is oppoſed, that ſome Synods have been declared invalid for want of the Pope's confirmation; for to the Decrees of the Synod at Ariminum it was excepted, that they were null, becauſe the Biſhop of Rome did not conſent to them: There could not (ſay the Roman Synod in Theodoret) be any prejudice from the number of thoſe aſſembled in Ariminum, it being plain, that neither the Roman Biſhop, whoſe ſuffrage ought firſt to have been received, nor Vicentius, who for ſo many years did hold his Epiſcopacy blameleſs, nor others agreeing to ſuch things. To which exception I anſwer, that

1. That which is alledged againſt the Synod of Ariminum, is not the defect of the Pope's confirmation ſubſequent, but of his conſent and concurrence before it, or in it; * which is very reaſonable, becauſe he had a right to be preſent, and to concur in all ſuch Aſſemblies, eſpecially being ſo eminent a Biſhop.

* P. Liberius being abſent, detained from it by violence in baniſhment.

2. The ſame exception every Biſhop might alledge, all having a like right and common intereſt to Vote in thoſe Aſſemblies.

3. Accordingly the aſſent of other Biſhops, particularly of thoſe eminent in dignity or merit, is alſo alledged in exception; which had been needleſs, if his alone diſſent had been of ſo very peculiar force.

4. The Emperor, and many other Biſhops did not know of any peculiar neceſſity of his confirmation.

Again it may be objected, that Popes have voided the Decrees of General Synods, as did Pope Leo the Decrees of the Synod of Chalcedon, concerning the Privileges of the Conſtantinopolitan See, in theſe blunt words: But the agreements of Biſhops repugnant to the Holy Canons made at Nice, your faith and piety joining with us, we make void, and by the authority of the Bleſſed Apoſtle Saint Peter, by a general determination we diſanul; and in his Epiſtle

Conſenſiones verò Epiſcoporum, Sanctorum Canonum apud Niciam conditorum regulis repugnantes, unitâ nobiſcum veſtræ fidei pietate, in irritum mittimus, & per authoritatem Beati Petri Apoſtoli generali prorſus definitione caſſamus. P. Leo I. Ep. 55. (ad Pulcher. Aug.) to thoſe of that Synod, For however vain conceit may arm it ſelf with extorted compliances, and think its wilfulneſs ſufficiently ſtrengthened with the name of Councils: yet whatever is contrary to the Canons of the above-nam'd fathers will be weak and void. Laſtly in his Epiſtle to Maximus Biſhop of Antioch, he ſays, He has ſuch a reverence for the Nicene Canons, that he will not permit or endure that what thoſe holy fathers have determined be by any novelty violated.

This behaviour of Pope Leo (although applauded and imitated by ſome of his Succeſſors) I doubt not to except againſt in behalf of the Synod, that it was diſorderly, factious and arrogant; (proceeding indeed from ambition and jealouſie) the leading act of high preſumption in this kind, and one of the ſeeds of that exorbitant ambition, which did at length overwhelm the dignity and liberty of the Chriſtian Republick: Yet for ſomewhat qualifying the buſineſs it is obſervable, that he did ground his repugnancy and pretended annulling of that Decree (or of Decrees concerning Diſcipline) not ſo much upon his authority to croſs General Synods, as upon the inviolable firmneſs and everlaſting obligation of the Nicene Canons; the which he (although againſt the reaſon of things, and rules of Government) did preſume no Synod could abrogate or alter. In fine, this oppoſition of his did prove ineffectual by the ſenſe and practice of the Church, maintaining its ground againſt his pretence.

It is an unreaſonable thing, that the opinion or humour of one man (no wiſer or better commonly than others) ſhould be preferred before the common agreement of his brethren, being of the ſame Office and Order with him; ſo that he ſhould be able to overthrow and fruſtrate the reſult of their meetings and conſultations, when it did not ſquare to his conceit or intereſt; eſpecially ſeeing there is not the leaſt appearance of any right he hath to ſuch a Privilege, grounded in Holy Scripture, Tradition or Cuſtom; for ſeeing that Scripture hath not a ſyllable about General Synods, ſeeing that no Rule about them is extant in any of the firſt Fathers till after 300 years, ſeeing there was not one ſuch Council celebrated till after that time, ſeeing in none of the Firſt General Synods any ſuch Canon was framed in favour of that Biſhop, what ground of right could the Pope have to preſcribe unto them, or thwart their proceedings? Far more reaſon there is, (in conformity to all former Rules and Practice) that he ſhould yield to all his Brethren, than that all his Brethren ſhould ſubmit to him: and this we ſee to have been the judgment of the Church, declared by its Practice in the caſes before touched.

IV. It is indeed a proper endowment of an abſolute Sovereignty, immediately and immutably conſtituted by God, with no terms or rules limiting it, that its will declared in way of Precept, Proclamations, concerning the Sanction of Laws, the abrogation of them, the Diſpenſation with them, ſhould be obſerved.

This Privilege therefore in a high ſtrein the Pope challengeth to himſelf; aſſerting to his Decrees and Sentences the force and obligation of Laws; ſo that the body of that Canon Law, whereby he pre-

Quantumlibet enim extortis aſſentationibus ſe inſtruat vanitatis elatio, & appetitus ſuos Conſiliorum æſtimet nomina roborandos, infirmum atque irritum erit, quicquid à prædictorum Patrum Canonibus diſcreparit. Ep. 61. (ad Syn. Chalced.)

Tanta apud me eſt Nicenorum Canonum reverentia, ut ea quæ ſunt à Sanctis Patribus conſtituta nec permiſerim nec patiar aliquâ novitate violari. Leo Ep. 62. (ad Max. Antioch.)

P. Gelas. Ep. 13. (ad Epiſc. Dard.) p. 642. & in Tract. de Anathem. (pag. 647.

P. Pelag. II. Ep. 5. (ad Eliam.) p. 474.—— pretendeth to govern the Church, doth in greateſt part conſiſt of Papal Edicts, or Decretal Epiſtles, imitating the Reſcripts of Emperours, and bearing the ſame force.
Greg. M. Ep.

In Gratian we have theſe Aphoriſms from Popes concerning this their Privilege.

Nulli fas eſt vel velle vel poſſe transgredi Apoſtolicæ Sedis præcepta. P, Greg. IV. Diſt. 19. c. 5.

No perſon ought to have either the will or the power to tranſgreſs the precepts of the Apoſtolick See.

--Quanto potius quæ ipſa (ſedes Apoſtolica) pro Catholica fide, profanis (l. pro ſanis) dogmatibus, pro variis & multifariis Eccleſiæ neceſſitatibus & fidelium moribus diverſo tempore ſcripſit, omni debent honore præferri, & ab omnibus prorſus in quibuſlibet opportunitatibus diſcretione vel diſpenſatione magiſtrâ reverenter aſſumi? P. Nic, I. Epiſt. Diſt. 19. c. 1.

--- Thoſe things which by the Apoſtolick See have at ſeveral times been written for the Catholick faith, for ſound doctrines, for the various and manifold exigency of the Church and the manners of the faithfull, how much rather ought they to be preferr'd in all honour, and by all men altogether, upon all occaſions whatſoever to be reverently received?

Decretales Epiſtolas, quas beatiſſimi Papæ diverſis temporibus ab urbe Roma pro diverſorum Patrum conſultatione dederunt, venerabiliter ſuſcipiendas decernimus. P. Gelaſ. I. (in decreto) lit à Nic. P. Ep. 42. ad Epiſt. Galliæ. Diſt. 19. c. 1.

Thoſe Decretal Epiſtles which moſt holy Popes have at divers times given out from the City of Rome upon their being conſulted with by divers Biſhops, we decree that they be received with veneration.

Si decreta Romanorum Pontificum non habetis, de neglectu atque incuria eſtis arguendi; ſi vero habetis & non obſervatis, de temeritate eſtis corripiendi & increpandi. P. Nic. I. Ep. 6. ad Phot. Diſt. 20. cap. 2.

If ye have not the Decrees of the Biſhops of Rome, ye are to be accuſed of neglect and careleſneſs; but if ye have them, yet obſerve them not; ye are to be chidden and rebuk'd for your temerity.

Sic omnes Apoſtolicæ Sedis Sanctiones accipiendæ ſunt tanquam ipſius Divini Petri voce firmatæ ſunt. P. Agatho. Diſt. 19. c. 2. Vid. Syn. VI. Act. 4, p. 35.

All the Sanctions of the Apoſtolick See are ſo to be underſtood, as if confirmed by the voice of Saint Peter himſelf.

Quia in ſpeculum, & exemplum S. Romana Eccleſia, cui nos Chriſtus præeſſe voluit, propoſita eſt, ab omnibus quicquid ſtatuit, quicquid ordinat, perpetuo & irrefragabiliter obſervandum eſt. P. Steph. (Diſt. 19. cap. 3.) P. Gelaſ. I. Ep. 9. de diſpenſ. (p. 633.)

Becauſe the Roman Church, over which by the will of Chriſt we do preſide, is propoſed for a mirrour and example; whatſoever it doth determine, whatſoever that doth appoint is perpetually and irrefragably to be obſerved by all men.

Qui ſecundum plenitudinem poteſtatis. de jure poſſumus ſupra jus diſpenſare. P. Inn. III. Decret. Greg. Lib. 3. tit. 8. c. 4.

We who according to the plenitude of our power have a right to diſpenſe above Law or right.

Sedes hæc — quod ſingulari etiam auctoritate perficere valet, multorum ſæpe ſacerdotum decernit definire conſenſu. P. Nic. I. Ep. 18. (ad Carolum R.)

This See — that which it might doe by its ſole authority, it is often pleaſed to define by conſent of its Prieſts.

Leo I. Ep. 1. cap. 5. P. Hilarius in Conc. Rom. p. 578. Cauſ. 25. Qu. 1. cap. 4. P. Urb. Cauſ. 25. Qu. 1. cap. 6. P. Anaſ. ad. Imp. Anaſt. P. Siric. Ep. 1. (p. 691.)

But this power he doth aſſume and excerciſe merely upon Uſurpation, and unwarrantably; having no ground for it in original right or ancient practice.

Originally the Church hath no other General Law-giver beſide our one Lord and one Law-giver. Eph 4. 5. Jam. 4. 12.

As to practice we may obſerve

1. Anciently (before the Firſt general Synod) the Church had no other Laws, beſide the Divine Laws; or thoſe * which were derived from the Apoſtles by Traditional cuſtom; or thoſe which each Church did enact for it ſelf in provincial Synods; or which were propagated from one Church to another by imitation and compliance; or which in like manner were framed and ſettled.

* ἀρχαῖα ἔθη. Syn. Conſtantinop. Can. 2.

Whence according to different Traditions, or different reaſons and circumſtances of things, ſeveral Churches did vary in points of Order and Diſcipline.

The Pope then could not impoſe his Traditions, Laws, or Cuſtoms upon any Church; if he did attempt it, he was liable to ſuffer a repulſe; as is notorious in the caſe, when Pope Victor would (although rather as a Doctour than as a Law-giver) have reduced the Churches of Aſia to conform with the Roman in the time of celebrating Eaſter; wherein he found not onely ſtout reſiſtence, but ſharp reproof.

In St. Cyprians time every Biſhop had a free power according to his diſcretion to govern his Church; and it was deemed a Tyrannical enterpriſe for one to preſcribe to another, or to require obedience from his Collegues; as otherwhere by many clear allegations out of that Holy man we have ſhewed. For none of us (ſaith he) makes himſelf a Biſhop of Biſhops, or by a tyrannical terrour compels his Collegues to a neceſſity of obedience; ſince every Biſhop according to the licence of his own liberty and power hath his own freedom, and can no more be judged by another than he himſelf can judge another.

Neque enim quiſquam noſtrûm Epiſcopum ſe eſſe Epiſcoporum conſtituit, aut tyrannico terrore ad obſequendi neceſſitatem Collegas ſuos adigit; quando habeat omnis Epiſcopus pro licentiâ libertatis & poteſtatis ſuæ arbitrium proprium, tàmque judicari ab alio non poſſit, quàm nec ipſe poteſt alterum judicare. Cypr. in Conc. Carthag.

If any new Law were then introduced, or Rule determined for common practiſe, it was done by the general agreement of Biſhops or of a preponderant multitude among them, to whom the reſt out of modeſty and peaceableneſs did yield compliance; according to that ſaying of the Roman Clergy to St. Cyprian (upon occaſion of the debate concerning the manner ot admitting lapſed perſons to communion) that Decree cannot be valid, that hath not the conſent of the major part.

Quoniam nec firmum Decretum poteſt eſſe, quod non plurimorum videbitur habuiſſe conſenſum. Cler. Rom. ad Cypr. (Epiſt. 31.)

The whole validity of ſuch Laws or Rules did indeed wholly ſtand upon preſumption of ſuch conſent; whereby the common liberty and intereſt was ſecured.

2. After that by the Emperours Converſion the Church enjoying ſecular protection and encouragement, did reduce it ſelf as into a cloſer union and freer communication of parts, ſo ento a grtater uniformity of practiſe; eſpecially by means of great Synods, wherein (the Governours and Repreſentatives of all Churches being called unto them and preſumed to concur in them) were ordained Sanctions, taken to oblige all. The Pope had indeed a greater ſtroke than formerly, as having the firſt place in order, or privilege of honour in Eccleſiaſtical Aſſemblies, where he did concur; yet had no caſting vote, or real advantage above others: all things paſſing by majority of Vote: This is ſuppoſed as notorious in the acts of the Fifth Council: This (ſay they) is a thing to be granted, that in Councils we muſt not regard the interlocution of one or two, but thoſe things which are commonly defined by all, or by the moſt

Idem enim omnes credimur operati, in quo deprehendimur eâdem omnes cenſuræ & diſciplinæ conſentione ſociati. Cler. Rom. ad Cypr. Ep. 31.

Πρωτεῖα τιμῆς.

Illo certè conſtituto, quòd in conciliis non unius vel ſecundi interlocutionem attendere oportet, ſed hæc quæ communiter ab omnibus vel amplioribus definiuntur. Concil. 5. Collat. 6. p. 263.

So alſo in the Fifth Council, George Biſhop of Conſtantinople ſaith, that ſeeing every where the Council of the multitnde, or of the moſt doth prevail, it is neceſſary to anathematize the perſons before mentioned.

Ἐπειδὴ τοῦ πλήθους ἤτοι τῶν πλειόνων πανταχοῦ ἡ βουλὴ κρατεῖ, ἀναγκαῖόν ἐστιν ὀνομαστὶ τὰ λεχθέντα πρόσωπα ἀναθηματισθῆναι. VI. Syn. Act. 16. p. 249.

3. Metropolitan Biſhops in their Provinces had far more power, and more ſurely grounded, than the Pope had in the whole Church (for the Metropolitans had an unqueſtioned authority, ſettled by cuſtome, tome, and confirmed by Synodical Decrees) yet had not they a negative voice in Synodical debates: for it is decreed in the Nicene Synod, that in the deſignation of Biſhops (which was the principal affair in Eccleſiaſtical adminiſtrations) plurality of votes ſhould prevail.

Κρατείτω ἡ τῶν πλειόνων ψῆφος. Conc. Nic. Can 6.

It is indeed there ſaid, that none ſhould be ordained χωρὶς γνώμης, without the opinion of the Metropolitan; but that doth not import a negative voice in him, but that the tranſaction ſhould not paſs in his abſence, or without his knowledge, advice and ſuffrage: for ſo the Apoſtolical Canon (to which the Nicene Fathers there did allude and refer, meaning to interpret it) doth appoint that the Metropolitan ſhould doe nothing ἄνευ τῆς πάντων γνώμης, without the opinion of all, that is without ſuffrage of the moſt, concluding all; (for ſurely that Canon doth not give to each one a negative voice) And ſo the Synod of Antioch (held ſoon after that of Nice, which therefore knew beſt the ſenſe of the Nicene Fathers, and how the cuſtome went) doth intetpret it, decreeing, that a Biſhop ſhould not be ordained without a Synod, and the preſence of the Metropolitan of the Province; in which Synod yet they determine, that plurality of votes ſhould carry it; no peculiar advantage in the caſe being granted to the Metropolitan.

Κατὰ κανόνα ἐκκλησιαστικὸν, ἀλλὰ μηδὲ ἐκεῖνος ἄνευ τῆς τῶν πάντων γνώμης ποιείτω τι. Apoſt. Can. 34.

Ἐπίσκοπον μὴ χειροτονεῖσθαι δίχα συνόδου, καὶ παρουσίας τοῦ ἐν τῇ Μητροπόλει τῆς ἐπαρχίας. Syn. Ant. Can. 19.

—— κρατεῖν τὴν τῶν πλειόνων ψῆφον. ibid.

Κρατείτω ἡ τῶν πλειόνων ψῆφος. Syn. Nic. Can. 6.

Seeing therefore Provincial Synods were more ancient than General, and gave pattern to them; if we did grant the ſame Privilege to the Pope in General Synods, as the Metropolitans had in Provincial (which yet we cannot doe with any good reaſon or ground) yet could not the Pope thence pretend to an authority of making Laws by himſelf.

4. It was then a paſſable opinion, that He as one was in reaſon obliged to yield to the common judgment of his Collegues and Brethren; as the Emperour Conſtantius told Pope Liberius, that the vote of the plurality of Biſhops ought to prevail.

Τῶν γὰρ πλειόνων Ἐπισκόπων ἡ ψῆφος ἰσχύειν ὀφείλει. Theod. 2. 16.

5. When Pope Julius did ſeem to croſs a rule of the Church, by communicating with perſons condemned by Synods, the Fathers of Antioch did ſmartly recriminate againſt him, ſhewing that were not to receive Canons from him.

Γνώμη κοινῇ συνθέντες ἐπιστολὴν ἀντεγκαλοῦσι τῷ Ἰουλίῳ, δηλοῦντες μὴ δεῖν κανονίζεσθαι πρὸς αὐτοῦ. Socr. 2. 15.

6. So far was the Pope from preſcribing Laws to others, that he was looked upon as ſubject to the Laws of the Church no leſs than others; as the Antiochene Fathers did ſuppoſe, complaining to Pope Julius of his tranſgreſſing the Canons; the which charge he doth not repell by pretending exemption, but by declaring that he had not offended againſt the Canons, and retorting the accuſation againſt themſelves; as the African Eathers ſuppoſed, when they told Pope Celeſtine, that he could not admit perſons to communion, which had been excommunicated by them, that being contrary to a Decree of the Nicene Synod; as the Roman Church ſuppoſed it ſelf, when it told Marcian that they could not receive him without leave of his Father who

Ὑμεῖς ὡς παρὰ κανόνας πράξαντας ἡμᾶς ἐμέμψασθε —— P. Julii Epiſt. apud Athanaſ. in Apol. 2. p. 748.

Τίνες εἰσὶν οἱ παρὰ κανόνας πράξαντες, ἡμεῖς, &c. p. 748.

Μὴ δὲ τοὺς παρ' ἡμῶν ἀποκοινωνήτους, &c. Epiſt. ad P. Celeſt. I.

Οὐ δυνάμεθα ἄνευ τῆς ἐπιτροπῆς τοῦ τιμίου Πατρὸς σου τοῦτο ποιῆσαι. Epiph. Hær. 42.

who had rejected him. This the whole tenour of Eccleſiaſtical Canons ſheweth, they running in a general ſtyle, never excepting the Pope from the Laws preſcribed to other Biſhops.

7. The privilege of diſpenſing with Laws had then been a ſtrange hearing, when the Pope could in no caſe diſpenſe with himſelf for infringing them, without bringing clamour and cenſure upon him.

It was then a Maxim becoming the mouth of a Pope, Univerſæ pacis tranquillitas non aliter poterit cuſtodiri, niſi ſua Canonibus reverentia intemerata ſervetur. P. Leo I. Ep. 62.

The Tranquility of an univerſal peace cannot otherwiſe be kept, unleſs due reverence be paid to the Canons.

8. It had indeed been a vain thing for Synods with ſo much trouble and ſolemnity to aſſemble, if the Pope without them could have framed Laws, or could with a puff of his mouth have blown away the reſults of them by diſpenſation.

9. Even in the growth of Papal Dominion, and after that the Seeds of Roman ambition had ſprouted forth to a great bulk, yet had not Popes the heart or face openly to challenge power over the univerſal Canons, or exemption from them; but pretended to be the chief obſervers, guardians, defenders, and executors of them; or of the Rights and Privileges of Churches eſtabliſhed by them; for while any footſteps of ancient liberty, ſimplicity and integrity did remain, a claim of paramount or lawleſs Authority would have been very ridiculous and very odious. Pope Zoſimus I. denieth that he could alter the Privileges of Churches.

P. Hil. Ep. 2. N. B. P. Innoc I. Ep. 2. 12. P. Hil. Ep. 4. P. Gelaſ. I Ep. 9. p. 634. Ep 13. p. 639. De Anathem. p. 645.

P. Zoſ. I. Ep. 7. (ad Epiſc. Vienn. & Narb.)

Cauſ. 25. Qu. 1. cap. 7.

10. If they did talk more highly, requiring obſervance to their Conſtitutions, it was either in their own precinct, or in the Provinces where they had a more immediate juriſdiction, or in ſome corners of the Weſt, where they had obtained more ſway; and in ſome caſes; wherein their words were backed with other inducements to obedience; for the Popes were commonly wiſe in their generations, accommodating their diſcourſe to the ſtate of times and places.

P. Siric. Ep. 1. Leo M. Ep. 1. cap 5. P. Gelaſ. Ep 9.

11. It is alſo to be obſerved, that often the Popes are ſuppoſed to ſpeak and conſtitute things by their own authority, which indeed were done by Synods, conſiſting of Weſtern Biſhops more cloſely adhering to that See, in regard to thoſe Regions; the Decrees of which Synods were binding in thoſe places, not ſo much by virtue of Papal authority, as proceeding from the conſent of their own Biſhops: how ready ſoever he were to aſſume all to himſelf, pretending thoſe Decrees as precepts of the Apoſtolical See.

P. Siric. Ep. 4.

Ἅπασα κατὰ τὴν δύσιν σύνοδος. Conc. Eph. p. 332.

Σύνοδοι ἀνήκουσαι τῇ συνόδῳ Ἀποστολικοῦ θρόνου. Syn. VI. Act. 4. p. 60.

N. The Pope did in thoſe Councils ask the *Placets. P.*Hil.in Conc.R.(p. 578.)

Whence all the Acts of modern Popes are invalid, and do not oblige, ſeeing they do not act in Synod; but onely of their own Head, or with the advice of a few Partizans about them, men linked in common intereſt with them to domineer over the Church.

12. Yet even in the Weſtern Countries, in later times, their Decrees have been conteſted, when they did ſeem plainly to claſh with the old Canons, or much to derogate from the Liberties of Churches; nor have there wanted learned Perſons in moſt times, who ſo far as they durſt, have expreſſed their diſlike of this Uſurpation.

Licèt namque Pontifex Romanæ Eccleſiæ ob dignitatem Apoſtolicæ Sedis cæteris in orbe conſtitutis reverentior habeatur, non tamen ei licet tranſgredi in aliquo Canonici moderaminis tenorem, ſicut enim unuſquiſque Oothodoxæ Eccleſiæ Pontifex ac Sponſus propriæ Sedis uniformiter ſpeciem gerit Salvatoris, ità generaliter nulli convenit quippiam in alterius procaciter patrare Epiſcopi Diæceſi. Glab. Rod. 2. 4. Vid. Baron. Ann. 996. ſect. 22. 23.

For although the Biſhop of Rome be more venerable than the reſt that are in the world, upon account of the dignity of the Apoſtolical See, yet it is not lawfull for him in any caſe to tranſgreſs the order of Canonical governance; for as every Biſhop who is of the Orthodox Church, and the Spouſe of his own See, doth intirely repreſent the Perſon of our Saviour; ſo generally or Biſhop ought pragmatically to act any thing in anothers Dioceſe.

Circa Ann. 860.

Noli quia Decreta ipſorum non ſuſceperis ampliùs aſſeverare, cùm ipſi nihil niſi quod Naturalis, quod Moſaica, necnon & Gratiæ Lex juſſit, inſtituant. P. Nic. I. Ep. 11. (ad Phot.)

Decretalia autem, quæ à Sanctis Pontificibus Primæ Sedis Romanæ Eccleſiæ ſunt inſtitua,— cur vos non habere vel obeſervare dicitis? Id Ep. 6. (ad Phot.)

13. In the times of Pope Nicolas I. the Greeks did not admit the Roman Decrees; ſo that Pope in an Epiſtle to Photius complains that he did not receive the Decrees of the Popes whenas yet they ordained nothing but what the natural, what the Moſaical, and what the Law of Grace required. And in another Epiſtle he expoſtulates with him for ſaying that they neither had nor did obſerve the Decrees made by the Holy Popes of the Prime See of the Roman Church.

Vid. Hinom.

Quanquam quidam veſtrum ſcripſerint haud illa decretalia priſcorum Pontificum in toto codicis Canonum corpore contineri deſcripta, &c. P. Nic. I. Ep. 42. (ad Galliæ Epiſc.)

14. That which greatly did advance the Papal Juriſdiction, and introduced his Uſurpation of obtruding new Decrees on the Church, was the venting of the forged Decretal Epiſtles under the name of Old Popes; which when the Pope did alledge for authorizing his practices, the French Biſhops, endeavouring to aſſert their Privilege, did alledge that they were not contained in the whole body of their Canons.

15. The power of enacting and diſpenſing with Eccleſiaſtical Laws touching exteriour Diſcipline did of old belong to the Emperour. And it was reaſonable that it ſhould; becauſe old Laws might not conveniently ſute with the preſent ſtate of things and the publick welfare; becauſe new Laws might conduce to the good of Church and State, the care of which is incumbent on him; becauſe the Prince is bound to uſe his power and authority to promote God's Service, the beſt way of doing which may be by framing Orders conducible thereto.

Accordingly the Emperours did enact divers Laws concerning Eccleſiaſtical matters, which we ſee extant in the Codes of Theodoſius and Juſtinian.

Hæc — Domino Imperatori præſentanda decrevimus, poſcentes ejus clementiam ut ſiquid hîc minus eſt, ejus prudentiâ ſuppleatur, ſi quid ſecus quàm ſe ratio habet, ejus judicio emendetur; ſi quid rationabiliter taxatum eſt, ejus adjutorio divinâ opitulante clementiâ perficiatur. Conc. Arel. 4. c. 26. Ann. 813. (ſub Carolo M.)

Theſe things (ſaith the Council of Arles) we have decreed to be preſented to our Lord the Emperour, deſiring his clemency that if any thing be defective it may be ſupplied by his prudence, if any thing be unreaſonable it may be corrected by his judgment, if any thing be reaſonably ordered it may by his help, the Divine Grace aſſiſting, be perfected.

P. Greg. I. Ep. 11. 56.

We may obſerve that Popes did allow the validity of Imperial Laws. Pope Gregory I. doth alledge divers Laws of divers Emperours concerning Eccleſiaſtical affairs as authentick and obligatory Rules of practice.

16. Divers Churches had particular rights of independency upon all power without themſelves.

Such as the Church of Cyprus in the Epheſine Synod did claim and obtain the confirmation of.

Such was the ancient Church of Britain, before Auſtin came into England.

The Welſh Biſhops are conſecrated by the Biſhop of St. D*avids, and he himſelf in like manner is ordained by others who are as it were his Suffragans, profeſſing no manner of ſubjection to any other Church.*

Epiſcopi Walliæ à Menevenſi Antiſtite ſunt conſecrati, & ipſe ſimiliter ab aliis tanquam ſuffraganeis eſt conſtitutus, nullâ penitus alii Eccleſiæ factâ profeſſione vel ſubjectione. Girald. Cambr. Itin. 2. 1.

V. Sovereign power, immediately by it ſelf when it pleaſeth, doth excercise all parts of Juriſdiction, ſetting it ſelf in the Tribunal; or mediately doth execute it by others, as its Officers or Commiſſioners.

Wherefore now the Pope doth claim and exerciſe Univerſal Juriſdiction over all the Clergy; requiring of them engagements of ſtrict ſubmiſſion and obedience to him; demanding that all cauſes of weight be referred to him; citing them to his bar, examining and deciding their cauſes; condemning, ſuſpending, depoſing, cenſuring them, or acquitting, abſolving, reſtoring them, as he ſeeth cauſe, or findeth in his heart; He doth encourage people to accuſe their paſtours to him, in caſe any doth infringe his Laws and Orders.

Bel. 2. 18. 26.

Per hoc illam de tota Eccleſia judicare. - P. Gelaſ. 1. Ep 4.

Cunctos ipſe judicaturus à nemine eſt judicandus. Diſt. 40. cap. 6.

Cauſ. 2. qu. 7. cap. 45. &c.

Sacra ſtatuta & veneranda decreta Epiſcoporum cauſas, utpote majora negotia noſtræ definiendas cenſuræ mandârunt. P. Nic, 1. Ep 38.

But (in general) that originally or anciently the Pope had no ſuch right appropriate to him may appear by arguments, by croſs inſtances, by the inſufficiency of all pleas, and examples alledged in favour of this claim. For,

1. Originally there was not at all among Chriſtians any juriſdiction like to that which is exerciſed in Civil Governments, and which now the papal Court doth execute. For this our Saviour did prohibit, and Saint Peter forbad the Presbyters κατακυριεύειν τῶν κλήρων. And St. Chryſoſtome affirmeth the Epiſcopal power not to be αὐθεντία, or ἀρχή. And Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory doth inform us, that ſuch a Juriſdiction was lately introduced in the Church, as by other great Biſhops, ſo eſpecially by the Biſhop of Rome: For (ſaith Socrates) from that time the Epiſcopacy of Alexandria, beyond the Sacerdotal Order did aſſume a domineering power in affairs.

1. Pet. 5.

Chryſ. in 1 Tim. 3. 1. in Eph. Orat. 11
Hier. Ep. 3 & Ep. 62.
Iſid. Peluſ. Ep. 20. 125. 4. 219.

Καὶ γὰρ ἐκ ἐκείνου ἡ Ἐπισκοπὴ Ἀλεξανδρείας πέρα τῆς ἱερατικῆς τάξεως καταδυναστεύειν τῶν πραγμάτων ἔλαβε τὴν ἀρχήν. Socr. 7. 7.

The which kind of power the Roman Biſhops had long before aſſumed; for, (ſaith he) the Epiſcopacy of Rome, in like manner as that of Alexandria, had already a great while agoe gone before in a domineering power beyond that of the Prieſthood.

— τῆς Ῥωμαίων Ἐπισκοπῆς ὁμοίως τῇ Ἀλεξανδρέων πέρα τῆς ἱερωσύνης ἐπὶ δυναστείαν ἤδη πάλαι προελθούσης. Socr. 7. 11.

At firſt the Epiſcopal power did onely conſiſt in Paternal admonition, and correption of offenders, exhorting and perſuading them to amendment; and in caſe they contumaciouſly did perſiſt in diſorderly behaviour, bringing them before the Congregation, and the cauſe being there heard and proved, with its conſent impoſing ſuch penance or correction on them as ſeemed needful for the publick good, or their particular benefit; All things (ſaith St. Cyprian) ſhall be examined you being preſent and judging. And (elſewhere) according to your divine ſuffrages; according to your pleaſure.

1 Cor. 5. 4, 12. —— 2 Cor 2. 6. —
Examinabuntur ſingulæ præſentibus, & judicantibus vobis. Cypr. Ep. 12. (fratribus in plebe.) Secundùm veſtra divina ſuffragia. Cypr. Ep. 40.

Secundùm arbitrium quoque veſtrum. Ibid. (Ep. 46.)

Tertul. Apol. 39. ibidem. ——

2. Originally no one Biſhop had any Juriſdiction over another, or authority to judge his actions; as St. Cyprian (who well knew the current judgment and practice of his age) in many places doth affirm: who particularly doth reflect on the Roman Biſhop, for preſuming to cenſure his brethren, who diſſented from him: Let us all (ſaith he) expect the judgment of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who only hath power to prefer us to the government of his Church and to judge of what we doe.

Expectemus univerſi judicium Domini noſtri Jeſu Chriſti, qui unus & ſolus habet poteſtatem & præponendi nos in Eccleſiam ſuam gubernatione & de actu noſtro judicandi. Cypr. in Conc. Carth.

3. Even the community of Biſhops did not otherwiſe take notice of, or intermeddle with the proceedings of any Biſhop in his precinct and charge; except when his demeanour did concern the general ſtate of the Church, intrenching upon the common faith, or publick order and peace.

In other caſes for one or more Biſhops to meddle with the proceedings of their brother, was taken for an ἀλλοτριοεπισκοπία, a pragmatical intruſion upon anothers buſineſs; and an invaſion of that Liberty which did belong to each Biſhop, by the grant of our Lord, and the nature of his Office.

As by thoſe paſſages of St Cyprian, and the declaration of the Synod with him doth appear.

4. In caſes needing deciſion for the publick good of the Church, the Law and Cuſtom of the Church, confirmed by the Nicene Synod, did order, that juriſdiction ſhould be exerciſed, and all cauſes finally determined in each Province; ſo that no regard is had to the Pope, no exception in favour of him being expreſſed or implyed.

Can. 5.

The which Conſtitution, if we believe Pope Leo himſelf, cannot in any caſe by any power be revoked or infringed.

In venerabilis Concilii Niceni contumelia ſæpe verſatus, alienarum tibi provinciarum jura temerariè rapuiſti. P. Felix Acacio. apud Baron. Ann. 484 ſect. 17.

That is moſt expreſly confirmed by the Synod of Antioch, in the Code of the Univerſal Church, If any Biſhop accuſed of certain crimes ſhall be condemned by all the Biſhops in the province, and all ſhall unanimouſly vote againſt him, he ſhall not be judged again by others; but the unanimous ſentence of the Biſhops of the Province ſhall remain valid.

Εἴ τις Ἐπίσκοπος ἐπί τισιν ἐγκλήμασι κατηγορηθεὶς κριθείη ὑπὸ πάντων τῶν ἐν τῇ ἐπαρχίᾳ Ἐπισκόπων, πάντες τε σύμφωνοι μίαν κατ' αὐτοῦ ἐξενέγκοιεν ψῆφον, τοῦτον μηκέτι παρ' ἑτέροις δικάζεσθαι· ἀλλὰ μένειν βεβαίαν τὴν σύμφωνον τῶν ἐπὶ τῆς ἐπαρχίας Ἐπισκόπων ἀπόφασιν. Syn. Ant. Ca. 16.

Here is no conſideration or exception from the Pope.

5. Accordingly in practice, Synods without regard or recourſe to the Pope, did judge Biſhops upon offences charged againſt them.

6. The execution of thoſe judgments was entruſted to Metropolitan Biſhops; or had effect by the peoples conſent; for it being declared that any Biſhop had incurred condemnation, the people did preſently deſert him.

Every Biſhop was obliged to confer his part to the execution; as Pope Gelaſius affirmeth.

Quod non ſolùm præſuli Apoſtolico facere licet, ſed cuicunque Pontifici, ut quoſlibet & quemlibet locum, ſecundum regulam hæreſeos ipſius ante damnatæ, à Catholica communione diſcernant. P. Gelaſ. I. Ep. 4.

7. If the Pope had ſuch judicial power, ſeeing there were from the beginning ſo many occaſions of exerciſing it, there would have been extant in Hiſtory many clear inſtances of it, but few can be alledged; and thoſe (as we ſhall ſee) impertinent, or inſufficient.

8. Divers Synods (great and ſmaller) did make Sanctions contrary to this pretence of the Pope; appointing the deciſion of Cauſes to be terminated in each Dioceſe; and prohibiting appeals to him; which they would not have done if the Pope had originally, or according to common law and cuſtom, a ſupreme judicial power.

9. The moſt favourable of ancient Synods to Papal intereſt, that of Sardica, did confer ~~on~~ the Pope a power, qualified in matter and manner, of cauſing Epiſcopal cauſes to be reviſed; which ſheweth that before he had no right in ſuch caſes; nor then had an abſolute power.

10. The Pope's power of judging Biſhops hath been of old diſclaimed as an illegal and upſtart encroachment.

When the Pope firſt nibbled at this bait of ambition, St. Cyprian and his Biſhops did reprehend him for it.

The Biſhop of Conſtantinople denied that Pope Gelaſius alone might condemn him; according to the Canons—— The Pope ranteth at it, and reaſoneth againſt it; but hath no material argument or example for it, (concerning the Papal authority peculiarly) beſide the Sardican Canon.

Euphemium verò miror, ſi ignorantiam ſuam ipſe non perſpicit, qui dicit Acacium ab uno non poſſe damnari—— P. Gelaſ. I. Ep. 4.

Nobis opponunt Canones—— Ib.

11. The Popes themſelves have been judged for Miſdemeanour, Hereſie, Schiſm; as hereafter we ſhall ſhew.

12. The Popes did execute ſome judgments, onely by a right common to all Biſhops; as Executours of Synodical Decrees.

Quod non ſolùm præſuli Apoſtolico facere licet, &c. P. Gelaſ. I. Ep. 4. (ſupr. in arg. 6) Vid. Epiſt. 13.

13. Other Biſhops did pretend to judicature, by Privilege: as Juvenalis Biſhop of Jeruſalem did pretend that to him did belong the judgment of the Biſhop of Antioch.

Ἐχλῶ Ἰουβε-νάλιν—— πρ.

Ἀποστῆναι τῷ τῆς Ἱεροσολύμων ἁγίας τοῦ Θεοῦ Ἐκκλησίας ὑπαχθῆναι, καὶ τιμῆσαι παρ' ᾧ μάλιστα ἔθος αὐτὸν τὸν Ἀντιοχέων θρόνον ἐξ ἀποστολικῆς ἀκολουθίας καὶ παραδόσεως ἰθύνεσθαι, καὶ παρ' αὐτῷ δικάζεσθαι. Syn. Eph. Act. 4. (p. 040.)

14. The Popes were ſubject to the Emperours; who when they pleaſed did interpoſe to direct or qualifie all juriſdiction; commanding the Popes themſelves—— wherefore the Popes were not judges Sovereign, but ſubordinate.

Juſtin. Nov. 123. cap. 3. Jubemus Epiſc. Rom.

Pope Gregory I. did refer the great Queſtion about the title of Oecumenical Biſhop to the judgment of the Emperour Mauricius, ——ut poſſimus Dominus Mauritius ipſum illud negotium judicare dignaretur. Greg. Ep. 4. 22.

Theſe things will more fully appear in the diſcuſſion of the particulars concerning the chief Branches of juriſdiction; more eſpecially under the Tenth Branch of Sovereignty.

They alledge that paſſage of Valentinian in his Epiſtle to Theodoſius, That the moſt bleſſed Biſhop of Rome, to whom Antiquity hath given a Prieſthood over all, hath a See and Power to judge both of Faith and Prieſts.

Ἵνα ὁ μακαριώτατος Ἐπίσκοπος τῆς Ῥωμαίων πόλεως, ᾧ τὴν ἱερωσύνην κατὰ πάντων ἡ ἀρχαιότης παρέσχε, χώραν καὶ εὐπορεῖαν ἔχειν περί τε πίστεως καὶ ἱερέων κρίνειν—Act. Syn. Chalc. p. 25.

This was ſuggeſted by Pope Leo and his adherents to the young Emperour—— but it ſignifieth no more, but that in the judgment of Prieſts (as of Faith) he was to have his ſhare; or at moſt to be a leading perſon therein.

Theodoſius (a mature, grave, pious Prince) did not regard that pretence of Leo, nor the appeal of Flavianus.

Ἵνα ὁ προλεχθεὶς συναχθέντων ἐκ πάσης τῆς οἰκουμένης καὶ τῶν λοιπῶν ἱερέων— Ibid p. 28.

Upon a Sovereign all Inferiour Magiſtrates depend.

VI. To the Sovereign of any State belongeth the Choice, Conſtitution, Confirmation, Commiſſionating of all inferiour Magiſtrates; that none uncapable, unworthy, or unfit for Offices, or diſaffected to the State, be entruſted with the management of affairs.

Wherefore the Pope doth claim and exerciſe theſe Prerogatives ſo far as he can; pretending at leaſt that no Biſhop can be conſtituted without his deſignation, or his licence, and his confirmation of the nomination, collation or election.

Bell. 4. 24.

And theſe privileges by the great Advocates are upon higheſt terms aſſerted to him.

In this matter may be diſtinguiſhed,

1. The Deſignation of the Perſon by Election or otherwiſe.

2. The Confirmation of that.

3. The Ordination or Conſecration of him to his Office; the which conferreth on him his Character and authority.

4. The Authority by which he acteth.

Into all theſe the Pope hath intruded himſelf, and he will have a finger in them.

1. He gladly would have drawn to himſelf the collation and diſpoſal of all Benefices, challenging a general right to diſpoſe of all at his pleaſure; but not having been able wholly to deprive Princes and Patrons of their Nominations, and Corporations of their Election; yet he hath by Reſervations, Proviſions, Collations of Vacancies apud Sedem, * Reſignations, Devolutions, and other ſuch tricks, extremely encroached on the rights of all, to the infinite vexation, damage and miſchief of Chriſtendom.

Licet Eccleſiarum, Perſonatuum, Dignitatum, aliorūmque Beneficiorum Eccleſiaſticorum plenaria diſpoſitio ad Romanum noſcatur Pontificem pertinere, &c. Clem. IV. in Sexto lib. 3. tit. 4 cap. 2. Vid. ib. c. 4. 10. 12. 20. * Ib. c. 14, &c.

Although the plenary diſpoſal of all Churches, Parſonages, Dignities and other Eccleſiaſtical Benefices be known to belong to the Pope of Rome, &c.

2. He pretendeth that no Biſhop ſhall be ordained without his Licence.

3. He obligeth the Perſon Ordained to ſwear obedience to him.

4. He pretendeth that all Biſhops are his Miniſters and Deputies.

But no ſuch Privileges have any foundation or warrant in Holy Scripture, in Ancient Doctrine, or in Primitive Uſage: they are all Encroachments upon the original Rights and Liberties of the Church derived from Ambition and Avarice; ſubſiſting upon Uſurpation, upheld by Violence.

This will appear from a Survey of Ancient Rules and Practices concerning this matter.

The firſt conſtitution after our Lord's deceaſe of an Eccleſiaſtical perſon was that of Matthias into the vacant Apoſtolate, or Biſhoprick of Judas; wherein (upon Saint Peter's motion) all the diſciples preſent did by conſent preſent two; out of whom God himſelf did elect one, by determining the lot to fall upon Matthias; ſo that this deſignation being partly humane, partly divine; ſo far as it was humane, it went by free election of the whole fraternity; and Saint Peter, beſide generally ſuggeſting the matter to be done, did aſſume nothing peculiar to himſelf.

Act. 1.
'Επισκοπὴν αὐτοῦ λάβοι ἕτερος. V. 20.
Verſ. 15.
Καὶ ἔστησαν δύο. Verſ. 23.
'Ανάδειξον ἐκ τούτων τῶν δύο ἕνα ὃν ἐξελέξατο. Verſ. 5.

The next conſtitution we meet with is that of Deacons to aſſiſt the Apoſtles and Elders in diſcharge of inferiour Offices; wherein the Apoſtles did commit the deſignation of the perſons to the multitude of the diſciples, who elected them; and preſented them to the Apoſtles, who by prayer and laying on of hands did ordain them. Nor had Saint Peter in this action any particular ſtroke.

Act. 6. 2. τὸ πλῆθος τῶν μαθητῶν καὶ ἐξελέξαντο. Verſ. 5.

As to the Conſtitution of Biſhops, in the firſt Apoſtolical times the courſe was this; The Apoſtles, and Apoſtolical perſons (who were authorized by the Apoſtles to act with their power, and in their ſtead) did in Churches founded by them conſtitute Biſhops, ſuch as divine inſpiration, or their grace of diſcretion did guide them to; So did Saint John in Aſia, ſetting thoſe apart for the Clergy whom the Spirit had markt out.

Καὶ καταστήσῃς κατὰ πόλιν πρεσβυτέρους, ὡς ἐγώ σοι διεταξάμην. Tit. 2. 5.
Διάκρισις πνευμάτων. 1. Cor. 12. 10.
Κλήρῳ ἕνα γε κληρώσων τῶν ὑπὸ τοῦ πνεύματος σημαινομένων. Euſ. 3. 23.

This was not done without the conſent of the Chriſtian people, as Clemens Romanus telleth us in his excellent Epiſtle to the Corinthians: But he doth not acquaint us (although he were himſelf Biſhop of Rome) that the Pope had any thing to doe in ſuch Conſtitutions, or in Confirmations of them; the whole Church (ſaith he) conſenting; why doth he not add, for his own ſake, and the Pope confirming?

Τοὺς οὖν κατασταθέντας ὑπ' ἐκείνων, ἢ μεταξὺ ὑφ' ἑτέρων ἐλλογίμων ἀνδρῶν, συνευδοκησάσης Ἐκκλησίας πάσης. Clem. Epiſt. p. 57.

In the next times, when thoſe extraordinary perſons and faculties had expired, when uſually the Churches planted were in ſituation ſomewhat incoherent and remote from each other, upon a vacancy the Clergy and people of each Church did elect its Biſhop; in which action commonly the Clergy did propound and recommend a perſon, or perſons, and the people by their conſent approve, or by their ſuffrages elect one; a ſtrict examination of his Life and Doctrine intervening: the which Order Tertullian briefly doth intimate in thoſe words, The Preſidents of the Church are certain Elders well approved, who have obtained that honour not by price, but by proof.

Καὶ οὗτοι δοκιμαζέσθωσαν πρῶτον, εἶτα διακονείτωσαν, ἀνέγκλητοι ὄντες. 1 Tim. 3. 10.
Præſident probati quique ſeniores, honorem iſtum non pretio, ſed teſtimonio adepti. Tertul. Apol. 39.
Plenâ diligentiâ, exploratione ſincerâ. Cypr. Ep. 68.

It may be enquired, how a Biſhop then was Ordained, in caſe his City was very remote from any other Churches?

Did they ſend for Biſhops from diſtant places to Ordain him; Or did the Presbyters of the place lay their hands on him? Or did he receive no other Ordination than that he had before of Presbyter? Or did he abide no Biſhop till opportunity did yield Biſhops to Ordain him? Or did providence order, that there ſhould be no ſuch ſolitary Churches? The ancient Commentatour, contemporary to St. Ambroſe, and bearing his name, did conceive, that upon deceaſe of a Biſhop the elder of the Presbyters did ſucceed into his place. * Whence had he this, out of his invention and conjecture, or from ſome Tradition and Hiſtory?

Primùm Presbyteri Epiſcopi appellabantur ut recedente uno ſequens ei ſuccederet, &c. Vid. Diſt. 66. cap. 2.
At firſt Presbyters were called Biſhops that one departing the next might ſucceed him.
* In Eph. 4. 11.

Afterward, when the Faith was diffuſed through many Provinces, that Churches grew thick and cloſe, the general practice was this: The neighbour Biſhops (being advertiſed of a vacancy or want of a Biſhop) did convene at the place; then in the Congregation the Clergy of the place did propound a perſon, yielding their atteſtation to his fitneſs for the charge; which the people hearing did give their ſuffrages, accepting him, if no weighty cauſe was objected againſt him; or refuſing him, if ſuch cauſe did appear: Then upon ſuch recommendation and acceptance; the Biſhops preſent did adjoin their approbation and conſent; then by their devotions, and ſolemn laying on of their hands, they did Ordain or Conſecrate him to the Function.

Of this courſe moſt commonly practiced in his time we have divers plain Teſtimonies in St. Cyprian, the beſt Author extant concerning theſe matters of ancient Diſcipline: For which reaſon, ſaith he, that from divine tradition and Apoſtolical obſervation is to be obſerved and held: which alſo is with us, and almoſt through all Provinces, kept; that for duely celebrating ordinations unto that people, for whom a Biſhop is ordained, all the neighbour Biſhops of the ſame (Province or people) ſhould reſort; and a Biſhop ſhould be choſen the people being preſent, which moſt fully knoweth the life of each one, and hath from his converſation a thorough inſight into his practice; the which we ſee done with you in the ordination of our Collegue Sabinus, that by the ſuffrage of all the fraternity, and by the judgment of all the Biſhops, which had aſſembled in the preſence, and had ſent letters to you about him, the Biſhoprick ſhould be deferr'd to him.

Propter quod diligenter de traditione divina & Apoſtolica obſervatione obſervandum eſt & tenendum, quod apud nos quoque & ferè per Provincias univerſas tenetur; ut ad ordinationes ritè clebrandas, ad eam plebem cui præpoſitus ordinatur, Epiſcopi ejuſdem proximi quique conveniant, & Epiſcopus deligatur plebe præſente, quæ ſingulorum vitam pleniſſimé novit, & uniuſcujuſque actum de ejus converſatione perſpexit; quod & apud vos factum videmus in Sabini Collegæ noſtri ordinatione, ut de univerſæ fraternitatis ſuffragio, & de Epiſcoporum, qui in præſentia convenerant, quique de eo ad vos literas fecerant, judicio Epiſcopatus ei deferretur. Cypr. Ep. 68.

Again, A people obedient to the Lord's commands, and fearing God, ought to ſeparate it ſelf from a wicked Biſhop (ſuch a notoriouſly wicked Biſhop as thoſe were of whom he treateth, who had renounced the Faith) and not to mingle it ſelf with the ſacrifices of a ſacrilegious Prieſt; ſeeing eſpecially that it hath a power either to chuſe worthy Prieſts, or to refuſe thoſe who are unworthy; the which alſo we ſee to deſcend from divine authority that a Biſhop ſhould be choſen the people being preſent, before the eyes of all; and that he who is worthy and fit ſhould be approved by publick judgment and teſtimony.

Plebs obſequens præceptis Dominicis & Deum metuens à peccatore præpoſito ſeparare ſe debet, nec ſe ad ſacrilegi Sacerdotis ſacrificia miſcere; quando ipſe maximè habeat poteſtatem vel eligendi dignos Sacerdotes, vel indignos recuſandi; quod & ipſum videmus de divina auctoritate deſcendere; ut Sacerdos plebe præſente ſub omnium oculis deligatur, & dignus atque idoneus publico judicio ac teſtimonio comprobetur-- Cypr. Ep.

Again, when (ſaith he concerning himſelf) a Biſhop is ſubſtituted in the place of one deceaſed, when he is peaceably choſen by the ſuffrage of all the people---and whom if according to the divine inſtructions the whole fraternity would obey, no man would move any thing againſt the College of Prieſts; none after the divine judgment; after the ſuffrage of the people, after the conſent of the fellow-Biſhop, would make himſelf judge not indeed of the Biſhop, but of God.

Suffragio totius populi Cyprianus eligi[illegible]r. Optat. 1.

Cæterùm quando Epiſcopus in locum defuncti ſubſtituitur, quando populi univerſi ſuffragio in pace deligitur — Cui ſi ſecundum magiſteria divina obtemperaret fraternitas univerſa, nemo adverſum Sacerdotum Collegium quidquam moveret; nemo poſt divinum judicium, poſt populi ſuffragium, poſt coepiſcoporum conſenſum, judicem ſe jam non Epiſcopi ſed Dei faceret— Cypr. Ep. 55.

Again, Cornelius was made Biſhop by the judgment of God and his Chriſt, by the teſtimony of almoſt all the Clergy, by the ſuffrage of the people being then preſent, and by the College of Prieſts, ancient and good men---and Cornelius being in the Catholick Church ordained by the judgment of God, and by the ſuffrage of the Clergy and people.

Factus eſt autem Cornelius Epiſcopus de Dei, & Chriſti ejus judicio, de Clericorum penè omnium teſtimonio, de plebis, quæ tunc affuit, ſuffragio, & de Sacerdotum antiquorum & bonorum virorum Collegio—Cypr. Ep. 52.

Cornelio in Catholica Eccleſia de Dei judicio, & Cleri ac plebis ſuffragio ordinato—Cypr. Ep. 67.

Again, When a Biſhop is once made, and is approved by the teſtimony and the judgment of his Collegues, and of the people---

Epiſcopo ſemel facto, & Collegarum ac plebis teſtimonio & judicio comprobato--- Ep. 41. (ad Cornel.)

The Author of the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions thus in the perſon of Saint Peter very fully and clearly deſcribeth the manner of Ordination of Biſhops in his times: After one of the chief Biſhops preſent has thus prayed, the reſt of the Prieſts with all the people ſhall ſay, Amen; and after the prayer, one of the Biſhops ſhall deliver the Euchariſt into the hands of the perſon ordained, and that morning he ſhall be placed by the reſt of the Biſhops in his Throne, all of them ſaluting him with a kiſs in the Lord. After the reading of the Law and Prophets, of our Epiſtles, the Acts and Goſpel, he who is ordained ſhall ſalute the Church with theſe words, The grace of our Lord Jeſus Chaiſt, and the love of God the Father, and the fellowſhip of the Holy Ghoſt be with you all, Amen. And let all anſwer, And with thy ſpirit. After which words let him exhort the people.

Conſt. Apoſt. 8 4. Poſtquam hæc erit precatus, &c.

Thus it was then, in a practice ſo obvious and obſervable, that a Pagan Emperour took good notice of it, and choſe to imitate it in conſtituting the Governours of Provinces, and other Officers; When (ſaith Lampridius of Alexander Severus) he would either give rulers to Provinces or make preſidents, or ordain procuratours, he ſet up their names, exhorting the people if they had any thing againſt them, to prove it by manifeſt evidence, if they could not make their accuſation good they were to die for it, and he ſaid 'twould be hard not to doe that in the choice of Governours of Provinces, to whom the lives and fortunes of men were entruſted, which the Chriſtians and Jews did in ſetting up thoſe who were to be ordained Prieſts.

Ubi aliquos voluiſſet vel rectores Provinciis dare, vel præpoſitos facere, vel procuratores id eſt rationales ordinare, nomina eorum proponebat, hortans, populum, ut ſiquid haberet criminis, probaret manifeſtis rebus; ſi non probâſſet, ſubiret pœnam capitis; dicebátque grave eſſe, quum id Chriſtiani & Judæi facerent in prædicandis Sacerdotibus qui ordinandi ſunt, non fieri in Provinciarum Rectoribus, quibus & fortunæ hominum committerentur & capita. Lamprid. in Alex. Sev. cap. 45.

Afterward in proceſs of time, when (the gaps of diſtance being filled up, and Chriſtendom becoming one continued Body) Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline was improved into a more complete ſhape, for Conſtitution of a Biſhop, all the Biſhops of a Province did convene, (or ſuch as could with convenience, the others ſignifying their mind by writing) and having approved him who was recommended by the Clergy, and allowed by the people, they did ordain him; the Metropolitan of the Province ratifying what was done.

Παλαιὸς θεσμός. Syn. Conſtantinop. Theod. 5. 9.

So the Nicene Synod, regarding the practice which had commonly obtained, did appoint with a qualification to be generally obſerved: It is moſt fit (ſay they) that a Biſhop be conſtituted by all Biſhops in the Province; but if this be hard, either becauſe of urgent neceſſity, or for the length of the way, then three of the body being gathered together (thoſe alſo who are abſent conſpiring in opinion, and yielding their conſent in writing) let the Ordination be performed, but let the ratification of what is done be aſſigned to the Metropolite in each Province.

Ἐπίσκοπον προσήκει Μάλιστα μὲν ὑπὸ πάντων τῶν ἐν τῇ ἐπαρχίᾳ καθίστασθαι — τὸ δὲ κῦρος τῶν γινομένων δίδοσθαι καθ' ἑκάστην ἐπαρχίαν τῷ μητροπολίτῃ —— Conc. Nic. Can. 4.

Vid. Can. Apoſt. 1.
Conc. Antioch. Can. 19.
Conc. Laod. Can. 12. —
Conc. Afr. Can. 13.

In this Canon (the which is followed by divers Canons of other Synods) there is no expreſs mention concerning the intereſt of the Clergy and people in election of the Biſhops; but theſe things are onely paſſed over, as precedaneous to the Conſtitution or Ordination, about which onely the Fathers did intend to preſcribe; ſuppoſing the election to proceed according to former uſual practice.

That we ought thus to interpret the Canon, ſo that the Fathers did not intend to exclude the people from their choice, doth appear from their Synodical Epiſtle; wherein they decree concerning Biſhops conſtituted by Meletius, who returning to communion with the Church did live in any City, that, If any Catholick Biſhop ſhould happen to die, then ſhould thoſe who were already received aſcend into the honour of him deceaſed; in caſe they ſhould appear worthy, and the people ſhould chuſe, the Biſhop of Alexandria withall adding his ſuffrage to him, and his confirmation; the which words with ſufficient evidence do interpret the Canon not to concern the Election, but the Ordination of Biſhops.

Εἰ δέ τινας συμβαίη ἀναπαύσασθαι τῶν ἐν τῇ Ἐκκλησίᾳ, τηνικαῦτα προσαναβαίνειν εἰς τὴν τιμὴν τοῦ τετελευτηκότος τοὺς ἄρτι προσληφθέντας, μόνον εἰ ἄξιοι φαίνοιντο, καὶ ὁ λαὸς αἱροῖτο, συνεπιψηφίζοντος αὐτῷ, καὶ ἐπισφραγίζοντος τοῦ τῆς Ἀλεξανδρείας Ἐπισκόπου. Socr. 1. 9. Theod. 1. 9.

Thus the Fathers of the ſecond General Synod plainly did interpret this Canon by their proceeding; for they in their Synodical Epiſtle to Pope Damaſus and the Weſtern Biſhops, did aſſure him, that they in the Conſtitution of Biſhops for the principal Eaſtern Sees, had followed this Order of the Synod of Nice, together with the ancient law of the Church; in agreement whereto they had ordained Nectarius Biſhop of Conſtantinople; with common conſent, under the eyes of the moſt religious Emperour Theodoſius, and of all the Clergy, the whole City adjoining alſo its ſuffrage; and that for Antioch, the Biſhops of the Province, and of the Eaſtern Dioceſe concurring had canonically ordained Flavianus Biſhop, the whole Church conſenting as with one voice to honour the perſon.

Theod. 5. 9.

Παλαιός τε θεσμὸς κεκράτηκε, καὶ τῶν ἁγίων ἐν Νικαίᾳ Πατέρων ὅρος —— Οἷς ἀκολούθως ——

—— μετὰ κοινῆς ὁμονοίας, ὑπ' ὄψεσι καὶ θεοφιλεστάτου βασιλέως Θεοδοσίου, παντός τε τοῦ κλήρου. καὶ πάσης ἐπιψηφιζομένης τῆς πόλεως.

—— Ἐπίσκοπον Φλαβιανὸν οἵ τε τῆς ἐπαρχίας, καὶ τῆς Ἀνατολικῆς διοικήσεως συνδραμόντες κανονικῶς ἐχειροτόνησαν, πάσης συμψήφου τῆς Ἐκκλησίας ὥσπερ διὰ μιᾶς φωνῆς τὸν ἄνδρα τιμησάσης.

Indeed the practice generally doth confirm this, the People every where continuing to elect their Biſhop: So did the People of Alexandria demand Athanaſius for their Biſhop. So Pope Julius did complain that Gregory was intruded into the place of Athanaſius; not being required by the Presbyters, not by the Biſhops, not by the People. So Gregory Nazianzene deſcribeth the Elections of Biſhops in his times to be carried by the power of wealthy men, and impetuouſneſs of the people. So Auſtin intimateth the ſame in his Speech about deſignation of a Succeſſour to himſelf, I know, ſays he, that after the deceaſe of Biſhops the Churches are wont to be diſturbed by ambitious and contentious men. So the tumults at Antioch, in chuſing a Biſhop after Euſtathius; at Rome after Liberius; at Conſtantinople after Alexander; at Milain when St. Ambroſe was choſen.

Ath. Apol. 2. p. 736.

Μὴ αἰτηθέντα τοῖς Πρεσβυτέροις, μὴ παρ' Ἐπισκόπων, μὴ παρὰ λαῶν. Ath. ibid. p. 749.

Orat. 19. p. 310.

Epiſt. 21.

Scio poſt obitus Epiſcoporum per ambitioſos aut contentioſos ſolere Eccleſias perturbari —— Aug. Ep. 110.

Euſeb. de Vit. Conſt. 3. 59, 60.
Socr. 1. 24.
Μερισθέντος τοῦ πλήθους ——
Sozom. 6. 23. Marcell. lib. 27.
Διχῇ διακριθὲν τὸ πλῆθος ——
Socr. 1. 24. Soz. 3. 4. Theod. 4. 6.

So Stephanus Biſhop of Epheſus in juſtification of himſelf ſaith, Me forty Biſhops of Aſia by the ſuffrage of the moſt noble and of the ſubſtantial Citizens, and of all the moſt reverend Clergy, and of all the reſt of the whole City, did Ordain; and his Competitour Baſſianus, Me, with great conſtraint and violence, the people and the Clergy, and the Biſhops did inſtall.

Ἐμὲ τεσσαράκοντα Ἐπίσκοποι τῆς Ἀσίας ψήφῳ καὶ τῶν λαμπροτάτων, καὶ τῶν λογάδων, καὶ τοῦ εὐλαβεστάτου παντὸς κλήρου, καὶ τῶν λοιπῶν πάντων τῆς πόλεως πάσης ἐχειροτόνησαν. Conc. Chalc. Act. 11. p. 404.

Ἐμὲ δὲ μετὰ πολλῆς ἀνάγκης καὶ βίας ἐνθρονίζουσιν εἰς τὴν αὐτὴν πόλιν Ἔφεσον ὁ λαὸς, καὶ ὁ κλῆρος, καὶ οἱ Ἐπίσκοποι. Ibid,

In the Synod of Chalcedon, Euſebius Biſhop of Ancyra, ſaith, that the whole City of Gangra did come to him bringing their ſuffrages, Poſidius telleth Ἅπασα γὰρ ἡ πόλις ἦλθε πρὸς ἐμὲ εἰς Ἀγκύραν καὶ ἐκόμισαν τὰ ψηφίσματα. Syn. Chalc. Act. 16. p. 462.

leth us of St. Auſtin, that in ordaining Prieſts and Clergymen he deemed the greater conſent of Chriſtians, and the cuſtom of the Church was to be followed.

So Celeſtine the Firſt: Let no Biſhop be given them againſt their wills; let the conſent and requeſt of the Clergy, the people and the order be expected; and Pope Leo the Firſt, When there ſhall be an election of a Biſhop, let him be preferr'd who has the unanimous conſent of the Clergy and people; ſo that if the votes be divided and part for another perſon, let him, by the judgment of the Metropolitan, be preferr'd whoſe merits and intereſt are greateſt, onely that none may be ordained againſt their wills or without their deſire, leſt the unwilling people contemn or hate a Biſhop whom they never deſired, and become leſs religious than they ought, becauſe they could not have ſuch a Biſhop as they would. And in other of his Epiſtles, There is no reaſon that they ſhould be accounted Biſhops, who were neither choſen by the Clergy, nor deſired by the people, nor with the Metropolitan's order conſecrated by the Provincial Biſhops.----

Certainly the deſires of the Citizens, and the teſtimonies of the people ſhould have been expected, with the judgment of the honourable and the choice of the Clergy, which in the Ordinations of Prieſts uſe to be obſerv'd by thoſe who knew the rules of the Fathers-- When peaceably and with ſuch concord as God loves, he who is to be a teacher of peace is ordained by the agreement of all---- Let Prieſts who are to be ordained be required peaceably and quietly: let the ſubſcription of the Clergy, the teſtimony of the honourable, the conſent of the order and people be obſerved; let him who is to preſide over all be choſen by all. And Pope Nicholas I. Becauſe we know the cuſtom of your Royal City, that none can arrive at the top of the higheſt Prieſtly power without the aſſent of the Eccleſiaſtical people and the Emperour's ſuffrage.

In ordinandis verò Sacerdotibus & Clericis conſenſum majorem Chriſtianorum, & conſuetudinem Eccleſiæ ſequendam eſſe arbitrabatur. Poſid. in Aug. Vit. cap. 20.

Nullus invitis detur Epiſcopus; Cleri; plebis, & ordinis conſenſum ac deſiderium requiratur——Celeſt. I. Ep. 2.

Cùm ergò de ſummi Sacerdotis electione tractabitur, ille omnibus præponatur, quem Cleri plebiſque conſenſus concorditer poſtulârint; ità ut ſi in aliam fortè perſonam partium ſe vota diviſerint Metropolitani judicio is alteri præferatur, qui majoribus & ſtudiis juvatur & meritis, tantùm ut nullus invitis, & non petentibus ordinetur; nè Civitas Epiſcopum non optatum aut contemnat aut oderit, & fiat minùs religioſa quàm convenit, cui non licuit habere quem voluit. P. Leo. I. Ep. 84. ad. Anaſtaſ.

Nulla ratio ſinit, ut inter Epiſcopos habeantur, qui nec à Clericis ſunt electi, nec à plebibus expetiti, nec à Provincialibus Epiſcopis cum Metropolitani judicio conſecrati. P. Leo. I. Ep. 92.

*Expectarentur certè vota Civium, teſtimonio populorum, quæreretur honoratorum arbitrium, electio Clericorum, quæ in Sacerdotum ſolent ordinationibus ab his qui nôrunt Patrum regulas cuſtodiri. P.*Leo. Ep. 89. Diſt. cap. 27.

Quum per pacem, & Deo placitam concordiam conſonis omnium ſtudiis qui doctor pacis futurus eſt ordinatur. Ibid.

Per pacem & quietem Sacerdotes qui præfuturi ſunt poſtulentur; teneatur ſubſcriptio Clericorum, honoratorum teſtimonium, ordinis conſenſus & plebis: qui præfuturus eſt omnibus, ab omnibus eligatur. Ibid.

P. Nich. I. Ep. 5. Quia conſuetudinem veſtram novimus in Regia Urbe, minimò apicem Archieraticæ poteſtatis aliquem poſſe habere ſine Eccleſiaſticæ plebis aſſenſu, atque Imperiali ſuffragio.——
P. Joh. VIII. Ep. 70. Diſt. 62.

Now in all theſe proceedings it is moſt apparent that there was no regard had to the Pope, or any thought of him, out of his particular Territory; which he had as Metropolitan, (or afterwards as Primate in ſome parts of the Weſt.) No where elſe had he the leaſt finger in the Conſtitution of a Biſhop any where through the whole Church; no not of the leaſt Clergy-man.

When by Saint Cyprian ſo largely and punctually the manner of Conſtituting Biſhops is declared; when the Nicene Canons and thoſe of other Synods do ſo carefully preſcribe about the Ordination of them; when ſo many reports concerning the Election of Biſhops do occur in Hiſtory, why is there not a tittle of mention concerning any ſpecial intereſt of the Roman Biſhops about them?

Vid. P. Leo Ep. 84. 101. 107.

So true is that of Alb. Crantzius: There was no need then of Apoſtolical confirmation, it was ſufficient if the Election were approv'd by the Archbiſhop: now the Church of Rome has aſſum'd to her ſelf the rights of all Churches.

Nihil tum opus erat Apoſtolicâ confirmatione; ſatis erat electionem ab Archiepiſcopo comprobari; nunc ad ſe omnium Eccleſiarum jura traxit Romana Eccleſia Crantz. Metrop. 7. 45.

We may by the way obſerve, that in the firſt times they had not ſo much as an abſolute power of ordaining a Presbyter in the Church of his own City without leave of the Clergy and People; as may be inferred from that paſſage in Euſebius, where Pope Cornelius relateth that the Biſhop who ordained Novatus, being hindred from doing it by all the Clergy and by many of the Laity, did requeſt that it might be granted to him to ordain that one perſon; and he that ſo hardly could ordain one Prieſt in his own Church, what authority could he have to conſtitute Biſhops in all other Churches?

Διεκωλυόμενος ὑπὸ πάντων τοῦ κλήρου, ἀλλὰ καὶ λαϊκῶν πολλῶν, ἠξίωσε συγχωρηθῆναι αὐτῷ τοῦτον μόνον χειροτονῆσαι. P. Cornel. apud Euſ. 6. 43.

To all theſe Evidences of Fact our Adverſaries do oppoſe ſome Inſtances of Popes medling in the Conſtitution of Biſhops; as, Pope Leo I. ſaith, that Anatolius did by the favour of his aſſent obtain the Biſhoprick of Conſtantinople. The ſame Pope is alledged as having confirmed Maximus of Antioch. The ſame doth write to the Biſhop of Theſſalonica (his Vicar) that he ſhould confirm the Elections of Biſhops by his authority. He alſo confirmed Donatus an African Biſhop, ----we will that Donatus preſide over the Lord's flock upon condition that he remember to ſend us an account of his Faith. Alſo Gregory I. doth complain of it as of an inordinate Act, that a Biſhop of Salonæ was ordained without his knowledge. Pope Damaſus did confirm the Ordination of Peter Alexandrinus; The Alexandrians (ſaith Sozomen) did render the Churches to Peter being returned from Rome, with the Letters of Damaſus, which confirmed both the Nicene Decrees, and his Ordination: but what, I pray, doth Confirmation here ſignifie but approbation; for did he otherwiſe confirm the Nicene Decrees? did they need other Confirmation?

Bell. 2. 18. 20.

Satis eſt quòd veſtræ pietatis auxilio, & mei favoris aſſenſu Epiſcopatum tantæ Urbis obtinuit. P. Leo. Ep. 54.

De Marc. 3. 14. ſect. 1.

Ut ordinationem rite celebrandum tua quoque firmet authoritas. P. Leo. Ep. 84. (ad Anaſtaſ.)

Donatum--- ità Dominico volumus gregi præſidere, ut libellum fidei ſuæ ad nos meminerit dirigendum --- P. Leo. Ep. 87.

Salonitanæ Civitatis Epiſcopus ne ac reſponſali meo neſciente ordinatus eſt, & facta res eſt, quæ ſub nullis anterioribus principibus evenit. Greg. Ep. 4. 34.

Ἀλεξανδρεῖς· ἐπανελθόντι δὲ τότε Πέτρῳ ἀπὸ τῆς Ῥώμης μετὰ γραμμάτων Δαμάσου τήν τε ἐν Νικαίᾳ δόξαντα καὶ τὴν αὐτοῦ χειροτονίαν κυρούντων, παρέδωκαν τὰς Ἐκκλησίας. Sozom 6. 39.

To the former Inſtances we anſwer, that being well conſidered they do much ſtrengthen our Argument; in that they are ſo few, ſo late, ſo lame, ſo impertinent; for if the Pope had enjoyed a power of conſtituting Biſhops, more inſtances of its exerciſe would have been producible; indeed it could not be but that Hiſtory would have been full of them; the conſtitutions of Biſhops being a matter of continual uſe, and very remarkable. At leaſt they might have found one inſtance or other to alledge before the time of that buſie Pope Leo; in whoſe time and by whoſe means Papal authority began to overflow its banks. And thoſe which they produce do no-wiſe reach home to the point; Anatolius did obtain the Biſhoprick of Conſtantinople by the help of the Emperour, and by the aſſent of the Pope's favour: what then? Anatolius being put into that See in the room of Flavianus, by the influence of Dioſcorus (whoſe Reſponſal he had been) and having favoured the Eutychian Faction, Pope Leo might thence have had a fair colour to diſavow him as uncapable of that Function and Dignity, he being ſo obnoxious; both having ſuch a flaw in his Ordination, and having been guilty of great faults, adherence to the party of Dioſcorus, and irregularly ordaining the Biſhop of Antioch; but he out of regard to the Emperour's intervention did acknow-

Nos enim veſtræ fidei & interventionis habentes intuitum, cùm ſecundum ſuæ conſecrationis authores ejus initia titubarent, benigniores erga ipſum quàm juſtiores eſſe volumus—— P. Leo Ep. 55. (ad Martianum.)

Deceſſore enim tuo B. memoriæ Flaviano propter defenſionem Catholicæ veritatis ejecto, non immeritò credebatur quòd ordinatores tui contra Sanctorum Canonum Conſtituta viderentur ſui ſimilem conſecraſſe - Poſt illa itaque ordinationis tuæ non inculpata principia--P. Leo Ep. 53. ad Anatol.

Lib cap 12.

knowledge Anatolius for Biſhop; this was the favourable aſſent, with which he upbraideth Anatolius, having diſpleaſed him: and what doth this ſignifie?

Again Pope Leo did not reject Maximus Biſhop of Antioch from communion, nor diſclaimed his Ordination, although liable to exception: what then; is this a confirmation of him? No ſuch matter; it was onely, which in ſuch a vixonely Pope was a great favour, a forbearance to quarrel with him, as not duely ordained; which any other Biſhop might have done. If a Pope had a flaw in his Ordination, another Biſhop might refuſe him.

Quod nos amore parandæ fidei, & pacis ſtudio retractare ceſſavimus. P. Leo Ep. 54. (ad Martian.)

Conc. Chalc. Act. 10.

Again Pope Leo did enjoin the Biſhop of Theſſalonica to confirm Ordinations: what is that to the purpoſe? It belonged to that Biſhop, as a Metropolitan, by the Canons to confirm thoſe in his Province, or as a Primate, to confirm thoſe in his Dioceſe; It belonged to him as the Pope's Vicar in thoſe Territories, to which the Pope had ſtretched his Juriſdiction, to execute the Pope's Orders; but what is this to Univerſal Authority? It is certain, that Illyricum was then in a more ſpecial manner ſubjected to the Pope's Juriſdiction, than any of the other Eaſtern Churches; what therefore he did there, cannot be drawn into conſequence as to other places.

The ſame may be ſaid in anſwer to the complaint of Pope Gregory, and to any the like Inſtances.

Moreover, ſurreptitious, preſumptuous, pragmatical intruſions, or uſurpations of power do not ſuffice to found a right in this or any other caſe; to which purpoſe, and wholly to invalidate any ſuch pleas, theſe Obſervations may be conſidered.

1. There do occur divers Inſtances of Biſhops, who did meddle in Ordinations of other Biſhops ſo as to bear great ſtroke in conſtituting them; who did not thereby pretend to Univerſal Juriſdiction; and it would be extremely ridiculous thence to infer they had any reaſonable claim thereto.

Thus it was objected to Athanaſius, that he preſum'd to ordain in Cities which did not belong to him. Euſebius of Conſtantinople did obtrude Euſebius Emiſſenus to be Biſhop of Alexandria. Euſtathius of Antioch did ordain Evagrius Biſhop of Conſtantinople. Euzoius delivered unto Lucius the Biſhoprick of Alexandria. Lucifer, a Sardinian Biſhop, did ordain Paulinus Biſhop of Antioch; they for a Salvo ſay, as the Pope's Legate, but upon what ground or teſtimony? why did not Hiſtorians tell us ſo much; the Pope had then been hiſſed at, if he had ſent Legates about ſuch errands; it was indeed out of preſumption and pragmatical zeal to ſerve a party, then ordinary in perſons addicted to all parties, right and wrong; it not being then ſo expreſly forbidden by the Canons as afterward.

Ἀνέλη καὶ τοῦτο ἔγκλημα αὐτῷ ἐπῆγον, ὡς ἐν πόλεσι μηδὲν αὐτῷ προσηκούσαις χειροτονεῖν ἐτόλμησεν. Soz. 3. 21.

Ἐπὶ τὸν Ἀλεξανδρείας προεβλήθη θρόνον ὑπὸ Εὐσεβίου τοῦ Κωνσταντινουπόλεως Ἐπισκόπου. Soz. 2. 5.

Socr. 4. 14.

Ἐπὶ τῷ παραδοῦναι Λουκίῳ τῷ Ἀρειανῷ τὰς ἐκεῖ Ἐκκλησίας. Socr. 4 21.

Ἐχειροτόνησε τὸν Παυλῖνον Ἐπίσκοπον. Socr. 3. 6. Socr. 6. 2.

Theognis and Theodorus did make Macedonius Biſhop of Conſtantinople. Theophilus of Alexandria did ordain St. Chryſoſtome. The Egyptian Biſhops ſurreptitiouſly did conſtitute Maximus, the Cynick Philoſopher, Biſhop of Conſtantinople. Acacius, (who had as little to do there as the Pope) did thruſt Eudoxius into the throne of Con-

Soz. 2. 6.

Θεόφιλος Ἰωάννην ἐχειροτόνησε. Socr. 6. 2.

Τοῦτο κλέψαντες τὴν χειροτονίαν Ἐπισκόπου Κωνσταντινουπόλεως κατέστησαν οἱ τότε ἐξ Αἰγύπτου συνεληλυθότες. Soz. 7. 9.

Τῶν περὶ Ἀκάκιον ἐνθρονισάντων αὐτόν. Socr. 2. 13.

ſtantinople. Meletius of Antioch did conſtitute St. Gregory Nazianzene to the charge of Conſtantinople. Acacius and Patrophilus, extruding Maximus did in his room conſtitute Cyril Biſhop of Jeruſalem. Pope Leo doth complain of Anatolius, that againſt the Canonical rule he had aſſumed to himſelf the Ordination of the Biſhop of Antioch.

Ἤδη πρώην εἰς Κωνσταντινούπολιν διὰ τὴν Γρηγορίου κατάστασιν ἀφικόμενος. Soz. 7. 2, 3.

Ἀκάκιος μὲν γὰρ καὶ Πατρόφιλος Μάξιμον τῶν Ἱεροσολύμων ἐξωθήσαντες Κύριλλον ἀντικατέστησαν. Socr. 2. 238.

Poſt conſecrationem Antiocheni Epiſcopi, quam tibimet contra Canonicam regulam vendicâſti——P. Leo. I. Epiſt. 53. (ad Anatol.)

2. To obviate theſe irregular and inconvenient proceedings, having crept in upon the diſſenſions in Faith and eſpecially upon occaſion of Gregory Nazianzene being conſtituted Biſhop of Conſtantinople by Meletius, and Maximus being thruſt into the ſame See by the Egyptians (whoſe Party for a time the Roman Church did countenance) the ſecond General Synod did ordain that no Biſhop ſhould intermeddle about Ordinations without the bounds of his own Dioceſe.

3. In purſuance of this Law, or upon the ground of it, the Pope was ſometimes checked, when he preſumed to make a ſally beyond his bounds in this or the like caſes.

As when Pope Innocent I. did ſend ſome Biſhops to Conſtantinople for procuring a Synod to examine the cauſe of St. Chryſoſtome; thoſe of Conſtantinople——did cauſe them to be diſmiſſed with diſgrace as moleſting a government beyond their bounds.

Τοὺς μὲν ὡς ὑπερορίαν ἀρχὴν ἐνοχλήσαντας ἀτίμως ἐκπεμφθῆναι παρεσκευάσαν. Sozom. 8. 28.

4. Even in the Weſtern parts, after that the Pope had wrigled himſelf into moſt Countries there, ſo as to obtain ſway in their tranſactions, yet he in divers places did not meddle in Ordinations;—we do not, ſays Pope Leo I. arrogate to our ſelves a power of ordaining in your Provinces.

Non enim nobis ordinationes veſtrarum Provinciarum defendimus. P. Leo Ep. 89.

Even in ſome parts of Italy it ſelf the Pope did not confirm Biſhops till the times of Pope Nicholas I. as may be collected from the ſubmiſſion then of the Biſhop of Ravenna to that condition, that he ſhould have no power to conſecrate Biſhops canonically elected in the Regio Flaminia, unleſs it were granted him by letters from the Apoſtolical See.

— & ne electos etiam Canonicè in Flaminia Epiſcopos conſecrandi facultatem haberet, niſi id ſibi à Sede Apoſtolica literis concederetur. Plat. in P. Nichol. I.

And it was not without great oppoſition and ſtruggling that he got that power other-where than in his original precincts, or where the juncture of things did afford him ſpecial advantage.

5. If Examples would avail to determine Right, there are more, and more clear Inſtances of Emperours interpoſing in the Conſtitution of Biſhops, than of Popes. As they had ground in Reaſon, and authority in Holy Scripture. And Zadock the Prieſt did the King put in the room of Abiathar. Conſtantine did interpoſe at the deſignation of a Biſhop at Antioch in the room of Euſtathius. Upon Gregory Nazianzene's receſs from Conſtantinople, Theodoſius (that excellent Emperour, who would not have infringed right) did command the Biſhops preſent to write in paper the names of thoſe whom each did approve worthy to be ordained, and reſerved to himſelf the choice of one; and accordingly they obeying, he out of all that were nominated did elect Nectarius. * Conſtantius did deliver the See of Conſtantinople to Euſebius Nicomedienſis, || Conſtantius was angry with Macedonius becauſe he was ordain'd without his licence. † He re-

1 King. 2. 35.

Euſeb. de Vit. Conſt. 3. 59. 60.

Προστάξαντος τοῦ βασιλέως τοῖς ἱερεῦσιν ἐγγράψαι χάρτῃ τὰς προσηγορίας ὧν ἕκαστοι δοκιμάζουσιν εἰς τὴν χειροτονίαν ἀξίων, ἑαυτῷ δὲ φυλάξαντος τοῦ ἑνὸς τὴν αἵρεσιν—καὶ Νεκτάριον αἱρεῖται. Sozom. 7. 8.

* Εὐσεβίῳ τὸν Κωνσταντινουπόλεως θρόνον παρέδωκεν. Sozom. 3. 4.

|| Ὅτι πρὶν αὐτὸν ἐπιτρέψαι, ἐχειροτονήθη. Soz. 3. 6.

† Τοὺς μὲν ἐξήλασε τῶν Ἐκκλησιῶν, ἑτέρους δὲ ἀντ' αὐτῶν καθίστασθαι προσέταξε. Theodor. 2. 27.

rejecting Eleuſius and Sylvanus did order other to be ſubſtituted in their places. * When, before St. Ambroſe, the See of Milain was vacant, a Synod of Biſhops there did intreat the Emperour to declare one. || Flavianus ſaid to the Emperor Theodoſius, Give forſooth, O King, the See of Antioch to whom you ſhall think good. ‡ The Emperour did call Neſtorius from Antioch to the See of Conſtantinople; and he was (ſaith Vincentius Lir.) elected by the Emperour's judgment. The favour of Juſtinian did advance Menas to the See of Conſtantinople: and the ſame did prefer Eutychius thereto. He did put in Pope Vigilius.—

In Spain the Kings had the Election of Biſhops by the Decrees of the Council of Toledo.

That the Emperour Charles did uſe to confirm Biſhops Pope John VIII. doth teſtifie, reproving the Archbiſhop of Virdun, for rejecting a Biſhop, whom the Clergy and people of the City had choſen, and the Emperour Charles had confirmed by his conſent.

When Macarius Biſhop of Antioch for Monothelitiſm was depoſed in the ſixth Synod, the Biſhops under that throne did requeſt the Preſidents of the Synod to ſuggeſt another to the Emperour to be ſubſtituted in his room.

In Gratian there are divers paſſages wherein Popes declared, that they could not ordain Biſhops to Churches, even in Italy, without the Emperour's leave and licence. As * indeed there are alſo in later times other Decrees (made by Popes of another kidney, or in other junctures of affairs) which forbid Princes to meddle in the elections of Biſhops; as in the ſeventh Synod, and in the eighth Synod as they call it, upon occaſion of Photius being placed in the See of Conſtantinople by the power of the Court. † And that of Pope Nicholas I. By which Diſcordance in practice we may ſee the conſiſtence and ſtability of Doctrine and practice in the Roman Church.

[It is a notorious thing, that moſt Princes in the Weſt, in Germany, France, England, did inveſt Biſhops, till the time of Pope Gregory VII. when that boiſterous man did raiſe ſo much ſtir in Chriſtendom to diſpoſſeſs them of that right; which they enjoyed not onely as Princes, but as Founders, Patrons, Benefactours, Protectours of Churches.]

The Emperours for a long time did enjoy the privilege of conſtituting or confirming the Popes: for, ſays Platina, in the Life of Pelagius II. || nothing was then done by the Clergy in electing a Pope unleſs the Emperour approv'd the election. He did confirm P. Gregory I. and P. Agatho.

Pope Adrian with his whole Synod did deliver to Charles the Great the right and power of electing the Pope and ordaining the Apoſtolick See— He moreover defined that Archbiſhops and Biſhops in every Province ſhould receive inveſtiture from him; and that if a Biſhop were not commended and inveſted by the King, he ſhould be conſecrated by none; and whoever ſhould act againſt this Decree, him he did nooſe in the band of anathema.

---

* Αὐτὸν ἡ σύνοδος ἠξίου ψηφίσασθαι — Theod. 4. 7.

|| Τοιγάρ τοι δὸς ᾧ βούλει τὸν Ἀντιοχέων θρόνον ὦ βασιλεῦ — Theod. 5. 23.

‡ Viſum eſt Imperatoribus nullum ordinare de Conſtantinopolitana Eccleſia Pontificem —

Neſtorium quaſi utilem ad docendum Conſtantinopolin Principes evocaverunt. Lib. Brev. 6. Socr. 7. 29.

Quem tanto Imperii judicio electum, tanto Sacerdotum ſtudio proſecutum — Vinc. Lir. p. 330.

Tunc Papa principis favore Menam pro eo (Anthimo) ordinavit Antiſtitem Lib. cap. 21.

— ἀνεβίβασε τὸν Εὐτύχιον. Evag. 4. 38.

Conc. Tolet. 12. cap. 6. apud. Gr. Diſt. 63. cap. 25.

Quem Clerus & populus Civitatis elegerat piæque memoriæ Carolus Imperator ſuo conſenſu firmaverat — P. Joh. VIII. Ep. 70.

Αἰτοῦμεν τὴν ὑμετέραν ἐνδοξότητα τοῦ ἀναγαγεῖν τῷ εὐσεβεστάτῳ καὶ — ἡμῶν δεσπότῃ καὶ μεγάλῳ βασιλεῖ ἕτερον ἀντὶ Μακαρίου διὰ τὸ μὴ χηρεύειν τὸν τοιοῦτον θρόνον. Syn. VI. Act. 12. (p. 208.)

* Diſt. 63. cap. 9. Greg. I. Ep. 4. 15.
cap. 15.
cap. 16, 17, 18.

P Leo. IV. & Steph.

Diſtinc. 63. c. 6, 7. Diſtinc. 63. c. 1, 2.

† Ibid cap. 4.

|| Nihil à Clero in eligendo Pontifice actum erat niſi ejus electionem Imperator approbâſſet. Plat. in Pelagio II. (p. 154.)

Diſtinct. 63. Plat. p. 155.

Vid. Joh. Diac. & Anaſtaſ.

Diſt. 63. cap. 21.

Hadrianus autem Papa eum univerſa Synodo tradiderunt jus & poteſtatem eligendi Pontificem, & ordinandi Apoſtolicam Sedem — Inſuper Archiepiſcopos & Epiſcopos per ſingulas Provincias ab eo inveſtituram accipere definivit; & niſi à Rege laudetur & inveſtiatur Epiſcopus, à nemine conſecretur; & quicunque contra hoc decretum ageret, anathematis vinculo eum innodavit. Diſtinct. 63. cap. 22.

The like privilege did Pope Leo VIII. attribute to the Emperour Otho I. We give him, ſays he, forever power to ordain a ſucceſſour and Biſhop of the chief Apoſtolick See, and change Archbiſhops, &c. And Platina, in his Life, ſays, That being weary of the inconſtancy of the Romans, he transferr'd all authority to chuſe a Pope from the Clergy and people of Rome to the Emperour.

Largimur in perpetuum facultatem ſucceſſorem, atque ſummæ Sedis Apoſtolicæ Pontificem ordinandi, ac per hoc Archiepiſcopos ſeu Epiſcopos, &c. Diſtinc. 63. cap. 23.

Qui ſtatim Romanorum inconſtantiæ pertæſus authoritatem omnem eligendi Pontificis à Clero populòque Romano ad Imperatorem tranſtulit —— Plat. in Leo VIII. p. 291.

Now I pray if this power of confirming Biſhops do by Divine Inſtitution belong to the Pope, how could he part with it, or transfer it on others; Is not this a plain renunciation in Popes of their Divine pretence?

6. General Synods by an authority paramount have aſſumed to themſelves the conſtitution and confirmation of Biſhops. So the Second General Synod did confirm the Ordination of Nectarius Biſhop of Conſtantinople, and of Flavianus Biſhop of Antioch, (this Ordination, ſay they, the Synod generally have admitted) although the Roman Church did not approve the Ordination of Nectarius, and for a long time after did oppoſe that of Flavianus. So the Fifth Synod it ſeemeth did confirm the Ordination of Theophanius Biſhop of Antioch. So the Synod of Piſa did conſtitute Pope Alexander V. that of Conſtance Pope Martin V. that of Baſil Pope Felix V.

Conc. Conſt. Seſſ. 40.
Conc. Baſ. Seſſ. 37. (p. 98.)

Ἥνπερ ἔνθεσμον χειροτονίαν ἐδέξατο τὸ τῆς συνόδου κοινόν — Theod. 5. 9.

7. All Catholick Biſhops in old times might and commonly did confirm the Elections and Ordinations of Biſhops, to the ſame effect as Popes may be pretended to have done; that is by ſignifying their approbation, or ſatisfaction concerning the orthodoxy of their Faith, the atteſtation of their Manners, the legality of their Ordination, no canonical Impediment; and conſequently by admitting them to communion of peace and charity, and correſpondence in all good Offices, which they expreſs by returning κοινωνικαὶ ἐπιστολαὶ in anſwer to their Synodical---communicatory Letters.

Thus did St. Cyprian and all the Biſhops of that Age confirm the Ordination of Pope Cornelius, being conteſted by Novatian; as St. Cyprian in terms doth affirm, When the See of Saint Peter the Sacerdotal Chair was vacant, which by the will of God being occupied and by all our conſents confirm'd, &c.--- to confirm thy Ordination with a greater authority.

Cùm locus Petri & gradus Cathedræ Sacerdotalis vacaret, quo occupato de Dei voluntate, atque omnium noſtrum conſenſione firmato. Cypr. Ep. 52. (ad Anton.)

Ad comprobandam ordinationem tuam factam auctoritate majore —— Ep. 45. ad Corn.

To which purpoſe, each Biſhop did write Epiſtles to other Biſhops (or at leaſt to thoſe of higheſt rank) acquainting them with his Ordination and enſtallment, making a profeſſion of his Faith, ſo as to ſatisfie them of his capacity of the Function.

8. But Biſhops were complete Biſhops before they did give ſuch an account of themſelves; ſo that it was not in the power of the Pope, or of any others to reverſe their Ordination; or diſpoſſeſs them of their places. There was no confirmation importing any ſuch matter: this is plain; and one inſtance will ſerve to ſhew it; that of Pope Honorius, and of Sergius Biſhop of Conſtantinople, who ſpeak of Sophronius Patriarch of Jeruſalem; that he was conſtituted Biſhop before their knowledge, and receipt of his Synodical Letters.

Ὡς ἐξ ἀκοῆς καὶ μόνης μεμαθήκαμεν τὸν Ἱεροσολυμιτῶν χειροτονηθέντα πρόεδρον· οὔπω γὰρ τὰ ἐξ ἔθους αὐτοῦ συνοδικὰ μέχρι τοῦ νῦν ἐδεξάμεθα. Syn. VI. Act. 12. 198.

Νυνὶ δὲ ἀκούομεν Ἐπισκόπου καθεστῶτος τῶν Ἱεροσολυμιτῶν — *P.*Honor. Ib. p. 198.

9. If the deſignation of any Biſhop ſhould belong to the Pope, then eſpecially that of Metropolitans, who are the chief Princes of the Church; but this anciently did not belong to him. In Africk the moſt ancient Biſhop of the Province (without election) did ſucceed into that dignity. Where the Metropoles were fixed, all the Biſhops of the Province did convene, and with the conſent of the Clergy, perſons of quality, and the commonalty did elect him*. So was St. Cyprian Biſhop of Carthage elected. So Nectarius of Conſtantinople, Flavianus of Antioch, and Cyril of Jeruſalem, as the Fathers of Conſtantinople tell us. So Stephanus and Baſſianus rival Biſhops of Epheſus did pretend to have been choſen, as we ſaw before.

* Metropolitano defuncto, cùm in locum ejus alius fuerit ſubrogandus, Provinciales Epiſcopi ad Civitatem Metropolitanam convenire debebunt, ut omnium Clericorum atque omnium Civium voluntate diſcuſſâ ex Presbyteris ejuſdem Eccleſiæ, vel ex Diaconibus optimus eligatur. P. Leo Ep. 88.

The Metropolitan being dead, when another is to be put in his place, the Provincial Biſhops ought to meet in the Metropolitan City, that by the Votes of the whole Clergy and Citizens, out of the Prieſts or Deacons of the ſame Church, the fitteſt perſon may be choſen.

And for Confirmation, there did not need any, there is no mention of any; except that Confirmation of which we ſpake, a conſequent approbation of them from all their Fellow Biſhops, as having no exception againſt them, rendring them unworthy of communion. In the Synod of Chalcedon it was defined that the Biſhop of Conſtantinople ſhould have equal Privileges with the Biſhop of Rome; yet it is expreſly cautioned there, that he ſhall not meddle in Ordination of Biſhops in any Province, that being left to the Metropolitan—For a good time, even in the Weſtern parts the Pope did not meddle with the Conſtitution of Metropolitans; leaving the Churches to enjoy their Liberties. Afterwards with all other Rights he ſnatched the Collation, Confirmation, &c. of Metropolitans.

Μηδὲν ἐπικοινωνοῦντος τῶν ἐκείνων χειροτονίαις τοῦ ὁσιωτάτου Ἀρχιεπισκόπου τῆς βασιλίδος —— Act. 16. p. 464.

Vid Concil. Aur. Can. 7.
Apud de Marc. VI. 4. ſect. 8.

VII. Sovereigns have a power to Cenſure and Correct all inferiour Magiſtrates in proportion to their Offences: and in caſe of great miſdemeanour or of incapacity they can wholly diſcharge and remove them from their Office.

This Prerogative therefore He of Rome doth claim as moſt proper to himſelf, by Divine Sanction.

Vid. Gelaſ. Ep. 13. (p. 640.)

God Almighty alone can diſſolve the ſpiritual marriage between a Biſhop and his Church—Therefore thoſe three things premiſed (the Confirmation, Tranſlation and Depoſition of Biſhops) are reſerved to the Roman Biſhop, not ſo much by Canonical Conſtitution, as by Divine Inſtitution.

Id ideò tria hæc quæ præmiſimus non tam Conſtitutione Canonica, quàm Inſtitutione Divinâ ſoli ſunt Romano Pontifici reſervata. P. Innoc. III. in Gregor. Decret. Lib. 1. Tit. 7. cap. 2

This power the Convention of Trent doth allow him; thwarting the ancient Laws, and betraying the Liberties of the Church thereby, and endangering the Chriſtian Doctrine to be inflected and corrupted to the advantage of Papal Intereſt.

Cauſæ criminales graviores contra Epiſcopos, etiam hæreſis quod abſit, quæ depoſitione aut privatione dignæ ſunt, ab ipſo tantùm ſummo Romano Pontifice cognoſcantur, & terminentur. Conc. Trid. Seſſ. 24. cap. 5.

But ſuch a power anciently did not by any Rule, or Cuſtom in a peculiar manner belong to the Roman Biſhop.

Ἐπίσκοπος καθαιρεῖ πάντα κληρικὸν ἄξιον ὄντα καθαιρέσεως, πλὴν Ἐπισκόπου, μόνος γὰρ οὐχ οἷός τε. Conſt. Ap. 8. 28.

A Biſhop may depoſe any Clerk who deſerves it, except he be a Biſhop, whom to deprive, one Biſhop alone is not ſufficient.

Premiſing what was generally touched about Juriſdiction: in reference to this Branch we remark.

1. The exerciſing of Judgment and Cenſure upon Biſhops (when it was needful for general good) was preſcribed to be done by Synods; Provincial, or Patriarchal (Dioceſan.) In them Cauſes were to be diſcuſſed, and Sentence pronounced againſt thoſe who had deviated from faith, or committed miſdemeanours. So it was appointed in the Synod of Nice; as the African Synod (wherein St. Auſtin was one Biſhop) did obſerve, and urge in their Epiſtle to Pope Celeſtine; in thoſe notable words, Whether they be Clergy of an inferiour degree, or whether they be Biſhops, the Nicene decrees have moſt plainly committed them to the Metropolitans charge, for they have moſt prudently and juſtly diſcerned that all matters whatſoever ought to be determined in the places where they do firſt begin; and that the grace of the holy ſpirit would not be wanting to every particular Province. The ſame Law was enacted by the Synod of Antioch, by the Synods of Conſtantinople, Chalcedon, &c.

Syn. Nic. Can. 5.

Decreta Nicena ſive inferioris gradus Clericos, ſive ipſos Epiſcopos ſuis Metropolitanis apertiſſime commiſerunt: prudentiſſimè enim juſtiſſimèque viderunt quæcunque negotia in ſuis locis ubi orta ſunt finienda; nec unicuique Provinciæ gratiam S. Spiritus defuturam. Syn. Afr. Ep. ad P. Celeſt. I.

Syn. Ant. Can. 15.

Thus was Paulus Samoſatenus for his errour againſt the Divinity of our Lord, and for his ſcandalous demeanour depoſed by the Synod of Antioch. Thus was Euſtathius Biſhop of Antioch (being accuſed of Sabellianiſm and of other faults) removed by a Synod of the ſame place; the which Sentence he quietly did bear. Thus another Euſtathius Biſhop of Sebaſtia (for his uncouth garb, and fond conceits againſt marriage) was diſcarded by the Synod of Gangra. Thus did a Synod of Conſtantinople abdicate Marcellus Biſhop of Ancyra, for heterodoxy in the point concerning our Lord's Divinity. For the like cauſe was Photinus Biſhop of Sirmium depoſed by a Synod there, gathered by the Emperour's command. So was Athanaſius tryed, and condemned (although unjuſtly as to the matter and cauſe) by the Synod of Tyre. So was St. Chryſoſtome (although moſt injuriouſly) depoſed by a Synod at Conſtantinople. So the Biſhops at Antioch (according to the Emperour's order) depoſed Stephanus Biſhop of that place, for a wicked contrivance againſt the fame of Euphrates and Vincentius.

(Ann 296.) Euſeb. 7. 30.

Socr. 1. 24.

ἤνεγκε τὴν συκοφαντίαν ἢ ἐγκλ. Soz. 2. 9.

Socr. 2. 43.
Soz. 3. 14.
Socr. 1. 36.
Socr. 2. 29.
Socr. 1. 28.
Theod. 2. 10.

In all theſe Condemnations, Cenſures and Depoſitions of Biſhops (whereof each was of high rank and great intereſt in the Church) the Biſhop of Rome had no hand, nor ſo much as a little finger. All the proceedings did go on ſuppoſition of the Rule, and Laws, that ſuch Judgments were to be paſſed by Synods.

St. Chryſoſtome δεκαπέντε Ἐπισκόπους καθεῖλεν--- Depoſed fifteen Biſhops.

Act. 11. Syn. Chalc. p. 411. Hæc § cum. 4. jungenda.

2. In ſome caſe a kind of depoſing of Biſhops was aſſumed by particular Biſhops, as defenders of the Faith, and executours of Canons; their Depoſition conſiſting in not allowing thoſe to be Biſhops, whom for erroneous Doctrine, or diſorderly Behaviour (notoriouſly incurred) they deemed incapable of the Office, preſuming their places, ipſo facto void.

Γίνωσκε ἀπὸ πάσης καθολικῆς Ἐκκλησίας ἀκοινώνητον εἶναι σεαυτὸν, καὶ ἀνεσχηλον πρὸς πᾶν ὅπερ ἐστὶν ἐξ αὐθεντίας ἱερατικῆς. P. Celeſt. in Neſt. Sent. Eph. Act. p. 195.

This Pope Gelaſius I. propoſed for a Rule, That not onely a Metropolitan, but every other Biſhop hath a Right to ſeparate any perſons or any place from the Catholick Communion, according to the rule by which his his hereſy is already condemned. And upon this account did the Popes for ſo long time quarrel with the See of Conſtantinople, becauſe they did not expunge Acaſius from the roll of Biſhops, who had communicated with Hereticks. So did Saint Cyprian reject Marcianus Biſhop of Arles for adhering to the Novatians. So Athanaſius was ſaid to have depoſed Arian Biſhops, and ſubſtituted others in their places. So Acaſius and his Complices depoſed Macedonius and divers other Biſhops. And the Biſhops of thoſe times καθ᾽ ἀλλήλων, factiouſly applying a Rule taken for granted then, depoſed one another: So Maximus Biſhop of Jeruſalem depoſed Athanaſius. So Euſebius of Nicomedia threatned to depoſe Alexander of Conſtantinople, if he would not admit Arius to communion. * Acacius and his Complices did extrude Maximus Biſhop of Jeruſalem. † He alſo depoſed and expelled Cyril of Jeruſalem: * and depoſed many other Biſhops at Conſtantinople. ‖ Cyril depoſed Neſtorius, and Neſtorius depoſed Cyril, and Memnon. Cyril and Juvenalis depoſed John of Antioch. * John of Antioch with his Biſhops depoſed Cyril and Memnon. † Yea after the Synod of Epheſus; John of Antioch, gathering together many Biſhops did depoſe Cyril. Stephanus concerning Baſſianus; Becauſe he had entered into the Church with Swords— therefore he was expelled out of it again by the holy Fathers, both by Leo of Rome the Imperial City, and by Flavianus; by the Biſhop of Alexandria, and alſo by the Biſhop of Anoioch. Anatolius of Conſtantinople did reject Timotheus of Alexandria. Acacius Biſhop of Conſtantinople did reject Petrus Fullo.

Quod non ſolùm præſuli Apoſtolico facere licet, ſed cuicunque Pontifici, ut quoſlibet & quemlibet locum ſecundum regulam hæreſeos ipſius ante damnatæ, à Catholica communione diſcernant. Ep, 4.

'Επεὶ οὖν ἐχρῆν τῇ ἐπὶ κακοδοξίᾳ φωραθέντα μηκέτ' ἑτέρας ἄρχειν 'Εκκλησίας, ἢ διδασκαλικὸν ὄνομα περιφέρειν. Conc. ſub Men. (p. 10.)

Cypr. Ep. 67.

Soz. 3. 21.

Socr. 2. 42.

Πρότερον καθελών. Socr. 2. 24.

Εὐσέβιος πολλὰ διηπείλει αὐτῷ, λέγων ὅσον οὐδέπω καθαιρήσειν αὐτὸν, εἰ μὴ εἰς κοινωνίαν δέξηται τὸν Ἄρειον. Socr. 1. 37.

* Ἐξώθησαντες. Socr. 2. 38.

† Theod. 2. 26.

* Sozom. 4. 24.

‖ Socr. 7. 34.

Κύριλλος δὲ ἅμα καὶ Ἰουβεναλίῳ, ἀμυνόμενος τὸν Ἰωάννην καθαιρεῖ καὶ αὐτόν. Ibid.

* Ἡ ἁγία σύνοδος —— τοῦτον μὲν καθαιρεῖ διὰ τὰ προειρημένα πάντα, Μέμνονα δὲ ὡς συνεργὸν αὐτοῦ. Act. Syn. Eph. p. 380.

Ὡς τῶν κακῶν ἡγεμόνας καθελεῖν ἠναγκάσθημεν. Ibid. p. 320.

† Ἰωάννης δὲ καταλαβὼν τὴν Ἀντιόχειαν καὶ πολλοὺς συναγαγὼν Ἐπισκόπους καθαιρεῖ Κύριλλον, ἤδη καταληφότα τὴν Ἀλεξάνδρειαν. Socr. 7. 34.

Ἐπειδὰν αὐτὸς ἐπεισῆλθε τῇ ἁγιωτάτῃ Ἐκκλησίᾳ μετὰ ξιφῶν — ἐξώσθη διὰ τοῦτο παρὰ τῶν ἁγίων Πατέρων παρά τε τοῦ ὁσιοτάτου τῆς βασιλευούσης Ῥώμης Λέοντος, καὶ τοῦ μακαριωτάτου Φλαβιανοῦ —— καὶ παρὰ τοῦ ἐν Ἀλεξανδρείᾳ, καὶ παρὰ τοῦ Ἀντιοχείᾳ. Syn. Chalc. Act. 11. p. 405.

Ὁ μακάριος ἐν ἁγίοις Φλαβιανὸς ἐξεώσατο αὐτόν. Ibid. p. 406.

Baron. Ann. 457. Sect. 34.

P. Felix III. Ep. 4.

3. St. Cyprian doth aſſert the power of Cenſuring Biſhops, upon needful and juſt occaſion, to belong to all Biſhops, for maintenance of common Faith, Diſcipline and Peace.

Therefore, (ſaith he, writing to Pope Stephanus himſelf) dear Brother, the body of Biſhops is copious, being coupled by the glue of concord, and the band of unity, that if any of our College ſhall attempt to frame a hereſie, to to tear and ſpoil the flock of Chriſt, the reſt may ſuccour, and like uſefull and mercifull ſhepherds may gather together the ſheep of our Lord into the flock.

Idcirco enim, frater chariſſime, copioſum corpus eſt Sacerdotum, concordiæ mutuæ glutino atque unitatis vinculo copulatum, ut ſiquis ex Collegio noſtro hæreſin facere, & gregem Chriſti lacerare, & vaſtare tentaverit, ſubveniant cæteri, & quaſi paſtores utiles & miſericordes oves Dominicas in gregem colligant. Cypr. Ep. 67. (ad Steph.)

The like Doctrine is that of Pope Celeſtine I. in his Epiſtle to the Epheſine Synod.

'Ακούσατε ταῦτα παρὰ πάντων εἰς τὸ κοινὸν, κύριοι ἀδελφοί —— ἐν ταύτῃ τῇ φροντίδι σφιγγόμεθα οἱ πανταχοῦ καὶ ἀνὰ πᾶσαν οἰκουμένην τῇ ἐκείνων διαδοχῇ τὸ ὄνομα κυρίου κηρύττοντες —— &c. Conc. Eph. Act. 2. p. 324.

Τοιγαροῦν περισπούδαστόν ἐστι, καὶ προσεκτέον ὅπως καμάτῳ κοινῷ τὰ ἐμπιστευθέντα, καὶ διὰ τῆς Ἀποστολικῆς διαδοχῆς ἕως τοῦ νῦν συσχεθέντα φυλάξωμεν. Ibid. p. 325.

In matter of Faith any Biſhop might interpoſe Judgment -- Theophilus did proceed to condemn the Origeniſts without regard to the Pope.

Vid. Hier. 67. & 78.

Epiphanius did demand ſatisfaction of John of Jeruſalem.

4. This common right of Biſhops in ſome caſes is confirmed by the nature of ſuch Cenſures, which conſiſted in diſclaiming perſons notoriouſly guilty of Hereſie, Schiſm or Scandal; and in refuſing to entertain communion with them; which every Biſhop, as entitled to the common Intereſts of Faith and Peace, might do

Cypr. Ep. 67.

Ὅσοι παρὰ τοὺς ἐπὶ τῆς πίστεως τῶν Πατέρων τύπους διεπράξαντο ἑαυτοῖς ἐπάγουσι τὰ ἐκ τῶν κανόνων ἐπιτίμια. Thalaſſ. in Syn. Chalc. Act. 1. p. 191.

Ἔχομεν γὰρ τὴν ὑμετέραν ἀγάπην μεμνημένην τῶν πατρικῶν παραδόσεων μηδένα συγχωρεῖν τὰ κεκωλυμένα ποιεῖν, ἀλλὰ καὶ εἴ τις τολμήσειε φανείη πάσῃ δυνάμει ἐναντιοῦσθαι. P. Agapet. ad Petr. Hier. (p. 24.)

Εἰκότως ἡμεῖς ἐπιστάμενοι τὴν τῶν θείων κανόνων ἐκδίκησιν ἀρχιερεῦσιν μόνον ἁρμόττειν, τὴν δὲ τῆς ὀρθῆς πίστεως οὐ μόνον ἱερωμένοις ἀλλὰ καὶ παντὶ Ὀρθοδόξῳ χριστιανῷ. Menas (Tom. 4. p. 10.)

Plebs, &c.
Deum metuens —— } Cypr. Ep. 68.

Vid. P. Nich. I. Ep. 8. (p. 506.)

* Cunctis monachis ab eodem Epiphanio ſcripta venerunt, ut abſque ſatisfactione fidei nullus ei temerè communicaret. Hier. Ep. 61. (ad Pammach.) cap. 15.

Alicubine dictum, aut tibi alicubi mandatum eſt, quòd ſine ſatisfactione fidei communionem tuam ſubiremus? Ibid.

Quòd tibi non communicemus, fidei eſt. Ibid. cap. 16.

5. Indeed in ſuch a caſe every Chriſtian had a right (yea an obligation) to deſert his own Biſhop. So John of Hieruſalem having given ſuſpicion of Errour in Faith, *St. Epiphanius did write Letters to the Monks of Paleſtine not to communicate with him, till they were ſatisfied of his Orthodoxy. Upon which account St. Hierome living in Paleſtine did decline communication with the Patriarch thereof; asking him if it were any where ſaid to him or commanded that without ſatisfaction concerning his faith, they were bound to maintain communion with him. So every Biſhop, yea every Chriſtian hath a kind of Univerſal Juriſdiction.

6. If any Pope did aſſume more than was allowed in this caſe by the Canons, or was common to other Biſhops of his rank, it was an irregularity and an uſurpation. Nor would Examples, if any were producible, ſerve to juſtifie them; or to ground a right thereto, any more than the extravagant proceedings of other pragmatical and factious Biſhops in the ſame kind (whereof ſo many inſtances can be alledged) can aſſert ſuch a power to any Biſhop.

Theophilus, John of Antioch, Dioſcorus.

7. When the Pope hath attempted in this kind, his power hath been diſavowed, as an illegal, upſtart pretence.

Novam legem, &c. Vid. de Conc. Sard.

8. Other Biſhops have taken upon them, when they apprehended cauſe, to diſcard and depoſe Popes. So did the Oriental Faction at Sardica depoſe Pope Julius for tranſgreſſing, as they ſuppoſed, the Laws of the Church, in foſtering hereticks, and criminal perſons condemned by Synods. So did the Synod of Antioch threaten Depoſition to the ſame Pope. So did the Patriarch Dioſcorus make ſhew to reject Pope Leo from communion. So did St. Hilary anathematize Pope Liberius.

Soz. 3. 11.
Soz. 3. 8.
Evag. 2. 4.
Hilar. fragm.

9. Popes, when there was great occaſion, and they had a great mind to exert their utmoſt power, have not yet preſumed by themſelves, without joint authority of Synods, to condemn Biſhops; ſo Pope Julius did not preſume to depoſe Euſebius of Nicomedia, his great Adverſary, and ſo much obnoxious by his patronizing Arianiſm. Pope Innocent did not cenſure Theophilus and his Complices, who ſo irregularly and wrongfully had extruded St. Chryſoſtome, although much diſpleaſed with them; but endeavoured to get a General Synod to doe the buſineſs. Pope Leo I. (although a man of ſpirit and animoſity ſufficient) would not, without aſſiſtance of a Synod attempt to judge Dioſcorus, who had ſo highly provoked him, and given ſo much advantage againſt him, by favouring Eutyches, and perſecuting the Orthodox.

An qui in hominem Imperatorem peccaſſe dicebatur, nullâ interveniente Synodo dejici debuerunt? P. Gelaſ. I. Ep. 18.

Indeed often we may preſume that Popes would have depoſed Biſhops, if they had thought it regular, or if others commonly had received that opinion, ſo that they could have expected ſucceſs in their attempting it.

But they many times were angry when their horns were ſhort, and ſhewed their teeth when they could not bite.

10. What has been done in this kind by Popes jointly with others, or in Synods, (eſpecially upon advantage, when the cauſe was juſt and plauſible) is not to be aſcribed to the authority of Popes as ſuch. It might be done with their influence, not by their authority: ſo the Synod of Sardica (not Pope Julius) caſhiered the enemies of Athanaſius; ſo the Synod of Chalcedon (not Pope Leo) depoſed Dioſcorus; ſo the Roman Synod (not Pope Celeſtine) checked Neſtorius; and that of Epheſus depoſed him. The whole Weſtern Synod (whereof he was Preſident) had a great ſway.

Ἡ ἁγία Ῥωμαίων σύνοδος φανερὰ τετύπωκε. Cyril. ad Joh. Ant. Conc. Eph.— p 197. 332. Syn. p. 11, 60.

Ἀποστολικὸς θρόνος, καὶ ἡ σύνοδος αὐτοῦ. Conſt. Sacra. in Syn. VI. p. 11.
Ἀγάθων Ἐπίσκοπος σὺν πάσαις ταῖς συνόδοις ταῖς ἀνηκούσαις τῇ συνόδῳ τοῦ Ἀποστολικοῦ θρόνου —— Ibid p. 60.
Ἁπάσης κατὰ δύσιν συνόδου. Act. Eph. p. 332.
Sit hæc in te fixa damnatio à me, & ab his qui ſub me conſtituti Epiſcopales Sedes gubernare noſcuntur— P. Felix. ad Petrum Antioch. apud Baron. Anno 483. Sect. 68.

11. If Inſtances were arguments of Right, there would be other pretenders to the depoſing power. Particular Biſhops would have it, as we before ſhewed.

12. The People would have the power; for they have ſometimes depoſed Popes themſelves, with effect.

So of Pope Conſtantine Platina telleth us, at length he is depoſed by the people of Rome, being very much provoked by the indignity of the matter.

Tandem à Sede dejicitur à populo Romano irâ & indignitate rei percito. Plat. p. 223. P. Leo VIII. p. 291. Anaſtaſius Plat. p. 131.

13. There are many Inſtances of Biſhops being removed or depoſed by the Imperial authority. This power was indeed neceſſarily annexed to the Imperial dignity; for all Biſhops being Subjects of the Emperour, he could diſpoſe of their perſons, ſo as not to ſuffer them to continue in a place, or to put them from it, as they demeaned themſelves, to his ſatisfaction or otherwiſe, in reference to publick utility. It is reaſonable, if they were diſloyal or diſobedient to him, that he ſhould not ſuffer them to be in places of ſuch influence, whereby they might pervert the people to diſaffection. It is fit that he ſhould deprive them of temporalties.

The example of Solomon depoſing Abiathar.

1 Kings 2. 35.

Conſtantine M. * commanded Euſebius and Theogonius to depart out of the Cities over which they preſided as Biſhops.

Εὐσέβιον δὲ καὶ Θεόγνιον φεύγειν προσέταξεν ἃς ἐπεσκόπουν πόλεις. Soz. 1. 21. Τότε μὲν ἔξω καθῃρέθησαν, καὶ τῶν πόλεων ἐξηλάθησαν. Theodor. 1. 20.

* He threatned Athanaſius to depoſe him— ἐὰν γὰρ γνῶ ὡς κεκώλυκάς τινας αὐτῶν τῆς Ἐκκλησίας μεταποιουμένους ἢ ἀπείρξας τὴν εἴσοδον, ἀποστελῶ παραχρῆμα τὸν καθαιρήσοντά σε ἐξ ἐμῆς κελεύσεως, καὶ τῶν τόπων μεταστήσοντα. Socr. 1. 27. Athanaſ. Apol. 2. p. 778.

Conſtantius depoſed Paulus of Conſtantinople.

Τὸν Παῦλον σχολάζειν ἐποίησεν. Socr. 2. 7.

Conſtantius ejected all that would not ſubſcribe to the Creed of Ariminum.

Τὴν δὲ ἔκδοσιν τῆς ἀναγνωσθείσης ἐν Ἀριμίνῳ πίστεως ἐκέλευσεν εἰς τὰς περὶ Ἰταλίαν Ἐκκλησίας ἐκπέμπεσθαι, προστάξας τοὺς μὴ βουλομένους ὑπογράφειν αὐτῇ, ἐξωθεῖσθαι τῶν Ἐκκλησιῶν, καὶ εἰς τοὺς τόπους αὐτῶν ἑτέρους ἀντικαθίστασθαι. Socr. 2. 37.

The Emperour Leo depoſed Timotheus Ælurus, for which Pope Leo did highly commend and thank him.

The Emperours diſcarded divers Popes.

Evag. 2. 11. Lib. cap. 15. P. Leo I. Epiſt. 99.

Conſtantius baniſhed Pope Liberius, and cauſed another to be put in his room.

Lib. cap. 22.
Evag. 4. 41.
Evag 4. 11.

Otho put out John the Twelfth.

Juſtinian depoſed Pope Silverius, and baniſhed Pope Vigilius.

Juſtinian baniſhed Anaſtaſius Biſhop of Antioch, extruded Anthimus of Conſtantinople, and Theodoſius of Alexandria.

Neither indeed was any great Patriarch effectually depoſed without their power or leave.

Flavianus was ſupported by Theodoſius againſt the Pope.

Dioſcorus ſubſiſted by the power of Theodoſius Junior.

Εἰ παρασταίη τῷ θειοτάτῳ, καὶ εὐσεβεστάτῳ ἡμῶν δεσπότῃ. Act. 2. p. 202.

The Depoſition of Dioſcorus in the Synod of Chalcedon was voted with a reſerve of, If it ſhall pleaſe our moſt ſacred and pious Lord.

In effect the Emperours depoſed all Biſhops which were ordained beſide their general Laws: as Juſtinian having preſcribed conditions and qualifications concerning the Ordinations of Biſhops, ſubjoineth, But if any Biſhop be ordained without uſing our formentioned conſtitution, we command you that by all means he be removed from his Biſhoprick.

Si quis autem citra memoratam obſervationem Epiſcopus ordinetur, jubemus hunc omnibus modis Epiſcopatu depelli. Juſtin. Novell. 123. cap. 1.

14. The Inſtances alledged to prove the Pope's Authority in this caſe, are inconcludent and invalid.

They alledge the caſe of Marcianus Biſhop of Arles; concerning whom (for abetting Novatianiſm) St. Cyprian doth exhort Pope Stephanus, that he would direct Letters to the Biſhops of Gaul, and the people of Arles, that he being for his ſchiſmatical behaviour removed from communion, another ſhould be ſubſtituted in his room.

Cypr. Ep. 67.
Dirigantur in Provinciam & ad plebem Arelate conſiſtentem literæ, quibus abſtento Marciano alius in ejus locum ſubſtituatur——

The Epiſtle, grounding this Argument, is queſtioned by a great Critick; but I willingly admit it to be genuine, ſeeing it hath the ſtyle and ſpirit of St. Cyprian, and ſuteth his Age, and I ſee no cauſe why it ſhould be forged; wherefore omitting that defence, I anſwer, that the whole matter being ſeriouſly weighed, doth make rather againſt the Pope's cauſe than for it; for if the Pope had the ſole or Sovereign authority of rejecting Biſhops, why did the Gauliſh Biſhops refer the matter to St. Cyprian? why had Marcianus himſelf a recourſe to him?

St. Cyprian doth not aſcribe to the Pope any peculiar authority of Judgment or Cenſure, but a common one, which himſelf could exerciſe, which all Biſhops might exerciſe, It is (ſaith he) our part to provide and ſuccour in ſuch a caſe; for therefore is the body of Prieſts ſo numerous, that ——by joint endeavour they may ſuppreſs hereſies and ſchiſms.

Cui rei noſtrum eſt conſulere, & ſubvenire——
Idcircò copioſum eſt corpus Sacerdotum—
Quando ipſe eſt ab univerſis Sacerdotibus judicatus——

The caſe being ſuch, St. Cyprian earneſtly doth move Pope Stephanus to concur in exerciſe of Diſcipline on that Schiſmatick; and to proſecute effectually the buſineſs by his Letters; perſuading his fellow-Biſhops in France, that they would not ſuffer Marcianus to inſult over the College of Biſhops; (for to them it ſeemeth the tranſaction did immediately belong.)

Facere te oportet pleniſſimas literas ad coEpiſcopos noſtros in Galliis conſtitutos, nè ultra Marcianum Collegio noſtro inſultare patiantur.——

To doe thus St. Cyprian implieth and preſcribeth to be the Pope's ſpecial duty, not onely out of regard to the common Intereſt, but for his particular concernment in the caſe; that ſchiſm having been firſt advanced againſt his Predeceſſors.

Multo magis tu——

St. Cyprian alſo (if we mark it) covertly doth tax the Pope of negligence, in not having ſoon enough joined with himſelf and the community of Biſhops in cenſuring that Delinquent.

Quod nedum videatur à nobis abſtentus.

We may add, that the Church of Arles and Gaul, being near Italy, the Pope may be allowed to have ſome greater ſway there, than otherwhere in more diſtant places; ſo that St. Cyprian thought his Letters to quicken Diſcipline there, might be proper and particularly effectual.

Theſe things being duly conſidered, what advantage can they draw from this Inſtance? doth it not rather prejudice their cauſe, and afford a conſiderable objection againſt it?

We may obſerve, that the ſtrength of their argumentation mainly conſiſteth in the words quibus abſtento, the which (as the drift of the whole Epiſtle, and parallel expreſſions therein do ſhew) do ſignifie no more, than quibus efficiatur ut abſtento, which may procure him to be excommunicated, not quæ contineant abſtentionem, which contain excommunication, as P. de Marca gloſſeth; although admitting that ſenſe, it would not import much, ſeeing only thereby the Pope would have ſignified his conſent with other Biſhops; wherefore de Merca hath no great cauſe to blame us, that we do not deprehend any magnificent thing in this place for the dignity of the Papal See; indeed he hath, I muſt confeſs, better eyes than I, who can ſee any ſuch mighty things there for that purpoſe.

Marc. 7. 1.6.

As for the ſubſtitution of another in the room of Marcianus, that was a conſequent of the excommunication; and was to be the work of the Clergy and people of the place; for when by common judgment of Catholick Biſhops any Biſhop was rejected, the people did apply themſelves to chuſe another.

I adjoin the Reſolution of a very learned writer of their communion, in theſe words,

In this caſe of Marcianus Biſhop of Arles, if the right of excommunication did belong ſolely to the Biſhop of Rome, wherefore did Fauſtinus Biſhop of Lyons advertiſe Cyprian Biſhop of Carthage, who was ſo far diſtant, concerning thoſe very things touching Marcianus, which both Fauſtinus himſelf, and other Biſhops of the ſame Province, had before ſent word of to Stephen (Biſhop of Rome) who lived neareſt, being moreover of all Biſhops the chief? It muſt either be ſaid that this was done becauſe of Stephen's negligence; or what is more probable, according to the diſcipline then uſed in the Church, that all Biſhops of neighbouring places, but eſpecially thoſe preſiding over the moſt eminent Cities, ſhould join their Counſels for the welfare of the Church, and that Chriſtian Religion might not receive the leaſt damage in any of its affairs whatſoever: Hence it was that in the caſe of Marcianus Biſhop of Arles, the Biſhop of Lyons writ Letters to the Biſhop of Rome and Carthage; and again, that the Biſhop of Carthage, as being moſt remote, did write to the Biſhop of Rome as being his brother and Collegue, who by reaſon of his propinquity might more eaſily know and judge of the whole matter.

In hac Marciani Epiſcopi Arelatenſis cauſa ſi jus abſtinendi ſive excommunicandi competebat ſoli Epiſcopo Romano, cur Fauſtinus Epiſcopus Lugdunenſis Cypriano Epiſcopo Carthaginienſi longe diſſito ſemel atque iterum ſignificat ea de Marciano, quæ jam utique ipſe Fauſtinus & alii ejuſdem Provinciæ Epiſcopi nunciaverant Stephano proximiori, & omnium Epiſcoporum principi? Dicendum igitur factum id fuiſſe aut per negligentiam Stephani; aut quod magis videtur, per diſciplinam quæ tunc in Eccleſia vigebat, ut omnes quidem in circumpoſitis locis, ſed præſertim Urbium clariſſimarum Epiſcopi in commune conſulerent Eccleſiæ, viderentque nè quid detrimenti res Chriſtiana Catholica caperet. Itaque ſuper iſto Marciani Arelatenſis facinore, Lugdunenſem Epiſcopum ad Romanum & Carthaginienſem dediſſe literas, iſtum veró ut remotiſſimum dediſſe vitiſſim ſuas ad Romanum, ut fratrem & Collegam, qui in propinquo faciliùs poſſet de negotio & cognoſcere & ſtatuere. Rigalt. in Cypr. Ep. 67.

The other Inſtances are of a later date (after the Synod of Nice) and therefore of not ſo great weight; yea their having none more ancient to produce, doth ſtrongly make againſt the antiquity of this right; it being ſtrange, that no memory ſhould be of any depoſed thereby for above three hundred years, but however ſuch as they are, they do not reach home to the purpoſe.

They alledge Flavianus Biſhop of Antioch depoſed by Pope Damaſus, as they affirm. But it is wonderful they ſhould have the face to mention that Inſtance; the ſtory in ſhort being this, The Great Flavianus (a moſt worthy and Orthodox Prelate, whom St. Chryſoſtome in his Statuary Orations doth ſo highly commend and celebrate) being ſubſtituted in the place of Meletius by the Quire of Biſhops; a party did adhere to Paulinus; and after his deceaſe they ſet up Evagrius, ordaining him (as Theodoret, who was beſt acquainted with paſſages on that ſide of Chriſtendom, reporteth) againſt many Canons of the Church.

Τῷ μεγάλῳ Φλαβιανῷ χαλεπαίνοντες —— Theod.

Theod. 5. 23. Socr. 5. 15. Soz. 8. 3.

Yet with this party, the Roman Biſhops, not willing to know any of theſe things, (three of them in order, Damaſus, Siricius, Anaſtaſius) did conſpire, inſtigating the Emperour againſt Flavianus; and reproaching him as ſupporter of a Tyrant againſt the Laws of Chriſt.

Ἀλλ' ὅμως τούτων οὐδὲν εἰδέναι θέλοντες τὴν Εὐαγρίου μὲν κοινωνίαν ἠσπάζοντο, κατὰ Φλαβιανοῦ τὰς βασιλικὰς ἐκίνησαν ἀκοάς. Theod. Ib.

But the Emperour having called Flavianus to him, and received much ſatisfaction in his demeanour and diſcourſe, did demand and ſettle him in his place; The Emperour (ſaith Theodoret) wondring at his courage and his wiſdom, did command him to return home, and to feed the Church committed to him; at which proceeding when the Romans afterward did grumble, the Emperour gave them ſuch reaſons and advices that they complyed and did entertain communion with Flavianus.

Αὐτοῦ καὶ τὴν ἀνδρείαν καὶ τὴν σοφίαν θαυμάσας ὁ βασιλεὺς, τὴν ἐνεγκοῦσαν καταλαβεῖν, καὶ τὴν ἐγχειρισθεῖσαν ποιμαίνειν Ἐκκλησίαν ἐκέλευσε. Theod. Ib.

It is true, that upon their ſuggeſtions and clamours, the Emperour was moved at firſt to order that Flavianus ſhould go to Rome, and give the Weſtern Biſhops ſatisfaction: but after that he underſtood the quality of his plea, he freed him of that trouble, and without their allowance ſettled him in his See.

Here is nothing of the Pope's depoſing Flavianus; but of his embracing in a Schiſm the ſide of a Competitour, it being in ſuch a caſe needful that the Pope or any other Biſhop ſhould chuſe with whom he muſt communicate, and conſequently muſt diſclaim the other; in which choice the Pope had no good ſucceſs; not depoſing Flavianus, but vainly oppoſing him; wherefore this allegation is ſtrangely impertinent, and well may be turned againſt them.

Indeed in this Inſtance, we may ſee how fallible that See was in their judgment of things, how raſh in taking parties and fomenting diſcords; how pertinacious in a bad cauſe, how peeviſh againſt the common ſenſe of their brethren; (eſpecially conſidering, that before this oppoſition of Flavianus the Fathers of Conſtantinople had in their Letter to Pope Damaſus and the Occidental Biſhops approved, and commended him to them; highly aſſerting the legitimateneſs of his Ordination;) In fine, how little their authority did avail with wiſe and conſiderate Perſons, ſuch as Theodoſius M. was.

Theod. 5. 9. —— οἵ τε τῆς ἐπαρχίας, καὶ τῆς ἀνατολικῆς διοικήσεως συνδραμόντες κανονικῶς ἐχειροτόνησαν —— ἥντινα ἔνθεσμον χειροτονίαν ἐδέξατο καὶ τὸ τῆς συνόδου κοινόν.

Socr. 5. 15. Marc. 3. 14. Sect. 1.

De Merca repreſenteth the matter ſomewhat otherwiſe out of Socrates; but take the matter as Socrates hath it and it ſignifieth no more, than that both Theophilus and Damaſus would not entertain communion with Flavianus, as being uncapable of the Epiſcopal Order, for having violated his Oath and cauſed a diviſion in the Church of Antioch: what is this to judicial Depoſition? and how did Damaſus more depoſe him than Theophilus, who upon the ſame diſſatisfaction did in like manner forbear communion? whenas indeed a wiſer and better man than either of them, St. Chryſoſtome, did hold communion with him, and did at length (ſaith Socrates, not agreeing with Theodoret) reconcile him to them both.

They alledge the Depoſition of Neſtorius. But who knoweth not, that he was for heretical Doctrine depoſed in and by a General Synod? *Pope Celeſtine did indeed threaten to withdraw his communion, if he did not renounce his errour. But had not any other Biſhop ſufficient authority to deſert a perverter of the faith? †Did not his own Clergy doe the ſame, being commended by Pope Celeſtine for it? ||Did not Cyril in writing to Pope Celeſtine himſelf affirm, that he might before have declared, that he could not communicate with him? Did Neſtorius admit the Pope's judgment? no, as the Papal Legates did complain, * He did not admit the conſtitution of the Apoſtolical Chair. Did the Pope's Sentence obtain effect? No, not any; for notwithſtanding his threats, Neſtorius did hold his place till the Synod; the Emperour did ſeverely rebuke Cyril for his fierceneſs, (and implicitly the Pope) and did order that no change ſhould be made, till the Synod ſhould determine in the caſe; not regarding the Pope's judgment: So that this inſtance may well be retorted, or uſed to prove the inſignificancy of Papal authority then.

* Γινώσκετε, ὅτι αὐτὸς τὴν ἡμετέραν κοινωνίαν ἔχειν οὐ δυνήσεται, εἰ μὴ —— P. Celeſt. ad Cyril. in Conc. Eph. Act. p. 281.

Παντελῶς ἀπὸ τοῦ συνεδρίου ἡμῶν, καὶ τῆς χριστιανῶν συνόδου ἀποκλεισθήσῃ, ἐὰν μὴ εὐθέως τὰ κακῶς εἰρημένα ὑπὸ σοῦ διορθώσῃς. Ibid. Epiſt. ad Neſt. p. 186.

Ἀπὸ τῆς ἡμετέρας κοινωνίας ἀποχωρίζομεν. (ad Joh. Ant. p. 196.)

† Μακαρία δὲ ὅμως ἡ ἀγέλη, ἣ παρέσχεν ὁ κύριος κρίνειν περὶ τῆς ἰδίας νομῆς. P. Celeſt. ad Clerum, &c. Conſt. Act. Eph. p. 190.

|| Ἐγὼ δὲ ὁμολογῶ καί τι βουληθεὶς συνοδικῷ γράμματι φανερὸν αὐτῷ καταστῆσαι, ὅτι τῷ ταῦτα λέγοντι καὶ φρονοῦντι κοινωνεῖν οὐ δυνάμεθα. Cyril. Ep. and Celeſt. Act. Eph. p. 177.

* Τὸν τύπον τῆς Ἀποστολικῆς καθέδρας οὐκ ἐδέξατο. Conc. Eph. Act. 3. p. 331.

Vid. Theodoſ. 2. Epiſt. in Conc. Eph. p. 224, & 225.

They alledge alſo Dioſcorus of Alexandria depoſed by Pope Leo: but the caſe is very like to that of Neſtorius, and argueth the contrary to what they intend; He was, for his miſdemeanours, and violent countenancing of hereſie, ſolemnly in a General Synod accuſed, tried, condemned and depoſed; the which had long before been done, if in the Pope, his profeſſed and provoked Adverſary, there had been ſufficient power to effect it.

Bellarmine alſo alledgeth Pope Sixtus III. depoſing Polycronius Biſhop of Jeruſalem: But no ſuch Polycronius is to be found in the Regiſters of Biſhops then, or in the Hiſtories of that buſie time, between the two great Synods of Epheſus and Chalcedon; and the Acts of Sixtus, upon which this allegation is grounded, have ſo many inconſiſtences, and ſmell ſo rank of forgery, that no conſcionable noſe could endure them; and any prudent man (as Binius himſelf confeſſeth) would aſſert them to be ſpurious. Wherefore Baronius himſelf doth reject and deſpiſe them; who gladly would loſe no advantage for his Maſter. Yet Pope Nicholas I. doth precede Bellarmine in citing this traſh; no wonder, that being the Pope, who did avouch the wares of Iſidore Mercator.

Baron. Ann. 433. Sect. 58, 39.

P. Nich. I. Epiſt. 8. (ad Mich.)

They alledge Timotheus the Uſurper of Alexandria depoſed by Pope Damaſus; and they have indeed the ſound of words atteſting to them; Theſe are Heads upon which the B. Damaſus depoſed the Hereticks Apolinarius, Vitalius and Timotheus.

Fac. Herm. p. 150.

Ταῦτά ἐστι τὰ κεφάλαια ἐφ' οἷς ὁ τρισμακάριος Δάμασος καθεῖλεν Ἀπολλιναρίους, καὶ Βιταλίους, καὶ Τιμόθεον τοὺς αἱρετικούς. [illegible] ad Rufum. apud Bin. p. 396.

The truth is, that Apolinarius, with divers of his Diſciples, in a great Synod at Rome, at which Petrus Biſhop of Alexandria together with Damaſus was preſent, was condemned and diſavowed for heretical Doctrine; whence Sozomen ſaith that the Apolinarian Hereſie was by Damaſus and Peter, at a Synod in Rome, voted to be excluded from the Catholick Church.

Μαθὼν οὖν ταύτην τὴν αἵρεσιν εἰς πλλοὺς ἕρπειν προεστὼς Δάμασος ὁ Ῥωμαίων ἐπίσκοπος, καὶ Πέτρος ὁ Ἀλεξανδρείας, συνόδου γενομένης ἐν Ῥώμῃ ἀλλοτρείαν τῆς καθόλου Ἐκκλησίας ἐψηφίσαντο. Soz. 6. 25.

On which account if we conclude that the Pope had an authority to depoſe Biſhops, we may by like reaſon infer that every Patriarch and Metropolitan had a power to doe the like; there being ſo many Inſtances of their having condemned and diſclaimed Biſhops ſuppoſedly guilty of hereſie; as particularly John of Antioch, with his convention of Oriental Biſhops, did pretend to depoſe Cyril and Memnon as guilty of the ſame Apolinarian hereſie; alledging that to exſcind them was the ſame thing as to ſettle Orthodoxy. The which Depoſition was at firſt admitted by the Emperour.

Τὸ καὶ τούτους ἐκκόψαι οὐδὲν ἕτερόν ἐστι ἢ ὀρθοδοξίαν στῆσαι. Relat. Orient. ad Imp. in Act. Eph. p. 380. Ὅθεν καὶ νῦν τὴν γνωσθεῖσαν παρὰ τῆς Εὐσεβείας ὑμῶν Νεστορίου, καὶ Κυρίλλου καὶ Μέμνονος καθαίρεσιν ἐδεξάμεθα. Act. p. 385.

Ann. 536. Vict. Tun.

The next Inſtance is of Pope Agapetus (in Juſtinian's time, for ſo deep into time is Bellarmine fain to dive for it) depoſing Anthimus Biſhop of Conſtantinople. But this Inſtance being ſcanned will alſo prove ſlender and lame. The caſe was this: Anthimus having deſerted his charge at Trabiſonde did creep into the See of Conſtantinople (a courſe then held irregular and repugnant to the Canons) and withall he had imbibed the Eutychian hereſie. Yet for his ſupport he had wound himſelf into the favour of the Empreſs Theodora, *a countenancer of the Eutychian Sect. Things ſtanding thus, Pope Agapetus (as an Agent from Rome to crave ſuccour againſt the Goths preſſing and menacing the City) did arrive at Conſtantinople. Whereupon the Empreſs deſired of him to ſalute and conſort with Anthimus. But he, by petitions of the Monks, &c. underſtanding how things ſtood, did refuſe to doe ſo, except Anthimus would return to his own charge, and profeſs the Orthodox doctrine. Thereupon the Emperour joined with him to extrude Anthimus from Conſtantinople, and to ſubſtitute Menas. He (ſay the Monks in their Libel of requeſt to the Emperour) did juſtly thruſt this Anthimus from the Epiſcopal Chair of this City; your Grace affording aid and force both to the Catholick faith, and the divine Canons. The act of Agapetus was (according to his ſhare in the common Intereſt) to declare Anthimus in his judgment uncapable of Catholick communion and of Epiſcopal Function by reaſon of his heretical Opinions, and his tranſgreſſion of Eccleſiaſtical Orders; which moved Juſtinian effectually to depoſe, and extrude him; You (ſay they) fulfilling that which he juſtly and canonically did judge, and by your general edict confirming it; and forbidding that hereafter ſuch things ſhould be attempted —— And Agapetus himſelf ſaith* that it was done by the Apoſtolical authority and the aſſiſtance of the moſt faithfull Emperours. The which proceeding was completed by Decree of the Synod under Menas, and that again was confirmed

* Evag. 4. 10.

Denique petentibus Principibus, ut Anthimum Papa in ſalutatione & communicatione ſuſciperet; ille fieri inquit poſſe, ſi ſe libello probaret orthodoxum, & ad Cathedram ſuam reverteretur. Lib. c. 21.

Τὰ κατὰ τῆς Ἐκκλησίας ἀθέσμως τολμώμενα μαθὼν —— Libell. Monach. p. 7.

Ἀλλὰ τοῦτον δικαίως ἐξωθήσας τοῦ τῆς δὲ τῆς πόλεως ἱερατικοῦ θρόνου, συνεπαμυνούσης, καὶ συνεπιρρωσάσης τῇ τε καθολικῇ πίστει καὶ τοῖς θείοις κανόσι τῆς ὑμετέρας εὐσεβείας —— Ib.

Et. Syn. decr. p. 43.

Imper. Sanct. p. 128.

Ἀποφηνάμενος — μήτε καθολικοῦ μήτε ἱερέως αὐτὸν ἔχειν τὸ ὄνομα. Synodi Dec. p. 43.

Τὰ οὖν παρ' ἐκείνου δικαίως καὶ κανονικῶς κεκριμένα πληροῦντες, καὶ διὰ γενικῆς ὑμῶν νομοθεσίας κυροῦντες, καὶ τὰ τοιαῦτα τοῦ λοιποῦ τολμᾶσθαι ἀπαγορεύοντες —

* Τῆς δὲ ἐν Κωνσταντινουπόλει καθέδρας τὴν ὕβριν βοηθοῦντος τοῦ Θεοῦ, τῇ Ἀποστολικῇ αὐθεντίᾳ, καὶ τῶν πιστοτάτων βασιλέων τῇ βοηθείᾳ διορθώσαμεν. p. 24.

firmed by the Imperial Sanction. Whence Evagrius reporting the ſtory, doth ſay concerning Anthimus and Theodoſius of Alexandria, that becauſe they did croſs the Emperour's commands, and did not admit the decrees of Chalcedon, they both were expelled from their Sees.

Ὅμως δ᾽ οὖν ὡς ἀντικρὺ τῶν (l. ἀντὶ τῶν τοῦ) βασιλέως κελευσμάτων ἰόντες καὶ μὴ δεχόμενοι τὰ ἐν Χαλκηδόνι συντεθειμένα, ἄμφω τῶν οἰκείων ἐξελαθήτην θρόνων. Evag. 4. 11.

It ſeemeth by ſome paſſages in the Acts, that before Agapetus his intermedling, * the Monks and † Orthodox Biſhops had condemned and rejected Anthimus; according to the common Intereſt, which they aſſert all Chriſtians to have in regard to the common Faith.

* p 10. † p.16.

As for the ſubſtitution of Menas it was performed by the choice and ſuffrage of the Emperour, the Clergy, Nobles, and People conſpiring; the Pope onely (which another Biſhop might have done) ordaining or conſecrating him; Then (ſaith Liberatus) the Pope by the Emperour's favour did ordain Menas Biſhop, conſecrating him with his hand. And Agapetus did glory in this, as being the firſt Ordination made of an Eaſtern Biſhop by the hands of a Pope: And this (ſaid the Pope) we conceive doth add to his dignity, becauſe the Eaſtern Church never ſince the time of the Apoſtle Peter did receive any Biſhop beſides him by the impoſition of hands of thoſe who ſate in this our Chair.

Κατ᾽ ἐκλογὴν καὶ ψῆφον τῶν εὐσεβεστάτων ἡμῶν βασιλέων, καὶ τοῦ εὐαγοῦς τοῦ δὲ τῆς ἁγιωτάτης Ἐκκλησίας κλήρου——.

Tunc Papa Principis favore Menam pro eo ordinavit Antiſtitem, conſecrans eum manu ſuâ—— Lib. cap 21.

Ὅντινα τῶν καλλινικοτάτων βασιλέων ἐπηγλάϊσεν ἡ ἐκλογὴ——Act. p. 24.

Καὶ τοῦτο δὲ πιστεύομεν τῇ αὐτοῦ ἀξίᾳ προστεθεῖναι, ὅτι περ ἐκ τῶν χρόνων τοῦ Ἀποστόλου Πέτρου οὐδένα ἄλλον οὐδέποτε Ἐκκλησία Ἀνατολικὴ ἐδέξατο Ἐπίσκοπον τοῦ χερσὶ τῆς ἡμετέρας καθέδρας χειροτονηθέντα—— p. 24.

If we compare the Proceedings of Agapetus againſt Anthimus with thoſe of Theophilus againſt St. Chryſoſtome; they are (except the cauſe and qualities of perſons) in all main reſpects and circumſtances ſo like, that the ſame reaſon, which would ground a pretence of Univerſal Juriſdiction to one, would infer the ſame to the other.

Baronius alledgeth Acacius Biſhop of Conſtantinople depoſed by Pope Felix III. But Pope Gelaſius aſſerteth, that any Biſhop might, in execution of the Canons, have diſclaimed Acacius, as a favourer of Hereticks. And Acacius did not onely refuſe to ſubmit to the Pope's Juriſdiction, but ſlighted it. And the Pope's act was but an attempt, not effectual; for Acacius dyed in poſſeſſion of his See.

Baron. Ann. 484. Sect. 19. Vid. P Felic. III. Ep. 6. P. Gelaſ. Ep. 4.

Ad cujus præcipuè vocatus examen vel venire vel mittere non curavit. Gelaſ. Ep. 13.

VIII. If Popes were Sovereigns of the Church, they could effectually, whenever they ſhould ſee it juſt and fit,*abſolve--- reſtore any Biſhop excommunicated from the Church, or depoſed from his Office by Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure; for Relief of the Oppreſſed, or Clemency to the Diſtreſſed, are noble Flowers in every Sovereign Crown.

* When a Biſhop was unjuſtly cenſured upon malice or miſtake--—— when he did repent of his errour or miſcarriage—— when the caſe would upon any account bear favour or Pity———

Wherefore the Pope doth aſſume this power, and reſerveth it to himſelf as his ſpecial Prerogative; 'Tis, ſays Baronius, a privilege of the Church of Rome onely, that a Biſhop depoſed by a Synod, may without another Synod of a greater number be reſtor'd by the Pope; and Pope Gelaſius I. ſays, That the See of Saint Peter the Apoſtle has a right of looſing whatever the Sen-

Privilegium quidem ſolius Eccleſiæ Romanæ eſſe reperitur, ut depoſitus à Synodo Epiſcopus abſque alia Synodo majoris numeri reſtitui poſſit per Romanum Pontificem. Baron. *Ann.*449. Sect. 127.

Quorumlibet Sententiis ligata Pontificum Sedes B. Petri Apoſtoli jus habet reſolvendi. P. Gelaſ. *I. Ep.*13.

tences of other Biſhops have bound---- That the Apoſtolick See, according to frequent ancient cuſtome, had a power, no Synod preceding, to abſolve thoſe whom a Synod had unjuſtly condemned, and without a Council to condemn thoſe who deſerv'd it.

Sedes Apoſtolica frequenter more majorum, etiam ſine ulla Synodo præcedente & abſolvendi quos Synodus iniquè damnaverat, & damnandi nullâ exiſtente Synodo quos oportuit habuit facultatem—— Ibid.

It was an old pretence of Popes, that Biſhops were not condemned, except the Pope did conſent, renouncing communion with them. So Pope Vigilius ſaith of St. Chryſoſtome and Flavianus, that although they were violently excluded, yet were they not look'd upon as condemned, becauſe the Biſhops of Rome always inviolably kept communion with them.

— Qui licèt violenter excluſi ſunt, non tamen pro damnatis ſunt habiti, eò quòd ſemper inviolatam eorum communionem Rom. Pontifices ſervaverant. P. Vigilius in Conſtit. Athan. &c.

And before him Pope Gelaſius ſaith, that the Pope by not conſenting to the condemnation of Athanaſius, Chryſoſtome, Flavianus, did abſolve them.

Quem (Johannem Chryſ.) Sedes Apoſtolica etiam ſola, quia non conſenſit, abſolvit. P. Gelaſ. Ep. 3.

But ſuch a power of old did not belong to him. For,

1. There is not extant any ancient Canon of the Church, nor apparent footſteps of cuſtome allowing ſuch a power to him.

2. Decrees of Synods (Provincial in the former times, and Dioceſan afterwards) were inconſiſtent with, or repugnant to ſuch a power, for judgments concerning Epiſcopal Cauſes were deemed irrevocable, and appointed to be ſo by Decrees of divers Synods; and conſequently no power was reſerved to the Pope of thwarting them by Reſtitution of any Biſhop condemned in them.

*Can. Apoſt.*10, 11, 12, 13.
Conc. Nic. Can. 5. Sard. 16, 17.
Cod. Afr. 9. Conc. Antioch. 6, 15.
Evag. 2. 4.

3. The Apoſtolical Canons (which at leaſt ſerve to prove or illuſtrate ancient Cuſtome) and divers Synodical Decrees did prohibit entertaining communion with any perſon condemned or rejected by canonical Judgment; without exception, or reſervation of power of infringing or relaxing that Prohibition; and Pope Gelaſius himſelf ſays, That he who had polluted himſelf by holding communion with a condemned perſon, did partake of his condemnation.

Damnati hominis communione pollutus, damnationis ejus factus eſt particeps. P. Gelaſ. Ep. 13. (p. 640.)

4. Whence in elder times Popes were oppoſed and checked when they offered to receive Biſhops rejected in particular Synods. So St. Cyprian declared the Reſtitution of Baſilides by Pope Stephanus to be null. So the Fathers of the Antiochene Synod did reprehend Pope Julius for admitting Athanaſius and Marcellus to communion, or avowing them for Biſhops, after their condemnation by Synods. And the Oriental Biſhops of Sardica did excommunicate the ſame Pope for communicating with the ſame perſons. Which Inſtances do ſhew, that the Pope was not then undoubtedly, or according to common opinion endowed with ſuch a power.

Cypr. Ep. 68.

But whereas they do alledge ſome Inſtances of ſuch a power, I ſhall premiſe ſome general Conſiderations apt to clear the buſineſs, and then apply anſwers to the particular Allegations.

1. Reſtitution commonly doth ſignifie no more, than acknowledging a perſon (although rejected by undue Sentence) to be de jure worthy of communion, and capable of the Epiſcopal Office; upon which may be conſequent an Obligation to communicate with him, and to allow him his due Character; according to the Precept of Saint Paul, follow righteouſneſs, faith, charity, peace with them that call upon the Lord with a pure heart.

2 Tim. 2. 22.

This may be done, when any man notoriouſly is perſecuted for the Truth and Righteouſneſs. Or when the iniquity and malice of pretended judges are apparent, to the oppreſſion of Innocence. Or when the Proceſs is extremely irregular: as in the caſes of Athanaſius, of St. Chryſoſtome,---And this is not an act of Juriſdiction, but of Equity and Charity; incumbent on all Biſhops: and there are promiſcuous Inſtances of Biſhops practiſing it. Thus Socrates ſaith, that Maximus Biſhop of Jeruſalem did reſtore communion and dignity to Athanaſius. And ſo Cyril of Alexandria and John of Antioch, being reconciled and reduced to a good underſtanding of each other, did reſtore to each other their Sees; reſcinding the Cenſures, which in heat they had denounced each on other. Which ſheweth that Reſtitution is not always taken for an act of Juriſdiction; wherein one is Superiour to another; for thoſe perſons were in rank and power co-ordinate.

Ἀποδίδωσι καὶ αὐτὸς τὴν κοινωνίαν Ἀθανασίῳ καὶ τὴν ἀξίαν. Socr. 2. 24.

Ἀλλήλοις τοὺς θρόνους ἀπέδοσαν. Socr. 7. 33.

2. Reſtitution ſometime doth import no more than a conſiderable influence toward the effects of reſtoring a perſon to communion or Office; no judicial act being exerciſed about the caſe---- The Emperour writing that Paulus and Athanaſius ſhould be reſtor'd to their Sees, availed nothing---- That was a Reſtitution without effect.

Γράμματος τοῦ βασιλέως, ὥστε ἀποδοθῆναι Παύλῳ καὶ Ἀθανασίῳ τοὺς οἰκείους τόπους οὐδὲν πλέον ἤνυσεν. Socr. 2. 20.

Thus a*Popes avowing the Orthodxy, or Innocence, or Worth of a perſon, after a due information about them, (by reaſon of the Pope's eminent rank in the Church, and the regard duly had to him) might ſometimes much conduce to reſtore a perſon; and might obtain the name of Reſtitution, by an ordinary ſcheme of ſpeech.

3. Sometimes perſons ſaid to be reſtored by Popes are alſo ſaid to be reſtored by Synods, with regard to ſuch inſtance or teſtimony of Popes in their behalf. In which caſe the Judicial Reſtitution, giving right of Recovery and completion thereto, was the act of the Synod.

Note, It is an ordinary ſtyle of Votes in Synods for the Reſtitution of a Biſhop, I reſtore: Vid. Conc. Chalc. Act. 1. p. 165. That is, I give my Vote for his Reſtitution.

4. When Caſes were driven to a legal debate, Popes could not effectually reſolve without a Synod, their ſingle acts not being held ſufficiently valid. So notwithſtanding the Declarations of Pope Julius in favour of Athanaſius, for the effectual reſolution of his caſe the great Synod of Sardica was convened. So whatever Pope Innocent I. did endeavour, he could not reſtore St. Chryſoſtome without a General Synod.

Nor could Pope Leo reſtore Flavianus, depoſed in the Second Epheſine Synod, without convocation of a General Synod, the which he did ſo often ſue for to the Emperour Theodoſius, for that purpoſe. Pope Simplicius affirmed, that Petrus Moggus having been by a common decree condemned as an adulterer (or Uſurper of the Alexandrian See) could not without a common Council be freed from condemnation.

Oportebat communi decreto damnatum tanquam adulterum communi concilio damnatione liberari. Lib. c. 18.

5. Particular inſtances do not aſcertain right to the Perſon who aſſumeth any power; for buſie-bodies often will exceed their bounds.

6. Emperours did ſometimes reſtore Biſhops. Conſtantine as he did baniſh Euſebius of Nicomedia and others, ſo he did revoke and reſtore them; ſo ſays Socrates, They were recall'd from baniſhment by the Emperor's command and receiv'd their Churches. Theodoſius did aſſert to Flavianus his right, whereof the Popes did pretend to deprive him; which did amount to a Reſtitution (at leaſt leaſt to the Romaniſts who do aſſert Flavianus to be depoſed by the Popes.) Inſtantius and Priſcillianus were by the reſcript of the Emperour Gratianus reſtored to their Churches. Juſtinian did order Pope Silverius to be reſtored, in caſe he could prove his Innocence.

Ἀνεκλήθησάν τε τῆς ἐξορίας ἐκ βασιλικοῦ προστάγματος, καὶ τὰς Ἐκκλησίας ἑαυτῶν ἀπέλαβον. Socr. 1. 14. Theod. 5. 23.

Reſcriptum eliciunt, quo calcatis quæ priùs decreta erant, reſtitui Eccleſiis jubebantur: hac freti Inſtantius & Priſcillianus repetivere Hiſpanias. Sulp. Sev. 2. 63. Revocari Romam Silverium juſſit, & de literis illis judicium fieri, — ut ſi falſe fuiſſent probatæ, reſtitueretur ſedi ſuæ Liberat. Breviar. cap. 22.

7. Commonly Reſtitution was not effectual without the Emperour's conſent; whence Theodoret, although allowed by the great Synod, did acknowledge his Reſtitution eſpecially due to the Emperour; as we ſhall ſee in reflecting on his caſe.

Now to the particular Inſtances produced for the Pope, we anſwer.

1. They pretend, that Pope Stephanus did reſtore Baſilides and Martialis Spaniſh Biſhops, who had been depoſed; for which they quote St. Cyprian's Epiſtle, where he ſays, Baſilides going to Rome impoſed upon our Collegue Stephen, who lived a great way off and was ignorant of the truth of the matter; ſeeking unjuſtly to be reſtored to his Biſhoprick from which he had juſtly been depoſed.

Romam pergens Stephanum Collegam noſtrum longè poſitum, & geſtæ rei ac tacitæ veritatis ignarum fefellit, ut exambiret reponi ſe injuſtè in Epiſcopatum, de quo fuerat juſtè depoſitus. Cypr. Ep. 68.

But we anſwer; The Pope did attempt ſuch a Reſtitution by way of Influence and teſtimony, not of Juriſdiction; wherefore the reſult of his act in St. Cyprian's judgment was null, and blameable; which could not be ſo deemed, if he had acted as a judge; for a favourable Sentence, paſſed by juſt Athority, is valid, and hardly liable to Cenſure. The Clergy of thoſe places, notwithſtanding that pretended Reſtitution did conceive thoſe Biſhops uncapable; and did requeſt the judgment of St. Cyprian about it; which argueth the Pope's judgment not to have been peremptory and prevalent then in ſuch caſes. St. Cyprian denieth the Pope or any other perſon to have power of reſtoring in ſuch a caſe; and exhorteth the Clergy to perſiſt in declining the communion of thoſe Biſhops. Well doth Rigaltius ask, why they ſhould write to St. Cyprian if the judgment of Stephanus was deciſive; and he addeth that indeed, the Spaniards did appeal from the Roman Biſhop to him of Carthage. No wonder, ſeeing the Pope had no greater authority, and probably St. Cyprian had the fairer reputation for wiſdom and goodneſs. Conſidering which things, what can they gain by this Inſtance? which indeed doth conſiderably make againſt them.

—quare etſi aliqui de Collegis noſtris extiterunt, qui Deificam diſciplinam negligendam putant—— (Nec cenſuræ congruit Sacerdotum mobilis atque inconſtantis animi levitate reprehendi. Cypr. Ep. 55.

——Epiſcopatum gerere, & Sacerdotium Dei adminiſtrare non oportere.

Deſiderâſtis ſolitudinem veſtram vel ſolatio vel auxilio ſententiæ noſtræ ſublevari.

Nec perſonam in ejuſmodi rebus accipere, aut aliquid cuiquam largiri poteſt humana indulgentia; ubi intercedit & legem tribuit divina præſcriptio.

——quantum poſſumus adhortamur, nè vos cum profanis & maculatis Sacerdotibus communicatione ſacrilegâ miſceatis.

Sed cur ad Cyprianum ſi poteſtas infinita penes Romanum? Rigalt. ibid.

——datis ad Cyprianum literis appellavere Carthaginienſem adverſus Romanum. Id.

2. They alledge the Reſtitution of Athanaſius, and of others linked in cauſe with him, by Pope Julius. He, ſays Sozomen, as having the care of all by reaſon of the dignity of his See, reſtored to each his own Church.

Οἷα δὲ πάντων κηδεμονίας αὐτῷ προσηκούσης διὰ τὴν ἀξίαν τοῦ θρόνου, ἑκάστῳ τὴν ἰδίαν Ἐκκλησίαν ἀπέδωκε. Soz. 3. 8.

I anſwer, the Pope did not reſtore them judicially, but declaratively; that is, declaring his approbation of their right and innocence, did admit them to communion. Julius in his own Defence did alledge, that Athanaſius was not legally rejected; ſo that without any prejudice to the Canons he might receive him; and the doing it upon this account, plainly did not require any Act of Judgment.

Ὡς ὁμοδόξους αὐτοὺς εἰς κοινωνίαν προσήκατο. Soz. 3. 8.

Julii Epiſt. apud Ath. in Apol. 2.

Nay it was neceſſary to avow thoſe Biſhops, as ſuffering in the cauſe of the common Faith. Beſides, the Pope's proceeding was taxed, and proteſted againſt as irregular; nor did he Defend it by virtue of a general power that he had judicially to reſcind the Acts of Synods. And laſtly, the Reſtitution of Athanaſius and the other Biſhops, had no complete effect, till it was confirmed by the Synod of Sardica, backed by the Imperal authority; which in effect did reſtore them. This inſtance therefore is in many reſpects deficient as to their purpoſe.

3. They produce Marcellus being reſtored by the ſame Pope Julius. But that inſtance, beſide the forementioned defects, hath this, that the Pope was grievouſly miſtaken in the caſe; whence St. Baſil much blameth him for his proceeding therein.

Scor. 1. 36.

Baſ. Ep. 10.

4. They cite the Reſtitution of Euſtathius (Biſhop of Sebaſtia) by Pope Liberius out of an Epiſtle of St. Bazil where he ſays, What the moſt bleſſed Biſhop Liberius propoſed to him, and to what he conſented we know not; onely that he brought a Letter to be reſtored, and upon ſhewing to the Synod at Tyana was reſtored to his See.

Τίνα μὲν οὖν ἐστιν ἃ προετείνετο αὐτῷ παρὰ τοῦ μακαριωτάτου Ἐπισκόπου Λιβερίου, τίνα δὲ αὐτὸς συνέθετο, ἀγνοοῦμεν· πλὴν ὅτι ἐπιστολὴν ἐκόμισεν ἀποκαθιστῶσαν αὐτὸν, ἣν ἐπιδείξας τῇ κατὰ Τύανα συνόδῳ ἀποκατέστη τῷ τόπῳ —— Baſ. Ep. 74.

I anſwer, that Reſtitution was onely from an invalid Depoſition by a Synod of Arians at Melitine; importing onely an acknowledgment of him, upon approbation of his Faith profeſſed by him at Rome; the which had ſuch influence to the ſatisfaction of the Dioceſan Synod at Tyana, that he was reſtored. Although indeed the Romans were abuſed by him, he not being ſound in faith; for He now (ſaith Saint Baſil) doth deſtroy that faith for which he was received——

Soz. 4. 24.

Οὗτος νῦν πορθεῖ τὴν πίστιν, ἐφ' ᾗ ἐδέχθη. Baſil. ibid.

5. They adjoin, that Thodoret was reſtored by Pope Leo I. for in the Acts of the Synod of Chalcedon it is ſaid, that he did receive his place from the Biſhop of Rome.

Τὸν οἰκεῖον ἀπολαβὼν τόπον παρὰ τοῦ ἁγιωτάτου ἀρχιεπισκόπου τῆς μεγαλωνύμου Ῥώμης —— Act. 1. p. 53.

I anſwer, The act of Leo did conſiſt in an approbation of the Faith, which Theodoret did profeſs to hold; and a reception of him to communion thereupon; which he might well doe, ſeeing the ground of Theodoret's being diſclaimed was a miſpriſion, that he (having oppoſed Cyril's Writings, judged Orthodox) did err in Faith, conſenting with Neſtorius.

Εἰς κοινωνίαν ἐδέξατο —— Syn. Chalc. Act. 8. p. 368.

Theodoret's ſtate before the Second Epheſine Synod, is thus repreſented in the words of the Emperour, Theodoret Biſhop of Cyrus, whom we have before commanded to mind onely his own Church, we charge not to come to the Holy Synod, before the whole Synod being met, it ſhall ſeem good to them that he come and bear his part in it.

Θεοδώρητον μέν τοι τὸν Ἐπίσκοπον τῆς Κύρου πόλεως, ὃν ἤδη ἐνεκελεύσαμεν τῇ ἰδίᾳ αὐτοῦ μόνῃ Ἐκκλησίᾳ σχολάζειν, θεσπίζομεν μὴ πρότερον ἐλθεῖν εἰς τὴν ἁγίαν σύνοδον, ἐὰν μὴ πάσῃ ἅμα συνόδῳ συνελθούσῃ δόξῃ καὶ αὐτὸν παραγενέσθαι, καὶ κοινωνὸν γενέσθαι τῆς αὐτῆς ἁγίας συνόδου. Imp. Theod. Epiſc. ad Dioſc. in Syn. Chalc. Act. 1. p. 53.

He was not Perfectly depoſed; as other were who had others ſubſtituted in their places. He was depoſed by the Epheſine Synod.

Pro Theodoreto autem & Euſebio nullus ordinatus eſt. Liberat. 12.

Vid. Conc. Chalc. part. 2. p. 490. Excludi verò ab Epiſcopatu, &c. in Imperatoris Theod. reſcripto.

The Pope was indeeed ready enough to aſſume the Patronage of ſo very learned and worthy a man, who in ſo very ſuppliant and reſpectful a way had redreſſed to him for ſuccour; for whom doth not courtſhip mollifie? And the majority of the Synod, (being ininflamed againſt Dioſcorus and the Eutychian Party) was ready enough to allow what the Pope did in favour of him. Yet a good part of the Synod (the Biſhops of Egypt, of Paleſtine of Illyricum notwithſtanding the Pope's Reſtitution (that is, his approbation in order thereto) did ſtickle againſt his admiſſion into the Synod; crying out, have pity on us, the faith is deſtroyed, the Canons proſcribe this man, caſt out, caſt out Neſtorius his Maſter. So that the Imperial Agents were fain to compromiſe the buſineſs, permitting him to ſit in the Synod, as one whoſe caſe was dependent, but not in the notion of one abſolutely reſtored: Theodoret's preſence ſhall prejudice no man, each one's right of impleading being reſerved both to you and him.

Ἐξεβόησαν, ἐλεήσατε. ἡ πίστις ἀπόλλυται, οἱ κανόνες τοῦτον ἐκβάλλουσι; τοῦτον ἔξω βάλε, τὸν διδάσκαλον Νεστορίου ἔξω βάλε. Ibid. p. 54.

Πρόκειμα ἀπὸ τοῦ παρεῖναι Θεοδώρητον οὐδενὶ γενήσεται, φυλαττομένου δηλονότι μετὰ ταῦτα παντὸς λόγου καὶ ὑμῖν, καὶ ἐκείνῳ— Ibid.

He therefore was not entirely reſtored, till upon a clear and ſatiſfactory profeſſion of his Faith he was acquitted by the judgment of the Synod. The effectual Reſtitution of him proceeded from the Emperour, who repealed the proceedings againſt him: as himſelf doth acknowledge; All theſe things, ſays he, has the moſt juſt Emperour evacuated---- to theſe things he premiſed the redreſſing my injuries; and the Imperial Judges in the Synod of Chalcedon join the Emperour in the Reſtitution---- Let the moſt reverend Theodoret enter and bear his part in the Synod, ſince the moſt holy Archbiſhop Leo, and ſacred Emperour have reſtored his Biſhoprick to him. Hence it may appear that the Pope's Reſtitution of Theodoretus was onely opinionative, dough-baked, incomplete; ſo that it is but a ſlimm advantage, which their pretence can receive from it.

Ἀλλὰ ταῦτα πάντα λέλυκεν ὁ δικαιότατος βασιλεὺς —— Theod. Ep. 139. (ad Aſperam.)

Προτέθεικε τούτοις τῆς ἡμετέρας ἀδικίας τὴν ἴασιν —— Ep. 138. (ad Anatol.)

Εἰσίτω καὶ ὁ εὐλαβέστατος Θεοδώρητος κοινωνήσων τῇ συνόδῳ, ἐπειδὴ καὶ ἀποκατέστησεν αὐτῷ τὴν Ἐπισκοπὴν ὁ ἁγιώτατος Ἀρχιεπίσκοπος Λέων, καὶ ὁ θειότατος βασιλεὺς —— Act. 1. p. 53.

IX. It belongeth to Sovereigns to receive Appeals from all lower Judicatures, for the final determination of Cauſes; ſo that no part of his Subjects can obſtruct reſort to him, or prohibit his reviſion of any Judgment.

This Power therefore the Pope doth moſt ſtifly aſſert to himſelf. At the Synod of Florence, this was the firſt and great Branch of Authority, which he did demand of the Greeks explicitely to avow: ---- he will (ſaid his three Cardinals to the Emperour) have all the Privileges of his Church, and that Appeals be made to him. When Pope Alexander III. was adviſed not to receive an Appeal in Becket's Caſe, he replied in that profane alluſion, This is my glory, which I will not give to another. He hath been wont to encourage all People, even upon the ſlighteſt occaſions, iter arripere (as the phraſe is obvious in their Canon Law) to run with all haſte to his audience; Concerning Appeals for the ſmalleſt cauſes we would have you hold, that the ſame deference is to be given them for how ſlight a matter ſoever they be made as if they were for a greater. See, if you pleaſe in Gratian's Decree, Cauſ. 2. quæſt. 6. where many Papal Decrees (moſt indeed drawn out of the ſpurious Epiſtles of ancient Popes, but ratified by Θέλει τὰ προνόμια πάντα τῆς Ἐκκλησίας αὐτοῦ, καὶ θέλει ἔχειν τὸ ἔκκλητον —— Syn. Flor. Seſſ. 25. p. 846.

Hæc eſt gloria mea, quam alteri non dabo.

De appellationibus pro minimis cauſis volumus te tenere, quod eis pro quacunque levi cauſa fiant, non minus eſt, quam ſi pro majoribus fierent, deferendum. Alex. III. Ep. ad Vigorn. Epiſc. in decret. Greg. lib. 2. tit. 28. cap. 11.

Cauſ. 2. qu. 6. Cauſ. 3. qu. 6. Cauſ. 9. qu. 3. c. p. 16.

by their Succeſſours, and obtaining for current Law) are made for Appeals to the See of Rome.

It was indeed one of the moſt ancient encroachments, and that which did ſerve moſt to introduce the reſt; inferring hence a title to an univerſal Juriſdiction: They are the Cannos, ſays Pope Nicholas I. which will that all Appeals of the whole Church be brought to the examination of this See, and have decreed that no appeal be made from it, and that thus ſhe judge of the whole Church, but her ſelf goes to be judged by none other; and the ſame Pope, in another of his Epiſtles, ſays, The holy ſtatutes and venerable decrees have committed the cauſes of Biſhops, as being weighty matters, to be determined by us— As the Synod has appointed and uſage requires, let greater and difficult caſes be always referred to the Apoſtolick See, ſays Pope Pelagius II. They are the canons which will have the appeals of the whole Church tryed by this See, ſaith Pope Gelaſius I.

Ipſi ſunt Canones, qui appellationes totius Eccleſiæ ad hujus Sedis examen voluere deferri; ab ipſa verò nuſquam prorſus appellari debere ſanxerunt, ac per hoc illam de tota Eccleſia judicare ipſam ad nullius commeare judicium. P. Nich. I. Ep. 8.

Sacra ſtatuta, & veneranda decreta Epiſcoporum cauſas, utpote majora negotia noſtræ diſiniendas cenſuræ mandârunt. P. Nich. I. Ep. 38.

Majores vero & difficiles queſtiones (ut ſancta Synodus ſtatuit, & beata conſuetudo exigit) ad Sedem Apoſtolicam ſemper referantur. P. Pelaga. II. Epiſt. 8.

Ipſi ſunt canones qui appellationes totius Eccleſiæ ad hujus Sedis examen voluere deferri. P. Gelaſ. I. Ep. 4.

But this power is upon various accounts unreaſonable, grievous and vexatious to the Church; as hath been deemed and upon divers occaſions declared by the ancient Fathers, and grave perſons in all times; upon accounts not only blaming the horrible abuſe of Appeals, but implying the great miſcheifs inſeparably adherent to them

The Synod of Baſil thus excellently declared concerning them: Hitherto many abuſes of intolerable vexations have prevailed, whilſt many have too often been called and cited from the moſt remote parts to the Court of Rome, and that ſometimes for ſmall and trifling matters, and with charges and trouble to be ſo wearied, that they ſometime think it their beſt way to recede from their right, or buy off their trouble with great loſs, rather than be at the coſt of ſuing in ſo remote a Countrey.

Concil. Baſil. Seſſ. 31. (p. 86.) Inoleverunt autem hactenus intolerabilium vexationum abuſus permulti, dum nimium frequenter a remotiſſimis etiam partibus ad Romanam Curiam, & interdum pro parvis & minutis rebus ac negotiis quamplarimi citari, & evocari conſueverunt, atque ità expenſis & laboribus fatigari, ut nonnunquam commodius arbitrentur juri ſuo cedere, aut vexationem ſuam grave damno redimere, quàm in tam longinqua regione litium ſubire diſpendia, &c. Vid. Opt.

Saint Bernard complaineth of the miſchiefs of Appeals in his times in theſe words, How long will you be deaf to the complaints of the whole World, or make as if you were ſo? why ſleep you? when will the conſideration of ſo great confuſion and abuſe in appeals awake in you? they are made without right or equity, without due order and againſt cuſtome. Neither place, nor manner, nor time, nor cauſe, nor perſon are conſidered: they are every where made lightly and for the moſt part unjuſtly: with much more paſſionate language to the ſame purpoſe.

Bern. de Conſid. lib. 3. cap. 2. Quouſque murmur univerſæ terræ aut diſſimulas, aut non advertis?——&c.

But in the Primitive Church the Pope had no ſuch power.

1. Whereas in the firſt times many cauſes and differences did ariſe, wherein they who were condemned and worſted, would readily have reſorted thither where they might have hoped for remedy, if Rome had been ſuch a place of refuge, it would have been very famous for it; and we ſhould find Hiſtory full of examples; whereas it is very ſilent about them.

2. The moſt ancient Cuſtoms and Canons of the Church are flatly repugnant to ſuch a power, for they did order cauſes finally to be decided in each Province.

So the Synod of Nice did Decree; as the African Fathers did alledge, in defence of their refuſal to allow appeals to the Pope: The Nicene decrees (ſaid they) moſt evidently did commit both Clergymen of inferiour degrees and Biſhops to their Metropolitans.

Decreta Nicena ſive inferioris gradûs Clericos ſive Epiſcopos ſuis Metropolitanis apertiſſimè commiſerunt. Syn. Afr. in Ep. ad P. Celeſt.

So Theoph.--- in his Epiſtle, I ſuppoſe you are not ignorant what the Canons of the Nicene Council command, ordaining that a Biſhop ſhould judge no cauſe out of his own diſtrict.

*Arbitror te non ignorare quid præcipiant Niceni Concilii Canones, ſancientes Epiſcopum non judicare cauſam citra terminos ſuos——nam——*Pallad. cap. 7.

3. Afterward when the Dioceſan adminiſtration was introduced, the laſt reſort was decreed to the Synods of them (or to the Primates in them) all other appeals being prohibited; as diſhonourable to the Biſhops of the Dioceſe; reproaching the Canons, and ſubverting Eccleſiaſtical Order; To which Canon the Emperour Juſtinian referred; For it is decreed by our Anceſtours that againſt the Sentence of theſe Prelates there ſhould be no Appeal. So Conſtantius told Pope Liberius---that thoſe things which had a form of Judgement paſt on them could not be reſcinded. This was the practice (at leaſt in the Eaſtern parts of the Church) in the time of Juſtinian: as is evident by the Conſtitutions extant in the Code and in the Novels.

Note, That the Synod of Conſtantinople (Can. 6.) mentioning Appeals to the Emperour, ſecular Judicatories, a General Synod, ſaith, Ἀτιμάσους τοὺς τῆς διοικήσεως Ἐπισκόπους, &c. Syn. Conſt. Can. 6.

Concil. Conſtantinop. Can. 2, 6.

Concil. Chalced. Can. 2, 17.

Nam contra horum Antiſtitum Sententias non eſſe locum Apellationi à majoribus noſtris conſtitutum eſt. Cod. Lib. 1. tit. 4. cap. 29.

Τὰ ἤδη τύπον ἐσχηκότα ἀναλύεσθαι οὐ δύναται. Theod. 11. 16.

Nov. 123. cap. 22.

Cod. Lib. 1. tit. 4 Sect. 29. Vid. Græc.

4. In derogation to this pretence divers Provincial Synods expreſly did prohibit all Appeals from their deciſions.

Can. 12. Conc. Ant. Can. 15.

Conc. Carth. Can. 31.

That of Milevis, --- Let them appeal onely to African Councils or the Primates of Provinces; and he who ſhall think of appealing beyond Sea, let him be admitted into communion by none in Africk.

Non provocent niſi ad Africana Concilia, vel ad Primates Provinciarum; ad tranſmarina autem qui putaverit appellandum, à nullo infra Africam in communionem ſuſcipiatur. Conc. Milev. cap. 22. Conc. Afr. Can. 72.

For if the Nicene Council took this care of the inferiour Clergy, how much more did they intend it ſhould relate to Biſhops alſo?

Nam ſi de inferioribus Clericis in Concilio Niceno hoc præcaverunt; quanto magis de Epiſcopis voluit obſervari? Conc. Afr. Can. 105. (vel Epiſt.)

5. All perſons were forbidden to entertain communion with Biſhops condemned by any one Church, which is inconſiſtent with their being allowed relief at Rome.

6. This is evident in the caſe of Marcion, by the aſſertion of the Roman Church at that time.

7. When the Pope hath offered to receive Appeals, or to meddle in caſes before decided, he hath found oppoſition and reproof. Thus when Feliciſſimus and Fortunatus, having been cenſured and rejected from communion in Africk, did apply themſelves to Pope Cornelius, with ſupplication to be admitted by him; Saint Cyprian maintaineth that fact to be irregular and unjuſt, and not to be countenanced, for divers reaſons. Likewiſe, when Baſilides and Martialis, being for their crimes depoſed in Spain, had recourſe to Pope Stephanus for Reſtitution, the Clergy and People there had no regard to the judgment of the Pope; the which their reſolution Saint Cyprian did commend and encourage.

Cypr. Ep. 55. (ad Cornelium.)

Cypr. Ep. 68.

When Athanaſius, Marcellus, Paulus, &c. having been condemned by Synods, did apply themſelves for relief to Pope Julius; the Oriental Biſhops did highly tax this courſe as irregular; diſclaiming any power in him to receive them, or meddle in their cauſe. Nor could Pope Julius by any Law or Inſtance diſprove their plea; Nor did the Pope aſſert to himſelf any peculiar authority to reviſe the Cauſe, or otherwiſe juſtifie his proceeding than by right common to all Biſhops of vindicating Right and Innocence, which were oppreſſed; and of aſſerting the Faith, for which they were perſecuted. Indeed at firſt the Oriental Biſhops were contented to refer the cauſe to Pope Julius as Arbitratour; which ſignifieth that he had no ordinary right; but afterward, either fearing their Cauſe or his Prejudice, they ſtarted, and ſtood to the canonicalneſs of the former deciſion.

The conteſt of the African Church with Pope Celeſtine, in the Cauſe of Apiarius is famous; and the Reaſons which they aſſign for repelling that Appeal, are very notable peremptory.

8. Divers of the Fathers alledge like reaſons Appeals. Saint Cyprian alledgeth theſe:

Refer. ad Sect. 7. Vid. Supr.

Oportet utique eos quibus præſumus non circumcurſare, nec Epiſcoporum concordiam cohærentem ſuâ ſubdolâ & fallaci temeritate collidere, ſed agere illic cauſam ſuam, ubi & accuſatores habere, & teſtes ſui criminis poſſint. Cypr. Ep. 55.

1. Becauſe there was an Eccleſiaſtical Law againſt them.

2. Becauſe they contain iniquity; as prejudicing the right of each Biſhop granted by Chriſt, in governing his flock.

3. Becauſe the Clergy and People ſhould not be engaged to run gadding about.

4. Becauſe Cauſes might better be decided there, where witneſſes of fact might eaſily be had.

5. Becauſe there is every where a competent authority, equal to any that might be had otherwhere.

6. Becauſe it did derogate from the gravity of Biſhops to alter their Cenſure----

7. Pope Liberius deſired of Conſtantius that the Judgment of Athanaſius might be made in Alexandria for ſuch reaſons, becauſe there the accuſed, the accuſers, and their defender were.

——Ἔνθα ὁ ἐγκαλούμενος, ϗ οἱ ἐγκαλοῦντες εἰσι, ϗ ὁ ἀπολογούμενος αὐτῷ—— Theod. 11. 16.

8. St. Chryſoſtome's Agument againſt Theophilus meddling in his caſe may be ſet againſt Rome as well as Alexandria.

9. St. Auſtin in matter of appeal, or rather of reference to candid Arbitration (more proper for Eccleſiaſtical cauſes) doth conjoin other Appoſtolical Churches whith that of Rome; For the buſineſs, ſays he, was not about Prieſts and Deacons or the inferiour Clergy, but the Collegues [Biſhops,] who may reſerve their cauſe entire for the judgment of their Collegues, eſpecially thoſe of the Apoſtolical Churches. He would not have ſaid ſo, if he had apprehended that the Pope had a peculiar right of reviſing Judgments.

Neque enim de Presbyteris aut Diaconis, aut inferioris ordinis Clericis, ſed de Collegis agebatur qui poſſunt aliorum Collegarum judicio, præſertim Apoſtolicarum Eccleſiarum, cauſam ſuam integram reſervare Aug. Ep. 162.

10. Pope Damaſus (or rather Pope Siricius) doth affirm himſelf incompetent to judge in a caſe, which had been afore determined by the Synod of Capua; --but, ſays he, ſince the Synod of Capua has thus determined it, we perceive we cannot judge it.

Sed cùm hujuſmodi fuerit Concilii Capuenſis judicium——advertimus quod à nobis judicandi forma competere non poſſit.

11. Anciently there were no Appeals (properly ſo called or juriſdictional) in the Church; they were, as Socrates telleth us, introduced by Cyril of Hieruſalem; who firſt did appeal to a greater Judicature, againſt Eccleſiaſtical rule and cuſtome. This is an Argument, that about that time (a little before the great Synod of Conſtantinople) greater Judicatories, or Dioceſan Synods were eſtabliſhed; whenas before Provincial Synods were the laſt reſorts.

Τοῦτο μὲν οὖν μόνος καὶ πρῶτος παρὰ τὸ συνηθὲς τῷ Ἐκκλησιαστικῷ κανόνι Κύριλλος ἐποίησεν, ἐκκλήτοις ὡς ἐν δημοσίῳ δικαστηρίῳ χρησάμενος. Socr. 2. 40. Καθαιρεθεὶς δ' οὖν ὅμως ἐκκλήτου βιβλίον τοῖς καθελοῦσι διαπεμψάμενος μεῖζον ἐπικαλέσατο δικαστήριον. Ibid.
Being depoſed he ſent a libel of Appeal to them who depoſed him, appealing to a greater Judicature.

12. Upon many occaſions Appeals were not made to the Pope as in all likelihood they would have been, if it had been ſuppoſed that a power of receiving them did belong to him. Paulus Samoſatenus did appeal to the Emperour. The Donatiſts did not appeal to the Pope, but to the Emperour. Their Cauſe was by the Emperour referred not to the Pope ſingly (as it ought to have been, and would have been by ſo juſt a Prince if it had been his right) but to him and other judges as the Emperour's Commiſſioners. Athanaſius did firſt appeal to the Emperour. St Chryſoſtome did requeſt the Pope's Succour, but he did not appeal to him as judge; altho' he knew him favourably diſpoſed, and the Cauſe ſure in his hand; but he appealed to a General Council; the which Innocent himſelf did conceive neceſſary for deciſion of that Cauſe.

Illos verò ab Eccleſiaſtico judicio provocaſſe, &c. Aug. Ep.
Ad Imperatorem appellaverunt. Aug. de Unit. Eccl. cap 16.

Quid quod nec ipſe Uſurpavit; rogatus Imperator judices miſit Epiſcopos qui cum ipſo ſederent, & de tota illa cauſa quod juſtum videretur ſtatuerent. Aug. Ep. 162.

Ἀναγκαία ἐστὶ διάγνωσις συνοδική. Sozom. 8. 26.

[There are in Hiſtory innumerable Inſtances of Biſhops being condemned and expelled from their Sees, but few of appeals; which is a ſign that was no approved remedy in common opinion.]

Eutyches did appeal to all the Patriarchs. Theodoret did intend to appeal to all the Weſtern Biſhops.

Infrà.
Infrà.

13. Thoſe very Canons of Sardica (the moſt unhappy that ever were made to the Church) which did introduce appeals to the Pope, do yet upon divers accounts prejudice his claim to an original right, and do upon no account favour that uſe of them, to which (to the overthrow of all Eccleſiaſtical liberty and good diſcipline) they have been perverted. For,

1. They do pretend to confer a Privilege on the Pope; which argueth that he before had no claim thereto.

2. They do qualifie and reſtrain that Privilege to certain Caſes and Forms; which is a ſign, that he had no power therein flowing from abſolute Sovereignty; for it is ſtrange, that they who did Pretend and intend ſo much to favour him ſhould clip his power.

3. It is not really a power which they grant of receiving Appeals in all cauſes; but a power of conſtituting Judges, qualified according to certain conditions, to reviſe a ſpecial ſort of cauſes concerning the Judgment and Depoſition of Biſhops. Which conſiderations do ſubvert his pretence to original and univerſal Juriſdiction upon Appeals.

14. Some Popes did challenge Juriſdiction upon Appeals, as given them by the Nicene Canons, meaning thereby thoſe of Sardica; which ſheweth they had no better plea, and therefore no original right. And otherwere we ſhall conſider, what validity thoſe Canons may be allowed to have.

15. The General Synod of Chalcedon (of higher authority than that af Sardica) derived Appeals, at leaſt in the Eaſtern Churches, into another chanel; namely to the Primate of each Dioceſe, or to the Patriarch arch of Conſtantinople. That this was the laſt reſort doth appear, from that otherwiſe they would have mentioned the Pope.

Can. 9, 17.

16. Appeals in caſes of Faith, or general Diſcipline were indeed ſometimes made to the conſideration of the Pope; but not onely to him, but to all other Patriarchs and Primates, as concerned in the common maintenance of the common Faith, or Diſcipline. So did Eutyches appeal to the Patriarchs.

17. The Pope even in later times, even in the Weſtern parts hath found rubs in his Trade of Appeals. Conſider the ſcuffle between Pope Nicholas I. and Hincmarus Biſhop of Rhemes.

Baron. Anno 865 —— P. Nic. I. Ep. 37, &c.

18. Chriſtian States, to prevent the intolerable vexations and miſchiefs ariſing from this practice, have been conſtrained to make Laws againſt them. Particularly England.

Vid. Matt. Paris, Ann. 1094. Statutes of Proviſors, Premunire, &c.

In the Twelfth Age Pope Paſchal II. complained of King Henry I. That he deprived the oppreſſed of the benefit of appealing to the Apoſtolick See. It was one of King Henry I. Laws, — none is permitted to cry from thence, no judgment is thence brought to the Apoſtolick See. Foreign judgments we utterly remove, — there let the cauſe be tried where the crime was committed. It was one of the Grievances ſent to Pope Innocent IV. That Engliſhmen were drawn out of the Kingdom by the Pope's Authority, to have their cauſes heard.

Vos oppreſſis Apoſtolicæ Sedis appellationem ſubtrahitis. Eadm. p. 113.

Nullus inde clamor, nullum inde judicium ad Sedem Apoſtolicam deſtinantur. Eadm. p. 113.

Peregrina judicia modis omnibus ſubmovemus. Hen.I. Leg. cap. 31.

Ibi ſemper cauſa agatur, ubi crimen admittitur. Ibid.

Quòd Anglici extra regnum in cauſis auctoritate Apoſtolicâ trahuntur. Matt. Paris, p. 699. 10.

Nor in after-times were Appeals by Law in any caſe permitted without the King's leave; although ſometimes by the facility of Princes, or difficulty of times, the Roman Court (ever importunate and vigilant for its profits) did obtain a relaxation or neglect of Laws inhibiting Appeals.

19. There were Appeals from Popes to General Councils very frequently. Vid. The Senate of Paris after the Concordats between Lewis XI. and Pope Leo X.

20. By many Laws and inſtances it appeareth, that Appellations have been made to the Emperours in the greateſt Cauſes; and that without Popes reclaiming or taking it in bad part. St. Paul did * appeal to Cæſar. Paulus Samoſatenus did appeal to Aurelianus. So the Donatiſts did appeal to Conſtantine. † Athanaſius to Conſtantine. The || Egyptian Biſhops to Conſtantine. * Priſcillianus to Maximus. Idacius to Gracian. So that Canons were made to reſtrain Biſhops from recourſe ad Comitatum.

Πᾶσα ψυχὴ. Rom. 13. 1.

* Act. 25.

Ad Imperatorem appellaverunt. Aug. de Unit. Eccl. cap 16.

† Apol. 2. p. 804.

|| Ath. Apol. 2. p. 797, 798.

* Ad Principem provocavit. Sulp. Sev. 2. 64. Sulp. Sev. 2. 63. Conc. Ant. Can. P. de Marca. 4. 4. ——

21. Whereas they do alledge Inſtances for Appeal, thoſe well conſidered do prejudice their Cauſe; for they are few, in compariſon to the occaſions of them, that ever did ariſe; they are near all of them late, when Papal encroachments had grown; ſome of them are very impertinent to the cauſe; ſome of them may ſtrongly be retorted againſt them; all of them are invalid.

If the Pope originally had ſuch a right (known, unqueſtionable, prevalent) there might have been producible many, ancient, clear, proper, concluding Inſtances.

All that Bellarmine (after his own ſearch, and that of his Predeceſſours in Controverſie) could muſter, are theſe following; upon which we ſhall briefly reflect: (adding a few others, which may be alledged by them.)

Bell. 2. 21.

Ann. 142.

He alledgeth Marcion, as appealing to the Pope.

Epiph. hær. 41.
Ἐξεώσθη τῆς ἐκκλησίας.
Ἀποδιδράσκει καὶ ἄνεισιν εἰς τὴν Ῥώμην.

Οὐ δυνάμεθα ἄνευ τῆς ἐπιτροπῆς τοῦ τιμίου Πατρός σου τοῦτο ποιῆσαι. μία γὰρ ἐστὶ πίστις, καὶ μία ὁμόνοια, καὶ οὐ δυνάμεθα ἐναντιωθῆναι τῷ καλῷ συλλειτουργῷ Πατρὶ τῷ σῷ.

The truth was, that Marcion for having corrupted a Maid was by his own Father, Biſhop of Sinope, driven from the Church; whereupon he did thence fly to Rome, there begging admittance to communion, but none did grant it; at which he expoſtulating, they replied, We cannot without the permiſſion of thy honourable Father doe this; for there is one faith, and one concord; and we cannot croſs thy Father our good fellow-Miniſter: This was the caſe and iſſue; and is it not ſtrange this ſhould be produced for an Appeal, which was only a ſupplication of a fugitive criminal to be admitted to communion; and wherein is utterly diſclaimed any power to thwart the Judgment of a particular Biſhop or Judge, upon account of unity in common faith and peace? ſhould the Pope return the ſame anſwer to every Appellant, what would become of his Privilege? So that they muſt give us leave to retort this as a pregnant Inſtance againſt their pretence.

Cypr. Ep. 55. Ann. 252.

He alledgeth the forementioned addreſs of Feliciſſimus and Fortunatus to Pope Cornelius; the which was but a factious circumcurſation of deſperate wretches; the which, or any like it, St. Cyprian argueth the Pope in law and equity obliged not to regard; becauſe a definitive Sentence was already paſſed on them by their proper Judges in Africk, from whom in conſcience and reaſon there could be no Appeal. So Bellarmine would filtch from us one of our invincible Arguments againſt him.

Cypr. Ep. 68.

He alſo alledgeth the caſe of Baſilides; which alſo we before did ſhew to make againſt him; his application to the Pope being diſavowed by St. Cyprian, and proving ineffectual.

Theſe are all the Inſtances which the firſt three hundred years did afford; ſo that all that time this great Privilege lay dormant.

Ann. 350.

Διδάσκοντες ἐπὶ καταλύσεως τῆς πίστεως τὰς καθαιρέσεις γεγενῆσθαι. Socr. 2. 20.

He alledgeth the recourſe of Athanaſius to Pope Julius; but this was not properly to him as to a Judge, but as to a fellow-Biſhop, a friend of truth and right, for his ſuccour and countenance againſt perſecutours of him, chiefly for his Orthodoxy. The Pope did undertake to examine his Plea, partly as Arbitratour upon reference of both Parties; partly for his own concern to ſatisfie himſelf whether he might admit him to communion. And having heard and weighed things, the Pope denied that he was condemned in a legal way by competent Judges; and that therefore the pretended Sentence was null; and conſequently he did not undertake the cauſe as upon Appeal. But whereas his proceeding did look like an exerciſe of Juriſdiction, derogatory to a Synodical reſolution of the caſe, he was oppoſed by the Oriental Biſhops, as uſurping an undue power. Unto which charge he doth not anſwer directly by aſſerting to himſelf any ſuch authority by Law or Cuſtome; but otherwiſe excuſing himſelf. In the iſſue, the Pope's Sentence was not peremptory; untill upon examining the merits of the cauſe it was approved for juſt as to matter by the Synod of Sardica. Theſe things otherwhere we have largely ſhewed; and conſequently this Inſtance is deficient.

Socr. 2. 20.

Ὥστε (Athanaſius & Paulus) τὰ καθ' αὐτοὺς καὶ τὰ τῆς πίστεως ἐπὶ οἰκουμενικῆς συνόδου τέλος λαβεῖν. Socr. 2. 20.

He alledgeth St. Chryſoſtome, as appealing to Pope Innocent I. but if you read his Epiſtles to that Pope, you will find no ſuch matter; he doth onely complain, and declare to him the iniquity of the proceſs againſt him, not as to a Judge, but as to a friend and fellow-Biſhop concerned, that ſuch injurious and miſchievous dealings ſhould be ſtopped; requeſting from him not judgment of his cauſe, but ſuccour in procuring it by a General Synod; to which indeed he did appeal, as Sozomen expreſly telleth us; and as indeed he doth himſelf affirm. Accordingly Pope Innocent did not aſſume to himſelf the judgment of his cauſe, but did endeavour to procure a Synod for it, affirming it to be needfull; why ſo, if his own Judgment, according to his Privilege did ſuffice? why indeed did not Pope Innocent, (being well ſatisfied in the caſe, yea paſſionately touched with it) preſently ſummon Theophilus and his adherents, undertaking the Trial? did Pope Nicholas I. proceed ſo in the caſe of Rhotaldus? why was he content onely to write Conſolatory Letters to him, and to his people; not pretending to undertake the deciſion of his cauſe? if the Pope had been endowed with ſuch a Privilege, it is morally impoſſible that it ſhould not have ſhone forth clearly upon this occaſion; it could hardly be that St. Chryſoſtome himſelf ſhould not in plain terms avow it; that he ſhould not formally apply to it as the moſt certain and eaſie way of finding relief? that he ſhould not earneſtly mind and urge the Pope to uſe his Privilege: why ſhould he ſpeak of that tedious and difficult way of a General Synod, when ſo ſhort and eaſie a way was at hand? but the truth is, he did not know any ſuch power the Pope had by himſelf. St. Chryſoſtome rather did conceive all ſuch foreign Judicatures to be unreaſonable and unjuſt; for the Argument which he darteth at Theophilus doth as well reach the Papal Juriſdiction upon appeals; for It was (ſaith he) not congruous, that an Egyptian ſhould judge thoſe in Thrace; why not an Egyptian as well as an Italian? and If (ſaith he) this cuſtome ſhould prevail, and it become lawfull for thoſe who will to go into the Pariſhes of others, even from ſuch diſtances, and to caſt out whom any one pleaſeth, doing by their own authority what they pleaſe, know that all things will go to wreck——Why may not this be ſaid of a Roman as well as of an Alexandrian? St. Chryſoſtome alſo (we may obſerve) did not onely apply himſelf to the Pope, but to other Weſtern Biſhops; particularly to the Biſhops of Milain and Aquileia; whom he called Beatiſſimi Domini: did appeal to them?

Tom. 7. Epiſt. 122, 123.

Πρὸς τὴν ὑμετέραν ἀναδραμεῖν ἀγάπην.

Παρακαλῶ τὴν ὑμετέραν ἀγάπην διαναστῆναι, καὶ συναλγῆσαι· καὶ πάντα ποιῆσαι, ὥστε στῆναι ταῦτα τὰ κακά.

Οἰκουμενικὴν ἐπικαλεῖ τὴν σύνοδον. Soz. 8. 17.

Ἀλλ' ἀπόντων ἡμῶν καὶ σύνοδον ἐπηγγελμένων. Theod. 5. 34.

Οἰκουμενικὴν δὲ σύνοδον συναγεῖραι σπουδάζων. Soz. 8. 26.

Ἀναγκαία ἐστὶ διάγνωσις συνοδική. Ibid.

Ἰννοκέντιος δὲ ὁ Ῥώμης, καὶ Φλαβιανὸς Ἀντιοχείας οὐκ ἐκοινώνησαν τῇ ἐκβολῇ Ἰωάννου, ἀλλὰ διὰ γραμμάτων τὸ πλῆθος τὸν κλῆρον παρεμύθησαν, καὶ ἐδυσχέραινον τοῖς τολμήμασι. Theoph. Soz. 8. 26.

Οὐ γὰρ ἀκόλουθον ἦν τὸν ἐξ Αἰγύπτου τοῖς ἐν Θρᾴκῃ δικάζειν.

Εἰ γὰρ τοῦτο κρατήσειε τὸ ἔθος καὶ ἐξὸν γένοιτο τοῖς βουλομένοις εἰς ἀλλοτρίας ἀπιέναι παροικίας, καὶ ἐκ τοσούτων διαστημάτων, καὶ ἐκβάλλειν οὓς ἂν ἐθέλοι τις κατ' ἐξουσίαν ἰδίαν πράττοντας ἅπερ ἂν ἐθέλωσιν, ἴστε ὅτι πάντα οἰχήσεται. —— Epiſt. 122.

Scripſimus iſta & ad Venerium Mediolanenſem, & ad Chromatium Aquilegienſem Epiſcopum. Pallad. cap. 2.

He alledgeth Flavianus Biſhop of Conſtantinople appealing to Pope Leo: but let us conſider the ſtory. Flavianus for his Orthodoxy (or upon other accounts) very injuriouſly treated and oppreſſed by Dioſcorus, who was ſupported by the favour of the Imperial Court; having in his caſe no other remedy did appeal to the Pope; who alone among Flavianus autem contra ſe prolatâ ſententiâ per ejus legatos Sedem Apoſtolicam appellavit libello Liber. cap. 12.

Neceſſitate coactus fuit ità agere, eò quòd reliqui Patriarchæ adeſſent —— Marc. 7. 7.

the Patriarchs had diſſented from thoſe Proceedings. The Pope was himſelf involved in the cauſe, being of the ſame perſuaſion; having been no leſs affronted and hardly treated (conſidering their power, and that he was out of their reach) and condemned by the ſame Adverſaries.

To him therefore as to the leading Biſhop of Chriſtendom, in the firſt place intereſted in defence of the common Faith, together with a Synod, not to him as ſole Judge, did Flavianus appeal. He (ſaith Placidia in her Letter to Theodoſius) did appeal to the Apoſtolick See, and to all the Biſhops of theſe parts; that is to the reſt of Chriſtendom, which were not engaged in the Party of Dioſcorus; and to whom elſe could he have appealed?

Ὡς προσηγήμενον —— Placidia. Πρὸς τὸν Ἀποστολικὸν θρόνον ϗ πρὸς πάντας Ἐπισκόπους τῶν μερῶν τούτων. Syn. Chalc. *Act.*1. p. 26.

Valentinian in his Epiſtle to Theodoſius in behalf of Pope Leo ſaith, that he did appeal according to the manner of Synods; and whatever thoſe words ſignifie, that could not be to the Pope as a ſingle Judge; for before that time in whatever Synod was ſuch an appeal made? what cuſtome could there be favourable to ſuch a pretence?

Κατὰ τὸ ἔθος τῶν συνόδων. p 25.

But what his Appeal did import is beſt interpretable by the proceeding conſequent; which was not the Pope's aſſuming to himſelf the Judicature either immediately or by delegation of Judges, but endeavouring to procure a General Synod for it; the which endeavour doth appear in many Epiſtles to Theodoſius and to his Siſter Pulcheria, ſoliciting that ſuch a Synod might be indicted by his order: All the Biſhops (ſaith Pope Leo) with ſighs and tears do ſupplicate your Grace, that becauſe our Agents did faithfully reclaim, and Biſhop Flavianus did preſent them a libel of appeal, you would command a General Synod to be celebrated in Italy.

Omnes manſuetudini veſtræ cum gemitibus & lachrymis ſupplicant Sacerdotes, ut quia & noſtri fideliter reclamârunt, & ejuſdem libellum appellationis Flavianus Epiſcopus dedit, generalem Synodum jubeatis intra Italiam celebrari —— P. Leo Epiſt. 25.

Dioſcorus and his Party would ſcarce have been ſo ſilly as to condemn Flavianus, if they had known, (which, if it had been a caſe clear in law or obvious in practice, they could not but have known) that the Pope, who was deeply engaged in the ſame cauſe, had a power to reverſe (and revenge) there proceedings. Nor would the good Emperour Theodoſius ſo pertinaciouſly have maintained the proceedings of that Epheſine Synod, if he had deemed the Pope duly Sovereign Governour and Judge; or that a right of ultimate Deciſion upon Appeal did appertain to him. Nor had the Pope needed to have taken ſo much pains in procuring a Synod, if he could have judged without it. Nor would Pope Leo (a man of ſo much ſpirit and zeal for the dignity of his See) have been ſo wanting to the maintenance of his right, as not immediately to have proceeded unto Trial of the Cauſe, without precarious attendance for a Synod, if he thought his pretence to ſuch Appeals as we now ſpeak of, to have been good or plauſible in the world at that time.

The next caſe is that of Theodoret. His words indeed, framed according to his condition, needing the patronage of Pope Leo, being then high in reputation, do ſound favourably; but we abſtracting from the ſound of words muſt regard the reaſon of things. His words are theſe, I expect the ſuffrage of your Apoſtolick See, and beſeech and earneſtly entreat your holineſs to ſuccour me who appeal to your right and juſt Judicature.

Ἐγὼ δὲ τοῦ Ἀποστολικοῦ ὑμῶν θρόνου περιμένω τὴν ψῆφον, ϗ ἱκετεύω ϗ ἀντιβολῶ τὴν ἁγιότητα ἐπαμῦναι μοι τὸ ὀρθὸν ϗ δίκαιον ἐπικαλουμένῳ κριτήριον. Ep. 113. (ad P. Leonem.)

τῆ ὑμῶν
Theod.

He never had been particularly or perſonally judged, and therefore did not need to appeal as to a Judge; nor therefore is his application tc.

plication to the Pope to be interpreted for ſuch; but rather as to a charitable ſuccourer of him in his diſtreſs, by his countenance and endeavour to relieve him.

Vid. Ep. 112. ad Domnum. Ἀλλὰ καί με τὸν ἀπόντα ὁμοίως καλάμῳ κατέσφαξεν, οὔτε καλέσας εἰς δικαστήριον, οὔτε παρόντα κρίνας—— μετὰ τοσούτους ἱδρῶτας καὶ πόνους μὴ δικασάμενος κατεκρίθην.

Οἱ δὲ δικαιότατοι δικασταὶ τὸν ἀπόντα κατέκριναν οὐ δικάσαντες, μᾶλλον δὲ καὶ λίαν ἐπαινέσαντες τὰ δῆθεν εἰς κατηγορείαν ἡμῶν ἐπιδοθέντα συγγράμματα. Epiſt. 138.

He onely was ſuppoſed erroneous in Faith, and a perillous abettour of Neſtorianiſm, becauſe he had ſmartly contradicted Cyril; which prejudice did cauſe him to be prohibited from coming to the Synod of Epheſus; and there in his abſence to be denounced Heterodox.

Βασιλικοῖς γὰρ ἡμᾶς τῷ Κύρῳ προσδήσαντες γράμμασιν—— Epiſt. 145. Vid. Theod. Epiſt. ſupr. & Ep. 127, 129. καί με νόμος ἐνθάδε καθείργει βασιλικός. Βασιλικοῖς γράμμασι κωλυθέντες καταλαβεῖν τὴν Ἔφεσον—— Ep. 138, 136.

Μαθεῖν ἀντιβολῶ παρ' ὑμῶν εἴτε χρή με στέρξαι τὴν ἄδικον ταύτην καθαίρεσιν, ἢ μή. Ep. 113.

Ὥστε καὶ τὰς τῆς ἀνατολῆς Ἐκκλησίας τῆς ὑμετέρας ἀπολαῦσαι κηδεμονίας. Ep. 118.

His Appeal then to the Pope (having no other recourſe in whom he did confide, finding him to concur with himſelf in opinion againſt Eutychianiſm) was no other than (as the word is often uſed in common ſpeech, when we ſay, I appeal to your judgment in this or that caſe) a referring it to the Pope's conſideration, whether his Faith was ſound and Orthodox; capacitating him to retain his Office: the which upon his explication and profeſſion thereof (preſented in terms of extraordinary reſpect and deference) the Pope did approve; thereby as a good Divine rather than as a formal Judge) acquitting him of Heterodoxy: the which approbation (in regard to the great opinion they had of the Pope's skill in thoſe points, and to the favour he had obtained by conteſting againſt the Eutychians) did bear great ſway in the Synod; ſo that, (although not without oppoſition of many, and not upon abſolute terms) he was permitted to ſit among the Fathers of Chalcedon.

Τὰ γὰρ παρ' ὑμῶν κελευσθησόμενα στέρξομεν ὁποῖα ἂν ᾖ.

Obſervations.

1. We do not reade of any formal Trial the Pope made of Theodoret's caſe; that he was cited, that his Accuſers did appear, that his Cauſe was diſcuſſed: but onely a ſimple approbation of him.

2. We may obſerve that Theodoret did write to Flavianus in like terms: We entreat your holineſs to fight in behalf of the faith which is aſſaulted, and to defend the Canons which are trampled under foot.

Τὴν σὴν ἁγιωσύνην παρακαλοῦμεν τῆς πολεμουμένης πίστεως ὑπερμαχῆσαι, καὶ τῶν καταπατηθέντων ὑπεραγωνίσασθαι κανόνων. Theod Epiſt. 86.

3. We may obſerve, that Theodoret expecting this favour of Pope Leo; and thence being moved to commend the Roman See to the height, and to reckon its ſpecial advantages, doth not yet mention his Supremacy of power, or Univerſality of Juriſdiction: For thoſe words, it beſitteth you to be prime in all things, are onely general words relating to the advantages which he ſubjoineth; of which he ſaith, for your throne is adorned with many advantages, in a florid enumeration whereof he paſſeth over that of peculiar Juriſdiction; he nameth the magnitude, ſplendour, majeſty and populouſneſs of the City; the early faith praiſed by St. Paul, the Sepulchres of the two great Apoſtles, and their deceaſe their;

Διὰ πάντα γὰρ ὑμῖν πρωτεύειν ἁρμόττει—— Πολλοῖς γὰρ ὁ ὑμέτερος θρόνος κοσμεῖται πλεονεκτήμασι.

Ἔχει γὰρ ὁ πανάγιος θρόνος ἐκεῖνος τῶν κατὰ τὴν οἰκουμένην Ἐκκλησιῶν τὴν ἡγεμονίαν, διὰ πολλὰ καὶ πρὸ τῶν ἄλλων ἁπάντων, ὅτι αἱρετικῆς μεμένηκε δυσωδίας ἀμύητος, καὶ οὐδεὶς τἀναντία φρονῶν εἰς ἐκεῖνον ἐκάθισεν ἀλλὰ τὴν Ἀποστολικὴν χάριν ἀκήρατον διεφύλαξε. Theod. Ep. 116. (ad Renatum. Presb.) but the Pope's being Univerſal Sovereign and Judge (which was the main advantage whereof that See could be capable) he doth not mention; why? becauſe he was not aware thereof, elſe ſurely he would not have paſſed it in ſilence.

That holy See has the principality over the Churches in all the world for many reaſons; but eſpecially becauſe ſhe continued free from the taint of hereſie, and none otherwiſe minded ever ſate in her, ſhe having kept the Apoſtolick ſtate always unmixt.

4. We may alſo obſerve, that whatever the opinion of Theodoret was now concerning the Pope's power, he not long before did hardly take him for ſuch a Judge, when he did oppoſe Pope Celeſtine, concurring with Cyril, at the firſt Epheſine Synod. He then indeed looking on Pope Celeſtine as a prejudiced Adverſary, did not write to him but to the other Biſhops of the Weſt, as we ſee by thoſe words in his Epiſtle to Domnus; And we have written to the Biſhops of the Weſt about theſe things, to him of Milain, I ſay, to him of Aquileia and him of Ravenna, teſtifying, &c.

Καὶ τοῖς θεοφιλεστάτοις δὲ τῆς δύσεως Ἐπισκόποις, τῷ Μεδιολάνου φημὶ, καὶ τῷ Ἀκυλείας καὶ τῷ Ῥαβέννης περὶ τούτων ἐπεστάλκαμεν, διαμαρτυρόμενοι ὡς τῆς Ἀπολιναρίου ταῦτα καινοτομίας πεπλήρωται. Theod. Epiſt. 112.

5. Yea we may obſerve, that Theodoret did intend with the Emperour's leave to appeal or refer his cauſe to the whole body of Weſtern Biſhops, as himſelf doth expreſs in thoſe words to Anatolius, I do pray your magnificence, that you would requeſt this favour of our dread Sovereign, that I may have recourſe to the Weſt, and may be judged by the moſt religious and holy Biſhops there.

Ἀντιβολῶ τὴν ὑμετέραν μεγαλοπρέπειαν, ταύτην αἰτῆσαι τὴν χάριν τὴν καλλινικὴν κορυφὴν, ὥστε με τὴν ἑσπέραν καταλαβεῖν, καὶ παρὰ τοῖς ἐν ἐκείνῃ θεοφιλεστάτοις καὶ ἁγιωτάτοις Ἐπισκόποις δικάσασθαι. Theod. Ep. 119. (ad Anatol.)

Bellarmine farther doth alledge the appeal of Hadrianus Biſhop of Thebes to Pope Gregory I. the which he received and aſſerted by excommunicating the Arbiſhop of Juſtiniana Prima, for depoſing Hadrianus without regard to that appeal. I anſwer, Greg. lib. 2. Indict. 11. Ep. 6.

1. The example is late, when the Popes had extended their power beyond the ancient and due limits: thoſe Maxims had got in before the time of that worthy Pope; who thought he might uſe the power of which he found himſelf poſſeſſed.

2. It is impertinent, becauſe the Biſhop of Juſtiniana had then a ſpecial dependence upon the Roman See; from whence an Univerſal Juriſdiction upon appeal cannot be inferred.

3. It might be an Uſurpation; nor doth the opinion or practice of Pope Gregory ſuffice to determine a queſtion of right, for good men are liable to prejudice, and its conſequences.

To theſe Inſtances produced by Bellarmine, ſome add the Appeal of Eutyches to Pope Leo; to which it may be excepted, that if he did appeal, it was not to the Pope ſolely, but to him with the other Patriarchs; ſo it is expreſly ſaid in the Acts of the Chalcedon Synod; His depoſition being read, he did appeal to the Holy Synod of the moſt Holy Biſhop of Rome, and of Alexandria, and of Jeruſalem, and of Theſſalonica; the which is an argument, that he did not apprehend the right of receiving Appeals did ſolely or peculiarly belong to him of Rome.

Ἀναγινωσκομένης τῆς καθαιρέσεως, ἐπικαλέσατο τὴν ἁγίαν σύνοδον τοῦ ἁγιωτάτου Ἐπισκόπου Ῥώμης, καὶ Ἀλεξανδρείας, καὶ Ἱεροσολύμων, καὶ Θεσσαλονίκης. Syn. Chalc. Act. 1.

Liberatus ſaith, that Johannes Talaida went to Calendion Patriarch of Antioch, and taking of him interceſſory Synodical Letters, appeal'd to Simplicius Biſhop of Rome, as Saint Athanaſius had done, and perſuaded him to write in his behalf to Acacius Biſhop of Conſtantinople.

Ingreſſus eſt ad Calendionem Antiochenum Patriarcham, & ſumptis ab eo interceſſionis Synodicis Literis Romanum Pontificem Simplicium appellavit, ſicut B. fecerat Athanaſius, & ſuaſit ſcribere pro ſe Acacio Conſtantinopolitano Epiſcopo ——— Liber. cap. 18. Baron. Anno 483. Sect. 1.

In regard to any more Inſtances of this kind we might generally propoſe theſe following conſiderations.

1. It is no wonder, that any Biſhop being condemned, eſpecially in cauſes relating to Faith or common Intereſt, ſhould have recourſe to the Roman Biſhop, or to any other Biſhop of great authority for refuge or for relief; which they may hope to be procured by them by the influence of their reputation, and their power among their dependents.

2. Bad men, being deſervedly corrected, will abſurdly reſort any whither with mouths full of clamour and calumny; if not with hope of relief, yet with deſign of revenge; as did Marcion, as did Feliciſſimus, as did Apiarius to the Pope.

3. Good men being abuſed will expreſs ſome reſentment, and complain of their wrongs, where they may preſume of a fair and favourable hearing: ſo did Athanaſius, Flavianus, St. Chryſoſtome, Theodoret apply themſelves to the ſame Biſhops, flouriſhing in ſo great reputation and wealth.

So did the Monks of Egypt (Ammonius and Iſidorus) from the perſecutions of Theophilus fly to the protection and ſuccour of St. Chryſoſtome; which gave occaſion to the troubles of that incomparable Perſonage; the which is ſo illuſtrious an inſtance, that the words of the Hiſtorian relating it deſerve ſetting down.

They jointly did endeavour, that the trains againſt them might be examined by the Emperour as Judge, and by the Biſhop John; for they conceived that he having conſcience of uſing a juſt freedom, would be able to ſuccour them according to right: but he did receive the men applying to them courteouſly, and treated them reſpectfully, and did not hinder them from praying in the Church —— He alſo writ to Theophilus to render communion to them, as being Orthodox; and if there were need of judging their caſe by law, that he would ſend whom they thought good to proſecute the cauſe.

Κοινῇ τε ἐσπούδαζον παρὰ βασιλεῖ κριτῇ καὶ Ἰωάννῃ τῷ Ἐπισκόπῳ ἐλέγχεσθαι τὰς κατ' αὐτῶν ἐπιβολάς· ᾤοντο γὰρ ἐνδίκου παρρησίας αὐτὸν ἐπιμελούμενον δυνάσθαι τὰ δίκαια βοηθεῖν αὐτοῖς· ὁ δὲ προσελθόντας αὐτῷ τοὺς ἄνδρας φιλοφρόνως ἐδέξατο, καὶ ἐν τιμῇ εἶχε, καὶ εὔχεσθαι ἐπὶ Ἐκκλησίας οὐκ ἐκώλυσε —— ἔγραψε δὲ Θεοφίλῳ κοινωνίαν αὐτοῖς ἀποδοῦναι, ὡς ὀρθῶς περὶ Θεοῦ δοξάζουσιν· εἰ δὲ δίκῃ δέοι κρίνεσθαι τὰ κατ' αὐτούς, ἀποστέλλειν ὃν αὐτῷ δοκεῖ δικασόμενον. Soz. 8. 13.

If this had been to the Pope, it would have been alledged for an Appeal; and it would have had as much colour as any Inſtance which they can produce.

4. And when men, either good or bad, do reſort in this manner to great friends, it is no wonder if they accoſt them in higheſt terms of reſpect, and with exaggerations of their eminent advantages; ſo inducing them to regard and favour their cauſe.

5. Neither is it ſtrange, that great perſons favourably ſhould entertain thoſe, who make ſuch addreſſes to them, they always coming crouching in a ſuppliant poſture, and with fair pretences; it being alſo natural to men to delight in ſeeing their power acknowledged; and it being a glorious thing to relieve the afflicted: for Eminence is wont to incline toward infirmity, and with a ready good will to take part with thoſe who are under. So when Baſilides, when Marcellus, when Euſtathius Sebaſtenus, when Maximus the Cynick, when Apiarius were condemned the Pope was haſty to engage for them; more liking their application to him than weighing their cauſe.

Φιλεῖ μάλιστα κάμπτεσθαι τὸ ὑπερέχον πρὸς τὸ ἀσθενές, καὶ δι' εὐνοίας ἑκουσίου τῷ ἐλαττωμένῳ προστίθεσθαι. Greg. Naz. Orat. 23.

6. And when any perſon doth continue long in a flouriſhing eſtate, ſo that ſuch addreſſes are frequently made to him, no wonder that an opinion of lawfull power to receive them, doth ariſe both in him and in others; ſo that of a voluntary Friend he become an authorized Protectour, a Patron, a Judge of ſuch perſons in ſuch caſes.

X. The Sovereign is fountain of all Juriſdiction; and all inferiour Magiſtrates derive their Authority from his warrant and Commiſſion, acting as his Deputies or Miniſters, according to that intimation in St. Peter,--whether to the King as Supreme, or to Governours as ſent by him.

1 Pet. 2. 13.

Accordingly the Pope doth challenge this advantage to himſelf that he is the fountain of Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction; pretending all Epiſcopal power to be derived from him.

The rule of the Church (ſaith Bellarmine) is Monarchical; therefore all authority is in one, and from him is derived to others; the which Aphoriſm he well proveth from the form of creating Biſhops, as they call it, We do provide ſuch a Church with ſuch a perſon; and we do prefer him to be Father and Paſtour and Biſhop of the ſaid Church; committing to him the adminiſtration in temporals and ſpirituals in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt.

Regimen Eccleſiæ eſt, Monarchicum, ergo omnis auctoritas eſt in uno, & ab illo in alios derivatur. Bell. 4. 24.
Epiph. *hær.*42.

Providemus Eccleſiæ tali de tali Perſona, & præficimus eum in Patrem, & Paſtorem & Epiſcopum ejuſdem Eccleſiæ, committentes ei adminiſtrationem in temporalibus & ſpiritualibus; in nomine, &c. Ibid.

Pope Pius II. in his Bull of Retractation, thus expreſſeth the ſenſe of his See, In the militant Church, which reſembleth the triumphant, there is one moderatour and Judge of all, the Vicar of Jeſus Chriſt, from whom, as from the Head, all power and authority is derived to the ſubject members; the which doth immediately flow into it from the Lord Chriſt.

In Eccleſia militanti, quæ inſtar triumphantis habet, unus eſt omnium moderator & arbiter Jeſu Chriſti vicarius, à quo tanquam capite omnis in ſubjecta membra poteſtas & authoritas derivatur, quæ à Chriſto Domino ſine medio in ipſum influit. P. Pius II. in Bull. Retract.

A Congregation of Cardinals appointed by Pope Paulus III. ſpeaking after the ſtyle and ſentiments of that See, did ſay to him, Your Holineſs doth ſo bear the care of Chriſt's Church, that you have very many Miniſters, by which you manage that care, theſe are all the Clergy, on whom the ſervice of God is charged; eſpecially Prieſts, and more eſpecially Curates, and above all Biſhops.

Sanctitas veſtra ità gerit curam Eccleſiæ Chriſti, ut Miniſtros plurimos habeat, per quos curam exerceat; hi autem ſunt Clerici omnes, quibus mandatus eſt cultus Dei; Presbyteri præſertim, & maximè Curati, & præ omnibus Epiſcopi—— apud Cham. de Pont. Oecum. 10, 13.

Durandus Biſhop of Mande, according to the ſenſe of his Age, ſaith, The Pope is head of all Biſhops, from whom they as members from an head deſcend, and of whoſe fulneſs all receive; whom he calls to a participation of his care, but admits not into the fulneſs of his power.

Summus Pontifex caput eſt omnium Pontificum, à quo illi tanquam à capite membra deſcendunt, & de cujus plenitudine omnes accipiunt quos ipſe vocat in partem ſolicitudinis, non in plenitudinem poteſtatis. Durand. Mimat. Offic. 2. 1. 17.

This pretence is ſeen in the ordinary Titles of Biſhops, who ſtyle themſelves Biſhops of ſuch a Place, By the Grace of God and of the Apoſtolick See. O ſhame!

N Dei & Apoſtolicæ Sedis gratiâ Epiſcopus Colon.——

The men of the Tridentine Convention (thoſe great betrayers of the Church to perpetual ſlavery, and Chriſtian truth to the prevalency of falſhood, till God pleaſeth) do upon divers occaſions, pretend to qualifie and empower Biſhops to perform important matters, originally belonging to the Epiſcopal Function, as the Pope's Delegates.

This was an expedient. Vid. Concil.

But contrariwiſe according to the Doctrine of Holy Scripture, and the ſenſe of the Primitive Church, the Biſhops and Paſtours of the Church do immediately receive their Authority and Commiſſion from God; being onely his Miniſters.

The Scripture calleth them the Miniſters of God, and of Chriſt (ſo Epaphras, ſo Timothy, in regard to their Eccleſiaſtical function are named) the Stewards of God, the Servants of God, Fellow-ſervants of the Apoſtles.

Col. 1. 7. 4. 7.
1 Theſſ. 3. 2.
1 Tim. 4. 6.
Tit. 1. 7.

The Scripture ſaith, that the Holy Ghoſt had made them Biſhops to feed the Church of God, that God had given them, and conſtituted them in the Church; for the perfecting of the Saints, for the work of the Miniſtry, for the edifying of the body of Chriſt; that is, to all effects and purpoſes concerning their Office: for the work of the Miniſtery comprizeth all the duty charged on them whether in way of order or of governance; as they now do precariouſly and groundleſly in reference to this caſe diſtinguiſh. And edifying the body doth import all the deſigned effects of their Office; particularly thoſe which are conſequent on the uſe of Juriſdiction; the which Saint Paul doth affirm was appointed for edification; * according (ſaith he) to the Authority which God hath Given me for edification, and not for deſtruction. They do † preſide in the Lord. They allow no other Head but our Lord, || from whom all the body, &c.

2 Tim. 2 24.
Act 20. 28.
Naz. Or. 30.
Eph. 4. 11.
1 Cor. 12. 29.

Ordo confertur à Deo immediatè, juriſdictio mediatè. Bell. 4. 25.

* 2 Cor. 10. 8. 13. 10.
† Προϊστάμενοι ἐν Κυρίῳ. 1 Theſſ. 5 12.
|| Eph. 4. 16.

The Fathers clearly do expreſs their Sentiments to be the ſame.

St. Ignatius ſaith, that the Biſhop doth preſide in the place of God; and that we muſt look upon him as our Lord himſelf (or as our Lord's Repreſentative) that therefore we muſt be ſubject to him as unto Jeſus Chriſt.

Προκαθημένου τοῦ Ἐπισκόπου εἰς τόπον Θεοῦ. Ign. ad Magneſ.

Τὸν οὖν Ἐπίσκοπον δῆλον ὅτι ὡς αὐτὸν τὸν Κύριον δεῖ προσβλέπειν Ign. ad Eph. Ὅταν Ἐπισκόπῳ ὑποτάσσησθε ὡς Ἰησοῦ Χριστῷ. Ign. ad Trall.

St. Cyprian affirmeth each Biſhop to be conſtituted by the judgment of God, and of Chriſt; and that in his Church he is for the preſent a Judge in the place of Chriſt: —and that our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, one and alone hath a power both to prefer us to the Government of his Church and to judge of our acting.

De Dei & Chriſti ejus judicio. Cypr. Ep. 52. & alibi ſæpe.

Unus in Eccleſia ad tempus Sacerdos, & ad tempus Judex, vice Chriſti. Cypr. Ep. 55. Sed expectemus univerſi judicium Domini noſtri Jeſu Chriſti, qui unus & ſolus habet poteſtatem & præponendi nos in Eccleſiæ ſuæ gubernatione, & de actu noſtro judicandi Cypr. in Conc. Carthag.

St. Baſil, A Prelate is nothing elſe but one that ſuſtaineth the perſon of Chriſt.

Ὁ γὰρ καθηγούμενος οὐδὲν ἕτερόν ἐστιν, ἢ ὁ τοῦ σωτῆρος ἐπέχων πρόσωπον. Baſ. Conſt. Mon. cap. 22.

St. Chryſoſtome, We have received the Commiſſion of Ambaſſadours and come from God, for this is the dignity of the Epiſcopal Office.

Ἡμεῖς τοίνυν πρεσβείας ἀνεδεξάμεθα λόγον καὶ ἥκομεν παρὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ, τοῦτο γάρ ἐστι τὸ τῆς Ἐπισκοπῆς ἀξίωμα. Chryſ. in Coloſſ. Orat. 3.

It behoveth us all who by divine authority are conſtituted in the Prieſthood to prevent, &c.

Oportere nos omnes, qui Deo auctore ſumus in Sacerdotio conſtituti illius certaminibus obviare, &c. Anatol. in Syn. Chalc. p. 512.

Wherefore the ancient Biſhops did all of them take themſelves to be Vicars of Chriſt, not of the Pope, and no leſs than the proudeſt Pope of them all; whence it was ordinary for them in their addreſſes and compellations to the Biſhop of Rome, and in their ſpeech about him to call him their Brother, their Collegue, their Fellow miniſter; which had not been modeſt, or juſt, if they had been his Miniſters or Shadows. Yea the Popes themſelves, even the higheſt and haughtieſt of them, who of any in old times did moſt ſtand on their preſumed preeminence, did yet vouchſafe to call other Biſhops their Fellow-Biſhops and Fellow-miniſters.

Leo Ep. 84.

Sciéſque nos non tuos eſſe ut te jactas & extollis Clericos, quos ut fratres & Coepiſcopos recognoſcere ſi elatio permitteret, debueras, Ann. Pith.

Thoſe Biſhops of France with good reaſon did complain of Pope Nicholas I. for calling them his Clerks; whenas, if his pride had ſuffered him, he ſhould have acknowledged them for his Brethren and Fellow-Biſhops.

Ἡμεῖς πίνω—— S. Chryſ. ſup.

Εἰ ὁ Μωσέως θρόνος οὕτως ἦν αἰδέσιμος, ὡς δι' ἐκεῖνον ἀκούειν, πολλῷ μᾶλλον ὁ Χριστοῦ θρόνος· ἐκεῖνον ἡμεῖς διαδεξάμεθα, ἀπὸ τούτου φθεγγόμεθα, ἀφ' οὗ καὶ ὁ Χριστὸς ἔθετο ἐν ἡμῖν τὴν διακονίαν τῆς καταλλαγῆς. Chryſ. in Coloſſ. Orat. 3.

Ἃ γὰρ ἐγκεχείρισται ὁ ἱερεὺς, Θεοῦ μόνου ἐστὶ δωρεὰ, &c. Chryſ. in Joh. Orat. 83.

In fine the ancient Biſhops did not alledge any Commiſſion from the Pope to warrant their Juriſdiction, but from God; If Moſes his Chair were ſo venerable, that what was ſaid out of that ought therefore to be heard, how much more is Chriſt's Throne ſo? we ſucceed him, from that we ſpeak, ſince Chriſt has committed to us the miniſtery of reconciliation.

That which is committed to the Prieſt, 'tis onely in God's power to give.

Since we alſo by the mercy of Chriſt our King and God were made Miniſters of the Goſpel.

Ἐπεὶ οὖν καὶ ἡμεῖς ἐλέει τοῦ συμβασιλέως (l. παμβασιλέως) ἡμῶν Χριστοῦ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἱερουργοὶ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου ἐκληρώθημεν—— Flavian in Chalc. Act. 1. p. 4.

This is a modern dream born out of Ambition and Flattery, which never came into the head of any ancient Divine.

It is a ridiculous thing to imagine, that Cyprian, Athanaſius, Baſil, Chryſoſtome, Auſtin, &c. did take themſelves for the Vicegerents or Miniſters of the Popes; if they did, why did they not, ſo frequent occaſion being given them, in all their Volumes, ever acknowledge it? why cannot Bellarmine and his Complices after all their prolling ſhew any paſſage in them importing any ſuch acknowledgment; but are fain to infer it by far-fetched Sophiſms, from Allegations plainly impertinent, or frivolous?

The Popes indeed in the Fourth Century began to practiſe a fine trick, very ſerviceable to the enlargement of their power; which was to confer on certain Biſhops, as occaſion ſerved, or for continuance, the title of their Vicar or Lieutenant; thereby pretending to impart Authority to them: whereby they were enabled for performance of divers things, which otherwiſe by their own Epiſcopal or Metropolitical power they could not perform. By which device they did engage ſuch Biſhops to ſuch a dependence on them, whereby they did promote the Papal Authority in Provinces, to the oppreſſion of the ancient Rights and Liberties of Biſhops and Synods; doing what they pleaſed under pretence of this vaſt power communicated to them; and for fear of being diſplaced, or out of affection to their favourer doing what might ſerve to advance the Papacy.

Evagr. Act. Eph. p. 134.

Thus did Pope Celeſtine conſtitute Cyril in his room.

Pope Leo appointed Anatolius of Conſtantinople.

Pope Felix Acacius of Conſtantinople.

Pope Hormiſdas Epiphanius of Conſtantinople.

Act. Conc. ſub. Menna. p. 70.

Pope Simplicius to Zeno Biſhop of Seville, We thought it convenient that you ſhould be held up by the vicariat authority of our See.

Congruum duximus vicariâ Sedis noſtræ te auctoritate fulciri. Baron. Ann. 482 ſect. 46.

So did Siricius and his ſucceſſours conſtitute the Biſhops of Theſſalonica to be their Vicars in the Dioceſe of Illyricum, wherein being then a member of the Weſtern Empire they had caught a ſpecial Juriſdiction; to which Pope Leo did refer in thoſe words, which ſometimes are impertinently alledged with reference to all Biſhops, but concern onely Anaſtaſius Biſhop of Theſſalonica; We have entruſted thy Charity to be in our ſtead, ſo that thou art called into part of the ſolicitude, not into plenitude of the authority.

Vices enim noſtras ità tuæ credidimus charitati ut in partem ſis vocatus ſolicitudinis, non in plenitudinem poteſtatis. P. Leo Ep. 84. (ad Anaſtaſ. Theſſal.)

So did Pope Zozimus beſtow a like pretence of Vicarious power upon the Biſhop of Arles, which City was the ſeat of the temporal Exarch in Gaule.

P. Joh. VIII. Ep. 93.

So to the Biſhop of Juſtiniana prima in Bulgaria (or Dardinia Europæa) the like privilege was granted [by procurement of the Emperour Juſtinian, native of that place.]

Afterwards temporary or occaſional Vicars were appointed (ſuch as Auſtin in England, Boniface in Germany---) who in virtue of that conceſſion did uſurp a paramount authority; and by the exerciſe thereof did advance the Papal intereſt; depreſſing the authority of Metropolitanes, and Provincial Synods.

So at length Legates, upon occaſion diſpatched into all Countries of the Weſt, came to do there what they pleaſed, uſing that pretence to oppreſs and abuſe both Clergy and People very intolerably.

Whence divers Countries were forced to make legal proviſions for excluding ſuch Legates, finding by much experience that their buſineſs was to rant and to domineer in the Pope's name, to ſuck money from the People, and to maintain luxurious pomp upon expence of the Countries where they came.

P. Paſch II. Epiſt. apud Eadm p. 113, &c.

* Of this John XXII. doth ſorely complain; and decrees that all people ſhould admit his Legates, under pain of interdicts.

* Extrav. commun. 1. 1. (p. 310.)

Occulti inimici regni. Matt. Par. p. 524.

In England Pope Paſchal finds the ſame fault in his letter to King Henry I. Nuncio's or letters from the Apoſtolick See, unleſs by your Majeſtie's command, are not thought worthy any admittance or reception within your juriſdiction: none complains thence, none appeals thence for judgment to the Apoſtolick See.

Sedis Apoſtolicæ nuncii vel literæ præter juſſum Regiæ Majeſtatis nullam in poteſtate tua ſuſceptionem aut aditum promerentur, nullus inde clamor, nullum judicium ad ſedem Apoſtolicam deſtinantur——P. Paſch. II. Eadm. p. 113.

The Pope obſerving what authority and reverence the Archbiſhops of Canterbury had in this Nation, whereby they might be able to check his attempts, did think good to conſtitute thoſe Archbiſhops his Legates of courſe, (Legatos natos) that ſo they might ſeem to exerciſe their Juriſdiction by authority derived from him, and owing to him that mark of favour, or honour, with inlargement of power, might pay him more devotion and ſerve his intereſts.

Bellarmine doth from this practice prove the Pope's Sovereign power, but he might from thence better have demonſtrated their great cunning. It might from ſuch extraordinary deſignation of Vicegerents with far more reaſon be inferred, that ordinarily Biſhops are not his Miniſters.

Bell. 2. 10.

XI. It is the privilege of a Sovereign, that he cannot be called to account, or judged, or depoſed, or debarr'd communion, or any-wiſe cenſured and puniſhed; for this implieth a contradiction or confuſion in degrees, ſubjecting the ſuperiour to inferiours; this were making a river run backwards; this were to damm up the fountain of juſtice; to behead the State; to expoſe Majeſty to contempt.

Wherefore the Pope doth pretend to this privilege, according to thoſe Maxims in the Canon Law, drawn from the ſayings of Popes (either forged or genuine, but all alike) obtaining authority of their Court.

Bell. 2. 26. de Conc. 2 17. Grat. Diſt. 40. cap 6. Diſt 21. cap. 7. Cauſ. 9 qu. 3. cap 10.——Extrav. comm. lib. 1. tit. 8. cap 1. P Leo IX. Ep. 1 cap. 10.——17. P. Nich. I. Ep. 8. (p. 504.) P. Joh. VIII. Ep 75. (p. 31.) P. Gelaſ. Ep. 4. (p. 625, 626.) Ep. 13. (p. 640.) P. Greg. VII. Ep. 8. Ep. 21.

And according to what P. Adrian let the 8*th* Synod know, becauſe ſays he, the Apoſtolick Church of Rome ſtoops not to the judgment of leſſer Churches. They cite alſo three old Synods (of Sinueſſa, of Rome under Pope Silveſter, of Rome under Sixtus III.) but they are palpably ſpurious, and the learned amongſt them confeſs it.

Διὰ τὸ τὴν ἀποστολικὴν Ἐκκλησίαν τῆς Ῥώμης τῇ τῶν ἐλαττόνων μὴ ὑποκύπτειν κρίσει. P. Adrian. in Syn. VIII. Act. 7. pag. 963.

But antiquity was not of this mind; for it did ſuppoſe him no leſs obnoxious to judgment and correction than other Biſhops, if he ſhould notoriouſly deviate from the faith, or violate canonical diſcipline.

The Canons generally do oblige Biſhops without exception to duty, and (upon defailance) to correction: why is not he excepted, if to be excuſed, or exempted?

It was not queſtioned of old, but that a Pope in caſe he ſhould notoriouſly depart from the faith, or notably infringe diſcipline, might be excommunicated: the attempting it upon divers occaſions do ſhew their opinion, although it often had not effect becauſe the cauſe was not juſt and plauſible; the truth and equity of the caſe appearing to be on the Pope's ſide.

St. Iſidore Peluſiota denieth of any Biſhop's office that is ἀρχὴ ἀνυπεύθυνος an uncontrollable government.

In the times of Polycrates and Pope Victor the whole Eaſtern Church did forbear communion with the Pope. Firmilian told Pope Stephanus, that by conceiting he might excommunicate all other Biſhops, he had excommunicated himſelf. The Fathers of the Antiochene Synod did threaten to excommunicate and depoſe Pope Julius. They did promiſe to Julius, peace and communion, if he did admit the depoſition of thoſe whom they had expelled, and the conſtitution of thoſe whom they had ordained; but if he did reſiſt their decrees, they denounced the contrary. The Oriental Biſhops at Sardica did excommunicate and depoſe him. St. Hilary did anathematize Pope Liberius, upon his defection to the Arians. * Dioſcorus did attempt to excommunicate Pope Leo. † Acacius of Conſtantinople renounced the communion of Pope Felix. || Timotheus Ælurus curſed the Pope. * The African Biſhops did Synodically excommunicate Pope Vigilius. † Pope Anaſtaſius was rejected by his own Clergy. || Pope Conſtantine by the people, and ſo was * Pope Leo VIII. † Divers Biſhops of Italy and Illyrieum did abſtain from the Pope's communion for a long time, becauſe they did Ἐν τε χρόνοις Πολυκράτους καὶ Βίκτωρος ὡς ἡ ἀνατολὴ πρὸς τὴν δύσιν διαφερομένη εἰρηνικὰ παρ' ἀλλήλων οὐκ ἐδέχοντο. Epiph. hær. 70. Audianorum.

Deum enim putas omnes abs te abſtineri poſſe, ſolum te ab omnibus abſtinuiſti. Firm. apud Cypr. Ep.

Δεχομένῳ μὲν Ἰουλίῳ τὴν καθαίρεσιν τῶν πρὸς αὐτῶν ἐληλαμένων, καὶ τὴν κατάστασιν τῶν ἀπ' αὐτῶν χειροτονηθέντων, εἰρήνην, καὶ κοινωνίαν ἐπηγγέλλοντο· ἀνθισταμένῳ δὲ τοῖς δεδογμένοις τἀναντία προηγόρευσαν. Sozom. 3. 8.

Sozom. 3. 11.

Anathema tibi, Papa Liberi. Hil. fragm.

* Ἐτόλμησε δὲ καὶ ἀκοινωνησίαν ὑπαγορεῦσαι κατὰ τοῦ ἀρχιεπισκόπου τῆς μεγάλης Ῥώμης Λέοντος. Evag. 2. 4.

† Niceph. 16. 17. Baron. Ann. 484 §35.

|| Baron. A. 457. ſect 25.

* Africani Antiſtites Vigilium Rom. Epiſ damnatorem Capitulorum Synodaliter à Catholica communione, reſervato ei penitentiæ loco, recludunt. (l. excludunt) Vict. Tun. poſt Conſ. Baſilii V. C. Ann. 10.

† Plat. p 131. & Diſt. 19. cap. 21, 22.

|| Plat. p. 223.

* Plat. p. 291.

† P. Pelag. II. Ep. 3. 13.

did admit the fifth Synod. || Photius did excommunicate and depoſe Pope Nicholas I. * Maurius Biſhop of Ravenna did anathematize Pope Vitalianus. † The Emperour Otho II. having with good advice laboured to reclaim Pope John XII. without effect did indict a Council, calling together the Biſhops of Italy, by the judgment of whom the life of that wicked man ſhould be judged; and the iſſue was, that he was depoſed. || Pope Nicholas I. deſired to be judged by the Emperour. The fifth Synod did in general terms condemn Pope Vigilius, and the Emperour Juſtinian did baniſh him for not complying with the decrees of it. The ſixth and ſeventh General Synods did anathematize Honorius by name; when he was dead, becauſe his hereſie was not before confuted; and they would have ſerved him ſo, if he had been alive. Divers Synods (that of Worms, of Papia, of Breſcia, of Mentz, of Rome, &c.) did reject Pope Gregory VII. Pope Adrian himſelf in the VIII. Synod (ſo called) did confeſs that a Pope being found deviating from the faith might be judged, as Honorius was. Gerbertus (afterward Pope Sylveſter II.) did maintain that Popes might be held as Ethnicks and Publicans, if they did not hear the Church. The Synod of Conſtance did judge add depoſe three Popes.

The Synod of Baſil did depoſe Pope Eugenius; affirming that The Catholick Church hath often corrected and judged Popes when they either err'd from the faith, or by their ill manners became notoriouſly ſcandalous to the Church.

The practice of Popes to give an account of their faith (when they entred upon their office) to the other Patriarchs and chief Biſhops, approving themſelves thereby worthy and capable of communion, doth imply them liable to judgment. Of the neglect of which practice Euphemius Biſhop of Conſtantinople did complain.

Of this we have for example the Synodical Epiſtles of Pope Gregory I.

XII. To the Sovereign in Eccleſiaſtical affairs it would belong to define and decide controverſies in faith, diſcipline, moral practice; ſo that all were bound to admit his definitions, deciſions, interpretations. He would be the ſupreme Interpreter of the divine law, and Judge of controverſies. No point or queſtion of moment ſhould be decided without his cognizance. This he therefore doth pretend to; taking upon him to define points, and requiring from all ſubmiſſion to his determinations. Nor doth he allow any Synods to decide queſtions.

But the ancients did know no ſuch thing. In caſe of Contentions, they had no recourſe to his judgment; they did not ſtand to his opinion, his authority did not avail to quaſh diſputes. They had recourſe to the Holy Scriptures, to Catholick Tradition, to reaſon, they diſputed and diſcuſſed points by dint of argument.

Irenæus, Tertullian, Vincentius Lirinenſis and others diſcourſing of the methods to reſolve points of Controverſie, did not reckon the Pope's || Καθαίρεσιν ὡς ἐνόμιζε καὶ ἀναθεματισμὸν ἐπ' οὐδενὶ λόγῳ ποιεῖται Νικολάου. Vit. Ignatii. Patr. apud Bin. p. 892. Baron. Ann. 863.——

* Baron. Ann. 669. ſect. 2.

—— Communi totius Sancti Concilii conſenſu depoſitus. Luitprand. 6. 6.

† —— Concilium indicit, convocatis Epiſcopis Italiæ, quorum judicio vita ſceleratiſſimi hominis dijudicaretur. Plat. in Joh. 13. (pro. XII.) vid Baron. Ann. 960. & Binium.

| Grat. Cauſ. 2. qu. 7. cap. 41.

Ann. 1076. Vid. Baron. Ann. 1033 ſect. 3.

Baron. Ann. 992. ſect. 44.— Conc. Baſ. Seſſ. 38. (p. 101.)

Eccleſia Catholica ſæpenumerò ſummos Pontifices ſive à fide delirantes, ſive pravis moribus notoriè Eccleſiam ſcandalizantes correxit, & judicavit. ——— Conc. Baſ. Seſſ. 12.

Mos eſt Romanæ Eccleſiæ ſacerdoti noviter conſtituto formam fidei ſuæ ad ſanctas Eccleſias prærogare. P. Gelaſ. Ep. 1. ad Laur.

Gelaſ. Ep. 9. Baron. Ann. 492. ſect. 10.

Vid. tract. de Unit. Eccl.

Pope's authority for one. Divers of the Fathers did not ſcruple openly to diſſent from the opinions of Popes; nor were they wondred at, or condemned for it.

Gall. 2. 11. ἀντέστην

So Saint Paul did withſtand Saint Peter. So Polycarpus diſſented from Pope Elutherius. So Polycrates from Pope Victor. So St. Cyprian from Pope Stephen. So Dionyſius Alex. from Pope Stephen: all which perſons were renowned for wiſedom and piety in their times.

Higheſt Controverſies were appeaſed by Synods out of the Holy Scripture, Catholick Tradition, the Analogy of faith, and common Reaſon, without regard to the Pope. Divers Synods in Africk and Aſia defined the point about rebaptization without the Pope's leave, and againſt his opinion. The Synod of Antioch condemned the doctrine of Paulus Samoſatenus, without intervention of the Pope; before they gave him notice. In the Synod of Nice the Pope had very ſmall ſtroke. The General Synod of Conſt. declared the Point of the Divinity of the H. Ghoſt againſt Macedonius, without the Pope; who did no more than afterward conſent: This the Synod of Chalcedon in their compellation to the Emperour Marcian did obſerve. The Fathers met in Sardica to ſuppreſs the reliques of Arianiſm, communicated their decrees to the Eaſtern Biſhops; and they who here diſcovered the peſtilence of Apolinarius, made known theirs to the Weſtern.

Καὶ οἱ μὲν ἐκ Σαρδικῆς κατὰ τῶν Ἀρείου λειψάνων ἀγωνισάμενοι τοῖς ἐν Ἀνατολῇ τὴν κρίσιν ἐξέπεμπον, οἱ δὲ ἐνταῦθα τὴν Ἀπολιναρίου λύμην φωράσαντες τοῖς ἐν δύσει τὴν ψῆφον ἐγνώριζον. Conc. Chalced. ad Marc. Orat. p. 468.

The Synod of Africk defined againſt Pelagius, before their informing Pope Innocentius thereof; not ſeeking his judgment, but deſiring his conſent to that, which they were aſſured to be truth.

Divers Popes have been incapable of deciding Controverſies, themſelves having been erroneous in the queſtions controverted: as Pope Stephanus (in part,) Pope Liberius, P. Felix, P. Vigilius, P. Honorius, &c. And in our opinion all Popes for many ages.

It is obſervable how the Synod of Chalcedon in their allocution to the Emperour Marcian do excuſe P. Leo for expounding the faith, in his Epiſtle (the which it ſeems ſome did reprehend as a novel method diſagreeable to the Canons;) Let not them (ſay they) object to us the Epiſtle of the marvellous Prelate of Rome, as obnoxious to imputation of novelty; but if it be not conſonant to the Scriptures, let them confute it; or if it be not conſentaneous to the Fathers who have preceded; or if it be not apt to confute the irreligious, &c.

Ὡς ξένην τινὰ καὶ τοῖς κανόσιν οὐ νενομισμένην τῆς ἐπιστολῆς διαβάλλῃ τὴν σύνταξιν. Act. Syn. Chalc. p. 465.

Μὴ τοίνυν ἡμῖν τοῦ θαυμαστοῦ τῆς Ῥώμης προέδρου τὴν Ἐπιστολὴν, ὡς καινοτομίας ἔγκλημα, προσφερέτωσαν· ἀλλ' εἰ μὴ σύμφωνος ταῖς γραφαῖς, ἐλεγχέτωσαν· εἰ μὴ τοῖς προλαβοῦσι πατράσιν ὁμόδοξος· εἰ μὴ πρὸς δυσσεβῶν κατηγορίαν γίνεται·——

It was not his judicial anthority, which they did inſiſt upon, to maintain his Epiſtle, but the orthodoxie and intrinſick uſefulneſs of it to confute errours; upon which account they did embrace and confirm it by their ſuffrage.

XIII. If the Pope were a Sovereign of the Church as they make him, it were at leaſt expedient that he ſhould be infallible; for why otherwiſe ſhould he undertake confidently to pronounce in all caſes, to define high and difficult Points, to impoſe his Dictates, and require aſſent from all; If he be fallible, it is very probable that often he doth obtrude errours upon us for matters of Faith and Practice.

Bell. lib. 4.

Wherefore the true faſt friends of Papal intereſt do aſſert him to be infallible, when he dictateth as Pope, and ſetting himſelf into his Chair doth thence mean to inſtruct the whole Church. And the Pope therefore himſelf, who countenanceth them, may be preſumed to be of that mind.

Pighius ſaid bouncingly, The judgment of the Apoſtolick See with a Council of domeſtick Prieſts, is far more certain than the judgment of an univerſal Council of the whole earth without the Pope.

Longe certius eſt unius Apoſtolicæ Sedis cum Concilio domeſticorum Sacerdotum judicium, quàm ſine Pontifice judicium univerſalis Concilii totius Orbis terrarum. Pighius de Hier. lib. 6.

This is the Syllogiſm we propoſe:

The ſupreme Judge muſt be infallible,
The Pope is not infallible, Therefore.

The Major the Jeſuits, Canoniſts and Courtiers are obliged to prove, it being their Aſſertion; and they do prove it very wiſely and ſtrongly.

The Minor is aſſerted by the French Doctours, and they do with clear evidence maintain it.

The Concluſion we leave them to infer who are concerned.

It is in effect Pope Gregory's Argumentation; No Biſhop can be Univerſal Biſhop, (or Univerſal Paſtour and Judge of the Church) becauſe no Biſhop can be Infallible; for that the lapſe of ſuch a Paſtour would throw down the Church into ruine, by errour and impiety. Therefore the Univerſal Church, which God forbid, falls, when he falls who is call'd Univerſal. —The ſtate and order of our Lord's family will decay when that which is required in the body is not to be found in the head.

Univerſa ergò Eccleſia, quod abſit, à ſtatu ſuo corruit, quando is qui vocatur Univerſalis cadit. Greg. M. Epiſt. 4. 32.

Totius familiæ Domini ſtatus & ordo nutabit, ſi quod requiritur in corpore, non inveniatur in capite. P Leo Ep. 87.

But that he is not infallible, much experience and Hiſtory do abundantly ſhew.

The Ancients knew no ſuch pretender to infallibility; otherwiſe they would have left diſputing, and run to his Oracular Dictates for information. They would have onely aſſerted this point againſt Hereticks. We ſhould have had Teſtimonies of it innumerable. It had been the moſt famous point of all.

In nullo aliter ſapere quàm res ſe habet angelica perfectio eſt. Aug. de Babt. c. Don. 2. 5. Not to think of a thing otherwiſe than 'tis, is an angelical perfection.

I will not mention Pope Stephanus univerſally approving the Baptiſm of Hereticks againſt the Decrees of the Synod of Nice and other Synods. Nor Pope Liberius complying with Arianiſm. Nor Pope Innocent I. and his followers at leaſt till Pope * Gelaſius firſt aſſerting the Communion of Infants for needfull. Nor Pope Vigilius dodging with the Fifth Synod. Nor Pope Honorius condemned by ſo many Councils and Popes for Monothelitiſm. But ſurely Pope Leo and Pope Gelaſius were ſtrangely deceived; when they condemned Partaking in one kind. Pope Gregory was foully out, when he condemned the || worſhip of Images; and when he ſo declaimeth againſt the title of Univerſal Biſhop; and when he avowed himſelf a Subject to the Emperour Mauritius; and when he denied the Books of Maccabees to be Canonical; and when he aſſerted the perfection of Holy Scripture.

* P. Gelaſ. I. Ep. 9. p. 636.

De Conſecr. diſt. 2. cap. 12.

|| Greg. Ep. 7. 110. Ep. 2. 62. Ep. 4. 32, 36. 38. 6. 30.

In Job. lib 19. cap. 13.

In Job. lib 18. cap. 14.

Pope Leo II. was miſtaken, when he did charge his infallible Predeceſſour Honorius of Monothelitiſm. Pope Nicholas was a little deceived when he determined the * attrition of Chriſt's Body. Pope Urban II. was out, when he allowed it || lawful for good Catholicks to commit murther on Perſons excommunicate. Pope Innocent IV. erred, when he called Kings, The Pope's ſlaves.

If many Popes had been writers, we ſhould have had more errours to charge them with.

* Grat. de Conſecr. diſt. 2. cap. 42

|| Grat. Cauſ 23. qu. 5. cap. 47.

Mancipia Papæ Matt. Pariſ. Anno 1253.

Surely thoſe Popes did err, who confirmed the Synods of Conſtance and Baſil; not excepting the determinations in favour of General Councils being Superiour to Popes. All thoſe Popes have deviliſhly erred, who have pretended to diſpoſe of Kingdoms, to depoſe Princes: to abſolve Subjects of their Oaths. Pope Adrian II. did not take the Pope to be infallible, when he ſaid he might not be judged, excepting the caſe of Hereſie; and thereby excuſeth the Orientals for anathematizing Honorius, he being accuſed of Hereſie.

Joh. 22 Gerſon. Serm. in Paſch. occam. Celeſtinus- — Alph. à Caſtro. Hær. 1. 4. Bin. Tom. 7. p. 994.

There is one Hereſie, of which, if all Hiſtories do not lie grievouſly, divers Popes have been guilty; a Hereſie defined by divers Popes; the Hereſie of Simony; How many ſuch Hereticks have ſate in that Chair? of which how many Popes are proclaimed guilty with a loud voice in Hiſtory? The hand, ſays St. * Bernard, does all the Papal buſineſs, ſhew me a man in all this greateſt City who would admit thee to be Pope without the mediation of a bribe? Yea how few for ſome Ages have been guiltleſs of this Hereſie? It may be anſwered, they were no Popes becauſe their Election was null; but then the Church hath often and long been without a Head. Then numberleſs Acts have been void; and Creations of Cardinals have been null; and conſequently there hath not probably been any true Pope for a long time.

P. Greg. VII. Ep. lib. 3. 7. Simoniaca hæreſis.

P. Jul. II. Conc. Lat. Seſſ. 5. (p. 57.) Idem electus non Apoſtolicus, ſed Apoſtaticus, & tanquam hæreſiarcha, &c. Ibid Tract. 4 ſect. 12. & ſect. 16.

Decernimus, quòd—— ſed etiam contra dictum ſic electum vel aſſumptum à Simoniaca labe opponi & excipi poſſit ſicut de vera & indubitata hæreſi——

* Omne Papale negotium manus agunt, quem dabis mihi de tota maxima Urbe, qui te in Papam receperit pretio non intercedente? Bern. de Conſid 4 2.

In the judgment of ſo many great Divines, which did conſtitute the Synod of Baſil, many Popes (near all ſurely) have been Hereticks; who have followed or countenanced the opinion that Popes are ſuperiour to General Councils; the which there is flatly declared Hereſie. Pope Eugenius by name was there declared a pertinacious Heretick, deviating from the faith—

A fide devius, pertinax hæreticus—— Concil. Baſil.. Seſſ. 34 p. 96. & p. 107.

It often happeneth that the Pope is not skilled in Divinity, as Pope Innocent X. was wont to profeſs concerning himſelf (to wave diſcourſe about Theological points) he therefore cannot pronounce, in uſe of ordinary means, but onely by miracle, as Balaam's Aſs. So Pope Innocent X. ſaid, that the Vicar of Jeſus Chriſt was not obliged to examine all things by diſpute; for that the truth of his decrees depended onely on divine Inſpiration: what is this but downright Quakeriſm, Enthuſiaſm, Impoſture?

Le Pape reſpondit, che le Vicaire de J. C ne eſtoit point oblige d'examiner toutes choſes par la diſpute; qae la verite de ſes decrets dependoit ſeulement de l'Inſpiration divine. Memor. Hiſt. de 5. Propoſ.

Pope Clemens V. did not take himſelf to be infallible, when in his great Synod of Vienna, the queſtion, whether beſide remiſſion of ſin, alſo vertue were conferred to Infants, he reſolved thus very honeſtly, ——The ſecond opinion, which ſays that informing grace and vertues are in baptiſm conferred both upon infants and adult perſons, we think fit with the conſent of the holy council to be choſen; as being more probable, and more conſonant and agreeable to the Divinity of the modern Doctours.

—— Opinionem ſecundam, quæ dicit tam parvulis quàm adultis conferri in baptiſmo informantem gratiam & virtutes, tanquam probabiliorem ac Doctorum modernorum Theologiæ magis conſonam & concordem ſacro approbante Concilio duximus eligendam. Clem. in Tit. 1.

Which of the two Popes were in the right, Pope Nicholas IV. who decided that our Lord was ſo poor that he had right to nothing, or Pope John XXII. who declared this to be a Hereſie, charging our Lord with injuſtice?

Bell. 4. 14. (p. 1318 )
Confer. Sext. lib 5. tit. 12. cap. 3
Extrav. Joh. XXII. tit. 14. cap 3,4,5.

XIV. A Sovereign is in Dignity and Authority Superiour to any number of Subjects, however conjoined or congregated; as a Head is above all the Members however compacted; He is not Supreme, who is any-wiſe ſubject or inferiour to a Senate, or any Aſſembly in his Territory.

Therefore the Pope doth claim a Superiority over all Councils; pretending that their determinations are invalid without his conſent and confirmation; that he can reſcind or make void their Decrees; that he can ſuſpend their Conſultations, and tranſlate or diſſolve them.

Bellarm. de Concil. 2. 15.

And Baronius reckons this as one errour in Hincmarus Biſhop of Rhemes, that he held as if the canons of Councils were of greater authority in the Church of God than the decrees of Popes, which, ſays he, how abſurd and unreaſonable an opinion it is, &c.

That the Authority of the Apoſtolick See in all Chriſtian Ages has been been preferred before the univerſal Church, both the Canons of our predeceſſours and manifold tradition do confirm.

Planè ſignificat majoris eſſe auctoritatis in Eccleſia Dei Canones Conciliorum decretis Pontificum: hæc quàm ſint abſurda & ab omni ratione penitus aliena, &c. Baron. ad. Ann. 992. Sect. 56.

Concil. Later. V. Seſſ. 11. p. 152.

Th. Cajet. Orat. in Conc. Lat. p. 36.

Apoſtolicæ verò Sedis auctoritas, quod cunctis ſæculis Chriſtianis Eccleſiæ prælata ſit univerſæ, & canonum ſerie paternorum, & multiplici traditione firmatur. P. Gelaſ. I. Ep. 8. (O impudentiam!)

This is a queſtion ſtiffly debated among Romaniſts; but the moſt (as Æneas Sylvius, afterward Pope Pius II. did acutely obſerve) with good reaſon do adhere to the Pope's ſide, becauſe the Pope diſpoſeth of Benefices, but Councils give none.

But in truth anciently the Pope was not underſtood Superiour to Councils: for greater is the Authority of the world than of one city, ſays St. Hierome. He was but one Biſhop, that had nothing to doe out of his precinct. He had but his Vote in them; He had the firſt Vote, as the Patriarch of Alexandria the ſecond, of Antioch the third--- but that order neither gave to him or them any advantage, as to deciſion; but common conſent, or the ſuffrages of the majority did prevail. He was conceived Subject to the Canons no leſs than other Biſhops. Councils did examine matters decreed by him, ſo as to follow or forſake them as they ſaw cauſe. The Popes themſelves did profeſs great veneration and obſervance of Conciliar Decrees. Pope Leo I. did oppoſe a Cannon of the Synod of Chalcedon, (not pretending his Superiority to Councils, but the inviolability of the Nicene Canons) but it notwithſtanding that oppoſition did prevail.

Major eſt auctoritas orbis quàm urbis. Hier. ad Evag.

Even in the Dregs of times, when the Pope had clambred ſo high to the top of power, this Queſtion in great unmerous Synods of Biſhops was agitated, and poſitively decided againſt him; both in Doctrine and practice.

Concil. Conſt. Seſſ. 4. (p. 1003.)

Concil. Baſſ. Seſſ. 33.

The Synod of Baſil aſſirmeth the mattter of theſe Decrees to be a verity of the Chriſtian faith, which whoever doth pertinaciouſly reſiſt, is to be deemed a heretick---- Thoſe Fathers ſay that none of the ſkilfull did ever doubt of this truth, that the Pope in things belonging to faith, was ſubject to the judgment of the ſame General Councils---- that the Council has an authority immediately from Chriſt which the Pope is bound to obey. Thoſe Synods were confirmed by Popes, without exception of thoſe determinations.

Veritas Catholicæ fidei, cui pertinaciter repugnans eſt cenſendus hæreticus Concil. Baſ. Seſſ. 33.

Nec unquam aliquis peritorum dubitavit ſummum Pontificem in his quæ fidem concernunt judicio eorundem Conciliorum univerſalium eſſe ſubjectum. Conc. Baſil. decret. p. 117.

Concilium habet poteſtatem immediatè à Chriſto, cui Papa obedire tenetur —— Conc. Baſ. Seſſ. 38. p. 101.

Great Churches, moſt famous Univerſities, a mighty ſtore of learned Doctors of the Roman Communion have reverenced thoſe Councils, and adhered to their Doctrine. Inſomuch that the Cardinal of Lorrain did affirm him to be an Heretick in France, who did hold the contrary.

Theſe things ſufficiently demonſtrate that the Pope cannot pretend to Supremacy by univerſal Tradition; and if he cannot prove it by that, how can he prove it? not ſurely by Scripture, nor by Decrees of ancient Synods, nor by any clear and convincing reaſon.

XV. The Sovereign of the Church is by all Chriſtians to be acknowledged the chief Perſon in the world, inferiour and ſubject to none; above all commands; the greateſt Emperour being his Sheep and Subject.

As in Iſrael Saul was the Head. 1 Sam. 15. 17.

He therefore now doth pretend to be above all Princes. Divers Popes have affirmed this Superiority. They are allowed and moſt favoured by him, who teach this Doctrine. In their Miſſal he is preferred above all Kings, being prayed for before them.

Rom. 13. 1.

But in the primitive times this was not held; for St. Paul requires every ſoul to be ſubject to the higher powers. Then the Emperour was avowed the firſt perſon, next to God; To whom, ſays Tertullian, they are ſecond, after whom they are firſt, before all and above all Gods. Why? &c. ---we worſhip the Emperour as a man next to God, and leſs onely than God. And Optatus, ---- ſince there is none above the Emperour but God who made him. ---- while Donatus extolleth himſelf above the Emperour, he raiſes himſelf as it were above humanity, and thinks himſelf to be God and not Man. For the King is the top and head of all things on earth. Then even * Apoſtles, Evangeliſts, Prophets, all men whoever were ſubject to the Emperour. The Emperours did command them, † even the bleſſed Biſhops and Patriarchs of old Rome, Conſtantinople, Alexandria, Theopolis and Jeruſalem. Divers Popes did avow themſeves ſubject to the Emperour.

—— à quo ſunt ſecundi, poſt quem primi ante omnes, & ſuper omnes Deos; quidni? cùm ſuper omnes homines, qui utique vivunt. Tertul. Apol. cap 30.

Colimus Imperatorem ut hominem à Deo ſecundum, & ſolo Deo minorem. Tertul. ad Scap. cap. 2.

Cùm ſuper Imperatorem non ſit niſi ſolus Deus, qui fecit Imperatorem. Opt. 3. Vid. Tr. 5. Sect. 14.

Dum ſe Donatus ſuper Imperatorem extollit, jam quaſi hominum exceſſerat modum ut ſe ut Deum non hominem æſtimaret. Id. Ibid.

Βασιλεὺς γὰρ κορυφὴ καὶ κεφαλὴ τῶν ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς ἐστιν ἁπάντων. Chryſ. Ἀνδρ. β. p. 463.

* Chryſ. in Rom. 13. 1.

† Jubemus igitur beatiſſimos Epiſcopos & Patriarchas hoc eſt ſenioris Romæ, & Conſtantinopoleos, & Alexandriæ, & Theopoleos & Hieroſolymorum. Juſtinian. Novel. 123. cap. 3. P. Greg. M. Ep. 2. 62. Supra in præf. Sect. 4. Tract. 5. Sect. 14.

XVI. The Confirmation of Magiſtrates, elected by others, is a Branch of Supremacy which the Pope doth aſſume.

Vid. Sect. 5. Diſt. 63. c. 4. P. Nic. I. Ep. Ann. 482. Sect. 1.

Baronius ſaith that this was the ancient cuſtome; and that Pope Simplicius did confirm the Election of Calendion Biſhop of Antioch. Meletius confirm'd the moſt holy Gregory in the Biſhoprick of Conſtantinople.

Ἐβεβαίωσε τῷ θειοτάτῳ Γρηγορίῳ τὴν τῆς Κωνσταντινουπόλεως προεδρείαν. Theod. 5. 8.

But the truth is, that anciently Biſhops being elected did onely give an account of their choice unto all other Biſhops; eſpecially to thoſe of higheſt rank, deſiring their approbation and friendſhip, for preſervation of due communion, correſpondence and peace. So the Synod of Antioch gave an account to the Biſhops of Rome and Alexandria, and all their Fellow-miniſters throughout the world, &c. of the election of Domnus after Paulus Samoſatenus. So the Fathers of Conſtantinople acquainted Pope Damaſus and the Weſtern Biſhops with the Conſtitution of Nectarius, Flavianus, &c.

Καὶ τοῖς κατὰ τὴν οἰκουμένην πᾶσι συλλειτουργοῖς —— Euſeb. 7. 30.

This was not to requeſt Confirmation, as if the Pope or other Biſhops could reject the Election if regular, but rather to aſſure whom they were to communicate with. We have (ſay the Fathers of the Synod againſt Paulus Samoſatenus) ſignified this, (our chuſing of Domnus into Paulus's room) that you may write to him and receive letters of communion from him---- And St. Cyprian; That you and our Collegues may know to whom they may write, and from whom they may receive letters.

Ἐδηλώσαμεν τε ὑμῖν ὅπως τούτῳ γράφητε, καὶ τὰ παρὰ τούτου κοινωνικὰ δέχησθε γράμματα.——Euſeb. Ibid.

Ut ſcires tu, & Collegæ noſtri quibus ſcribere, & literas mutuò à quibus vos accipere oporteret —— Cypr. Ep. 55 (ad Cornel.)

Thus the Biſhops of Rome themſelves did acquaint other Biſhops with their Election, their Faith, &c. So did Cornelius; whom therefore S. Cyprian aſſerteth as eſtabliſhed by the conſent and approbation of his Collegues; When the place of Peter and the Sacerdotal Chair was void, which by God's will being occupied, and with all our conſents confirmed, &c. --- and the teſtimony of our Fellow-biſhops, the whole number of which all over the world unanimouſly conſented.

Vid. P. Greg. Tract. de Unit. Eccl.

Cum locus Petri, & gradus Cathedræ Sacerdotalis vacaret, quo occupato de Dei voluntate, atque omnium noſtrûm conſenſione firmato — Cypr. Ep. 52.

-- & Co-epiſcoporum teſtimonio, quorum numerus univerſus per totum mundum concordi unanimitate conſenſit. Ibid.

The Emperour did confirm Biſhops, as we ſee by that notable paſſage in the Synod of Chalcedon; where Baſſianus, Biſhop of Epheſus, pleading for himſelf ſaith, Our moſt religious Emperour knowing theſe things preſently ratified it, and by a memorial publiſhed it, confirming the Biſhoprick; afterwards he ſent his reſcript by Euſtathius the Silentiary again confirming it.

Γνοὺς δὲ ταῦτα ὁ εὐσεβέστατος ἡμῶν Βασιλεὺς, εὐθὺς τοῦτο αὐτὸ ἐβεβαίωσε, καὶ εὐθέως διὰ ὑπομνηστικοῦ ἐδήλωσεν ἐν φανερῷ, βεβαιῶν τὴν Ἐπισκοπὴν· μετὰ ταῦτα ἀπέστειλε σάκραν πάλιν διὰ Εὐσταθίου τοῦ Σιλεντιαρίου βεβαιοῦσαν τὴν Ἐπισκοπήν. Conc. Chalc. Act. 11. (p. 404.)

XVII. It is a Privilege of Sovereigns to grant Privileges, Exemptions, Diſpenſations.

This he claimeth; but againſt the Laws of God and Rights of Biſhops. Againſt the Decrees of Synods----againſt the ſenſe of good men in all times.

Vid. Bern.

XVIII. It is a Prerogative of Sovereign power, to Erect, Tranſlate Spiritual Preſidencies.

Wherefore this the Pope claimeth. Cum ex illo, &c.

*P.*Innoc.III.in Greg.*decr. li.*1. *tit.*7 *c.1.—&c.*

But at firſt he had nothing to doe therein, except in his own Province or Dioceſe.

As Chriſtianity did grow and enter into Cities, ſo the neighbour Biſhops did ordain Biſhops there.

Princes often, as they did endow, ſo they did erect Epiſcopal Sees and did, as was ſutable, change places.

Pope Paſchal II. doth by complaining atteſt to this, writing to the Archbiſhop of Poland, What ſhall I ſay of the tranſlations of Biſhops, which among you are preſumed to be made, not by Apoſtoliek authority, but the King's command.

Quid ſuper Epiſcoporum tranſlationibus loquar, quæ apud vos non auctoritate Apoſtolicâ, ſed nutu Regis præſumuntur? P. Paſch. II. Ep. 6. Præter authoritatem noſtram Epiſcoporum tranſlationes præſumitis— Eadm. p. 115.

XIX. It is a great Prerogative of Sovereignty to impoſe Taxes on the Clergy or People.

Wherefore the Pope doth aſſume this; as for inſtance that Decree of Pope Innocent IV. in the firſt Synod of Lions; By the common conſent of the Council we ordain that all the Clergy, as well thoſe who are under authority as the Prelates, pay for three years a twentieth part of their Eccleſia-

Cæterùm ex communi Concilii approbatione ſtatuimus, ut omnes omnino Clerici, tam ſubditi quàm prælati, vigeſimam Eccleſiarum proventuum uſque ad triennium conferant in ſubſidium terræ ſanctæ, per manus eorum, qui ad hoc Apoſtolicâ fuerint providentiâ ordinati.—— ſciàntque ſe omnes ad hoc fideliter obſervandum per excommunicationis ſententiam obligatos. Lugdun. Concil. 1. (Anno 1245.)

ſtical revenues towards the aſſiſtence of the holy Land, into the hands of thoſe who ſhall be thereto appointed by the prudence of the Apoſtolick See.—and let all know that this they are bound faithfully to do under pain of excommunication.

But Antiquity knew no ſuch Impoſitions: when the Church, the Clergy, the Poor were maintained and relieved by voluntary Offerings, or Obventions.

Ut ditentur Oblationibus Matronarum.

Even the invidious ſplendour of the Roman Biſhop was ſupported by the Oblations of Matrons, as Marcellinus obſerveth.

Marcell. 27. Vid. Conſt. Apoſt. 2. 25. Nam qui conſtituerent vel fundâruut ſanctiſſimas Eccleſias pro ſua ſalute & communis Reipublicæ, reliquerunt illis ſubſtantias, ut per eas debeant ſacræ liturgiæ fieri, & ut illis à miniſtrantibus piis Clericis Deus colatur. Cod. Lib. 1. Tit. 3. Sect. 42.

This is an encroachment upon the right of Princes, unto whom Clergymen are Subjects, and bound to render tribute to whom tribute belongeth.

SUPPOSITION VII.

A farther grand Aſſertion of the Roman Party, is this, That the Papal Supremacy is indefectible, and unalterable.

BUT good reaſons may be aſſigned, why even ſuppoſing that the Pope had an Univerſal Sovereignty in virtue of his Succeſſion to Saint Peter conferred on him, it is not aſſuredly conſequent, that it muſt always, or doth now belong to him. For it might be ſettled on him not abſolutely but upon conditions, the which failing his authority may expire. It might be God's will that it ſhould onely continue for a time. And there are divers ways, whereby according to common rules of juſtice, he might be diſſeiſed thereof.

1. If God had poſitively declared his will concerning this Point, that ſuch a Sovereignty was by him granted irrevocably and immutably, ſo that in no caſe it might be removed or altered, then indeed it muſt be admitted for ſuch; but if no ſuch declaration doth appear, then to aſſert it for ſuch is to derogate from his power and providence; by exemption of this caſe from it. It is the ordinary courſe of providence ſo to confer power of any kind or nature on men, as to reſerve to himſelf the liberty of transferring it, qualifying it, extending or contracting it, aboliſhing it, according to his pleaſure, in due ſeaſons and exigencies of things. Whence no humane power can be ſuppoſed abſolutely ſtable or immovably fixed in one perſon or place.

2. No power can have a higher ſource, or firmer ground, than that of the Civil Government hath, for all ſuch power is from heaven, and in relation to that it is ſaid, There is no power but from God, the powers that
Joh. 29. 11. Rom. 13. 1. are, are ordanied by God: But yet ſuch power is liable to various alterations, and is like the Sea, having ebbs and flows, and ever changing its bounds either perſonal or local.

Any temporal Juriſdiction may be loſt by thoſe revolutions and viciſſitudes of things, to which all humane Conſtitutions are ſubject; and which are ordered by the will and providence of the moſt High, who ruleth Dan. 5. 21. Pſal. 75. 7 in the Kingdom of men, appointing over it whom he pleaſeth; putting down one, and ſetting up another.

Adam By God's appointment was Sovereign of the world; and his firſt born Succeſſours derived the ſame power from him: yet in courſe of time that order hath been interrupted, and divers independent Sovereignties do take place.

Every Prince hath his authority from God, or by virtue of Divine Ordination within his own Territory; and according to God's Ordinance the lawfull Succeſſour hath a right to the ſame authority; yet by accidents ſuch authority doth often fail totally or in part, changing its extent.

Why then may not any Spiritual power be liable to the ſame viciſſitudes? why may not a Prelate be degraded as well as a Prince? why may not the Pope, as well as the Emperour, loſe all, or part of his Kingdom?

Why may not the Succeſſour of Peter, no leſs than the Heir of Adam ſuffer a defaileur of Juriſdiction?

That Spiritual Corporations, Perſons and Places are ſubject to the ſame contingencies with others, as there is like reaſon to ſuppoſe, ſo Jer. 7. 12.
there are examples to prove; God removed his ſanctuary from Shiloh, Jer. 7. 14.
Go ye now unto my place, which was in Shiloh, where I ſet my name at firſt, Apoc. 2. 5.
&c. He deſerted Jeruſalem. He removeth the Candleſticks. He placed Eli (of the Family of Ithamar) in the High-Prieſthood, and diſplaced his Race from it: I ſaid indeed (ſaith God) that thy houſe, 1 Sam. 2. 30.
and the houſe of thy father ſhould walk before me for ever, but now the 1 King. 2. 27.
Lord ſaith, Be it far from me, &c.

3. The reaſon and exigency of things might be ſufficient ground for altering an Univerſal Juriſdiction; for when it ſhould prove very inconvenient or hurtfull, God might order ſuch an alteration to happen, and men be obliged to allow it.

As God firſt did inſtitute one Univerſal Monarchy, but that form (upon the multiplication of mankind, and peopling of the earth) proving incommodious, providence gave way for its change, and ſetting up of particular Governments; to which men are bound to ſubmit; So God might inſtitute a ſingular Preſidency of the Church; but when the Church grew vaſtly extended, ſo that ſuch a Government would not conveniently ſerve the whole, he might order a diviſion, in which we ſhould acquieſce.

4. It hath ever been deemed reaſonable, and accordingly been practiſed, that the Church in its exteriour form and political adminiſtrations ſhould be ſuted to the ſtate of the world, and Conſtitution of worldly Govenrments that their might be no claſhing or diſturbance from each to other.

Wherefore ſeeing the World is now ſettled under ſo many Civil Sovereignties, it is expedient that Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline ſhould be ſo modelled, as to comply with each of them.

And it is reaſonable, that any pretence of Juriſdiction ſhould veil to the publick good of the Church and the World.

That it ſhould be neceſſary for the Church to retain the ſame form of policy or meaſure of power affixed to perſons or places, can nowiſe be demonſtrated by ſufficient proof, and it is not conſiſtent with experience; which ſheweth the Church to have ſubſiſted with variations of that kind.

There hath in all times been found much reaſon or neceſſity to make alterations as well in the places and bounds of Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction, as of ſecular Empire.

Wherefore Saint Peter's Monarchy, reaſon requiring, might be cantonized into divers ſpiritual Supremacies; and as other Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdictions have been chopp'd and chang'd, enlarged or diminiſhed, removed and extinguiſhed, ſo might that of the Roman Biſhop. The Pope cannot retain power in any State againſt the will of the Prince: he is not bound to ſuffer correſpondences with Foreigners, eſpecially ſuch who apparently have intereſts contrary to his honour and the good of his people.

5. Eſpecially that might be done if the continuance of ſuch a Juriſdiction ſhould prove abominably corrupt, or intolerably grievous to the Church.

6. That power is defectible which according to the nature and courſe of things doth ſometime fail.

But the Papal Succeſſion hath often been interrupted by contingencies (of Sedition, Schiſm, Intruſion, Simoniacal Election, Depoſition, &c. as before ſhewed) and is often interrupted by Vacancies from the death of the Incumbents.

7. If leaving their dubious and falſe ſuppoſitions, (concerning Divine Inſtitution, Succeſſion to Saint Peter, &c.) we conſider the truth of the caſe, indeed the more grounded plea of the Pope, that Papal preeminence was obtained by the wealth and dignity of the Roman City, and by the collation or countenance of the Imperial authority; then by the defect of ſuch advantages it may ceaſe or be taken away: for when Rome hath ceaſed to be the Capital City, the Pope may ceaſe to be Head of the Church. When the Civil powers, which have ſucceeded the Imperial, each in its reſpective Territory, are no leſs abſolute than it, they may take it away, if they judge it fit; for whatever power was granted by humane Authority, by the ſame may be revoked; and what the Emperour could have done, each Sovereign power now may doe for it ſelf.

An indefectible power cannot be ſetled by man; becauſe there is no power ever extant at one time greater than there is at another; ſo that whatever power one may raiſe, the other may demoliſh; there being no bounds whereby the preſent time may bind all poſterity.

However no humane Law can extempt any Conſtitution from the providence of God; which at pleaſure can diſſolve whatever man hath framed. And if the Pope were deveſted of all adventitious power, obtained by humane means, he would be left very bare; and hardly would take it worth his while to contend for Juriſdiction.

8. However or whenceſoever the Pope had his authority, yet it may be forfeited by defects and defaults incurred by him.

If the Pope doth encroach on the rights and liberties of others uſurping a lawleſs domination, beyond reaſon and meaſure, they may in their own defence be forced to reject him, and ſhake off his yoke.

If he will not be content to govern otherwiſe than by infringing the Sacred Laws, and trampling down the inviolable Privileges of the Churches, either granted by Chriſt, or eſtabliſhed by the Sanctions of General Synods; he thereby depriveth himſelf of all Authority; becauſe it cannot be admitted upon tolerable terms, without greater wrong of many others (whoſe right out-weigheth his) and without great miſchief to the Church, the good of which is to be preferred before his private advantage.

This was the Maxime of a great Pope, a great ſtickler for his own dignity; for when the Biſhop of Conſtantinople was advanced by a General Synod above his ancient pitch of dignity, that Pope oppoſing him did ſay, that whoever doth affect more than his due, doth loſe that which properly belonged to him; the which Rule if true in regard to another's caſe, may be applied to the Pope, for with what judgment ye judge ye ſhall be judged, and with what meaſure ye mete, it ſhall be meaſured to you again.

Propria perdit, qui indebita concupiſcit P. Leo. I. Ep. 54.

On ſuch a ſuppoſition of the Papal encroachment, we may return his words upon him; It is too proud and immoderate a thing to ſtretch beyond ones bounds, and in contempt of antiquity, to be willing to invade other mens right, and to oppoſe the Primacies of ſo many Metropolitans, on purpoſe to advance the dignity of one.

For the privileges of Churches, being inſtituted by the Canons of the holy Fathers, and fixt by the Decrees of the venerable Synod of Nice, cannot be pluckt up by any wicked attempt, nor altered by any innovation.

Far be it from me, that I ſhould in any Church infringe the Decrees of our Anceſtours made in favour of my fellow-prieſts; for I do my ſelf injury, if I diſturb the rights of my brethren.

Superbum nimis eſt & immoderatum ultra fines proprios tendere, & antiquitate calcatâ alienum jus velle præripere; utque unius creſcat dignitas, tot Metropolitanorum impugnare primatus——P. Leo .I Ep. 55.

Privilegia enim Eccleſiarum, ſanctorum Patrum Canonibus inſtituta, & venerabilis Nicenæ Synodi fixa Decretis, nullâ poſſunt improbitate convelli, nullâ novitate mutari. Ibid.

Abſit hoc à me, ut Statuta Majorum Conſacerdotibus meis in qualibet Eccleſiâ infringam, quia mihi injuriam facio, ſi fratrum meorum jura perturbo. Greg. I. Epiſt. 2. 37.

The Pope ſurely (according to any ground of Scripture, or Tradition, or ancient Law) hath no Title to greater Principality in the Church, than the Duke of Venice hath in that State; Now if the Duke of Venice in prejudice to the publick right and liberty, ſhould attempt to ſtretch his power to an abſoluteneſs of command, or much beyond the bounds allowed him by the conſtitution of that Common-wealth, he would thereby ſurely forfeit his Supremacy, (ſuch as it is) and afford cauſe to the State of rejecting him: the like occaſion would the Pope give to the Church by the like demeanour.

9. The Pope by departing from the Doctrine and Practice of Saint Peter, would forfeit his Title of Succeſſour to him; for in ſuch a caſe no ſucceſſion in place or in name could preſerve it; The Popes themſelves had ſwerved and degenerated from the example of Peter.

They are not the Sons of the Saints, who hold the places of the ſaints, but they that doe their works. (Which place is raſed out of St. Hierome.)

They have not the inheritance of Peter, who have not the faith of Peter, which they tear aſunder by ungodly diviſion.

So Gregory Nazianzene ſaith of Athanaſius, that he was Succeſſour of Mark, no leſs in piety than preſidency: the which we muſt ſuppoſe to be properly ſucceſſion: otherwiſe the Mufti of Conſtantinople is Succeſſour to St. Andrew, of St. Chryſoſtome, &c. the Mufti of Jeruſalem to St. James.

Pontifices ipſi à Petri veſtigiis diſceſſerant. Plat. in Joh. 10. (p. 275.)

Non Sanctorum Filii ſunt, qui tenent loca Sanctorum, ſed qui exercent opera eorum —— Hieron. ad Heliod. apud Grat. Diſt. 40. cap. 2.

Non habent Petri hæreditatem qui Petri fidem non habent, quam impiâ diviſione diſcerpunt. Ambr. de Pœn. 1. 6.

Οὐχ ἧττον τῆς εὐσεβείας, ἢ τῆς προεδρείας διάδοχος —— ἣν δὴ καὶ κυρίως ὑποληπτέον διαδοχήν· τὸ μὲν γὰρ ὁμόγνωμον καὶ ὁμόθρονον, τὸ δὲ ἀντίδοξον καὶ ἀντίθρονον —— Greg. Naz. Or. 21.

If then the Biſhop of Rome inſtead of teaching Chriſtian Doctrine doth propagate Errours contrary to it; If inſtead of guiding into Truth and Godlineſs, he ſeduceth into Falſhoood and Impiety; If inſtead of declaring and preſſing the Laws of God, he delivereth and impoſeth Precepts oppoſite, prejudicial, deſtructive of God's Laws; If inſtead of promoting genuine Piety, he doth (in ſome inſtances) violently oppoſe it: If inſtead of maintaining true Religion, he doth pervert and corrupt it by bold Defalcations, by Superſtitious additions, by Foul mixtures and alloys; If he coineth new Creeds, Articles of Faith, new Scriptures, new Sacraments, new Rules of Life, obtruding them on the Conſciences of Chriſtians; If he conformeth the Doctrines of Chriſtianity to the Intereſts of his Pomp and Profit; making gain godlineſs; If he preſcribe Vain, Prophane, Superſtitious ways of Worſhip, turning Devotion into Foppery and Pageantry; If inſtead of preſerving Order and Peace, he fomenteth Diſcords and Factions in the Church; being a Make-bate and Incendiary among Chriſtians; If he claimeth exorbitant Power, and exerciſeth Oppreſſion and tyrannical Domination over his Brethren; curſing and damning all that will not ſubmit to his Dictates and commands; If inſtead of being a Shepherd, he is a Wolf, worrying and tearing the Flock by cruel Perſecution: He by ſuch behaviour ipſo facto depriveth himſelf of Authority and Office; He becometh thence no Guide or Paſtour to any Chriſtian; there doth in ſuch caſe reſt no obligation to hear or obey him; but rather to decline him, to diſcoſt from him, to reject and diſclaim him.

Non Facit Eccleſiaſtica dignitas Chriſtianum. Hier.
Eccleſiaſtical dignity makes not a Chriſtian.
Non omnes Epiſcopi Epiſcopi ſunt. Id.
All Biſhops are not Biſhops.
Οἱ παρ' αὐτοῖς κατάσκοποι, οὐ γὰρ Ἐπίσκοποι. Athan. Conſt. Ap. 8. 2.
They with them are ſcouts or ſpies, not Overſeers or Biſhops.

This is the reaſon of the caſe, this the Holy Scripture doth preſcribe, this is according to the Primitive Doctrine, Tradition and Practice of the Church. For,

10. In reaſon, the nature of any ſpiritual Office conſiſting in Inſtruction in Truth and Guidance in Vertue toward attainment of Salvation; if any man doth lead into pernicious Errour or Impiety, he thereby ceaſeth to be capable of ſuch Office: As a blind man, by being ſo, doth ceaſe to be a Guide; and much more he, that declareth a will to ſeduce; for, Who ſo blind as he that will not ſee?

Luk. 6. 39. Μήτι δύναται τυφλὸς τυφλὸν ὁδηγεῖν;

Matt. 15. 14. No man can be bound to follow any one into the ditch: or to obey any Ezek. 3. 18. one in prejudice to his own Salvation; to die in his iniquity. Seeing God
Matt. 15. 9. ſaith in ſuch a caſe, μάτην σέβονταί με, In vain do they worſhip me, teaching for Doctrines the Precepts of men

They themſelves do acknowledge that Hereticks ceaſe to be biſhops;
Bel. de P. R. 2 30 (p. 1083.) and ſo to be Popes. Indeed they ceaſe to be Chriſtians; for ἐξέστραπται ὁ τοιοῦτος, ſuch a one is ſubverted.

11. According to their Principles, the Pope hath the ſame relation to other Biſhops and Paſtours of the Church, which they have to their people; he being Paſtour of Paſtours: But if any Paſtour ſhould teach bad Doctrine, or preſcribe bad Practice, his people may reject and diſobey him; therefore in proportion, the Paſtours may deſert the Pope miſguiding or miſgoverning them. In ſuch caſes any Inferiour is exempted from obligation to comply with his Superiour, either truly or pretendedly ſuch.

12. The caſe may be that we may not hold communion with the Pope, but may be obliged to ſhun him; in which caſe his Authority doth fail, and no man is ſubject to him.

13. This is the Doctrine of the Scripture. The High Prieſt and his fellows, under the Jewiſh Oeconomy, had no leſs Authority than any Matt. 23. 2. Pope can now pretend unto; they did ſit in the Chair of Moſes, and Matt. 15 6. therefore all their True Doctrines and Lawfull Directions the people were were obliged to learn and obſerve; but their falſe Doctrines, and impious Precepts they were bound to ſhun; and conſequently to diſclaim their Authority ſo far as employ'd in urging ſuch Doctrines and Precepts; Ἄφετε αὐτούς, Let them alone, ſaith our Saviour, they are blind leaders of the blind. Under the Chriſtian diſpenſation, the matter is no leſs clear; our Lord commandeth us to beware of falſe Prophets; and to ſee that no man deceive us; although he wear the cloathing of a Sheep, or come under the name of a Shepherd (coming in his name—). Saint Paul informeth us, that if an Apoſtle, if an Angel from Heaven doth preach beſide the old Apoſtolical Doctrine (introducing any new Goſpel, or a Divinity deviſed by himſelf) he is to be held accurſed by us. He affirmeth, that even the Apoſtles themſelves were not Lords of our faith, nor might challenge any power inconſiſtent with the maintenance of Chriſtian Truth and Piety; We (ſaith he) can doe nothing againſt the truth, but for the truth; the which an ancient Writer doth well apply to the Pope, ſaying, that he could doe nothing againſt the truth more than any of his Fellow-prieſts could doe; which St Paul did in practice ſhew, when he reſiſted Saint Peter, declining from the truth of the Goſpel. He chargeth that if any one doth ἑτεροδιδασκαλεῖν, teach heterodoxies, we ſhould ſtand off from him; that, if any brother walketh diſorderly, and not according to Apoſtolical tradition, we ſhould withdraw from him; that if any one doth raiſe diviſions and ſcandals beſide the doctrines received from the Apoſtles we ſhould decline from him; that we are to refuſe any heretical perſon. He telleth us that grievous Wolves ſhould come into the Church, not ſparing the flock; that from among Chriſtians there ſhould ariſe men ſpeaking perverſe things, to draw diſciples after them; but no man ſurely ought to follow, but to ſhun them.

Matt. 16. 6. Ὁρᾶτε καὶ προσέχετε ἀπὸ τῆς ζύμης —— ἀπὸ τῆς διδαχῆς. Verſ. 12. Beware and take heed of the leaven —— of the doctrine.

Matt. 15. 14.

Matt. 7. 15.

Matt. 24. 4.

Gal. 1. 8, 9.

2 Cor. 1. 24.

2 Cor. 13. 7, 8.

Nec aliquid contra veritatem, ſed pro veritate, plus ſuis Con-ſacerdotibus poteſt. Fac. Hermian. 2. 6.

Gal. 2. 11. 14. Ὅτι οὐκ ὀρθοποδοῦσι πρὸς τὴν ἀλήθειαν τοῦ εὐαγγελίου.

1 Tim. 6. 3, 5. εἴ τις ἑτεροδιδασκαλεῖ —— ἀφίστασο ἀπὸ τῶν τοιούτων.

2 Theſſ. 3. 6. στέλλεσθαι ἀπὸ παντὸς ἀδελφοῦ ——

Rom. 16. 17. ἐκκλίνειν ἀπ' αὐτῶν.

Tit. 3. 10.

Act. 20. 29. εἰσελεύσονται εἰς ὑμᾶς.

Act. 20. 30.

Theſe Precepts and Admonitions are general, without any reſpect or exception of Perſons great or ſmall, Paſtour or Lay-men: nay they may in ſome reſpect more concern Biſhops than others; for that they declining from truth, are more dangerous and and contagious.

14. The Fathers (in reference to this caſe) do clearly accord, both in their Doctrine and Practice. St Cyprian telleth us, that a people obedient to the Lord's commandments, and fearing God, ought to ſeparate it ſelf from a ſinful Biſhop, that is, from one guilty of ſuch ſins which unqualifie him for Chriſtian Communion or Paſtoral charge; and Let not (addeth he) the common people flatter it ſelf, as if it could be free from the contagion of guilt, if it communicate with a ſinful Biſhop; whoſe irreligious Doctrine or Practice doth render him uncapable of communion; for how (ſaith he otherwhere) can they preſide over integrity and continence, if corruptions and the teaching of vices do begin to proceed from them?

Plebs obſequens præceptis Dominicis & Deum metuens à peccatore præpoſito ſeparare ſe debet. Cypr. Ep. 68.

Nec ſibi plebs blandiatur, quaſi immunis eſſe à contagio delicti poſſit cum Sacerdote peccatore communicans. Ibid.

Quomodo enim poſſunt integritati & continentiæ præeſſe, ſi ex ipſis incipiant corruptelæ & vitiorum magiſteria procedere? Cyp. Ep. 62.

They who reject the Commandment of God, and labour to eſtabliſh their own tradition, let them be ſtrongly and ſtoutly refuſed and rejected by you.

Qui mandatum Dei rejiciunt, & traditionem ſuam ſtatuere conantur, fortiter à vobis & firmiter reſpuantur. Cypr. Ep. 40. (p. 73.)

Ἀλλὰ δεῖξαι βουλόμενος, ὅτι ἀξίωμα προσώπων οὐ προσίεται, ὅταν περὶ ἀληθείας ὁ λόγος ᾖ. Chryſ. in Gal. 1. 9.

Κἂν γὰρ τῶν πρώτων Ἀγγέλων ᾖ τις τῶν ἐξ οὐρανοῦ, διαφθείρων τὸ κήρυγμα, ἀνάθεμα ἔστω. Ibid 1. 8.

Καὶ οὐκ εἶπεν, ἐὰν ἐναντία καταλλέγγωσιν, ἢ ἀνατρέπωσι τὸ πᾶν, ἀλλὰ κἂν μικρόν τι εὐαγγελίζωνται παρ' ὃ εὐαγγελισάμεθα, κἂν τὸ τυχὸν παρακινήσωσι, ἀνάθεμα ἔστωσαν. Ibid.

St. Chryſoſtome, commenting on Saint Paul's words, If I or an Angel----ſaith, that Saint Paul meaneth to ſhew, that dignity of perſons is not to be regarded where truth is concerned; that, if one of the chief Angels from Heaven ſhould corrupt the Goſpel, he were to be accurſed; that, not onely if they ſhall ſpeak things contrary, or overturn all, but if they preach any ſmall matter beſide the Apoſtolical doctrine, altering the leaſt point whatever, they are liable to an anathema.

Εἰ μὲν γὰρ δόγμα ἔχει διεστραμμένον, κἂν Ἄγγελος ᾖ, μὴ πείθου· εἰ δὲ ὀρθὰ διδάσκει, μὴ τῷ βίῳ πρόσεχε, ἀλλὰ τοῖς ῥήμασι. Chryſ. in 2. Tim. Orat. 2.

Eccclesiaſtici Judices ut homines plerunque falluntur---Aug. c. Creſc. 2. 21.

Quia nec Catholicis Epiſcopis conſentiendum eſt, ſicubi fortè falluntur, ut contra Canonicas Dei Scripturas aliquid ſentiant. Auguſt. de Unit. Eccl. cap. 10.

Si quia eſt Eccleſia, quæ fidem reſpuat, nec Apoſtolicæ prædicationis fundamenta poſſideat, nè quam labem perfidiæ poſſit aſpergere deſerenda eſt. Ambr. in Luc. 9. (p. 85.)

And other-where, very earneſtly perſuading his Audience to render due reſpect and obedience to their Biſhop, he yet interpoſeth this exception, If he hath a perverſe opinion, although he be an Angel do not obey him; but if he teacheth right things, regard not his life but his words.

Eccleſiaſtical Judges as men are for the moſt part deceived,

For neither are Catholick Biſhops to be aſſented to, if peradventure in any caſe they are miſtaken, ſo as to hold any thing contrary to the canonical Scriptures of God.

If there be any Church which rejects the faith, and does not hold the fundamentals of the Apoſtolical doctrine, it ought to be forſaken, leſt it infect others with its heterodoxy.

If in ſuch caſe we muſt deſert any Church, then the Roman; if any Church, then much more any Biſhop, particularly him of Rome.

Quod non ſolùm præſuli Apoſtolico facere licet, ſed cuicunque Pontifici, ut quoſlibet & quemlibet locum ſecundum regulam hæreſeos ipſius ante damnatæ, à Catholica communione diſcernant. P. Gelaſ. I. Ep. 4.

Fides univerſalis eſt, omnium communis eſt, non ſolùm ad Clericos, verùm etiam ad Laicos, & ad omnes omnino pertinet Chriſtianos. P. Nich. I. Ep 8. p. 506.

Oves ergò quæ paſtori ſuo commiſſæ fuerint, eum nec reprehendere, niſi à recta fide exorbitaverit, debent---- P. Joh. I. Ep. 1. (apud Bin. Tom. 3. p. 812.

This hath been the Doctrine of divers Popes.

Which not onely the Apoſtolical Prelate, but any other Biſhop may doe, viz. diſcriminate and ſevere any men, and any place from the Catholick communion, according to the rule of that fore-condemned hereſie.

Faith is univerſal, common to all, and belongs not onely to Clergymen but alſo to Laicks, and even to all Chriſtians.

Therefore the ſheep which are committed to the cure of their Paſtour, ought not to reprehend him, unleſs he ſwerve and go aſtray from the right faith.

15. That this was the current opinion, common practice doth ſhew, there being ſo many inſtances of thoſe who rejected their Superiours, and withdrew from their communion, in caſe of their maintaining errours, or of their diſorderly behaviour; ſuch practice having been approved by General and Great Synods as alſo by divers Popes.

Ἐν τῷ συνεδρίῳ πολλάκις τινὲς τῶν εὐλαβεστάτων πρεσβυτέρων ἤλεγξαν αὐτόν, καὶ διὰ τὴν ἀπείθειαν αὐτοῦ τῆς αὐτοῦ κοινωνίας αὐτοὺς ἐξέβαλον ----Conc. Eph. part I. p. 220.

When Neſtorius Biſhop of Conſtantinople did introduce new and ſtrange Doctrine, divers of his Presbyters did rebuke him, and withdraw communion from him; which proceeding is approved in the Epheſine Synod.

Εὐχὴ μὲν ἅπασι τοῖς εὖ φρονοῦσι, τιμὴν ἀεὶ καὶ πρέπουσαν αἰδῶ τοῖς δογματικοῖς μάλιστα πατράσι καὶ διδασκάλοις ἀπονέμειν· εἰ δέ πη συμβῇ τοὺς διδάσκειν ὀφείλοντας τοιαῦτα τοῖς ὑπηκόοις ἐνηχῖν περὶ τῆς πί-

Particularly Chariſius did aſſert this proceeding in thoſe remarkable words preſented to that ſame Synod; 'Tis the wiſh and deſire of all well affected perſons, to give always all due honour and reverence eſpecially to their ſpiritual Fathers and Teachers: but if it ſhould ſo happen that they who ought to teach, ſhould inſtil unto thoſe who are ſet under them ſuch things concerning the faith, as are offenſive to the ears and hearts of all men, then of neceſſity the order muſt be inverted, and they who teach wrong Doctrine muſt be rebuked of thoſe who are their inferiours.

ϛεως, οἷα τὰς ἁπάντων ἀκοὰς ϗ καρδίας καταβλάπτει, ἀνάγκη τὴν τάξιν ἀνταλλάττεσθαι ϗ τοὺς κακῶς διδάσκοντας ἐλεγχομένους ὑπὸ τῶν ἡττόνων διελέγχεσθαι. Chariſ. in Conc. Eph. Act. 6. p. 328.

Pope Celeſtine I. in that caſe did commend the people of Conſtantinople, deſerting their Paſtour; Happy flock (ſaid he) to whom the Lord did afford to judge about its own Paſture.

Μακάριος δὲ ὑμᾶς ἡ ἀγέλη ἣν παρέσχεν ὁ Κύριος κρίνειν περὶ τῆς ἰδίας νομῆς. Celeſt. I. in Conc. Eph. p. 190.

St. Hierome did preſume to write very briskly and ſmartly in reproof of John Biſhop of Hieruſalem, in whoſe province he a ſimple Presbyter did reſide.

Who makes a Schiſm in the Church? we whoſe whole houſe in Bethlehem communicate with the Church, or thou, who either believeſt aright, and proudly concealeſt the truth, or art of a wrong belief, and really makeſt a breach in the Church? Art thou onely the Church? and is he who offendeth thee excluded from Christ?

Quis ſcindit Eccleſiam? nos quorum omnis domus in Bethlehem in Eccleſia communicat; an tu qui aut benè credis, & ſuperbè de fide taces, aut malè & verè ſcindis Eccleſiam?——An tu ſolus Eccleſia es; & qui te offenderit à Chriſto excluditur? Hier. Ep. 61. cap. 16. Ep. 62.

Malchion, Presbyter of Antioch diſputed againſt Paulus Samoſatenus his Biſhop.

Malchion diſertiſſimus Antiochenæ Eccleſiæ Presbyter, adverſus Paulum Samoſatenum, qui Antiochenæ Eccleſiæ Epiſcopus dogma Artemonis inſtaurârat diſputavit. Hieron. in Catal.

Beatus Presbyter confuted his Biſhop Elipandus of Toledo.

But if the Rectour ſwerve from the faith, he is to be reproved by thoſe who are under him, Quòd ſi à fide exorbitaverit Rector, tunc arguendus erit à ſubditis Iſid. Hiſp. de Offic. 3. 39. Vid. Thomam Aq. in 4. Diſt. 19. Art 2.

16. The caſe is the ſame of the Pope; for if other Biſhops, who are reckoned Succeſſours of the Apoſtles, and Vicars of Chriſt within their precinct; if other Patriarchs, who ſit in Apoſtolical Sees, and partake of a like extenſive Juriſdiction, by incurring hereſie or ſchiſm, or committing notorious diſorder and injuſtice, may be deprived of their Authority, ſo that their Subjects may be obliged to forſake them, then may the Pope loſe his: for truth and piety are not affixed to the Chair of Rome more than to any other; there is no ground of aſſerting any ſuch Privilege either in Holy Scripture or in old Tradition; there can no promiſe be alledged for it, having any probable ſhew (that of Oravi pro te, being a ridiculous pretence) it cannot ſtand without a perpetual miracle; there is in fact no appearance of any ſuch miracle; from the ordinary cauſes of great errour and impiety (that is, ambition, avarice, ſloth, luxury) the Papal ſtate is not exempt, yea apparently it is more ſubject to them than any other; All Ages have teſtified and complained thereof.

17. Moſt eminent perſons have in ſuch caſes withdrawn communion from the Pope; as other-where we have ſhewed by divers Inſtances.

18. The Canon Law it ſelf doth admit the Pope may be judged if he be a Heretick.— Becauſe he that is to judge all perſons is to be judged of none, except he be found to be gone aſtray from the faith.

Quia cunctos ipſe judicaturus à nemine eſt judicandus, niſi deprehendatur à fide devius. Gra. diſt. 40. cap. 6. Vid. P. Innoc. III. apud Laun. contra Baron.——

The ſuppoſition doth imply the poſſibility, and therefore the caſe may be put that he is ſuch, and then he doth (according to the more current Doctrine ancient and modern) ceaſe to be a Biſhop, yea a Chriſtian; Hence no obedience is due to him; yea no communion is to be held with him.

19. This in fact was acknowledged by a great Pope, allowing the condemnation of Pope Honorius for good, becauſe he was erroneous in point of Faith: for (ſaith he, in that which is called the Eighth Synod) although Honorius was anathematized after his death by the Oriental Biſhops, it is yet well known, that he was accuſed for hereſie; for which alone it is lawfull for inferiours to riſe up againſt ſuperiours.

Καὶ γὰρ εἰ καὶ περὶ Ὀνορίῳ ὑπὸ τῶν Ἀνατολικῶν κατὰ θάνατον ἀνάθεμα ἐῤῥέθη, ὅμως γνωστὸν ἐστιν, ὅτι ἐπὶ αἱρέσει κατηγορήθη, δι' ἣν καὶ μόνον ἔξεστι τοὺς ὑποδεεστέρους τῶν μειζόνων κατεξανίστασθαι. Syn. VIII. Act. 7. p. 963.

Now that the Pope (or Papal ſucceſſion) doth pervert the truth of Chriſtian Doctrine, in contradiction to the Holy Scripture, and Primitive Tradition; that he doth ſubvert the practice of Chriſtian piety in oppoſition to the Divine commands; that he teacheth falſhoods, and maintaineth impieties, is notorious in many particulars, ſome whereof we ſhall touch.

We juſtly might charge him with all thoſe extravagant Doctrines and Practices which the high-flying Doctours do teach, and which the fierce Zealots upon occaſion do act; for the whole ſucceſſion of Popes of a long time hath moſt cheriſhed and encouraged ſuch folks, looking ſquintly on others, as not well affected to them; But we ſhall onely touch thoſe new and noxious or dangerous poſitions, which great Synods, managed and confirmed by their Authority, have defined, or which they themſelves have magiſterially decreed; or which are generally practiſed by their influence or countenance.

It is manifeſt, that the Pope doth ſupport and cheriſh as his ſpecial Favourites the Venters of wicked Errours; ſuch as thoſe who teach the Pope's infallibility, his power over temporal Princes, to caſhier and depoſe them, to abſolve Subjects from their allegeance---- the Doctrine of equivocation, breach of faith with hereticks, &c. the which Doctrines are heretical, as inducing pernicious practice; whence whoever doth ſo much as communicate with the maintainers of them, according to the principles of ancient Chriſtianity, are guilty of the ſame crimes.

The Holy Scripture and Catholick Antiquity do teach and enjoin us to worſhip and ſerve God alone, our Creatour; forbidding us to worſhip any Creature, or Fellow-Servant; even not Angels. For I who am a Creature will not endure to worſhip one like to me.

Matt. 4. 10. Apoc. 19. 10. 22. 9. Col. 2. 18. Rom. 1. 25.
Κτίσμα γὰρ ὢν οὐκ ἀνέξομαι τὸ ὅμοιον προσκυνεῖν. Baſ. apud Sozom. 6. 16.

But the Pope and his Clients do teach and charge us to worſhip Angels, and dead men; yea even to venerate the reliques and dead bodies of the Saints.

Similiter & Sanctos una cum Chriſto regnantes venerandos atque invocandos eſſe:— atque horum reliquias eſſe venerandas. Pii IV. Profeſſ. fid. Bonum atque utile eſſe eos invocare—— Sanctorum quoque corpora—— à fidelibus veneranda eſſe Conc. Trid.

The Holy Scripture teacheth us to judge nothing (about the the preſent or future ſtate of men, abſolutely) before the time, untill the Lord come, who will bring to light the hidden things of darkneſs, and will make manifeſt the counſels of hearts, and then each man ſhall have praiſe of God.

But the Pope notoriouſly (in repugnance to thoſe precepts, anticipating God's Judgment, and arrogating to himſelf a knowledge requiſite thereto) doth preſume to determine the ſtate of men, canonizing them, declaring them to be Saints, and propoſing them to be worſhipped; and on the other ſide, he damneth, curſeth and cenſureth his Fellow-Servants.

God in his Law doth command us not to bow down our ſelves unto any image, or worſhip the likeneſs of any thing in heaven, or earth, or under the earth; the which Law (whether Moral or Poſitive) the Goſpel doth ratifie and confirm, charging us to keep our ſelves from idols, and to fly worſhipping of idols, that is, to obſerve the Second Commandment; the validity whereof the Fathers moſt expreſly aſſert; and divers of them were ſo ſtrict in their opinion about it, that they deemed it unlawful ſo much as to make any Image.

Exod. 20. 4. ȣ̓ ποιήσεις σεαυτῷ εἴδωλον, ȣ̓δὲ παντὸς ὁμοίωμα.——

1 Joh. 5. 21.
1 Cor. 10. 14, 7.

Clem. Alex.
Tertul.

But the Pope and his adherents (in point-blank oppoſition to Divine Law, and Primitive Doctrine) doth require us to fall down before and to worſhip Images. Moreover we decree that the Images of Saints be eſpecially had and retain'd in Churches, and that due honour and veneration be imparted to them--- ſo that by thoſe Images which we kiſs, and before which we uncover the head and fall down, we adore Chriſt, and venerate the Saints whoſe likeneſs they bear.

Imagines porrò——Sanctorum in Templis præſertim habendas, & retinendas, eiſque debitum honorem & venerationem impertiendam————ità ut per Imagines, quas oſculamur & coram quibus caput aperimus, & procumbimus, Chriſtum adoremus, & Sanctos quorum illæ ſimilitudinem gerunt, veneremur. Conc. Trid. Seſſ. 25.

Neither is he ſatisfied to recommend and decree theſe unwarrantable venerations, but (with a horrible ſtrange kind of uncharitableneſs and ferity) doth he anathematize thoſe, who teach or think any thing oppoſite to his decrees concerning them; ſo that if the ancient Fathers ſhould live now, they would live under this curſe.

Siquis autem his decretis contraria docuerit, aut ſenſerit, anathema ſit. Conc. Trid. Seſſ. 25.

The Holy Scripture, under condition of Repentance and amendment of life, upon recourſe to God and truſt in his mercy, through Jeſus Chriſt our Saviour, doth offer and promiſe Remiſſion of ſins, Acceptance with God, Juſtification and Salvation; this is the tenour of the Evangelical Covenant; nor did the Primitive Church know other terms.

Ezek. 18.
Luk. 15.
Rom. 10. 9.
Mark. 1. 15.

But the Pope hoth preach another Doctrine, and requireth other terms as neceſſary for Remiſſion of Sins and Salvation; for he hath decreed the confeſſion of all and each mortal ſin, which a man by recollection can remember, to a Prieſt, to be neceſſary thereto; anathematizing all who ſhall ſay the contrary; although the Fathers (particularly St. Chryſoſtome frequently) have affirmed the contrary.

Si quis dixerit in Sacramento pœnitentiæ ad remiſſionem peccatorum neceſſarium non eſſe jure divino confiteri omnia & ſingula peccata mortalia, quorum memoria cum debita & diligenti præmeditatione habeatur——anathema ſit. Seſſ. 14. de Pæn. Can. 7.

If any one ſhall ſay, that in the Sacrament of Penance, it is not neceſſary by divine right to confeſs all and ſingular mortal ſins, the remembrance whereof may be had by due and diligent premeditation—let him be anathema.

The which is plainly preaching another Goſpel (forged by himſelf and his abettors) as offering Remiſſion upon other terms than God hath preſcribed; and denying it upon thoſe which Chriſtianity propoſeth.

He teacheth that no ſin is pardoned without abſolution of a Prieſt.

He requireth ſatisfaction impoſed by a Prieſt, beſides repentance and new obedience, as neceſſary. Which is alſo another Goſpel.

Si quis negaverit ad integram & perfectam peccatorum remiſſionem requiri—contritionem, confeſſionem & ſatisfactionem. Seſſ. 14. Can. 4.

If any ſhall deny that contrition, confeſſion and ſatisfaction, is required to the entire and perfect remiſſion of ſin.

He diſpenſeth pardon of ſin upon condition of performances unneceſſary and inſufficient; ſuch as undertaking Pilgrimages to the Shrines of Saints, Viſiting Churches, making War upon Infidels or Hereticks, Contributing Money, repeating Prayers, undergoing Corporal Penances, &c. Which is likewiſe to frame and publiſh another Goſpel.

Et qui Hieroſolymam proficiſcuntur. & ad Chriſtianam gentem defendendam, & tyrannidem infidelium debellandum efficaciter auxilium præbuerint, quorum peccatorum remiſſionem concedimus—Conc. Lat. I. Can. 11.

And whoever go to Jeruſalem and powerfully afford help to defend Chriſtian people, and to ſubdue the tyranny of Infidels, to them we grant forgiveneſs of their ſins———

Theſe Doctrines are highly preſumptuous, and well may be reputed heretical.

God hath commanded that every ſoul ſhould be ſubject to the higher powers temporal, as to God's Miniſters; ſo as to obey their Laws, to ſubmit to their Judgments, to pay Tribute to them---And the Fathers expound this Law to the utmoſt extent and advantage. If every ſoul, then yours, if any attempt to except you, he goes about to deceive you.

Rom. 13. 1.— Tit. 3 1. 1 Pet. κἂν ἀπόστολ@.—— Chryſ. Si omnis & veſtra——ſi quis tentat excipere, conatur decipere. Bern. Ep. 42.

But the Pope countermandeth, and exempteth all Clergy-men from thoſe duties, by his Canon Law; excommunicating Lay-Judges, who ſhall perform their office in regard to them. Becauſe indeed ſome Lay-perſons conſtrain Eccleſiaſticks, yea and Biſhops themſelves, to appear before them and to ſtand to their judgment, thoſe that henceforth ſhall preſume to doe ſo, we decree that they ſhall be ſeparate from the communion of the faithfull.

Lex Canonica ſimpliciter eos eximit. Bell. de Cler. cap. 1. Sanè quia Laici quidam Eccleſiaſticas perſonas & ipſos etiam Epiſcopos ſuo judicio ſtare compellunt, eos qui de cætero id præſumpſerint, à communione fidelium decernimus ſegregandos. Conc. Lat. III. Can. 14. Con. Lat. II. Can. 15. Steph. VI. Ep. 1. (Tom. 1. p. 130.) Nichol. 1. Ep. 8. (Tom. 6. p. 513.

The Scriptures do repreſent the King (or Temporal Sovereign) as Supreme over his Subjects, to whom all are obliged to yield ſpecial reſpect and obedience: The Fathers yield him the ſame place, above all next to God; and ſubject to God alone: The ancient good Popes did acknowledge themſelves Servants, and Subjects to the Emperour.

Tertul. Opt. Cyril. &c. alibi. Greg. Ep 2.62. Agatho, &c.

But later Popes, like the man of ſin in Saint Paul, have advanced themſelves above all Civil power; claiming to themſelves a ſupereminency not onely of Rank but of power over all Chriſtian Princes; even to depoſe them. Chriſt has committed the rights both of terreſtrial and celeſtial government to that bleſſed man who bears the keys of eternal life.

2 Theſſ. 2.4.

Chriſtus beato æternæ vitæ Clavigero terreni ſimul & cæleſtis Imperii jura commiſit. P. Nich. II. apud Grat, diſt 22. cap. 1. Greg. VII Ep. 8. 21. Cauſ. 15. qu. 6. cap. 3.

If the ſecular power be believers, God would have them ſubject to the Prieſts of the Church---Chriſtian Emperours ought to ſubmit, and not prefer the execution of their Laws to the Rulers of the Church.

Seculi poteſtates ſi fideles ſint, Deus Eccleſiæ Sacerdotibus voluit eſſe ſubjectas—Imperatores Chriſtiani ſubdere debent executiones ſuas Eccleſiaſticis præſulibus, non præferre. P. Joh. VIII. apud Grat. diſt. 96. cap. 11.

God by indiſpenſable Law hath obliged us to retain our obedience to the King even Pagan; charging us under pain of damnation to be ſubject to him, and not to reſiſt him---

But the Pope is ready upon occaſion to diſcharge Subjects from that obligation, to abſolve them from their ſolemn Oaths of Allegeance, to encourage Inſurrection againſt him; to prohibit obedience---We obſerving the Decrees of our holy Predeceſſours, by our Apoſtolical Authority abſolve thoſe from their Oath who were bound by their Fealty and Oath to excommunicated Perſons: and we forbid them by all means that they yield them no Allegeance, till they come and make ſatisfaction.

Nos ſanctorum Prædeceſſorum noſtrorum Statuta tenentes, eos qui excommunicatis Fidelitate aut Sacramento conſtricti ſunt, Apoſtolicâ auctoritate à Sacramento abſolvimus, & nè eis Fidelitatem obſervent omnibus modis prohibemus, quouſque ipſi ad ſatisfactionem veniant. Greg. VII. in Syn. Rom. Grat. Cauſ. 15. qu. 6. cap. 4.

Thus doth he teach and preſcribe Rebellion, Perjury---together with all the Murthers and Rapines conſequent on them: which is a far greater Hereſie, than if he ſhould teach Adultery, Murther or Theft to be lawfull. For they are enjoined by no authority to perform the Allegeance which they have ſworn to a Chriſtian Prince, who is an adverſary to God and his Saints, and contemns their commands.

Fidelitatem enim quam Chriſtiano Principi jurârunt, Deo ejúſque Sanctis adverſanti, eorum præcepta calcanti, nullâ cohibentur auctoritate perſolvere—— P. Urb. II. apud Grat. Cauſ. 15. qu. 6. cap 5.

Not onely the Holy Scripture, but Common Senſe doth ſhew it to be an enormous preſumption to obtrude for the Inſpirations, Oracles and Dictates of God, any Writings or Propoſitions, which are not really ſuch.

Ezek. 13. 3, &c.

This the Pope doeth notoriouſly, charging us to admit divers writings, (which the greateſt part of learned men in all Ages have refuſed for ſuch) as Sacred and Canonical; anathematizing all thoſe who do not hold each of them for ſuch---Even as they are extant in a Tranſlation, not very exact, and framed partly out of Hebrew, partly out of Greek, upon divers accounts liable to miſtake; as its Author St. Hierome doth avow.

Si quis autem libros ipſos integros cum ſuis patribus, prout in Eccleſia Catholica legi conſueverunt, & in veteri vulgatâ Latina Editione habentur, pro Sacris & Canonicis non ſuſceperit ---- anathema ſit. Conc. Trid. Seſſ. 4.

But if any ſhall not receive for Sacred and Canonical, thoſe whole Books with the parts of them, according as they have been wont to be read in the Catholick Church, and are had in the old vulgar Latin Edition; let him be Anathema.

According to which Decree, all who conſent with St. Hierome, St. Auſtin, St. Athanaſius, &c. with common ſenſe, with the Author of the Second of Maccabees himſelf, muſt incur a curſe---- what can be more uncharitable, more unjuſt, more ſilly than ſuch a Definition?

He pretendeth to Infallibility, or encourageth them who attribute it to him; which is a continual Enthuſiaſm and profane bold Impoſture.

The Scripture doth avow a ſingular reverence due to it ſelf, as containing the Oracles of God.—

But the Pope doth obtrude the Oral Traditions of his Church (divers of which evidently are new, dubious, vain---) to be worſhipped with equal reverence as the Holy Scripture. And alſo receives and venerates with the like pious reſpect and reverence the Traditions themſelves--- which have been preſerved by continual ſucceſſion in the Catholick Church.

---nec non traditiones ipſas--- continuâ ſucceſſione in Eccleſia Catholica conſervatas pari pietatis affectu ac reverentia ſuſcipit, & veneratur. Syn. Trid. Seſſ. 4.

Among which Traditions they reckon all the tricks and trumpery of their Maſs-ſervice; together with all their new notions about Purgatory, Extreme unction, &c. He alſo uſed ſeveral ceremonies, as myſtical benediction, lights, incenſings, garments, and many other ſuch things, from Apoſtolical diſcipline, and tradition.

Ceremonias item adhibuit, ut myſticas benedictiones lumina, thymiamata, veſtes, aliáque id genus multa ex Apoſtolica diſciplina & traditione— Conc. Trid. Seſſ. 22. cap. 5. 11. de ſacrif. Miſſ.

The Scriptures affirm themſelves to be written for common inſtruction, comfort, edification in all piety; they do therefore recommend themſelves to be ſtudyed and ſearched by all people; as the beſt and ſureſt means of attaining knowledge and finding truth. The Fathers alſo do much exhort all people, (even women and girles) conſtantly to read; and diligently to ſtudy the Scriptures.

2 Tim. 3. 15.—Rom. 15. 4. 1 Cor. 9. 10. 10. 11. 2 Pet. 1. 20. ἀμβρύους.
Joh. 5. 39. Act. 17. 11.
Pſal. 119.----
Hier. ad Læt. Epitaph. Paul. Vit. Hilar.--- Chryſ. in Coloſ. Or. 9.
Aug. Serm. 55. de temp.

But the Pope doth keep them from the people, locked up in Languages not underſtood by them; prohibiting Tranſlations of them to be made, or uſed ---- The Scripture teacheth, and common ſenſe ſheweth, and the Fathers do aſſert (nothing indeed more frequently or more plainly) that all neceſſary points of faith and good morality are with ſufficient evidence couched in Holy Scripture, ſo that a man of God, or pious men may thence be perfectly furniſhed to every work; But they contrary-wiſe blaſpheme the Scriptures as obſcure, dangerous, &c.

N. P. Pius IV. did authorize certain rules for prohibition and permiſſion of books; in which it is permitted to Biſhops to grant a faculty of reading the Scriptures tranſlated---- but to this rule there is added an obſervation, that this power was taken from Biſhops by command of the Roman Univerſal Inquiſition. Ind. Lib. probib. à Clem. VIII.

2 Tim. 3. 17.

Common ſenſe dictateth, that devotions ſhould be performed with underſtanding and affection; and that conſequently they ſhould be in a known tongue: And Saint Paul expreſly teacheth, that it is requiſite for private and publick edification; from this Doctrine of Paul it appears, that it is better for the edification of the Church, that publick prayers, which are ſaid in the audience of the people, ſhould be ſaid in a tongue common to the Clergy and the people, than that they ſhould be ſaid in Latin.

1 Cor. 14. 14.—Ex hac Pauli doctrina habetur, quòd melius eſt ad Eccleſiæ ædificationem orationes publicas, quæ audiente populo dicuntur, dici linguâ communi Clericis & populo, quàm dici Latinè Cajet. in 1 Cor. 14.

All ancient Churches did accordingly practiſe; and moſt others do ſo, beſide thoſe which the Pope doth ride.

But the Pope will not have it ſo, requiring the publick Liturgy to be celebrated in an unknown tongue; and that moſt Chriſtians ſhall ſay their devotions like Parrots. He anathematizeth thoſe, who think the Maſs ſhould be celebrated in a vulgar tongue; that is all thoſe who are in their right wits, and think it fit to follow the practice of the ancient Church.

—aut Linguâ tantum vulgari Miſſam celebrari debere—anathema ſit. Seſſ. 22. Can. 9.

The Holy Scripture teacheth us that there is but one Head of the Church; and the Fathers do avow no other (as we have otherwhere ſhewed.)

But the Pope aſſumeth to himſelf the headſhip of the Church, affirming all power and authority to be derived from him into the ſubject members of the Church.

A quo tanquam Capite omnis in ſubjecta membra poteſtas & authoritas derivetur. P. Pius II. in Bull. Retract.

We decree that the Roman Pontiſe is the true Vicar of Chriſt, and the head of the whole Church.

Definimus Romanum Pontificem —— verum Chriſti Vicarium, totiúſque Eccleſiæ caput -- Defin. Syn. Flor.

The Scripture declareth that God did inſtitute marriage for remedy of incontinency and prevention of ſin; forbidding the uſe of it to none, who ſhould think it needful or convenient for them; reckoning the prohibition of it among heretical doctrines; implying it to be impoſing a ſnare upon men.

Matt. 19. 11.
Μὴ οὐκ ἔχομεν ἐξουσίαν; — 1 Cor. 9. 5.
Κωλυόντων γαμεῖν· 1 Tim. 4. 3.
Βρόχον ἐπιβάλλειν· 1 Cor. 7. 35.

But the Pope and his Complices do prohibit it to whole Orders of men, (Prieſts, &c.) engaging them into dangerous vows.

Vid. Tom. 7 Conc. p. 465.
Syn. Trid. Seſſ. 24. de matr. Can. 9.

Our Lord forbiddeth any marriage lawfully contracted to be diſſolved, otherwiſe than in caſe of adultery.

Matt. 5. 32. 19. 7. 1. Cor. 7. 10.

But the Pope commandeth Prieſts married to be divorced. And that marriages contracted by ſuch perſons ſhould be diſſolved.

Contracta quoque matrimonia ab hujuſmodi perſonis disjungi——Conc. Lat. I. cap. 21. Lat. II.
Trid. Seſſ. 24. Can. 9.——

He diſſolveth matrimony agreed, by the profeſſion of monkery of one of the eſpouſed. If any ſhall ſay, that matrimony confirmed, not conſummate, is not diſſolved by the ſolemn profeſſion of religion of either party, let him be anathema.

Si quis dixerit matrimonium ratum, non conſummatum, per ſolennem religionis profeſſionem alterius conjugum non dirimi, anathema ſit. Seſſ. 24. Can. 6.

Our Saviour did inſtitute and enjoin us (under pain of damnation, if we ſhould wilfully tranſgreſs his order) to eat of his body, and drink of his bloud, in participation of the Holy Supper.

Πίετε ἐξ αὐτοῦ πάντες. Matt. 26. 27.
ἐὰν μὴ —— πίνητε αὐτοῦ τὸ αἷμα, οὐκ ἔχετε ζωήν. Jon. 6. 53.

The Fathers did accordingly practiſe, with the whole Chuach, till late times.

But notwithſtanding Chriſt's inſtitution (as they expreſs it) Papal Synods do prohibit all Laymen, and Prieſts not celebrating to partake of Chriſt's bloud; ſo maiming and perverting our Lord's Inſtitution: † and yet they decline to drink the bloud of our redemption.

Non obſtante. Conc. Conſt. Seſſ. 13.
Conc. Trid. Seſſ. 13. cap. 8. & Can. 3. Seſſ. 21. cap. 4. & Can. 3.
† This P. Leo I. condemneth. De Quadr. Serm. 4. (p. 38.) Sanguinem redemptionis noſtræ haurire declinant.—— P. Gelaſius calleth the diviſion of the Sacrament a grand Sacrilege. Gratian. in De Conſecr. diſt. 2. cap. 12.

In defence of which practice, they confound body and bloud; and under a curſe would oblige us to believe, that one kind doth contain the other; or that a part doth contain the whole.

Conc. Trid. Seſſ. 21. Can. 3. Seſſ. 13. Can. 3.

Whereas our Lord ſaith, that whoſo eateth his fleſh and drinketh his bloud hath eternal life, and conſequently ſuppoſeth, that bad men do not partake of his body and bloud; yet they condemn this aſſertion under a curſe.

Joh. 6. 54.
Si quis dixerit tantum in uſu, &c.
Trid. Conc. Seſſ. 13. cap. 8. & Can. 4.——

The Holy Scripture, and the Fathers after it, commonly do call the elements of the Euchariſt, after conſecration, bread and wine; affirming them to retain their nature.

Ἄρτον τοῦτον. 1 Cor. 11. 26.

Theod. Gelaſ.——

But the Popiſh Cabal anathematizeth thoſe who ſay, that bread and wine do then remain.

If any ſhall ſay that in the Holy Sacrament of the Euchariſt the ſubſtance of bread and wine remain ----let him be Anathema.

Si quis dixerit in Sacroſancto Euchariſtiæ Sacramento remanere ſubſtantiam panis & vini —— anathema ſit. Trid. Conc. de Euch. Seſſ. 13. Can. 2.

The nature of the Lord's Supper doth imply communion and company; but they forbid any man to ſay that a Prieſt may not communicate alone; ſo eſtaliſhing the belief of non-ſenſe, and contradiction.

Si quis dixerit Miſſas in quibus ſacerdos ſolus ſacramentaliter communicat, illicitas eſſe, anathema ſit.
Seſſ. 22. de ſacr. Miſſ. Can. 8. Seſſ. 13. Can. 8.

The Holy Scripture teacheth us, that our Lord hath departed, and is abſent from us in body; until that he ſhall come to judge, which is called his preſence; that heaven, whither he aſcended, and where he ſitteth at God's right hand, muſt hold him till the times of the reſtitution of all things.

2 Cor. 5. 6.----
Act. 2. 33. Col. 3. 1.
Εἰς τὸ διηνεκὲς ἐκάθισε. Heb. 10. 12.
Ὃν δεῖ οὐρανὸν δέξασθαι. Act. 3. 21.

But the Pope with his Lateran and Tridentine Complices draw him down from heaven, and make him corporally preſent every day, in numberleſs places here.

Ὤφειλε κατὰ πάντα τοῖς ἀδελφοῖς ὁμοιωθῆναι. Heb. 2. 17.

The Scripture teacheth us, that our Lord is a man, perfectly like to us, in all things.

But the Pope and his adherents make him extremely different from us, as having a body at once preſent in innumerable places; inſenſible, &c. deveſted of the properties of our body; thereby deſtroying his humane nature, and in effect agreeing with Eutyches, Apollinarius, and other ſuch peſtilent Hereticks.

The Scripture repreſenteth him born once for us; but they affirm him every day made by a Prieſt, uttering the words of conſecration; as if that which before did exiſt, could be made; as if a man could make his Maker.

Heb. 9. 26. 10. 10, 12, 14. ἐφάπαξ, μιᾷ προσφορᾷ.

The Scripture teacheth, that our Lord was once offered for expiation of our ſins; but they pretend every day to offer him up as a propitiatory ſacrifice.

Theſe devices without other foundation, than a figurative expreſſion (which they reſolve to expound in a proper ſenſe, although even in that very matter divers figurative expreſſions are uſed, as they cannot but acknowledge) they with all violence and fierceneſs obtrude upon the belief as one of the moſt neceſſary and fundamental Articles of the Chriſtian Religion.

Eph. 2. 8, 9.
Tit. 3. 5.
Rom. 3. 24.
Luk. 17. 10.

The Scripture teacheth us humbly to acknowledge the rewards aſſigned by God to be gratuitous and free; and that we, after we have done all, muſt acknowledge our ſelves unprofitable ſervants.

Seſſ. 6 de Juſtif. Can. 32.

But the Papiſts curſe thoſe who, although out of humility and modeſty, will not acknowledge the good works of juſtified Perſons to be truly meritorious; deſerving the encreaſe of grace, eternal life, and augmentation of glory: ſo forcing us to uſe ſaucy words and phraſes, if not impious in their ſenſe.

The Scripture teacheth one Church diffuſed over the whole world; whereof each part is bound to maintain charity, peace and communion with the reſt, upon brotherly terms.

Orbis terrarum Apoſtatavit, & ſola remanſit Donati Communio. Aug. de Unit. 12.---

But the Romaniſts arrogate to themſelves the name and privilege of the only Church; condemning all other Churches beſides their own, and cenſuring all for Apoſtatical who do not adhere to them or ſubmit to their yoke; Juſt like the Donatiſts, who ſaid that the world had apoſtatized, excepting thoſe who upon their own terms did communicate with them; onely the communion of Donatus remained the true Church.

1 Joh. 4. 1.
Jer. 29. 8.---

The Holy Scripture biddeth us take care of perſons pretending to extraordinary Inſpirations; charging on the Holy Spirit their own conceits and devices.

Such have been their Synods, boldly fathering their Decrees on God's Spirit--- And their Pope is infallible, by virtue of inſpiration communicated to him, when he pleaſeth to ſet himſelf right in his Chair. Whence we may take them for bodies of Enthuſiaſts and Fanaticks: the difference onely is, that other Enthuſiaſts pretend ſingly, they conjunctly and by conſpiracy. Others pretend it in their own direction and defence, theſe impoſe their dreams on the whole Church.

If they ſay that God hath promiſed his Spirit to his Church; it is true, but he hath no leſs plainly and frequently promiſed it to ſingle Chriſtians, who ſhould ſeek it earneſtly of him.

Luk. 11. 13. Jam. 1. 5. 1 Joh. 2. 27. Heb. 8. 11. Rom. 8. 9. Act. 5. 32.

The Ancient Fathers could in the Scriptures hardly diſcern more than two Sacraments or Myſterious Rites of our Religion, by poſitive Law and Inſtitution of our Saviour to be practiſed.

Aug. Doctr. Chriſt. Ep. ad Jen.

But the Popes have deviſed others, and under uncharitable curſes propound them to be profeſſed for ſuch; affirming them to confer grace by the bare performance of them.

Si Sacramenta eſſent pauciora, magna impietas fuiſſet, & ſuperſtitio, &c. Bell. de Sacr. 2. 25. If the Sacraments were fewer there would have been great impiety and ſuperſtition, &c.

Every Clergy-man and Monk is bound by Pius IV. to profeſs there are juſt ſeven of them; and the Tridentine Synod anathematizeth all thoſe, who do ſay there are more or fewer; although the Ancients did never hit on that number.

Profiteor quoque ſeptem eſſe propriè & verè Sacramenta. Bulla Pii IV.

Si quis dixerit ---- eſſe plura vel pauciora quàm ſeptem ---- anathema ſit. Syn. Trid. Seſſ. 7. Can. 1.

But theſe our Sacraments both contain grace, and alſo confer it upon thoſe who worthily receive them.

Hæc verò noſtra & continent gratiam, & ipſam dignè ſuſcipientibus conferunt. P. Eug. in Inſtr. Arm.

They require men to believe under a curſe that each of thoſe were inſtituted of Chriſt, and confer grace by the bare performance.

Si quis dixerit per ipſa novæ legis Sacramenta ex opere operato non conferri gratiam——anathema ſit. Ibid. Can. 8.

Particularly, they curſe thoſe who do not hold matrimony for a Sacrament, inſtituted by Chriſt, and conferring grace. What can be more ridiculous than to ſay, that marriage was inſtituted by Chriſt, or that it doth confer grace?

Si quis dixerit matrimonium non eſſe verè ac propriè unum ex ſeptem legis Evangelicæ Sacramentis, à Chriſto Domino inſtitutum —— neque gratiam conferre, anathema ſit. Seſſ 24. Can. 1.

Yet with another anathema they prefer Virginity before it: and why forſooth is not that another Sacrament? And then they muſt be comparing the worth of theſe Sacraments, condemning thoſe heavily, who may conceive them equal, as being Divine Inſtitutions.

Seſſ. 24. Can. 10.

If any ſay that theſe ſeven Sacraments are ſo equal one to another, that one is in no reſpect of more worth than another, let him be Anathema.

Si quis dixerit hæc ſeptem Sacramenta ità eſſe inter ſe paria, ut nullâ ratione aliud ſit alio dignius, anathema ſit. Seſſ. 7. Can. 3.

The firſt, as it ſeemeth, who reckoned the Sacraments to be ſeven, was Peter Lombard; whom the Schoolmen did follow; and Pope Eugenius IV. followed them; and afterward the Trent men formed it into an Article back'd with an Anathema.

Novæ legis ſeptem ſunt Sacramenta, &c. P. Eug. in Inſtr. Arm.

Bellarmine could find none before him. Vid. de Sacram. 2. 25.

Upon which raſh and peremptory Sentence touching all ancient Divines, we may note;

1. Is it not ſtrange that an Article of Faith ſhould be formed upon an ambiguous word, or a term of art, uſed with great variety?

2. Is it not ſtrange to define a Point whereof it is moſt plain that the Fathers were ignorant, wherein they never did agree or reſolve any thing?

3. Yea whereof they ſpeak variouſly.

4. Is it not odd and extravagant to damn or curſe people for a point of ſo little conſideration or certainty?

5. Is it not intolerable arrogance and preſumption to define, nay indeed to make an Article of Faith, without any manner of ground or colour of Authority either from Scripture or Tradition of the ancient Fathers?

Multa dicuntur à veteribus Sacramenta præter iſta ſeptem. Bell. de Sacr. 2. 24. Many things are by the Ancients called Sacraments beſides theſe ſeven.

Mat. 23. 8.
2 Cor. 1. 24.
1 Theſſ. 5. 21.
Col. 2. 8.
Mat. 15. 9.
* Διδαχαῖς ποικίλαις, ϗ ξέναις μὴ περιφέρεσθε.
Heb. 13. 9.

The Holy Scripture forbiddeth us to call any man maſter upon earth, or abſolutely to ſubject our Faith to the dictates of any man; it teacheth us that the Apoſtles themſelves are not Lords of our faith, ſo as to oblige us to believe their own inventions; It forbiddeth us to ſwallow whole the Doctrines and Precepts of men, without examination of them. It forbiddeth us to admit * various and ſtrange doctrines.

But the Pope and Roman Church exact from us a ſubmiſſion to their Dictates, admitting them for true, without any farther enquiry or diſcuſſion, barely upon his Authority. They who are provided of any Benefices whatever, having cure of Souls, let them promiſe and ſwear obedience to the Roman Church, Proviſi de beneficiis quibuſcunque curam animarum habentibus —— in Romanæ Eccleſiæ obedientiam ſpondeant ac jurent. Conc. Trid. Seſſ. 24. cap. 12. de Ref. ——nec non veram obedientiam ſummo Pontifici ſpondeant & profiteantur. Seſſ. 25. cap. 2. de Ref.

They require of us without doubt to believe, to profeſs, to aſſert innumerable Propoſitions, divers of them new and ſtrange no-wiſe deducible from Scripture or Apoſtolical Tradition, the very terms of them being certainly unknown to the Primitive Church, deviſed by humane ſubtilty, curioſity, contentiouſneſs —— divers of them being (in all appearance, to the judgment of common ſenſe) uncertain, obſcure and intricate; divers of them bold and fierce; divers of them frivolous and vain; divers of them palpably falſe. Namely all ſuch Propoſitions, as have been taught by their great Junto's, allowed by the Pope, eſpecially that of Trent.

Cætera item omnia â Sacris Canonibus & Oecumenicis Conciliis, ac præcipuè à Sacroſancta Tridentina Synodo tradita, definita, & declarata, indubitanter recipio atque profiteor; ſimúlque contraria omnia, atque hæreſes quaſcunque ab Eccleſia damnatas & rejectas & anathematizatas ego pariter damno, reſpuo & anathematizo. P. Pii. IV. profeſs. Hanc veram Catholicam fidem, extra quam nulla ſalus eſſe poteſt. Ibid.

Moreover all other things delivered, defined and declared by the Sacred Canons and Oecumenical Councils, and eſpecially by the Holy Synod of Trent, I undoubtedly receive and profeſs; and alſo all things contrary thereunto, and all hereſies whatſoever condemned and rejected, and anathematized by the Church, I in like manner do condemn, reject and anathematize —— This is the true Catholick Faith, out of which there can be no Salvation.

This Uſurpation upon the Conſciences of Chriſtians (none like whereto was ever known in the World) they proſecute with moſt uncharitable cenſures; curſing and damning all who do not in heart and profeſſion ſubmit to him, obliging all their conſorts to joyn therein, againſt all charity and prudence.

Rom. 14. 1.
15. 1, 7.

The Scripture enjoineth us to bear with thoſe who are weak in faith, and err in doubtfull or diſputable matters.

But the Popes with cruel uncharitableneſs, not onely do cenſure all that cannot aſſent to their devices, which they obtrude as Articles of Faith; but ſorely perſecute them with all ſorts of puniſhments; even with death it ſelf; a practice inconſiſtent with Chriſtian meekneſs, with equity, with reaſon; and of which the Fathers have expreſſed the greateſt deteſtation.

They have unwoven and altered all Theology from head to foot, and of Divine have made it Sophiſtical.

Totam Theologiam à capite uſque ad calcem retexuerunt, & ex divina Sophiſticam fecerunt. Eraſm. præf. ad Hieron.

The Pope with his pack of mercenary Clients at Trent, did indeed eſtabliſh a Scholaſtical or Sophiſtical, rather than a Chriſtian Theology; framing Points, deviſed by the idle wits of latter times, into Definitions and peremptory Concluſions, back'd with Curſes and Cenſures: concerning which Concluſions it is evident

That the Apoſtles themſelves would not be able to underſtand many of them.

That ancient Fathers did never think any thing about them.

That divers of them conſiſt in application of artificial terms and phraſes deviſed by humane ſubtilty.

That divers of them are in their own nature diſputable; were before diſputed by wiſe men, and will ever be diſputed by thoſe who freely uſe their judgment.

Formaliter juſtos Seſſ. 6. Can. 10.
Ex opere operato Seſſ. 7. Can. 8.
Character. Seſſ. 7. Can. 9.

That there was no need of defining many of them.

That they blindly lay about them, condemning and curſing they know not who, Fathers, Schoolmen, Divines, &c. who have expreſly affirmed points ſo damned by them.

That many Truths are uncharitably back'd with Curſes, which diſparageth them; (ſeeing a man may err pardonably --ἐν πολλοῖς πταίομεν ἅπαντες) in many things we offend all.

For inſtance; what need was there of defining, what need of curſing thoſe, who think concupiſcence to be truly and properly ſin, upon Saint Paul's Authority, calling it ſo?

Seſſ. 5. Can. 5.
Rom. 7.

That Adam preſently upon his tranſgreſſion did loſe the Sanctity and juſtice in which he was conſtituted.

Cùm mandatum dei in paradiſo fuiſſet tranſgreſſus, ſtatim ſanctitatem & juſtitiam in qua conſtitutus fuerat amiſiſſe. Ibid Can. 1.

What need of curſing thoſe, who ſay that men are juſtified by the ſole remiſſion of ſins, according to Saint Paul's notion, and uſe of the word Juſtification?

Seſſ. 6. Can. 11. ——

What need of thoſe, who ſay the grace of God by which we are juſtified, is onely the favour of God, whereas it is plain enough that God's grace there in Saint Paul, doth ſignifie nothing elſe, applied to that caſe.

Seſſ. 6. Can. 11. Aut etiam gratiam qua juſtificamur eſſe tantum favorem Dei.

Or that Faith is nothing elſe, but a reliance in God's mercy, remitting ſins for Chriſt; ſeeing it is plain that Saint Paul doth by Faith chiefly mean the belief of that principal point of the Goſpel.

Seſſ. 6. Can. 12.

Or that good works do not cauſe an encreaſe of juſtification; ſeeing Saint Paul doth exclude juſtification by works; and it is a free work of God—— uncapable of degrees.

Seſſ. 6 Can. 24. Non autem ipſius augendæ cauſam.——

Or that after remiſſion of ſin in juſtification, a guilt of paying temporal pain doth abide.

Ut nullus remaneat reatus pænæ temporalis exolvendæ—— Seſſ. 6. Can. 30. Seſſ. 14. de pænit Can. 15.

Or that a man cannot by his works merit encreaſe of grace, and glory and eternal life; ſeeing a man is not to be blamed, who doth diſlike the uſe of ſo ſawcy a word; the which divers good men have diſclaimed.

*Seſſ.*6. Can. 32.

What need of curſing thoſe, who do not take the Sacraments to be preciſely Seven? or who conceive that ſome one of their ſeven may not be truly and properly a Sacrament; ſeeing the word Sacrament

De Sacramentis. Si quis dixerit.——— eſſe plura vel pauciora quàm ſeptem. Seſſ. 7. Can. I.

ment is ambiguous, and by the Fathers applied to divers other things, and defined generally by St. Auſtin , Signum rei ſacræ; and that before Peter Lombard ever did mention that number.

What need of damning thoſe, who do conceive the Sacraments equal in dignity?

Seſſ. 7. Can. 3.

What need of defining, that Sacraments do confer grace ex opere operato; which is an obſcure Scholaſtical phraſe?

Seſſ. 7. Can. 8. Non imprimi characterem in anima. Seſſ. 7. Can 9. Hoc eſt ſignum quoddam ſpirituale, & indelebile. Ibid.

What need of curſing thoſe who ſay, that a Character is not impreſſed in the ſoul of thoſe who take Baptiſm, Confirmation, or Orders? ſeeing what this Character is (or this ſpiritual and indelible mark) they do not themſelves well underſtand or agree.

Seſſ. 7. Can. 11.

What need of curſing thoſe, who do not think that the validity of Sacraments (and conſequently the aſſurance of our being Chriſtians) dependeth on the Intention of the Miniſter?

Seſſ. 7. Can. 13.

What need of curſing thoſe, who think that a Paſtour of the Church may change the Ceremonies of adminiſtring the Sacraments; ſeeing St. Cyprian often teacheth that every Paſtour hath full authority in ſuch caſes within his own precinct?

Seſſ. 4.

What need of defining the Second Book of Maccabees to be Canonical, againſt the common opinion of the Fathers (moſt expreſly of St. Auſtin himſelf) of the moſt learned in all Ages, of Pope Gelaſius himſelf (in decret.) which the Author himſelf (calling his work an Epitome, and asking pardon for his errours) diſclaimeth? and which common ſenſe therefore diſclaimeth.

> Fidem minutis diſſecant ambagibus
> Ut quiſque linguâ nequior.
> Solvunt ligántque quæſtionum vincula
> Per Syllogiſmos plectiles—— > Prudent. in Apotheoſ.

Their new Creed of Pius IV. containeth theſe novelties and heterodoxies. 1. Seven Sacraments. 2. Trent Doctrine of Juſtification and Original ſin. 3. Propitiatory Sacrifice of the Maſs. 4. Tranſubſtantiation. 5. Communicating under one kind. 6. Purgatory. 7. Invocation of Saints. 8. Veneration of Reliques. 9. Worſhip of Images. 10. The Roman Church to be the Mother and Miſtreſs of all Churches. 11. Swearing Obedience to the Pope. 12. Receiving the Decrees of all Synods and of Trent.

A DISCOURSE Concerning the UNITY OF THE CHURCH.

By ISAAC BARROW, D. D. late Maſter of Trinity College in Cambridge.

Aug. de Bapt. 3.
Non habet Charitatem Dei, qui Eccleſiæ non diligit Unitatem.

LONDON,
Printed for Brabazon Aylmer, at the Three Pigeons againſt the Royal-Exchange in Cornhill. 1700.

UMI

UMI

A DISCOURSE
Concerning the UNITY
OF THE CHURCH.

EPHES. IV. 4.

One Body, and one Spirit.

THE Unity of the Church is a Point which may ſeem ſomewhat ſpeculative and remote from Practice; but in right Judgments it is otherwiſe; many Duties depending upon a true notion and conſideration of it; ſo that from ignorance or miſtake about it we may incur divers offences or omiſſions of Duty; hence in Holy Scripture it is often propoſed as a conſiderable Point, and uſefull to Practice.

And if ever the Conſideration of it were needfull, it is ſo now when the Church is ſo rent with Diſſenſions; for our ſatisfaction and direction about the Queſtions and Caſes debated in Chriſtendom; for on the Explication of it, or the true Reſolution wherein it doth conſiſt, the Controverſies about Church Government, Hereſie, Schiſm, Liberty of Conſcience, and by conſequence many others do depend; yea indeed all others are by ſome Parties made to depend thereon.

Saint Paul, exhorting the Epheſians, his diſciples, to the maintenance of Charity and Peace among themſelves, doth for inducement to that Practice repreſent the Unity and Community of thoſe things which jointly appertain to them as Chriſtians: the Unity of that Body whereof they were members; of that Spirit which did animate and act them; of that Hope to which they were called; of that Lord whom they all did worſhip and ſerve; of that Faith which they did profeſs; of that Baptiſm whereby they were admitted into the ſame ſtate of Duties, of Rights, of Privileges; of that one God and univerſal Father, to whom they had all the ſame relations.

He beginneth with the Unity of the Body; that is, of the Chriſtian Church; concerning which Unity, what it is, and wherein it doth conſiſt, I mean now to diſcourſe.

In order to clearing which Point, we muſt firſt ſtate what the Church is, of which we diſcourſe; for the word Church is ambiguous having both in Holy Scripture, and common uſe, divers ſenſes ſomewhat different: For,

1. Sometimes any Aſſembly or Company of Chriſtians, is called a Church; as when mention is made of * the Church in ſuch a houſe, (whence Tertullian † ſaith, Where there are three, even Laicks, there there is a Church.)

* Rom 16. 5. Col. 4. 15. Philem. 2.
† Ubi tres, Eccleſia eſt, licèt Laici. Tert. de Exh. Caſt. cap. 7.

2. Sometimes a particular Society of Chriſtians living in ſpiritual Communion, and under Diſcipline, as when, * the Church at ſuch a Town; † the Churches of ſuch a Province; ‖ the Churches, all the Churches, are mentioned: According to which notions St. Cyprian * ſaith, that there is a Church, where there is a People united to a Prieſt, and a Flock adhering to their Shepherd: and ſo Ignatius † ſaith, that without the Orders of the Clergy a Church is not called.

* Act. 8. 1. 14. 27. 5. 11. 1 Cor. 1. 1. Col. 4. 16. 1 Theſſ. 1. 1. 2 Cor. 1. 1. Apoc. 2. 1, &c. Rom. 16. 1.
† Act. 9. 31. Gal. 1. 2. 1 Cor. 16. 1, 19. 2 Cor. 8. 1. ‖ Rom. 16. 4. 1 Cor. 4. 17. 11. 16. Act. 16. 5. Apoc. 2. 7, 11. Κατ' ἐκκλησίαν. Act. 14. 23. * Eccleſia, Plebs Sacerdoti adunata, & Paſtori ſuo Grex adhærens. Cypr. Ep. 69. † Χωρὶς τούτων ἐκκλησία οὐ καλεῖται. Ignat. ad Tral.

3. A larger Collection of divers particular Societies combined together in order, under direction and influence of a common Government, or of Perſons acting in the Publick behalf, is termed a Church: as the Church of Antioch, of Corinth, of Jeruſalem, &c. each of which at firſt probably might conſiſt of divers Congregations, having dependencies of leſs Towns annexed to them: all being united under the care of the Biſhop and Presbytery of thoſe places; but however, ſoon after the Apoſtles times, it is certain that ſuch Collections were, and were named Churches.

4. The Society of thoſe who at preſent or in courſe of time profeſs the Faith and Goſpel of Chriſt, and undertake the Evangelical Covenant, in diſtinction to all other Religions: particularly to that of the Jews; which is called the Synagogue.

5. The whole body of God's people that is, ever hath been, or ever ſhall be, from the beginning of the world to the conſummation thereof, who having (formally or virtually) believed in Chriſt and ſincerely obeyed God's Laws, ſhall finally by the meritorious Performances and Sufferings of Chriſt be ſaved, is called the Church.

Mat. 16. 18. Eph. 3. 10. Gal 1. 13. 1 Tim. 3. 15. Act 12. 1. 2. 47. 20. 28. 1 Cor. 10. 32 12. 28. 15. 9 14. 12.

Of theſe Acceptions the two latter do onely come under preſent conſideration; it being plain that Saint Paul doth not ſpeak of any one particular or preſent Society; but of all at all times who have relation to the ſame Lord, Faith, Hope, Sacraments, &c.

Wherefore, to determine the caſe between theſe two, we muſt obſerve that to the latter of theſe (that is, to the Catholick Society of true Believers and faithfull Servants of Chriſt, diffuſed through all ages, diſperſed through all Countries, where part doth ſojourn on Earth, part doth reſide in Heaven, part is not yet extant; but all whereof is deſcribed in the regiſter of Divine Pre-ordination, and ſhall be recollected at the reſurrection of the juſt; that I ſay, to this Church) eſpecially all the glorious Titles and exccellent Privileges attributed to the Church in Holy Scripture do agree.

Epheſ. 1. 10. Col. 1. 18, 20.

This is the Body of Chriſt, whereof he is the Head; and Saviour.

This is the Spouſe, and Wife of Chriſt; whereof he is the Bridegroom and Husband.

Epheſ. 5. 25, 32. Apoc. 16. 7. Matt. 22. 2. 25. 1.

This is the Houſe of God; whereof our Lord is the Maſter: which is built uppon a rock, ſo that the gates of hell ſhall not prevail againſt it. Matth. 24 13 1. Tim. 3. 15. Heb.3.5. 1 Pet. 2. 5. Eph. 2. 21. Matth. 16. 18.

This is the City of God; the new, the holy, the heavenly Jeruſalem, the Mother of us all. Apoc. 3. 12. 21. 2, 10. Gal. 4. 26. Heb. 12. 22.

This is the Sion, which the Lord hath choſen, which he hath deſired for his habitation, where he hath reſolved to place his reſt and reſidence for ever. Pſal. 132. 13.

This is the mountain of the Lord, ſeated above all mountains, unto which all Nations ſhall flow. Iſ. 2. 22. Mic. 4. 1.

This is the elect generation, royall Prieſthood, holy nation, peculiar people. 1 Pet. 2. 9.

This is the general Aſſembly, and Church of the firſt-born, who are enrolled in heaven. Heb. 12. 23.

This is the Church which God hath purchaſed with his own bloud; and for which Chriſt hath delivered himſelf, that he might ſanctifie it, and cleanſe it, with the waſhing of water by the word, that he might preſent it to himſelf a glorious Church, not having ſpot or wrinkle, nor any ſuch thing; but that it might be holy and unblemiſhed. Act. 20. 28. Eph. 5. 25.

To this Church as thoſe high Elogies moſt properly do appertain, ſo that unity which is often attributed to the Church doth peculiarly belong thereto.

This is that One body, into which we are all baptized by one Spirit; which is knit together, and compacted of parts affording mutual aid, and ſupply to its nouriſhment and encreaſe; the members whereof do hold a mutual ſympathy and complacence; which is joyned to one Head, deriving ſenſe and motion from it; which is enlivened, and moved by one Spirit. 1 Cor. 12. 13. Rom. 12. 5. Eph. 4. 16. Col. 2. 19. 1 Cor. 12. 26.

This is that one ſpiritual Houſe, reared upon the foundation of the Prophets and Apoſtles, Jeſus Chriſt being the chief corner ſtone; in whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto an holy Temple in the Lord. 1 Cor. 12. 13. Eph. 4. 16. Col. 2. 19.

This is that One family of God, whereof Chriſt is the Οἰκοδεσπότης whence good Chriſtians are Οἰκεῖοι Θεοῦ. Heb. 3. 6. 1 Tim 3. 15. Mat. 10. 25.

This is that one City, or corporation, endued with an ample Charter and noble Privileges, in regard to which St. Paul ſaith we are Συμπολῖται τῶν Ἁγίων, (fellow Citizens of the Saints) and that our πολίτευμα (our civil ſtate and capacity) is in Heaven, or that we are Citizens thereof. Heb. 12. 22. Apoc. 3. 12. 21 2, 10. Eph. 2. 19. Phil. 3. 20.

That one holy nation, and peculiar People, (the ſpiritual Iſrael,) ſubject to the ſame Government and Law, (that which is called the Kingdom of Heaven,) enjoyning the ſame Franchiſes and Privileges, following the ſame Cuſtoms and Faſhions; uſing the ſame Converſation and Language; whereof Jeſus Chriſt is the Lord and King. 1 Pet. 2. 9. Ezek. 37 22.

This is the * one Flock, under one Shepherd. * Joh. 10. 16. Ezek. 37. 24 24. 23.

This is the Society of thoſe for whom Chriſt did pray, that they might † be all one. † Joh 17. 20,

It is true, that divers of theſe Characters are expreſſed to relate to the Church after Chriſt; but they may be allowed to extend to all the faithfull Servants of God before, who in effect were Chriſtians, being ſaved upon the ſame account: and therefore did belong to the ſame Body. Ex quo vocantur Sancti, eſt Eccleſia in terra. Aug. in Pſal. 128.

Since men are called Saints, there is a Church upon Earth. Sancti ante Legem, Sancti ſub Lege, Sancti ſub Gratia, omnes hi perficientes Corpus Domini in membris ſunt Eccleſiæ conſtituti. Greg. Mag. Epiſt. 24. Saints before the Law. Saints under the Law, Saints under the Goſpel, all theſe make up the Body of Chriſt, and are reckoned among the members of the Church.

To this Church in a more ſpecial and eminent manner all thoſe Titles, and particularly that of Unity, are aſcribed; but the ſame alſo in ſome order and meaſure do belong and are attributed to the Univerſal Church ſojourning upon Earth.

For becauſe this viſible Church doth enfold the other, (as one Maſs doth contain the good Ore and baſe alloy; as one Floor the Corn and the Chaff; as one Field the Wheat and the Tares; as one Net the choice Fiſh and the refuſe; as one Fold the Sheep and the Goats; as one Tree the Living and the dry Branches:) Becauſe this Society is deſigned to be in reality what the other is in appearance, the ſame with the other: Becauſe therefore preſumptively every member of this doth paſs for a member of the other, (the time of diſtinction and ſeparation not being yet come:) Becauſe this in its Profeſſion of Truth, in its Sacrifices of Devotion, in its practice of Service and Duty to God doth communicate with that: Therefore commonly the Titles and Attributes of the one are imparted to the other.

One great houſe hath veſſels of honour and diſhonour, 2 Tim. 2. 20. (Rom, 9. 21.) Mat. 3. 12. 13. 38, 47.

Joh. 15. 2.

Mat. 13. 30.

Rom. 9. 6.
2. 28.
Joh. 1. 18.

All, ſaith Saint Paul, are not Iſrael who are of Iſrael; nor is he a Jew, that is one outwardly; yet in regard to the conjunction of the reſt with the faithfull Iſraelites; becauſe of external Conſent in the ſame Profeſſion and conſpiring in the ſame Services, all the Congregation of Iſrael is ſtyled a holy Nation, and peculiar People.

Sicut lilium in medio ſpinarum, ità proxima mea in medio filiarum——Unde filias appellat, niſi propter communionem Sacramentorum? Aug. de Unit. Eccl. cap. 13. As the Lily among Thorns, ſo is my Love among the Daughters. ——Why doth he call them Daughters, but for the communion, and agreement in Sacraments?

So likewiſe do the Apoſtles ſpeak to all Members of the Church as to elect and holy Perſons, unto whom all the Privileges of Chriſtianity do belong; although really Hypocrites and bad men do not belong to the Church, nor are concerned in its Unity, as St. Auſtin doth often teach.

Non ad eam pertinent avari, raptores fœneratores. Videntur eſſe in Eccleſia, non ſunt. Aug. de Bap. c. Don. 4. 1 6. 3. Eccleſiam veram intelligere non audeo niſi in ſanctis & juſtis. Aug. de Bapt. 5. 27. I dare not underſtand the true Church to be but among holy and righteous men. Pax autem hujus Unitatis in ſolis bonis eſt—-Sicut autem iſti qui intus cum gemitu tolerantur, quamvis ad eandem Columbæ unitatem & illam glorioſam Eccleſiam, non habentem maculam aut rugam, aut aliquid ejuſmodi non pertineant. Idem de Bapt. 3. 18. Nec regenerati ſpiritualiter in corpus & membra Chriſti co-ædificentur niſi boni, &c. Aug. de Unit. 18. Multi tales ſunt in Sacramentorum communione cum Eccleſia, & tamen jam non ſunt in Eccleſia. Idem de Unit. Eccl. cap. 20. There are many ſuch who communicate in Sacraments with the Church, and yet they are not in the Church. Omnes mali ſpiritualiter à bonis ſejuncti ſunt. De Bapt. 6. 4. All evil men are ſpiritually ſevered from the good.

Ἐκκλησίαν καλῶ τὸ ἄθροισμα τῶν ἐκλεκτῶν. Clem. Alex. Str. p. 514.
I call the Church the Congregation of the Elect,

The places therefore of Scripture which do repreſent the Church one, as unqueſtionably they belong (in their principal notion and intent) to the true univerſal Church, (called the Church myſtical and inviſible;) ſo may they by analogy and participation be underſtood to concern the viſible Church Catholick here in Earth; which profeſſeth Faith in Chriſt, and Obedience to his Laws.

And of this Church (under due reference to the other) the queſtion is, Wherein the Unity of it doth conſiſt, or upon what grounds it is called one? being that it compriſeth in its ſelf ſo many Perſons, Societies and Nations.

For reſolution of which Queſtion, we may conſider, that a Community of men may be termed one upon ſeveral Accounts and Grounds; as,

For ſpecial Unity of nature, or as Unum genus; ſo are all men one by participation of common rationality; τὸ Ἀνθρώπινον, Humanum genus.

For Cognation of bloud; as, Gens una; ſo are all Jews, however living diſperſedly over the World, reckoned one Nation, or People; ſo all Kinſmen do conſtitute one Family: and thus alſo all Men, as made of one Bloud, are one People.

For Commerce of language; ſo Italians, and Germans, are eſteemed one People, although living under different Laws and Governments.

For Conſent in opinion, or Conformity in manners and practices; as, Men of the ſame Sect in Religion or Philoſophy, of the ſame Profeſſion, Faculty, Trade: ſo Jews, Mahometans, Arians; ſo Oratours, Grammarians, Logicians; ſo Divines, Lawyers, Phyſicians, Merchants, Artizans, Ruſticks, &c.

For Affection of mind, or Compacts of good-will; or for Links of peace and amicable correſpondence; in order to mutal intereſt and aid; as, Friends and Confederates.

For being ranged in order under one Law and Rule; as, thoſe who live under one Monarchy, or in one Commonwealth; as the People in England, Spain, France; in Venice, Genoa, Holland, &c.

Upon ſuch Grounds of Union or Unity a Society of men is denominated One; and, upon divers ſuch accounts, it is plain that the Catholick Church may be ſaid to be One. For,

I. It is evident, that the Church is One by Conſent in faith and opinion concerning all principal matters of Doctrine, eſpecially in thoſe which have conſiderable influence upon the Practice of Piety toward God, Righteouſneſs toward Men, and Sobriety of Converſation; to teach us which the Grace of God did appear.

My ſheep hear my voice, Joh. 10. 27, 16.

Tit. 2. 12.

As he that ſhould in any principal Doctrine differ from Plato (denying the Immortality of the Soul, the Providence of God, the natural difference of Good and Evil;) would not be Platoniſt; ſo he that diſſenteth from any Doctrine of importance, manifeſtly taught by Chriſt, doth renounce Chriſtianity.

Regula fidei ſola immobilis & irreformabilis. Tert. de Virg. vel. 1.

All Chriſtians are delivered into one form of doctrine; to which they muſt ſtiffly and ſtedfaſtly adhere, keeping the Depoſitum committed to them: They muſt ſtrive together for the faith of the Goſpel; and, earneſtly contend for the faith which was once delivered to the Saints: They muſt hold faſt the form of ſound words---in faith and love which is in Chriſt Jeſus; that great ſalvation, which at firſt began to be ſpoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto them by his hearers, God alſo bearing them witneſs with ſigns and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, according to his own will.

Rom. 6. 17.
Col. 2. 7. Heb. 3. 6. 13. 9.
1 Cor. 15. 58. Eph. 4. 14.
Jud. 3.
2 Tim. 1. 13.
Heb. 2. 3.

They are bound to mind or think, one and the ſame thing; to ſtand faſt in one ſpirit with one mind; to walk by the ſame rule; to be joyned together in the ſame mind, and in the ſame judgment; with one mind and mouth to glorify God the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

Τὸ ἓν καὶ αὐτὸ φρονεῖν.
Phil 2. 2. 2 Cor. 13. 11.
Phil. 1. 27. Phil. 3. 16.
1 Cor. 1. 10.
Rom. 15. 6.

They are obliged to diſclaim Conſortſhip with the Gain-ſayers of this Doctrine; to ſtand off from thoſe who do ἑτεροδοξεῖν, or who do not conſent to the wholſome Words----of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and to the Doctrine which is according to Godlineſs, to mark thoſe who make diviſions and ſcandals beſide the Doctrine which Chriſtians had learnt, and to decline from them: To reject Hereticks: To beware of falſe Prophets, of Seducers; of thoſe who ſpeak perverſe things to draw diſciples after them: To pronounce Anathema upon whoever ſhall preach any other Doctrine.

Ἀφίστασθαι.
1 Tim. 6. 4.
2 Theſſ. 3 16.
Rom. 16. 17
Tit. 3. 10.
Matt. 7. 15. 24. 11. Act. 20. 29, 30
2 Pet. 2. 1. Eph. 4. 14.
Gal. 1. 8.
3. 28, (26.)

Thus are all Chriſtians one in Chriſt Jeſus: thus are they (as Tertullian ſpeaketh) confederated in the ſociety of a Sacrament, or of one profeſſion.

De ſocietate Sacramenti confœderantur Tertull. in Marc. 4. 5.

This preaching and this faith the Church having received, though diſperſed over the world, doth carefully hold, as inhabiting one houſe; and alike believeth theſe things, as if it had one ſoul, and the ſame heart, and conſonantly doth preach, and teach, and deliver theſe things, as if it had but one mouth.

Τοῦτο τὸ κήρυγμα παρειληφυῖα, καὶ ταύτην τὴν πίστιν ἡ Ἐκκλησία καίπερ ἐν ὅλῳ τῷ κόσμῳ διεσπαρμένη ἐπιμελῶς φυλάσσει ὡς ἕνα οἶκον οἰκοῦσα καὶ ὁμοίως πιστεύει τούτοις ὡς μίαν ψυχὴν καὶ τὴν αὐτὴν ἔχουσα καρδίαν· καὶ συμφώνως ταῦτα κηρύσσει καὶ διδάσκει, καὶ παραδίδωσι, ὡς ἓν στόμα κεκτημένη. Iren. 1. 3. (apud Epiph. Hær. 31.)

As for Kings, though their Kingdoms be divided yet he equaly expects from every one of them one diſpenſation, and one and the ſame ſacrifice of a true Confeſſion and Praiſe. So that, though there may ſeem to be a diverſity of temporal ordinances, yet an Unity and Agreement in the right Faith may be held and maintained among them.

Reges——Quorum etſi diviſa ſunt regna, æqualiter tamen de ſingulis diſpenſationem exigit, unámque de eis vera de ſe confeſſionis hoſtiam laudis exſpectat—ut etſi diſpoſitionum temporalium videatur eſſe diverſitas, circa ejus fidei rectitudinem unitatis conſonantia teneatur. (P. Leo. 2. Epiſt. 5 ad Ervigium R. Hiſp.

In regard to this Union in Faith peculiarly the body of Chriſtians, adhering to it, was called the Catholick Church, from which all thoſe were eſteemed ipſo facto to be cut off and ſeparated who in any point deſerted that Faith; ſuch a one (ſaith Saint Paul) ἐξέστραπται, is turned aſide, or left the Chriſtian way of life. He in reality is no Chriſtian, nor is to be avowed or treated as ſuch, but is to be diſclaimed, rejected and ſhunned.

Ἐξέστραπται ὁ τοιοῦτος, Tit. 3. 10. Rom. 16. 17. 2 Joh. 10.

He (ſaith Saint Cyprian) cannot ſeem a Chriſtian, who doth not perſiſt in the Unity of Chriſt's Goſpel and Faith.

Nec Chriſtianus videri poteſt, qui non permanet in Evangelii ejus & fidei veritate. Cypr. de Unit. Eccl.

If (ſaith Tertullian) a man be a Heretick, he cannot be a Chriſtian.

Si Hæretici ſunt, Chriſtiani eſſe non poſſunt. Tart. de Præſcr. c. 37.

Whence Hegeſippus ſaith of the old Hereticks, that they did divide the Unity of the Church by perniciious ſpeeches againſt God, and his Chriſt.

Οἵτινες ἐμέρισαν τὴν ἕνωσιν τῆς Ἐκκλησίας φθοριμαίοις λόγοις κατὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ, καὶ κατὰ τοῦ Χριστοῦ αὐτοῦ. Euſ. Hiſt. 4. 22.

The Vertue (ſaith the Paſtour Hermes, cited by Clemens Alexan.) which doth keep the Church together, is Faith.

Ἡ συνέχουσα τὴν Ἐκκλησίαν ἀρετή, ἡ Πίστις ἐστί. Herm. apud Clem. Strom. p. 281.

So the Fathers of the Sixth Council tell the Emperour that they were members one of another, and did conſtitute the one body of Chriſt by conſent in opinion with him, and one another; and by faith.

Μελῶν ἀλλήλων ὄντων ἡμῶν, καὶ τὸ ἓν σῶμα συνιστώντων Χριστοῦ διὰ τῆς πρὸς αὐτὸν καὶ ἀλλήλους ὁμοδοξίας καὶ πίστεως. Conc. VI. Act. 18. p. 271.

We ought in all things to hold the Unity of the Catholick Church; and not to yield in any thing to the enemies of faith and truth.

Per omnia debemus Eccleſiæ Catholicæ Unitatem tenere, nec aliquo fidei & veritatis hoſtibus cedere. Cypr. Ep. 71. (ad Quint. de Steph. P.)

In each part of the world this faith is one, becauſe this is the Chriſtian faith.

Utriuſque partis terrarum fides iſta una eſt, quia & fides iſta Chriſtiana eſt. Aug. c. Jul. 1. 2. (p. 203. 2.)

He denies Chriſt, who confeſſes not all things that are Chriſt's.

Negat Chriſtum, qui non omnia quæ Chriſti ſunt confitetur. Ambr. in Luc. lib. 6. cap. 9. p. 90. (Vid. p. 85.)

Hence in common practice, whoever did appear to differ from the common Faith, was rejected as an Apoſtate from Chriſtianity, and unworthy the communion of other Chriſtians.

There are Points of leſs moment, more obſcurely delivered------in which Chriſtians with breach of Unity may diſſent, about which they may diſpute, in which they may err----without breach of Unity, or prejudice to Charity.

Alia ſunt in quibus inter ſe aliquando etiam doctiſſimi atque optimi regulæ Catholicæ defenſores, ſalvâ fidei compage non conſonant, &c. Aug. c. Jul. 1. 2. p. 205. Totum hoc genus liberas habet obſervationes. Aug. ad Jan. Ep. 118. Ep. 86. (ad Caſal.)

The Faith of Chriſtians did at firſt conſiſt in few Points, thoſe which were profeſſed in Baptiſm, whereof we have divers Summaries in the Ancients--- by analogy whereto all other Propoſitions were expounded, and according to agreement whereto ſound Doctrines were diſtinguiſhed from falſe: ſo that he was accounted orthodox who did not violate them----

So he that holds that immovable Rule of truth which he received at his Baptiſm, will know the words and ſayings and parables which are taken out of the Scriptures, &c.

Sic autem qui regulam veritatis immobilem apud ſe habet quam per Baptiſmum accepit, hæc quidem quæ ſunt ex ſcripturis nomina & dictiones & parabolas cognoſcet, &c. Iren. 1. 1. Vid. Gr. (p. 4.)

II. It is evident, that all Chriſtians are united by the bands of mutual Charity and Good-will.

They are all bound to wiſh one another well, to have a complacence in the good, and a compaſſion of the evils incident to each other, to diſcharge all offices of kindneſs, ſuccour, conſolation to each other.

This is the command of Chriſt to all; (This is my commandement, Joh. 15. 12. ſaith he, That ye love one another;) This is the common badge by which 1 Joh. 3. 11.
his Diſciples are diſcerned and diſtinguiſhed, Hereby (ſaith he) ſhall 1 Theſſ. 4. 9. Joh. 13. 35.
all men know that ye are my diſciples, if ye love one another: They muſt have the ſame love: They muſt love as Brethren, be compaſſionate, piti- Phil. 2. 2.
full, courteous each to other: They muſt bear one anothers burthens; and, 1 Pet. 3. 8.
eſpecially, as they have opportunity, doe good to the houſhold of faith. If one Gal. 6. 2, 10.
member ſuffer, all the members muſt ſuffer with it; and if one member be 1 Cor. 12. 26.
honoured, all the members muſt rejoice. The multitude of them who believe muſt be (like that in the Acts) of one heart, and of one ſoul. They Act. 4. 32. Eph. 5. 2.
muſt walk in love, and doe all things in love. 1 Cor. 16. 14

Whoever therefore doth highly offend againſt Charity, maligning or miſchieving his brethren, doth hereby ſeparate himſelf from Chriſt's body, and ceaſe to be a Chriſtian.

They that are enemies to brotherly charity, whether they are openly out of the Church, or ſeem to be within, they are Pſeudo-chriſtians and Anti-chriſts-- When they ſeem to be within the Church, they are ſeparated from that inviſible conjunction of Charity; Whence Saint John, They went out from us, but were not of us. He ſaith not, that by their going out they were made aliens, but becauſe they were aliens, therefore he declareth that they went out.

Hujus autem fraternæ charitatis inimici ſive apertè foris ſint, ſive intùs eſſe videantur, Pſuedo-chriſtiani ſunt & Antichriſti. Aug. de Bapt. 3. 19. —— Cùm intùs videntur, ab illa inviſibili charitatis compage ſeparati ſunt; Unde Johannes, (1 John 2. 19.) Ex nobis exierunt, ſed non erant ex nobis—Non ait quòd exeundo alieni facti ſunt, ſed quòd alieni erant, propter hoc eos exiſſe declaravit. Ibid.

Wherefore the moſt notorious violations of Charity being the cauſing of diſſentions and factions in the Church, the cauſeleſs ſeparation from any Church, the unjuſt condemnation of Churches----Whoever was guilty of any ſuch unchriſtian behaviour was rejected by the Fathers, and held to be no Chriſtian. Such were the Novatians, the Donatiſts, the, Meletians, the Luciferians, ---- and other Schiſmaticks.

For

Τί γὰρ ἂν γένοιτο χαριέστερον, ἢ τοὺς τοσούτῳ τῷ πλήθει τῶν τόπων διειργομένους τῇ διὰ τῆς ἀγάπης ἑνώσει καθορᾶν εἰς μίαν μελῶν ἁρμονίαν ἐν σώματι Χριστοῦ δεδέσθαι. Baſ. Ep. 220.

Ἐπὶ τῶν ἀρχαίων καιρῶν—— ἡνίκα ἤνθουν αἱ Ἐκκλησίαι τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐρριζωμέναι τῇ πίστει, ἡνωμέναι τῇ ἀγάπῃ· ὥσπερ ἐν ἑνὶ σώματι μιᾶς συμπνοίας διαφόρων μελῶν ὑπαρχούσης. Baſ. Ep. 338.

Ἡ κατὰ Πνεῦμα συνάφεια ἐμποιεῖν πέφυκε τὴν οἰκείωσιν, ἣν ἡμῖν εἶναι πρὸς τὴν ἀγάπην ὑμῶν πεπιστεύκαμεν Baſ. Epiſt. 182.

Qui ergò compage Charitatis incorporati ſunt ædificio ſuper petram conſtituto, &c. Aug. de Unit. cap. 18.

Membra verò Chriſti per unitatis charitatem ſibi copulantur, & per eandem capiti ſuo cohærent, quod eſt Chriſtus. Aug. de Unit. cap. 2.

For what can be more acceptable and pleaſant than to ſee thoſe who are ſevered and ſcattered into ſo many places, yet knit and joyned together in the bond and union of charity as harmoniouſs members of the body of Chriſt.

In old time----when the Church of God flouriſhed, being rooted in the ſame faith, united in love: there being as it were one conſpiracy or league of different members in one body.

For the communion of the Spirit is wont to knit and unite mens minds, which conjunction we believe to be between us and your charitable affection.

They therefore who by the bond of Charity are incorporated into the building ſetled upon the rock.

But the members of Chriſt are joined together by the charity of union, and by the ſame cleave cloſe to their head, which is Chriſt.

Omnes Sancti ſibi charitate cohærent —— Aug. de Bapt. 6. 3.

III. All Chriſtians are united by ſpiritual cognation and alliance; as being all regenerated by the ſame incorruptible ſeed, being alike born, not of bloud, nor of the will of the fleſh, nor of the will of man, but of God; whence, as the ſons of God, and brethren of Chriſt, they become brethren one to another; ſo that it is a peculiar title or appellation of Chriſtians, the brethren ſignifying all Chriſtian people; and a brother being the ſame with a Chriſtian profeſſour.

1 Pet. 1. 23. Jam. 1. 18. Joh. 1. 14. Gal. 3. 26. Joh. 1. 12. Heb. 2. 10, 11. 1 Cor. 7. 15. 5. 11. Rom. 14, 10, &c.

IV. The whole Chriſtian Church is one by its incorporation into the myſtical body of Chriſt; or as Fellow-ſubjects of that ſpiritual, heavenly Kingdom, whereof Chriſt is the ſovereign Head and Governour; whence they are governed by the ſame Laws, are obliged by the ſame Inſtitutions and Sanctions; they partake of the ſame Privileges, and are entitled to the ſame Promiſes, and encouraged by the ſame Rewards; (being called in one hope of their calling.)

They are under a Covenant of Allegiance.

Eph. 4. 4.

Ὁ γὰρ αὐτὸς Κύριος πάντων. Rom. 10. 12.

Εἰ δὲ ὁ τόπος χωρίζει, ἀλλ' ὁ Κύριος αὐτοὺς συνάπτει κοινὸς ὤν, &c. Chryſ. in 1 Cor. Orat. 1. Vid.

So they make up one ſpiritual Corporation, or Republick, whereof Chriſt is the Sovereign Lord.

Though the place disjoin them, yet the Lord joins them together, being their common Lord, &c.

Hence an habit of diſobedience doth ſever a man from this Body; for, not every one that ſaith, Lord, Lord, ſhall enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, or continue therein. Every ſuch perſon who denieth God in works is a Rebel, an Outlaw, renouncing his Allegiance, forfeiting his Title to God's protection and favour.

Mat. 7. 21.

Tit. 1. 16.

He is not a ſheep of Chriſt, becauſe he doth not * hear his voice.

Qui cum non ſequitur, quomodo ſe ovem ejus dicere audebit? Aug. de Unit. Eccl. cap 10. * Joh. 10. 27.

He is ſeparated from the Body, by not holding the Head.

Col. 2. 9.

Mendacium eſt, Chriſtianum ſe dicere, & opera Chriſti non facere Ambr.

Qui Chriſtiani nominis opus non agit, Chriſtianus non eſſe videtur. Salv. de Gab. D. 4.

'Tis a lie, to call one's ſelf a Chriſtian, and not to doe the works of Chriſt.

He that does not the work of a Chriſtian name, ſeems not to be a Chriſtian.

When in ſtead of the works themſelves he begins to oppoſe even the moſt apparent truth, whereby he is reproved, then he is cut off (from the body, or the Church.)

—Cùm pro ipſis operibus etiam veritati apertiſſimæ, quâ redarguitur, reſiſtere cœperit, tunc præciditur. Aug. de Unit Eccl. cap. 20.

Hence St. Auſtin often denieth wicked perſons to be in the Church, or to appertain unto its Unity.

Vid. ſuprá

For when there is one and the ſame Lord, that dwelleth in us, he every where joins and couples thoſe that are his with the bond of Unity.

Nam quum Dominus unus atque idem ſit, qui habitat in nobis, conjungit ubique & copulat ſuos vinculo Unitatis. Firmil. apud Cypr. Ep. 75.

V. All Chriſtians are linked together in peaceable concord and confederacy; ſo that they are bound to live in good correſpondence; to communicate in works of Piety and Devotion; to defend and promote the common intereſt of their Profeſſion.

Upon the entrance of the Goſpel by our Lord's Incarnation, it was by a celeſtial Herald proclaimed, Peace on earth, and good-will among men. It was our Lord's office * to preach Peace. It was a principal end and effect of his Death † to reconcile all men, and to deſtroy enmity. He ſpecially charged his Diſciples, εἰρηνεύειν ἐν ἀλλήλοις, to maintain Peace one with another, It was his Will at parting with them, Peace I leave with you.

Luc. 2. 14.
* Act. 10. 36.
Eph. 2. 17.
† Col. 1. 20.
Eph. 2. 14.
Marc. 9. 50.
Joh. 14. 27

The Apoſtles frequently do enjoin to purſue Peace with all them who call upon the Lord with a pure heart; to follow the things which make for Peace and edification mutual; to keep the Unity of the Spirit in the Bond of Peace.

2 Tim. 2. 22.
Rom. 14. 19
Eph. 4. 3.

It was in the Prophecies concerning the Evangelical ſtate declared, that under it, The Wolfe ſhould dwell with the Lamb, and the Leopard ſhould lie down with the Kid, and the ſucking Child ſhould play on the hole of the Aſpe; that is, that men of all tempers, and conditions, by virtue of this Inſtitution, ſhould be diſpoſed to live innocently, quietly and lovingly together; ſo that they ſhould not hurt, or deſtroy in all God's holy mountain; for that would be a Duty incumbent on the Diſciples of this Inſtitution, which all good Chriſtians would obſerve.

Iſai. 11 6.
Iſai. 65. 25.
2. 4. 66. 12.
Iſai. 2 4. They ſhall learn war no more.

The Evangelical Covenant, as it doth ally us to God, ſo it doth confederate us together: The Sacraments of this Covenant are alſo Symbols of Peace and Amity between thoſe who undertake it. Of Baptiſm it is ſaid, that ſo many of you as have been baptized into Chriſt have put on Chriſt; and thence, Ye are all one in Chriſt Jeſus---- All in one Spirit have been baptized into one body. And in the Euchariſt, by partaking of one individual Food, they are tranſmuted into one Body and Subſtance; We (ſaith Saint Paul) being many are one bread, one body; for all of us do partake of one bread.

Gal. 3. 27, 28.
1 Cor. 12. 13.
1 Cor. 10. 7.

By which Sacraments alſo our people appears to be united: for, as many grains collected, and ground, and mingled together make one bread; ſo in Chriſt, who is the bread of heaven, we may know our ſelves to be one body, that our company or number be conjoined and united together.

Quo & ipſo Sacramento populus noſter adunatus oſtenditur: ut quemadmodum grana multa in unum collecta, & commolita, & commixta, panem unum faciunt; ſic in Chriſto, qui eſt panis cæleſtis, unum ſciamus eſſe corpus, cui conjunctus ſit noſter numerus & adunatus. Cypr. Ep. 63.

With us there is both one Church, and one mind, and undivided concord.

Nobis & Eccleſia una, & mens juncta, & individua concordia. Cypr. Ep. 57.

Let us hold the peace of the Catholick Church in the unity of concord.

Catholicæ Eccleſiæ pacem concordiæ unitate teneamus. Ep. 45.

Manente concordiæ vinculo, & perſeverante Catholicæ Eccleſiæ individuo Sacramento,&c. Ep. 52. (ad Anton. p. 96.)

The bond of concord remaining, and the individual Sacrament of the Catholick Church continuing, &c.

Qui ergò nec unitatem Spiritûs, nec conjunctionem Pacis obſervat, & ſe ab Eccleſiæ vinculo, atque à Sacerdotum collegio ſeparat, Epiſcopi nec poteſtatem poteſt habere, nec honorem, &c. Ibid. p. 97.

He therefore that keeps neither the unity of the Spirit, nor the conjunction of Peace, and ſeparates himſelf from the bond of the Church, and the college (or ſociety) of Prieſts, can have neither the power of a Biſhop, nor the honour.

Phil. 1. 17.
1 Tim. 1. 18. 6. 12.
2 Tim. 4. 7.
Jud. 3.

Thus in general. But particularly, All Chriſtians ſhould aſſiſt one another in the common Defence of Truth, Piety and Peace, when they are aſſaulted, in the Propagation of the Faith, and Enlargement of the Church, which is συναθλεῖν τῇ πίστει τοῦ εὐαγγελίου, to contend together for the faith of the Goſpel; to be good Souldiers of Chriſt; warring the good warfare; ---- ſtriving for the Faith once delivered to the Saints.

Πάντες τε μιᾷ γνώμῃ δι᾽ ἐπιστολῶν Ἐκκλησιαστικὸν Δόγμα τοῖς πανταχόσε διετυποῦντο. Euſeb. 5. 23.

Hence if any where any Hereſie or bad doctrine ſhould ariſe, all Chriſtians ſhould be ready to declare againſt it; that it may not infect, or ſpread a doubt ariſing, as in the caſe of celebrating Eaſter; They all with one conſent, declared by letters the Decree of the Church to all every where.

Cypr. Ep. 67.

Eſpecially the Paſtours of the Churches are obliged with conſent to oppoſe it.

Laborantes hic nos & contra invidiæ impetum totis fidei viribus reſiſtentes, multùm Sermo veſter adjuvit, &c. Cypr. Ep. 23.

While we laboured here, and withſtood the force of envy with the whole ſtrength of our faith, your Speech aſſiſted us very much.

Thus did the Biſhops of ſeveral Churches meet to ſuppreſs the Hereſie of P. Samoſatenus.

This was the ground of moſt Synods.

Οὕτως οἱ μετὰ ταῦτα πανταχῇ ποικίλως ἐπὶ τοῖς τῶν Αἱρετικῶν ἀθροισθέντες καινίσμασι κοινὴν ὡς σύμψυχοι τὴν ὑπὲρ τῆς πίστεως ψῆφον· ἅπερ ἀδελφικῶς ἑαυτοῖς ἐδοκίμασαν, ταῦτα τρανῶς τοῖς ἀποῦσι διαπορθμεύσαντες. καὶ οἱ μὲν ἐν Σαρδικῇ κατὰ τῶν Ἀρείου λειψάνων ἀγωνισάμενοι τοῖς ἐν ἀνατολῇ τὴν κρίσιν ἐξέπεμπον· οἱ δὲ ἐν ταῦθα τὴν Ἀπολιναρίου λύμην φωράσαντες, τοῖς ἐν δύσει τὴν ψῆφον ἐγνώριζον. Syn. Chalced. ad Imper. Conc. Chal. pars 3. p. 78.

So they who afterward in all places and ſeveral ways were gathered together againſt the innovations of Hereticks gave their common opinion in behalf of the faith, as being of one mind: what they had approved among themſelves in a brotherly way, that they clearly transferred to thoſe who were abſent: and they who at the Council of Sardis had earneſtly contended againſt the remainders of Arius, ſent their judgment to thoſe of the Eaſtern Churches: and they who had diſcovered the infection of Apolinarius, made their opinions known to the Weſtern.

If any diſſention or Faction doth ariſe in any Church, other Churches, upon notice thereof, ſhould yield their aid to quench and ſuppreſs it; countenancing the peaceable, checking and diſavowing the factious.

Vid. Ep 42. (ad Cornel.) p. 77.

Thus did Saint Cyprian help to diſcountenance and quaſh the Novatian Schiſm.

Thus when the Oriental Churches did labour under the Arian Faction, and Diſſentions between the Catholicks, St. Baſil. (with other Orthodox Biſhops conſorting with him) did write to the Weſtern Biſhops (of Italy and France) to yield their ſuccour.

Hoc enim vel maximè, frater, laboramus, & laborare debemus, ut Unitatem à Domino, & per Apoſtolos nobis ſucceſſoribus traditam, quantum poſſumus, obtinere curemus; & quod in nobis eſt, &c. Cypr. Ep. 42. p. 78.

For this, my brother, we muſt earneſtly endeavour, and ought to endeavour, to have a care, as much as in us lies, to hold the Unity delivered to us from the Lord, and by the Apoſtles, whoſe ſucceſſours we are; and what lies in us, &c.

All Chriſtians ſhould be ready, when opportunity doth invite, to admit one another to conjunction in offices of Piety and Charity; in Prayer, in communion of the Euchariſt, in brotherly converſation, and pious conference for edification or advice. Ep. 398.

So that he who flies and avoids communion with us, you in your prudence may know, that ſuch a man breaks himſelf off from the whole Church.

* Ὥστε ὁ τὴν πρὸς ἡμᾶς κοινωνίαν ἀποδιδράσκων μὴ λανθανέτω ὑμῶν τὴν ἀκρίβειαν πάσης ἑαυτὸν τῆς Ἐκκλησίας ἀπορρηγνύς. Baſ. Ep. 75.

Saint Chryſoſtome doth complain of Epiphanius; Then when he came to the great and holy City Conſtantinople, he came not out into the Congregation according to cuſtome and the ancient manner, he joyned not himſelf with us, nor communicated with us in the Word, and Prayer, and the Holy Communion &c.

Εἶτα τῆς μεγάλης ϗ θεοφιλοῦς Κωνσταντινουπόλεως ἐπιβὰς οὐκ εἰς Ἐκκλησίαν ἐξῆλθε κτ̃ τὸ εἰωθὸς, ϗ τὸ ἄνωθεν κρατήσαντα θεσμὸν οὐχ ἡμῖν συνεγένετο, οὐ λόγου μετέδωκεν, οὐκ εὐχῆς, οὐ κοινωνίας, ἀλλ' ἀποβὰς τοῦ πλοίου, &c. Chryſ. ad Innoc. P. (Ep. 122.)

So Polycarp, being at Rome, did communicate with P. Anicetus.

Ἐν τῇ Ἐκκλησίᾳ παρεχώρησεν ὁ Ἀνίκητος τὴν Εὐχαριστίαν τῷ Πολυκάρπῳ, κατ' ἐντροπὴν δηλονότι. Euſeb. 5. 24.

If Diſſention ariſe between divers Churches; another may interpoſe to reconcile them; as did the Church of Carthage, between that of Rome and Alexandria Cod. Afr. Can. 101.

If any Biſhop were exceedingly negligent in the diſcharge of his Office, (to the common damage of Truth and Piety,) his neighbour Biſhops might admoniſh him thereto; and, if he ſhould not reform, might deprive him of Communion. Cod. Afr. Can. 123.

All Chriſtians ſhould hold friendly correſpondence, as occaſion doth ſerve, and as it is uſefull, to ſignifie conſent in Faith, to recommend Perſons, to foſter Charity, to convey Succour and Advice, to perform all good offices of Amity and Peace.

Siricius who is our Companion, and fellow-labourer, with whom the whole world by mutual commerce of canonical or communicatory Letters agree together with us in one common Society.

Damaſo Siricius hodie, qui noſter eſt ſocius, cum quo nobis totus orbis commercio formatarum in una communionis ſocietate concordant. Opt. lib. 2. p. 40.

The Catholick Church being one body, 'tis conſequent thereto, that we write and ſignifie one to another, &c.

Ἑνὸς σώματος ὄντος τῆς καθολικῆς ἐκκλησίας ἀκόλουθόν ἐστι γράφειν ἡμᾶς ϗ σημαίνειν ἀλλήλοις, &c. Alex. Alexandriæ. Socr. 1. 6. Theod.

In caſes of doubt or difficulty one Church ſhould have recourſe to others for Advice; and any Church ſhould yield it..

Both common charity and reaſon requires, moſt dear brethren, that we conceal nothing from your knowledge of thoſe things which are done among us, that ſo there may be common advice taken by us concerning the moſt uſefull way of ordering Eccleſiaſtical affairs.

Et dilectio communis & ratio expoſcit, fratres chariſſimi, nihil conſcientiæ veſtræ ſubtrahere de his quæ apud nos geruntur, ut ſit nobis circa utilitatem Eccleſiaſticæ adminiſtrationis commune conſilium. Cyp. Ep. 29. (ad Cler. Rom.)

One Church ſhould acquaint others of any extraordinary tranſaction concerning the common Faith or Diſcipline; requeſting their approbation and countenance.

The practice of this we ſee frequently in Saint Cyprian's Epiſtles; particularly in Epiſt. 4, 15, 23, 29, 30, 42, 48. (P. Corn.)

Thus did the Eaſtern Churches give account to all other Churches of their proceedings againſt P. Samoſatenus.

Which letters are ſent all the world over, and brought to the notice of all the Churches and of all the Brethren.

Euſeb. 7. 30. Quæ literæ per totum mundum miſſæ ſunt, & in notitiam Eccleſiis omnibus & univerſis fratribus perlatæ ſunt Cypr. Ep. 52. (ad Anton. p. 91.) Scripſimus ad Cornelium collegam noſtrum, &c. Ibid.

When any Church or any Paſtour was oppreſſed or injured, he might have recourſe to other Churches for their aſſiſtence in order to relief.

Let him who is caſt out have power to apply himſelf to the neighbouring Biſhops, that his cauſe may be carefully heard and diſcuſſed.

Habeat poteſtatem is qui abjectus eſt, ut Epiſcopos finitimos interpellet, & cauſa ejus audiatur ac diligenter tractetur, &c. Conc. Sard. Can. 17. Vid. Cod. Afr. Can. 125.

Thus did Athanaſius (being overborn and expelled from his See by the Arian faction) goe for refuge to the Church of Rome.

St. Chryſoſtome had recourſe to the Biſhop of Rome, and to thoſe of the Weſt, as alſo to the Biſhop of Antioch.

VI. Now, becauſe in the tranſacting of theſe things, the Paſtours have the chief hand, and act in behalf of the Churches which they inſpect, therefore is the Church united alſo by their conſent in Doctrine, their agreement in Peace, their maintaining entercourſe, their concurrence to preſerve Truth and Charity.

Omnes nos decet pro corpore totius Eccleſiæ, cujus per varias quaſque Provincias membra digeſta ſunt excubare. Cypr. Ep. 30. (Cler. Rom. ad Cypr. P.)

We ought all to be vigilant and carefull for the body of the whole Church, where members are diſperſed through many ſeveral Provinces.

Quod ſervis Dei, & maximè Sacerdotibus. Cypr. Ep 42. (ad Cornel.)
Idcirco copioſum corpus eſt Sacerdotum, &c. Cypr. Ep. 67. (p. 161.)

Quando Eccleſia, quæ Catholica una eſt, ſciſſa non ſit, neque diviſa, ſed ſit utique connexa, & cohærentium ſibi invicem Sacerdotum glutino copulata. Cyp. Ep. 69.

Seeing the Church, which is one and Catholick, is not rent nor divided, but truly knit and united together, by the bond of Prieſts united one to another.

Hoc verecundiæ & diſciplinæ & vitæ ipſi omnium convenit-- ut Epiſcopi plures in unum convenientes--- diſponere omnia conſilii communis religione poſſimus. Cypr. Ep. 14. (Clero ſuo)

This agrees with the modeſty and diſcipline and the very life of all, that many of the Biſhops meeting together might order all things in a religious way by common advice.

Ut cum pace à Domino nobis data plures Præpoſiti convenire in unum cæperimus, communicato etiam vobiſcum conſilio diſponere ſingula & reformare poſſimus. Cypr. Ep. 15. (Clero Rom.)

That, ſince it having pleaſed God to grant us peace, we begin to have greater meetings of Biſhops, we may alſo by your advice order and reform every thing.

Quod ut ſimul cum cæteris Collegis noſtris ſtabiliter ac firmiter adminiſtremus, atque ut Catholicæ Eccleſiæ pacem concordiæ unanimitate teneamus, perficiet divina dignatio. Cypr. Ep. 52. (ad Cornel)

Which that, with the reſt of our Collegues, we may ſtedfaſtly and firmly adminiſter; and that we may keep the peace of the Church, in the unanimity of concord, the divine favour will vouchſafe to accompliſh.

Copioſus Epiſcoporum numerus--in unum convenimus. Cypr. Ep. 45. (ad Anton.)

A great number of Biſhops---we met together.

Satis erat, ut tu te Epiſcopum factum Literis nunciares. Cyprian. ad Cornel. (Epiſt. 42.)

Biſhops being choſen did acquaint other Biſhops with it; It was ſufficient (ſaith St. Cyprian to Cornelius) that you ſhould by your Letters acquaint us that you were made a Biſhop.

Significa planè nobis quis in locum Marciani Arelate fuerit ſubſtitutus, ut ſciamus ad quem fratres noſtros dirigere, & cui ſcribere debeamus. Cypr. Ep. 67. P. ad Steph.

Declare plainly to us who is ſubſtituted at Arles in the room of Marcian, that we may know to whom we ſhould direct our brethren, and to whom we ſhould write.

Cypr. Ep. 41, 42, 52. (pag. 93.)
Theod. 5. 9.
Euſeb. de P. Samoſ.

All Churches were to ratifie the Elections of Biſhops duly made by others, and to communicate with thoſe. And likewiſe to comply with all reaſonable Acts for Communion.

To preſerve this Peace and Correſpondence, it was a law and Cuſtom, that no Church ſhould admit to Communion thoſe which were excommunicated by another; or who did ſchiſmatically divide.

Idem enim omnes credimur operati, in quo deprehendimur eadem omnes cenſura, & diſciplinæ conſenſione ſociati. Cler. Rom. ad Cypr. Epiſt. 31.

We are believed to have done the ſame thing, whereby we are found to be all of us aſſociated and joined together by the ſame agreement in cenſure and diſcipline.

The Decrees of Biſhops were ſent to be ſubſcribed.

Vid. Conc. Sard. P. Leonis II. Ep. 2. (ad Hiſp. Epiſt) N. B. p. 385. (Tom 5) P. Bened. II. Ep. 16

VII. All Chriſtian Churches are one by a ſpecifical Unity of Diſcipline, reſembling one another in Eccleſiaſtical adminiſtrations, which are regulated by the indiſpenſible Sanctions and Inſtitutions of their Sovereign.

They are all bound to uſe the ſame Sacraments, according to the forms appointed by our Lord, not admitting any ſubſtantial alteration.

They muſt uphold that ſort of Order, Government and Miniſtery in all its ſubſtantial parts, which God did appoint in the Church, or give thereto, as Saint Paul expreſſeth it; it being a temerarious and dangerous thing to innovate in thoſe matters which our Lord had a ſpecial care to order and ſettle.

1 Cor. 12. 28. Eph. 4. 11. Rom. 12. 7. Act. 20. 28.

Nor can they continue in the Church that have not retained Divine and Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, neither in good converſation, nor peaceable life.

Nec remanere in Eccleſia poſſunt qui Deificam & Eccleſiaſticam Diſciplinam nec actûs ſui converſatione, nec morum pace tenuerunt. P. Cornel. apud Cyprian. Ep. 48. Vid. Ep. 73. (ad Jub.)

In leſſer matters of Ceremony or Diſcipline (inſtituted by humane prudence) Churches may differ, and it is expedient they ſhould do ſo, in regard to the various circumſtances of things, and qualities of perſons to which diſcipline ſhould be accommodated; but no Power ought to abrogate, deſtroy, or infringe, or violate the main form of Diſcipline, conſtituted by Divine appointment.

Ep. Firmil. (pag. 198.) Aug. Ep. 118. & 86. ſuprà.

Hence, when ſome Confeſſours had abetted Novatianus, againſt Cornelius, thereby (againſt a fundamental Rule of the Church, neceſſary for preſerving of Peace and Order therein, that but one Biſhop ſhould be in one Church,) St * Cyprian doth thus complain of their proceeding--

Gravit enim me, atque contriſtat, &c. Ep.* 44. (ad Confeſſ. Rom.)

(To act any thing) againſt the Sacrament of Divine ordination and Catholick unity, once delivered, makes an adulterate and contrary head out of the Church.

Contra Sacramentum ſemel traditum Divinæ diſpoſitionis & Catholicæ unitatis adulterum & contrarium caput extra Eccleſiam facit. Cyprian. Epiſt. 42. (ad Cornel.)

----Forſaking the Lord's Prieſts contrary to the Evangelical diſcipline; a new Tradition of a ſacrilegious Inſtitution ſtarts up.

—Relictis Domini Sacerdotibus contra Evangelicam diſciplinam nova Traditio ſacrilegæ Inſtitutionis exſurgat.— Cypr. Ep. 40. (Plebi ſuæ.)

There is one God and one Chriſt, and one Church, and one See founded upon Peter by the word of the Lord; beſides one Altar and one Prieſthood, another Altar cannot be erected nor a new Prieſthood ordained.

Deus unus eſt, & Chriſtus unus, & Eccleſia una, & Cathedra una ſuper Petrum Domini voce fundata; aliud Altare conſtituit, aut Sacerdotium novum fieri præter unum Altare, & unum Sacerdotium non poteſt. Ibid.

Hence were the Meletians rejected by the Church, for introducing Ordinations----

Hence was Aerius accounted a Heretick, for meaning to innovate in ſo grand a point of Diſcipline, as the ſubordination of Biſhops and Presbyters.

VIII. It is expedient that all Churches ſhould conform to each other in great matters of prudential Diſcipline, although not inſtituted or preſcribed by God: for this is a means of preſerving Peace, and is a Beauty or Harmony. For difference of Practice doth alienate Affections, eſpecially in common People.

So the Synod of Nice.

That all things may be alike ordered in every Dioceſe, it hath ſeemed good to the holy Synod, that men ſhould put up their Prayers to God ſtanding, (viz. between Eaſter and Whitſontide, and upon the Lord's-day.)

Ὑπὲρ τοῦ πάντα ἐν πάσῃ παροικίᾳ ὁμοίως παραφυλάττεσθαι, ἑστῶτας ἔδοξε τῇ ἁγίᾳ Συνόδῳ τὰς εὐχὰς ἀποδιδόναι τῷ Θεῷ. Can. 20.

Πρὸς τούτοις καὶ πάρεστι συνορᾶν, ὡς ἐν τηλικούτῳ πράγματι καὶ τοιαύτῃ θρησκείας ἑορτῇ διαφωνίαν ἄρχειν ἐστὶν ἀθέμιτον. Conſt. M. in Epiſt. ad Eccleſ. Euſeb. vita Conſtantini. 3. 18

The Church is like the World; for as the World doth conſiſt of men, all naturally ſubject to one King, Almighty God; all obliged to obſerve his Laws, declared by natural Light; all made of one bloud, and ſo Brethren; all endowed with common Reaſon; all bound to excerciſe good Offices of Juſtice and Humanity toward each other, to maintain Peace and Amity together; to further each other in the proſecution or attainment of thoſe good things which conduce to the Welfare and Security of this preſent Life: even ſo doth the Church conſiſt of perſons ſpiritually allied, profeſſing the ſame Faith, ſubject to the ſame Law and Government of Chriſt's heavenly Kingdom; bound to exerciſe Charity, and to maintain Peace toward each other, and to promote each others good in order to the future Happineſs in Heaven.

All thoſe kinds of Unity do plainly agree to the univerſal Church of Chriſt; but the Queſtion is, Whether the Church is alſo neceſſarily by the deſign and appointment of God to be in way of external policy under one ſingular Government or Juriſdiction of any kind; ſo as a Kingdom or Commonwealth are united under the Command of one Monarch or one Senate.

That the Church is capable of ſuch an Union, is not the Controverſie; that it is poſſible it ſhould be ſo united, (ſuppoſing it may happen that all Chriſtians may be reduced to one Nation, or one civil Regiment; or that ſeveral Nations ſpontaneouſly may confederate and combine themſelves into one Eccleſiaſtical Commonwealth, adminiſtred by the ſame Spiritul Rulers and Judges according to the ſame Laws,) I do not queſtion; that when in a manner all Chriſtendom did conſiſt of Subjects to the Roman Empire, the Church then did arrive near ſuch an Unity, I do not at preſent conteſt; but that ſuch an Union of all Chriſtians is neceſſary, or that it was ever inſtituted by Chriſt, I cannot grant; and for my refuſal of that opinion, I ſhall aſſign divers Reaſons.

1. This being a Point of great conſideration, and trenching upon Practice, which every one were concerned to know; and there being frequent occaſions to declare it; yet the Holy Scripture doth no where expreſs or intimate ſuch a kind Unity; which is a ſufficient Proof, that it hath no firm ground. We may ſay of it as Saint Auſtin ſaith of the Church it ſelf, I will not that the Holy Church be demonſtrated from humane reaſonings, but the Divine Oracles.

Nolo humanis documentis, ſed Divinis Oraculis Sanctam Eccleſiam demonſtrari. Aug. de Unit. c. 3.

Saint Paul particularly, in divers Epiſtles, deſignedly treating about the Unity of the Church, (together with other Points of Doctrine neighbouring thereon,) and amply deſcribing it, doth not yet imply any ſuch Unity then extant, or deſigned to be.

Eph. 4.
1 Cor 12.
Rom. 12.
Gal. 3. 28.

He doth mention and urge the Unity of Spirit, of Faith, of Charity, of Peace, of Relation to our Lord, of Communion in Devotions and Offices of Piety; but concerning any Union under one ſingular viſible Government or Polity he is ſilent: He ſaith, One Lord, one Faith, one Baptiſm; one God and Father of all: not one Monarch, or one Senate, or one Sanhedrin---which is a pregnant ſign, that none ſuch was then inſtituted; otherwiſe he could not have ſlipped over a Point ſo very material and pertinent to his Diſcourſe.

2. By the Apoſtolical Hiſtory it may appear, that the Apoſtles, in the Propagation of Chriſtianity, and founding of Chriſtian Societies, had no meaning, did take no care, to eſtabliſh any ſuch Polity.

They did reſort to ſeveral Places (whither Divine inſtinct, or reaſonable occaſion did carry them) where, by their Preaching, having convinced and converted a competent number of perſons to the embracing Chriſtian Doctrine, they did appoint Paſtours to inſtruct and edifie them, to adminiſter God's Worſhip and Service among them, to contain them in good order and peace, exhorting them to maintain good correſpondence of Charity and Peace with all good Chriſtians otherwhere; this is all we can ſee done by them.

Ὄχλον ἱκανόν. Act. 11.26.

Χειροτονήσαντες αὐτοῖς Πρεσβυτέρους κατ' Ἐκκλησίαν. Act. 14. 23.

3. The Fathers, in their ſet Treatiſes and in their incidental Diſcourſes about the Unity of the Church, (which was de facto, which ſhould be de jure in the Church,) do make it to conſiſt onely in thoſe Unions of Faith Charity, Peace, which we have deſcribed, not in this political Union.

The Roman Church gave this Reaſon why they could not admit Marcion into their Communion, they would not doe it without his Father's conſent, between whom and them there was one faith and one agreement of mind.

——μία γάρ ἐστιν ἡ πίστις καὶ μία ἡ ὁμόνοια Epiph. hær. 42.

Tertullian in his Apologetick deſcribing the Unity of the Church in his time, ſaith, We are one body by our Agreement in religion, our Unity of diſcipline, and our being in the ſame Covenant of hope.

Corpus ſumus de Conſcientia religionis & diſciplinæ Unitate, & ſpei Fœdere. Apol. 39.

And more exactly and largely in his Preſcriptions againſt Hereticks, the breakers of Unity. Therefore ſuch and ſo many Churches are but the ſame with the firſt Apoſtolical one, from which all are derived: Thus they become all firſt, all Apoſtolical; whilſt they maintain the ſame Unity; whilſt there are a Communion of peace, names of brotherhood and contributions of hoſpitality among them; the rights of which are kept up by no other means, but the one tradition of the ſame Myſtery.

Itaque tot ac tantæ Eccleſiæ una eſt illa ab Apoſtolis prima, ex qua omnes; ſic omnes primæ, & omnes Apoſtolicæ; dum unam omnes probant Unitatem; Communicatio pacis, & appellatio fraternitatis & conteſſeratio hoſpitalitatis; quæ jura non alia ratio regit, quàm ejuſdem Sacramenta una traditio. Tertul. Præſcript. cap. 20.

They and we have one Faith, one God, the ſame Chriſt, the ſame Hope, the ſame Baptiſm; in a word, we are but one Church.

Una nobis & illis fides, unus Deus idem Chriſtus, eadem Spes, eadem lavacri Sacramenta; ſemel dixerim una Eccleſia ſumus. Tert. de Virg. vel. 2

And Conſtantine the Great in his Epiſtle to the Churches:

(Our Saviour) would have his Catholick Church to be one: the members of which, though they be divided into many and different places, are yet cheriſht by one Spirit, that is, by the will of God.

Καὶ μίαν εἶναι τὴν Καθολικὴν αὐτοῦ Ἐκκλησίαν βεβούληται· ἧς εἰ καὶ τὰ μάλιστα εἰς πολλοὺς καὶ διαφόρους τόπους τὰ μέρη διῄρηται, ἀλλ' ὅμως ἑνὶ Πνεύματι τουτέστι τῷ Θείῳ βουλήματι θάλπεται. Conſt. M. in Ep. ad Eccleſ. Euſeb. vit. Conſt. 3. 18.

And Gregory the Great.—

Our Head which is Chriſt, would therefore have us be his members, that by the joints of Charity and Faith he might make us one body in himſelf.

Caput noſtrum, quod Chriſtus eſt, ad hoc ſua eſſe membra nos voluit, ut per compagem charitatis & fidei unum nos in ſe corpus efficeret. Greg. M Ep. 7. 111.

Clem. Alex. defineth the Church;

A people gathered together out of Jews and Gentiles into one Faith, by the giving of the Teſtaments fitted into Unity of Faith.

Ὁ ἐκ νόμου καὶ ἐξ ἐθνῶν εἰς τὴν μίαν Πίστιν συναγόμενος λαός. Strom. 6. init. τῇ κατὰ τὰς Διαθήκας δόσει σκευαζόμενον εἰς Ἑνότητα τῆς Πίστεως. Str. 7. (p. 516.)

This one Church therefore partakes of the nature of Unity, which Hereſies violently endeavour to divide into many; and therefore we affirm the ancient and Catholick Church, whether we reſpect its conſtitution or our conception of it, its beginning or its excellency, to be but one; which into the belief of that one Creed which is agreeable to its own peculiar Teſtaments, or rather to that one and the ſame Teſtament, in times however different, by the will of one and the ſame God through one and the ſame Lord, doth unite and Combine together all thoſe who are before ordained, whom God hath predeſtinated, as knowing that they would be juſt perſons, before the foundation of the world.

Τῇ γοῦν τοῦ Ἑνὸς φύσει συγκληροῦται Ἐκκλησία ἡ μία, ἣν εἰς πολλὰς κατατέμνειν βιάζονται αἱρέσεις· κατά τε οὖν ὑπόστασιν, κατά τε ἐπίνοιαν, κατά τε ἀρχὴν, (principium,) κατά τε ἐξοχὴν, μόνην εἶναι φαμεν τὴν ἀρχαίαν καὶ Καθολικὴν Ἐκκλησίαν εἰς Ἑνότητα Πίστεως μιᾶς τῆς κτ τὰς οἰκείας Διαθήκας, μᾶλλον δὲ κτ τὴν διαθήκην τὴν μίαν διαφόροις τοῖς χρόνοις Ἑνὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ τῷ βουλήματι δι' Ἑνὸς τοῦ Κυρίου συνάγουσαν τοὺς ἤδη κατατεταγμένους, οὓς προώρισεν, δικαίους ἐσομένους πρὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου ἐγνωκώς. Strom. 7. (p. 549.)

Many Paſſages in the Fathers, applicable to this Point, we have alledged in the foregoing Diſcourſes.

Catholicam facit ſimplex & verus intellectus, intelligere ſingulare, ac veriſſimum Sacramentum, & Unitas animorum. Opt I. (p 14.)

Eccleſia non parietibus conſiſtit, ſed in dogmatum veritate. &c. Hier Pſ. 133.

4. The Conſtitution of ſuch an Unity doth involve the veſting ſome Perſon or ſome number of Perſons with a Sovereign Authority (ſubordinate to our Lord) to be managed in a certain manner, either abſolutely according to pleaſure, or limitedly according to certain Rules preſcribed to it.

But that there was ever any ſuch Authority conſtituted, or any Rules Preſcribed to it by our Lord or his Apoſtles doth not appear, and there are divers reaſonable preſumptions againſt it.

It is reaſonable that whoever claimeth ſuch Authority, ſhould for aſſuring his Title ſhew Patents of his Commiſſion, manifeſtly expreſſing it; how otherwiſe can he juſtly demand Obedience, or any with ſatisfaction yield thereto?

It was juſt that the Inſtitution of ſo great Authority ſhould be fortified with an undoubted Charter, that its Right might be apparent, and the Duty of Subjection might be certain.

If any ſuch Authority had been granted by God, in all likelihood it would have been clearly mentioned in Scripture; it being a matter of high importance among the eſtabliſhments of Chriſtianity, conducing to great effects, and grounding much duty. Eſpecially conſidering that

There is in Scripture frequent occaſion of mentioning it; in way of Hiſtory, touching the uſe of it (the acts of Sovereign Power affording chief matter to the Hiſtory of any Society) in way of Direction to thoſe Governours how to manage it; in way of Exhortation to Inferiours how to behave themſelves in regard to it; in way of commending the Advantages which attend it; it is therefore ſtrange that its mention is ſo balkt.

The Apoſtles do often ſpeak concerning Eccleſiaſtical Affairs of all natures, concerning the Decent adminiſtration of things, concerning preſervation of Order and Peace, concerning the furtherance of Edification, concerning the Prevention and Removal of Hereſies, Schiſms, Factions, Diſorders; upon any of which occaſions it is marvellous that they ſhould not touch that Conſtitution, which was the proper means appointed for maintenance of Truth, Order, Peace, Decency, Edification, and all ſuch Purpoſes, for remedy of all contrary Miſchiefs.

There are mentioned divers Schiſms and Diſſenſions, the which the Apoſtles did ſtrive by inſtruction and perſuaſion to remove; in which Caſes, ſuppoſing ſuch an Authority in being, it is a wonder that they do not mind the Parties diſſenting of having recourſe thereto for deciſion of their Cauſes, that they do not exhort them to a Submiſſion thereto, that they do not reprove them for declining ſuch a Remedy.

It is alſo ſtrange, that no mention is made of any appeal made by any of the diſſenting Parties to the Judgment of ſuch Authority.

Indeed, if ſuch an Authority had then been avowed by the Chriſtian Churches, it is hardly conceivable that any Schiſms could ſubſiſt, there being ſo powerfull a Remedy againſt them; then notably viſible and moſt effectual, becauſe of its freſh Inſtitution, before it was darkned or weakned by Age.

Whereas the Apoſtolical Writings do inculcate our Subjection to one Lord in Heaven, it is much they ſhould never conſider his Vicegerent, or Vicegerents, upon Earth; notifying and preſſing the Duties of Obedience and Reverence toward them.

There are indeed Exhortations to honour the Elders, and to obey the Guides of particular Churches; but the Honour and Obedience due to thoſe Paramount Authorites, or Univerſal Governours, is paſſed over in dead ſilence, as if no ſuch thing had been thought of.

They do expreſly avow the ſecular Pre-eminence, and preſs Submiſſion to the Emperour as Supreme; why do they not likewiſe mention this no leſs conſiderable Eccleſiaſtical Supremacy, or enjoin Obebience thereto? why Honour the King, and be ſubject to Principalities ſo often, but Honour the ſpiritual Prince or Senate doth never occur?

Rom. 13. 1. —— Tit. 3. 1.
1 Pet. 2. 13, 17. 1 Tim. 1. 2.

If there had been any ſuch Authority, there would probably have been ſome intimation concerning the Perſons in whom it was ſetled, concerning the Place of their reſidence, concerning the Manner of its being conveyed, (by Election, Succeſſion, or otherwiſe.)

Probably the Perſons would have ſome proper Name, Title or Character to diſtinguiſh them from inferiour Governours; that to the Place ſome mark of Pre-eminence would have been affixed.

It is not unlikely, that ſomewhere ſome Rules or Directions would have been preſcribed for the managment of ſo high a Truſt, for preventing Miſcarriages and Abuſes to which it is notoriouſly liable.

It would have been declared Abſolute, or the Limits of it would have been determined, to prevent its enſlaving God's heritage.

But of theſe things in the Apoſtolical Writings, or in any near thoſe times, there doth not appear any footſtep or pregnant intimation.

There hath never to this day been any place but one (namely Rome) which hath pretended to be the Seat of ſuch an Authority; the Plea whereof we largely have examined.

At preſent we ſhall onely obſerve, that before the Roman Church was founded, there were Churches otherwhere; there was a great Church at Jeruſalem (which indeed was the Mother of all Churches, and was by the Fathers ſo ſtyled, however Rome now arrogates to her ſelf that Title.) There were iſſuing from that Mother a fair Offſpring of Churches (thoſe of Judæa, of Galilæa, of Samaria, of Syria and Cilicia, of divers

Act. 2. 41, 47. 4. 4. 6. 1. 8. 1;
Ἐπληθύνετο ἀριθμὸς τῶν μαθητῶν ἐν Ἱερουσαλὴμ σφόδρα. Act. 6. 7.
Μήτηρ ἁπασῶν τῶν Ἐκκλησιῶν, ἡ ἐν Ἱεροσολύμοις. Conc. Conſt. in Synod. Ep. Theod. 5. 9.

Act. 9. 31. 15. 41. 11. 19. 8. 1. 1 Cor. 16. 1, 19. Rom. 16. 4. Valeſ. in Euſeb. 2. 16. Gal. 1. 18, 19. 2. 1, 9, 11.

divers other places) before there was any Church at Rome, or that Saint Peter did come thither; which was at leaſt divers years after our Lord's Aſcenſion. Saint Paul was converted ---- after five years he went to Hieruſalem, then Saint Peter was there; after fourteen years thence he went to Hieruſalem again, and then Saint Peter was there; after that, he met with Saint Peter at Antioch. Where then was this Authority ſeated? How then did the political Unity of the Church ſubſiſt? Was the Seat of the Sovereign Authority firſt reſident at Jeruſalem, when Saint Peter preached there? did it walk thence to Antiochia, fixing it ſelf there for ſeven years? Was it thence tranſlated to Rome, and ſetled there ever ſince? Did this roving and inconſtancy become it?

5. The primitive State of the Church did not well comport with ſuch an Unity.

For Chriſtian Churches were founded in diſtant places, as the Apoſtles did find opportunity, or received direction to found them; which therefore could not, without extreme inconvenience, have reſort or reference to one Authority, any where fixed.

Each Church therefore ſeparately did order its own Affairs, without recourſe to others, except for charitable Advice or Relief in caſes of extraordinary difficulty or urgent need.

Each Church was endowed with a perfect Liberty and a full Authority, without dependence or ſubordination to others, to govern its own Members, to manage its own Affairs, to decide Controverſies and Cauſes incident among themſelves, without allowing Appeals, or rendring Accounts to others.

Apoc 2. & 3. 1 Cor. 14. 40. 1 Theſſ. 5. 14. 1 Cor. 5. 12. 6. 1.

This appeareth by the Apoſtolical Writings of Saint Paul and Saint John to ſingle Churches; wherein they are ſuppoſed able to exerciſe ſpiritual Power for eſtabliſhing Decency, removing Diſorders, correcting Offences, deciding Cauſes, &c.

6. This Αὐτονομία, and Liberty of Churches, doth appear to have long continued in practice inviolate; although tempered and modelled in accommodation to the circumſtances of place and time.

It is true, that if any Church did notoriouſly forſake the Truth, or commit Diſorder in any kind, other Churches did ſometime take upon them (as the Caſe did move) to warn, adviſe, reprove it, and to declare againſt its proceedings, as prejudicial not onely to the welfare of that Church, but to the common intereſts of Truth and Peace; but this was not in way of Commanding Authority, but of fraternal Solicitude; or of that Liberty which Equity and Prudence do allow to Equals in regard to common good: So did the Roman Church interpoſe in reclaiming the Church of Corinth from its Diſorders and Seditions: So did Saint Cyprian and Saint Denys of Alex. meddle in the Affairs of the Roman Church, exhorting Novatian aud his adherents to return to the Peace of their Church.

Iren. 3. c. 2.

It is alſo true, that the Biſhops of ſeveral adjacent Churches did uſe to meet upon Emergencies (concerning the maintenance of Truth, Order and Peace; concerning Settlement and Approbation of Paſtours, &c.) to conſult and conclude upon Expedients for attaining ſuch Ends; this probably they did at firſt in a free way, without rule, according to occaſion, as Prudence ſuggeſted; but afterwards, by confederation and conſent, thoſe Conventions were formed into method, and regulated by certain Orders eſtabliſhed by conſent, whence did ariſe an Eccleſiaſtical Unity of Government, within certain Precincts; much like that of the United States in the Netherlands; the which courſe was very prudential, and uſefull for perſerving the Truth of Religion and Unity of Faith againſt heretical Devices ſpringing up in that free age; for maintaining Concord and good Correſpondence among Chriſtans, together with an Harmony in Manners and Diſcipline; for that otherwiſe Chriſtendom would have been ſhattered and crumbled into numberleſs Parties, diſcordant in Opinion and Practice; and conſequently alienated in Affection, which inevitably among moſt men doth follow Difference of Opinion and Manners; ſo that in ſhort time it would not have appeared what Chriſtianity was, and conſequently the Religion, being overgrown with Differences and Diſcords, muſt have periſhed.

Thus in the caſe, about admitting the Lapſi to Communion, Saint Cyprian relates, when the perſecution [of Decius] ceaſed, ſo that leave was now given us to meet in one place together, a conſiderable number of Biſhops whom their own faith and God's protection had preſerved ſound and entire [from the late Apoſtaſie and Perſecution] being aſſembled, we deliberated of the compoſition of the matter with wholſome moderation, &c.

Perſecutione ſopitâ, cùm data eſſet facultas in unum conveniendi, copioſus Epiſcoporum numerus, quos integros & incolumes fides ſua ac Domini tutela protexit, in unum convenimus, & ſcripturis diu ex utraque parte prolatis, temperamentum ſalubri moderatione libravimus, &c. Cypr. Ep. 52. (ad Antonian.)

Which thing alſo Agrippinus of bleſſed memory with his other Fellow-biſhops who then governed the Church of Chriſt in the African Province and in Numedia did eſtabliſh; and by the well-weighed examination of the common advice of them all together confirmed it.

Quod quidem & Agrippinus bonæ memoriæ vir cum cæteris Co-epiſcopis ſuis qui illo tempore Provincia. Africa & Numedia Eccleſiam Domini gurbernabant, ſtatuit & librato concilii communis examine firmavit. Cypr. Epiſt. 71. ad Quint)

Thus it was the cuſtome in the Churches of Aſia, as Fi[illegible]ilian telleth us in thoſe words:

Upon which occaſion it neceſſarily happens, that every year we the Elders and Rulers do come together to regulate thoſe things which are committed to our care; that if there ſhould be any things of greater moment, by common advice they be determined——

Qua ex cauſa neceſſariò apud nos fit, ut per ſingulos annos Seniores & Præpoſiti in unum conveniamus, ad diſponenda ea quæ curæ noſtræ commiſſa ſunt; ut ſi qua graviora ſunt, communi conſilio dirigantur—— Cypr. Ep. 75.

Yet whi[illegible] things went thus, in order to common Truth and Peace; every Church in more private matters, touching its own particular ſtate, did retain its Liberty and Authority, without being ſubject or accountable to any but the common Lord; in ſuch caſes even Synods of Biſhops did not think it proper or juſt for them to interpoſe, to the prejudice of that Liberty and Power which derived from a higher Source.

Supereſt ut de hac ipſa re ſinguli quid. ſentiamus, proferamus, neminem judicantes aut à jure communionis aliquem ſi diverſum ſenſerit amoventes,——&c. Vid. Conc. Carthag. apud Cypr. p. 399. Vid. Syn. Ant. Can. 9.

Theſe things are very apparent, as by the courſe of Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, ſo particularly in that moſt pretious Monument of Antiquity, St. Cyprian's Epiſtles; by which it is moſt evident, that in thoſe times every Biſhop or Paſtour was conceived to have a double relation or capacity; one toward his own Flock, another toward the whole Flock: One toward his own Flock, by virtue of which, * taking advice of his Presbyters, together with the conſcience of his People aſſiſting, did order all things tending to particular Edification, Order Peace, Reformation, Cenſure, &c. without fear of being troubled by Appeals, or being liable to give any account but to his own Lord, whoſe Vicegerent he was.

* Vide Epiſt. 28. 39. 14. 18: Sub Populi aſſiſtentis conſcientiâ Cypr. Epiſt. 78.

— Actum ſuum diſponit, & dirigit unuſquiſque Epiſcopus, rationem propoſiti ſui Domino redditurus. Cypr. Ep. 52. Every Biſhop ordereth and directeth his own acts, being to render an account of his purpoſe to the Lord.

Cùm ſtatutum ſit omnibus nobis ac æquum ſit pariter ac juſtum, ut uniuſcujuſque cauſa illic audiatur, ubi eſt crimen admiſſum; & ſingulis Paſtoribus portio Gregis ſit adſcripta, quam regat unuſquiſque Præpoſitus rationem actûs ſui Domino redditurus. Cypr. Ep. 55. ad——

Since it is ordained by us all, and it is likewiſe juſt and equal that every man's cauſe ſhould be there judged where the crime is committed, and to each Paſtour a portion of the Flock is aſſigned, which is to rule and govern, being to give an account of his act to the Lord.

Qua in re nec nos vim cuiquam facimus, nec legem damus, cùm habeat in Eccleſiæ adminiſtratione voluntatis ſuæ liberum arbitrium unuſquiſque Præpoſitus, rationem actûs ſui Domino redditurus. Cypr. Ep. 72. ad Steph. P. Vide Ep. 72. p. 186. Ep. 76. p. 212.

In which matter neither do we offer violence to any man, or preſcribe any Law, ſince every Biſhop hath in the government of his Church the free power of his will, being to render an account of his own act unto the Lord.

Another toward the whole Church, in behalf of his People; upon account whereof he did (according to occaſion or order) apply himſelf to confer with other Biſhops for preſervation of the common Truth and Peace, when they could not otherwiſe be well upheld, than by the joint conſpiring of the Paſtours of divers Churches.

So that the Caſe of Biſhops was like to that of Princes; each of whom hath a free Superintendence in his own Territory, but for to uphold Juſtice and Peace in the World, or between adjacent Nations the entercourſe of ſeveral Princes is needfull.

The Peace of the Church was preſerved by communion of all Parts together, not by the Subjection of the reſt to one Part.

7. This political Unity doth not well accord with the nature and genius of the Evangelical diſpenſation.

Our Saviour affirmed, that his Kingdom is not of this World; and Joh. 18. 36. St. Paul telleth us, that it conſiſteth in a Spiritual influence upon the Rom. 14. 17. Souls of men; producing in them Virtue, Spiritual Joy and Peace.

Gal. 4. 3, 9. It diſavoweth and diſcountenanceth the elements of the World, by
Col. 2. 20. which worldly deſigns are carried on, and worldly frames ſuſtained.

1 Pet. 2. 1. It requireth not to be managed by politick artifices or fleſhly wiſdom, but by Simplicity, Sincerity, Plain-dealing: as every Subject of it muſt lay aſide all guile and diſſimulation, ſo eſpecially the Officers 2 Cor. 1. 12. of it muſt doe ſo, in conformity to the Apoſtles, who had their con-
2 Cor. 4. 2. verſation in the world (and proſecuted their deſign) in ſimplicity and god-
2. 17 (καπηλ.) 1 Theſſ. 2. 3, 5. ly ſincerity, not with fleſhly wiſdom, but by the grace of God; not walking in craftineſs, or handling the word of God deceitfully; &c.

It needeth not to be ſupported or enlarged by wealth and pomp,
1 Cor. 1. 27. or by compulſive force and violence; for God hath choſen the fooliſh
Jam. 2. 5. things of the world to confound the wiſe; and the weak things of the world to confound the mighty, and baſe, deſpicable things, &c. that no fleſh ſhould glory in his preſence.

2 Cor. 10. 4. And, The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God, &c.

It diſcountenanceth the impoſition of new Laws and Precepts, beſide thoſe which God hath joined, or which are neceſſary for or-Matt. 15. 9. der and edification; derogating from the Liberty of Chriſtians and Coloſ. 2. 8, 20, 21. from the Simplicity of our Religion.

Gal. 4. 10. The Government of the Chriſtian ſtate is repreſented purely ſpiritual; adminiſtred by meek perſuaſion, not by imperious awe;
as an humble miniſtery, not as ſtately domination; for the Apoſtles 2 Cor. 1. 24. themſelves did not Lord it over mens faith, but did co-operate to their
2 Cor. 4. 5. joy; they did not preach themſelves, but Chriſt Jeſus to be our Lord; and themſelves their ſervants for Jeſus.

It is expreſly forbidden to them, to domineer over God's people

They are to be qualified with Gentleneſs and Patience; they are forbidden to ſtrive, and enjoyned to be gentle toward all, apt to teach, patient, in meekneſs inſtructing thoſe that oppoſe themſelves.

They are to convince, to rebuke, to exhort with all long-ſuffering and doctrine.

1 Pet. 5. 3. Matt. 20, 25, 26. 2 Cor. 6. 4. 1 Tim. 3. 3. Tit. 2. 2. 2 Tim. 2. 24, 25. Chryſ. Iſid.

2 Tim. 4. 2 Epiſcopus præeſt volentibus, non nolentibus Hier. Ep. 3. (ad Nepot.)

They are furniſhed with no arms beſide the divine Panoply; they bear no ſword, but that of the Spirit; which is the word of God, —— they may teach, reprove, —— they cannot compell ——

They are not to be entangled in the cares of this life.

Ἀναλάβετε τ̃ πανοπλίαν Θεȣ̃. Eph. 6. 13. 6. 17. 2 Tim. 2. 4.

Μάλιστα γὰρ ἁπάντων χριστιανοῖς οὐκ ἐφεῖται πρὸς βίαν ἐπανορθοῦν τὰ τῶν ἁμαρτανόντων πταίσματα —— Chryſ. de Sacerd. 2.

Ἐνταῦθα οὐ βιαζόμενον, ἀλλὰ πείθοντα δεῖ ποιεῖν ἀμείνω τ̃ πιστόν.

But ſuppoſing the Church was deſigned to be one in this manner of political reigment, it muſt be quite another thing, nearly reſembling a worldly ſtate, yea in effect ſoon reſolving it ſelf into ſuch an one; ſuppoſing, as is now pretended, that its managment is committed to an Eccleſiaſtical Monarch, it muſt become a worldly Kingdom; for ſuch a Polity could not be upheld without applying the ſame means and engines, without practiſing the ſame methods and arts, whereby ſecular Governments are maintained.

Ἕτερόν τι πάσχει τὰς πολιτικὰς ἀρχὰς οἱ ἄρχοντες. Ariſt. Pol. IV. 15.

Its Majeſty muſt be ſupported by conſpicuous Pomp and Phantaſtry.

Its Dignity and Power muſt be ſupported by Wealth; which it muſt corrade and accumulate by large Incomes, by exaction of Tributes and Taxes.

It muſt exert Authority in enacting of Laws for keeping its State in order, and ſecuring its Intereſts, backed with Rewards and Pains; eſpecially conſidering, its Title being ſo dark and grounded on no clear warrant, many always will conteſt it.

It muſt apply Conſtraint and Force, for procuring Obedience, and correcting Tranſgreſſion.

It muſt have Guards to preſerve its Safety and Authority.

It muſt be engaged in Wars, to defend its ſelf and make good its Intereſts.

It muſt uſe Subtilty and Artifice, for promoting its Intereſts, and countermine the Policies of adverſaries.

It muſt erect Judicatories, and muſt decide Cauſes with Formality of legal proceſs; whence tedious Suits, crafty Pleadings, Quirks of Law and Pettifoggeries, Fees and Charges, Extortion and Barretry, &c. will neceſſarily creep in.

Is modus qui frequentatur execrabiles planè & qui non dico Eccleſiam, ſed nec forum deceret, &c. Bern. de Conſid. l. 10. Attendens itaque S. Synodus, quòd ſpiritualia ſine carnalibus ſuſtineri nequeant. Syn. Baſſ. Seſſ. 42. p. 108.

All which things do much diſagree from the original conſtitution and deſign of the Chriſtian Church, which is averſe from pomp, doth reject domination, doth not require craft, wealth or force to maintain it; but did at firſt, and may ſubſiſt without any ſuch means.

Omnis pulchritudo filiæ Regis intrinſecus. Aug. Ep. 68.

I do not ſay, that an Eccleſiaſtical Society may not lawfully, for its ſupport, uſe Power, Policy, Wealth, in ſome meaſure to uphold or defend it ſelf; but that a Conſtitution needing ſuch things is Divine; or that ſo far as it doth uſe them, it is no more than Humane.

Thus in effect we ſee that it hath ſucceeded, from the Pretence of this Unity; the which hath indeed transformed the Church into a mere worldly ſtate; wherein the Monarch beareth the garb of an Emperour, in external ſplendor ſurpaſſing all worldly Princes; crowned with a triple Crown.

One Crown doth ſerve an Emperour, but he muſt have a triple: to kiſs the hands of a King is a ſufficient reſpect, but you cannot ſalute him without kiſſing his bleſſed feet.

He aſſumeth the moſt haughty Titles of, Our moſt holy Lord, the Vicar general of Chriſt, &c. and he ſuffereth men to call him the Monarch of Kings, &c.

That which Seneca did take for a piece of enormous Pride in Caligula. De Benef. 2. 12.

He hath Reſpects paid him, like to which no Potentate doth aſſume, (having his Feet kiſſed, riding upon the backs of men, letting Princes hold his Stirrup and lead his Horſe.)

Cardin. vid. Uſſ. p. 103.

He hath a Court and is attended with a traine of Courtiers ſurpaſſing in State and claiming Precedence to the Peers of any Kingdom.

He is encompaſſed with armed Guards. Switzers.

He hath a vaſt Revenue, ſupplied by Tributes and Impoſts, ſore and grievous; the exaction which hath made divers Nations of Chriſtendom to groan moſt lamentably.

He hath raiſed numberleſs Wars and Commotions for the promotion and advancement of his Intereſts.

He adminiſtreth things with all depth of Policy, to advance his Deſigns.

Sub Mortali.
He impoſes rigorous Oaths of Fealty and Obedience.

He hath enacted Volumes of Laws and Decrees to which Odedience is exacted with rigour and forcible conſtraint.

He draweth griſt from all Parts to his courts of Judgment, wherein all formalities of ſuſpence, all the tricks of ſqueezing money, &c. are practiſed, to the great trouble and charge of Parties concerned.

Briefly, it is plain, that he doth exerciſe the proudeſt, mightieſt, ſubtleſt Domination that ever was over Chriſtians.

Exaltatio, & inflatio, & arrogans ac ſuperba jactatio, non de Chriſti magiſterio, qui humilitatem docet, ſed de Antichriſti ſpiritu naſcitur. Cypr. Ep. 55. (ad P. Cornel.)

8 The Union of the whole Church in one Body, under one Government or Sovereign Authority, would be inconvenient and hurtfull; prejudicial to the main deſigns of Chriſtianity; deſtructive to the Welfare and Peace of Mankind in many reſpects.

This we have ſhewed particularly concerning the Pretence of the Papacy; and thoſe Diſcourſes being applicable to any like Univerſal Authority, (perhaps with more advantage, Monarchy being leſs ſubject to abuſe than other ways of Government) I ſhall forbear to ſay more.

9. Such an Union is of no need, would be of ſmall uſe, or would do little good; in balance to the great Miſchiefs and Inconveniences which it would produce.

This point alſo we have declared, in regard to the Papacy; and we might ſay the ſame concerning any other like Authority ſubſtituted thereto.

Such a Connexion of Churches it is not any-wiſe needfull or expedient to the Deſign of Chriſtianity; which is to reduce Mankind to the Knowledge, Love and Reverence of God; to a juſt and loving Converſation together; to the practice of Sobriety, Temperance, Purity, Meekneſs, and all other Virtues; all which things may be compaſſed without forming men into ſuch a policy. Tit. 2. 12.

It is expedient there ſhould be particular Societies in which men may concur in worſhiping God, and promoting that deſign by inſtructing and provoking one another to good practice, in a regular, decent and orderly way.

It is convenient that the Subjects of each temporal Sovereignty ſhould live as in a civil, ſo in a ſpiritual Uniformity, in order to the preſervation of Goodwill and Peace among them (for that Neighbours differing in opinion and faſhions of practice will be apt to contend each for his way, and thence to diſaffect one another) for the Beauty and pleaſant harmony of agreement in Divine things, for the more commodious ſuccour and defence of Truth and Piety by unanimous concurrence.

But that all the World ſhould be ſo joined is needleſs; and will be apt to produce more miſchief than benefit.

11. The Church in the Scripture ſenſe hath ever continued One; and will ever continue ſo; notwithſtanding that it hath not had this political Unity.

12. It is in fact apparent, that Churches have not been thus united, which yet have continued Catholick and Chriſtian.

It were great, no leſs folly than uncharitableneſs to ſay, that the Greek Church hath been none.

There is no Church that hath in effect leſs reaſon than that of Rome to preſcribe to others.

13. The reaſons alledged in proof of ſuch an Unity are inſufficient and inconcluding; the which (with great diligence, although not with like perſpicuity) advanced by a late Divine of great repute, and collected out of his Writings with ſome care, are thoſe which briefly propoſed do follow; together with Anſwers declaring their invalidity.

Arg. I. The name Church is attributed to the whole body of Chriſtians; which implieth Unity. Epil. p. 38. Lat. p. 114.

Anſw. This indeed doth imply an Unity of the Church, but determineth not the kind or ground thereof: there being ſeveral kinds of Unity; one of thoſe which we have touched, or ſeveral, or all of them may ſuffice to ground that comprehenſive Appellation Arg. II. Our Creeds do import the belief of ſuch an Unity; for in the Apoſtolical we profeſs to believe the Holy Catholick Church; in the Conſtantipolitan, the Holy Catholick and Apoſtolick Church. Epil. Lat. 144.

Anſw. 1. The moſt ancient Summaries of Chriſtian Faith, extant in the firſt Fathers, (Irenæus, Tertullian, Cyprian, &c.) do not contain this Point. Iren. Tert. Cypr. Conc. Nic.

The word Catholick was not originally in the Apoſtolical (or Roman) Creed, but was added after Ruffin in Saint Auſtin's time.

This Article was inſerted into the Creeds upon the riſe of Hereſies and Schiſms to diſcountenance and diſengage from them.

Anſw. 2. We do avow a Catholick Church in many reſpects One; wherefore not the Unity of the Church, but the Kind and Manner of Unity being in queſtion, the Creed doth not oppoſe what we ſay, nor can with reaſon be alledged for the ſpecial kind of Unity which is pretended.

Anſw. 3. That the Unity mentioned in the Conſtantinopolitan Creed is ſuch as our Adverſaries contend for, of external Policy, is precariouſly aſſumed, and relieth onely upon their interpretation obtruded on us.

Anſw. 4. The genuine meaning of that Article may reaſonably be deemed this; That we profeſs our adhering to the Body of Chriſtians, which diffuſed over the World doth retain the Faith taught, the Diſcipline ſetled, the Practices appointed by our Lord and his Apoſtles; that we maintain general Charity toward all good Chriſtians, that we are ready to entertain communion in Holy Offices with all ſuch; that we are willing to obſerve the Laws and Orders eſtabliſhed by Authority or Conſent of the Churches, for maintenance of Truth, Order and Peace: that we renounce all heretical doctrines, all diſorderly practices, all conſpiracy with any factious combinations of people.

Παρασυναγωγάς.

Anſw. 5. That this is the meaning of the Article, may ſufficiently appear from the reaſon and occaſion of introducing it; which was to ſecure the Truth of Chriſtian Doctrine, the Authority of Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, and the common Peace of the Church; according to the Diſcourſes and Arguments of the Fathers, (Irenæus, Tertullian, St. Auſtin, Vincentius Lirinenſis,) the which do plainly countenance our Interpretation.

Anſw. 6. It is not reaſonable to interpret the Article ſo as will not conſiſt with the ſtate of the Church in the Apoſtolical and moſt primitive ages, when evidently there was no ſuch a political Conjunction of Chriſtians.

Ep. p. 40.
Lat. p. 144, 151.

Arg. III. The Apoſtles delivered one Rule of Faith to all Churches, the imbracing and profeſſing whereof, celebrated in Baptiſm, was a neceſſary condition to the admiſſion into the Church, and to continuance therein; therefore Chriſtians are combined together in one political Body.

Anſw. 1. The Conſequence is very weak; for from the Antecedent it can onely be inferred, that (according to the Sentiment of the Ancients,) all Chriſtians ſhould conſent in one Faith; which Unity we avow; and who denieth?

Anſw. 2. By like reaſon all Mankind muſt be united in one political Body; becauſe all men are bound to agree in what the Light of nature diſcovereth to be true and good; or becauſe the Principles of natural Religion, Juſtice and Humanity are common to all.

Epil. p. 37, 49.
Lat. p. 153.
p. 118.
Leges ferre.
Lat. p. 171.
Lat. p. 54.

Arg. IV. God hath granted to the Church certain Powers and Rights, as Jura Majeſtatis; namely, the Power of the Keys, (to admit into, to exclude from the Kingdom of Heaven,) a Power to enact Laws, (for maintenance of its Order and Peace, for its edification and Welfare:) a Power to correct and excommunicate Offenders; a Power to hold Aſſemblies for God's Service; a Power to ordain Governours and Paſtours.

Anſw. 1. Theſe Powers are granted to the Church, becauſe granted to each particular Church or diſtinct Society of Chriſtians; not to the whole as ſuch or diſtinct from the Parts.

Anſw. 2. It is evident that by virtue of ſuch Grants particular Churches do exerciſe thoſe Powers; and it is impoſſible to infer more from them than a Juſtification of their Practice.

Anſw. 3. St. Cyprian often from that common Grant doth infer the Right of exerciſing Diſcipline in each particular Church; which Inference would not be good, but upon our Suppoſition; nor indeed otherwiſe would any particular Church have ground for its Authority.

Anſw. 4. God hath granted the like Rights to all Princes and States; but doth it thence follow, that all Kingdoms and States muſt be united in one ſingle Regiment? the Conſequence is juſt the ſame as as in our Caſe.

Arg. V. All Churches were tied to obſerve the ſame Laws or Rules of Practice, the ſame Orders of Diſcipline and Cuſtomes; therefore all do make one Corporation.

Ep. p. 42,49. Lat. p. 151, 219.
1 Cor. 11. 16.

Anſw. 1. That all Churches are bound to obſerve the ſame Divine Inſtitutions, doth argue onely an Unity of relation to the ſame Heavenly King, or a ſpecifical Unity and Similitude of Policy, the which we do avow.

Anſw. 2. We do alſo acknowledge it convenient and decent, that all Churches in principal Obſervances, introduced by humane prudence, ſhould agree ſo near as may be; an Uniformity in ſuch things repreſenting and preſerving Unity of Faith, of Charity, of Peace.

Whence the Governours of the primitive Church did endeavour ſuch an Uniformity; as the Fathers of Nice profeſs in the Canon forbidding of Genu-flexion on Lord's days, and in the days of Pentecoſt.

Ὑπὲρ τοῦ πάντα ἐν πάσῃ παροικίᾳ ὁμοίως φυλάττεσθαι. Conc. Nic. Can. 20. Vide de Paſchate.

Anſw. 3. Yet doth not ſuch an agreement, or attempt at it, infer a political Unity; no more than when all men, by virtue of a primitive general Tradition, were tied to offer Sacrifice and oblations to God; that Conſideration might argue all men to have been under the ſame Government: or no more than the uſual Agreement of neighbour Nations in divers faſhions doth conclude ſuch an Unity.

Anſw. 4. In divers Cuſtomes and Obſervances ſeveral Churches did vary, with allowance; which doth rather infer a difference of Polity, than agreement in other Obſervances doth argue an Unity thereof.

Vide Aug. Epiſt. 86. (ad Caſul.) Ep. 118. ad Jan. Cypr. Ep. 75. p. 198. Iren. apud Euſeb. 5. 24. Socr. 5. 22. 7. 19.——Cætera jam diſciplinæ & converſationis admittunt novitatem correctionis, hâc lege manente, &c. Tert. de Virg. vel Thorn. Lat. p. 219, P. Greg. I. in una fide nihil officit ſanctæ Eccleſiæ conſuetudo diverſa. P. Greg. I. Epiſt. 1, 41. P. Leo. IX. Epiſt. 1. cap. 29. Nil obſunt ſaluti credentium diverſæ pro loco & tempore conſuetudines, quando una fides per dilectionem operans bona quæ poteſt uni Deo commendat omnes. P. Nic. I. Ep. 6. De conſuetudinibus quidem, quem nobis opponere viſi eſtis, ſcribentes per diverſas Eccleſias diverſas eſſe conſuetudines, ſi illis canonica non reſiſtit auctoritas, pro qua eis obviare debeamus, nil judicamus vel eis reſiſtimus, &c.

Anſw. 5. St. Cyprian doth affirm, that in ſuch matters every Biſhop had a Power to uſe his own diſcretion, without being obliged to comply with others.

Cypr. Ep. 73.

Arg. VI. The Jewiſh Church was one Corporation; and in correſpondence thereto the Chriſtian Church ſhould be ſuch.

Ep. p. 39 Lat. p. 159.

Anſw. 1. As the Chriſtian Church doth in ſome things correſpond to that of the Jews, ſo it differeth in others, being deſigned to excel it: wherefore this Argumentation cannot be valid; and may as well be employed for our Opinion as againſt it.

Anſw. 2. In like manner it may be argued, that all Chriſtians ſhould annually meet in one place; that all Chriſtians ſhould have one Archprieſt on Earth; that we ſhould all be ſubject to one temporal Juriſdiction; that we ſhould all ſpeak one Language, &c.

Anſw. 3. There is a great difference in the caſe; for the Iſraelites were one ſmall Nation, which conveniently might be embodied; but the Chriſtian Church ſhould conſiſt of all Nations, which rendreth Correſpondence in this particular unpracticable, at leaſt without great inconvenience.

Euſ. Hiſt. 1. 4. Baron. App. 21.

Anſw. 4. Before the Law Chriſtian Religion, and conſequently a Chriſtian Church, did in ſubſtance ſubſiſt; but what Unity of Government was there then?

Anſw. 5. The Temporal Union of the Jews might only figure the ſpiritual Unity of Chriſtians in Faith, Charity and Peace.

Ep. p. 51--55. Lat. p. 157.

Arg. VII. All Eccleſiaſtical Power was derived from the ſame Fountains, by ſucceſſion from the Apoſtles; therefore the Church was one political Body.

Iren. 3. 3. Tert. Præſcr. 31, 32.

Anſw. 1. Thence we may rather infer, that Churches are not ſo united, becauſe the Founders of them were ſeveral Perſons endowed with co-ordinate and equal Power.

Anſ. 2. The Apoſtles did in ſeveral Churches conſtitute Biſhops, independent from each other; and the like may be now, either by ſucceſſion from thoſe, or by the conſtitutions of humane prudence, according to emergences of occaſion and circumſtances of things.

Anſ. 3. Divers Churches were Αὐτόνομοι· and all were ſo according to Saint Cyprian.

Anſ. 4. All temporal power is derived from Adam, and the Patriarchs, ancient Fathers of families; Doth it thence follow, that all the World muſt be under one ſecular Government?

Arg. VIII. All Churches did exerciſe a Power of Excommunication, or of excluding Hereticks, Schiſmaticks, diſorderly and ſcandalous people.

Ep. p. 59. p. 125. Lat. p. 185. p. 195.

Anſ. 1. Each Church was veſted with this Power; this doth therefore only infer a reſemblance of ſeveral Churches in Diſcipline; which we avow.

Anſ. 2. This argueth that all Churches took themſelves to be obliged to preſerve the ſame Faith, to exerciſe Charity and Peace, to maintain the like Holineſs of converſation; What then? Do we deny this.

Anſ. 3. All Kingdoms and States do puniſh Offenders againſt Reaſon and Juſtice, do baniſh ſeditious and diſſorderly perſons, do uphold the Principles and Practice of common Honeſt and Morality; Doth it thence follow that all nations muſt come under one civil Government?

Excommunication of other Churches is only a Declaration againſt the Deviation from Chriſtian Truth, or Piety, or Charity.

Communio ſuſpenſa reſtituitur demonſtranti cauſas, quibus id acciderat, jam eſſe deterſas, & profitenti conditiones pacis impletas. P. Inn. I. Ep. 16. (de Attico Conſtant. Ep.)

Ep. p. 69. Lat. p. 222.

Arg. IX. All Churches did maintain entercourſe and commerce with each other by formed, communicatory, pacificatory, commendatory, ſynodical Epiſtles.

Literæ formatæ. Optat. 2. Con. Milev. Can. 20.
communicatoriæ. Aug. Ep. 162, 163.
καὶ τὰ περὶ τούτου κοινωνικά. Euſeb. 7. 30. Cypr. Ep. 55, 67.
γράμματα συστατικά. Apoſt. Can. 12.
εἰρηνικαί. Conc. Chald. Can. 11.
συνοδικαί. Soz. 7. 11. Conc. VI. Act. 11. (p. 158, 198, 223.) Greg. M. (Ep. ——) P. Zach. Baron. A. 743. Sect. 29.

Significa plane nobis quis in locum Marciani Arelath fuerit ſubſtitutus, ut ſciamus ad quem fratres noſtros dirigere, & cui ſcribere debeamus. —— Cypr. Ep. 42, 67. ad P. Steph. (p. 161.) Ep. 55. (N.B. p. 113.)

Ἑνὸς σώματος ὄντος τῆς καθολικῆς Ἐκκλησίας, ἐντολῆς τε οὔσης ἐν ταῖς θείαις γραφαῖς τηρεῖν σύνδεσμον τῆς ὁμονοίας καὶ εἰρήνης, ἀκόλουθόν ἐστι γράφειν ἡμᾶς, καὶ σημαίνειν ἀλλήλοις τὰ παρ' ἑκάστοις γινόμενα, &c. Alexandri Epiſt. Socr. I. 6.

The Catholick Church being one body, there being moreover a Command in the Holy Scriptures, to preſerve the bond of Peace and Concord; hence it follows, that what things (happen to, or) are done by any of us, we ought to Write, and ſignifie to each other.

Anſw. 1. This doth ſignifie, that the Churches did by Admonition, Advice, &c. help one another in maintenance of the common Faith; did endeavour to preſerve Charity, Friendſhip and Peace; this is all which thence may be concluded.

Anſw. 2. Secular Princes are wont to ſend Ambaſſadors and Envoys with Letters and Inſtructions for ſettlement of Correſpondence and preſerving Peace; they ſometimes do recommend their Subjects to other Princes; they expect offices of humanity toward their ſubjects travelling or trading any where in the World; common Reaſon doth require ſuch things; But may common Unity of Polity from hence be inferr'd?

Arg. X. The effectual Preſervation of Unity in the primitive Church is alledged as a ſtrong Argument of its being united in one Government.

Ep. pag. 64. Lat. pag. 221.

Anſw. 1. That Unity of Faith and Charity and Diſcipline, which we admit, was indeed preſerved, not by influence of any one Sovereign Authority (whereof there is no mention,) but by the concurrent vigilance of Biſhops, declaring and diſputing againſt any Novelty in Doctrine or Practice which did ſtart up; by their adherence to the Doctrine aſſerted in Scripture and confirmed by Tradition; by their aiding and abetting one another as Confederates againſt Errours and Diſorders creeping in.

Anſw. 2. The many Differences which aroſe concerning the Obſervation of Eaſter, the Re-baptization of Hereticks, the Reconciliation of Revolters and ſcandalous Criminals; concerning the deciſion of Cauſes and Controverſies, &c. do more clearly ſhew that there was no ſtanding common Juriſdiction in the Church; for had there been ſuch an one, recourſe would have been had thereto; and ſuch Differences by its Authority would eaſily have been quaſhed.

Arg. XI. Another Argument is grounded on the Relief which one Church did yield to another, which ſuppoſeth all Churches under one Government, impoſing ſuch Tribute.

Ep. pag. 119. Lat. pag. 209.

Anſw. 1. This is a ſtrange Fetch: as if all who were under obligation to relieve one another in need, were to be under one Government. Then all Mankind muſt be ſo.

Anſw. 2. It appeareth by St Paul that theſe Succours were of free Charity, Favour and Liberality; and not by Conſtraint.

2 Cor. 8. 3. αὐθαίρετοι. Verſ. 8. οὐ κατ' ἐπιταγὴν 2 Cor. 9. 7. ἕκαστος καθὼς προαιρεῖται. Rom. 15. 26. εὐδόκησαν. Act. 11. 29. 24. 17. ἐλεημοσύνας ποιήσων.

Arg. XII. The uſe of Councils is alſo alledged as an Argument of this Unity.

Ep. pag. 51. Lat. pag. 400.

Anſw. 1. General Councils (in caſe Truth is diſowned, that Peace is diſturbed, that Diſcipline is looſed or perverted,) are wholſome Expedients to clear Truth and heal Breaches; but the holding them is no more an Argument of political Unity in the Church, than the Treaty of Munſter was a ſign of all Europe being under one civil Government.

Aug.

Anſw. 2. They are extraordinary, arbitrary, prudential means of reſtoring Truth, Peace, Order, Diſcipline; but from them nothing can be gathered concerning the continual ordinary State of the Church.

Anſw. 3. For during a long time the Church wanted them; and afterwards had them but rarely; For the firſt three hundred years (ſaith Bell.) there was no general aſſembly; afterwards ſcarce one in a hundred years.

Primis trecentis annis nulla fuit congregatio generalis; poſtea verò vix centeſimo annò. De Rom. P. 1. 8.

And ſince the breach between the Oriental and Weſtern Churches, for many Centenaries, there hath been none.

Yet was the Church from the beginning One, till Conſtantine, and long afterwards.

Anſw. 4. The firſt General Councils (indeed all that have been with any probable ſhew capable of that denomination) were congregated by Emperours, to cure the Diſſentions of Biſhops; what therefore can be argued from them, but that the Emperours did find it good to ſettle Peace and Truth; and took this for a good mean thereto?

Bell. de Conc. 1. 13.

Alb. Pighius ſaid that General Councils were an invention of Conſtantine; and who can confute him?

Anſw. 5. They do ſhew rather the Unity of the Empire than of the Church; or of the Church as National under one Empire, than as Catholick; for it was the State which did call and moderate them to its purpoſes.

Anſw. 6. It is manifeſt that the congregation of them dependeth on the permiſſion and pleaſure of ſecular Powers; and in all equity ſhould do ſo, (as otherwhere is ſhewed.)

The validity of Synodical Decrees (as Spiritual) doth proceed from the Obligation to each ſingular Biſhop; as if Princes in confederacy do make any Sanction, the Subjects of each are bound to obſerve them, not from any relation to the body confederating, but becauſe of their Obligation to their own Prince conſenting.

Anſw. 7. It is not expedient that there ſhould be any of them now that Chriſtendom ſtandeth divided under divers temporal Sovereignties; for their Reſolutions may intrench on the Intereſts of ſome Princes; and hardly can they be accommodated to the Civil Laws and Cuſtoms of every State.

Whence we ſee that France will not admit the Decrees of their Tridentine Synod.

Anſw. 8. There was no ſuch inconvenience in them while Chriſtendom was in a manner confined within one Empire; for then nothing could be decreed or executed without the Emperour's leave or to his prejudice.

Hiſt. Trid. p. 67. A free Coun. P. Leo I. Ep.

Anſw. 9. Yea (as things now ſtand) it is impoſſible there ſhould be a free Council; moſt of the Biſhops being ſworn Vaſſals and Clients to the Pope; and by their own Intereſts concerned to maintain his exorbitant Grandeur and Domination.

Anſw. 10. In the opinion of St. Athanaſius there was no reaſonable cauſe of Synods, except in caſe of new Hereſies ſpringing up, which may be confuted by the joint conſent of Biſhops.

Αἱ δὲ νῦν κινηθεῖσαι παρ' αὐτῶν Σύνοδοι ποίαν ἔχουσιν εὔλογον αἰτίαν; &c. Athan. de Syn. p. 873.

Anſw. 11. As for particular Synods, they do onely ſignifie, that it was uſefull for neighbour Biſhops to conſpire in promoting Truth, Order and Peace, as we have otherwhere ſhewed.

Subrependi enim occaſiones non pretermittit ambitio, & quoties ob incurrentes cauſas generalis congregatio facta fuerit Sacerdotum, difficile eſt ut cupiditas improborum non aliquid ſupra menſuram ſuam non moliatur appetere. Leo M. Ep. 62. (ad Maximum Ant. Ep. ———)

Councils have often been convened for bad Deſigns, and been made Engines to oppreſs Truth and enſlave Chriſtendom.

That of Antioch againſt Athanaſius: of Ariminum for Arianiſm. The ſecond Epheſine to reſtore Eutyches, and reject Flavianus. The ſecond of Nice, to impoſe the Worſhip of Babies. The Synod of Ariminum, to countenance Arians. So the fourth Synod of Laterane (ſub Inn. III.) to ſettle the prodigious Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation, and the wicked Doctrine of Papal Authority over Princes. The firſt Synod of Lions, to practiſe that helliſh Doctrine of Depoſing Kings. The Synod of Conſtance, to eſtabliſh the maim of the Euchariſt; againſt the Caliſtines of Bohemia. The Laterane (under Leo X.) was called (as the Arch-biſhop of Patras affirmed) for the Exaltation of the Apoſtolical See. The Synod of Trent, to ſettle a raff of Errours and Superſtitions.

Pro Apoſtolicæ Sedis exaltatione. Lat. Syn. Seſſ. 10. p. 129.

Obj. II. It may farther be objected, that this Doctrine doth favour the Conceits of the Independents, concerning Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline.

I anſwer, No. For,

1. We do aſſert, that every Church is bound to obſerve the Inſtitutions of Chriſt, and that ſort of Government which the Apoſtles did ordain, conſiſting of Biſhops, Prieſts and People.

2. We avow it expedient (in conformity to the primitive Churches, and in order to the maintenance of Truth, Order, Peace,) for ſeveral particular Churches or Pariſhes to be combined in political Corporations; as ſhall be found convenient by thoſe who have juſt Authority to frame ſuch Corporations: for that otherwiſe Chriſtianity, being ſhattered into numberleſs ſhreds, could hardly ſubſiſt; and that great Confuſions muſt ariſe.

3, We affirm, that ſuch Bodies having been eſtabliſhed and being maintained by juſt Authority, every man is bound to endeavour the upholding of them by Obedience, by peaceable and compliant Demeanour.

4. We acknowledge it a great Crime, by factious behaviour in them, or by needleſs ſeparation from them, to diſturb them, to divide them, to diſſolve or ſubvert them.

Jud. 19. Οἱ ἀποδιορίζοντες:

We allow the Apoſt. Can. 31. Εἴ τις καταφρονήσας τοῦ ἰδίου Ἐπισκόπου χωρὶς συναγάγῃ, καὶ θυσιαστήριον ἕτερον πήξῃ μηδὲν καταγνωκὼς τοῦ Ἐπισκόπου ἐν εὐσεβείᾳ καὶ δικαιοσύνῃ, καθαιρείσθω ὡς φίλαρχος &c.
If any perſon, deſpiſing his own Biſhop, ſhall ſet up a ſeparate meeting, and build another Altar, having nothing to condemn in his Biſhop, either for his Piety or uprightneſs, let him be depoſed as one that ambitiouſly affects to be a Governour, &c.

5. We conceive it fit that every People under one Prince (or at leaſt of one Nation, uſing the ſame Language, (Civil Law and Faſhions,) ſhould be united in the bands of Eccleſiaſtical Polity: for that ſuch a Unity apparently is conducible to the peace and welfare both of Church and State; to the furtherance of God's Worſhip and Service; to the edification of People in Charity and Piety; by the encouragement of ſecular Powers, by the concurrent advice and aid of Eccleſiaſtical Paſtours; by many advantages hence ariſing.

Δίκαιον οὖν ἐστι πάντας τοὺς ἐν τῷ Ῥωμαίων κόσμῳ διδασκάλους τὰ ὁμοῦ αὐτοῦ δεῖ τοῦ νόμου φρονεῖν, καὶ μὴ διαφόροις διδασκαλίαις τὴν πίστιν μιαίνειν. Syn. Rom: apud Theod: 2. 22.

6. We ſuppoſe all Churches obliged to obſerve friendly communion; and, when occaſion doth invite, to aid each other by aſſiſtence and advice, in Synods of Biſhops, or otherwiſe,

7. We do affirm, that all Churches are obliged to comply with lawful Decrees and Orders, appointed in Synods with conſent of their Biſhops, and allowed by the Civil Authorities, under which they live: As if the Biſhops of Spain and France aſſembling ſhould agree upon Conſtitutions of Diſcipline which the Kings of both thoſe Countries ſhould approve; and which ſhould not thwart God's Laws; both thoſe Churches, and every man in them, were bound to comply in obſervance of them.

From the Premiſſes divers Corollaries may be deduced.

1. Hence it appeareth, that all thoſe clamours of the pretended Catholicks againſt other Churches, for not ſubmitting to the Roman Chair, are groundleſs; they depending on the ſuppoſition, that all Churches muſt neceſſarily be united under one Government.

2. The Injuſtice of the Adherents to that See; in claiming an Empire (or Juriſdiction) over all, which never was deſigned by our Lord; heavily cenſuring and fiercely perſecuting thoſe who will not acknowledge it.

3. All Churches, which have a fair ſettlement in ſeveral Counties, are co-ordinate; neither can one challenge a Juriſdiction over the other.

4. The Nature of Schiſm is hence declared; viz. that it conſiſteth in diſturbing the Order and Peace of any ſingle Church; in withdrawing from it Obedience and Compliance with it; in obſtructing good Correſpondence, Charity, Peace, between ſeveral Churches; in condemning or cenſuring other Churches without juſt cauſe, or beyond due meaſure.

In refuſing to maintain Communion with other Churches, without reaſonable cauſe; whence Firmilian did challenge P. Stephanus with Schiſm.

Excidiſti enim teipſum; noli te fallere; ſi quidem ille eſt vero Schiſmaticus, qui ſe à communione Eccleſiaſticæ Unitatis Apoſtatum fecerit. Firmil. apud Cypr. Ep. 75.

5. Hence the right way of reconciling Diſſentions among Chriſtians is not affecting to ſet up a political Union of ſeveral Churches, or ſubordination of all to one Power; not for one Church to enterprize upon the Liberty of others, or to bring others under it, (as is the practice of the Roman Church and its Abettors,) but for each Church to let the others alone, quietly enjoying its freedom in Eccleſiaſtical Adminiſtrations; onely declaring againſt apparently hurtfull Errours and Factions; ſhewing Good-will, yielding Succour, Advice, Comfort, upon needfull occaſion; according to that excellent Advice of the Conſtantinopolitane Fathers to the Pope and Weſtern Biſhops----(after having acquainted them with their proceedings) towards the concluſion they thus exhort them.

We, having in a legal and canonical way determined theſe Controverſies, do beſeech your Reverence to congratulate with us, your Charity ſpiritually interceding, the fear of the Lord alſo compreſſing all humane affection, ſo as to make us to prefer the edification of the Churches to all private reſpect and favour toward each other; for by this means the word of faith being conſonant among us, and Chriſtian Charity bearing ſway over us, we ſhall ceaſe from ſpeaking after that manner which the Apoſtle condemns, I am of Paul, and I am of Apollos, but I am of Cephas; for if we all do appear to be of Chriſt, who is not divided amongſt us, we ſhall then through God's grace preſerve the body of the Church from Schiſm, and preſent our ſelves before the throne of Chriſt with boldneſs.

Οἷς ἐνθέσμως καὶ κανονικῶς παρ' ἡμῖν κεκρατηκόσι καὶ τὴν ὑμετέραν συγχαίρειν παρακαλοῦμεν εὐλάβειαν, τῆς πνευματικῆς μεσιτευούσης ἀγάπης, καὶ τοῦ κυριακοῦ φόβου πᾶσαν μὲν κατασέλλοντος (compreſſing) ἀνθρωπίνην προσπάθειαν, τὴν δὲ Ἐκκλησιῶν οἰκοδομὴν προτιμοτέραν ποιοῦντος τῆς πρὸς τὸν καθ' ἕνα συμπαθείας ἢ χάριτος· οὕτω γὰρ τοῦ τε τῆς πίστεως συμφωνηθέντος λόγου, καὶ τῆς χριστιανικῆς κυρωθείσης ἐν ἡμῖν ἀγάπης παυσόμεθα λέγοντες τὸ παρὰ τῶν Ἀποστόλων κατεγνωσμένον, Ἐγὼ μὲν εἰμὶ Παύλου, ἐγὼ δὲ Ἀπολλῶ, ἐγὼ δὲ Κεφᾶ· πάντες δὲ Χριστοῦ φανέντες, ὃς ἐν ἡμῖν οὐ μεμέρισται ἄσχιστον τὸ σῶμα τῆς Ἐκκλησίας τηρήσομεν, καὶ τῷ βήματι τοῦ Κυρίου μετὰ παῤῥησίας παραστησόμεθα. Theod. 5. 9.

6. All that withdraw their communion to obeyſance from particular Churches fairly eſtabliſhed, (unto which they do belong or where they reſide,) do incur the guilt of Schiſm: for ſuch perſons being de Jure ſubject to thoſe particular Churches, and excommunicating themſelves, do conſequentially ſever themſelves from the Catholick Church; they commit great wrong toward that particular Church, and toward the whole Church of Chriſt.

Aug. contra Jul. Ep. 2. Te certè occidentalis terra generavit, occidentalis regeneravit Eccleſia: quid ei quæris inferre quod in ea non inveniſti, quando in ejus membra veniſti? imò quid, &c.

7 Neither doth their pretence of joining themſelves to the Roman Church excuſe them from Schiſm: for the Roman Church hath no reaſon or right to admit or to avow them; it hath no power to exempt or excuſe them from their duty; it thereby abetteth their Crime, and involveth it ſelf therein; it wrongeth other Churches, As no man is freed from his Allegiance by pretending to put himſelf under the protection of another Prince; neither can another Prince juſtly receive ſuch diſloyal Revolters into his Patronage.

Synd. Sard. Can. 13. Gr.

It is a Rule grounded upon apparent Equity, and frequently declared by Eccleſiaſtical Canons, that no Church ſhall admit into its protection or communion any perſons who are excommunicated by another Church, or who do withdraw themſelves from it: (for ſelf-excommunication or Spiritual felony de ſe doth involve the Churches Excommunication, deſerving it, and preventing it.)

Tornd. Lat. p. 220.

Αὐτοκατάκριτος. Tit. 3. 11.

Εἴ τις κληρικὸς ἢ λαϊκὸς ἀφωρισμένος, ἤτοι ἄδεκτος ἀπελθὼν, ἐν ἑτέρᾳ πόλει δεχθῇ ἄνευ γραμμάτων συστατικῶν, ἀφοριζέσθω καὶ ὁ δεξάμενος, καὶ ὁ δεχθείς. Apoſt. Can. 12.

Κρατείτω γνώμη κατὰ τὸν κανόνα τὸν διαγορεύοντα τοὺς ὑφ' ἑτέρων ἀποβληθέντας, ὑφ' ἑτέρων μὴ προσίεσθαι. Conc. Nic. Can. 5.

If any Clerk, or Laick, who hath been excommunicated, and not yet readmitted (by his own Church) ſhall depart thence, and be received in another City without Letters commendatory, both he who doth receive him, and he that is received, let them be excommunicated.

Let the ſentence be ratified which is according to that Canon which commands others not to admit thoſe whom others have ejected.

Which Canon as the African Fathers do alledge and expound it, doth prohibit the Pope himſelf from receiving perſons rejected by any other Church.

Μηδὲ τοὺς παρ' ἡμῶν ἀποκοινωνήτους εἰς κοινωνίαν τοῦ λοιποῦ θέλητε δέξασθαι, ἐπειδὰν τοῦτο καὶ τῇ ἐν Νικαίᾳ συνόδῳ ὁρισθὲν εὐχερῶς εὑρήσει ἡ σὴ σεβασμιότης. Syn. Afr. Epiſt. ad P. Celeſt. I.

Εἴ τις ὑπὸ τοῦ ἰδίου Ἐπισκόπου ἀκοινώνητος γέγονεν, μὴ πρότερον αὐτὸν παρ' ἑτέρων δεχθῆναι, εἰ μὴ ὑπ' αὐτοῦ παραδεχθείη τοῦ ἰδίου Ἐπισκόπου. —— Conc. Ant. Can. 6. Idem in Concil. Sard. Can. 13, 14. (Græc.)

So when Marcion, having been excommunicated by his own Father, coming to Rome, did ſue to be received by that Church into communion, they refuſed, telling him that, they could not do it without the conſent of his Reverend Father, between whom and them there being one faith and one agreement of mind, they could not do it in oppoſition to their worthy fellow labourer, who was alſo his Father.

Ἔλεγε, τί μὴ ἠθελήσατέ με ὑποδέξασθαι, τῶν δὲ λεγόντων, ὅτι οὐ δυνάμεθα ἄνευ τῆς ἐπιτροπῆς τοῦ τιμίου πατρὸς σου τοῦτο ποιῆσαι μία γὰρ ἐστιν ἡ πίστις καὶ μία ἡ ὁμόνοια, καὶ οὐ δυνάμεθα ἐναντιωθῆναι τῷ καλῷ συλλειτουργῷ, πατρὶ δὲ σῷ. Epiph. Hær. 42.

St. Cyprian refuſed to admit Maximus (ſent from the Novatian party) to communion.

Ep. 55. p. 113.

So did P. Cornelius reject Feliciſſimus, condemned by St. Cyprian, without farther inquiry.

Ep. 55. init. (abs te rejectum. Vid.) Vid. Rig. p. 79.

It was charged upon Dioſcorus as a heinous miſdemeanour, that he had againſt the Holy Canons, by his proper authority, received into communion perſons excommunicated by others.

— quoſdam à diverſis Conciliis ritè damnatos, in communionem, propriâ auctoritate, ſuſcepit; Sanctis Regulis præcipientibus excommunicatos ab aliis, in communionem alios non debere ſuſcipere. Epiſt. Syn. Chalced. ad Imper. Act. 4. pag. 286.

—— καθαιρεθέντας κανονικῶς παρὰ τοῦ ἰδίου Ἐπισκόπου αὐθεντήσας ἀκανονίστως εἰς κοινωνίαν ἐδέξατο. Evagr. 2. 4.

The African Synod (at the ſuggeſtion of St. Auſtin) decreed, that if it happen'd that any for their evil deeds were deſervedly expell'd out of the Church, and taken again into communion by any Biſhop or Prieſt whoſoever, that he alſo who received him, ſhould incur the ſame penalty of Excommunication.

Auguſtinus Epiſcopus, legatus Provinciæ Numidiæ dixit; Hoc ſtatuere dignamini, ut ſi qui fortè meritò facinorum ſuorum ab Eccleſia pulſi ſunt, & ſive ab aliquo Epiſcopo vel Presbytero fuerint in communionem ſuſcepti, etiam ipſe pari cum eis crimine teneatur obnoxius—— Cod. Afr. Can. 9.

The ſame is by latter Papal Synods decreed.

Sanctorum quippe canonum ſanxit auctoritas, & ea paſſim Eccleſiæ conſuetudo ſervat, ut à quolibet juſtè excommunicatum Epiſcopo, alius abſolvere non præſumat. P. Urb. II. Epiſt. 20. (apud Bin.)

A ſuis Epiſcopis excommunicatos, ab aliis Epiſcopis, Abbatibus & Clericis in communionem recipi procul dubio prohibemus. Conc. Lat. I. (ſub P. Calixto II) cap. 9.

—— Qui vero excommunicato antequam ab eo qui eum excommunicaverit abſolvatur, ſcienter communicare præſumpſerit, pari ſententiæ teneatur obnoxius. Conc. Lat. (ſub Innoc. II.) Can. 3.

The Words of Syneſius are remarkable: He, having excommunicated ſome cruel Oppreſſours, doth thus recommend the caſe to all Chriſtians.

Ἐπὶ τούτοις ἡ Πτολεμαΐδος Ἐκκλησία τάδε πρὸς τὰς ἁπανταχοῦ γῆς ἑαυτῆς ἀδελφὰς διατάττεται.—— Εἰ δέ τις ὡς μικρόπολιν ἀποσκυβαλίσει τὴν Ἐκκλησίαν καὶ δέξεται τοὺς ἀποκηρυχθέντας αὐτῆς (proſcribed by it) ὡς οὐκ ἀνάγκη τῇ πένητι πείθεσθαι, ἴστω σχίσας τὴν Ἐκκλησίαν, ἣν μίαν ὁ Χριστὸς εἶναι βούλεται.—— Epiſt. 58 pag. 203. Edit. Petav.

Upon which grounds I do not ſcruple to affirm the Recuſants in England to be no leſs Schimaticks than any other Separatiſts. They are indeed ſomewhat worſe; for moſt others do onely forbear communion, theſe do rudely condemn the Church, to which they owe Obedience, yea, ſtrive to deſtroy it: they are moſt deſperate Rebels againſt it.

P. Leo Ep. 84. cap. 9.

8. It is the Duty and Intereſt of all Churches to diſclaim the Pretences of the Roman Court; maintaining their Liberties and Rights againſt its Uſurpations: For Compliance therewith, as it doth greatly prejudice Truth and Piety; leaving them to be corrupted by the ambitious, covetous and voluptuous Deſigns of thoſe men;) ſo it doth remove the genuine Unity of the Church and Peace of Chriſtians; unleſs to be tyed by compulſory Chains (as Slaves) be deemed Unity or Peace.

9. Yet thoſe Churches, which by the voluntary conſent or command of Princes, do adhere in confederation to the Roman Church, we are not, merely upon that ſcore, to condemn or reject Communion of Charity or Peace; (for in that they do but uſe their Liberty.)

10. But if ſuch Churches do maintain impious Errours; if they do preſcribe naughty Practices; if they do reject Communion and Peace upon reaſonable terms; if they vent unjuſt and uncharitable Cenſures; if they are turbulent and violent, ſtriving by all means to ſubdue and enſlave other Churches to their will or their dictates —— if they they damn and perſecute all who refuſe to be their Subjects: in ſuch Caſes we may reject ſuch Churches as heretical or ſchiſmatical, or wickedly uncharitable and unjuſt in their Proceedings.

Cuicunque hæreſi communicans meritò judicatur à noſtra ſocietate removendus. Gelaſ. Ep. 1. ad Euphem.

An communicare, non eſt conſentire cum talibus? P. Sym. I. Ep. 7.

A TABLE of the AUTHORS quoted in the Treatiſe of the Pope's Supremacy, and Unity of the Church.

A.

S. Ambroſius.
in Luc.
de Pœn.
de Sac.
Anaſtaſius in vit. Joh.
Anton. de Conſil. Piſ.
Anſelmus in Joh.
Apoſt. Can.
Aquinas (Tho.)
Ariſt. Pol.
S. Athanaſ. Diſp. contra Arium, 3.
Athanaſ.
Athanaſ. de Syn.
Auguſt. Triumph.
S. Auguſtinus contra Creſconi
Idem de Unit. Eccleſ.
Ep.
in S. Joh.
contra Don.
de Bapt.
in Pſal.
contra. Jul.

B.

Baluſius.
Not. ad Agorbad.
Baronius.
S. Baſil.
Epiſt.
in Iſ.
de Judicio Dei.
Bellarminus.
S. Bernardus.
de conſid.
Binius.
Bochel.
Bodin. de Rep.
Bullæ Variorum P. &c.

C.

Camd. Hiſt.
Canon. Apoſt.
Cajet. in 1 Cor.
Canus.
Celeſt. ad Cyril.
Chryſol.
S. Cryſoſtomus.
Idem in Epheſ.
in Act. Apoſt.
in S. Joh.
in Galat. ibid.
Ep. 135.
in Coloſ.
in 1 Cor.
Claudianus.
Clemens ad Corinth.
S. Clemens Alex.
Clemens Alex. apud Euſeb.
Cod. Afr.
Cod. Lib. 1.
Conſilium Ant.
Baſ.
Chalced.
Sard.
Trid.
Lat.
Ludg.
Tolet.
Nic.
Trull.
Eph.
Florent.
Conſ.
Miler.
Carth. ibid.
Conc. ſub Men.
Conſt. Apoſt.
Card. Cuſanus de Conc. Carth.
S. Cyprianus.
de Unit. Eccleſ. in Conc. Carth.
Ep.
S. Cyril.

D.

Damaſi P. Ep.
Diſtinct. &c.
Durandus.
Dionyſius de Eccl. Hier.

E.

Eadmeri Hiſt.
S. Epiphan.
Hær.
Eraſmi Præfat. ad Hieron.
Evag.
Euſeb.
Hiſt.
de Vit Conſt.

A Table of the Authours, &c.

F.

Fac. Hermian.
Florus.

G.

Pope Gelaſ. diſtinc.
Ep.
Georg. Alex. vita Chrſ.
Gervas Dorob. apud Twiſd.
Grat. Diſt.
Greg. Decret.
Greg. Paſt.
Greg. M. Ep.
S. Greg. Naz.
Guicc.
Cunth. Lig.

H.

Hegeſippus apud Euſeb.
Heſychius apud Photium
Hieron. adv. Evagar.
Hieron. Ep.
S. Hier. in Matt.
in Jovin.
Hilar. de Trin.
Hilar.
Hiſt. Trident.
Horat.

I.

Ignat. ad Trall.
S. Iren.
Joſeph. de Bello Jud.
Iſid. Diſt.
Iſid. Hiſpal.
Iſid. Peluſiot.
Juſtini Cod.
Juſtini Novell.

L.

Lactantius.
Lateran. Concil.
Launoius.
P. Leo Ep.
Livinus.

M.

Machivel.
De Marc.
Marſil. Patav.
Matt. Paris.
Memor. Hiſt. de 5 Propoſ.

N.

Pope Nic. Ep.

O.

Occam.
Optat. lib. 2.
Orient. Relat ad imper. Act.
Orig. in Matt.
Otho. Friſing Chron.

P.

Pope Paſh. Ep. apud Eadmer.
Pelag. Ep.
Petr. ad Jacob.
Photius.
Pighius de Hier.
Platina de Vit. Pont.
Plut, in Pyrr.
Prudent. in Apotheoſ.

R.

Rigalt. in Cypr. Ep.
Ruffinus.

S.

Senec. de Benef.
Sigeberti Chron.
Sleid.
Socrates, Sozom.
Spalatenſ.
Suetonius.
P. Symac.
Syneſ. Ep.
Synod. Ant.
Anſel.
Baſ.
Chalc.
Conſt.
Eph.
Trull.
Nic.
Flor.
Laod.
Sard.

T.

Tacitus.
Ann.
de Morib. Germ,
Tertullianus.
Theod.
Theoph. in Matth.
Tho. Aq.
Thorn.
Thuan.
Tort. Tort.
Trid Concil.
Twiſd.

V.

Valeſ. in Euſeb.
P. Urb. Ep. 7.
Uſſerius.

Z.

Zabarellus.
Zozomen.

A TABLE OF Things, or the Chief Matters contained in the Treatiſe of the Pope's Supremacy, and of the Unity of the Church.

A

A*Bſolution.* Particular Abſolution, why allowed in the Church of Rome, 136.

Anacletus and Cletus, by ſome thought to be the ſame, 83.

Anathema's of the Romaniſts, 269.

Angels. Popiſh Doctrine of worſhiping them, contrary to Scripture, 264.

Apoſtles. Which the Elder, 31. That Office of the greateſt Authority in the Primitive Church, 34. This Authority of their Office they frequently aſſert; never Superiority over one another, 47. Their Manner of Life, ibid. Their Equality atteſted by the Fathers, and plain from Scripture, 53, 54. Their extraordinary Privileges and miraculous Powers not ſucceſſive, nor communicable, 74.

Appeals to the Pope diſclaimed, 230, 231.

B

St. Baſil. His Authority againſt the Pope's Supremacy, 115.

Biſhops. How to diſcharge their Office, 36. In what ſence ſaid to be Succeſſors of the Apoſtles, 75. All Biſhops ſtyled Clavigeri by the Council of Compeigne, 61. Their Reſidence and Tranſlation, 80, 81. The Higheſt Order in the Church, 125. Their Equality, notwithſtanding ſome Differences in Order, and Privileges, 122, 126, 148. An Anſwer to ſuch who object, They had a Power, as well as Emperours, to call General Councils, 188. Metropolitan Biſhops in their Provinces had far more Power, and more truly grounded, than the Pope had in the whole Church, 196. What kind of Authority they had heretofore in Synods, ibid. Their Ordination, in whoſe Power; Their Authority and Rights, 199, 200. Conſtitution of them, not in the Power of the Pope, but Emperour, 209. Nor Cenſuring them, in the power of the Pope, 214, 215. No power in the Pope to depoſe them, 216. ---- The contrary Aſſertions examined and confuted, in ſeq. v. 223. Confirmation of them belongs not to the Pope, 250.

Biſhops and Paſtors. Their Authority in Church-Government in the Primitive Church, 291, 292. Their Character, ibid.

C

Canon Law. The vain pretence for the Obligation thereof, 194.

Canons. Ancient Canons, their ſilence concerning the Pope's Authority, 117, 118.

Canons. Univerſal Canons, Popes no Power to alter them, nor exemption from them, 197. Their Policy herein, ibid. Contrary Opinion, from whence ariſing, ibid.

Canons of Pope's, why ſet above General Councils, 250. Æneas Silvius, his Account hereof, ibid.

Catholick. How much the abuſe of that Word hath conduced to the Pope's Pretences, 245.

Cenſures. Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures, the great advantages made from them by the Pope, 178.

Ceremonies. Why multitude of them in the Church of Rome, 136.

Charity. Want thereof in the Church of Rome, 266.

Charity among Chriſtians, 279, 281. Breach thereof denominates a man to be no Chriſtian, 280.

Charity to the Poor of other Churches in Primitive times, no Argument of Unity of Church-Government, 299.

Church. Unity thereof, 273. The various acceptations of the Word Church, 274. The Titles and Privileges thereof, 275.

Church Government and Diſcipline in antient time, 159, &c.

Church Government. No neceſſity of one kind onely of external Adminiſtration thereof, 286, 287. The contrary ſhewed to be moſt proper and convenient, in ſeq.

Church of Rome. An Account of them who by voluntary Conſent or Command of Princes do adhere in Confederation to the Church of Rome, 304.

Civil Magiſtrates Authority, 252.

Clergy. Romiſh Clergy's Exemption from ſecular Juriſdiction, whence 135.

Communion. Church Communion, 276.

Community of Men on ſeveral accounts may be termed One, 277.

Confeſſion. Auricular Confeſſion, 139.

Confirmation of Magiſtrates belongs not to the Pope, 250.

Conſcience. The Uſurpations made thereupon by the Popiſh Doctrines, 268.

Conſtantine M. His Judgment of Euſebius, 82. No General Synod before his Reign, 181.

Controverſies in the Church, how in antient times determined, 113, 145, 245, 283, 284.

Cauncil of Trent. Their Character, 2. Enjoyned the Pope's Supremacy ſhould not be diſputed, 17.

Councils. Their Authority above the Pope's, 22.

Councils. Their Infallibility, why pretended, 136.

Councils. General Councils, which ſo eſteemed, 184: firſt called by the Emperours, ibid. when firſt celebrated, 193. Uſe of them proves not there was Unity of Government in the Primitive Church, 299: the proper occaſion of General Councils aſſigned, ibid.

Cup in the Sacrament, why with-holden from the Laity, 136.

St. Cyprian's Account of St. Peter's Primacy of Order, 30: his Epiſtle concerning the depoſing Marcianus examined, 218, &c.

St. Cyril's ſupplying the Place of P. Celiſtine in the General Council, 197, 198.

Cyril of Hieruſalem, the firſt, according to Socrates, who did introduce Appeals, 231.

D

Pope Damaſus. An Epiſtle of his in Theodoret (whence Bellarmine's pretence for the Pope's Supremacy) adjudged ſpurious 153, 154.

Decrees of Popes, when conteſted againſt the antient Cannons, 198. Whence their new Decrees introduced, ibid.

Decretal Epiſtles. Their Forgery, and great advantage to the Church of Rome, 180.

Diſcipline, and Order of the Primative Church, 195.

Diſcipline. The enacting, and diſpenſing with Eccleſiaſtical Laws about the ſame belong'd of old to Emperours, 198.

Diſcipline of the Church, 285. main Form thereof not to be violated, ibid.

Diſpenſations, 180. The Pope no power to grant them, 251, 261.

Diſſentions. The Miſchiefs ariſing from them, 172, 177. The Profits accrewing from hence to the Romaniſts, ibid.

Diſſentions. How reconſiled among Chriſtians, 302.

E

Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction, not impugn'd by diſclaiming St. Peter's Superiority, 36.

Emperours, not Popes, did firſt congregate General Synods, 181. Teſtimonies of Popes owning the ſame, 188.

Emperours themſelves, or Honourable Perſons authorized by them, did heretofore preſide in General Synods, 197.

Empires. Their Original and Increaſe, 171.

Epiſcopacy. The Ends aſſigned of that Order, 82.

Euſebius. Conſtantine M. his Character of him, 81.

Excommunicated Perſons, not admitted into Communion by other Churches, 285, 303, 304, 324, 325.

Exemptions. The Pope no Power to grant them, 251.

F

Faith. Unity of the Church preſerved by it, 279.

Fathers. What regard to be given to their account of St. Peter's Primacy, of Order, or bare Dignity, 29.

Fathers. A Cenſure of their Writings, 67. Bellarmine's account of the ſame, ibid. The latter Fathers moſt guilty Expreſſions, 68.

Fathers. A Character of their Writings, 116.

Feed my ſheep. The Romiſh Interpretation rejected, and the true eſtabliſhed, ibid.

G

Gloſſes of the Romaniſts on Scripture, 66: their Corruptions and Partiality herein, 69.

Gregory M. his Character and Authority againſt the Pope, 120.

H

Hereſie of Simony, Popes guilty of it, 248.

Hereticks. How confuted in antient times, 113, &c.

Humility ſtrictly enjoyned to Chriſt's Apoſtles and Followers, 35.

I

Jeſuites. Their Character, 178.

Jeſus, according to common notion of the Jews, did imply his being the Son of God, 27.

Ignorance of Popes in Divinity, 249.

Ignorance. How Serviceable to the Church of Rome, 178.

Image Worſhip, 136, 261.

Indulgences, 180.

Infallibility. Pretence to it the greateſt Tyranny, 134. Whence pretended, 136. The Mother of Incorrigibility, and Corruption of Manners, 137. v. 247.

Inſpiration. The Popes and Synods bold pretenſions to it, 266.

Juriſdiction. Univerſal Juriſdiction over the Clergy, the Pope's preſumption herein, and when begun, 199.

Juriſdiction. Temporal and Eccleſiaſtical nature thereof, 254.

K

Keys. Power thereof, as alſo all other Authority, communicated to all the Apoſtles equally, 39, 60.

Kings have the power only of calling General Councils, 186. The unreaſonableneſs of the contrary, 187. v. Emperours.

L

Legends of the Church of Rome, the Profits ariſing from them, 180.

Laws. Eccleſiaſtical Laws. In whoſe Power to enact them, 196. The Pope ſubject to them, ibid.

M

Marriage. The Romaniſts abuſe thereof, 264. Why forbidden to their Prieſts, 188.

Maſs. Doctrine thereof, ibid.

Merit. Doctrine thereof in the Church of Rome, 135, 286.

Miracles. Why pretended to by the Romaniſts, 136.

Monarchy. Univerſal Monarchy not politick, nor convenient, 127: neither in Church, nor State, 149.

Monarchy, leſs ſubject to Abuſe than other ways of Government, 294.

Monaſteries. Why extempted by the Pope from ſecular Juriſdiction, 135.

Monkery, 137.

N

Pope Nicolas, the firſt who excommunicated Princes, ſecundum Bodin. 143.

O

Oath of Biſhops of Rome, at their Election, 21.

Obedience. Blind Obedience, 174.

Order and Diſcipline of the Primative Church, 195. v. Diſcipline.

Ordination. Priority therein did antiently ground a Right to Preeedence, 31.

Orthodox. Who ſuch in the Primative Church, 279.

P

Paſtors of the Church. Their Duty to maintain Peace and Charity, 284.

Patriarchs, not an higher Order than Primates, 166: their Inſtitution and Authority, 167, 168.

Peace to be inviolable among Chriſtians, 281: the Sacraments conducive to the ſame, 282: as alſo Convocation of Synods, ibid.

St. Peter in perſonal accompliſhments moſt eminent among the Apoſtles, 29: It is probable he was firſt called to the Apoſtolical Office, 30: his Zeal and Activity, 27, 31 his Superiority in Power rejected, 32: was no Prieſt at the Celebration of our Lord's Supper, contra Concil. Trid. 33: not Biſhop of Rome, 78: whether ever at Rome, 79: whence his Primacy aſſerted, 25.

Pope's Supremacy. The Controverſies about it, 1: The great Diſturbances it hath cauſed, 2: Pretended Authority to depoſe Princes, 3: Their behaviour according to their circumſtances, 16: pretended Supremacy in Spirituals, 18: their imperious, arbitrary Government, 37: the inſolent Titles given them, 38: no Judge of Controverſies, 113, &c. their Character before and after Conſtantine, 139: Uſurpation on Princes, 142: Cauſes of the growth of pretended Supremacy, 169, 170: did not claim a Power of ſummoning General Councils till they had in a manner ſhaken off ſubjection to the Emperour, 187: no more authority in Councils, than Patriarchs and other Clergy, 188: Supremacy, not indefectable and unalterable, 252: a Cha-a Character of them, and their Uſurpations, 194, 293, 294: Supremacy diſclaimed, 288.

Power. Worldly Power, 171: Deſcription thereof, and how much it hath advanced the Pope's Uſurpations, ib.

Pragmatical Sanctions, 180.

Preſidency of the Pope, no-wiſe neceſſary to the being of a General Council, 193.

Preſidency. Some impoſed upon by the ambiguity of that word, 198.

Preſidencies. Spiritual Preſidencies: To erect and tranſlate them a Prerogative of Sovereign Power, 251.

Preſidents in Council appointed by Popes, of no Authority, 197.

Prieſts, why forbidden Marriage by the Church of Rome, 136.

Primacy. Three kinds thereof, 27.

Primacy in St. Peter neither perſonal nor ſucceſſive, 72,

Primacy of St. John and St. James have more ſpacious Titles, than of St. Peter, 66, 70.

Primacies. Dioceſan Primacies: the Pope's great gain in the W. Churches not embracing that Diſcipline, 167.

Privileges. The Pope no Power to grant them, 251.

Provincial Synods. When Appeals were firſt made from them, 230.

Purgatory. Whence invented, 135.

R

Reliques among the Ro. 136.

Remiſſion of Sins. The Popiſh Doctrines and Errours about it. 260, 261.

Reſtitution of Biſhops, not an Act of Juriſdiction, never in the power of the Pope, 224, &c. pretended Examples ſhewed to be invalid, in ſeq.

Reſidence of Biſhops, 80: their Tranſlation, 81.

Revelation. Divine Revelation made by the Apoſtles, the only ground of abſolute Belief, 124.

Rock. St. Peter being ſo called, examined, 55.

Romaniſts. An Enumeration of ſome of their Errours, 135, &c.

Romaniſts, in England, Schiſmaticks, 304. A farther Character of them, ibid.

Romiſh Church vainly pretends to greateſt Antiquity, 289.

S

Sacraments. The Opus Operatum therein among the Romaniſts, 135: why celebrated by them in an unknown tongue, 136: their farther abuſe thereof, 267, 268.

Saints. Papiſts Doctrine of worſhiping them contrary to Scripture, 261.

Schiſm. Nature thereof, 302: the perſons guilty of it, ibid.

Scripture. the only Rule for our Belief, 32.

Scriptures. Prohibiting of them, whence, 136, 263: and Teaching them in an unknown tongue, ibid.

Separations in the Church. The Miſchiefs of them 301.

Simony. Popes guilty of it, 248.

Sovereignty. The particular Branches thereof conſidered, and Popes vain Pretences to the ſame, 181.

Spirit. v. Inſpiration.

Synod. No General Synod before Conſtantine M. 181.

Synods. In ancient Synods divers Things were ordained without the Pope's conſent, divers againſt his pleaſure, 196, 194. Inſtances hereof, in ſeq.

Synods. No Rule extant about 'em in the firſt Fathers, till after 280 years, 195.

Synods. Their Decrees and Acts, by whom ratified, 196, 197, 198.

Synods Romiſh Synods and Enthuſiaſts compared, 266.

T

Taxes. Impoſing them on Clergy, or People, not in the power of the Pope, 251.

Tradition, in ſome matters very uncertain and contradictory, 31.

Traditions of the Church of Rome, 136.

Traditions. Oral Traditions, 269.

Tradition. Univerſal Tradition diſowns the Pope's Supremacy, 249.

Tranſubſtantiation, 136.

Trent (Council) Character thereof, 241.

U

Unity of the Church, mentioned in the Conſtantinopolitan Creed, not of external Policy, 295.

Unity. Preſervation thereof in the Primitive Church no Argument of its being united in one Government, 299.

Vows, in the Church of Rome, why impoſed, 135.

W

Wealth, how procured by the Church of Rome, 179.

Words. Falſe Interpretations of words, how much contributing to the growth of the Church of Rome.

The End of the Firſt Volume.

THE WORKS

Of the Learned

Iſaac Barrow, D. D.

Late Maſter of Trinity College in Cambridge.

Publiſhed
By His Grace Dr. JOHN TILLOTSON, late Lord Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury.

The ſecond Volume.

CONTAINING SERMONS and EXPOSITIONS
Upon all the ARTICLES
IN The Apoſtles Creed.

The Second Edition, Corrected.

LONDON,
Printed by J. Heptinſtall, for Brabazon Aylmer, at the Three Pigeons againſt the Royal Exchange in Cornhill, 1700.

To the King.

SIR,

I Moſt humbly preſent to Your Majeſty a Work, the Authour whereof, my Son, was much the more dear to me for his conſtant and exemplary Loyalty. Not only the general obligation of a Subject always ingaged him to Your Majeſty's Service, but the particular favours wherewith You were pleaſed to honour and encourage his Studies, might probably have induc'd him to a Dedication of this kind, if his modeſty would have let him think any thing of his worthy Your Majeſty's Patronage. This, which I here offer, is, by thoſe who are better able to judge of it than my ſelf, valued as the moſt conſiderable of his productions: But it chiefly preſumes to entitle it ſelf to Your Royal Protection, becauſe it is an Explication and Vindication of that Chriſtian Faith, whereof Your Majeſty is the great Defender.

And, Sir, I beg leave to take this opportunity to make as publick an acknowledgment as I can, of that great goodneſs Your Majeſty has ſhewn in the acceptance and recompence of the fidelity I have through a courſe of many years born to the Cauſe of Your Majeſty and your Royal Father.

Long may Your Majeſty live and Reign under the happy conduct and bleſſing of that Wiſdom, in whoſe right hand is length of days, and in her left hand Riches and Honour. I am,

May it pleaſe your Majeſty,
Your Majeſty's moſt Humble, Faithful and Obedient Subject and Servant,

THOMAS BARROW.

UMI

The Creed.

I Believe in God the Father Almighty, Maker of Heaven and Earth:

And in Jeſus Chriſt his only Son our Lord, Who was conceived by the Holy Ghoſt, Born of the Virgin Mary, Suffered under Pontius Pilate, Was Crucified, dead and buried, He deſcended into Hell; The third day he roſe again from the dead, He aſcended into Heaven, and ſitteth on the right hand of God the Father Almighty; From thence he ſhall come to judge the quick and the dead.

I believe in the Holy Ghoſt; The holy Catholick Church; The Communion of Saints; The forgiveneſs of ſins; The reſurrection of the body, And the life everlaſting. Amen.

THE Chriſtian Faith
EXPLAINED and VINDICATED
In ſeveral SERMONS, UPON THE
Chief Articles of it contained in the APOSTLES CREED.

I Believe, &c.

SERMON I.

Of the Evil and Unreaſonableneſs of INFIDELITY.

HEB. 3. 12.

Take heed, Brethren, leſt there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief.

IF the cauſes of all the ſin and all the miſchief in the world were carefully ſought, we ſhould find the chief of all to be Infidelity; either total or gradual. Wherefore to dehort and diſſuade from it is a very profitable deſign; and this, with God's aſſiſtance, I ſhall endeavour from theſe words; in which two particulars naturally do offer themſelves to our obſervation; an aſſertion implyed, that Infidelity is a ſinfull diſtemper of heart; and a duty recommended, that we be carefull to void, or correct that diſtemper; of theſe to declare the one, and to preſs the other ſhall be the ſcope of my diſcourſe.

That Infidelity is a ſinfull diſtemper of heart, appeareth by divers expreſs teſtimonies of Scripture, and by many good reaſons grounded thereon.

Joh. 16. 8, 9. It is by our Saviour in terms called Sin; when he is come, he will reprove the world of ſin, — Of ſin, becauſe they believe not in me: and,
Joh. 15. 22. 9. 41. If I had not come, and ſpoken unto them, they had not had ſin; but now
(Joh. 8. 24.) they have no cloak for their ſin; and, If ye were blind, ye ſhould not have
Joh. 9. 41. had ſin; but now ye ſay, we ſee, therefore your ſin abideth. What ſin? that of Infidelity, for which they were culpable, having ſuch powerfull means and arguments to believe imparted to them, without due effect.

It hath a Condemnation grounded thereon: He (ſaith our Saviour)
Joh. 3. 18. 12. 48. that believeth not, is condemned already, becauſe he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God; but Condemnation ever doth ſuppoſe faultineſs.

ȣ̓ γὰρ μόνον τὸ μὴ εἴκειν ταῖς ἐντολαῖς τȣ̃ Χριςȣ̃, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὸ ἀπιςεῖν αὐταῖς χαλεπωτάτην ἐπάγει τὴν κόλασιν. Chryſ. ad Demat. Tom. 6. (p. 140)

2 Theſ. 2. 11, 12. 1. 8. It hath ſore puniſhment denounced thereto; God (ſaith S. Paul) ſhall ſend them ſtrong deluſion, that they ſhould believe a lye, that they all might be damned who believe not the truth, but had pleaſure in unrighteouſneſs; and, Our Lord (ſaith he) at his coming to judgment, will take vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the Goſpel of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; whence among thoſe, who have their part in the lake burning with fire and brimſtone, the fearfull, and unbelievers (that is they Apoc. 12, 8. who fear to profeſs, or refuſe to believe the Chriſtian Doctrine) are reckoned in the firſt place; which implyeth Infidelity to be a heinous ſin.

It is alſo ſuch, becauſe it is a tranſgreſſion of a principal Law, or di-1 Joh. 3. 23. vine Command; this (ſaith S. John) is ἡ ἐντολὴ αὐτȣ̃, the command of
Joh. 6, 29. him that we ſhould believe; this (ſaith our Lord) is τὸ ἔργον τȣ̃ Θεȣ̃, the Mark. 1. 15. ſignal work of God (which God requireth of us) that ye believe on him, whom he hath ſent; that was a duty, which our Lord and his Apoſtles chiefly did teach, injoin and preſs; wherefore correſpondently Infide-
1 Joh. 3. 4. lity is a great ſin; according to S. John's notion, that ſin is ἀνομία, the tranſgreſſion of a Law.

But the ſinfulneſs of Infidelity will appear more fully by conſidering its nature and ingredients; its cauſes; its properties and adjuncts; its effects and conſequences.

I. In its nature it doth involve an affected blindneſs and ignorance of the nobleſt and moſt uſeful truths; a bad uſe of reaſon, and moſt culpable imprudence; diſregard of God's providence, or deſpight thereto; abuſe of his grace; bad opinions of him, and bad affections toward him; for

Tit. 2. 11. 3. 4. 1 Tim. 1. 15. God in exceeding goodneſs and kindneſs to mankind hath propoſed a doctrine, in it ſelf faithfull and worthy of all acceptation, containing moſt excellent truths inſtructive of our mind and directive of our practice, toward attainment of Salvation and Eternal felicity: ſpecial overtures of mercy and grace moſt needfull to us in our ſtate of ſinfull guilt, of weakneſs, of wretchedneſs; high encouragements and rich promiſes of reward for obedience; ſuch a doctrine with all its benefits, Infide-
Luke 7. 30. Matt. 23. 37. 1 Tim. 2. 4 lity doth reject, defeating the counſel of God, croſſing his earneſt deſires of our welfare, deſpiſing his goodneſs, and patience.

Luke 10. 16. Rom. 2. 4. 2 Pet. 3. 9, 15.

1 Pet. 1. 10. Act. 3. 18. Luke 24. 44. To this doctrine God hath yielded manifold clear atteſtations, declaring it to proceed from himſelf; ancient preſignifications and predictions; ons; audible voices and viſible apparitions from heaven, innumerable Heb. 2. 4. miraculous works, providence concurring to the maintenance and propa- Act. 4. 33. 19.

gation of it againſt moſt powerfull oppoſitions and diſadvantages; but 20. 2. 47. 6.
all theſe teſtimonies Infidelity ſlighteth, not fearing to give their Author 7. 12. 24.
the lye, which wicked boldneſs S. John chargeth on it; He (ſaith the 1 Joh. 5. 10.
Apoſtle) that believeth not God, hath made him a liar; becauſe he believeth not the teſtimony that God gave of his Son.

Many plain arguments, ſufficient to convince our minds, and win our belief, God hath furniſhed; the dictates of natural conſcience, the teſtimony of experience, the records of hiſtory, the conſent of the beſt and wiſeſt Men, do all conſpire to prove the truth, to recommend the uſefulneſs of this Doctrine; but Infidelity will not regard, will not weigh, will not yield to reaſon.

God by his providence doth offer means and motives, inducing to be- 2 Cor. 5. 20.
lief, by the promulgation of his Goſpel, and exhortation of his Mini- Act. 13. 46. 2 Tim. 4. 4.
ſters: but all ſuch methods Infidelity doth void and fruſtrate; thruſting Matt. 13.
away the word, turning away the ear from the truth, letting the ſeed fall beſide Iſ. 5. 24.
us, caſting away the Law of the Lord of hoſts; in effect (as thoſe in Job) Job 21. 14. 2 Cor. 4. 16.
Saying to God, depart from us, for we deſire not the knowledge of thy ways.

God by his grace doth ſhine upon our hearts, doth attract our wills to Joh. 6. 44.
compliance with his will, doth excite our affections to reliſh his truth; (Apoc. 3. 20.) Act. 7. 51.
but Infidelity doth reſiſt his Spirit, doth quench the heavenly light, doth 1 Th. 5. 19.
ſmother all the ſuggeſtions and motions of divine grace within us. 2 Cor. 4. 4.

What God aſſerteth, Infidelity denieth, queſtioning his veracity: what God commandeth, Infidelity doth not approve, conteſting his wiſdom; what God promiſeth, Infidelity will not confide in, diſtruſting his fidelity, or his power: Such is its behaviour (ſo injurious, ſo rude, ſo fooliſh) toward God, and his truth; this briefly is its nature, manifeſtly involving great pravity, iniquity and impiety.

II. The cauſes, and ſources from whence it ſpringeth (touched in Scripture, and obvious to experience) are thoſe which follow.

1. It commonly doth proceed from negligence, or drowſy inobſervance and careleſneſs; when men being poſſeſſed with a ſpirit of ſlum- Rom. 11. 8.
ber, or being amuſed with ſecular entertainments do not mind the concerns of their Soul, or regard the means by God's mercifull care preſented for their converſion; being in regard to religious matters of Gal- lio's humour, caring for none of thoſe things; thus, when the King in the Act. 18. 17.
Goſpel ſent to invite perſons to his wedding-feaſt, it is ſaid, Οἱ δὲ ἀμε- Matt. 22. 5.
λήσαντες ἀπῆλθον, they being careleſs or not regarding it, went their ways one to his field, another to his trade. Of ſuch the Apoſtle to the He- Heb. 2. 3.
brews ſaith, How ſhall we eſcape, τοιαύτης ἀμελήσαντες σωτηρίας who re- gard not ſo great ſalvation, exhibited to us? Of ſuch Wiſdom complain-eth; I have called, and ye refuſed; I have ſtretched out my hand, and no Prov. 1. 24.
man regarded. No man; the greateſt part indeed of men are upon this Iſ. 65. 12. 66. 4. Jer. 7. 31.
account Infidels, for that being wholly taken up in purſuit of worldly affairs and divertiſements, in amaſſing of wealth, in driving on projects of ambition, in enjoying ſenſual pleaſures, in gratifying their fancy and humour with vain curioſities, or ſports, they can hardly lend an ear to inſtruction; ſo they become unacquainted with the notions of Chriſtian Matt. 13. 4. doctrine; the which to them are as the ſeed falling by the way ſide, which thoſe fowls of the air do ſnatch and devour before it ſinketh down into the earth, or doth come under conſideration. Hence is unbelief commonly termed not hearing God's voice, not hearkning to God's word, the dinn of worldly buſineſs rendring men deaf to divine ſuggeſtions.

2. Another ſource of Infidelity is ſloth, which indiſpoſeth men to undergo the fatigue of ſeriouſly attending to the doctrine propounded, of examining its grounds, of weighing the reaſons inducing to believe; whence at firſt hearing, if the notions hap not to hit their fancy, they do ſlight it before they fully underſtand it, or know its grounds; thence at leaſt they muſt needs fail of a firm and ſteady belief, the which can alone be founded on a clear apprehenſion of the matter, and perception of its agreeableneſs to reaſon: So when the Athenians did hear S. Paul declaring the grand points of faith, ſomewhat in his diſcourſe, uncouth to their conceit, falling from him, ſome of them did ſcorn, others did
Act. 17. 32. neglect his doctrine; ſome mocked, others ſaid we will hear thee again of
Act. 26. 28. this matter: So Agrippa was almoſt perſuaded to be a Chriſtian, but had not the induſtry to proſecute his inquiry, till he arrived to a full ſatiſfaction. A ſolid faith, (with clear underſtanding and firm perſuaſion) doth indeed, no leſs than any ſcience, require ſedulous, and preſevering ſtudy; ſo that as a man can never be learned, who will not be ſtudious; ſo a ſluggard cannot prove a good believer.

3. Infidelity doth ariſe from ſtupidity, or dulneſs of apprehenſion (I mean not that which is natural, for any man in his ſenſes, how low ſoever otherwiſe in parts or improvements, is capable to underſtand the Chriſtian doctrine, and to perceive reaſon ſufficient to convince him of its truth, but) contracted by voluntary indiſpoſitions and defects; a ſtupidity riſing from miſts of prejudice, from ſteams of luſt and paſſi-
Heb. 5. 4. on, from ruſt grown on the mind by want of exerciſing it in obſerving and comparing things; whence men cannot apprehend the cleareſt notions plainly repreſented to them, nor diſcern the force of arguments however evident and cogent; but are like thoſe wiſards in Job, who Job 5. 14. Iſ. 59. 10. Deut. 28. 29. meet with darkneſs in the day time, and grope at noon day, as in the night.

This is that, which is ſo often charged on the Jews as cauſe of their infidelity; who did hear but not underſtand, and did ſee but not perceive; becauſe their heart was groſs, and their ears were dull of hearing, and their eyes were cloſed; this is that πώρωσις καρδίας, that numbneſs of heart, which is repreſented as the common obſtruction to the perception and admiſſion of our Lord's doctrine;

Act. 28. 26.—Iſ. 6. 9. Matt. 13. 14. Joh. 12. 40. Rom. 11. 7, 8, 25. Eph. 4. 18. Iſ. 29. 10. Ezek. 21. 2. 2 Cor. 3. 14. Mark 3. 5. 6. 52. 8. 17.

this our Lord blamed in his own Diſciples, when he rebuked them thus;
Luke 24. 45. O fools, and ſlow of heart to believe all that the Prophets have ſpoken; Of this the Apoſtle doth complain, telling the Hebrews, that they were uncapable of improvement in knowledge, becauſe they were νωθροὶ ταῖς
Heb. 5. 11, 14. ἀκοαῖς, dull of hearing for want of skill and uſe, not having their ſenſes exerciſed to diſcern both good and evil: there is indeed to a ſound and robuſt faith required a good perſpicacy of apprehenſion, a penetrancy of judgment, a vigour and quickneſs of mind, grounded in the purity of our faculties, and confirmed by exerciſe of them in conſideration of ſpiritual things.

4. Another cauſe of Infidelity is a bad judgment; corrupted with prejudicate notions, and partial inclinations to falſhood. Men are apt to entertain prejudices favourable to their natural appetites, and humours; to their luſts, to their preſent intereſts; dictating to them, that wealth, dignity, fame, pleaſure, eaſe, are things moſt deſirable, and neceſſary ingredients of happineſs; ſo that it is a ſad thing in any caſe to want them; all men have ſtrong inclinations byaſſing them toward ſuch things, it is a hard thing to ſhake off ſuch prejudices, and to check ſuch incli-
Matt. 16. 23. Joh. 6. 60, 66. nations; it is therefore not eaſie to entertain a doctrine repreſenting ſuch things indifferent, obliging us ſometimes to reject them, always to be moderate in the purſuit and enjoyment of them; wherefore Infidelity will naturally ſpring up in a mind not cleanſed from thoſe corruptions of judgment.

5. Another ſource of Infidelity is perverſneſs of Will, which hindreth men from entertaining notions diſagreeable to their fond, or froward humour: ὦ γενεὰ ἄπιστος καὶ διεστραμμένη, O faithleſs and perverſe generation, Matt. 17. 17. thoſe Epithets are well coupled, for he that is perverſe will be faithleſs; in proportion to the one the other bad quality will prevail. The weapons of the Apoſtolical warfare (againſt the Infidel world) were 2 Cor. 10. 5. as S. Paul telleth us, mighty to the caſting down of ſtrong holds; ſo it was; and the Apoſtles by their diſcourſe and demeanour effectually did force many a ſtrong fortreſs to ſurrender: but the will of ſome men is an impregnable bulwark againſt all batteries of diſcourſe; they are ſo invincibly ſtubborn, as to hold out againſt the cleareſt evidence, and mightieſt force of reaſon; if they do not like what you ſay, if it croſs any humour of theirs, be it clear as day, be it firm as an Adamant, they will not admit it; you ſhall not perſuade them, though you do perſuade them. Οὐ πάντας δυσωπεῖ τὰ σημεῖα, ἀλλὰ μόνους τοὺς Εὐγνώμονας. Conſt. Apoſt. 8. 1. Such was the temper of the Jews, whom S. Stephen therefore calleth a ſtiff-necked people, uncircumciſed in heart and ears; Act. 7. 21, 54. Jer. 6. 10. 9. 26. who although they did hear the moſt winning diſcourſe, that ever was uttered, although they ſaw the moſt admirable works that ever were performed, yet would they not yield to the doctrine; the mean garb of the perſons teaching it, the Spirituality of its deſign, the ſtrict goodneſs of its precepts, and the like conſiderations not ſorting with their fancies, and deſires; they hoping for a Meſſias, arrayed with gay appearances of external grandeur and ſplendour; whoſe chief work it ſhould be to ſettle their Nation in a ſtate of worldly proſperity and glory.

6. This is that hardneſs of heart, which is ſo often repreſented as an obſtruction of belief: this hindred Pharaoh, notwithſtanding all thoſe mighty works performed before him, from hearkning to God's word; Exo. 7. 4, 22. 8. 15. 19. 9, 12. Exod. 5. 7. and regarding the miſchiefs threatned to come on him for his diſobedience; I will not (ſaid he) let Iſrael go; his will was his reaſon, which no perſuaſion, no judgment could ſubdue: This was the cauſe of that monſtrous Infidelity in the Iſraelites; which baffled all the methods, which God uſed to perſuade and convert them; Notwithſtanding ('tis ſaid) they would not hear, but hardned their necks, like to the neck of their fathers, that did not believe in the Lord their God: 2 Kings 17. 14. Whence that exhortation to them; To day if you will hear his voice, harden not your hearts. Pſa. 95. 8. Heb. 3. 8. And to obduration the diſbelief of the Goſpel upon the Apoſtles preaching is in like manner aſcribed; S. Paul ('tis ſaid in the Acts) went into the Synagogue and ſpake boldly for the ſpace of three months, diſputing and perſwading the things concerning the Kingdom of God: But divers were hardned and believed not: Act. 19. 9. and, Exhort one another daily (ſaith the Apoſtle) leſt any of you be hardned (in unbelief) through the deceitfulneſs of ſin. Heb. 3. 14, 13. Vid. Mark 16. 14.

7. Of kin to that perverſneſs of heart is that ſqueamiſh delicacy and niceneſs of humour, which will not let men entertain or ſavour any thing, any wiſe ſeeming hard or harſh to them, if they cannot preſently comprehend all that is ſaid, if they can frame any cavil, or little exception againſt it, if every ſcruple be not voided, if any thing be required diſtaſtefull to their ſenſe; they are offended, and their faith is choaked; You muſt to ſatisfie them, ſpeak to them ſmooth things, Iſ. 30. 10. which no wiſe grate on their conceit, or pleaſure: So when our Lord diſcourſed Joh. 6. 63.

ſed ſomewhat myſteriouſly, repreſenting himſelf in the figure of heavenly bread (typified by the Manna of old) given for the World, to Joh. 6. 60, 66. ſuſtain men in life; Many of his diſciples hearing this, ſaid this is a hard Joh. 6. 61. ſaying, who can hear it? and —from that time many of his diſciples Matt. 11. 6. 24. 10. 13. 21. went back, and walked no more with him; this is that which is called be- 1 Pet. 2. 8. ing—ſcandalized at the word; and ſtumbling at it; concerning which our Saviour ſaith, Bleſſed is he, whoever ſhall not be offended in me.

In regard to this weakneſs, the Apoſtles were fain in their Inſtructions to uſe prudent diſpenſation, propoſing only to ſome perſons the moſt eaſie points of Doctrine, they not being able to digeſt ſuch as were 1 Cor. 3. 2. more tough and difficult: I have (ſaith S. Paul) fed you with milk, and not with meat; for hitherto ye were not able to bear it—for ye are yet car- Heb. 5. 12. nal; and Ye (ſaith the Apoſtle to the Hebrews) are ſuch as have need of milk, and not of ſtrong meat.

Matt. 16. 23. Such were even the Apoſtles themſelves in their minority; not ſavou- Matt. 26. 31. ring the things of God; being offended at our Lord's diſcourſes, when he ſpake to them of ſuffering; and with his condition, when he entred into it.

8. With theſe diſpoſitions is connected a want of love to truth; the which if a man hath not, he cannot well entertain ſuch notions as the Goſpel propoundeth, being no wiſe gratefull to carnal ſenſe and appetite: This cauſe S. Paul doth aſſign of the Pagan Doctors falling into ſo Rom. 1. 28. groſs errours and vices, becauſe they did not like to retain God in their knowledge; and of mens revolting from Chriſtian Truth to Antichriſtian Impoſture—becauſe they received not the love of truth, that they might 2 Theſ. 2. 11. be ſaved: for which cauſe God ſhall ſend them ſtrong deluſion, that they ſhould believe a lye: Nothing indeed, but an impartial and ingenuous love of truth (overbalancing all corrupt prejudices and affections) can engage a man heartily to embrace this holy and pure Doctrine, can preſerve a man in a firm adherence thereto.

9. A grand cauſe of Infidelity is pride, the which doth interpoſe various bars to the admiſſion of Chriſtian truth; for before a man can believe, πᾶν ὕψωμα, every height (every towring imagination and con- 2 Cor. 10. 5. ceit) that exalteth it ſelf againſt the knowledge of God, muſt be caſt down.

Pride fills a man with vanity and an affectation of ſeeming wiſe in ſpecial manner above others, thereby diſpoſing him to maintain Paradoxes and to nauſeate common truths receiv'd and believ'd by the generality of mankind.

A proud man is ever averſe from renouncing his prejudices, and correcting his errours; doing which implyeth a confeſſion of weakneſs, ignorance and folly, conſequently depreſſeth him in his own conceit, and ſeemeth to impair that credit, which he had with others from his wiſdom; neither of which events he is able to endure.

He that is wiſe in his own conceit, will hug that conceit, and thence is Prov. 26. 12. uncapable to learn; there is, ſaith Solomon, more hope of a fool than of him; and He that affecteth the praiſe of Men, will not eaſily part with it Joh. 5. 44. 12. 43. for the ſake of truth; whence, How (ſaith our Lord) can ye believe, who receive glory one of another? how can ye, retaining ſuch affections, be diſpoſed to avow your ſelves to have been ignorants and fools, when 1 Cor. 3. 18. as ye were reputed for learned and wiſe? how can ye endure to become Novices, who did paſs for Doctors? how can ye allow your ſelves ſo blind and weak, as to have been deceived in your former judgment of things?

He that is conceited of his own wiſdom, ſtrength of parts, and improvement in knowledge cannot ſubmit his mind to notions, which he cannot eaſily comprehend and penetrate; he will ſcorn to have his underſtanding baffled or puzled by ſublime myſteries of Faith; he will not eaſily yield any thing too high for his wit to reach, or too knotty for him to unlooſe: How can theſe things be? what reaſon can there be for this? I cannot ſee how this can be true: this point is not intelligible; ſo he treateth the dictates of Faith; not conſidering the feebleneſs and ſhallowneſs of his own reaſon: Hence not many wiſe men according to the fleſh (or who were conceited of their own wiſdom, relying upon their natural faculties and means of knowledge) not many Scribes, or diſputers of this world did imbrace the Chriſtian Truth, it appearing abſurd and fooliſh to them; it being needfull, that a man ſhould be a fool, that he might (in this regard) become wiſe.

Joh. 3. 9.
1. Cor. 1. 26.
2. 6.
Joh. 7. 26.
1 Cor. 1. 20.
1 Cor. 2. 14.
1 Cor. 3. 18.

The prime notions of Chriſtianity do alſo tend to the debaſing humane conceit, and to the excluſion of all glorying in our ſelves; referring all to the praiſe and glory of God, aſcribing all to his pure mercy, bounty and grace: It repreſenteth all men heinous ſinners, void of all worth and merit, lapſed into a wretched ſtate, altogether impotent, forlorn, and deſtitute of ability to help or relieve themſelves; ſuch notions proud hearts cannot digeſt; they cannot like to avow their infirmities, their defects, their wants, their vileneſs, and unworthineſs; their diſtreſſes and miſeries; they cannot endure to be entirely and abſolutely beholden to favour and mercy for their happineſs; ſuch was the caſe of the Jews; who could not believe, becauſe — going about to eſtabliſh their own righteouſneſs, they would not ſubmit to the righteouſneſs of God. Dextra mihi Deus; every proud man would ſay, with the profane Mezentius.

Rom. 3. 27. 4.
2, 16. 9. 11.
11. 6.
1 Cor. 1. 29.
3. 21.
Epheſ. 2. 9.
Tit. 3. 5.
Rom. 10. 3.
9. 31.

Chriſtianity doth alſo much diſparage and vilifie thoſe things, for which men are apt much to prize and pride themſelves; it maketh ſmall accompt of wealth, of honour, of power, of wit, of ſecular wiſdom, of any humane excellency or worldly advantage: It levelleth the Rich and the Poor, the Prince and the Peaſant, the Philoſopher and Idiot in ſpiritual regards; yea far preferreth the meaneſt and ſimpleſt perſon, endued with true Piety above the mighteſt and wealthieſt, who is devoid thereof: In the eye of it, The righteous is more excellent than his neighbour, whatever he be in worldly regard or ſtate: This a proud man cannot ſupport; to be diveſted of his imaginary privileges, to be thrown down from his perch of eminency, to be ſet below thoſe, whom he ſo much deſpiſeth, is inſupportable to his Spirit.

The practice of Chriſtianity doth alſo expoſe men to the ſcorn, and cenſure of profane men; who for their own ſolace, out of envy, revenge, diabolical ſpite, are apt to deride and reproach all conſcientious, and reſolute practiſers of their duty, as ſilly, credulous, ſuperſtitious, humorous, moroſe, ſullen folks: So that he that will be good, muſt reſolve to bear that uſage from them; like David; I will yet be more vile, than thus, and will be baſe in my own ſight: but with theſe ſufferings a proud heart cannot comport; it goeth too much againſt the grain thereof to be contemned.

2 Sam. 6. 22.

Chriſtianity doth alſo indiſpenſably require duties, point-blank oppoſite to pride; it placeth humility among its chief vertues, as a foundation of piety; it enjoineth us to think meanly of our ſelves, to diſclaim our own worth and deſert, to have no complacency or confidence in any thing belonging to us; not to aim at high things; to wave the

Rom. 12. 3, 16.

regard

Job 42. 3. 42. 6.
Phil. 2. 3. Ro. 12. 10. 1 Pet. 5. 5. Luk. 14. 10. Rom. 12. 16.

regard and praiſe of men: it exacteth from us a ſenſe of our vileneſs, remorſe and contrition for our ſins, with humble confeſſion of them, ſelf-condemnation and abhorrence: it chargeth us to bear injuries and affronts patiently, without grievous reſentment, without ſeeking or ſo much as wiſhing any revenge; to undergo diſgraces, croſſes, diſaſters willingly and gladly: it obligeth us to prefer others before our ſelves, ſitting down in the loweſt room, yielding to the meaneſt perſons; to all which ſorts of duty a proud mind hath an irreconcilable antipathy.

Matt. 7. 14.
Prov. 1. 7, 30. 5. 12. 13. 13.

A proud man, that is big and ſwollen with haughty conceit and ſtomach cannot ſtoop down ſo low, cannot ſhrink in himſelf ſo much as to enter into the ſtrait gate, or to walk in the narrow way, which leadeth to life: He will be apt to contemn wiſdom and inſtruction.

Iſ. 5. 24. Eze. 20. 13, 16, 24 Act 13. 41 (καταφρονηταὶ). Luke 10. 16. Rom. 2. 4.

Shall I (will he ſay) ſuch a Gallant as I, ſo accompliſhed in worth, ſo flouriſhing in dignity, ſo plump with wealth, ſo highly regarded, and renowned among men, thus pitifully crouch and ſneak? ſhall I deign to avow ſuch beggarly notions, or bend to ſuch homely duties? ſhall I diſown my perfections, or forgo my advantages? ſhall I profeſs my ſelf to have been a deſpicable worm, a villainous caitiff, a ſorry wretch? ſhall I ſuffer my ſelf to be flouted as a timorous Religioniſt, a ſcrupulous Preciſian, a conſciencious Sneaksby? ſhall I lie down at the foot of mercy, puling in ſorrow, whining in confeſſion, bewailing my guilt, and craving pardon? ſhall I allow any man better, or happier than my ſelf? ſhall I receive thoſe into conſortſhip, or equality of rank with me, who appear ſo much my inferiours? ſhall I be miſuſed, and trampled on without doing my ſelf right; and making them ſmart, who ſhall preſume to wrong or croſs me? ſhall I be content to be nobody in the world? So the proud man will ſay in his heart, conteſting the doctrines and duties of our Religion, and ſo diſputing himſelf into Infidelity.

Apoc. 21. 8.

10. Another ſpring of Infidelity is puſillanimity, or want of good reſolution and courage: δειλοὶ καὶ ἄπιστοι, Cowards and Infidels are well joyned among thoſe who are devoted to the fiery Lake; for timorous men dare not believe ſuch doctrines, which engage them upon undertaking difficult, laborious, dangerous enterprizes; upon undergoing hardſhips, pains, wants, diſgraces; upon encountering thoſe mighty and fierce enemies, with whom every faithful man continually doth wage war.

Matt. 13. 21.
(Joh. 7. 13. 9. 22. 19. 38.)

They have not the heart to look the World in the face, when it frowneth at them, menacing perſecution and diſgrace; but when affliction ariſeth for the word, they are preſently ſcandalized. It is ſaid in the Goſpel, that no man ſpake freely of our Lord for fear of the Jews; as it ſo did ſmother the profeſſion and muzzle the mouth; ſo it doth often ſtifle Faith it ſelf, and quell the heart, men fearing to harbour in their very thoughts points dangerous, and diſcountenanced by worldly power.

Jam. 4. 1.
1. Pet. 2. 11.
Rom. 7. 23.

They have not alſo courage to adventure a combat with their own fleſh, and thoſe luſts, which war againſt their Souls; to ſet upon correcting their temper, curbing their appetites, bridling their paſſions; keeping fleſh and blood in order; upon pulling out their right Eyes, and cutting off their right Hands, and crucifying their Members; it daunteth them to attempt duties ſo harſh and painfull.

Eph. 6. 12.
(Luk. 14. 31.)

They have not the reſolution to withſtand and repell temptations, and in ſo doing to wreſtle with Principalities and Powers; to reſiſt and baffle the ſtrong one. To part with their eaſe, their wealth, their pleaſure, ſure, their credit, their accommodations of life, is a thing, any thought whereof doth quaſh all inclination in a faint and fearfull heart of complying with the Chriſtian Doctrine.

Chriſtianity is a Warfare, living after its rules is called fighting the 1 Tim. 1. 18.
good fight of Faith; every true Chriſtian is a good ſouldier of Jeſus Chriſt; Heb. 12. 1 Tim. 6. 12.
the ſtate of Chriſtians muſt be ſometimes like that of the Apoſtles; who were troubled on every ſide; without were fightings, within were fears: 2 Cor. 7. 5.
great courage therefore, and undaunted reſolution are required toward the undertaking this religion, and the perſiſting in it cordially.

11. Infidelity doth alſo riſe from ſturdineſs, fierceneſs, wildneſs, untamed animoſity of ſpirit; ſo that a man will not endure to have his will croſſed, to be under any law, to be curb'd from any thing, which he is prone to affect.

12. Blind zeal, grounded upon prejudice, diſpoſing men to ſtiff adherence unto that, which they have once been addicted and accuſtomed to, is in the Scripture frequently repreſented as a cauſe of Infidelity.
So the Jews being filled with zeal, contradicted the things ſpoken by Saint Paul; flying at his doctrine, without weighing it; So by inſtinct of zeal Act. 13. 45. 17. 5. 5. 17.
did S. Paul himſelf perſecute the Church; being exceedingly zealous for the Rom. 10. 2. traditions delivered by his fathers. Gal. 4: 17. Phil. 3: 6.

κατὰ ζῆλον διώκων. Gal. 1. 14. Act. 26. 11. περισσῶς ἐμμαινόμενος.

In fine, Infidelity doth iſſue from corruption of mind by any kind of brutiſh luſt, any irregular paſſion, any bad inclination or habit: any ſuch evil diſpoſition of ſoul doth obſtruct the admiſſion or entertainment of that doctrine, which doth prohibit and check it; doth condemn it, and brand it with infamy; doth denounce puniſhment and woe to it: whence men of 2 Tim. 3. 8.
corrupt minds, and reprobate concerning the faith;
and Men of corrupt minds, deſtitute of the truth, are attributes well con- 1 Tim. 6. 5.
joyned by S. Paul, as commonly jumping together in practice; And to them (ſaith he) that are defiled and unbelieving is nothing pure, but Tit. 1. 15 even their mind, and conſcience is defiled; ſuch pollution is not only conſequent to, and connected with, but antecedent to Infidelity, blinding the mind ſo as not to ſee the truth, and perverting the will ſo as not to cloſe with it.

Οὐ ῥᾴδιον πονηρίᾳ συντρεφόμενον ἀναβλέψαι ταχέως πρὸς τὸ τῶν παρ' ἡμῖν δογμάτων ὕψος, ἀλλὰ χρὴ πάντων καθαρεύειν τῶν παθῶν τὸν μέλλοντα θηρᾶν τὴν ἀλήθειαν. Chryſ. in 1 Cor. Or. 8.

Faith and a good conſcience are twins, born together, inſeparable from each other, living and dying together; for the firſt, faith is (as
S. Peter telleth us) nothing elſe but the ſtipulation of a good conſcience, 1 Pet. 3. 21.
fully perſuaded that Chriſtianity is true, and firmly reſolving to comply with it: and, The end (or drift, and purport) of the Evangelical 1 Tim. 1. 5.
doctrine is charity out of a pure heart, and a good conſcience, and faith unfeigned; whence thoſe Apoſtolical precepts, to hold the myſtery of faith 1 Tim. 3. 9.
in a pure conſcience; and, to hold faith and a good conſcience, which ſome 1 Tim. 1. 19.
having put away, concerning the faith have made ſhipwrack; a man void of good conſcience will not embark in Chriſtianity; and having laid good conſcience aſide, he ſoon will make ſhipwrack of faith, by apoſtacy from it. Reſolute indulgence to any one luſt, is apt to produce this effect.

If a man be covetous, he can hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven, Matt. 19. 23.
or ſubmit to that heavenly law, which forbiddeth us to treaſure up trea- Matt. 6. 19.
ſures upon earth; which chargeth us to be liberal in communication of 1 Tim. 6. 18. Heb. 13. 16.
our goods; ſo as to give unto every one that asketh; which in ſome caſes Luke 16. 9. Luke 6. 30.
requireth to ſell all our goods, and to give them to the poor; which de- Matt. 19. 20.
clareth, that whoſoever doth not bid farewell to all that he hath, cannot be Luke 14. 33. Luke 6. 20.

a diſciple of Chriſt; which aſcribeth happineſs to the poor, and denounceth woe to the rich, who have their conſolation here, Preach ſuch doctrine to a covetous perſon, and as the young Gentleman, who had great poſſeſſions, he will go his way ſorrowful; or will do like the Phariſees, who were covetous, and having heard our Saviour diſcourſe ſuch things, derided him; for the love of money (ſaith S. Paul) is the root of all evil, which while ſome coveted after, they have erred from the faith; ἀπεπλανήθησαν, they have wandred away, or apoſtatized from the faith.

Luke 6. 24.
Matt. 19. 22.
Luke 16 14 ἐξεμυκτήριζον αὐτὸν.
1 Tim. 6. 10.

If a man be ambitious, he will not approve that doctrine, which prohibiteth us to affect, to ſeek, to admit glory, or to do any thing for its ſake; but purely to ſeek God's honour, and in all our actions to regard it as our principal aim: which greatly diſparageth all worldly glory as vain, tranſitory, miſchievous; which commandeth us in honour to prefer others before our ſelves, and to ſit down in the loweſt room; which promiſeth the beſt rewards to humility, and menaceth, that whoever exalteth himſelf, ſhall be abaſed; the profeſſion and practice whereof are commonly attended with diſgrace; ſuch doctrines ambitious minds cannot admit; as it proved among the Jews; who therefore could not believe, becauſe they received glory from one another; who therefore would not profeſs the faith, becauſe they loved the glory of men rather than the glory of God.

Phil. 2. 3. Gal. 5. 26. Joh. 12. 43. 5. 44.
Matt 6 1.
1 Pet. 1. 24.
1 Cor. 7. 31.
1 Joh. 2. 16.
Rom. 12 10.
Luke 14. 10.
Matt. 23. 12
Luke 14. 11. 18. 14.
Joh. 5. 44. 12. 43.

If a man be envious, he will not like that doctrine, which enjoyneth him to deſire the good of his neighbour, as his own; to have complacence in the proſperity and dignity of his brethren; not to ſeek his own, but every man anothers wealth, or welfare; to rejoice with them that rejoice; and mourn with thoſe that mourn; which chargeth us to lay aſide all envyings and emulations, under pain of damnation; he therefore who is poſſeſſed with an envious ſpirit, or evil eye; will look ill upon this doctrine; as the Jews did, who being full of envy and emulation, did reject the Goſpel; it being a grievous eye-ſore to them, that the poor Gentiles were thereby admitted to favour and mercy.

1 Cor. 12. 26. συγχαίρειν.
1 Cor. 10. 24.
Phil. 2. 4.
Rom. 12. 15.
1 Pet. 2. 1.
Gal. 5. 20.
Rom. 13. 13.
Jam. 3. 14, 16.
Act. 5. 17. 13. 45. 17. 5.

If a man be revengefull or ſpitefull, he will be ſcandalized at that law, which commandeth us to love our enemies, to bleſs thoſe that curſe us, to do good to them that hate us, to pray for them that deſpitefully uſe us; which forbiddeth us to reſiſt the evil; to render evil for evil, or railing for railing; which chargeth us to bear patiently, and freely to remit all injuries, under penalty of forfeiting all hopes of mercy from God; which requireth us to depoſe all wrath, animoſity, and malice, as inconſiſtent with our ſalvation; which doctrine how can a heart ſwelling with rancorous grudge, or boiling with anger embrace? ſeeing it muſt be in meekneſs that we muſt receive the engrafted word, that is able to ſave our ſouls.

Matt. 5. 44. Rom. 12. 20.
Rom. 12. 17. 1 Pet. 3. 9 Matt. 5. 39.
1 Cor. 6. 7. 1 Theſ. 5 15.
Col. 3. 13 Eph. 4. 32. Matt. 6. 15. 18, 35.
Col 3. 8. 1 Pet. 2. 1. Gal. 5. 20. Eph. 4. 31.
Jam. 1. 21.

If a man be intemperate, he will loath that doctrine, the precepts of which are, that we be temperate in all things, that we bring under our bodies, that we endure hardſhip as good ſouldiers of Chriſt; to avoid all exceſs; to poſſeſs our veſſels in ſanctification and honour; to mortifie our members upon earth, to crucifie the fleſh with its affections and luſts; to abſtain from fleſhly luſts, which war againſt the ſoul; with which precepts how can a luxurious and filthy heart comport?

2 Tim. 4. 5. 1 Cor. 9. 25, 27.
2 Tim 2. 3. 1. 8. 4. 5. Eph. 5. 18.
1 Theſ. 4. 4. Col. 3. 5. Gal. 5. 24.
2 Pet. 2. 11.

In fine, whatever corrupt affection a man be poſſeſſed with, it will work in him a diſtaſte, and repugnance to that doctrine, which indiſpenſably, as a condition of ſalvation, doth preſcribe and require univerſal holineſs, purity, innocence, vertue and goodneſs; which doth not allow any one ſin to be foſtered or indulged; which threatneth wrath, and vengeance upon all impiety, iniquity, impurity, wherein we do obſtinately perſiſt; indifferently, without any reſerve or remedy; wherein the wrath of God is revealed from heaven upon all ungodlineſs and unrighteouſneſs of men, that detain the truth in unrighteouſneſs.

Eph. 2. 11. 4. 22. Rom. 6. 6. 1 Theſ. 4 3. Eph 5. 6. Col. 3. 6. Rom. 1. 18. 2. 8.

An impure, a diſſolute, a paſſionate ſoul cannot affect ſo holy notions, cannot comply with ſo ſtrict rules, as the Goſpel doth recommend; as a ſore eye cannot like the bright day; as a ſickly palate cannot reliſh ſavoury food. Every one that doth evil, hateth the light, becauſe it diſcovereth to him his own vileneſs, and folly; becauſe it detecteth the ſadneſs and wofulneſs of his condition; becauſe it kindleth anguiſh and remorſe within him; becauſe it checketh him in the free purſuit of his bad deſigns, it dampeth the briſk enjoyment of his unlawfull pleaſures, it robbeth him of ſatisfaction and glee in any vicious courſe of practice.

Ἡ ἐμπαθὴς ψυχὴ οὐ δύναται μέγα τι καὶ γενναῖον ἰδεῖν, ἀλλ' ὥσπερ ὑπό τινος λήμης θολουμένη ἀμβλυωπίαν ὑπομένει τὴν χαλεπωτάτην. Chryſ. in Joh Orat. 25. ἔστι γὰρ, ἔστι καὶ ἀπὸ τρόπων διεφθαρμένων οὐκ ἀπὸ πολυπραγμοσύνης μόνον ἀκαίρου σκοτωθῆναι τὴν διάνοιαν. Ibid.

Joh 3. 20.

Every man is unwilling to entertain a bad conceit of himſelf, and to paſs on himſelf a ſad doom: he therefore will be apt to reject that doctrine, which, being ſuppoſed true, he cannot but confeſs himſelf to be an arrant fool, he cannot but grant himſelf a forlorn wretch.

No man liketh to be galled, to be ſtung, to be racked with a ſenſe of guilt, to be ſcared with a dread of puniſhment; to live under awe and apprehenſion of imminent danger; gladly therefore would he ſhun that doctrine, which demonſtrateth him a grievous ſinner, which ſpeaketh diſmal terrour, which thundreth ghaſtly woe upon him.

He cannot love that truth, which is ſo much his enemy, which ſo rudely treateth and ſeverely perſecuteth him; which telleth him ſo bad and unwelcome news. *

Who would be content to deem omnipotency engaged againſt him? to fancy himſelf ſtanding on the brink of a fiery lake, to hear a roaring Lion, ready to devour him; to ſuppoſe that certain, which is ſo dreadfull and ſad to him?

* They hated knowledge, and did not chuſe the fear of the LORD, Prov. 1. 29. 5. 12.

Hence it is, that the carnal mind is enmity to God; hence do bad men rebel againſt the light; hence Fooliſh men ſhall not attain to wiſdom, and ſinners ſhall not ſee her, for ſhe is far from pride, and men that are lyars cannot remember her.

Rom. 8. 7. Job 24. 13. Ecclus. 15. 7.

Hence a man reſolvedly wicked cannot but be willing to be an Infidel, in his own defence, for his own quiet and eaſe; faith being a companion very incommodious, intollerably troubleſome to a bad conſcience.

τὸ ἀπιστεῖν τοῖς ἐντολαῖς ἐκ τοῦ πρὸς τὴν ἐκπλήρωσιν ἐκλελύσθαι τῶν ἐντολῶν γίνεται, &c Chryſ Tom. 6. Orat. 12. (p. 140.)

ὥστε εἰ μέλλομεν ἐῤῥιζωμένην ἔχειν τὴν πίστιν, πολιτείας ἡμῖν δεῖ καθαρᾶς, τῆς τὸ πνεῦμα πειθούσης μένειν, καὶ συνέχειν ἐκείνης τὴν δύναμιν· Οὐ γὰρ ἔστιν οὐκ ἔστι βίον ἀκάθαρτον ἔχοντα μὴ περὶ πίστιν σαλεύεσθαι, &c Chryſ. Tom. 5. Or. 55.

Being reſolved not to forſake his luſts, he muſt quit thoſe opinions, which croſs them; ſeeing it expedient that the Goſpel ſhould be falſe, he will be inclinable to think it ſo; thus he ſinketh down, thus he tumbleth himſelf headlong into the gulf of Infidelity.

The cuſtom of ſinning doth alſo by degrees ſo abate, and at length ſo deſtroy the loathſomneſs, the uglineſs, the horrour thereof, doth ſo reconcile it to our minds, yea conciliateth ſuch a friendſhip to it, that we cannot eaſily believe it ſo horrid and baſe a thing as by the Goſpel it is repreſented to us.

ἡ πονηρία φθαρτικὴ τῶν ἀρχῶν, Vid. Chryſ. in Job. Or. 5. (p. 582.)

Vitious practice doth alſo weaken the judgment, and ſtupify the faculties. So that we cannot clearly apprehend, or judge ſoundly about ſpiritual matters.

The ſame alſo quencheth God's ſpirit, and driveth away his grace, which is requiſite to the production and preſervation of faith in us.

14. In fine, from what ſpirit Infidelity doth proceed we may ſee by the principles, commonly with it eſpouſed, for its ſupport and countenance, by its great Maſters and Patrons; all which do rankly ſavour of baſeneſs, and ill nature.

They do libel and revile mankind as void of all true goodneſs; from the worſt qualities, of which they are conſcious themſelves or can obſerve in others, patching up an odious character of it; thus ſhrowding themſelves under common blame from that which is due to their own wickedneſs; and diſpenſing with that charity and honeſty, which is by God's law required from them toward their neighbour: and having ſo bad an opinion of all men, they conſequently muſt bear ill-will toward them; it not being poſſible to love that, which we do not eſteem.

They allow nothing in man to be immaterial, or immortal; ſo turning him into a beaſt, or into a puppet, a whirlegig of fate or chance.

They aſcribe all actions and events to neceſſity or external impulſe, ſo raſing the grounds of juſtice, and all vertue; that no man may ſeem reſponſible for what he doth, commendable or culpable, amiable or deteſtable.

They explode all natural difference of good and evil; deriding benignity, mercy, pity, gratitude, ingenuity, that is all inſtances of good nature, as childiſh and ſilly diſpoſitions.

All the reliques of God's image in man, which raiſe him above a beaſt, and diſtinguiſh him from a fiend, they ſcorn and expoſe to contempt.

They extoll power as the moſt admirable, and diſparage goodneſs as a pityfull thing; ſo preferring a Devil before an Angel.

They diſcard conſcience, as a bugbear, to fright children and fools; allowing men to compaſs their deſigns by violence, fraud, ſlander, any wrongfull ways; ſo baniſhing all the ſecurities (beſide ſelfiſhneſs and ſlaviſh fear) of government, converſation and commerce; ſo that nothing ſhould hinder a man (if he can do it with advantage to himſelf and probable ſafety) to rebell againſt his Prince, to betray his Country, to abuſe his friend, to cheat any man with whom he dealeth.

Such are the principles (not only avowed in common diſcourſe, but taught and maintained in the writings) of our Infidels; whereby the ſources of it do appear to be a deplorable blindneſs, and deſperate corruption of mind; an extinction of natural light, and extirpation of good nature. Farther,

III. The naughtineſs of Infidelity will appear by conſidering its effects and conſequences; which are plainly a ſpawn of all vices and villainies; a deluge of all miſchiefs, and outrages upon the earth: for faith being removed, together with it all conſcience goeth, no vertue can remain; all ſobriety of mind, all juſtice in dealing, all ſecurity in converſation are packed away; nothing reſteth to encourage men unto any good, or reſtrain them from any evil; all hopes of reward from God, all fears of puniſhment from him being diſcarded. No principle, or rule of practice is left, beſide brutiſh ſenſuality, fond ſelf-love, private intereſt, in their higheſt pitch, without any bound or curb; which therefore will diſpoſe men to do nothing but to prey on each other, with all cruel violence, and baſe treachery. Every man thence will be a God to himſelf, a Fiend to each other; ſo that neceſſarily the world will thence be turned into a Chaos and a Hell, full of iniquity and impurity, of ſpite and rage, of miſery and torment. It depriveth each man of all hope from providence, all comfort and ſupport in affliction, of all ſatisfaction in conſcience; of all the good things which faith doth yield.

The conſideration of which numberleſs and unſpeakable miſchiefs hath engaged Stateſmen in every Common-wealth to ſupport ſome kind of faith, as needfull to the maintenance of publick order, of traffick, of peace among men.

It would ſuffice to perſuade an Infidel, that hath a ſcrap of wit (for his own intereſt, ſafety and pleaſure) to cheriſh faith in others, and wiſh all men beſide himſelf endued with it.

It in reaſon obligeth all men to deteſt Atheiſtical ſupplanters of faith, as deſperate enemies to mankind, enemies to government, deſtructive of common ſociety; eſpecially conſidering that of all religions that ever were, or can be, the Chriſtian doth moſt conduce to the benefit of publick ſociety; injoyning all vertues uſefull to preſerve it in a quiet and flouriſhing ſtate, teaching Loyalty under pain of damnation.

I paſs by, that without faith no man can pleaſe God; that Infidelity doth expoſe men to his wrath, and ſevereſt vengeance; that it depriveth of all joy and happineſs; ſeeing Infidels will not grant ſuch effects to follow their ſin, but will reject the ſuppoſition of them as precarious, and fictitious. Heb. 11. 6.

To conclude therefore the point, it is from what we have ſaid, ſufficiently manifeſt, that Infidelity is a very ſinfull diſtemper, as being in its nature ſo bad, being the daughter of ſo bad cauſes; the ſiſter of ſo bad adjuncts, the mother of ſo bad effects.

But this you will ſay is an improper ſubject: for is there any ſuch thing as Infidelity in Chriſtendom; are we not all Chriſtians, all believers, all baptized into the faith, and profeſſors of it? do we not every day repeat the Creed, or at leaſt ſay Amen thereto? do we not partake of the holy Myſteries, ſealing this profeſſion? what do you take us for? for Pagans? this is a ſubject to be treated of in Turkey, or in partibus infidelium. This may be ſaid; but if we conſider better, we ſhall find ground more than enough for ſuch diſcourſe; and that Infidelity hath a larger territory than we ſuppoſe: for (to paſs over the ſwarms of Atheiſtical apoſtates, which ſo openly abound, denying or queſtioning our Religion) many Infidels do lurk under the mask of Chriſtian profeſſion. It is not the name of Chriſtian, or the badges of our Religion that make a Chriſtian; no more than a Cowle doth make a Monk, or the Beard a Philoſopher: there may be a Creed in the mouth, where there is no faith in the heart, and a Croſs impreſſed on the forehead of an Infidel; with the heart man believeth to righteouſneſs: Shew me thy faith by thy works, ſaith S. James: if no works be ſhewed, no faith is to be granted, Rom. 10. 8. Jam. 2. 18.

as where no fruit, there no root, or a dead root, which in effect and moral eſteem is none at all.

Is he not an Infidel, who denieth God? ſuch a renegado is every one that liveth profanely, as S. Paul telleth us. Tit. 1. 16. And have we not many ſuch renegado's? if not, what meaneth that monſtrous diſſoluteneſs of life, that horrid profaneneſs of diſcourſe, that ſtrange neglect of God's ſervice, a deſolation of God's law? where ſuch luxury, ſuch lewdneſs, ſuch avarice, ſuch uncharitableneſs, ſuch univerſal carnality doth reign, can faith be there? can a man believe there is a God, and ſo affront him? can he believe that Chriſt reigneth in heaven, and ſo deſpiſe his laws? can a man believe a judgment to come, and ſo little regard his life, a heaven and ſo little ſeek it, a hell and ſo little ſhun it? --- Faith therefore is not ſo rife, Infidelity is more common than we may take it to be: Every ſin hath a ſpice of it, ſome ſins ſmell rankly of it.

To it are attributed all the rebellions of the Iſraelites, which are the types of all Chriſtian profeſſors, who ſeem travellers in this earthly wilderneſs toward the heavenly Canaan; and to it all the enormities of ſin, and overflowings of iniquity may be aſcribed.

I ſhould proceed to urge the Precept, that we take heed thereof; but the time will not allow me to do it: I ſhall only ſuggeſt to your Meditation the heads of things.

It is Infidelity, that maketh men covetous, uncharitable, diſcontent, puſillanimous, impatient.

Becauſe men believe not providence, therefore they do ſo greedily ſcrape, and hoard.

They do not believe any reward for charity, therefore they will part with nothing.

They do not hope for ſuccour from God, therefore are they diſcontent, and impatient.

They have nothing to raiſe their ſpirits, therefore are they abject.

Infidelity did cauſe the Devils Apoſtaſie.

Infidelity did baniſh Man from Paradiſe (truſting to the Devil, and diſtruſting God's word.)

Infidelity (diſregarding the warnings and threats of God) did bring the deluge on the World.

Heb 3. 19. 4. 6, &c. Infidelity did keep the Iſraelites from entring into Canaan, the type of Heaven; as the Apoſtle to the Hebrews doth inſiſt.

Infidelity indeed is the root of all ſin, for did men heartily believe the promiſes to obedience, and the threats to diſobedience, they could hardly be ſo unreaſonable as to forfeit the one, or incurr the other: did they believe that the Omnipotent, All-wiſe, Moſt juſt and ſevere God did command and require ſuch a practice, they could hardly dare to omit or tranſgreſs.

Let it therefore ſuffice to have declared the evil of Infidelity, which alone is ſufficient inducement to avoid it.

I Believe, &c.

SERMON II.

OF THE Vertue and Reaſonableneſs OF FAITH.

2 PET. 1. 1.

------ to them that have obtained like pretious faith with us.

THe Holy Scripture recommendeth Faith (that is, a hearty and firm perſuaſion concerning the principal doctrines of our Religion, from divine revelation taught by our Lord and his Apoſtles) as a moſt pretious, and honourable practice; as a vertue of the firſt magnitude, very commendable in it ſelf, † very acceptable to God, very beneficial to us; having moſt excellent fruits growing from it, moſt noble privileges annexed to it, moſt ample rewards aſſigned for it.

1 Pet. 1. 7.
† Heb. 11. 6.
Joh. 16. 27.

It is in a ſpecial manner commanded, and obedience to that command is reckoned a prime inſtance of piety: This is his commandment, that we ſhould believe; this is the work of God, that ye believe on him, whom he hath ſent.

1 Joh. 3. 23.
Joh. 6. 29.

It is the root of our ſpiritual life; for He that cometh to God muſt believe; and, add to your faith vertue, ſaith S. Peter, ſuppoſing faith to precede other vertues.

Heb. 11. 6.
2 Pet. 1. 5.

It is the principal conduit of divine grace: for

By it we are regenerated, and become the Sons of God; Ye all (ſaith S. Paul) are the ſons of God by faith in Chriſt Jeſus.

Gal. 3. 26.
Joh. 1. 12.

By it we abide in God, and do poſſeſs him, ſaith S. John.

1 Joh. 2. 24.
2 Joh. 9.

By it Chriſt dwelleth in us, ſaith S. Paul.

Eph. 3. 17.

By it we obtain God's Spirit: did ye (ſaith Saint Paul) receive the ſpirit by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith?

Gal. 3. 2, 14. Eph. 1. 13. Act. 2. 38. 5. 32. Joh. 7. 38.

By it we are juſtified, or acquitted from guilt, and condemnation for ſin: for, Being juſtified by faith we have peace with God.

Rom. 3. 25. 5. 1. 10. 10. Act. 26. 18. 10. 43.

By

Act. 15. 9.
1 Pet. 1. 22.

By it our hearts are purged (ſaith S. Paul) our ſouls are purified, ſaith S. Peter.

Joh. 8. 31.

By it we are freed from the dominion of ſin; according to that of our Saviour; If ye abide in my word,— ye ſhall know the truth, and the truth ſhall ſet you free.

Eph. 3. 12.
Heb. 10. 22.

It procureth freedom of acceſs to God — we have (ſaith S. Paul) boldneſs and acceſs with confidence by the faith of him.

Eph. 6. 16.
1 Pet. 5. 9.
1 Joh. 5. 5.
1 Tim. 1. 19.
3. 9. 1. 5.

It is the ſhield, whereby we reſiſt temptations; and the weapon, whereby we overcome the world.

Eph. 2. 8. Rom. 10. 10. Rom. 8. 24. 1. 16. Heb. 10. 34. 1 Pet. 1. 9. Luk. 8. 12. Act. 16. 30, 31. 2 Theſ. 2. 10.

In fine, it is that, which being retained in a good conſcience, and maintained by vertuous practice, doth keep us in a ſtate of ſalvation, and will aſſuredly convey us into eternal life and felicity; for, by grace we are ſaved, through faith.

Πίστιν —— ἣν διαβάλλουσι, κενὴν καὶ βάρβαρον νομίζοντες Ἕλληνες, Clem. Str. 2. (p. 265.)

Pagani nobis objicere ſolent, quòd religio noſtra, quia quaſi rationibus deficit, in ſolâ credendi perſuaſione conſiſtat. Ruff. in Symb.

Ἀδίκημα καὶ δικαιοπράγημα ὥρισται τῷ ἑκουσίῳ καὶ ἀκουσίῳ, Ariſt. Eth. 5. 8. 3. 1.

That faith ſhould be thus highly dignified, hath always appeared ſtrange to the Adverſaries of our Religion; and hath ſuggeſted to them matter of obloquy againſt it; they could not apprehend why we ſhould be commanded, or how we can be obliged to believe; as if it were an arbitrary thing, depending on our free choice, and not rather did naturally follow the repreſentation of objects to our mind: they would not allow, that an act of our underſtanding, hardly voluntary, as being extorted by force of arguments, ſhould deſerve ſuch reputation, and ſuch recompences; for if (argued they) a doctrine be propounded with evident and cogent reaſon, what vertue is there in believing it, ſeeing a man in that caſe cannot avoid believing, is therein merely paſſive, and by irreſiſtible force ſubdued? if it be propounded without ſuch reaſon, what fault can it be to refuſe aſſent, or to ſuſpend his opinion about it? can a wiſe man then do otherwiſe? is it not in ſuch a caſe ſimplicity, or fond credulity to yield aſſent; yea is it not deceit or hypocriſie to pretend the doing ſo? may not juſtly then all the blame be charged rather on the incredibility of the doctrine, or the infirmity of reaſons enforcing it, than on the incredulity of the perſon, who doth not admit it? whence no Philoſophers ever did impoſe ſuch a Precept, or did aſſign to Faith a place among the Vertues.

Prov. 14. 15.

To clear this matter, and to vindicate our Religion from ſuch miſpriſions; and that we may be engaged to prize and cheriſh it, I ſhall endeavour to declare, that Chriſtian Faith doth worthily deſerve all the commendations, and the advantages granted thereto; this I ſhall do by conſidering its nature and ingredients, its riſe and cauſes, its efficacy and conſequences.

Πίστις τῆς εἰς τὸν θεὸν γνώσεως παρασκευαστική. Chryſ. T. 5. Or. 55.

I. As to its Nature; it doth involve knowledge, knowledge of moſt worthy and important truths, knowledge peculiar and not otherwiſe attainable, knowledge in way of great evidence and aſſurance.

Ἀλήθεια δὴ πάντων μὲν ἀγαθῶν θεοῖς ἡγεῖται, πάντων δὲ ἀνθρώποις. Plat. de Leg. 5. (p. 841.) de Rep. 6. (p. 675.)

Pſ. 119. 142, 151.
Joh. 1. 7. 3. 19.
Pſ. 119. 105.

1. Truth is the natural food of our ſoul, toward which it hath a greedy appetite, which it taſteth with delicious complacency, which being taken in and digeſted by it doth render it luſty, plump and active: truth is the ſpecial ornament of our mind, decking it with a gracefull and pleaſant luſtre; truth is the proper wealth of reaſon, whereof having acquired a good ſtock, it appeareth rich, proſperous, and mighty: what light is without, that is truth within, ſhining on our inward world, illuſtrating, quickning, and comforting all things there, exciting all our faculties to action, and guiding them in it. All knowledge therefore, which is the poſſeſſion of truth, is much eſteemed; even that, which reſpecteth objects mean, and little, concerning us (ſuch as humane Sciences are converſant about; natural appearances, hiſtorical events, the properties, proportions and powers of figure, of motion, of corporeal force) doth bear a good price, as perfective of rational nature, enriching, adorning, invigorating our mind; whence Ariſtotle doubteth not upon all thoſe habitual endowments, which ſo accompliſh our underſtanding, to beſtow the name of Vertues; that with him being the Vertue of each thing, which any-wiſe perfecteth it, and diſpoſeth it for action ſuitable to its nature. And if ignorance, errour, doubt are defects, deformities, infirmities of our ſoul, then the knowledge, which removeth them, doth imply the perfection, beauty and vigour thereof. Faith therefore as implying knowledge is valuable.

Πᾶσα ἀρετὴ οὗ ἂν ᾖ ἀρετὴ, αὐτό τε εὖ ἔχον ἀποτελεῖ, ϗ τὸ ἔργον αὐτοῦ εὖ ἀποδίδωσι, Ariſt. Eth. 2. 6.

2. But it is much more ſo, in regard to the quality of its objects, which are the moſt worthy that can be, and moſt uſefull for us to know; the knowledge whereof doth indeed advance our ſoul into a better ſtate, doth ennoble, enrich and imbelliſh our nature; doth raiſe us to a nearer reſemblance with God, and participation of his wiſdom; doth infuſe pureſt delight, and ſatisfaction into our hearts: doth qualifie and direct us unto practice, moſt conducible to our welfare; 'tis a knowledge, enlightning the eyes, converting the ſoul, rejoycing the heart; ſweeter than honey, and the honey-comb; more pretious than rubies; which giveth to our head an ornament of grace, and a crown of glory. For,

Pſ. 19. 7, 8, 9, 10. (Pſ. 119. 103, 111.) Prov. 3. 15. 4. 9.

Thereby we underſtand the nature, or the principal attributes of God, of whom only the Chriſtian doctrine doth afford a completely [illegible]e and worthy character, directive of our eſteem, our worſhip, our obedience, our imitation of him; whereby our demeanour toward him may become him, and pleaſe him.

By it we are fully acquainted with the will and intentions of God, relating both to our duty and our recompence; what he requireth from us, and what he deſigneth for us; upon what terms he will proceed with us in way of grace, of mercy, of juſtice.

By it we are informed concerning our ſelves, what our frame is, whence our original, to what ends we are deſigned, wherein our felicity doth conſiſt, and how it is attainable.

It enableth us rightly to diſtinguiſh between good and bad, right and wrong; what is worthy of us, and pleaſing to God, what miſbecoming us and offenſive to him; both abſolutely and comparatively, according to the degrees of each caſe reſpectively.

It preſcribeth us an exact rule of life, comprizing all our duties toward God, our neighbour, our ſelves; to obſerve which will be moſt decent, and exceedingly profitable to us.

It teacheth us from what principles, and upon what grounds we ſhould act, that our practice ſhould be truly good, and laudable.

It propoſeth the moſt valid inducements to vertue, tendring the favour of God and eternal bliſs in reward thereof, menacing divine wrath, and endleſs woe, upon its neglect.

It diſcovereth the ſpecial aids diſpenſed to us for the ſupport of our weakneſs againſt all temptations and diſcouragements incident to us through the courſe of our life.

The knowledge of theſe things is plainly the top of all knowledge, whereof we are capable; not conſiſting in barren notion, not gratifying idle curioſity, not ſerving trivial purpoſes, but really bettering our ſouls, producing moſt goodly and wholeſome fruits, tending to ends moſt noble and worthy, this indeed is the higheſt Philoſophy; the true culture, and medicine of our ſoul; the true guide of life, and miſtriſs of action; the mother of all vertues; the beſt invention of God, and rareſt gift of heaven to men; for theſe commendations, by Pagan Sages aſcribed to their Philoſophy, do in truth ſolely belong to that knowledge, which by faith we do poſſeſs: their Philoſophy could not reach ſuch truths; it could not ſo much as aim at ſome of them; it did but weakly attempt at any: It did indeed pretend to the knowledge of divine and humane things (this being its definition, current among them) but it had no competent means of attaining either in any conſiderable meaſure; for divine things (the nature of him, who dwelleth in light which no man can approach unto; the intentions of him, who worketh all things after the counſel of his will; the ways of him, which are more diſcoſted from our ways, than heaven from earth; the depths of God, which none but his own ſpirit can ſearch out or diſcover) do lie beyond the ſphere of natural light, and inquiſition of our reaſon: and as for humane things, the chief of them have ſuch a connexion with divine things, that who were ignorant of the one, could no wiſe deſcry the other; wherefore thoſe candidates of knowledge, notwithſtanding their lofty pretences, were fain to reſt in a low form, employing their ſtudies on inferiour things, the obſcurity of nature, the ſubtilty of diſcourſe, and moral precepts of life; ſuch precepts, as their glimmering light, and common experience did ſuggeſt; for even in points of common morality and prudence humane wit can but fumble, as by the great claſhing and jangling about them, is very notorious.

Cultura animi, Cic. Tuſc. 1. Medicina animi, Tuſc. 3. O vitæ Philoſophia dux, &c. Tuſc. 5. de Leg. 1. de Fin. 3. Nec ullum arbitror, ut apud Platonem eſt, majus aut melius à Diis datum munus homini. Acad. 1. Tuſ. 1.

Omnis optimarum rerum cognitio, atq; in iis exercitatio Philoſophia nominatur. de Orat. 3.

Οὐκ ἐχέγγυοι διδάσκαλοι περὶ θεοῦ λέγοντες ἄνθρωποι καθὸ ἄνθρωποι, &c. Cl. Alex. Str. 6. (p. 501.)

1 Tim. 6. 16.
Eph. 1. 11.
Iſ. 55. 9.
1 Cor. 2. 10, 11.

Philoſophia in tres partes diſtributa eſt, in naturæ obſcuritatem, in diſſerendi ſubtilitatem, in vitam atque mores. Cic. de Orat. 1.

3. Faith alſo hath this excellent advantage, that it endueth us with ſuch knowledge in a very clear, and ſure way; comparable to that whereby the Theoremes of any Science are known; it not being grounded on any ſlippery deduction of reaſon, nor on ſlender conjectures of fancy, nor on muſty traditions, or popular rumours; but upon the infallible teſtimony of God, conveyed unto us by powerfull evidence, ſtriking all capacities, apt with equal influence to enlighten the ſimple, and to convince the wiſe. For want of this all humane wiſdom was ſo blind and lame; ſo various, ſo uncertain; nothing but confuſion, unſettlement, and diſſatisfaction ariſing from mere ratiocination; which being deſtitute of light and aid from heaven, doth ever grope in the dark, doth rove after ſhadows of truth, is bewildred in mazes of intricacy, wherein things lie involved; whence all Philoſophy did conſiſt in faint gueſſes, plauſible diſcourſes, and endleſs diſputes about matters of higheſt conſequence, ſuch as the original of the world, the adminiſtration of humane things, the nature and ſubſiſtence of our ſoul, the way to happineſs; none being able about ſuch points to conclude with reſolution, or to aſſert with confidence; ſo that in effect all the Philoſophers might be ranged under one great Sect of Scepticks, or

Act. 17. 27, 30.
Ὁ μὴ ἐκ πίστεως βοηθούμενος, ἀλλ' οἴκοθεν ἐπὶ τὸν λόγον ἐρχόμενος, ταῖς ἀνθρωπίναις παρασκευαῖς πρὸς τὴν κατάληψιν τῆς ἀληθείας or ſeekers, the moſt adviſed, and beſt diſpoſed among them, in reſult of their moſt diligent ſpeculations, appearing very doubtfull. *

θαῤῥῶν, ψεύσης ὅτι, παρὰ πολὺ τῆς ἀληθείας ἐκπίπτων. Baſ. in Iſ. 15. Ὅλως γὰρ ἡ ἄνευ πίστεως ἐπὶ τὸ λαλεῖν ἐρχομένη ψυχὴ διακενῆς ληρήσει. Ibid.

Hanc ego perfectam Philoſophiam ſemper judicavi, quæ de maximis quæſtionibus copiosè poſſit, ornateq; dicere. Cic. Tuſc.

5 Vid. in M Ant. Comm. p. 143. Chryſ. in Joh. Or. 63. * Οὐδὲν γὰρ οὕτω ποιεῖ σκοτόδινον ὡς ἀνθρώπινος λογισμὸς, ἀπὸ τῆς γῆς πάντα φθεγγόμενος, καὶ μὴ ἀνεχόμενος φωτίζεσθαι ἄνωθεν, &c. Chryſ in Joh. Or. 25.

But we have (as S. Peter ſaith) βεβαιότερον λόγον, a more ſure word of prophecy, whereunto we do well to give heed, as unto a lamp ſhining in a dark place, guiding us in the obſcurities and uncertainties of life; we have a hope, as an anchor of the ſoul both ſure and ſtable; which ſtayeth and ſetleth our mind, being toſt with winds and waves of uncertain cogitations, ſuggeſted by different appearances of things.

2 Pet. 1. 19.

Heb. 6. 19. Τὴν ψυχὴν τὴν ἡμετέραν σεσαλευμένην, καὶ περιφερομένην ὑπὸ τῆς τῶν λογισμῶν ἀσθενείας, &c. Chryſ. Tom. 5. Orat. 55.

Hence (as S. Chryſoſtome is wont to inſiſt) by virtue of faith ruſtick and mechanick Idiots do in true knowledge ſurpaſs the moſt refined wits, and Children prove wiſer than old Philoſophers; an Idiot can tell us that, which a learned Infidel doth not know; a Child can aſſure us that, wherein a deep Philoſopher is not reſolved: for ask a Boore, ask a boy educated in our religion, who made him, he will tell you God Almighty, which is more than Ariſtotle, or Democritus would have told; demand of him why he was made, he will anſwer you, to ſerve and glorifie his Maker; and hardly would Pythagoras or Plato have replyed ſo wiſely; examine him concerning his ſoul, he will aver, that it is immortal, that it ſhall undergo a judgment after this life, that accordingly it ſhall abide in a ſtate of bliſs or miſery everlaſting; about which points neither Socrates nor Seneca could aſſure any thing: enquire of him how things are upheld, how governed and ordered, he preſently will reply, by the powerfull hand and wiſe providence of God; whereas among Philoſophers one would aſcribe all events to the current of fate, another to the tides of fortune; one to blind influences of Stars, another to a confuſed jumble of Atoms: poſe him about the main points of morality and duty; and he will in few words better inform you, than Cicero, or Epictetus, or Ariſtotle, or Plutarch in their large Tracts, and voluminous diſcourſes about matters of that nature.

Τίς οὐκ ἂν αὐτόθεν μάθοι τὴν τοῦ Χριστοῦ δύναμιν, ἢ τοὺς ἀγραμμάτους καὶ ἰδιώτας τῶν μέγα ἐπὶ σοφίᾳ κομπαζόντων τοσούτῳ σοφωτέρους ἀπέδειξεν, ὅσῳ τῶν μικρῶν παιδίων τοὺς ἔμφρονας ἄνδρας ὑπερέχοντας ἐστὶν ἰδεῖν, &c. Chryſ. ἀνδρ. 19.

Chryſ. T. 6. Or. 61. (pag. 633.)

So real a property it is of God's law to give ſubtilty to the ſimple, to the young man knowledge and diſcretion; ſo true it is, that our Lord affirmeth of himſelf, I came a light into the world, that he who believeth in me, may not abide in darkneſs; ſo juſtly doth S. Paul affirm concerning divine revelation, that it is able to make a man wiſe to ſalvation, through faith, which is in Chriſt Jeſus; being profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteouſneſs, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furniſhed unto all good works. This is that high-way of holineſs of which the Prophet ſaith — the way-faring men, though fools, ſhall not err therein. Thus is faith in its nature honourable.

Prov. 1. 4. Pſ. 19. 7. Pſ. 119. 9, 100, 130. Joh. 12. 46. 8. 12.

2 Tit. 3. 15, 16, 17.

Iſ. 35. 8.

II. It hath alſo divers ingredients, or inſeparable adjuncts, which it doth imply, rendring it commendable and acceptable to God. As

1. Faith implyeth a good uſe of reaſon. This is that which commendeth any vertue, that a man acting after it, doth act wiſely, in conformity formity to the frame and deſign of his nature, or like a rational creature; uſing his beſt faculties in the beſt manner, and in their proper operations toward the end intended by the all-wiſe Creatour: this is that, upon which all diſpenſation of juſtice is founded, a man being accomptable for the uſe of his reaſon, ſo as to deſerve reward for the right management, and puniſhment for the miſuſe thereof; this is that conſequently, whereon God ſo often declareth himſelf to ground his judgment; ſo that in effect he will juſtifie men for being wiſe, and condemn them as guilty of folly; whence in the holy Style wiſdom, and vertue or piety, are terms equivalent; and a fool doth ſignifie the ſame with a vitious, or impious perſon. And if ever a man deſerveth commendation for well uſing his reaſon, it is then, when upon mature deliberation he doth embrace the Chriſtian doctrine; for ſo doing is a moſt rational act, arguing the perſon to be ſagacious, conſiderate and judicious; one, who doth carefully enquire into things, doth ſeriouſly weigh the caſe, doth judge ſoundly about it.

Πᾶν τὸ παρὰ τὸν λόγον τὸν ὀρθὸν, τοῦτο ἁμάρτημα ἐστι, &c. Clem. Alex. Pæd. 1. 13.

Deut. 4. 6. 32. 29.
Pſ. 111. 10.
Job 28. 28.
Prov. 1. 7, 9, 10.

It was a foul aſperſion caſt upon our Religion by its ancient oppoſers, that it did require ψιλὴν καὶ ἄλογον πίστιν, a mere belief, void of reaſon: challenging aſſent to its doctrines without any trial or proof; this ſuggeſtion, if true, were I confeſs, a mighty prejudice againſt it, and no man indeed juſtly could be obliged to admit it upon ſuch terms; but it is really a groſs calumny; ſuch a proceeding being diſclaimed by the teachers and advocates of our Religion, being repugnant to the nature, and tenour thereof; being prejudicial to its intereſt and deſign; being contrary to its uſe, and practice. Never any Religion was indeed ſo little liable to the cenſure of obtruding it ſelf on mens credulity, none ever ſo freely expoſed it ſelf to a fair trial at the bar of reaſon; none ever ſo earneſtly invited men to ſcann and ſift its pretences; yea provoked them for its ſake and their own, upon moſt important conſiderations (at the peril of their ſouls, as they tendered their own beſt advantage) to a fair, diſcreet, carefull examination thereof. Other Religions have for their juſtification inſiſted upon the examples of Anceſtours, cuſtom and preſcription of times, large extent and prevalence among crews of people, eſtabliſhment by civil laws, and countenance of ſecular powers (arguments extrinſecal, and of ſmall validity in any caſe) declining all other teſt and verdict of reaſon: But our Religion confideth in its ſelf, and the pure merit of its cauſe; and therefore warneth men, in a caſe of ſuch moment, laying aſide all prejudice, to employ their beſt underſtandings on an induſtrious and impartial ſearch of the truth; referring the deciſion and reſult, ſo far as concerneth each particular man, to the verdict of that reaſon and conſcience, with which God, in order to ſuch purpoſes, hath endued every perſon.

Μὴ ἐξέταζε, ἀλλὰ πίστευσον, Orig. in Celſ. (p. 8. 4.)

Πίστευσον, εἰ σωθῆναι θέλεις, ἢ ἄπιθι. Id. in Celſ. 6. (p. 282.)

Ὁ ταῦτα πιστεύσας οὐχ ἁπλῶς οὐδὲ ἀλόγως, ἀλλὰ κρίσει καὶ πληροφορίᾳ χάρισμα εἴληφεν ἐκ θεοῦ. Conſt. Apoſt. 8. 1.

Δέχεσθε, φησιν, ἁπλῶς τὰ λεγόμενα, καὶ μηδεὶς ἐξεταζέτω τί πρέπον ἐν αὐτοῖς καὶ τί ἀπρεπές· καὶ πίστιν ὀνομάζει τὴν ἀβασάνιστον ἐπὶ τοῖς ἀφάτοις καὶ ἀναποδείκτοις ἐπὶ βλάβῃ συγκατάθεσιν. Athan. Tom. 2. p. 325. de Arianis.

Εὐγνώμων ἐξέτασις, Orig.

Lact. 2. 6.

Lact. 2. 7.

It indeed ordinarily doth refuſe a ſudden and precipitate aſſent, admitting no man, capable of judging and chuſing for himſelf, to the participation of it, or to the name and privileges of a worthy believer, untill after a competent time and opportunities of inſtruction, he can approve himſelf to underſtand it well, and doth avow himſelf to be cordially perſuaded of its truth.

Such is its method, and it hath not any need of other; God having provided and exhibited arguments abundantly ſufficient to convince any man of its truth, who is not affectedly blind and ſtupid, or wantonly ſlothfull and careleſs; or frowardly ſtiff and obſtinate.

What indeed better arguments (conſidering the nature of the objects, which faith reſpecteth, being things ſpiritual and inviſible; conſidering alſo the capacities of perſons concerned, being all ſorts of people, wiſe and ſimple, learned and rude) could we have, or could we need, than the conſpicuous excellency, and uſefulneſs of the doctrine, approving it ſelf to the mind, and confirming it ſelf by palpable experience of moſt happy fruits, ſpringing from a practice conformable thereto? than its exact correſpondence to manifold ancient preſignifications and predictions concerning it; than ſpecial atteſtations of God thereto not only by audible voices, and viſible apparitions from heaven, but alſo by innumerable miraculous works; than the concurrence of divine providence in ſtrange methods to the propagation and maintenance of it; than the bleſſings and conſolations, attending a faithfull obſervance of it? what ſubtilty of diſcourſe, what charm of eloquence could ſerve to evince and impreſs the great truths concerning the attributes, providence, will, commands and promiſes of God; concerning the immortal ſubſiſtence of our ſoul, the future judgment, the everlaſting rewards hereafter, with ſuch evidence and ſuch force, to the common and vulgar reaſon, or indeed to any reaſon of man, as do theſe plain arguments, needing no reach of wit, or depth of judgment to ſound their meaning, or feel their ſtrength?

1 Pet. 1. 10.
Heb. 2. 4.
Act. 4. 33.
19. 20.
Joh. 7. 17. Act. 5. 32.

Τί ἀναγκαστικώτερον εἰς συγκατάθεσιν, εἰπέ μοι, προτάσεων πλοκαὶ τὸ συμπέρασμα ἀκόλουθον ἑαυτοῖς ἐφελκόμεναι, ἢ θαῦμα τοσοῦτον ἐναργῶς ὁρώμενον, πᾶσαν ἀνθρώπου δύναμιν ὑπερβαῖνον Baſ. in Pſ. 115.

But if any man be too wiſe to be pleaſed with ſuch downright and eaſie ways of conviction, reaſon it ſelf, well followed would lead him hither, and ſerve to produce faith in him, for that there is a God, reaſon from obſervation of appearances in nature and providence will collect; that goodneſs is one of his principal attributes, reaſon from the ſame grounds will inferr; that God hath an eſpecial regard to men will thence alſo become notorious; that conſequently God will vouchſafe his guidance to men in their way toward happineſs, will appear reaſonable to conceive; that God hath not done this in any other way, reaſon comparing and weighing things, will eaſily diſcern; that Chriſtian doctrine may fairly pretend thereto, reaſon ſoon will admit; ſo hath reaſon led us to the door of faith, and being arrived thither, will (if our will be not averſe) eaſily find entrance.

Hence God doth not only allow, but enjoyn us to uſe our beſt reaſon in judging of this doctrine, whether it be from him, and worthy of our acceptance; he doth not bid us to retire into the dark, to ſhut our eyes, or to wink, when we receive it; but chargeth us to go into the cleareſt light; to open our eyes wide, to view it thoroughly with our beſt ſenſes, and ſharpeſt attention, before we do yield our conſent and approbation to it; His precepts are, that we examine all things, and hold faſt that which is good; that we believe not every ſpirit (or revelation pretended), but try the ſpirits, whether they be of God; that we ſtand on our guard, and take heed that no man deceive us; that we be not fools, nor children in underſtanding; but wiſe, and perfect men; that we compare things different, and try what is well pleaſing to God; that we be always ready with meekneſs and modeſty to render unto every man demanding it an account of the hope in us.

Joh. 3. 21.
1 Pet. 2. 9.
Act. 26. 18.
1 Theſ. 5. 21.
1 Joh. 4. 1.
Matt. 24. 4.
Eph. 5. 6.
Eph. 5. 15, 17.
1 Cor. 14. 20.
Eph. 5. 10.
Rom. 12. 2.
1 Cor. 10. 15.
Rom. 1. 18.
Phil. 1. 10. 1 Pet. 3. 15.

He therefore doth expoſtulate with men for their dulneſs, their in- Luk. 24. 45. cogitancy, their ſluggiſhneſs, their folly, as the cauſes of their unbelief; declaring that in reſpect to ſuch defaults, wilfully incurred, he Joh. 12. 48. will proceed to condemn it; He (ſaith our Lord) that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him; the word, that I Joh. 10. 37. have ſpoken, the ſame ſhall judge him in the laſt day; and, If I do not Joh. 15. 22, 24. the works of my Father, believe me not; If I had not come and ſpoken unto them — If I had not done among them the works, which no other man did, they had not had ſin: Our Lord we ſee did not urge his bare authority, or exact a faith without ground; but he claimeth it as due upon two moſt rational accounts; his convincing diſcourſes, and his Joh. 7. 46. 3. 2. unparallel'd works; which from any well adviſed and well diſpoſed perſon could not but win belief, that he was a teacher ſent from God.

Indeed, if we ſeriouſly do weigh the caſe, we ſhall find, that to require faith without reaſon, is to demand an impoſſibility; for faith is an effect of perſuaſion, and perſuaſion is nothing elſe but the application of ſome reaſon to the mind, apt to draw forth its aſſent; no man therefore can believe he knoweth not what or why; he that truly believeth, muſt apprehend the propoſition, and he muſt diſcern its connexion with ſome principle of truth, which as more notorious to him he before doth admit; otherwiſe he doth only pretend to believe, out of ſome deſign, or from affection to ſome party; his faith is not ſo much really faith, as hypocriſie, craft, fondneſs, or faction.

God therefore neither doth nor can enjoyn us faith without reaſon; but therefore doth require it, as matter of duty, from us, becauſe he hath furniſhed ſufficient reaſon to perſuade us; And having made his doctrine 1 Tim. 1. 15. credible, (a faithfull (or credible) word, and worthy of all acceptation.) having given us reaſon chiefly to be employed in ſuch matters, as he juſtly may claim our aſſent, ſo he will take well our ready ſurrendry of it to him, as an act of reaſon, and wiſdom becoming us.

To yield unto reaſon fairly propoſed and proved is in any caſe a laudable quality, ſignifying that a man hath his reaſon to purpoſe, that he is guided and governed thereby, not by humour or fancy; qualifying him for converſation and buſineſs, for which nothing rendreth a man more unfit than humorous incredulity, or obſtinacy againſt reaſon; It is eſpecially commendable in theſe caſes, concerning our better part, and final ſtate, arguing a man to be ſober and adviſed, affording regard to things beſt deſerving it, employing his conſideration in due place, being faithfull and juſt to himſelf, in attending to his main concernments.

2. Faith implyeth a complyance with the providence and grace of God; with his providence framing the œconomy of things to be believed, diſcovering it to the world by ſpecial revelation, furniſhing motives apt to work faith, diſpenſing opportunities of knowledge leading thereto; with his grace operating in our ſouls, by illuſtration of our minds to diſcern, attraction of our wills to embrace, inclination of our affections to reliſh and like the heavenly truths exhibited to us.

There is no man to whom means are not adminiſtred, ſufficient to produce in him that meaſure of faith, which is requiſite toward the good management of his life, and his rendring an account for it at God's tribunal; there is no man alſo, to whom ſuch means are afforded, 1 Tim. 2. 4. whom the grace of God (who deſireth that all men ſhould be ſaved, and come to the knowledge of the truth) doth not in ſome degree excite to the due improvement of them, but in effect the caſe is varied, becauſe ſome men do embrace thoſe means, and comply with that grace, while others do reject, or neglect them.

Our Lord ſaith, that every one, who hath heard of the Father, and hath learned, doth come unto him; but ſome there are, to whom the Father ſpeaketh, yet they ſtop their ears, and refuſe to hear; ſome do hear in a ſort, but do not learn, ill prejudices or depraved affections barring inſtruction from their mind; being like thoſe of whom the Apoſtle ſaith, the word heard did not profit them, being not mingled with faith in thoſe which heard it.

Joh. 6. 45. Job 33. 16. Zech. 7. 11. Ezek. 3. 11. 2 Tim. 4. 4. Act. 7. 57. Job 33. 14. 21. 14. Heb. 3. 7, 15. Heb. 4. 2.

No man (ſaith our Lord again) can come unto me except the Father draw him; but this attraction is not compulſory, we may hold back; we may withſtand it, and not follow.

Joh. 6. 44. Joh 5. 40. Matt. 22. 3. Luke 13. 34.

Faith (ſaith S. Paul) is a gift of God, and a favour granted to us; ὑμῖν ἐχαρίσθη, to you (ſaith he) it hath been graciouſly vouchſafed not only to believe in him, but alſo to ſuffer for him; and to you (ſaith our Lord) it is given to know the myſteries of the Kingdom of heaven; but this gift is not always accepted, this favour is not always entertained; God doth not ſo obtrude it on us, but that we may reject, or decline it.

Eph. 2. 8. Phil. 1. 29. (Eph. 1. 17, 18.) Matt. 13. 11.

Faith is a fruit of God's ſpirit; but ſuch as will not grow in a bad ſoil, not purged from weeds of corrupt prejudice, of vitious affection, of worldly care; which will not thrive without good care and culture.

Gal. 5. 22. Matt. 16. 17. 1 Cor. 12. 3, 9. 1 Joh. 2. 20. 4. 2.

God inviteth us to believe by the promulgation of his Goſpel, and exhortation of his Miniſters; he declareth abundant reaſon to perſuade us; he repreſenteth to our minds the beauty of Chriſtian truth and vertue; he ſpeaketh from without unto us by manifold arguments, able if we are not very ſtupid to convince us; he ſpeaketh within by ſtrong impreſſions on our conſciences, apt if we are not very ſtubborn to ſubdue us; Behold, ſaith he, I ſtand at the door, and knock; if any man will hear my voice, and will open the door, I will come in unto him; ſuch is the caſe, God ſtandeth at the door of our heart by the miniſtery of his word, he knocketh at it by the impulſe of his grace; but to hear is the work of our vigilance, to open is an act of our voluntary complyance.

2 Cor. 4. 13. 2 Cor. 5. 20. Apoc. 3. 20.

God (ſaith S. Paul,) who commanded the light to ſhine out of darkneſs, hath ſhined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jeſus Chriſt; God ſhineth upon us by revelation of his truth, God ſhineth into us by illumination of his ſpirit; the which through the ear doth convey the light of truth unto the heart; but we may by wilfull obſtruction exclude that light, ſhutting the windows of our heart againſt it; we may there quench it by foul affections, we may ſmother it in foggs of evil prejudice; we may diſſipate it by troubleſome cares; we may by affected blindneſs, or drowſie negligence render it indiſcernible, or ineffectual to us; like thoſe, of whom the Apoſtle there ſaith, that the God of this world had blinded the minds of thoſe which believe not, leſt the light of the glorious Goſpel of Chriſt, who is the image of God, ſhould ſhine unto them.

2 Cor. 4. 6. Eph. 1. 17, 18. 2 Cor. 3. 14. ἐπωρώθη τὰ νοήματα. 2 Cor 4. 4.

A man may ἀπωθεῖσθαι τὸν λόγον, thruſt away the word, as it is ſaid of the Jews; he may, as others of the ſame ſtamp did, reſiſt the ſpirit; he may (as thoſe worldlings in the Goſpel) let the ſeed fall beſide him, or not fall deep into him, or fall into thorns, which may choke it; he may hate the light, and therefore not come unto it; or rebell againſt it, as thoſe did in Job; he may, as the Phariſees did, defeat the counſels, and croſs the deſires of God.

Act. 13. 46. Act. 7. 51. Matt. 13. 4, &c. Joh. 3. 20. 5. Job 24. 13. Luke 7. 30. Matt. 23. 37.

And as to deal thus with God's word and providence, thus to treat his ſpirit and grace is heinouſly criminal, ſo to uſe them well is very acceptable to God's goodneſs; if we yield due regard to his providence, and an obſequious ear to his word; if we chearfully do accept his gifts, and cloſe with his overtures of mercy; if we concurr with his motions and farther his gracious deſigns, he will take it kindly of us; as therein acting becomingly toward him, and gratifying him in that, wherein he moſt delighteth, which is the procurement of our good.

3. Faith doth imply good opinion of God, and good actions toward him.

Τὸ φυσικὸν οὖν φίλτρον περὶ τὸν κτίσαντα. Orig.

God our parent hath ſtamped on our nature ſome lineaments of himſelf, whereby we reſemble him; he hath implanted in our ſoul ſome roots of piety toward him, into our frame he hath inſerted ſome propenſions to acknowledge him, and to affect him; the which are excited and improved by obſerving the manifeſt footſteps of divine power, wiſdom and goodneſs, which occurr in the works of nature and providence; to preſerve and cheriſh theſe is very commendable; a man thereby keeping the pretious reliques of the divine image from utter defacement, retaining ſomewhat of his primitive worth and integrity; declaring that by ill uſage he hath not quite ſhattered or ſpoiled his beſt faculties and inclinations.

Rom. 8. 7.
1 Cor. 2. 14.

Now that he who believeth hath thus managed himſelf, ſo as to have preſerved in his ſoul thoſe ſeeds of piety, apt to conſpire with the influences of grace drawing to belief, doth appear from hence, that faith doth include an aſſent to divers points, ſo thwarting our carnal ſenſe and guſt, that without a good eſteem of God, and good affection toward him, we hardly could admit them; the carnal mind (or brutiſh part within us) being, as S. Paul ſaith, enmity to God, and uncapable of ſubmiſſion to his law; the ſenſual man being not able to receive the things of God, for they are fooliſhneſs to him; to balance which repugnance and indiſpoſition, there muſt be ſome good notions and good affections in the mind, diſpoſing it to comply with the revelation of truth, and operation of grace.

Jam. 2. 23.
Rom. 4. 18, 21.
Heb. 11. 19, 11.

There can hardly be any greater inſtance of reſpect and love toward any perſon, than a ready yielding of aſſent to his words, when he doth averr things to our conceit abſurd or incredible; than reſting on his promiſe, when he ſeemeth to offer things impoſſible, or ſtrangely difficult; than imbracing his advice, when he recommendeth things very croſs to our intereſt, humour and pleaſure; whence Abraham's faith (expreſſed in hoping for a Son in his decrepit age, and in offering up that Son, who was ſo dear to him, who was the heir of promiſe, the prop of his family and hope) is ſo magnified, as an argument of exceeding reſpect and affection toward God; Abraham believed God, and it was imputed to him for righteouſneſs, and he was called the friend of God; it was a great evidence of his friendſhip, that againſt hope he believed in hope, being fully perſuaded that what God had promiſed, he was able to perform; and therefore it was imputed to him for righteouſneſs; or accepted by God, as a ſignal act of goodneſs, whereby he did teſtifie his immovable opinion concerning the power, fidelity and benignity of God, together with anſwerable good-will toward him.

And many things doth the Chriſtian doctrine propoſe, apt to try ſuch a friendſhip; many a hard ſaying doth it aſſert, which a profane mind can hardly ſwallow, or digeſt; there is indeed ſcarce any Article of faith, at which we ſhall not boggle; any matter of duty, which we ſhall not ſtart at, any promiſe of God, whereat we ſhall not ſtagger, if we be not ſeaſoned with favourable apprehenſions and inclinations toward him, who recommendeth them to us, as endued with thoſe attributes, which ſecure their credibility.

That God Almighty ſhould erect this ſtately fabrick of heaven and earth, decked with ſo rich and goodly furniture, with eſpecial regard to Man, ſo puny and mean a creature, whom he foreſaw ſo ready to offend and wrong him; that upon his foul miſdemeanour God ſhould not withdraw his gracious protection and care from him, but thence ſhould take occaſion of deſigning and capacitating him for a ſtate far more happy, than that, whence he had lapſed, making his puniſhment a benefit, and his deſerved death a gate of immortality; That for the redemption of him (continuing in Apoſtaſie, and rebellious enmity) God ſhould pleaſe to ſend down out of his boſom, from the height of glory and bleſſedneſs, his own deareſt Son, to partake the baſeneſs and infirmity of our fleſh, to endure the inconveniences and troubles incident to our condition, to undergo a moſt painful and ignominious death for the expiation of our offences; theſe are myſteries, to which we ſhould not eaſily give credence, did we not conceive God immenſly good and gracious.

That God could not pitch on more compendious and commodious ways of expreſſing his goodneſs and mercy, we hardly ſhould admit; if we did not take him to be tranſcendently wiſe, far beyond our reach, and comprehenſion.

Eph. 3. 8. ἀνεξιχνίαστος πλοῦτος τοῦ Χριστοῦ.

That Jeſus, a man in appearance like to our ſelves; of mean parentage, of poor eſtate, who lived as a beggar and a vagrant, who died as a malefactour and a ſlave, in ſemblance forlorn to God and man, ſhould be the Lord of life and glory, the general author of ſalvation, the Judge of all men, the King of all the world, is a point, which cannot but appear very ſtrange, very ſcandalous to minds, not imbued with ſpecial reverence of the divine power and wiſdom.

That God who is ſo perfectly holy, ſo exactly juſt, ſo extremely diſpleaſed with iniquity, ſhould yet bear ſo patiently, and ſo eaſily pardon enormous tranſgreſſions againſt himſelf; that he ſhould accept ſo mean ſervices, and to ſo ſlight performances ſhould diſpenſe ſo precious rewards, who would believe, that is not poſſeſſed with conceptions of his admirable clemency and bounty?

That God one day will raiſe the dead, recollecting our ſcattered duſt, and rearing our diſſolved frame, we ſhould not eaſily grant, had we not a ſtrong opinion of God's power, and that nothing is too hard for him to accompliſh.

That to deny our ſelves in all ways, to hate our own ſouls, to take up a croſs, to forſake kindred and friends, to quit houſes and lands, to renounce all that we have, to reject the profits, the honours, the delights of the world, to cut off our right hands, to pluck out our right eyes, to mortifie our members, and crucifie our fleſh; to be dead to the world; to expoſe our lives unto greateſt dangers, yea to ſacrifice them unto certain loſs, are often things very good, moſt adviſable and eligible, how could we be ever induced to conceive, if we did not take God to be moſt wiſe, who hath preſcribed ſuch duties, moſt faithful who hath engaged to ſatisfie us for the diſcharge of them, moſt able fully to requite us for the pains and damages, which we ſuſtain in ſuch practice?

That the methods of providence ſhould be ſo intricate and unaccountable, that the paſſage to happineſs ſhould be ſo rough, and that to miſery ſo ſmooth; that He who diſpoſeth all things, ſhould to thoſe whom he moſt liketh and loveth diſpenſe temptations, croſſes, diſgraces, all kinds of hardſhip and ſorrow; permitting thoſe whom he diſapproveth and deteſteth, to live without interruption in quiet, ſplendour and jollity; would ſtumble one, who hath not entertained a general aſſurance concerning the wiſdom and equity of God.

Faith therefore in moſt of its chief parts doth imply him that owneth it, to be well conceited, and well affected toward his Maker; thereby avowing his moſt glorious perfections, the which do aſſure the truth of
Joh. 3. 3. his word and doctrine; He (ſaith our Lord) that hath received my teſtimony, hath ſet his ſeal, that God is true; that is, moſt evidently he doth ſignifie his opinion of God's veracity and fidelity, together with the divine perfections requiſite to make them good; for be (ſaith the believer in his mind) the propoſition never ſo uncouth to my apprehenſion, yet God is true who affirmeth it; be the duty never ſo harſh to my ſenſe, yet God is wiſe and good who appointeth it; be the promiſe never ſo unlikely in appearance to find effect, yet God is faithful and able to perform it: And he that is thus diſpoſed in judgment and affection toward God, no wonder if his demeanour be very acceptable to him.

Thus is faith precious, conſidering its nature, and thoſe eſſential ingredients, or inſeparable adjuncts, which it doth include or imply. It will alſo appear to be ſo, if we conſider its riſe, and thoſe good diſpoſitions, which concurr in its production.

III. 1. To the engendring of faith there is required a mind ſober, com-
1 Theſ. 5. 6. poſed and wakeful; ready to obſerve what befalleth, apt to embrace what is offered, conducible to our good and advantage; a mind not ſo drowned in worldly care, ſenſual enjoyment, or impertinent ſport, as to overſee, or neglect the concerns of our better part, and eternal ſtate.

Deut. 29. 4. That we may believe, we muſt have eyes to ſee, and ears to hear;
Matt. 13. 9. and a heart to underſtand; we muſt attently look with our eyes; we 11. 15 Apoc. 2. 7. Pſ. 78. 1. muſt incline our ears to God's word, we muſt apply our heart to in- Job 13. 17. ſtruction.
Iſ. 32. 3. 35. 5.
Prov. 23. 12. 2. 10. 4. 1, &c. 7. 24.

Thus in the Apoſtolical hiſtory we may obſerve, that when the Apoſtles in a manner apt to ſtir any man, being awake, to remark did propoſe their doctrine, ſome readily did yield their ears and hearts to their diſcourſe; while others did not mind or regard it.

2. Faith doth require much diligence and induſtry: we muſt have 1 Tim. 4. 13. the patience to give God the hearing, carefully attending to what is Act. 16. 14. propounded, as it is ſaid of Lydia, that ſhe did προσέχειν, attend to the
Heb. 2. 1. words ſpoken by Saint Paul, and δεῖ περισσοτέρως προσέχειν, we muſt (ſaith the Apoſtle to the Hebrews) yield extraordinary attention to the things
Luke 9. 44. heard; we muſt as our Saviour warneth, let the Evangelical word ſink down into our ears: we muſt take the pains to conſider the notions, and to weigh the reaſons enforcing them; as the Berœans did, who did ἀνα-
Act. 17. 11. κρίνειν τὰς γραφὰς, examine the Scriptures, whether thoſe things were ſo, Heb. 6. 11, 12. as S. Paul did teach out of them. We muſt ἐνδείκνυσθαι τὴν σπουδὴν, ex-
Heb. 4. 11. σπουδάσωμεν εἰσελθεῖν. ert and demonſtrate that ſtudious care, which is requiſite to get a clear knowledge, and firm perſuaſion concerning the points of belief; for he that received the ſeed into the good ground, was ὁ τὸν λόγον ἀκούων καὶ Mat. 13. 23. συνιὼν, he that heard the word, and did underſtand it, or well conſider it; God for this reaſon doth lay his truth not ſo open, or obvious, that we may be ſomewhat exerciſed, and put to uſe a pious diligence in finding it; it lieth under the ſurface that we may delve for it; ſearch- Joh. 5. 39. ing the Scriptures, weighing reaſons, comparing things.

3. Faith muſt needs proceed from ſincerity, and ſoundneſs of judgment.

The aſſent, which upon contemplation, and conſidering of things we do yield to them, is uſually termed judgment; and it much reſembleth that act, whoſe name it borroweth; for as he is a good judge, who after a full cogniſance, and careful diſcuſſion of the caſe with its pleas, doth pronounce freely and fairly, being no way ſwayed either by his own inclination, or by temptation from without; who is not byaſſed by any previous affection or diſlike, not drawn by favour, not daunted by fear, not bribed by profit, not charmed by flattery, not dazled by ſpecious appearance, not gulled by crafty inſinuations, or by fine ſpeech; not tired by ſolicitation or importunity, not ſeduced by precedents or cuſtom; not perverted by any ſuch means, which are indirect, impertinent, or extrinſecal to the cauſe, ſo as to give a wrong ſentence; ſo is he that aſſenteth to Chriſtian truth; many conſiderations will exempt him from any ſuſpicion of being any-wiſe ſo corrupted:

For the Goſpel cometh under trial in a guiſe no-wiſe plauſible or ad- Joh. 7. 24. μὴ κρίνετε κατ' ὄψιν. vantageous to humane conceit: its garb and circumſtances are no-wiſe taking, or attractive of any favour to it; but ſuch rather, as are apt to raiſe diſlike and ſcandal againſt it; it being, as S. Paul ſaith, preſented up in earthen veſſels, in way very homely, and contemptible. 2 Cor. 4. 7. Gal. 4. 13. It repreſenteth a mean, a poor, a perſecuted, a crucified man offering ſalvation, and claiming obedience; attended by perſons of like condi- 1 Cor. 2. 3. tion and fortune, urging the ſame overtures and pretences upon us; and what impreſſion is ſuch an appearance likely to work upon our fancy, which is prone to affect ſplendid and pompous ſhews?

The ſame doth not preſent to us any bribe of gain, doth not tempt us with any hope of preferment, doth not allure us with any bait of pleaſure; but challengeth a free ſentence; and that ſuch an one, which may greatly prejudice our worldly intereſts, may ſpoil our profit, may Joh. 16. 33. 17. 14. ſtop our preferment, may daſh all our pleaſure; in the world ye ſhall Act 14. 22. have tribulation; we muſt through many tribulations enter into the King- 1 Pet. 2. 21. dom of God; Every one that will live godlily in Chriſt Jeſus, muſt ſuffer 2 Tim. 3. 12. 1 Theſ. 3. 3. perſecution; If any man will come after me, let him deny himſelf, and Phil. 1. 29. take up his croſs and follow me: ſuch are the promiſes and enticements Eph. 3. 13. Mat. 16. 24. 10. 38. it uſeth.

Neither doth it ſooth our court us by glozing ſpeech, ſo as to recommend it ſelf to our fancies by raiſing in us a good conceit of our ſelves; but dealeth bluntly and courſely with us; faithfully and plainly acquainting us with our own caſe, involved in its cauſe; how grievous ſinners we be, how obnoxious to juſtice we ſtand; how worthleſs we are, how wretched we ſhall be, ſecluding that mercy and grace of God, which it tendreth upon its own terms, of confeſſing our guilt, diſclaiming our merit, humbly ſeeking mercy, forſaking our own ways, and ſubmitting to God's will.

It doth not ſolicit us in trimm language, nor by ſly inſinuations doth inveagle us to embrace it, but in downright terms, in a plain dreſs of ſpeech, in a reſolute ſtrain doth charge us, upon our peril, to do it right, denouncing upon our refuſal extremities of wrath and vengeance.

It advanceth pleas againſt the bent of our temper, which ever is prone to things forbidden and averſe from things enjoyned by it: againſt the prejudices of our mind, which is always apt to approve or to admire things, which it condemneth or vilifieth; to diſlike or deſpiſe things, which it commendeth and magnifieth: againſt the affections of our heart, the deareſt objects of whoſe love, delight and care it would diſcard and drive from us; the moſt unwelcome and diſguſtful things whereto, it would introduce and bring to us: againſt our ſtrongeſt appetites, and moſt earneſt paſſions; the violent motions of which it doth curb and check; doth quell, or doth allay: againſt many temptations, potently drawing us to things from which it reclaimeth, ſtoutly driving us from things which it recommendeth: againſt the ſtream of habitual uſage, and the torrent of common example, things ſo prevalent upon us: in fine, againſt our ſelves, ſuch as we naturally are, ſuch as we by education and cuſtom are made; whom it impeacheth of heinous guilt and enormous folly; whoſe conceit and credit it debaſeth; whom it depreſſeth into the confines of hell and miſery: all within us, all about us do with might and main oppoſe it; Our luſt, our fancy, our honour, our intereſt, our reputation, our principles, our cuſtoms, our friends, our enemies; the fleſh, the world, the Devil, all combinedly are ſo many fierce adverſaries, ſo many ſhrewd advocates, ſo many clamorous ſolicitours againſt its cauſe.

He therefore, who notwithſtanding all theſe diſadvantages determineth in favour of it, muſt aſſuredly be a very upright, impartial and incorrupt judge; declaring his ſenſe purely according to the dictates of his reaſon and conſcience.

What indeed greater integrity can a man expreſs, than in thus deciding a cauſe referred to him ſo much againſt himſelf, as he is naturally affected, and ſtandeth related to things here? what greater equity can he ſhew than in avowing ſo harſh, ſo rough, ſo unpleaſing truths, ſo little gratifying his own ſenſe or fancy, ſo little favouring his profit or pleaſure? what greater ingenuity can there be, than to eſpouſe that doctrine, which pincheth our liberty within ſo narrow bounds, which layeth ſuch reſtraints upon our thoughts, our words, our actions; which interdicteth to us ſo many enjoyments, which exacteth from us ſo great pains?

4. To the begetting faith there muſt concurr humility, or a readineſs to entertain ſober and moderate opinions of our ſelves, together with ſutable affections and deſires, for he that with hearty perſuaſion and ſerious reſolution embraceth Chriſtianity, doth thereby ſtoop to many things very croſs to the vain conceit, the proud humour, and haughty ſtomach of man.

The firſt ſtep into the Chriſtian ſtate is a ſight and ſenſe of our own imperfection, weakneſs, baſeneſs and miſery: we muſt diſcern and feel, that our mind is very blind and our reaſon very feeble; that our will is very impotent, lame, depraved, prone to evil, and averſe from good: that our life is void of merit, and polluted with guilt; that our condition is deplorably ſad and wretched; that of our ſelves we are inſufficient to think, or do any good, in order to our recovery, or deliverance; whence we are obliged to ſore compunction of ſpirit for our deeds and our caſe, to humble confeſſion of our ſins and miſeries, to earneſt earneſt ſupplication for mercy and grace, to heal and reſue us from our ſad eſtate: Lord have mercy on me, a ſinner: what ſhall I do to be ſaved? Wretched man that I am, who ſhall deliver me from this body of death? ſuch are the ejaculations of a ſoul teeming with faith.

2 Cor. 3. 5.

Luke 18. 13.
Act. 16. 30.
Rom. 7. 24.

He that entereth into the faith, muſt therewith entirely ſubmit his underſtanding, and reſign his judgment to God, as his maſter and guide; being ready to believe whatever God declareth, however to his ſeeming unintelligible or incredible; to follow whither God conducteth, although like Abraham he knoweth not whither he goeth; to approve that which God ordaineth, however diſtaſteful to his ſenſe; to undertake that which God requireth, however difficult; to bear that which God impoſeth, how burthenſome ſoever; being content that divine wiſdom ſhall abſolutely ſway and reign over his wiſdom; that his reaſon ſhall be puzled, ſhall be baffled in many caſes; that his mind ſhall be rifled of all its prejudices, its fond curioſities, its preſumptuous confidences, of every thought, and device advancing it ſelf againſt divine truth.

Naz. Or. 26. p. 454.
Heb. 11. 8. οὐκ ἐπιστάμενος ποῦ ἔρχεται.
2 Cor. 10. 5.

He muſt abandon all good opinion of himſelf, all conceitedneſs of his own worth, merit, excellency, felicity in any kind; ſlighting his wealth, his power, his dignity, his wit, his wiſdom, and the like advantages natural or ſecular, which are ſo much prized in vulgar and worldly eſteem; as things in themſelves of no conſideration, nor otherwiſe valuable than as talents entruſted by God, or inſtruments of his ſervice; diſowning them from himſelf, as things freely diſpenſed by God, and abſolutely depending on his diſpoſal: ſaying with S. Paul, Yea doubtleſs I count all things but loſs for the excellency of the knowledge of Chriſt Jeſus my Lord, for whom I have ſuffered the loſs of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may win Chriſt; and be found in him not having my own righteouſneſs, which is of the law; but that which is through the faith of Chriſt.

Phil. 3. 8, 9.

He alſo that cordially doth embrace the Chriſtian doctrine, with reſolution of conforming his practice thereto, muſt look for it to ſuſtain much diſgrace; to be hated, to be cenſured and taxed, to be ſlighted and ſcorned, to be reproached, to be ſpurned as a fool, an Idiot, a humouriſt, a ſilly, ſuperſtitious, phantaſtical, moroſe body, by the world, and the adherents to its corrupt principles, its vitious faſhions, its depraved ſentiments and practices; who will wonder (with indignation and ſcorn) at thoſe, who do not run into the ſame exceſs of riot, ſpeaking evil and railing at them: eſpecially in times, when wickedneſs doth lift up its horn, when profaneneſs doth not only much prevail, but doth inſult, and vapour over piety.

Joh. 15. 18, 19.
1 Pet. 4. 4. βλασφημοῦντες.

Every Chriſtian as ſuch immediately doth admit notions quite debaſing high conceit, which aſcribe all our good things purely to divine bounty, which allow us to own nothing but evils ſpringing from our defects, infirmities, and corruptions, from our guilty naughtineſs and folly; which diſplay our great imperfection, indigency, impotency, ignorance, errour, unworthineſs and forlorn wretchedneſs; which aſſure, that we do ſubſiſt in total dependance upon God, continually needing his protection, ſuccour and mercy.

He muſt undertake the practice of duties extremely croſs to proud humour; to comport with injuries and affronts, without revenge, without reſentment of them; to place himſelf beneath others; to be content with his ſtate how mean and poor ſoever; to bear patiently all events incident to him, however ſad and grievous; with the like, contrary to the guſt of a proud heart.

He that doth thus demean himſelf, embracing ſuch notions, and complying with ſuch duties, how can he otherwiſe than be a very humble, ſober and modeſt perſon?

5. To faith much fortitude, much reſolution and courage muſt conſpire: for he that firmly perſuadeth himſelf to be a Chriſtian, doth embark in a moſt difficult, and dreadful warfare; doth undertake moſt high and hazardous enterprizes; doth engage in the boldeſt adventures, that a man can ſet upon; he intendeth to encounter moſt puiſſant, ſtout and fierce enemies; to fight many a bloody battel; to attack many a ſtrong hold, to ſuſtain many a ſharp brunt, to endure many ſore hardſhips, to run into many terrible dangers, to break through many tough difficulties, to ſurmount many great diſcouragements, impediments and oppoſitions.

1 Joh. 5. 4. He doth ſet himſelf in array againſt the world, the fleſh, and the Devil, that ſtrong confederacy bandied againſt him with their utmoſt force of ſtrength and ſubtilty.

Eph 2 2.4.22 He muſt combat the world, by its fair looks, flatteries and careſſes
Rom. 12. 2. enticing to ſin; by its frowns, menaces and rough treatments deter-
1 Cor. 7. 31. ring from duty, enſnaring us by its profits, its glories, its pleaſures;
2 Pet. 1. 4. ſeducing us by its bad cuſtoms, and examples, diſtracting us with its cares, and amuſements of buſineſs.

He muſt cope with the fleſh, that inteſtine and treacherous foe; which with its corrupt prejudices, and imaginations; with its ſtubborn proclivities, with its impetuous appetites, with its boiſterous paſſions, 1 Pet. 2. 11. doth war againſt our ſoul, ſtriving to bring our minds into captivity under
Rom. 7. 23. the law of ſin, which is in our members.

Eph. 6. 12. He muſt grapple with the Devil, that ſtrong one, that greedy lion,
1 Pet. 5. 8, 9. that wily ſnake, that ruful dragon, always waiting to ſurprize us, al-
Eph. 6. 11. 4. 12. ways gaping to devour us; always laying cloſe trains to entrap us, al-
2 Cor. 2. 11. ways throwing fiery darts of temptation, to conſume or ſcorch us;
Eph. 6. 12. Our wreſtling (as the Apoſtle doth expreſs it) is againſt principalities, againſt powers, againſt the rulers of the darkneſs of this world, againſt ſpiritual wickedneſſes in high places.

In theſe conflicts he muſt expect to meet with many a grievous repulſe, to bear many a hard knock, to feel many a ſore wound; to be often beat back, often knocked down, often thruſt through, often trampled on, and inſulted over.

To ſet on theſe things is ſurely the higheſt gallantry that can be; he that hath the heart to attempt and undergo ſuch things, is a daring and brave man indeed; he that ſucceſsfully can atchieve ſuch exploits is truly a Heroe; moſt deſerving notable trophies, and everlaſting monuments of renown.

The undertakings of Alexander, of Hannibal, of Cæſar did not ſignifie valour like to this, their atcheivements were but toyes in compariſon to theſe: thoſe famous gallants would have found it infinitely harder to conquer the world in this way; to have ſubdued their luſts, and maſtered their paſſions would have proved far more difficult, than to get advantage in ſcuffles with armed men; to diſcomfit legions of Devils, would have been to them another kind of work, than was the vanquiſhing ſquadrons of Perſians, of Gauls, of Romans: to have ſet upon their own ambition and vanity, their intemperance, their revenge, to have quelled thoſe inward enemies, to have ſuſtained affronts, diſgraces, afflictions with a calm and contented mind, would have more tried their courage, than all which they attempted; making a great ſhew, but ſignifying little of true fortitude.

6. The noble vertue of patience is likewiſe acceſſary to faith; thereto all kinds of patience muſt concurr; patience of labour in God's ſer-vice, and obedience to all his commands; patience of hope in waiting 1 Theſ 1. 3.
for the accompliſhment of God's pleaſure; patience of perſecution for God's ſake, and in conſcience of our duty to him; patience of croſſes and afflictions by God's Diſpoſal allotted to us for our inſtruction, our exerciſe, our probation, our correction and improvement in goodneſs. For Chriſtianity is the great School, and ſpecial Academy of patience, Heb. 5. 8.

wherein we are informed, are inured, are trained up and tried to bear Heb. 12. 6.
all things: The croſs is the badge of our profeſſion, without Matt. 16. 24.
willingly carrying which, we cannot be the children of God, or diſciples of Chriſt; whereby we are conformed to the image of our Lord, Rom 8. 29.
the man of ſorrow, and acquainted with grief: Tribulation is our lot, Iſ. 53. 3.
to which we are appointed; and to which we are called; perſecution is 1 Theſ 3. 3.
the condition, propoſed to us; it being told us, that Every one, who 1 Pet. 2. 21.
will live godlily in Chriſt Jeſus, muſt ſuffer perſecution; affliction is the 1 Tim. 3. 12.
way toward our happineſs, for by many afflictions we muſt enter into the Act. 14. 22.
Kingdom of heaven; it is repreſented as a favour granted to us to ſuffer; for ὑμῖν ἐχαρίσθη, to you (ſaith S. Paul) it hath been indulged, not Phil. 1. 29.
only to believe in Chriſt, but to ſuffer for him; it is our glory, our joy, Eph. 3. 13. Matt. 5. 11.
our beatitude. Our work is to run with patience the race that is ſet be- Jam. 1. 2.
fore us; in fine, faith and patience are the pair, which being coupled Rom. 5. 3. Jam. 1. 12.
together draw us to the inheritance of the promiſes; patience being 1 Pet. 4. 14.
needful to introduce and ſupport faith. 3. 14 Heb. 12. 1.

Heb. 6. 12. Apoç. 13. 10. Heb. 10. 36. Luk. 21. 19.

7. With faith alſo muſt concurr the vertue of prudence; in all its parts and inſtances: therein is exerted a ſagacity, diſcerning things as they really are in themſelves, not as they appear through the maſks and diſguiſes of fallacious ſemblance, whereby they would delude us; not ſuffering us to be abuſed by the gaudy ſhews, the falſe gloſſes, the tempting allurements of things; therein we muſt uſe diſcretion in prizing things rightly according to their true nature and intrinſick worth; in chuſing things really good, and rejecting things truly evil, however each kind may ſeem to our erroneous ſenſe; therein we muſt have a good proſpect extending it ſelf to the final conſequences of things, ſo that looking over preſent contingencies we deſcry what certainly will befall us through the courſe of eternal ages.

In faith is exerciſed that prudence, which guideth and prompteth us to walk by the beſt rules, to act in the beſt manner, to apply the beſt means toward attainment of the beſt ends.

The prudence of faith is indeed the only prudence conſiderable; all other prudence regarding objects very low and ignoble, tending to deſigns very mean or baſe, having fruits very poor or vain: To be wiſe about affairs of this life (theſe fleeting, theſe empty, theſe deceitful ſhadows) is a ſorry wiſdom; to be wiſe in purveying for the Rom. 13. 14.
fleſh, is the wiſdom of a beaſt, which is wiſe enough to prog for its ſuſtenance; to be wiſe in gratifying fancy, is the wiſdom of a child, who can eaſily entertain and pleaſe himſelf with trifles; to be wiſe in contriving miſchief, or embroiling things is the wiſdom of a Fiend, in which the old ſerpent, or grand politician of hell doth exceed all the Machiavels in the world; this (as S. James ſaith) is earthly, ſenſual Jam. 3. 15.
deviliſh wiſdom; but the wiſdom of faith, or that wiſdom, which is Jam. 3. 17.
from above, is firſt pure, then peaceable; gentle, eaſie to be entreated, full of mercy and good works.

8. In fine, the embracing Chriſtian doctrine doth ſuppoſe a mind imbued with all kinds of vertuous diſpoſition in ſome good degree; for ſeeing that doctrine doth highly commend, and ſtrictly preſcribe all Vertue, he muſt needs be a friend to all vertue, and a devoted ſervant thereto, who can heartily approve, and like it: his eye muſt be ſound, and clear from miſts of bad prejudice, who can ken the beauty, and bear the luſtre of it; his palate muſt be pure from vitious tinctures who can reliſh its ſweetneſs, his heart muſt be void of corrupt affections and deſires, who ſincerely doth affect it, and firmly doth cleave thereto: his conſcience muſt be good, who can hope for the excellent rewards which it propoſeth, who can ſtand proof againſt the terrible menaces it denounceth; his intentions muſt be upright, who dareth offer them to be ſcann'd by ſo exact rules; his life muſt in good meaſure be blameleſs, who can preſent it before the bar of ſo rigorous judgment; he muſt be a man of much goodneſs, ingenuity and integrity, who can think it expedient, who can be content and willing that ſuch a doctrine be accounted true, which ſo plainly diſcountenanceth, which ſo peremptorily condemneth, which ſo ſeverely puniſheth all kinds of wickedneſs; for He (as our Saviour ſaith, and he alone) who doeth the truth, doth come to the light, that his deeds may be manifeſted. Faith therefore, and good conſcience are well by S. Paul ſo often coupled, as inſeparable aſſociates.

Chryſ. in 1 Cor. Or. 3.

Joh. 3. 21. 1 Tim. 1. 5. 1. 19. 3. 9.

Where now are they, who wonder, that faith is ſo commended, doth find ſuch acceptance with God, and is ſo crowned with reward; who would baniſh it from the company of vertues, and out of all moral conſideration; who would have it taken for an involuntary act, forced on the mind, and iſſuing from dry ſpeculation? for, ſeeing ſo many excellent diſpoſitions of ſoul are its ingredients, eſſentially connected with it, ſeeing ſo many noble acts of will do concurr to its production, ſeeing it hath ſo many choice vertues inſeparably adherent, as previous or concomitant, to it; it is no wonder that they ſhould moralize it, ſhould render it very conſiderable, ſo capable of praiſe, ſo worthy of recompence.

If we therefore do believe, becauſe we will apply our minds to regard our beſt concerns, becauſe we will yield due attention to the declarations and overtures of God, becauſe we will take the pains to weigh the reaſons perſuaſive of truth, becauſe we look on things with an indifferent eye, and judge uprightly about them; becauſe we have the courage, the patience, the prudence, the innocence, requiſite for avowing ſuch truths; then ſurely faith is voluntary; and therefore very commendable.

Whoever indeed will conſider the nature of man, or will conſult obvious experience, ſhall find, that in all practical matters, our will, or appetite hath a mighty influence upon our judgment of things; cauſing men with great attention to regard that which they affect, and carefully to mark all reaſons making for it; but averting from that which they diſlike, and making them to overlook the arguments which perſuade it; whence men generally do ſute their opinions to their inclinations; warping to that ſide where their intereſt doth lie, or to which their complexion, their humour, their paſſions, their pleaſure, their eaſe doth ſway them; ſo that almoſt any notion will ſeem true, which is profitable, which is ſafe, which is pleaſant, or any-wiſe grateful to them; that notion falſe, which in any ſuch reſpect doth croſs them; very few can abſtract their minds from ſuch conſiderations, or embrace pure truth, deveſted of them; and thoſe few, who do ſo, muſt therein moſt employ their will, by ſtrong efforts of voluntary reſolution and patience diſengaging their minds from thoſe cloggs and byaſſes. This is particularly notorious in mens adherence to Parties, divided in opinion, which is ſo regulated by that ſort of cauſes, that if you do mark what any man's temper is, and where his intereſt lieth, you may eaſily prognoſticate on what ſide he will be; and with what degree of ſeriouſneſs, of vigour, of zeal he will cleave thereto: a timorous man you may be almoſt ſure will be on the ſafer ſide, a covetous man will bend to that party, where gain is to be had, an ambitious man will cloſe with the opinion paſſing in Court; a careleſs man will comply with the faſhion; affection ariſing from education, or prejudice will hold others ſtiff; few do follow the reſults of impartial contemplation.

—— facile quæ credita proſunt Credimus ——

All faith therefore even in common things may be deemed voluntary, no leſs than intellectual; and Chriſtian faith is eſpecially ſuch, as requiring thereto more application of ſoul, managed by choice, than any other; whence the Ancients in their deſcription of it, do uſually include this condition, ſuppoſing it not to be a bare aſſent of the underſtanding, but a free conſent of the will: Faith (ſaith Clemens Alex.) is a ſpontaneous acceptance, and complyance with divine religion; and, To be made at firſt was not in our power; but God perſuadeth us to follow thoſe things, which he liketh, chuſing by the rational faculties, which he hath given us, and ſo leadeth us to faith; ſaith Juſtin the Martyr.

Πίστις πρόληψις ἑκούσιός ἐστι, θεοσεβείας συγκατάθεσις, &c Clem. Strom. 2. p. 265. Ἐθελοντὴν συνέπεσθαι τῷ συμφέροντι συνέσεως ἀρχὴ, Ibid. Τὸ μὲν ἀρχὴν γενέσθαι οὐχ ἡμέτερον ἦν. τὸ δ' ἐξακολουθῆσαι οἷς φίλον αὐτῷ αἱρουμένους δι' ὧν αὐτὸς ἐδωρήσατο λογικῶν δυνάμεων πείθει τε καὶ εἰς πίστιν ἄγει ἡμᾶς. Juſt. M. Apol. 2. (p. 58.)

The ſame is ſuppoſed in holy Scripture; where of believers it is ſaid, that they did ἀσμένως, gladly, or willingly receive the word, and they received it μετὰ πάσης προθυμίας with all willingneſs, or readineſs of mind. Act. 2. 41. Act. 17. 11.

And to defect of will infidelity is often aſcribed: Ye will not come unto me (ſaith our Saviour) that ye might have life; and, How often would I have gathered thy children together as a hen doth gather her brood under her wings, and ye would not? and, The Kingdom of heaven is like unto a certain King, which made a marriage for his ſon, and ſent forth his ſervants to call them that were bidden to the wedding, and they would not come: and, Of this (ſaith S. Peter of ſome profane infidels) they are willingly ignorant, that by the word of God the heavens were of old; and of the like S. Paul ſaith, that they received not the love of the truth, but had pleaſure in unrighteouſneſs.

Joh. 5. 40. Luk. 13. 34. Matt. 22. 3. 2 Pet. 3. 5. 2 Theſ. 2. 10, 12.

Indeed to prevent this exception, that faith is a forced act, and therefore not moral; or to render it more voluntary, and worthy, God hath not done all that he might have done to convince men, or to wring belief from them: he hath not ſtamped on his truth that glaring evidence, which might dazle our minds; he doth not propoſe it armed with irreſiſtible cogency; he hath not made the objects of faith conſpicuous to ſenſe, nor the propoſitions thereof demonſtrable by reaſon, like theoremes of Geometry; this indeed would be to depoſe faith, to deveſt it of its excellency, and bereave it of its praiſe; this were to deprive us of that bleſſedneſs, which is adjudged to thoſe, who believe and do not ſee: this would proſtitute Wiſdom to be deflowred by the fooliſh; and expoſe truth to be rifled by the profane: this would take from our reaſon its nobleſt exerciſe, and faireſt occaſion of improvement; this would confound perſons fit to be diſtinguiſhed, the ſagacious and the ſtupid, the diligent and the ſlothful, the ingenuous

Ἄπιστος, ὦ φίλοι ψεῦδος ἀκούσιον. Clem. Alex. Strom. (pag. 268.) & Plat. (p 841.)

Joh. 20. 29.

8. In fine, the embracing Chriſtian doctrine doth ſuppoſe a mind imbued with all kinds of vertuous diſpoſition in ſome good degree; for ſeeing that doctrine doth highly commend, and ſtrictly preſcribe all Vertue, he muſt needs be a friend to all vertue, and a devoted ſervant thereto, who can heartily approve, and like it: his eye muſt be ſound, and clear from miſts of bad prejudice, who can ken the beauty, and bear the luſtre of it; his palate muſt be pure from vitious tinctures who can reliſh its ſweetneſs, his heart muſt be void of corrupt affections and deſires, who ſincerely doth affect it, and firmly doth cleave thereto: his conſcience muſt be good, who can hope for the excellent rewards which it propoſeth, who can ſtand proof againſt the terrible menaces it denounceth; his intentions muſt be upright, who dareth offer them to be ſcann'd by ſo exact rules; his life muſt in good meaſure be blameleſs, who can preſent it before the bar of ſo rigorous judgment; he muſt be a man of much goodneſs, ingenuity and integrity, who can think it expedient, who can be content and willing that ſuch a doctrine be accounted true, which ſo plainly diſcountenanceth, which ſo peremptorily condemneth, which ſo ſeverely puniſheth all kinds of wickedneſs; for He (as our Saviour ſaith, and he alone) who doeth the truth, doth come to the light, that his deeds may be manifeſted. Faith therefore, and good conſcience are well by S. Paul ſo often coupled, as inſeparable aſſociates.

Chryſ. in 1 Cor. Or. 3.

Joh. 3. 21. 1 Tim. 1. 5. 1. 19. 3. 9.

Where now are they, who wonder, that faith is ſo commended, doth find ſuch acceptance with God, and is ſo crowned with reward; who would baniſh it from the company of vertues, and out of all moral conſideration; who would have it taken for an involuntary act, forced on the mind, and iſſuing from dry ſpeculation? for, ſeeing ſo many excellent diſpoſitions of ſoul are its ingredients, eſſentially connected with it, ſeeing ſo many noble acts of will do concurr to its production, ſeeing it hath ſo many choice vertues inſeparably adherent, as previous or concomitant, to it; it is no wonder that they ſhould moralize it, ſhould render it very conſiderable, ſo capable of praiſe, ſo worthy of recompence.

If we therefore do believe, becauſe we will apply our minds to regard our beſt concerns, becauſe we will yield due attention to the declarations and overtures of God, becauſe we will take the pains to weigh the reaſons perſuaſive of truth, becauſe we look on things with an indifferent eye, and judge uprightly about them; becauſe we have the courage, the patience, the prudence, the innocence, requiſite for avowing ſuch truths; then ſurely faith is voluntary; and therefore very commendable.

Whoever indeed will conſider the nature of man, or will conſult obvious experience, ſhall find, that in all practical matters, our will, or appetite hath a mighty influence upon our judgment of things; cauſing men with great attention to regard that which they affect, and carefully to mark all reaſons making for it; but averting from that which they diſlike, and making them to overlook the arguments which perſuade it; whence men generally do ſute their opinions to their inclinations; warping to that ſide where their intereſt doth lie, or to which their complexion, their humour, their paſſions, their pleaſure, their eaſe doth ſway them; ſo that almoſt any notion will ſeem true, which is profitable, which is ſafe, which is pleaſant, or any-wiſe grateful to them; that notion falſe, which in any ſuch reſpect doth croſs them; very few can abſtract their minds from ſuch conſiderations, or embrace pure truth, deveſted of them; and thoſe few, who do ſo, muſt therein moſt employ their will, by ſtrong efforts of voluntary reſolution and patience diſengaging their minds from thoſe cloggs and byaſſes. This is particularly notorious in mens adherence to Parties, divided in opinion, which is ſo regulated by that ſort of cauſes, that if you do mark what any man's temper is, and where his intereſt lieth, you may eaſily prognoſticate on what ſide he will be; and with what degree of ſeriouſneſs, of vigour, of zeal he will cleave thereto: a timorous man you may be almoſt ſure will be on the ſafer ſide, a covetous man will bend to that party, where gain is to be had, an ambitious man will cloſe with the opinion paſſing in Court; a careleſs man will comply with the faſhion; affection ariſing from education, or prejudice will hold others ſtiff; few do follow the reſults of impartial contemplation.

—— facilè quæ credita proſunt Credimus ——

All faith therefore even in common things may be deemed voluntary, no leſs than intellectual; and Chriſtian faith is eſpecially ſuch, as requiring thereto more application of ſoul, managed by choice, than any other; whence the Ancients in their deſcription of it, do uſually include this condition, ſuppoſing it not to be a bare aſſent of the underſtanding, but a free conſent of the will: Faith (ſaith Clemens Alex.) is a ſpontaneous acceptance, and complyance with divine religion; and, To be made at firſt was not in our power; but God perſuadeth us to follow thoſe things, which he liketh, chuſing by the rational faculties, which he hath given us, and ſo leadeth us to faith; ſaith Juſtin the Martyr.

Πίστις πρόληψις ἑκούσιός ἐστι, θεοσεβείας συγκατάθεσις, &c Clem. Strom. 2. p. 265. Ἐθελοντὴν συνέπεσθαι τῷ συμφέροντι συνέσεως ἀρχὴ, Ibid. Τὸ μὲν ἀρχὴν γενέσθαι οὐχ ἡμέτερον ἦν. τὸ δὲ ἐξακολουθῆσαι οἷς φίλον αὐτῷ αἱρουμένους δι' ὧν αὐτὸς ἐδωρήσατο λογικῶν δυνάμεων πείθει τε καὶ εἰς πίστιν ἄγει ἡμᾶς. Just. M. Apol. 2. (p. 58.)

The ſame is ſuppoſed in holy Scripture; where of believers it is ſaid, that they did ἀσμένως, gladly, or willingly receive the word, and they received it μετὰ πάσης προθυμίας with all willingneſs, or readineſs of mind. Act. 2. 41. Act. 17. 11.

And to defect of will infidelity is often aſcribed: Ye will not come unto me (ſaith our Saviour) that ye might have life; and, How often would I have gathered thy children together as a hen doth gather her brood under her wings, and ye would not? and, The Kingdom of heaven is like unto a certain King, which made a marriage for his ſon, and ſent forth his ſervants to call them that were bidden to the wedding, and they would not come: and, Of this (ſaith S. Peter of ſome profane infidels) they are willingly ignorant, that by the word of God the heavens were of old; and of the like S. Paul ſaith, that they received not the love of the truth, but had pleaſure in unrighteouſneſs. Joh. 5. 40. Luk 13. 34. Matt. 22. 3. 2 Pet. 3. 5. 2 Theſ. 2. 10, 12.

Indeed to prevent this exception, that faith is a forced act, and therefore not moral; or to render it more voluntary, and worthy, God hath not done all that he might have done to convince men, or to wring belief from them: he hath not ſtamped on his truth that glaring evidence, which might dazle our minds; he doth not propoſe it armed with irreſiſtible cogency; he hath not made the objects of faith conſpicuous to ſenſe, nor the propoſitions thereof demonſtrable by reaſon, like theoremes of Geometry; this indeed would be to depoſe faith, to deveſt it of its excellency, and bereave it of its praiſe; this were to deprive us of that bleſſedneſs, which is adjudged to thoſe, who believe and do not ſee: this would proſtitute Wiſdom to be defloured by the fooliſh; and expoſe truth to be rifled by the profane: this would take from our reaſon its nobleſt exerciſe, and faireſt occaſion of improvement; this would confound perſons fit to be diſtinguiſhed, the ſagacious and the ſtupid, the diligent and the ſlothful, the ingenuous and

Ἄπιστος, ὦ φίλοι, ψεῦδος ἀκούσιον. Clem. Alex. Strom. (pag. 268.) & Plat. (p 841.)

Joh. 20. 29.

Matt. 11. 19.
Prov. 1. 29.
5. 12.
2 Theſ. 2. 10, 11, 12.

and the froward, the ſober and the vain, the pious and the profane; the children of wiſdom, which are apt to juſtifie it, and the ſons of folly, who hate knowledge; the friends of truth and vertue, and the lovers of falſhood and unrighteouſneſs.

Matt. 11. 15
13. 9
Matt. 13. 11.
ὑμῖν δέδοται.
Chryſ. in Joh. Or. 5.
1 Pet. 1. 7, 8
Jam. 1. 3.
2 Theſ. 2. 12
Matt. 18. 7.
Luke 17. 1.
Luke 2. 35.
1 Cor. 11. 19
(1 Joh. 2. 19)

God therefore hath exhibited his truth, ſhining through ſome miſts of difficulty and doubt, that only thoſe who have clear eyes, who do look attentively, who are willing to ſee, may diſcern it; that thoſe who have eyes may ſee, and thoſe who have ears may hear. He meaneth this way of diſcovering his mind for a teſt to prove our ingenuity, for a field to exerciſe our induſtry, for an occaſion to expreſs his goodneſs in crowning the wiſdom and vertue of good believers; that the trial of your faith (ſaith S. Peter) being much more precious than of gold that periſheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praiſe, and honour, and glory at the appearing of Jeſus Chriſt; whom having not ſeen, ye love; in whom, though ye ſee him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unſpeakable, and full of glory. He meaneth alſo thence to diſplay his juſtice in puniſhing the ſlothful, the vain, the perverſe, the profane; that (as the Apoſtle ſaith) all men might be judged, who believed not the truth, but had pleaſure in unrighteouſneſs: Hence, there muſt of neceſſity be ſcandals, ſaid our Saviour; hence our Lord was ſet for a mark to be contradicted, that the thoughts of many hearts might be revealed; and, there muſt be hereſies; ſaith S. Paul; why? that they which are approved (οἱ δόκιμοι, perſons that can bear the teſt) may be manifeſted.

Pſ. 78, 105, 106.
Pſ. 106. 12.
Exod. 14. 31.
Deut. 4. 32.
8. 2. 7. 19.
Pſ. 78. 22, 32, 56, &c.
Pſ. 106. 24.
Neh. 9. 16.
Deut. 1. 32.
1 Pet. 2. 7, 8.
Rom. 1. 18, 28

God dealeth with us, as he did with his ancient people; he to aſſure them of his gracious protection and providence over them; or to perſuade them of the truth of what he by Moſes taught them, did before their eyes perform ſtupendious works in their behalf, affording them miraculous deliverances from their enemies, and prodigious ſupplies of their needs; the ſight of which did extort a temporary belief; then (it is ſaid) they believed his words, and ſang his praiſe; and, when Iſrael ſaw that great work which the Lord did upon the Ægyptians, the people feared the Lord, and believed the Lord, and his ſervant Moſes. Yet withall God ſuffered divers things to fall out, to humble them (as it is ſaid), and to prove them, and to know what was in their heart, whether they would keep his commandments, or no: The reſult of which diſpenſations was, that they being inconſiderate, impatient and refractory, believed not in God, and truſted not in his ſalvation; they deſpiſed that pleaſant land and gave no credence to his word; So God dealt with that typical people; and in like manner doth he proceed with us; he hath miniſtred ſignal atteſtations to the Goſpel; he hath diſpenſed arguments abundantly ſufficient to convince well diſpoſed minds of its truth; but he hath not cleared it from all ſcruples, which may diſturb the froward or the delicate; he hath not exempted it from all ſcandals, which may diſguſt the perverſe, and ſtubborn; he hath not prevented all exceptions or cavils deviſable by curious or captious wits againſt it; he hath not guarded it wholly from the malicious oppoſition of thoſe, whoſe intereſt it might ſeem, in favour of their vices and follies, to impugn it; juſt it was, that to ſuch the Goſpel ſhould be a ſtone of ſtumbling, and a rock of offence; who ſtumble at the word, being diſobedient, unto which they were appointed (that is, God having ſo purpoſely ordered the Evangelical diſpenſation, that ſuch perſons ſhould not approve it, or comply with it) juſt it was, that they ſhould be debarred from a knowledge of that truth, which they ſhould abuſe, and detain in unrighteouſneſs;

juſt it was, that they ſhould be puniſhed with ſuch temptations unto doubt and error, who would not receive the love of the truth, that they 2 Theſ. 2. 10, 11, 12.
might be ſaved.

Indeed, more abundant light of conviction, as it would deprive good men of much praiſe and reward, ſo it might be hurtful to many per-ſons; who having affections indiſpoſed to comply with truth, would outface and outbrave it, however clear and evident; they would (as Job 24. 14.
Job ſpeaketh) rebel againſt the light, although ſhining on them with a meridian ſplendour: they would plunge themſelves into an inexcuſable, and incorrigible ſtate of impiety, doing deſpight to the ſpirit of Heb. 10. 29.
grace, and involving themſelves in the unpardonable ſin; as we have Matt. 12. 31, 45.
many inſtances in the Evangelical Hiſtory of thoſe, who beholding un- Matt. 9. 34.
queſtionable evidences of divine power atteſting to our Lord's doctrine, 12. 24.
which they could not but acknowledge, did yet oppoſe it, did blaſ- Luke 13. 17.
pheme againſt it, did outragiouſly perſecute it. Joh. 11. 47. 12. 37. 9. 28.

Should God, as he once did in a dreadful manner, thunder out his Act. 4. 16.
laws, and ſhake the earth with his voice, yet many would little regard Heb. 12. 18, 26.
them: ſhould God in confirmation of his will perform every day as many miracles, as he did once in Ægypt, yet there would be Pharaohs, hardning their hearts againſt it; ſhould God himſelf deſcend from heaven, as once he did, and converſe with us, inſtructing us by diſcourſe and practice, diſplaying among us conſpicuous evidences of his power and goodneſs, yet who would believe his report, to whom would the arm of Joh. 12. 28.
the Lord be revealed? how few cordially would embrace his doctrine, Rom. 10. 16.
or ſubmit to his Law? as it was then, ſo it would be now; he would be hated, be ſcorned, be affronted and abuſed, by perſons qualified with like affections, as thoſe were, who ſo then did ſerve him; for in all times like perſons will do like things: as then only his ſheep (that is, well diſpoſed perſons, like ſheep, ſimple, harmleſs and ductile) did hear his voice, and follow him; ſo others would not believe him, becauſe they Joh. 10. 27.
were not of his ſheep, being imbued with ſwiniſh, curriſh, wolviſh diſ- Joh. 10. 26.
poſitions, incapacitating them to follow his conduct; there would be perſons like to thoſe, of whom it is ſaid, Behold ye ſcorners, and wonder, Act. 13. 41.
and periſh, for I work a work in your days, a work which you ſhall no wiſe believe, though a man declare it unto you.

(It is with inſtituted Religion, as it is with natural; the works of nature are ſo many continual miracles of divine power and wiſdom;
in the common track of providence many wonderful things do occurr;
yet who by them is moved to acknowledge and adore God? notwithſtanding them how many Atheiſts and Epicureans are there? ſo will it be in regard to divine Revelations, which however clearly atteſted, will yet be queſtioned.)

Thoſe indeed whom ſufficient reaſons (ſuch as God hath diſpenſed to us) will not convince, upon them the greateſt motives would have Γνώμης χρεία ſmall efficacy; ſo Father Abraham told the rich man —— If they hear not εὐγνώμονος· Moſes, and the Prophets, neither will they be perſuaded, though one roſe κἂν μὴ αὐτὴ from the dead. παρῇ, σημείων οὐδὲν ὄφελος.

Chryſ. in Matt. Or. 43. Luk. 16. 30. Joh. 5. 47.

They may pretend, if they had more light, they would be perſua-ded; like thoſe who ſaid, Let him now come down from the croſs, and Matt. 27. 42.
we will believe; but it would not in effect prove ſo, for they would yet be deviſing ſhifts, and forging exceptions; or however they would oppoſe an impudent face, and an obſtinate will againſt the truth.

Wherefore it was for the common good, and to divine wiſdom it appeared ſufficient, that upon the balance truth ſhould much outweigh falſhood, if the ſcales were held in an even hand, and no prejudices were thrown in againſt it; that it ſhould be conſpicuous enough
Act. 28. 27. to eyes, which do not avert themſelves from it, or wink on purpoſe, or be clouded with luſt and paſſion; It was enough that infidelity is juſtly
Joh. 15. 22. chargeable on mens wilfull pravity; and that πρόφασιν οὐκ ἔχουσι, they have not (as our Saviour ſaith) any reaſonable excuſe for it.

But ſo much for the cauſes and adjuncts of Faith; the effects and conſequences of it I reſerve for another occaſion.

I Believe, &c.

SERMON III.

OF THE
Vertue and Reaſonableneſs
OF FAITH.

2 PET. 1. 1.

----- to them that have obtained like precious faith with us.

OF all Chriſtian vertues, as there is none more approved and dignified by God, ſo there is none leſs conſidered or valued by men than Faith; the Adverſaries of our Religion have always had a ſpecial pique at it; wondring that it ſhould be commanded, as if it were an arbitrary thing or in our choice to believe what we pleaſe; why it ſhould be commended, as if it were praiſe-worthy to be ſubdued by reaſon; either by that which is too ſtrong for us to reſiſt, or by that which is too weak to conquer us.

But that Faith worthily deſerveth the praiſes and privileges aſſigned thereto, we may be ſatisfied, if we do well conſider its nature and ingredients, its cauſes and riſe, its effects and conſequences.

In its nature it doth involve knowledge, or the poſſeſſion of truth, which is the natural food, the proper wealth, the ſpecial ornament of our ſoul; knowledge of truths moſt worthy of us, and important to us, as converſing about the higheſt objects, and conducing to the nobleſt uſe; knowledge peculiar and not otherwiſe attainable, as lying without the ſphere of our ſenſe, and beyond the reach of our reaſon; knowledge conveyed to us with great evidence and aſſurance; the greateſt indeed that well can be, conſidering the nature of its objects, and the general capacities of men, and the moſt proper way of working upon reaſonable natures.

It implieth (that which giveth to every vertue its form and worth) a good uſe of our reaſon, in carefully weighing, and uprightly judging about things, of greateſt concernment to us; it implieth a cloſing with God's providence diſpenſing opportunities, and repreſenting motives ſerving to beget it; a compliance with God's grace attracting and inclining our ſouls to embrace his heavenly truth: it implyeth alſo good opinions of God, and good affections toward him, which are requiſite to the believing (upon his teſtimony, promiſe, or command) points very ſublime, very difficult, very croſs to our fancy and humour.

The cauſes alſo, which concurr in its production, are very excellent; many vertuous diſpoſitions of ſoul are requiſite to the conception and birth of it: there muſt be a ſober, compoſed and wakeful mind, inquiſitive after truth, apt to obſerve its ſtarting, and ready to lay hold on it; there muſt be diligence and induſtry in attending to the propoſals, and conſidering the enforcements of it; there muſt be ſincerity and ſoundneſs of judgment, in avowing its cauſe, againſt the exceptions raiſed againſt it by prejudice and carnal conceit, by ſenſual appetites and paſſions, by temptations and worldly intereſt: there muſt be great humility, diſpoſing us to a ſubmiſſion of our underſtanding, and a reſignation of our will unto God, in admitting notions, which debaſe haughty conceit, in eſpouſing duties, which repreſs ſturdy humour: there muſt be much reſolution and courage in undertaking things very difficult, hazardous and painful; much patience, in adhering to a profeſſion, which exacteth ſo much pain, and expoſeth to ſo much trouble: there muſt be great prudence, in applying our choice (among ſo many competitions and pretences claiming it) to that which is only good; in ſeeing through fallacious diſguiſes, and looking over preſent appearances, ſo as to deſcry the juſt worth, and the final conſequence of things: there muſt in fine be a love of truth, and a liking of all vertue, which is ſo highly commended, and ſo ſtrictly preſcribed by the Chriſtian doctrine.

Theſe particulars, commending Faith to us, I have already largely proſecuted; I ſhall only therefore now inſiſt upon the laſt Head, concerning its effects, whereby (as the goodneſs of a tree is known by its fruits) the great excellency thereof will appear.

Its effects are of two ſorts, one ſpringing naturally from it, the other following it in way of recompence from divine bounty; I ſhall only touch the firſt ſort; becauſe in this its vertue is moſt ſeen, as in the other its felicity.

Faith is naturally efficacious in producing many rare fruits; naturally I ſay, not meaning to exclude ſupernatural grace, but ſuppoſing Faith to be a fit inſtrument thereof; for God worketh in us to will, and to do, but in a way ſutable to our nature, employing ſuch means as properly ſerve to incline and excite us unto good practice; and ſuch is Faith, ſupported and weilded by his grace; for indeed (Act. 11. 24)

Even in common life Faith is the compaſs by which men ſteer their practice, and the main ſpring of action, ſetting all the wheels of our activity on going: every man acteth with ſerious intention, and with vigour anſwerable to his perſuaſion of things, that they are worthy his pains, and attainable by his endeavours; what moveth the husbandman to employ ſo much care, toil and expence in manuring his ground, in plowing, in ſowing, in weeding, in fencing it: but a perſuaſion that he ſhall reap a crop, which in benefit will anſwer all? what ſtirreth up the merchant to undertake tedious voyages over vaſt and dangerous ſeas, adventuring his ſtock, abandoning his eaſe, expoſing his life to the waves, to rocks and ſhelves, to ſtorms and hurricanes, to cruel pirates, to ſweltry heats and piercing colds, but a perſuaſion, that wealth is a very deſirable thing, and that hereby he may acquire it? what induceth a man to conform unto ſtricteſt rules of diet and abſtinence, readily to ſwallow down the moſt unſavory potions, patiently to endure cuttings and burnings, but a faith that he thereby ſhall recover or preſerve health, that highly valuable good? from the ſame principle are all the carking, all the plodding, all the drudging, all the daring, all the ſcuffling in the world eaſily derivable: In like manner is Faith the ſquare and the ſource of our ſpiritual activity, diſpoſing us ſeriouſly to undertake; earneſtly, reſolutely, induſtriouſly and conſtantly to purſue the deſigns of vertue and piety, brooking the pains and hardſhips, breaking through the difficulties and hazards, which occurr in religious practice; engaging us to the performance of duty, deterring us from the commiſſion of ſin.

Heb. 12. 1.
Phil. 3. 14.
1 Cor. 9. 24, 25.
2 Tim. 4. 7.
1 Tim. 1. 8.
6. 7.

What but Faith eyeing the prize, will quicken us to run patiently the race, that is ſet before us? what but faith, apprehending the crown, will animate us to fight ſtoutly the good fight? what but faith aſſuring the wages will ſupport us in working all the day with unwearied induſtry and patience? what can raiſe pious hope, what can kindle holy deſire, what can ſpurr on conſcientious endeavour, but a faith of attaining worthy recompences for doing well? what can impreſs an effectual diſlike and dread of offending, but a faith of incurring grievous puniſhment and ſad miſchiefs thence?

In reaſon a ſtrong and ſteady belief but of one point or two, would ſuffice to engage us upon all duty, and to reſtrain us from all ſin: did we only believe the future judgment, with the reſults of it, that alone would be an effectual both ſpurr and curb to us: for who believing that his ſoul then ſhall be laid bare, that his inmoſt thoughts, and ſecreteſt purpoſes ſhall be diſcloſed unto the view of all the world, will preſume to harbour in his breaſt any foul thought, or baſe deſign? who believing, that he ſhall then be obliged to render an account of every idle word, will dare to utter villainous blaſphemies, wicked curſes, fond oaths, profane jeſts, vile ſlanders or detractions, harſh cenſures, or bitter reproaches? who being perſuaded, that a rigorous amends will then be exacted from him for any wrong he doeth, will not be afraid with violence to oppreſs, or with fraud to circumvent his neighbour? who deeming himſelf accountable then for every talent and opportunity, will find in his heart to ſquander away or miſimploy his time, his power, his wealth, his credit, his wit, his knowledge, his advantages in any kind of doing God ſervice? who knowing himſelf obnoxious to a ſudden trial, whereat his eſtate, his reputation, his life, all his intereſt and welfare muſt lie at ſtake, will contentedly loſe his mind in wanton ſports, or wild frolicks? in fine, if we are really perſuaded, that preſently after this ſhort and tranſitory life, we ſhall openly in the face of God, Angels and Men be arraigned at an impartial bar, where all our thoughts, our words, our actions ſhall moſt exactly be ſifted and ſcanned; according to which cogniſance a juſt doom ſhall be pronounced, and certainly executed upon us, how muſt this needs engage us to be very ſober and ſerious, very circumſpect and vigilant over our mind, our tongue, our dealings or converſation, our whole life?

Again, If a man firmly believeth, that by a pious courſe of life, he ſhall gain the preſent favour and friendſhip of the Almighty, with all the real goods, whereof he is capable; and that hereafter he ſhall be rewarded for it with an eternal life in perfect reſt, in glory, in joy, in beatitude unſpeakable; that he ſhall obtain an incorruptible inheritance, a treaſure, that can never fail, a crown that will not fade, a kingdom that cannot be ſhaken; wherein he ſhall enjoy the bliſsful viſion of God, ſmiling in love upon him; the preſence of his gracious Redeemer, embracing him with dear affection; the moſt delightful Society of bleſſed Angels, and juſt ſpirits made perfect; a ſtate of felicity, ſurpaſſing all words to expreſs it, all thoughts to conceive it; of which the brighteſt ſplendours, and the choiceſt pleaſures here can yield but a faint reſemblance; how can he forbear earneſtly to embrace and purſue ſuch a courſe of practice? what zeal muſt ſuch a perſuaſion inſpire, what vigour muſt it rouze within him? who upon any terms would forfeit the hopes of ſuch a happineſs; who would not be glad to undertake any pains, or endure any hardſhips for it?

1 Pet. 1. 4.
Luke 12. 33.
1 Pet. 5. 4.
Heb. 12. 28.

1 Cor. 2. 9.

And who likewiſe heartily is perſuaded, that by vitious converſation, he ſhall incurr the wrath of Almighty God, and ſtand obnoxious to the ſtroaks of his ſevere juſtice; that perſiſting therein he infallibly muſt drop into the bottomleſs pit, into that utter darkneſs, that furnace of fire unquenchable, that lake of flaming brimſtone; where is weeping and gnaſhing of teeth, where the immortal worm ſhall gnaw on his heart, and he muſt feel the pangs of a never-dying death; that ſtate of moſt bitter remorſe, of moſt horrid deſpair, of moſt forlorn diſconſolateneſs, of continual and endleſs torment; wherein he ſhall be baniſhed from the face of God, and by immutable deſtiny barr'd from all light, all eaſe, all ſolace; from any glimpſe of hope, from any reſpite of pain; the wretchedneſs of which condition not the ſharpeſt pain of body, not the foreſt anguiſh of mind, not the ſaddeſt diſtreſs here can any-wiſe reach, or repreſent; whoever, I ſay, is poſſeſſed with a belief of theſe things conſequent on a wicked life, will he not thence be effectually ſcared from it? what bait of temptation ſhall allure him, what force ſhall drive him thereto? will he for a flaſh of pleaſure, for a puff of fame, for a lump of pelf; will he in complement or complaiſance to others, in apiſh imitation or complyance with a faſhion, out of mere wantonneſs, or in regard to ſome petty intereſt; will he in hope of any worldly good, or fear of any inconvenience here, ſuffer himſelf to be caſt into that diſmall ſtate? will he not ſooner go and ſhake a Lion by the paw, ſooner provoke an Adder to bite him, ſooner throw himſelf down a precipice, or leap into a caldron of burning pitch? certainly in reaſon to believe ſuch things, and to ſin can hardly be conſiſtent.

Matt. 18. 30. Jud. 6. 2 Pet. 2. 4. Luke 4. 31. Apoc. 20. 3. Matt. 8. 12. 13. 42, 50. Mark 9. 43, 45. (Iſ. 33. 14) Rev. 20. 21

Matt. 9. 44.
Apoc. 20. 10.
Dan. 12. 2. Everlaſting ſhame.

2 Theſ. 1. 9.
Rom 2. 9. στενοχ.

Such a general influence is faith, looking with a provident eye upon future rewards and conſequences of things, apt to have upon our practice: the which collaterally taking in the glorious attributes of God, the gracious performances of our Saviour, the beauty and ſweetneſs of each divine precept, the manifold obligations and encouragements to duty, the whole latitude and harmony of evangelical truth, all tending to the recommendation of holineſs, what efficacy muſt it needs have? how powerfully muſt it incite us to good practice?

ἁγνίζει ψυχάς. 1 Pet. 1. 22. καθαρίζει καρδίας. Act. 15. 9.

We are told, that faith doth purifie our ſouls, and cleanſe our hearts; that is our whole interiour man, all the faculties of our ſoul; diſpoſing them to an univerſal obedience and conformity to God's holy will; And ſo it is; for Faith not only doth clear our underſtanding from its defects (blindneſs, ignorance, error, doubt) but it cleanſeth our will from its vitious inclinations from ſtubborn, froward, wanton, giddy humours) it freeth our affections from diſorder and diſtemper, in tendency toward bad objects, and in purſuit of indifferent things with immoderate violence; it purgeth our conſcience, or reflexive powers from anxious fear, ſuſpicion, anguiſh, dejection, deſpair, and all ſuch paſſions which corrode and fret the ſoul; how it effecteth this we might declare; but we cannot better ſet forth its efficacy and puiſſance, than by conſidering the ſpecial and immediate influence it plainly hath in the production of each vertue, or on the performance of every duty: Add to your faith vertue, ſaith S. Peter; implying the natural order of things, and that if true faith precede, vertue will eaſily follow.

2 Pet. 1. 5.
1 Tim. 6. 11.
2 Tim. 2. 22.

The chief of all vertues piety (compriſing the love of God, fear and reverence of him, confidence in him, gratitude for his favours and mercies, devotion toward him, a diſpoſition to worſhip and ſerve him) ſeemeth according to reaſon inevitably conſequent from it; for can we believe God ſuperexcellent in all perfection, and immenſly benign toward us; can we be perſuaded that in free goodneſs he did create us, and doth continually preſerve us in being; that his bounty hath conferred on us all our endowments of ſoul, and all our accommodations of life; that he hath a tender deſire of our welfare, from which even our moſt heinous offences and provocations cannot divert him; that he moſt wonderfully hath provided for our happineſs; in order thereto, when we had rebelled and revolted from him, ſending down out of his boſome, from the top of celeſtial glory and bliſs, his only dear Son, into this baſe and frail ſtate, to ſuſtain the infirmities of our nature, the inconveniences of a poor life, the pains of a bitter and ſhameful death, for our recovery from ſin and miſery; that with infinite patience he driveth on this gracious deſign, continually watching over us, attracting us to good, and reclaiming us from evil by his grace, notwithſtanding our frequent and ſtiff reluctancies thereto; can I ſay, we heartily believe theſe points, and not love him? can the eye of faith behold ſo lovely beauty, ſo raviſhing ſweetneſs in him, and the heart not be affected? can we apprehend ſo many miracles of nature, of providence, of grace performed by him for our ſake; and not be thankful to him? Can we likewiſe believe God infinitely powerful, infinitely juſt, infinitely pure, and withal not dread him, not adore him? Can we believe him moſt able, moſt willing, moſt ready to do us good; and not confide in him? or can we take him to be moſt veracious, moſt faithful, moſt conſtant, and not rely on his promiſes? Can we avow him to be our Maker, our Patron, our Lord, our Judge, and not deem our ſelves much obliged, much concerned to ſerve him? Can we believe, that God in our need is acceſſible, that he calleth and inviteth us to him, that he is ever willing and ever ready to hear us, that he is by promiſe engaged to grant us, whatever we do with humble fervency and conſtancy requeſt; yet forbear to pray, or eaſily deſiſt from it? do we believe his omnipreſence and omniſcience; that he is with us, wherever we go; doth know all we think, hear all we ſay, ſee all we do, and will not belief engage us to think honeſtly, to ſpeak reverently, to act innocently and decently before him? do we believe, that God's commands do proceed from that will, to which rectitude is eſſential; from that wiſdom, which infallibly diſcerneth what is juſt and fit; from that goodneſs, which will require from us nothing but what is beſt for us; from that unqueſtionable and uncontroulable authority, to which all things are ſubject, and muſt ſubmit; will not this ſufficiently engage us to obedience? ſurely the real belief (ſuch as we have about common things, apprehended by our reaſon or by our ſenſe) of any ſuch divine act, or attribute cannot fail to ſtrike pious affection, and pious awe into us.

After piety the next great vertue is charity, the which alſo is eaſily derived from a pure heart (as S. Paul ſpeaketh) and faith unfeigned: it repreſenting peculiar obligations and inducements thereto, from the moſt peremptory commands of God, from the ſignal recompences annexed to that duty, from the ſtrict relations between Chriſtians, from the ſtupendious patterns of charity ſet before us. Who can withhold love from him, whom he believeth his brother, in a way far nobler than that of nature, ſo conſtituted by God himſelf, the common Father, by ſpiritual regeneration, and adoption of grace; whom he believeth born of the ſame heavenly ſeed, renewed after the ſame divine image, quickned by the ſame holy Spirit; united to him not only in blood, but in ſoul; reſembling him not in temper of body or lineaments of face, but in conformity of judgment and practice; partner of the one inheritance, and deſtinated to lead a life with him through all eternity, in peaceful conſortſhip of joy and bliſs? Who can deny him love, whom he believeth out of the ſame miſerable caſe by the ſame price redeemed into the ſame ſtate of mercy? for whom he by faith vieweth the common Saviour deveſting himſelf of glory, pinching himſelf with want, wearying himſelf with labour, loaded with contumelies, groaning under pain, weltring in blood, and breathing out his ſoul, propounding all this as an example of our charity, and demanding it from us as the moſt ſpecial inſtance of our grateful obedience to him? what greater endearments can be imagined, what more potent incentives of love, what more indiſſoluble bands of friendſhip, than are theſe? Can ſuch a believer forbear to wiſh his neighbour well, to have complacence in his good, to ſympathize with his adverſities, to perform all offices of kindneſs to him? can he in the need of his brother ſhut up his bowels of compaſſion, or withhold his hand from relieving him? Can a man know that God requireth this practice as the nobleſt fruit of our faith, and moſt acceptable part of our obedience, which he hath promiſed to crown with moſt ample rewards; can he believe, that God will recompence his labour of love with everlaſting reſt, and for a ſmall expence of preſent goods will beſtow immenſe treaſures in the other world; and yet abſtain from charitable beneficence? who can forbear ſowing, that believeth he ſhall reap ſo plentiful a crop; or abſtain from dealing in that heavenly trade, whereby he is aſſured to be ſo vaſt a gainer?

2 Tim. 1. 15.

In like manner is Faith productive of meekneſs, in comporting with injuries, diſcourteſies, neglects and provocations of any kind: for who can be fiercely angry, who can entertain any rancorous grudge or diſpleaſure againſt him, whom he believeth his brother, and that upon ſo many accounts he is obliged to love him? Who that believeth God hath pardoned him ſo much, and doth continually bear ſo many wrongs, ſo many indignities from him, will not in conſcience, and gratitude toward God, and in compliance with ſo great an Example, bear with the infirmities of his neighbour? who can look upon the pattern of his Saviour, patiently enduring ſo many grievous affronts, without a diſpoſition to imitate him, and to do the like for his ſake? who that taketh himſelf for a child of God, a citizen of heaven, an heir of eternal glory, can be ſo much concerned in any trivial accident here; can deſign to have his paſſion ſtirred for any worldly reſpect? as if his honour could be impaired, or his intereſt ſuffer diminution by any thing ſaid, or done here below.

Again, Faith is the mother of ſincerity, that comprehenſive vertue, which ſeaſoneth all other vertues, and keepeth them ſound: for it aſſuring us, that an all-ſeeing eye doth view our heart, doth encompaſs our paths, is preſent to all our cloſeſt retirements; that all things are naked and open to the eyes of him, with whom we have to do, how vain muſt it appear to us any-wiſe to diſſemble, or prevaricate, ſpeaking otherwiſe than we think, acting otherwiſe than we pretend, ſeeming otherwiſe than we are; concealing our real intents, or diſguiſing them under masks of deceitful appearance? If we believe, that we ſhall be judged not according to the opinions of men concerning us, or our port and garb in this world, but as we are in our ſelves, and according to ſtricteſt truth; that in the cloſe of things we ſhall be ſet forth in our right colours and complexion, all varniſh being wiped away; that all our thoughts, words and deeds ſhall be expoſed to moſt publick cenſure; that hypocriſie will be a ſore aggravation of our ſin, and much encreaſe our ſhame? how can we ſatisfie our ſelves otherwiſe than in the pure integrity of our heart, and clear uprightneſs of our dealing?

Pſ. 139. 2.
Heb. 4. 13.

Likewiſe the admirable vertue of humility, or ſobriety of mind doth ſprout from Faith; informing us, that we have nothing of our own to boaſt of, but that all the good we have, we can do, we may hope for are debts we owe to God's pure bounty and mercy; prompting us to aſſume nothing to our ſelves, but to aſcribe all the honour of our endowments, of our performances, of our advantages unto God; keeping us in continual dependance upon God for the ſuccours of his providence, and his grace; repreſenting to us our natural weakneſs, vileneſs and wretchedneſs, together with the adventitious defects and diſadvantages from our wilfull misbehaviour, the unworthineſs of our lives, the many heinous ſins we have committed, and the grievous puniſhments we have deſerved.

He who by the light of faith doth ſee, that he came naked into the world, heir to nothing but the ſad conſequences of the original Apoſtacy; that he is a worm, crawling on earth, feeding on duſt, and tending to corruption; that he liveth only by reprieve, from that fatal ſentence, the day thou ſinneſt thou ſhalt die; that he was a caitiff wretch, a mere ſlave to ſin, a forlorn captive of hell; and that all his recovery thence, or capacity of a better ſtate is wholly due to mercy; that he ſubſiſteth only upon alms, and hath nothing but his ſins and miſeries, which he may call his own; he that believeth theſe things, what conceit can he have of himſelf, what confidence in his own worth, what complacency in his eſtate?

Faith alſo doth engage to the vertue of temperance; diſcovering not only the duty, but the neceſſity thereof, in regard to our ſtate, which is a ſtate of continual exerciſe and ſtrife; wherefore as wreſtlers with many ſtrong adverſaries, as racers for a noble prize, we by good diet and conſtant labour muſt keep our ſelves in heart, in temper, in breath to perform thoſe combats; according to that of S. Paul, Every man that ſtriveth for the Maſtery, is temperate in all things.

1 Cor. 9. 25.

Again, Faith is productive of contentedneſs in our ſtate: for How is it poſſible, that he, who is fully ſatisfied, that God appointeth his ſtation, and allotteth his portion to each one; that all occurrences depend on his will, and are managed by his providence, ſhould take any thing amiſs; as if it could hap better, than as infinite goodneſs pleaſeth, and infinite wiſdom determineth? how can he, that believeth God moſt powerful and able, moſt kind and willing, ever preſent and ready to help him, be in any caſe diſconſolate, or deſpair of ſeaſonable relief? what can diſcompoſe him, who knoweth himſelf, if he pleaſeth, immovably happy; that his beſt good is ſecure from all attaques and beyond the reach of any misfortune; that deſiring what is beſt, he cannot fail of his deſire; that (himſelf excepted) all the world cannot conſiderably wrong, or hurt him?

He that is aſſured, thoſe precepts, (Be careful for nothing, Caſt all your burthen on God, Be content with ſuch things as ye have) were not given to mock and gull us; that thoſe declarations and promiſes (There is no want to them that fear God; No good thing will God withhold from them that walk uprightly; There ſhall no evil happen to the juſt; The deſire of the righteous ſhall be granted; All things work together for good to them who love God; Seek ye firſt the Kingdom of God, and his righteouſneſs, and all theſe things ſhall be added unto you) were ſeriouſly made, and will ſurely be performed, how looſe muſt his mind be from all ſolicitude and anxiety? how ſteady a calm, how ſweet a ſerenity will that faith ſpread over his ſoul, in regard to all worldly contingencies?

Matt 6. 25.
Phil. 4. 6.
1 Pet. 5. 7.
1 Tim. 6. 17.
Heb. 13. 5.
Luke 12. 29.
Pſ. 34. 9. 8. 11.
Prov. 12. 21.
10. 24.
Rom. 8. 28.
Matt. 6. 33.

It will alſo beget a chearful tranquility of mind, and peace of conſcience, in regard to our future ſtate; that which S. Paul calleth all joy and peace in believing, which the Apoſtle to the Hebrews termeth the confidence, and rejoicing of hope, of which S. Peter ſaith, believing ye rejoice with joy unſpeakable and full of glory: for he that is perſuaded that God (in whoſe diſpoſal his fortune, and felicity are) is reconciled and kindly affected toward him, that he doth concern himſelf in deſigning and procuring his ſalvation; that to purchaſe the means thereof for him the Son of God purpoſely came down, and ſuffered death; that an act of oblivion is paſt, and a full remiſſion of ſins exhibited to him, if he will embrace it; that now there is no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt Jeſus; and that, being juſtified by faith we have peace with God; that bleſſing is his portion, and that an eternal heritage of joy is reſerved for him, what eaſe muſt he find in his conſcience, what comfort muſt poſſeſs his heart? how effectually will that of the Prophet be accompliſhed in him, Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whoſe mind is ſtayed on thee, becauſe he truſteth in thee?

Rom. 15. 13.
Heb. 3. 6. 9.
14.
1 Pet. 1. 8.
Rom. 8. 1. 5. 1.
Col. 1. 5.
Iſ. 26. 3.

Again, it is Faith, which breedeth the courage, and upholdeth the patience requiſite to ſupport us in our ſpiritual courſe.

It doth inſpire courage, prompting to attempt the braveſt enterpriſes, diſpoſing to proſecute them reſolutely, and enabling happily to atchieve them: For he that believeth himſelf in his undertakings backed by omnipotence, and that, as S. Paul, he can do all things through Chriſt ſtrengthning him, what ſhould he fear to ſet upon, what difficulty ſhould keep him off, what hazard ſhould diſmay him? he that knoweth him-

Phil. 4. 13.

ſelf, by reaſon of the ſuccour attending him, infinitely to overmatch all oppoſition, whom ſhould he not dare to encounter? may he not well ſay with David; The Lord is my light, and my ſalvation, whom ſhall I fear; the Lord is the ſtrength of my life, of whom ſhall I be afraid? Let all the world, let earth and hell combine to invade him, how can that mate his Spirit, if he believe they cannot overthrow him, or hurt him, being ſecured by the invincible protection of him, to whoſe will all things do bow; in compariſon to whom nothing is puiſſant, beſide whom nothing is really formidable; ſeeing none but He can kill, none can touch the ſoul?

(Phil. 1. 28. 1 Joh. 4. 4)
Pſ. 27. 1. 118. 6.
Chryſ. Tom. 7. p. 51.
Pſ. 46. 1, 2.
Matt. 10. 28.

If we be armed with the ſpiritual panoply, having our head covered with the helmet of ſalvation, our heart guarded with the breaſt-plate of righteouſneſs, our loyns girt about with truth, our feet ſhod with the preparation of the Goſpel of peace, all our body ſheltred by the impenetrable ſhield of Faith; and weilding in our hands by faith the penetrant two edged ſword of the Spirit; which is the word of God; what aſſaults may we not ſuſtain, what foes ſhall we not eaſily repel?

Eph. 6. 15.
1 Theſ. 5. 8.
Rom. 13. 12.
2 Cor. 6. 7.
Heb. 4. 12.

The moſt redoubtable enemy we have is our own fleſh, which with a mighty force of violent appetites and impetuous paſſions is ever ſtrugling with our reaſon, and warring againſt our ſoul; yet it Faith alone dareth to reſiſt, and is able to quell, oppoſing to the preſent delights of ſenſe the hopes of future joy, quaſhing tranſitory ſatisfactions by the fears of endleſs torment.

Gal 5. 17.
Rom. 7. 23.
1 Pet. 2. 11.

The world is another powerful enemy; ever ſtriving by its corrupt principles, by its bad examples, by its naughty faſhions, by its menaces of perſecution, damage and diſgrace, by its promiſes of vain honour, baſe profit and foul pleaſure to overthrow and undo us; but a reſolute Faith will defeat its attempts; for He (ſaith S. John) that is born of God, overcometh the world, and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith; the faith of a better world will defend us from the frowns, and the flatteries of this; the riches, glories and joys of heaven thereby preſented to our minds will ſecure us from being enchanted with the wealth, ſplendours and pleaſures of earth.

1 Joh. 5. 5.
(2 Pet. 1. 4.
Eph. 4. 22.)

Another fierce adverſary is the curſed Fiend; who ever like a roaring lion goeth abont ſeeking to devour us, or like a treacherous ſnake lieth in wait to bite us; raiſing panick fears to daunt and affright us; laying ſubtle trains of temptation, to abuſe and ſeduce us; but him by reſiſtence we may eaſily put to flight, For reſiſt the Devil, ſaith S. James, and he will flee from you; and how we muſt reſiſt him, S. Peter telleth us, Whom reſiſt ſtedfaſt in faith; and S. Paul alſo, Above all (ſaith he) taking the ſhield of faith, wherewith ye ſhall be able to quench the fiery darts of the wicked one; if we hold forth this glittering ſhield, it will dazle his ſight, and damp his courage; being not able to endure its luſtre, or ſtand its oppoſition he will inſtantly retire; fearing that by our victory over his temptations, (through reliance on God's help, and adherence to his truth) our reward ſhall be heightned, and his torment (the torment of improſperous envy and baffled malice) be encreaſed.

1 Pet. 5. 8.
Jam. 4. 7.
Eph. 4. 27.
1 Pet. 5. 9.
Eph. 6. 16.

Faith alſo will arm us with patience to endure what-ever events ſhall be diſpenſed, with alacrity and comfort; lightning the moſt heavy burthens impoſed on us, ſweetning the moſt diſtaſteful occurrences incident to us: for

He, who is perſuaded that by any damage here ſuſtained for conſcience toward God, he ſhall become a huge gainer, receiving, as the Goſpel promiſeth, an hundred fold, and inheriting eternal life, what will

Matt. 19. 29.
Luke 18. 30.

will he not gladly loſe? will he not willingly put forth all he hath in this moſt profitable uſury? will he not, as thoſe Hebrews did, take joyfully the ſpoiling of his goods, knowing that he hath in heaven a better and an enduring ſubſtance?

Phil. 3. 8.
Heb. 10. 34.

He, who believeth, that in regard to any diſgrace caſt on him for his vertue, he ſhall be honoured by God, and crowned with heavenly glory, will he not in a manner be proud and ambitious of ſuch diſgrace; will he not, as the Apoſtles did, rejoice, that he is counted worthy to ſuffer ſhame for the name of Chriſt?

Matt. 5. 12.
Act. 5. 41.
1 Pet. 4. 14.

He, who truſteth, that for a little pains taken in God's ſervice, he ſhall receive πολὺν μισθὸν, abundant wages, far exceeding the merit of his labour, will he not cheerfully bear any toil or drudgery therein?

Matt. 5. 12.
Luke 6. 35.
1 Cor. 3. 8.

He who, with S. Paul, computeth, that the light afflictions, which are but for a moment, are not worthy to be compared with the glories that ſhall be revealed; and that thoſe light momentary afflictions do work for us a far more exceeding weight of glory; will they not indeed be light unto him; will he not feel them lying on him, as a few ſtraws or feathers?

Rom. 8. 18.
2 Cor. 4. 17.

He, who conceiveth our Lord's word true, that by loſing his life he ſhall find it, or that death ſhall become to him a door into a happy immortality, would he not gladly upon ſuch terms be killed all the day long, and be always delivered unto death for Jeſus?

Matt. 10. 39. 16. 25
Luke 17. 33.
(Pſ. 126. 5.
2 Tim. 2. 12.
1 Pet. 4. 13.
Rom. 8. 17.
2 Cor. 4. 10. Phil. 1. 29.) Rom. 8. 36. 2 Cor. 4. 11. 1 Cor. 4. 9. Act. 20. 24. 21. 13.

He who by faith is aſſured, that any diſaſters befalling him, are not inflictions of wrath; but expreſſions of love toward him, by God in kindneſs diſpenſed as trials of his faith, as exerciſes of his vertue, as occaſions of his acquiring more plentiful rewards, how can he be diſguſted at them, or diſcompoſed by them? why ſhould he not rather accept them as favours, as felicities with a thankful and joyful heart; counting it, as S. James adviſeth, all joy, when he falleth into divers temptations?

Jam. 1. 3.
1 Pet. 1. 5.
Rom. 5. 3.
Matt. 5. 12.
Jam. 1. 2.
Rom. 5. 3.
Luke 6. 23.

In fine, it is Faith alone, which can plant in us that which is the root of all contentedneſs and all patience; a juſt indifference and unconcernedneſs about all things here: it alone can untack our minds and affections from this world, rearing our ſouls from earth, and fixing them in heaven; for if we are perſuaded, there is a ſtate of life infinitely more deſirable than the beſt condition here; if we believe there are things attainable by us, incomparably better than any which this world affordeth; in reſpect to which all theſe glories are but ſmoak, all theſe riches are but dirt, all theſe delights are but dreams, all theſe buſineſſes are but triflings, all theſe ſubſtances are but ſhadows; how in our minds can we prize, how in our affections can we cleave unto theſe things? how then can we find in our hearts to ſpend upon them more care, or pain than is needful?

Col. 3. 1.
Omnia imaginaria in ſeculo, & nihil veri. Tert. de Cor. c. 13.

He that taketh himſelf here to be out of his element, that he is but a ſtranger, and ſojourner upon earth, that he hath here no abiding city, no country, no houſe, no land, no treaſure, no conſiderable intereſt, but that he is merely wayfairing, in paſſage toward his true home, and heavenly country, the Jeruſalem above, whereof he is a citizen, where his grand concerns do lie, where he hath reſerved for him immovable poſſeſſions, and unvaluable treaſures; where he is deſigned to enjoy moſt noble privileges, and moſt illuſtrious dignities in the Court of the great King; how can he have his heart here ſticking in this earthy

Ἡ πρώτη ἀρετὴ, καὶ ἡ πᾶσα ἀρετὴ τὸ ξένον εἶναι τοῦ κόσμου τούτου---Chryſ. in Heb. 11. 13.

Gal. 6. 14. 2. 20. Ἐκεῖ μετεωρίζει τὴν ψυχὴν ἡ πίστις---- Chryſ. Tom. 5. Or. 55.

clay, entangled with the petty cares, amuſed with the ſorry entertainments of this life? how can he otherwiſe than with S. Paul be dead, and crucified to this world? how can he withhold his mind from ſoaring thither in contemplation, and in affection dwelling there, whither his deſires and hopes do all tend, where his joy and felicity are found, where the great objects of his eſteem and love do reſide?

But you will perhaps interpoſe, and ſay; theſe are indeed fine ſayings, but where do ſuch effects appear? who I pray doth practiſe according to theſe notions? where is that gallant to be found, who doth work ſo great exploits? where may we diſcern that height of piety, that tenderneſs of charity, that meek comportment with injuries and affronts, that clear ſincerity, that depth of humility, that ſtrictneſs of temperance, that perfect contentedneſs, and undiſturbed calmneſs of mind, that ſtoutneſs of courage, and ſtiffneſs of patience which you talk of as the undoubted iſſues of faith? who is the man that with ſuch glee doth hugg afflictions, or biddeth adverſity ſo welcome to his home? where dwell they, who ſo little regard this world, or ſo much affect the other? do we not ſee men run as if they were wild after preferment, wealth and pleaſure? what do they elſe, but ſcrape and ſcramble and ſcuffle for theſe things? doth not every man moan the ſcantneſs of his lot, doth not every man flinch at any trouble, doth not every one with all his might ſtrive to rid himſelf of any thing diſguſtful to his ſenſe or fancy? are not therefore ſuch encomiums of Faith mere ſpeculations, or brave Rhodomontades of Divinity?

The objection I confeſs is a ſhrewd one, but I muſt reply to it: You ſay, where are ſuch effects, where are ſuch men? I ask then, where is Faith, where are Believers? ſhew me the one, and I will ſhew you the other: If ſuch effects do not appear, 'tis no argument that Faith cannot produce them, but a ſign, that Faith is wanting; as if a tree doth not put forth in due ſeaſon, we conclude the root is dead; if a fountain yield no ſtreams, we ſuppoſe it dried up: Jam. 2. 18. Shew me (ſaith S. James) thy faith by thy works; implying, that if good works do not ſhine forth in the converſation, 'tis ſuſpicious there is no true faith in the heart: for ſuch faith is not a feeble weening, or a notion ſwimming in the head, 'tis not a profeſſion iſſuing from the mouth, 'tis not following ſuch a garb, or adhering to ſuch a party, but a perſuaſion fixed in the heart by good reaſon, by firm reſolution, by Rom. 10. 8. lively ſenſe; it is with the heart, as S. Paul ſaith, man believeth unto righteouſneſs; that is the Faith we ſpeak of and to which we aſcribe the production of ſo great and worthy effects: if a man wanteth that, atteſted by practice ſutable, though he know all the points exactly, though he readily will ſay Amen to every Article of the Creed, though he wear all the badges of a Chriſtian, though he frequent the Congregations, and comply with the Forms of our Religion, yet is he really an Infidel: for is he not an Infidel, who denieth God? and is he not ſuch a Renegado, who liveth impiouſly? he is ſo in S. Paul's account; Tit. 1. 16. for they profeſs (ſaith he of ſuch perſons) that they know God, but in Rom. 2. 28. works they deny him; and He is not a Jew, ſaith the ſame Apoſtle (he is not a Chriſtian, may we by parity of reaſon affirm) who is one outwardly; but he is a Chriſtian who is one inwardly, and faith is that of the heart, in the ſpirit, and not in the letter, whoſe praiſe is not of men, but of God: we may attribute to a barren conceit, or to a formal profeſſion the name of Faith, but it is in an equivocal or wide ſenſe, as a dead man is called a man; or a dry ſtick reſting in the earth, a tree; for ſo faith (ſaith S. James) without works is dead; is indeed but a Jam. 2. 17. trunk, or carcaſe of faith, reſembling it in outward ſhape; but void of Jam. 2. 26. its ſpirit and life.

To our infidelity therefore, that overſpreading vice; to the unſincerity, or deadneſs of our faith, the great defects of our practice are to be imputed; that is the grand ſource, from which impiety doth ſo oreflow; that ſo few inſtances of ſprightly vertue are viſible, may be a ſign the time is the ſame, or very like to that, of which our Lord ſaith, When the Son of man cometh, ſhall he indeed find faith upon the earth? Luke 18. 8.

But if ſuch effects can now rarely be found, yet time hath been, when they were more rife, ſcarce any time hath been quite deſtitute of them; Every Age ſince the foundation of things may have tokens and trophees to ſhew of faith's victorious efficacy; ſo many actions as there have been truly great and glorious, ſo many gallant feats have been atchieved by Faith: If we ſurvey the lives of the ancient Patriarchs, of the Prophets, of the Apoſtles, of the Martyrs and Confeſſours of true Religion, their faith in all their works is moſt conſpicuous.

Faith recommended that excellent ſacrifice of Abel to divine accep- Heb. 11. 4. tance, and advanced him to the rank of firſt Martyr for piety.

On the wings of faith did Enoch mount to heaven, ſnatching the reward due to his faithful, and therefore well-pleaſing obedience.

Faith preſerved Noah from two mighty deluges, one of ſin, the other of water, overflowing the earth; by it he ſtemmed the torrent of the one, and rode on the back of the other; it encouraged him to be a 2 Pet. 2. 5. preacher of righteouſneſs againſt the grain, and a practiſer of it againſt Gen. 7. 1. the faſhion of the world; not regarding the common hatred and envy which he did incurr thereby; it moved him to undertake that great and ſtrange work of building the Ark, for a ſanctuary and ſeminary of mankind; the type of that ſpiritual veſſel, by embarking into which through faith we are ſaved from utter ruine.

